One of the best comments of the day came from a movie cameraman who yelled to his colleague in the upper stands: "Hey, Johnson, give a couple shots ....general views of this confusion." Thomas E. Dewey, attending his first convention as a delegate, sat four seats off the aisle, trying to be nonchalant, reading a paper part of the time. There were about four hundred cops inside this amphitheater, and the way things are going, they may be needed. The two Texas delegations sat side by side without even an empty chair separating them. During some of the long pauses in the rules battle, the fifty piece band played "Night and Day", and someone remarked that it could have been worse; they might have played "I'll be with you always." The speechmaking today wasn't of a universally high order, but for convention stuff, it was brief, and there wasn't much arm waving.

Everyone seemed to feel this was right serious business, even if it was only the first day. A youngster led a goat around with a GOP banner on its back reading: "Be kind to animals and me too." Some of the delegates remarked: if that wasn't a goat it could be a dark horse. It could be, too. Anything can happen here in the next few days.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tonight General MacArthur will deliver the Keynote Speech. I'm reminded of Will Roger's comment on Simeon Fess, the Republican Keynoter in 1928. Rogers said: "It was an impromptu address that he had been working on for six months. But after all, a Keynote Speech is really press notices of the Republican Party written by its own members." Of course, that's equally true for the Democrats.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday - July 8, 1952

This is the news:

The Credentials Committee of th Republican Convention is still in session here in Chicago, trying to decide disputed delegate contests. So far Taft-supporters have been in control of all contests heard and decided. In each case the credentials committee supported the decisions of the Republican National Committee last week. The Credentials committee voted unanimously--as did the National committee-- to seat a Florida delegation that is said to break down 17 votes for Taft..one for Eisenhower. The committee agreed with the national group that the one contested seat in Kansas be awarded to Eisenhower. In Mississippi, five pro-Taft delegates were seated. And in Georgia, 17 pro-Taft delegates won the credentials committee vote. [redacted] Senator Lodge, the Eisenhower campaign manager, says this fight will be taken to the convention floor. The credentials committee has not yet heard arguments on the Texas and Louisiana delegations. But it is expected that no matter what the decision is, these contests will also be appealed to the convention. The long arguments before the credentials committee..opened to television this time as they were not before the national committee..has slowed up the whole convention program.

Convention leaders who were hoping to adjourn late Thursday are now speakin of Friday noon..or later..as a target date. ~~Many delegates stayed away from the Convention amphitheater today.~~ TODAY, The scheduled speakers warned that the party fight, now in progress, may hurt in November. Senator Bridges said "bitterness, disunity and dissension" have been engendered within the ranks of the party.

Tonight, former President Hoover addresses the convention. He will say that we lost the peace because our bewildered statesmanship brought no return from the scarifice and tears of millions of mothers and wives in the last war. Mr. Hoover will argue again for a strong air force, a strong navy..ready to strike back at any aggressor like a rattlesnake. In a reference to the western alliance, the former President says its largely a "phantom quality"..the potential is there but the will is lacking. (This is the army General Eisenhower formerly commanded.) Mr. Hoover..at 77..will tell the delegates that this is probably the last time he will address the party convention. And he will say that this election day "may well be the last chance for the survival of freedom in America."

Both of the major candidates..Taft and Eisenhower..were busy today visiting delegates, explaining their views, seeking votes. Senator Taft, who conferred with Mr. Hoover this afternoon, told delegates from California, Utah, Washington state and Wyoming that "we must get rid of the delegate fight and not upset the whole Republican party." General Eisenhower said he believes the party will have a hard time beating the Democrats in November.. he appealed for harmony.. for a November vote large enough to "kick the Democrats so far in November that it will take them 20 years to get back." Eisenhower also saw the California delegation.

~~Two delegates from New York, who previously said they were going to vote for Taft, today decided to switch to Eisenhower. Both men are Negroes.. they said, after a visit to Eisenhower, that "old Grand Republicans are opposing a strong civil rights platform." The tentative plank is said to call for an advisory Fair Employment Practises Commission.. without subpoena powers.~~

The Democratic presidential candidates are continuing their speech-making tours. Senator Russell says he would support Stevenson or Kefauver if either is nominated.. but he might bolt the party "in a drastic case." Kefauver predicts he'll be nominated on the third or fourth ballot. Averell Harriman says international tension will probably ease in two years..then, perhaps, taxes could be cut. Senator Kerr says he wouldn't TRADE places now with any of his rivals for the presidential nomination.

In Washington today, Solicotr General Philip Perlman resigned his job after five years. The President has accepted the resignation with "sincere regret."

At the United Nations we accused the Russians of striking at the foundations of the U.N. and world-peace with their bitter hate-America campaign.

In Korea, the enemy used 14 Russian-made tanks to attack an allied position on the central front. It was the heaviest concentration of Communist armor in the past 12 months. There was no progress at the truce talks.

Phil Murray, the president of the striking C.I.O. steel workers today asked the Justice Department to take "prompt and vigorous action" against six of the largest steel producers..he says they are conspiring to prolong the strike..prevent a settlement. And steel industry leaders say they are going to ask Murray to meet with them next week in an effort to resume the shipment of iron ore.

In Philadelphia today, the all-star baseball game was called off because of rain at the end of five innings. The National League won, three to two.

sev . with murrow july 8 6:45 p.m. radio

Anybody who says he knows who the nominee will be, is a fool or a knave ; nobody knows.....but certain things are clear: the feeling on the convention floor, like this chicago weather, drastically changed overnight.....The Ike people are infinitely more confident now... the floor victory on the rule change and macarthur's failure to take solid hold are the reasons for this.

and for what it is, it's worth the mood in the press corps has changed. Now, for the first time, I find some a few old timers there willing to bet; they would, as of now, bet on Ike to make it; they may be wrong - I am merely reporting what I find.

Some of the shrewdest people I know here say this: taft has too much of his strength in small packages -- in small states and in small parts of large delegations; the latter, particularly, tend to break easily under a psychological steamroller, which is what Ike is building up here.

For example - there has been some shifting toward him inside the florida group, the first signs of that in north dakota, and the pre-dominantly-taft kentucky delegation is unquestionably weakening. There must be others. .... very significantly, you hear no such reports of seepage away from the eisenhower camp.

Nobody seems to see any big deals or surprises that could go toward taft; only toward eisenhower.

Warren -- even stassen -- are still holding out with themselves in mind. That probably means they feel any danger of a pink taft steamroller victory is ended, but that Ike is still quite a distance from the tape.

This business is by no means over; something most unusual, some incredible eisenhower blunder for example, could break the momentum. But as of right now, what momentum there is here, is on his side.

Eric Sevareid

This might properly be labeled the "lost day" at the Republican Convention here in Chicago... The Convention convened briefly... later; the amphithere was more than half empty;... principle delegates were not there;... few people apeared to listen to the speeches... The real battle was going on downtown in the Congress Hotel before the Credentials Comittee... The Taft forces controll that Comittee... and the results announced so far, as we reported earlier, go right down the line with the decisions of the National Comittee... If this continues... and there is no reason to think it wont... then the Eisenhower strategists will face a tough decision... They have labelled the whole thing a steal;... they won a useful victory on this point yesterday... If the Credentials Comitte, operating in the open, before cameras and Microphones, supports the decisions of the National Comittee, then the Eisenhower command must decide whether to take the fight to the floor of the Convention... It is unusual for one comittee to over-rule another ...and the Credentials Comittee can't hear any evidence that was not presented to the National Comittee... And it is even more unusual for a Convention to refuse the recomendation or report of a comittee... (the only recent case where this has happened was in forty-eight, when the Democratic Convention amended the report of its Platform Comittee on the matter of civil rights)... What the men supporting Eisenhower will have to decide is whether it is wise or desirable to take the whole business of contested delegates before the full Convention,.... Tonight the indications are that that is just what they are going to do; (.there is no strategy out here that doesn't involve risk,) another bitter floor fights will give the Taft men a chance to claim that the Party is being drawn and quartered in public,..that the Eisenhower men wont abide by the established and traditional machinery of the Party,...Yesterday's fight over changing the rules has produced considerable dissention inthe Taft camp;..A number of his Lieutenants think they shouldn't have taken it on,...The Eisenhower camp could ver reach itself, but as of now, they are going all the way;..they reckon to be able to win the next test by a dozen or fifteen votes less than their margin of one hundred and ten of yesterday,.....The Taft forces also face a delicate decision,..Yesterday, on the rules change, Taft had five hundred and forty eight votes;(.thats the hard core of his strength)...On the first ballot, he can probably count on more than that;(it requires 604 to nominate).The Taft problem is whether to deploy his full strength on the first ballot, hoping to win there, or come so close as to frighten the undecided into jumping to him, or whether he should hold back some of his votes on the first ballot in order to be sure of gaining strength on the second; for if the Senator should lose strength on any ballot after the first, the dam would probably break.

There was a little trouble out at the amphitheatre today...It was almost impossible to find an ushers...Seems that in "peace time", they work the ball games,..and they were more interested in the all star games than in the Convention...As one remarked, "If they had four umpires at the Convention, they might get this thing over with!"...But there aren't four umpires - there are about twelve hundred,..and tomorrow they will start arguing about the rules again,...

We are in the midst of a political convention, and here in Chicago, if you take so much as a deep breath, someone reads a political implication into it. The same holds true for this observation by Thomas Huxley: "The rung of a ladder was never meant to rest upon, but only to hold man's foot long enough to enable him to put the other somewhat higher."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

There are ~~is crowded~~ few men on the ladder but others are waiting

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - JULY 8, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Credentials Committee of the Republican Convention is still in session here in Chicago trying to decide disputed delegate contests. So far Taft-supporters have been in control of all contests heard and decided. In each case the Credentials Committee supported the decision of the Republican National Committee last week. The Credentials Committee voted unanimously - as did the National Committee - to seat a Florida delegation that is said to break down 17 votes for Taft, one for Eisenhowdr. The Committee agreed with the national group that the one contested seat in Kansas be awarded to Eisenhower. In Mississippi, five pro-Taft delegates were seated. And in Georgia, 17 pro-Taft delegates won the Credentials Committee vote.

Senator Lodge, the Eisenhower campaign manager, says this fight will be taken to the Convention Floor. The Credentials Committee has not yet heard arguments on the Texas and Louisiana delegations. But it is expected that no matter what the decision is, these contests will also be appealed to the Convention. The long arguments before the Credentials Committee - opened to television this time as they were not before the National Committee - has slowed up the whole convention program. Convention leaders who were hoping to adjourn late Thursday are now speaking of Friday noon - or later - as a target date. Today the scheduled speakers warned that the Party fight, now in progress, may hurt in November. Senator Bridges said "bitterness, disunity and dissension" have been engendered within the ranks of the Party.

Tonight, former President Hoover addresses the Convention. He will say that we lost the peace, because our bewildered statesmanship brought no return from the sacrifice and tears of millions of mothers and wives in the last war. Mr. Hoover will argue again for a strong Air Force, a strong Navy, ready to strike back at any aggressor like a rattlesnake. In a reference to the western alliance, the former President says it's largely a "phantom quality"; the potential is there, but the will is lacking. (This is the Army General Eisenhower formerly commanded.) Mr. Hoover, at 77, will tell the delegates that this is probably the last time he will address the Party Convention. And he will say that this election day "may well be the last chance for the survival of freedom in America."

Both of the major candidates, Taft and Eisenhower, were busy today visiting delegates, explaining their views, seeking votes. Senator Taft, who conferred with Mr. Hoover this afternoon, told delegates from California, Utah, Washington State and Wyoming that "we must get rid of the delegate fight and not upset the whole Republican Party." General Eisenhower said he believes the Party will have a hard time beating the Democrats in November; he appealed for harmony - for a November vote large enough to "kick the Democrats so far in November that it will take them 20 years to get back." Eisenhower also saw the California delegation.

The Democratic presidential candidates are continuing their speech-making tours. Senator Russell says he would support Stevenson or Kefauver if either is nominated, but he might bolt the Party "in a drastic case." Kefauver predicts he'll be nominated on the third or fourth ballot. Averell Harriman says international tension will probably ease in two years, then, perhaps, taxes could be cut. Senator Kerr says he wouldn't trade places now with any of his rivals for the presidential nomination.

In Washington today, Solicitor General Philip Perlman resigned his job after five years. The President has accepted the resignation with "sincere regret."

At the United Nations we accused the Russians of striking at the foundations of the U.N. and world-peace with their bitter hate-America campaign.

In Korea, the enemy used 14 Russian-made tanks to attack an allied position on the central front. It was the heaviest concentration of communist armor in the past 12 months. There was no progress at the truce talks.

Phil Murray, the president of the striking CIO steelworkers today asked the Justice Department to take "prompt and vigorous action" against six of the largest steel producers; he says they are conspiring to prolong the strike - prevent a settlement. And steel industry leaders say they are going to ask Murray to meet with them next week in an effort to resume the shipment of iron ore.

In Philadelphia today, the all-star baseball game was called off because of rain at the end of five innings. The National League won, three to two.

SEVAREID: Anybody who says he knows who the nominee will be is a fool or a knave. Nobody knows - but certain things are clear: the feeling on the Convention Floor, like this Chicago weather, drastically changed overnight. The Ike people are infinitely more confident now; the floor victory on the rule-change and MacArthur's failure to take solid hold are the reasons for this.

And for what it's worth, the mood in the press corps has changed. Now, for the first time, I find old timers there willing to bet. They would, as of now, bet on Ike to make it. They may be wrong; I am merely reporting what I find.

Some of the shrewdest people I know here say this: Taft has too much of his strength in small packages - in small states and in small parts of large delegations; the latter, particularly, tend to break easily under a psychological steamroller, which is what Ike is building up here.

For example - there has been some shifting toward him inside the Florida group; the first signs of that in North Dakota; and the pre-dominantly Taft-Kentucky delegation is unquestionably weakening. There must be others. Very significantly, you hear no such reports of seepage away from the Eisenhower camp.

Warren, even Stassen, are still holding out with themselves in mind. That probably means they feel any danger of a quick Taft steamroller victory is ended, but that Ike is still quite a distance from the tape.

This business is by no means over; something most unusual, some incredible Eisenhower blunder, for example, could break the momentum. But as of right now, what momentum there is here, is on his side.

MURROW: This might properly be labeled the "lost day" at the Republican Convention here in Chicago. The Convention convened briefly and late; the amphitheater was more than half empty; principle delegates were not there; few people appeared to listen to the speeches. The real battle was going on downtown in the Congress Hotel before the Credentials Committee. The Taft forces controll that Committee, and the results announced so far, as we reported earlier, go right down the line with the decisions of the National Committee. If this continues - and there is no reason to think it wont - then the Eisenhower strategists will face a tough decision. They have labelled the whole thing a steal; they won a useful victory on this point yesterday. If the Credentials Committee, operating in the open before cameras and microphones, supports the decisions of the National Committee, then the Eisenhower command must decide whether to take the fight to the floor of the Convention. It is unusual for one committee to overrule another, and the Credentials Committee can't hear any evidence that was not presented to the National Committee. And it is even more unusual for a convention to refuse the recommendation or report of a committee. (The only recent case where this has happened was in forty-eight, when the Democratic Convention amended the report of its Platform Committee on the matter of civil rights.) What the men supporting Eisenhower will have to decide is whether it is wise or desirable to take the whole business of contested delegates before the full Convention. Tonight, the indications are that that is just what they are going to do; (there is no strategy out here that doesn't involve risk). Another bitter floor fight will give the Taft men a chance to claim that the Party is being drawn and quartered in public, that the Eisenhower men wont abide by the established and traditional machinery of the Party.

Yesterday's fight over changing the rules has produced considerable dissention in the Taft camp; a number of his Lieutenants think they shouldn't have taken it on. The Eisenhower camp could over-reach itself, but as of now, they are going all the way; they reckon to be able to win the next test by a dozen or fifteen votes less than their margin of one hundred and ten of yesterday. The Taft forces also face a delicate decision. Yesterday, on the rules change, Taft had five hundred and forty-eight votes; (that's the hard core of his strength). On the first ballot, he can probably count on more than that; (it requires 604 to nominate). The Taft problem is whether to deploy his full strength on the first ballot, hoping to win there, or come so close as to frighten the undecided into jumping to him — or whether he should hold back some of his votes on the first ballot in order to be sure of gaining strength on the second; for if the Senator should lose strength on any ballot after the first, the dam would probably break.

There was a little trouble out at the amphitheater today. 'Twas almost impossible to find an usher. Seems that in "peace time", they work the ball games, and they were more interested in the all star game than in the Convention. As one remarked: "If they had four umpires at the Convention, they might get this thing over with." But there aren't four umpires - there are about twelve hundred; and tomorrow they will start arguing about the rules again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are in the midst of a political convention, and here in Chicago, if you take so much as a deep breath, someone reads a political implication into it. The same holds true for this observation by Thomas Huxley: "The rung of a ladder was never meant to rest upon, but only to hold man's foot long enough to enable him to put the other somewhat higher." There are two men on the ladder, but others are waiting.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Murrow -
July 9, 1952
Wed.

This is the news:

The Republican National Convention convenes again here in the Chicago Ampitheater in less than an hour. It will then start [redacted] a long, hard and [redacted] very significant battle over the seating of delegates from Georgia and Texas. The convention's credentials committee has completed its work..is now writing majority and minority reports. There was one surprise, today. The Taft forces yielded 13 Louisiana votes to General Eisenhower. Taft-supporters, in control of the committee, thus gave the General a net gain of 11 votes...in a move to make the differences between the two major candidates less severe. But the committee agreed on a Texas split of 22 for Taft, and 16 for Eisenhower. (the same decision made by the national committee) It is this Texas decision..and yesterday's decision to give all 17 of Georgia's votes to Taft, that prompted the Eisenhower forces to appeal to the convention floor. Senator Taft and his top aides agree [redacted] that the convention decision on the FIRST CONTEST, THE Georgia delegates will be "crucial.. [redacted] critical"... in deciding the whole issue at stake here in Chicago. [redacted] The Senator also feels that the decision on Texas means that [redacted] HIS presidential nomination [redacted] "is almost in the bag." He is confident the convention [redacted] will uphold the credentials committee's decision.

But the Senator appears to have suffered a reversal..among Pennsylvania delegates. Joseph N. Pew, Junior, long a power in Pennsylvania's Republican politics, says Governor Fine has decided to support Eisenhower. Governor Sherman Adams, the Eisenhower floor leader, says he has "reasonable assurances" that Fine will join the Eisenhower cause. Fine has said nothing. But Senator Taft says he has not been optomistic about the Pennsylvania governor for several days.

~~California is still watching and waiting. Senator Knowland says California's delegation will vote for its Governor Warren at least through two ballots. Eisenhower supporters look for help here. But Knowland feels Eisenhower and Taft will finish close on the first ballot..that by staying with Warren there might be a deadlock..and a chance for the California governor to get the big job.~~

Senator Taft today visited former President Hoover in his Chicago hotel suite. Later Mr Hoover issued a formal statement supporting Taft.

The convention today heard Senator McCarthy charge that the Administration deliberately built up Russia while tearing down the strength of America. Mc Carthy said this was due to a combination of [redacted] abysmal [redacted] stupidity and treason. Mc Carthy also charged that there exists what he called an Acheson-Truman-Lattimore party.

Washington reporters asked the President to comment on this. Mr. Truman said: "If McCarthy said it, it's a lie, you can be sure of that." The President revealed he had spent part of the afternoon watching the proceedings here in the Ampitheater on television. He told reporters, with a smile, "I'm worried. It looks like my favorite candidate is going to get beaten." Mr. Truman has always referred to Senator Taft as his favorite for the Republican nomination. The President also said, of the proceedings here, "The Republicans did all the quarrelling they could in committee..and now they'll take it to the floor."

Mr. Truman spoke as he waited for the return of Secretary of State Acheson from a 17-day trip to Europe and Latin America. The President LATER told the Secretary he had a "most profitable trip."

The President also met with civil rights advocates and told them he would [redacted] make an uncompromising fight to get the Democratic convention to approve a full federal civil rights platform.

The Government says the steel strike may cause serious shortages, later this year, of canned fruits and vegetables. Accordingly, it has taken steps to channel more tin-plate to manufacturers of cans for perishable foods. Chrysler said today it will lay-off 54-thousand Michigan employes..because of a steel shortage.

Undersecretary for air, Roswell Gilpatrick, says several hundred airplanes have been sent to the Far East, to bolster our airpower. He said some of the jets on the way over are "capable" of carrying small atomic bombs.

In Korea today, a two-day Chinese Communist attack pushed allied troops from a strategic hill southeast of Kumsong. And the Chinese radio now says "it welcomes" what it calls the allied "attitude of "willingness to negotiate." The negotiators start their second year of conferences in a few hours.

At the United Nations Security Council meeting today, the Russians cast their 51st veto.. prevented the Council from condemning "the practise of fabricating and disseminating" war propaganda. Ambassador Gross says, we will ask the United Nations assembly, in October, to indict Russia as a hate and war monger.

In Washington, a three - judge federal district court has ruled that the State Department acted illegally last year when it revoked the passport of Ann Bauer.. a free lance writer.. without telling her why, or giving her a hearing.

The Resolutions Committee tonight released two of the 15 planks of the 1952 Party Platform. The full report will be made known tomorrow. One of the planks, dealing with Foreign Policy, accused the Democratic Administration of losing the peace for want of a foreign policy. It said that the Korean war could have been avoided by "foresight"...condemned the tragic blunders growing out of secret agreements reached at Yalta and Potsdam...said these agreements should be repudiated. It blamed the Administration for the loss of China...said we must give the people of the East more aid...and that Soviet power to intimidate the free peoples of the world must be stopped. It called for continuing collective security in Western Europe...but added:"We shall make it clear that we have no intention to sacrifice the east, to gain time for the west."

On Civil Rights, the Platform urges state FEPC before any effort is made to promote Federal legislation. It comes out against discrimination because of race,creed or color in employment. The plank opposes the poll tax, supports anti-lynching laws.

While the rest of the 1952 platform will be released tomorrow, we have learned from entirely reliable sources the major points it will stress. The National Defense plank will say that our land,sea and air forces must be co-ordinated but that first reliance must be placed on air power. The plank says that the 80-group air arm proposed by the Republican 80th Congres but never adopted, was a far-sighted proposal and should have been put into effect.

The Labor Plank supports the Taft-Hartley Act. Committee members agreed that the most important part of this plank is the party's endorsement of the union shop. The plank lists 8 basic rights for workers, six basic rights for unions. It calls for ammending the labor-management act to "assure industrial peace and gain the respect of labor, management and the public." Propably the most significant addition to the Platform, xxxi is a plank which Committee members called "The Mink Coat Plank"...one on corruption. It lists specifically ship dealings, deep freezers and mink coats... condemns the theory that those with the proper connections can get tax relief under the present administration...says there's a definite tieup between some in government office and what it calls "the gangster element."

The plank on Communism we're told says "the government must stop protecting Communists in public office." There was no controversey over this plank and no mention of Senator McCarthy during the discussions.

The plank on taxes calls for a general reduction. And has this assurance to offer:"The Republican Party promises only what it can deliver, and will deliver everything it promises."

The plank on Agriculture calls for full-parity, condemns the Brannan Plan by name and says:"The prosperity of the farmers and the welfare of America are linked together. To achieve this goal, the farmer must be given full parity." The plank favors farm co-ops, but says that rural electrification should only be supported by the federal government, when private industry is unable to do the job."

We're informed that At the six hour meeting of the Platform Committee, there were no serious arguments, except in the case of the Civil RightsPlank. There was vocal opposition to it, but was carried by a 2 to 1 vote. Otherwise, all went well.

When the convention reconvenes, about an hour from now, the credentials Committee will make its report, and then the battle will begin. It would seem that the Taft forces were searching for a compromise, when they agreed to give the thirteen Louisiana delegates to Eisenhower leaving only two that were not in contest, for Taft. But the Eisenhower men are in no mood to compromise; they are confident they will win tonight's vote, by a margin of thirty or forty votes. Their margin won't be as big as it was on the vote on the rules change, but the Eisenhower men are ~~confident~~ sure they can win comfortably. Governor Fine of Pennsylvania is going for Eisenhower. Taft says he hasn't been optimistic about Fine for several days.

Taft headquarters has announced Herbert Hoover's endorsement of the Senator. Mr. Hoover says he has not for many years taken public part in a conventions's choice of candidate, but on this occasion, when the isses are so vital to our country, my conscience demands that I speak up. Senator Taft has long proved his forthrightness, integrity and absolute devotion to public interest, and he has had long experience in government. Mr. Hoover says this convention meets not only to nominate a candidate, but to save America. He has been deeply distressed at the acrimonious discussion in the convention. Mr. Hoover hopes that that shall cease for the sake of the future of our party and the country." The acrimony isn't going to cease. By all the signs it's going to get worse. There still exists the mathematical possibility of a deadlock with California being the one delegation that could break it.

These two quotations from Eisenhower spokesmen will give you an idea of the atmosphere around his headquarters....."Its in the bag, but we havent yet got the bag tightly tied"....another said..."I feel like a baseball manager, when my pitcher has a no hitter, going into the ninth inning...thts no time to ~~kx~~ talk about it."....another footnote...some of the Eisenhower managers are making plans to rent the Big ballroom in the Blackstone for his news conference..after he is nominated.....There is quite a parade of delegates wearing Taft buttons visiting the Eisenhower headquarters....

The convention is getting to the point now where promises have to be translated into votes...and where one miscalculated move could be fatal. There have been a lot of deals on the fire. It may be true as Tennyson said:"In statesmanship to strike too soon is oft to miss the blow." But in politics, it is equally true as John of Salisbury contended:"He who will not when he may, may not when he will."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - JULY 9, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Republican National Convention convenes again here in the Chicago amphitheater in less than an hour. It will then start a long, hard and very significant battle over the seating of delegates from Georgia and Texas. The Convention' Credentials Committee has completed its work, is now writing majority and minority reports. There was one surprise, today. The Taft forces yielded 13 Louisiana votes to General Eisenhower. Taft-supporters, in control of the Committee, thus gave the General a net gain of 11 votes in a move to make the differences between the two major candidates less severe. But the Committee agreed on a Texas split of 22 for Taft and 16 for Eisenhower - the same decision made by the National Committee. It is this Texas decision, and yesterday's decision to give all 17 of Georgia's votes to Taft, that prompted the Eisenhower forces to appeal to the Convention Floor. Senator Taft and his top aides agree that the Convention desision on the first contest, the Georgia delegates will be "crucial....critical" in deciding the whole issue at stake here in Chicago. The Senator also feels that the decision on Texas means that his presidential nomination "is almost in the bag." He is confident the Convention will uphold the Credential's Committee's decision.

But the Senator appears to have suffered a reversal among Pannsylvanian delegates. Joseph N. Pew, Jr., long a power in Pennsylvania's Republican politics, says Governor Fine has decided to support Eisenhower. Governor Sherman Adams, the Eisenhower floor leader, says he has "reasonable assurances" that Fine will join the Eisenhower cause. Fine has said nothing. But Senator Taft says he has not been optimistic about the Pennsylvania governor for several days.

Senator Taft today visited former President Hoover in his Chicago hotel suite. Later Mr. Hoover issued a formal statement supporting Taft.

The Convention today heard Senator McCarthy charge that the Administration deliberately built up Russia while tearing down the strength of America. McCarthy said this was due to a combination of abysmal stupidity and treason. McCarthy also charged that there exists what he called an Acheson-Truman-Lattimore party.

Washington reporters asked the President to comment on this. Mr. Truman said: "If McCarthy said it, it's a lie, you can be sure of that." The President revealed he had spent part of the afternoon watching the proceedings here in the amphitheater on television. He told reporters, with a smile; "I'm worried. It looks like my favorite candidate is going to get beaten." Mr. Truman has always referred to Senator Taft as his favorite Republican nomination. The President also said, of the proceedings here: "The Republicans did all the quarrelling they could in committee, and now they'll take it to the floor."

Mr. Truman spoke as he waited for the return of Secretary of State Acheson from a 17 day trip to Europe and Latin America. The President later told the Secretary he had a "most profitable trip."

The President also met with civil-rights advocates, and told them he would make an uncompromising fight to get the Democratic Convention to approve a full federal civil-rights platform.

The Government says the steel strike may cause serious shortages later this year of canned fruits and vegetables. Accordingly, it has taken steps to channel more tin-plate to manufactures of cans for perishable foods. Chrysler said today it will lay-off 54-thousand Michigan employees because of a steel shortage.

Undersecretary for Air, Roswell Gilpatrick, says several hundred airplanes have been sent to the Far East to bolster our airpower. He said some of the jets on the way over are "capable" of carrying small atomic bombs.

In Korea today, a two-day Chinese Communist attack pushed allied troops from a strategic hill southeast of Kumsong. And the Chinese radio now says it "welcomes" what it calls the allied attitude of "willingness to negotiate."

The negotiators start their second year of conferences in a few hours.

At the United Nations Security Council meeting today, the Russians cast their 51st veto - prevented the Council from condemning "the practice of fabricating and disseminating" war propaganda. Ambassador Gross says, we will ask the United Nations assembly, in October, to indict Russia as a hate and war monger.

In Washington, a three judge. Federal District Court has ruled that the State Department acted illegally last year when it revoked the passport of Ann Bauer - a free lance writer - without telling her why, or giving her a hearing.

The Resolutions Committee tonight released two of the 15 planks of the 1952 Party Platform. The full report will be made known tomorrow. One of the planks, dealing with Foreign Policy, accused the Democratic Administration of losing the peace for want of a Foreign Policy. It said that the Korean war could have been avoided by "foresight", condemned the tragic blunders growing out of secret agreements reached at Yalta and Potsdam, said these agreements should be repudiated. It blamed the Administration for the loss of China, said we must give the people of the East more aid, and that Soviet power to intimidate the free peoples of the world must be stopped. It called for continuing collective security in Western Eusope, but added: "We shall make it clear that we have no intention to sacrifice the East to gain time for the West."

On Civil Rights, the Platform urges state FEPC before any effort is made to promote federal legislation. It comes out against discrimination because of race, creed or color in employment. The plank opposes the poll tax, supports anti-lynching laws.

While the rest of the 1952 Platform will be released tomorrow, we have learned from entirely reliable sources the major points it will stress. The National Defense plank will say that our land, sea, and air forces must be co-ordinated, but that first rliance must be placed on air power. The plank says that the 80-group air arm, proposed by the Republican 80th Congress, but never adopted, was a far-sighted proposal, and should have been put into effect.

The Labor Plank supports the Taft-Hartley Act. Committee members agreed that the most important part of this plank is the party's endorsement of the union shop. The plank lists 8 basic rights for workers, six basic rights for unions. It calls for ammending the Labor-Management Act to "assure industrial peace and gain the respect of labor, management and the public." Probably the most significant addition to the Platform is a plank which Committee members called "The Mink Coat Plank" - one on corruption. It lists specifically ship dealings, deep freezers, and mink coats; condemns the theory that those with the proper connections can get tax relief under the present Administration; says there's a definite tieup between some in government office and what it calls "the gangster element."

The plank on Communism we're told says "the Government must stop protecting Communists in public office." There was no controversey over this plank and no mention of Senator McCarthy during the discussions. The plank on taxes calls for a general reduction, and has this assurance to offer: "The Republican Party promises only what it can deliver and will deliver everything it promises."

The plank on agriculture calls for full-parity, condemns the Brannan Plan by name and says: "The prosperity of the farmers and the welfare of America are linked together. To achieve this goal, the farmer must be given full parity." The plank favors farm co-ops, but says the rural electrification should only be supported by the Federal Government, when private industry is unable to do the job.'

We're informed that at the six hour meeting of the Platform Committee, there were no serious arguments except in the case of the Civil Rights plank. There was vocal opposition to it, but was carried by a 2 to one vote. Otherwise, all went well.

When the Convention reconvenes about an hour from now, the Credentials Committee will make its report and then the battle will begin. It would seem that the Taft forces were searching for a compromise when they agreed to give the thirteen Louisiana delegates to Eisenhower, leaving only two that were not in contest for Taft. But the Eisenhower men are in no mood to compromise; they are confident they will win tonight's vote by a margin of thirty or forty votes. Their margin won't be as big as it was on the vote on the rules change, but the Eisenhower men are sure they can win comfortably. Governor Fine of Pennsylvania is going for Eisenhower. Taft says he hasn't been optimistic about Fine for several days.

Taft headquarters has announced Herbert Hoover's endorsement of the Senator. Mr. Hoover says he has not for many years taken public part in a convention's choice of candidate, but on this occasion, when the issues are so vital to our country, my conscience demands that I speak up. Senator Taft has long proved his forthrightness, integrity and absolute devotion to public interest, and he has had long experience in government. Mr. Hoover says this Convention meets not only to nominate a candidate, but to save America. He has been deeply distressed at the acrimonious discussion in the Convention. Mr. Hoover hopes that that shall cease for the sake of the future of our Party and the country. The acrimony isn't going to cease. By all the signs it's going to get worse. There still exists the mathematical possibility of a deadlock with California being the one delegation that could break it.

These two quotations from Eisenhower spokesmen will give you an idea of the atmosphere around his headquarters; "It's in the bag, but we haven't yet got the bag tightly tied." Another said: "I feel like a baseball manager, when my pitcher has a no hitter, going into the ninth inning; there's no time to talk about it." Another footnote: some of the Eisenhower managers are making plans to rent the big ballroom in the Blackstone for his news conference - after he is nominated. There is quite a parade of delegates wearing Taft buttons visiting the Eisenhower headquarters.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Convention is getting to the point now where promises have to be translated into votes, and where one miscalculated move could be fatal. There have been a lot of deals on the fire. It may be true as Tennyson said: "In statesmanship, to strike too soon is oft to miss the blow." But in politics, it is equally true as John of Salisbury contended: "He who will not when he may, may not when he will."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Pay - line gang
D. Schoenbrun $50
Ed Morgan $50

Murrow -
Thurs July 10
-1952-

This is the news:

The Republican convention here in Chicago tonight starts nominating its candidates for President. CBS Radio will resume its coverage of the convention at 8;30 p.m. eastern daylight time.

Tomorrow the convention meets to start balloting for its presidential candidate. Today the convention adopted its 1952 platform. AND [redacted] demands a [redacted] had [redacted] floor fight [redacted] rights [redacted] was [redacted] decided [redacted] change in its rules. [redacted] give states that vote almost solidly Republican a bigger representation on the party's National Committee. And Congressman Walter Judd of Minnesota, told the delegates that, to win in November, they must get the votes of "millions of homeless independents and disillusioned Democrats." He said: "If we want to win we must become a majority party, as well as the one nearest right."

The two leading candidates, Eisenhower and Taft, spent the day visiting with delegates and issuing statements..so did their aides. Here's what the top figures in [redacted] THIS CONVENTION have to say:

Senator Taft, despite what he calls the convention's "arbitrary politicl action" last night, says he expects to be nominated "on an early ballot." General Eisenhower, says he's probably the most ignorant man in Chicago on the battle for delegates..says he knows nothing about it..just gets reports from his aides and supporters. His campaign manager, Senator Lodge, is certain that Eisenhower will be the candidate.. thinks it might happen on the first ballot.. "certainly by the second." But Senator Taft's campaign manager..David Ingalls, says he thinks "Eisenhower is slipping." Mr. Ingalls is bitter over what happened here last night. He said the convention realizes that it is now a fight between Dewey and anti-Dewey forces. He says: all semblance of morality has been discarded by what he calls "Dewey-Eisenhower forces. He says: "They are now engaged in a brutal drive to force a Dewey candidate and a Dewey campaign down our throats."

Senator Taft today visited Warren headquarters. So did Harold Stassen.. so did Paul Hoffman, an Eisenhower LEADER [redacted]

Governor Warren's aides say his California delegation is standing steady.. will vote for Warren. Stassen says he has formed no bloc or coalition with Warren. He also says Taft and Eisenhower forces are seeking his aid. Taft and Warren are said to have agreed to stay in the race..not throw their votes to anyone else.

Senator Knowland, who manages Warren's campaign, says he never saw a convention with such ill-founded rumors. One such rumor this afternoon had it that Taft might throw his support to General Mac Arthur. [redacted] Senator Taft later told reporters that he had phoned [redacted] General MacArthur in New York.. discussed "some matters." The Senator says he did not discuss the vice presidency for MAC ARTHUR. [redacted] He denied another rumor..that he plans to throw his votes to Warren, in order to stop Eisenhower.

[redacted]

In Boston today, Senator Kefauver said he is grateful to the Republican party for showing the nation that the party is so hopelessly divided that it cannot be trusted with handling the nations affairs.

[redacted]

The President [redacted] today signed a 46 and a half billion dollar bill for building up this nation's defenses. This includes funds for a 143- wing air force by the middle of 1955. The total defense bill is about five billion less than the Administration requested.

The government said today that because of the steel strike, 95 per cent of the automobile industry will be shut down in the next few days.

In Korea today, allied infantry, supported by tanks, occupied three hills on the western front--without opposition. We were forced to withdraw from a fourth hill after a strong attack by the enemy.

In London, General Ridegeway said today that it is basically

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, July 10, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Here, in Chicago, today, while the delegates at the Amphitheater listened to speeches, approved their rules and platform, the two major candidates, Eisenhower and Taft, remained downtown, doing business. I've asked two of my colleagues, assigned to these two headquarters, to give us a brief fill-in on what's happening.

First, let's find out what's going on at Eisenhower Headquarters. David Schoenbrun has spent most of the day at the Blackstone Hotel. What's been going on, Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: This headquarters looks like a fighter's dressing-room just after he's won the championship, jammed packed with glad-handers and back-slappers, even an ex-heavyweight champion, Mr. Gene Tunney, for whom General Eisenhower flexed his muscles this morning, and Mr. Tunney commented: "Great tension!" to which Ike smilingly replied: "I'm down to fighting weight." The General and his managers are feeling chipper. They also know that the fight isn't over yet and they're not being carried away by the psychopathic frenzy of some of the new faces showing up at this headquarters today. There's no undue optimism here and they're not underestimating the strength and determination of Senator Taft. This caution spreds right down the ranks. The receptionist here told me a few minutes ago: "They say we've won, but I won't breathe easy until it's all over." Ike's people are also sensitive to the stop-Eisenhower movement under way, feel that Taft is quite capable of throwing his ~~XXX~~ weight at the last moment to MacArthur or perhaps even to Earl Warren if he cannot make it himself. That's why Ike's managers are talking about Party unity and cooling off burning wounds. It's been a bitter fight and it is not getting any better. Campaign manager, Senator Cabot Lodge, came here to see Eisenhower this afternoon and predicted that he'd win on the second or third ballot. However, when questioned about vice presidential running mates, Lodge said: "That comes later. Right now, we're concentrating on winning the nomination," again that note of discretion. They are optimistic here, but not over-confident.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Eisenhower's Headquarters. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in the News Room at the Amphitheater.

MURROW: Now, let's move to Taft Headquarters in the Hilton Hotel. Edward P. Morgan has been covering developments there. What do you have to report, Ed?

MORGAN: Taft Headquarters hasn't exactly been Grand Central Station today. In fact, there seems to be a feeling among some political commuters that this is not the place to catch the train or at least the band wagon. That's not to say that things haven't been busy. Senator Taft took his first call at seven-thirty this morning in the Congress Hotel, where he is sleeping temporarily, in the presidential suite, then he moved to this GHQ at the Hilton and he's been talking to a steady stream of people ever since. He left his office just a little while ago to consult again with Herbert Hoover. There is no crepe on the office door; the saucer-size Taft buttons are still clasped to everybody's bosom and the pulse of excitement is still beating, but an anxious skip is detectable in the rhythm and the music, instead of the sure, brassy blare of a band is more likely to be a thin whistle in a gradually darkening setting.

The Senator has also been in touch today with the Messrs. Stassen and Warren, as you reported. A lady with auburn hair rushed in excitedly a little while ago with the rumor that General MacArthur was back in town and, of course, that rumor was spiked. The battery of Taft receptionists still approaches the visitors with a greeting of: "Can we be of service to you, Sir, or Madame?" But the searching looks in the receptionists' eyes seem automatically to switch the phrase around to read: "Can you give us a hand?" And, of course, the possibility must not be wholly discounted that they will.

This is Edward P. Morgan in Taft Headquarters in the Conrad Hilton Hotel. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in the News Room at the Amphitheater. (30)

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff

unsound for any nation to depend solely on one branch of its armed forces..such as the air force. [redacted]

Here in Chicago today while the delegates at the ampitheater listened to speeches, approved their rules and platform, the two major candidates.. Eisenhower and Taft...remained downtown... "doing business." I've asked two of my colleagues, assigned to these headquarters, to give us a brief fill-in on what's happened.

First, let's find out what's going on at Eisnhower headquarters. David Schoenbrun has spent most of the day at the Blackstone Hotel. What's been going on Dave?

(return: now back to ERM in the newsroom at the ampitheater)

Now let's move to Taft headquarters in the Hilton Hotel. Edward P. Morgan has been covering developments there. What do you have to report, Ed?

(now back to erm in the newsroom at the ampitheater)

It would be simple, but useless, to spend the next half-hour recounting the rumors that are flying about here in the Amphitheatre, and at the headquarters downtown. There would be no purpose in doing so, because these rumors represent nothing more than calculations on all possible XXX combinations. There still exists the possibility of a deadlock; there is of course developing, as there always does under such circumstances, a stop-Eisenhower movement. There are determined and vindictive men on both sides fighting for their political lives. As things stand right now, it does not appear probable that Eisenhower can win the nomination on the first ballot. But that position could change between now and the beginning of the balloting tomorrow afternoon. The position of the California delegation assumes increasing importance by the hour, and the latest reliable reports, indicate that the seventy members of that delegation continue to stand solidly behind Earl Warren. If you care to take a pencil and paper and figure out all the possible combinations, you can produce for yourself just as durable and believeable a rumor as I could report from here.

Political platforms are interesting documents for a day or two, after which they are generally forgotten or ignored. But they do tend to reflect the mood of a convention, and the direction in which the Party hopes to move. The one adopted here today is a moderate document; the product of much compromise. The foreign policy plank belabors the administration for past policies, but doesn't go as far in its condemnation of the conduct of the war in Korea as have Taft and MacArthur. In places it is vague, as for example, where it says: a Republican administration would look happily forward to the genuine independence of these once free people who have fallen under Russian domination. There is no indication as to how this objective would be achieved. The statement on national defense originally said we should have "overwhelming" air power, That was then changed to "retaliatory" air pcwer, and the final version reads "completely adequate" air power. Those portions of the platform dealing with taxation, agriculture, natural resources, and veterans affairs, generally reflect Republican policy as previously stated by its leaders. The Taft-Hartly law forms the body of the labor plank, but with such ammendments as time and experience show to be desirable. The platform is opposed to compulsory health insurance and against federal aid to education. There was some expectation XXXXXX that the civil rights plank might produce a floor fight. It is a carefull written piece of prose; condemns bigots, racial and religious prejudice, but believes that whatever can be done to eliminate these evils should be undertaken by the states rather than the federal government. The elimination of lynching and of poll taxes are regarded as matters for the federal government. There is a promise of government reorganization along the lines of the Hoover report. The elimination of corruption is promised, as well as a more efficient and frequent mail delivery service.

The delegates here have listened to speeches by Hoover, MacArthur, McCarthy and many others, most of them, representing the Taft point of view. They have applauded lustily at times, but they have adopted a platform today, which comes rather closer to the position of the Eisenhower supporters, ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ than to that of the Taft men.

~~XXXX

The nominating and seconding speeches will soon get underway. And for the rest of the evening we'll be hearing that familiar phrase "the man who" over and over again. Will Rogers claimed to have the answer:"Make every speaker, as soon as he tells all he knows, sit down. Or make them be censored and not allow one man to repeat what some other man had already said. That would cut it down to just one speech at each contention."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - JULY 10, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Republican Convention here in Chicago tonight starts nominating its candidates for President. CBS Radio will resume its coverage of the convention at 8:30 p.m. Eastern Daylight time. Tomorrow the convention meets to start balloting for its presidential candidate. Today the convention adopted its 1952 platform and a change in its rules - to give states that vote almost solidly Republican, a bigger representation on the Party's National Committee. And Congressman Walter Judd of Minnesota told the delegates that, to win in November, they must get the votes of "millions of homeless independents and disillusioned Democrats." He said: "If we want to win we must become a majority party, as well as the one nearest right."

The two leading candidates, Eisenhower and Taft, spent the day visiting with delegates and issuing statements - so did their aides. Here's what the top figures in this convention have to say.

Senator Taft, despite what he calls the convention's "arbitrary political action" last night, says he expects to be nominated "on an early ballot." General Eisenhower, says he's probably the most ignorant man in Chicago on the battle for delegates; says he knows nothing about it; just gets reports from his aides and supporters. His campaign manager, Senator Lodge, is certain that Eisenhower will be the candidate; thinks it might happen on the first ballot - "certainly by the second." But Senator Taft's campaign manager, David Ingalls, says he thinks "Eisenhower is slipping." Mr. Ingalls is bitter over what happened here last night. He said the convention realizes that it is now a fight between Dewey and anti-Dewey forces. He says: all semblance of marality has been discarded by what he calls "Dewey-Eisenhower" forces. He says: "They are now engaged in a brutal drive to force a Dewey candidate and a Dewey campaign down our throats."

Senator Taft today visited Warren headquarters. So did Harold Stassen. So did Paul Hoffman, an Eisenhower leader. Governor Warren's aides say his California delegation is standing steady - will vote for Warren. Stassen says he has formed no bloc or coalition with Warren. He also says Taft and Eisenhower forces are seeking his aid. Taft and Warren are said to have agreed to stay in the race - not throw their votes to anyone else.

Senator Knowland, who manages Warren's campaign, says he never saw a convention with such ill-founded rumors. One such rumor this afternoon had it that Taft might throw his support to General MacArthur. Senator Taft later told reporters that he had phoned General MacArthur in New York, discussed 'some matters.' The Senator says he did not discuss the vice presidency for MacArthur. He denied another rumor that he plans to throw his votes to Warren, in order to stop Eisenhower.

In Boston today, Senator Kefauver said he is grateful to the Republican Party for showing the nation that the Party is so hopelessly divided that it cannot be trusted with handling the nations affairs.

The President today signed a 46-and-a-half-billion dollar bill for building up this nation's defenses. This includes funds for a 143-wing air force by the middle of 1955. The total defense bill is about five billion less than the Administration requested.

The Government said today that because of the steel strike, 95 per cent of the automobile industry will be shut down in the next few days.

In Korea today, allied infantry, supported by tanks, occupied three hills on the western front - without opposition. We were forced to withdraw from a fourth hill after a strong attack by the enemy.

In London, General Ridgway said today that it is basically unsound for any nation to depend solely on one branch of its armed forces such as the Air Force.

Here in Chicago today while the delegates at the amphitheater listened to speeches, approved their rules and platform, the two major candidates, Taft and Eisenhower, remained downtown, "doing business." I've asked two of my colleagues assigned to these headquarters to give us a brief fill-in on what's happened.

First, let's find out what's going on at Eisenhower headquarters. David Schoenbrun has spent most of the day at the Blackstone Hotel. What's been going on Dave?

SCHOENBRUN: This headquarters looks like a fighter's dressingroom just after he's won the championship, jammed packed with glad-handers and back-slappers, even an ex-heavyweight champion, Mr. Gene Tunney, for whom General Eisenhower flexed his muscles this morning, and Mr. Tunney commented: "Great tension!" - to which Ike smilingly replied: "I'm down to fighting weight." The General and his managers are feeling chipper. They also know that the fight isn't over yet and they're not being carried away by the psychopathic frenzy of some of the new faces showing up at this headquarters today. There's no undue optimism here and they're not underestimating the strength and determination of Senator Taft. This caution spreads right down the ranks. The receptionist here told me a few minutes ago: "They say we've won, but I won't breathe easy until it's all over." Ike's people are also sensitive to the stop-Eisenhower movement under way, feel that Taft is quite capable of throwing his weight at the last moment to MacArthur or perhaps even to Earl Warren if he cannot make it himself. That's why Ike's managers are talking about Party unity and cooling off burning wounds. It's been a bitter fight and it is not getting any better. Campaign manager, Senator Cabot Lodge, came here to see Eisenhower this afternoon and predicted that he'd win on the second or third ballot. However, when questioned about vice presidential running mates, Lodge said: "That comes later. Right now, we're concentrating on winning the nomination." Again that note of discretion. They are optimistic here, but not over-confident.

This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Eisenhower's Headquarters. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in the News Room at the Amphitheater.

MURROW: Now, let's move to Taft Headquarters in the Hilton Hotel. Edward P. Morgan has been covering developments there. What do you have to report, Ed?

MORGAN: Taft Headquarters hasn't exactly been Grand Central Station today. In fact, there seems to be a feeling among some political commuters that this is not the place to catch the train or, at least, the band wagon. That's not to say that things haven't been busy. Senator Taft took his first call at seven-thirty this morning in the Congress Hotel, where he is sleeping temporarily, in the presidential suite, then he moved to this GHQ at the Hilton and he's been talking to a steady stream of people ever since. He left his office just a little while ago to consult again with Herbert Hoover. There is no crepe on the office door; the saucer-size Taft buttons are still clasped to everybody's bosom and the pulse of excitement is still beating, but an anxious skip is detectable in the rhythm and the music, instead of the sure, brassy blare of a band is more likely to be a thin whistle in a gradually darkening setting.

The Senator has also been in touch today with the Messrs. Stassen and Warren, as you reported. A lady with auburn hari rushed in excitedly a little while ago with the rumor that General MacArthur was back in two and, of course, that rumor was spiked. The battery of Taft receptionists still approaches the visitors with a greeting of: "Can we be of service to you, Sir or Madame?" But the searching looks in the receptionists' eyes seem automatically to switch the phrase around to read: "Can you give us a hand?" And, of course, the possibiliby must not be wholly discounted that they will.

This is Edward P. Morgan in Taft Headquarters in the Conrad Hilton Hotel. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in the News Room at the Amphitheater.

MURROW: It would be simple, but useless, to spend the next half-hour recounting the rumors that are flying about here in the Amphitheater and at the headquarters downtown. There would be no purpose in doing so, because these rumors represent nothing more than calculations on all possible combinations. There still exists the possibility of a deadlock; there is of course developing, as there always does under such circumstances, a stop-Eisenhower movement. There are determined and vindictive men on both sides fighting for their political lives. As things stand right now, it does not appear probably that Eisenhower can win the nomination on the first ballot. But that position could change between noe and the beginning of the balloting tomorrow afternoon. The position of the California delegation assumes increasing importance by the hour, and the latest reliable reports indicate that the seventy members of that delegation continue to stand solidly behind Earl Warren. If you care to take a pencil and paper and figure out all the possible combinations, you can produce for yourself just as durable and believeable a rumor as I could report from here.

Political platforms are interesting documents for a day or two after which they are generally forgotten or ignored. But they do tend to reflect the mood of a convention, and the direction in which the Party hopes to move. The one adopted here today is a moderate document; the product of much compromise. The foreign policy plank belabors the Administration for past policies, but doesn't go as far in its condemnation of the conduct of the war in Korea as have Taft and MacArthur. In places it is vague, as for example, where it says a Republican administration would look happily forward to the genuine independence of these once free people who have fallen under Russian domination. There is no indication as to how this objective would be achieved. The statement on national defense originally said we should have "overwhelming" air power; that was then changed to "retaliatory" air power, and the final version reads "completely adequate" air power. Those portions of the platform dealing with taxation, agriculture, natural resources, and veterans affairs, generally reflect Republican policy as previously stated by its leaders. The Taft-Hartley law forms the body of the labor plank, but with such ammendments as time and experience show to be desirable. The platform is opposed to compulsory health insurance and against federal aid to

to education. There was some expectation that the civil-rights plank might produce a floor fight. It is a careful written piece of prose; condemns bigots, racial and religious prejudice, but believes that whatever can be done to eliminate these evils should be undertaken by the states rather than the Federal Government. The elimination of lynching and of poll taxes are regarded as matters for the Federa Government. There is a promise of government reorganization along the lines of the Hoover report. The elimination of corruption is promised, as well as a more efficient and frequent mail delivery service.

The delegates here have listened to speeches by Hoover, MacArthur, McCarthy and many others, most of them representing the Taft point of view. They have applauded lustily at times, but they have adopted a platform today, which comes rather closer to the position of the Eisenhower supporters, than to that of the Taft men.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The nominating and seconding speeches will soon get underway. And for the rest of the evening we'll be hearing that familiary phrase "the man who" over and over again. Will Rogers claimed to have the answer: "Make every speaker, as soon as he tells all he knows, sit down. Or make them be censored and not allow one man to repeat what some other man had already said. That would cut it down to just one speech at each convention."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday Special Convention Wrapup Broadcast. Fri. July 11 NIXON - 1952 -

MURROW - JULY 11

It is too early to measure the degree, the seriousness of the damage that has been done to the Republican party here in Chicago. In spite of Eisen's statement of unity. It will take a long time for this bitterness to evaporate, ~~if it ever does.~~ The convention overruled two of its most important committees, and then refused on the first ballot to give the nomination to Senator Taft. The official, recognized and established machinery of the Republican party was overthrown. A lot of personal hopes and ambitions were shattered in the process. The Republican party experienced a revolution by ballot. But the revolutionists have not yet decided what to do with their victory, or who shall get the major spoils. The coalition that brought General Eisenhower the nomination, was made up of a wide variety of men, with varying ambitions and objectives. The conduct of the campaign on his behalf, until he reached Chicago, reflected the conflicting advice to which he was being subjected. During that period the General could take refuge in generalities, statements that he was in the hands of his friends, and that he really knew nothing about politics. But now he is the party's candidate, and ~~the~~ decisions will have to be made as to who is going to run his campaign. There will be hot competition for the place nearest the throne. The coalition supporting Eisenhower was formed in a desperate attempt to seize control of the party from what is generally called the "Old Guard". It has succeeded. But the young guardsmen are ambitious, by no means unanimous as to what they want to do, and the old guard sulk in their tents. General Eisenhower will need a substantial number of the old guard if he is to win. Much of the General's reputation is based not upon prowess in battle, but rather upon his extraordinary ability to reconcile and compromise divergent views and opinions that were honestly held. In this area of conciliation, he will have need to call upon his full talents during the coming months. At least a few of those who worked most vigorously for his nomination, now have varying ideas as to the kind of campaign he should conduct. The brutal and bitter battle of Chicago has ended, but the battle to control and influence the candidate is just beginning. The General will have to pronounce upon issues with which he is but slightly acquainted. There is no time for him to inform himself thoroughly of the details of all the complex issues that confront the country. He must of necessity rely upon a political chief of staff, and good staff work.

Political parties change course slowly. The Republican party is now trying to chart a new course in waters with which the skipper is not altogether familiar. The result may be some confusion on the bridge in the early days of the campaign. It would be reasonable to assume that on the basis of reward for effort, Governor Dewey will be one of the select few standing on the bridge. If this happens, some of those who labored with him to nominate Eisenhower will not be happy. And so it would seem that this new, young gaurd Republican organization, must try to figure out a way to heal some of the wounds they inflicted on the old-timers; they must select and organize their own high-command, while at the same time figuring out a way to beat the Democrats. [General Eisenhower's partner in this undertaking will probably be the thrity-nine year old Senator Nixon from California, who served two terms in the House and is probably best known for his work in connection with the House un-American Activities Committee. His voting record sets him somewhat apart from the old guard. He supported the Marshal Plan, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; [illegible] He is a vigorous campaigner, though without any particular oratorical originality. One reason for his selection was, of course, to spread the ticket by presenting candidates from two different parts of the country.

voted ~~in favor of limiting~~ troops in Europe to four divisions; ~~voted to cut public housing th five-thousand units~~, and in favor of universal military training, and continuing ~~economic aid to~~ Europe. Senator Nixon opposed extension of rent controls.

Those who were hoping for a knock-down, drag out fight between traditional, conservative Republican principles, and those of the Fair Deal, will be dissappointed. Time after time in the last week the Taft supporters said in one fashion or another, "don't change anything." The Eisenhower men said in effect; "we've got to change to win." The convention applauded the old guard, but they voted for the young one. The young ones appear to this reporter to be taking serious rather than hilarious satisfaction in their victory. They appreciate that they must pick up many pieces of broken fences inside their own party before they can get down to the serious business of trying to fence in the Democrats in November.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - JULY 11, 1952
SPECIAL - REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

It is too early to measure the degree, the seriousness of the damage that has been done to the Republican Party here in Chicago. In spite of Eisenhower' statements of unity, it will take a long time for this bitterness to evaporate. The convention overruled two of its most important committees, and then refused on the first ballot to give the nomination to Senator Taft. The official, recognized and established machinery of the Republican Party was overthrown. A lot of personal hopes and amditions were shattered in the process. The Republican Party experienced a revolution by ballot. But the revolutionists have not yet decided what to do with their victory, or who shall get the major spoils. The coalition that brought General Eisenhower the nomination, was made up of a wide variety of men with varying ambitions and objectives. The conduct of the campaign on his behalf, until he reached Chicago, reflected the conflicting advice to which he was being subjected During that period, the General could take refuge in generalitites, statements that he was ih the hands of his friends, and that he really knew nothing about politics. But now he is the Party's candidate, and decisions will have to be made as to who is going to run his campaign. There will be hot competition for the place nearest the throne. The coalition supporting Eisenhower was formed in a desperate attempt to seize control of the Party from what is generally called the "Old Guard". It has succeeded. But the young guardsmen are ambitious, by no means unanimous as to what they want to do, and the old guard sulk in their tents. General Eisenhower will need a substantial number of the old guard if he is to win. Much of the General's reputation is based not upon prowess in battle, but rather upon his extraordinary ability to reconcile and compromise divergent views and opinions that were honestly held. In this area of conciliation, he will have need to call upon his full talents during the coming months. At least a few of those who worked most vigorously for his nomination, now have varying ideas as to the kind of campaign he should conduct. The brutal and bitter battle of Chicago has ended, but the battle to control and influence the candidate is just beginning. The General will have to pronounce upon issues with which he is but slightly acquainted. There is no time for him to inform himself thoroughly of the details of all the complex issues that confront the country. He must of necessity rely upon a political chief of staff, and goo staff work.

Political partys change course slowly. The Republican Party is now trying to chart a new course in waters with which the skipper is not altogether familiar. The result may be some confusion on the bridge in the early days of the campaign. It would be reasonable to assume that on the basis of reward for effort, Governor Dewey will be one of the select few standing on the bridge. If this happens, some of those who labored with him to nominate Eisenhower will not be happy. And so it would seem that this new, young guard Republican organization, must try to figure out a way to heal some of the wounds they inflicted on the old-timers; they must select and organize their own high-command, while at the same time figuring out a way to beat the Democrats.

Those who were hoping for a knock-down, drag-out fight between traditional, conservative Republican principles and those of the Fair Deal, will be disappointed. Time after time in the last week the Taft supporters said in one fashion or another; "Don't change anything." The Eisenhower men said in effect: "We've got to change to win." The convention applauded the old guard, but they voted for the young one. The young ones appear to this reporter to be taking serious rather than hilarious satisfaction in their victory. They appreciate that they must pick up many pieces of broken fences inside their own Party before they can get down to the serious business of trying to fence in the Democrats in November.

Mon
July 14, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower is not going into the details of a specific program, in his campaign for the Presidency. The General has concluded his business here in Chicago and is now on his way to Denver. As he left his hotel he told reporters, "I'm not eloquent. I wish I were eloquent. But I am sincere." He went on: "I hope to bring a message of militant faith and hope to the American people, on what they have the capacity to do, gol darn it, rather than go into details of a specific program." The general was off..before reporters could ask for an explanation of this.

Before the General took off by plane he spent some time with his son, John..who is bound for Korea. He heard former Senator Brooks of Illinois, promise that Eisenhower will carry Illinois in November, even if Illinois' Governor Stevenson is the DEMOCRATIC candidate. And the General promised southern party leaders that he will make at least two speeches in Florida.

Walter Williams, head of the National Citizens for Eisenhower, says the General is going to set up an organization "that will appeal to Independent voters.. Democrats who want Eisenhower..and the Tafty people in the REPUBLICAN PARTY."

2

[redacted] The Democrats are getting ready for their convention..which opens a week from today. Senator Johnson of Colorado..campaign manager for Senator Russell of Georgia, says his candidate will win by the 10th ballot (Russell feels VICT DRY will come after the fifth) [redacted] Johnson says the man to beat out for the Democratic nomination is Vice President Barkley. And Mr. Barkley's supporters, in Kentucky, claim their boom is "gaining strength every hour." Kentucky's Governor Wetherby is talking about two young men.. Represemtative Roosevelt of New York and Michigan's Governor Williams... as vice presidential candidates, to overcome the handicip of The Vice President's 74 years. Representative Roosevelt is campaign manager for Candidate Harriman.

Here in Chicago..another candidate..Senator Kerr of Oklahoma [redacted] predicts he'll win the nomination on the fifth or six ballot if the [redacted] President keeps hands off the convention. And Senator Kefauver's manager, [redacted], Gael Sullivan, SAYS [redacted] that television will make it IMPOSSIBLE TO HAVE A [redacted] "synthetic draft" of any candidate.. the American people demand "fair play". He says Kefauver will prees for two strong party planks: public power and preferential state primaries. A Number of other Democrats agree with the primary proposal..I'd like to review their feelings in a few minutes.

Governor Stevenson of Illinois now says, laughingly, that he would "shoot himself" if he got the nomination. He told reporters he's been trying to slam the door on such a possibility..the nomination..for the past five months.

3.

IN WASHINGTON,

The government is making another effort to settle the 43-day-old steel strike. Acting Defense Mobilizer Steelman conferred with industry and strike LEADERS today and then announced both sides would meet again in Pittsburgh tomorrow. Mr. Steelman said again that "it is absolutely necessary to come to an agreement at the earliest possible moment, in the interests of the national welfare." There appears to be something new to consider at tomorrow's meeting. A high government official.. (WASHINGTON reporters are not permitted to relay his name).says the government is now ready to approve price increases for the industry averaging $5.65 a ton. This would cover wage and freight rate increases. And this, apparently , would be against the wishes of the Office of Price Stabilization. Early today, the price office turned down the requests of three steel companies that had reached an agreement with the union. These companies reaquested permission to raise their prices from five-and-a-half to six dollars a ton. And only a few hours after a price office official said again that $2.84 a ton was the maximum increase allowed under law, Price Stabilizer Arnall told reporters:"The matter seems to be entirely out of my hands."

#4

Today Mr. Arnall's office lifted price ceilings on 90 per cent of all processed fruits and vegetables...to conform with an amendment Congress made to the new price control law. Arnall says this will mean higher prices on a number of items.

The President today signed the controversial FAIR TRADE law that [redacted] permits distributors and merchants to agree on a [redacted] fixed prices within a state. Other merchants, who don't sign the agreement, would have to abide by it. The President says this law has some value in eliminating certain unfair competitive practises.

Mr. Truman, who was in bed much of the day, suffering from a [redacted] virus infection, also signed a bill authorizing two and a third billion dollsr to build military bases.

[redacted]

MURROW - MONDAY July 14

The British are facing a problem of free speech which some members of Parliament think comes close to treason. Doctor Hewlett Johnson, the seventy-eight year old Dean of Canterbury Cathedral, back from an eight-week visit to Communist China; says he saw "most damaging evidence" that the Americans had dropped germ bombs in China and North Korea. He gave no details ~ Doctor Johnson has long been known as the "Red Dean" for he has consistently followed the Communist line. The attorney general said today he didn't think the evidence available warranted trying Doctor Johnson for treason. Mr. Winston Churchill is expected to say tomorrow that Her Majesty's government cannot take action against any man because of what he says.

Here in Chicago, the Republicans have pretty well "faded away." The campaign buttons have disappeared. The advance-guard of the Democrats have begun to arrive. It's possible to get a meal without standing in line; reporters can now travel in passenger elevators instead of the freight and service elevators. Even the taxi drivers seem to have slowed down a little and no longer proceed as though pursued by wild Indians. This city of the big shoulders and the loud voice has shrugged off another convention, and appears to contemplate the next one without undue apprehension.

.5

~~today after a a trip from Europe that took three days, 12 hours and 12 minutes. [illegible] the ship's first crossing [illegible]~~

~~In Washington, the Justice Department has decided to investigate cablegrams which indicate that Chinese Nationalist diplomats tried to influence American foreign policy.~~

In Korea..the truce talks are in recess..at request of the Communists. And our planes again attacked Communist front-line positions. ~~Then~~ General Collins, the army's chief of staff, inspected the battlefront today and then told reporters: the 8th army has "all the means readily available for battle"..in a pinch, if it were necessary we could employ "other means." General Collins says the enemy hasn't a ghost of a chance of driving us out of Korea. And they can expect more air attacks.

Incidentally, the committee on arrangements for this last one did an excellent job, although out at the Amphitheatre officials often had difficulty keeping their minds made up as to who could go where.

A considerable group of Democrats are coming into town with a proposal that will make a lot of old-time politicians shudder. Eighteen Democratic Senators and thirty-five representatives have submitted to the Platform committee a petition demanding a nation-wide presidential primary. Candidate Estes Kefauver supports the resolution; so does Franklin Rossevlet, Jr., chairman of the Harriman for President Committee; Senator Edwin Johnson, leading the campaign for Senator Dick Russell is also for it. Another candidate, Vice President Barkley, has endorsed the proposal. It's sponsors say the American people are demanding immediate reforms in the method of selecting presidential nominees; want to stop backdoor dealing so the issue of stolen delegates will not occur again. But the statement adds, in a burst of unusual frankness, that this situation could of course be repeated in any party's nominating proceedure. It has of course occured in the past in both parties. The statement adds that a national convention "cannot accurately express the will of the people; only the people themselves can make such a decision."

There is, of course, nothing new or startling about this condlusion.

President Wilson, back in nineteen-twelve, advocated a national presidental primary. President Truman has said he is in favor of it. It would require a constitutional amendment to make such a primary binding on both political parties. If this should come about, the people, by direct participation, would have some say in selecting their party's candidate. In the overwhelming majority of states now, they have no say at all. If you are a Republican, and favored Eisenhower, Taft, MacArthur or Warren, you, as an individual citizen didn't, ~~really~~ with few exceptions, have any direct say in selecting your party's candidate. The same will be true of the Democrats next week.

A nationwide presidential primary would eleiminate, in large measure, this buesiness of docile ~~XXX~~ delegates, being traded like cattle -- the votes of a whole state being controlled through patronage, and threat, by a tightly held political machine, or a whole block of delegates being swung from one candidate to another through the promise of patronage or high office, made by one candidate or another, to the man controlling the delegation.

A direct presidential primary would pretty much eliminate the need for a national convention except for the writing of the party platform. And the importance of that document can be demonstrated by the fact that it took the Republicans two minutes to adopt theirs, and traditionally, most parties and candidates ignore the platform once they are in office.

I don't know whether a nationwide presidential primary would produce better candidates, but it would certainly give Republicans and Democrats alike a greater opportunity to participate in the selection of their candidate, and that in turn, might cause a few more of both parties to go out and vote in November. #

WORD FOR TODAY

Will Rogers once said: "I generally give the party in power, whether Republican or Democratic, the more digs because they are generally doing the country the most damage. And besides, I don't think its fair to jump too much on the fellow who is down. He is not working. He is only living in hopes of getting back in on the graft in another four years, while the party in power is drawing a salary to be knocked."

Good Night & Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - JULY 14, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower is not going into the details of a specific program in his campaign for the Presidency. The General has concluded his business here in Chicago and is now on his way to Denver. As he left his hotel he told reporters: "I'm not eloquent. I wish I were eloquent. But I am sincere." He went on: "I hope to bring a message of militant faith and hope to the American people on what they have the capacity to do, gol darn it, rather than go into details of a specific program." The General was off before reporters could ask for an explanation of this.

Before the General took off by plane, he spent some time with his son, John, who is bound for Korea. He heard former Senator Brooks of Illinois promise that Eisenhower will carry Illinois in November, even if Illinois' Governor Stevenson is the Democratic candidate. And the General promised southern party leaders that he will make at least two speeches in Florida.

Walter Williams, head of the National Citizens for Eisenhower, says the General is going to set up an organization "that will appeal to Independent voters - Democrats who want Eisenhower and the Taft people in the Republican Party."

The Democrats are getting ready for their convention, which opens a week from today. Senator Johnson of Colorado, campaign manager for Senator Russell of Georgia, says his candidate will win by the 10th ballot; (Russell feels victory will come after the fifth). Johnson says the man to beat out for the Democratic nomination is Vice President Barkley. And Mr. Barkley's supporters, in Kentucky, claim their boom is "gaining strength every hour." Kentucky's Governor Wetherby is talking about two young men, Representative Roosevelt of New York and Michigan's Governor Williams as vice presidential candidates to overcome the handicap of The Vice President's 74 years. Representative Roosevelt is campaign manager for Candidate Harriman.

Here in Chicago, another candidate, Senator Kerr of Oklahoma, predicts he'll win the nomination on the fifth or six ballot if the President keeps hands off the convention. And Senator Kefauver's manager, Gael Sullivan, says that television will make it impossible to have a "synthetic draft" of any candidate; the American people demand "fair play". He says Kefauver will press for two strong party planks: public power and preferential state primaries. A number of other Democrats agree with the primary proposal. I'd like to review their feelings in a few minutes.

Governor Stevenson of Illinois now says, laughingly, that he would "shoot himself" if he got the nomination. He told reporters he's been trying to slam the door on such a possibility - the nomination - for the past five months. in Washington.

The Government is making another effort to settle the 43-day-old steel strike. Acting Defense Mobilizer Steelman conferred with industry and strike leaders today, and then announced both sides would meet again in Pittsburgh tomorrow Mr. Steelman said again that "it is absolutely necessary to come to an agreement at the earliest possible moment, in the interests of the national welfare." There appears to be something new to consider at tomorrow's meeting. A high government official, (Washington reporters are not permitted to relay his name), says the Government is now ready to approve price increases for the industry averaging $5.65 a ton. This would cover wage and freight rate increases. And this, apparent would be against the wishes of the Office of Price Stabilization. Early today, the price office turned down the requests of three steel companies that had reached an agreement with the union. These companies requested permission to raise their prices from five-and-a-half to six dollars a ton. And only a few hours after a price office official said again that $2.84 a ton was the maximum increase allowed under law, Price Stabilizer Arnall told reporters: "The matter seems to be entirely out of my hands."

Today Mr. Arnall's office lifted price ceilings on 90 per cent of all processed fruits and vegetables to conform with an amendment Congress made to the new price control law. Arnall says this will mean higher prices on a number of items.

The President today signed the controversial Fair Trade law that permits distributors and merchants to agree on a fixed prices within a state. Other merchants, who don't sign the agreement, would have to abide by it. The President says this law has some value in eliminating certain unfair competitive practices.

Mr. Truman, who was in bed much of the day, suffering from a virus infedtion, also signed a bill authorizing two-and-a-third-billion dollars to build military bases.

In Korea, the truce talks are in recess, at request of the Communists. And our planes again attacked communist front-line positions. General Collins, the Army's Chief of Staff, inspected the battlefront today, and then told reporters the 8th Army has "all the means readily available for battle"; in a pinch, if it were necessary, we could employ "other means." General Collins says, the enemy hasn't a ghost of a chance of driving us out of Korea. And they can expect more air attacks.

The British are facing a problem of free speech, which some members of Parliament think comes close to treason. Doctor Hewlett Johnson, the seventy-eight-year old Dean of Canterbury Cathedral, back from an eight-week visit to Communist China, says he saw "most damaging evidence" that the Americans had dropped germ bombs in China and North Korea. He gave no details. Doctor Johnson has long been known as the "Red Dean", for he has consistently followed the communist line. The Attorney General said today he didn't think the evidence available warranted trying Doctor Johnson for treason. Mr. Winston Churchill is expected to say tomorrow that Her Majesty's Government cannot take action against any man because of what he says.

Here in Chicago, the Republican have pretty well "faded away." The campaign buttons have disappeared. The advance-guard of the Democrats have begun to arrive. It's possible to get a meal without standing in line; reporters can now travel in passenger elevators, instead of the freight and service elevators. Even the taxi drivers seem to have slowed down a little and no longer proceed as though pursued by wild Indians. This city of the big shoulders and the loud voice has shrugged off another convention, and appears to contemplate the next one without undue apprehension. Incidentally, the Committee on Arrangements for this last one did an excellent job, although out at the Amphitheatre officials often had difficulty keeping their minds made up as to who could go where.

A considerable group of Democrats are coming into town with a proposal that will make a lot of old-time politicians shudder. Eighteen Democratic Senators, and thirty-five representatives, have submitted to the Platform Committee a petition demanding a nation-wide presidential primary. Candidate Estes Kefauver supports the resolution; so does Franklin Roosevelt, Jr., chairman of the Harriman for President Committee; Senator Edwin Johnson, leading the campaign for Senator Dick Russell is also for it. Another candidate, Vice President Barkley, has endorsed the proposal. It's sponsors say the American people are demanding immediate reforms in the method of selecting presidential nominees; want to stop backdoor dealing so the issue of stolen delegates will not occur again. But the statement adds, in a burst of unusual frankness, that this situation could of course be repeated in any party's nominating proceedure. It has of course occured in the past in both parties. The statement adds that a national convention "cannot accurately express the will of the people; only the people themselves can make such a decision."

There is, of course, nothing new or startling about this conclusion. President Wilson, back in nineteen-twelve, advocated a national presidential primary. President Truman has said he is in favor of it. It would require a constitutional amendment to make such a primary binding on both political parties. If this should come about, the people, by direct participation, would have some say in selecting their party's candidate. In the overshwlming majority of states now, they have no say at all. If you are a Republican, and favored Eisenhower, Taft, MacArthur or Warren, you, as an individual citizen didn't, with few exceptions have any direct say in selecting your party's candidate. The same will be true of the Democrats next week.

A nationwide presidential primary would eliminate, in a large measure, this business of docile delegates being traded like cattle - the votes of a whole state being controlled through patronage and threat by a tightly held political machine, or a whole block of delegates being swung from one candidate to another through the promise of patronage or high office made by one candidate or another to the man controlling the delegation.

A direct presidential primary would pretty much eliminate the need for a national convention except for the writing of the Party Platform. And the importance of that document can be demonstrated by the fact that it took the Re - publicans two minutes to adopt theirs, and traditionally, most parties and candidates ignore the Platform once they are in office.

I don't know whether a nationwide presidential primary would produce better candidates, but it would certainly give Republicans and Democrats alike a greater opportunity to participate in the selection of their candidate, and that in turn, might cause a few more of both parties to go out and vote in November.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Will Rogers once said: "I generally give the Party in power, whether Republican or democratic, the more digs, because they are generally doing the country the most damage. And besides, I don't think it's fair to jump too much on the fellow who is down. He is not working. He is only living in hopes of getti back in on the graft in another four years, while the Party in power is drawing a salary to be knocked."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tues. July 15 1952

This is the news:

Negotiations to end the steel strike have collapsed again. Industry and union representatives met for two hours today..reached no agreement.. and then made it clear they were "standing by" for word from Washington. Later, Phil Murray, head of the striking C.I.O. steelworkers, called the union's wage-policy group to meet with him in Pittsburgh on Monday.. "to decide the union's future course of action based on the facts." Again he charged that an "unholy alliance" in the industry is preventing a settlement of the 44 day-old strike. Today, National Production Administrator Henry Fowler told small and medium manufacturers that they may use what steel they now have on hand to make consumer goods. Fowler released the use of this steel after making sure that the military has all [redacted] IT [redacted] needs at this time. The idea in releasing steel-on-hand among small manufacturers is to prevent any further spread of unemployment.

The White House says the President's condition is "improved".. he must cut down his work for several days because of a "mild virus infection." And the President has accepted the resignation of William D. Hassett, who served both Truman and Roosevelt as correspondence secretary. The President told Mr. Hassett, who is 71 and has been in ill health," I shall feel as if I have lost my right arm." And Mr. Truman wrote of the two men discussing situations after the President has "severed my connection with the White House."

Here in Chicago today, Democratic Chairman Mc Kinney told reporters the President is definitely not a candidate for re-election. He said that on Sunday Mr. Truman told him:"I've served my time. This is a man-killing job. You wouldn't want to see me carried out of here in a pine-box, would you?" Therefore--said Mc Kinney--he's going to "discourage" any move to draft Truman. And he accepts at face value Governor Stevenson's statements that he,too, is not a candidate. Mr. Mc Kinney says this is going to be a free, wide open convention. He knows of no "deals" being made.. and feels it will take a coalition of the supporters of more than two candidates to stop any other candidate. I should like to review the candidate situation in a few minutes.

Gael Sullivan Senator Kefauver's manager, says some deals are in the works to form a coalition to stop Kefauver from getting the nomination. And he told reporters an unidentified backer of Senator Kerr, who is also a candidate, tried to bribe some Kefauver delegates from California, to switch their votes. Senator Kerr denies that he or anyone connected with his organization tried any such thing. He says the Sullivan statement indicates that Kefauver's standing is slipping. And Senator Johnson... convention manager for Senator Russell of Georgia.. says that anyone who calls the Georgian a "sectional" candidate is "bigoted."

The Democratic platform committee starts work tomorrow. And Tennessee's Governor Browning-- who will nominate Kefauver--says nine of the Nation's 23 Democratic governors have promised to support him in working for "a free, untrammeled" convention.

The Republicans are arguing about what happened to Senator Taft here last week. Congressman Clarnce Brown of Ohio says anyone who accuses him of losing the nomination for Taft is "just plain crazy." He says: if anyone was at fault it was Tom Coleman, Taft's floor manager, because Taft forces didn't have the proper liason. Coleman says because of blocked aisles, it was impossible to maintain proper liason with all Taft leaders.

General Eisenhower, in Denver, leaves on Thursday for a week of fighing and loafing with one OLD friend.. AXEL Neilson of Denver. They will have no visitors.

The United States today ordered the Soviet Union to cease publishing its propaganda magazine and pamphlets in this country.. At the same time we suspended the magazine "Amerika" that we publish in the Russian language for distribution in Russia. We say the Soviet's have been "obstructing" circulation of the magazine.

In Korea, where armistice talks resume tonight after a recess, General Collins, the army chief of staff told reporters: the enemy must agree to an armistice of face more "tough bombings."

~~General Collins said [redacted] Are you ready [redacted] stillery, other reasons Jim [redacted] so." He said atomic [redacted] would be ready for ba[redacted] few years.~~

In London, Prime Minister Churchill refused, contemptuously, to set up a special tribunal to investigate the "Red Dean"..the [redacted] Reverend Hewlett Johnson, for charging that the allies used germ warfare in Korea. Mr. Churchill said to do this would merely give the dean's charges "an importance they do not deserve."

This reporter has made a prolonged and careful study of the PRIMARIES pledges and favorite son first ballot preferences in connection with the Democratic Convention opening here in Chicago next week. As things stand right now, a man is going to have to have a great "passion for anonymity" to avoid being nominated -- an awful lot of Democratic politicians will be able to put after their name in Who's Who: Placed in nomination for Democratic candidacy, Chicago, 1952. It looks like Kefauver will have somewhere around two hundred and sixty seven on the first ballot; Russell, a hundred and seventeen; Harriman, a hundred and twelve; Kerr, forty-three. It will require six hundred and sixteen votes to nominate. To call the rest of the roll, we have Fulbright of Arkansas with twenty-two; McMahon of Connecticut with sixteen; thirty-six for Dever of Massachusetts; Williams of Michigan with forty; twenty-six ~~for~~ FROM Minnesota for Humphrey; Bulkley of Ohio, twenty-seven; Stevenson, 52 and a half; Barkley, 26 and a half. Of course, there are others standing off in the wings waiting to be called. National Chairman McKinney is neutral; President Truman is neutral; Governor Adlai Stevenson is neutral. Everyone is waiting for the word from Mr. Truman, but the proudest boast that can be made by any candidate right now, and they're all making it, is that "Truman isn't against me." Kefauver's manager says they're "ganging up on us." Certain unspecified characters are starting a stop-Kefauver movement. This is as traditional a part of the proceedings, as for a fight manager to cry, "we was robbed." The other candidates, of course, reply to this charge by saying, in effect, Who, me?

It appears that the Democratic politicians will be let off the leash for the first time in twenty years, and they are already gamboling and cavorting, enjoying their new found freedom. It's rather like a group of twelve-year-old boys choosing up sides for a tug-of-war. But there are about fifteen or twenty ropes available, and no one can be sure that some who were supposed to pull won't push. Unless "the word" comes from Truman, or Stevenson, between now and next Wednesday, any governor or senator who isn't nominated here will, in effect, suffer a vote of no confidence from his own state delegation. If tradition is honored & Candidates Stay off the Floor the place will be half empty They are going to try to limit the nominating speeches to fifteen minutes; two seconding speeches of five minutes each. Add some time for demonstrations; total up the list of possible nominees, and the result is utter exhaustion. Some of the leading contenders are predicting the ballot on which they will win, but their managers don't always agree with them. This is a business where politicians must be mathematicians too. There are a dozen combinations of figures that will give you the winner, but a roulette wheel would be about as reliable in determining who wins.

At the Republican convention it was only a contest between Minnesota and Pennsylvania to see which would have the honor of putting Eisenhower over. But there will be so many unpledged, uncommitted delegates here next week, that if the dam breaks, or "the word" comes, strong men may be trampled in the rush to get aboard the bandwagon.

If Mr. Truman stays neutral, this nomination is going to be won through an unprecedented number of deals, agreements, compromises, understandings, call them what you will. There could develop a shortage of smoke-filled rooms. Any relationship between the candidate chosen, and the desires of the majority of democratic voters, will be purely accidental; for the majority have had no opportunity to express a preference.

The Platform Committee will start working tomorrow. The civil rights plank will probably cause the most trouble. The committee will also consider a proposal endorsed by an imposing number of Senators and Congressmen as well as most of the candidates for a nationwide presidential primary, which would give the voters of both parties a chance to express a direct preference for the party's nominee

It's pretty difficult to find many politicians here in Chciago who believe that Mr. Truman will stay neutral throughout this struggle that impends, but unless and until he gives the word, candidates must content themselves with saying; "at least he isn't against me." The impression grows, and believe me, there is nothing but impressions here, that a draft of Governor Stevenson is less likely now than it appeared a few days ago. But anything can happen.

One of many things that have always baffled this reporter about politics is why some able man of modest ambition does not rise up and say: Look, fellows, I would just like to be vice president. I have demonstrated throughout my long career that I am a first-class number two man, thoroughly familiar with parliamentary proceedure, well qualified to preside over the Senate; I accept in advance whatever platform is adopted; and will campaign vigorously in support of whatever presidential candidate is nominated. He might add, I have or can rent the proper formal attire for the endless offical functions where I shall have to represent the president, and I am not such a brilliant orator as to steal the limelight from him during the campaign. Any one who undertook such a bold and unorthodox venture would have an open field here in Chicago next week. And his chances of winning the second spot on the ticket might be very bright.

In fact, the way things are going now, he and his campaign manager would have to be wise and cautious lest he wake up one morning and find himself ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ despite his modesty, nominated for the presidency.

WORD FOR TODAY

I do not suppose that many politicians are close and continuing students of Shakespeare. But he gave them all some good advice when he wrote: "Some are born great; some achieve greatness; others have greatness thrust upon them. But whatever the case, be not afraid of greatness." There will be a lot of politicians in town next week, with no fear of whatever greatness is conferred, by a president nomination.

Good Night + good Luck -

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - JULY 15, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Negotiations to end the steel strike have collapsed again. Industry and union representatives met for two hours today, reached no agreement, and then made it clear they were "standing by" for word from Washington. Later, Phil Murray, head of the striking CIO steelworkers, called the union's wage-policy group to meet with him in Pittsburgh on Monday, "to decide the union's future course of action based on the facts." Again he charged that an "unholy alliance" in the industry is preventing a settlement of the 44 day-old strike. Today, National Production Administration, Henry Fowler, told small and medium manufacturers that they may use what steel they now have on hand to make consumer goods. Fowler released the use of this steel after making sure that the military has all it needs at this time. The idea in releasing steel-on-hand, among small manufacturers is to prevent any further spread of unemployment.

The White House says the President's condition is "improved"; he must cut down his work for several days because of a "mild virus infection." And the President has accepted the resignation of William D. Hassett, who served both Truman and Roosevelt as correspondence secretary. The President told Mr. Hassett, who is 71, and has been in ill health, "I shall feel as if I have lost my right arm." And Mr. Truman wrote of the two men discussing situations after the President has "severed my connection with the White House."

Here in Chicago today, Democratic Chairman McKinney told reporters the President is definitely not a candidate for re-election. He said that on Sunday Mr. Truman told him: "I've served my time. This is a man-killing job. You wouldn't want to see me carried out of here in a pine-box, would you?" Therefore, said McKinney, he's going to "discourage" any move to draft Truman. And he accepts at face value Governor Stevenson's statements that he, too, is not a candidate. Mr. McKinney says this is going to be a free, wide open convention. He knows of no "deals" being made, and feels it will take a coalition of the supporters of more than two candidates to stop any other candidate. I should like to review the candidate situation in a few minutes.

Gael Sullivan, Senator Kefauver's manager, says some deals are in the works to form a coalition to stop Kefauver from getting the nomination. And he told reporters an unidentified backer of Senator Kerr, who is also a candidate, tried to bribe some Kefauver delegates from California to switch their votes. Senator Kerr denies that he or anyone connected with his organization tried any such thing. He says the Sullivan statement indicates that Kefauver's standing is slipping. And Senator Johnson, convention manager for Senator Russell of Georgia, says that anyone who calls the Georgian a "sectional" candidate is "bigoted."

The Democratic platform committee starts work tomorrow. And Tennessee's Governor Browning, who will nominate Kefauver, says nine of the nation's 23 Democratic governors have promised to support him in working for "a free, untrammeled" convention.

The Republicans are arguing about what happened to Senator Taft here last week. Congressman Clarence Brown of Ohio says anyone who accuses him of losing the nomination for Taft is "just plain crazy." He says: if anyone was at fault it was Tom Coleman, Taft's floor manager, because Taft forces didn't have the proper liason. Coleman says because of blocked aisles, it was impossible to maintain proper liason with all Taft leaders.

General Eisenhower, in Denver, leaves on Thursday for a week of fishing and loafing with one old friend, Axel Neilson of Denver. They will have no visitors

The United States today ordered the Soviet Union to cease publishing its propaganda magazine and pamphlets in this country. At the same time, we suspended the magazine "Amerika" that we publish in the Russian language for distribution in Russia. We say the Soviet's have been "obstructing" circulation of the magazine.

In Korea, where armistice talks resume tonight after a recess, General Collins, the Army Chief of Staff told reports: the enemy must agree to an armistice of face more "tough bombings."

In London, Prime Minister Churchill refused, contemptuously, to set up a special tribunal to investigate the "Red Dean", the Rev. Hewlett Johnson, for charging that the allies used germ warfare/in Korea. Mr. Churchill said to do this would merely give the Dean's charges "an importance they do not deserve."

This reporter has made a prolonged and careful study of the primaries, pledges and favorite son first ballot preferences in connection with the Democratic Convention opening here in Chicago next week. As things stand right now, a man is going to have to have a great "passion for anonymity" to avoid being nominated; an awful lot of Democratic politicians will be able to put after their name in Who's Who: Placed in nomination for Democratic candidacy, Chicago 1952. It looks like Kefauver will have somewhere around two hundred and sixty seven on the first ballot; Russell, a hundred and seventeen; Harriman, a hundred and twelve; Kerr, forty-three. It will require six hundred and sixteen votes to nominate. To call the rest of the roll, we have Fulbright of Arkansas with twenty-two; McMahon of Connecticut with sixteen; thirty-six for Dever of Massachusetts; Williams of Michigan with forty; twenty-six from Minnesota for Humphrey; Bulkley of Ohio, twenty-seven; Stevenson, 52 and a half; Barkley, 26 and a half. Of course, there are others standing off in the wings waiting to be called. National Chairman McKinney is neutral; Presiddnt Truman is neutral; Governor Adlai Stevenson is neutral. Everyone is waiting for the word from Mr. Truman, but the proudest boast that can be made by any candidate right now, and they're all making it, is that "Truman isn't against me." Kefauver's manager says they're "ganging up on us." Certain unspecified characters are starting a stop-Kefauver movement. This is as traditional a part of the proceedings, as for a fight manager to cry, "we was robbed". The other candidates, of course, reply to this charge by saying, in effect, Who, me?

It appears that the Democratic politicians will be let off the leash for the first time in twenty years, and they are already gambling and cavorting, enjoying their new found freedom. It's rather like a group of twelve-year-old boys choosing up sides for a tug-of-war. But there are about fifteen or twenty ropes available, and no one can be sure that some who were supposed to pull, won't push. Unless "the word" comes from Truman or Stevenson, between now and next Wednesday, any governor of Senator who isn't nominated here will, in effect, suffer a vote of no confidence from his own state delegation. If tradition is honored and candidates stay off the floor, the place will be half empty. They are going to try to limit the nominating speeches to fifteen minutes; two seconding speeches of five minutes each. Add some time for demonstrations, total up the list of possible nominees, and the result is utter exhaustion. Some of the leading contenders are predicting the ballot on which they will win, but their managers don't always agree with them. This is a business where politicians must be mathematicians, too. There are a dozen combinations of figures that will give you the winner, but a roulette wheel would be about as reliable in determining who wins.

At the Republican Convention it was only a contest between Minnesota and Pennsylvania to see which would have the honor of putting Eisenhower over. But there will be so many unpledged, uncommittted delegates here next week, that if the dam breaks, or "the word" comes, strong men may be trampled in the rush to get aboard the bandwagon.

If Mr. Truman stays neutral, this nomination is going to be won through an unprecedented number of deals, agreements, compromises, understandings, call them what you will. There could develop a shortage of smoke-filled rooms. Any relationship between the candidate chosen, and the desires of the majority of Democratic voters, will be purely accidental; for the majority have had no opportunity to express a preference.

The Platform Committee will start working tomorrow. The civil rights plank will probably cause the most trouble. The Committee will also consider a proposal endorsed by an imposing number of Senators and Congressmen as well as most of the candidates for a nationwide presidential primary, which would give the voters of both parties a chance to express a direct preference for the party's nominee.

It's pretty difficutl to find many politicians here in Chicago who believe that Mr. Truman will stay neutral throughout this struggle that impends, but unless and until he gives the word, candidates must content themselves with saying: "At least he isn't against me." The impression grows, and believe me, there is nothing but impressions here, that a draft of Governor Stevenson is less likely now, than it appeared a few days ago. But anything can happen.

One of many things that have always baffled this reporter about politics is why some able man of modest ambition does not rise up and say: Look, fellows, I would just like to be vice president. I have demonstrated throughout my long career that I am a first-class number two man, thoroughly familiar with parliamentary proceedure, well qualified to preside over the Senate; I accept in advance whatever platform is adopted, and will campaign vigorously in support of whatever presidential candidate is nominated. He might add, I have, or can rent, the proper formal attire for the endless official functions where I shall have to represent the President, and I am not such a brilliant orator as to steal the limelight from him during the campaign. Any one who undertook such a bold and unorthodox venture would have an open field here in Chicago next week. And his chances of winning the second spot on the ticket might be very bright. In fact, the way things are going now, he and his campaign manager would have to be wise and cautious, lest he wake up one morning, and find himself, despite his modesty nominated for the presidency.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: # COMMERCIAL

MURROW: I do not suppose that many politicians are close and continuing students of Shakespeare. But he gave them all some good advice when he wrote: "Some are born great; some achieve greatness; others have greatness thrust upon them. But whatever the case, be not afraid of greatness." There will be a lot of politicians in town next week, with no fear of whatever greatness is conferred by a president nomination.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed - July 16 - 1952 -

This is the news:

Two of the leading Democratic presidential contenders..Senators Russell and Kefauver..flew into Chicago today. And Senator Russell made the big news. He wants to repeal the Taft-Hartley law because, he says, "it is weighted against labor." Senator Russell voted for that law in the Senate..and voted to over-ride the President's veto. But today he said it has been apparent for some time that the law failed to accomplish its purpose..failed to stabilize relations between management and labor. The Senator's statement is interpreted as a bid for the support of northern labor. His advisers have considered his stands on labor and civil rights to be his biggest handicaps in winning the Democratic nomination, Senator Russell says he expects to win between the fifth and eighth ballots. Kefauver thinks he will win on the fifth. The Senator from Tennessee said today he considers Russell his principle rival.

(2)

Jacob Arvey the Illinois democratic leader, greeted both candidates at the airport and told reporters he has "no hope at all" that Illinois' Governor Stevenson will enter the race. And he thinks it's "extremely unlikely" that Stevenson will be drafted.

The convention's preliminary platform drafting committee started work today. It heard representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange speak against the Brannon plan.. Both argued that the Administration now is depending too much on artificial and restrictive measures to make the farmer prosperous. Tomorrow the committee starts hearing arguments on a civil rights program..and that [redacted] debate has already started. Senator Lehman of New York says he has the backing of the President and a majority of the delegates for a plank that will be at least as strong as that of 1948 (which caused the walkout of some southern delegates.) [redacted] But Senator Sparkman of Alabama says he's confident the convention will adopt a civil rights plank acceptable to the South.

3

Two members of Congress..Senator Douglas of Illinois and Representative Bennett of Florida--urged the committee to approve a platform plank ~~that~~ calling for national party primaries to select presidential nominees.

[redacted]

The President is in ~~the~~ A WASHINGTON hospital but "doing fine." The 68-year-old Mr. Truman entered Walter Reed hospital this morning after a four day bout with what the White House calls "a mild virus infection." We're told he ~~had~~ ~~a normal temperature this morning.~~ went in for a check-up.. is getting very close to complete recovery..doesn't expect his illness to interfere with his plans to come to Chicago. Major General Graham, the president's physiciain says:"He's fine.I hope I can keep him in the hospital for two or three days." Mrs. Truman has left Independence by train to be with her husband. The White House says she was not summoned..just feels her husband may get lonely. And the White House emphasizes that the President's illness is not serious. Secret Service men are allowed to say he walked around his room in pajamas and robe.. laughing..seemingly enjoying his stay. Mr. Truman found time during the day to sign 37 of the bills recently passed by Congress. One extends most [redacted] G.I. Bill of Rights ~~km~~ benefits to veterans of the Korean war..such things as free-schooling, guarnteed loans on homes and for business, and mustering out pay. #

The other bill gives federal mine inspectors authority to shut down any mines when they find an immediate danger of fire, explosion, floods or accidents. Operators who refuse to close their mines when ordered to do so may appeal to the Federal Bureau of Mines, and eventually to federal courts. If they violate such orders they are liable to fines of up to 2-thousand dollars.

Mr. Truman apparently is not in a hurry to see Tom Gavin, the Kansas City Democrat, who will be his alternate to the convention that opens next week here in Chicago. Mr. Gavin flew to ~~Chicago~~ Washington to get the word from the President on who he supports for the presidential nomination..but there was no appointment..no telephone communication..so Mr. Gavin is flying home..~~mmm~~ apparently "uninstructed."

~~Two of the leading contenders flew into Chicago today.~~

~~Both Senator Kefauver and Senator Russell are optimistic. Kefauver says he considers Russell his principle rival, expects to be nominated on the fifth or sixth ballot..hopes no one makes a political football of the civil rights issues. Senator Russell thinks he will be nominated on somewhere between the fifth and eighth ballots. Feels sure the convention will not draft a candidate...thinks the "man who wins this nomination will have to fight for it." Both candidates say they can beat General Eisenhower.~~

[redacted]

There was no move made in public today to settle the steel strike. IRON Age, an industry publication, says a settlement could be reached in a week if the strike leaders could agree among themselves. Union officials call this ridiculous.

The Aluminum COMPANY of America today asked the government for a price increase of at least ten per cent..to cover increased costs for materials and labor. Price officials say if this is granted it will mean higher prices for such things as: pots and pans, nuts, screws, refrigerators and radio and television sets.

Secretary of State Acheson said today he has only a "feeble" hope of Communist China living up to the Geneva Convention on treating war prisoners. The Communist radio says Peiping will support the convention with some reservations. Mr. Acheson hopes this will mean a forward step in treating allied prisoners now held by the Chinese. But he points out that in the past they have not lived up to any of the war prisoner provisions.

[redacted]

In Korea, the Communist announcement on the Geneva convention.. and their latest request for another two-day recess in the truce talks are taken as a "hopeful" sign.. by correspondents..if not by [redacted] officials connected with the truce talks. There is a feeling that the enemy is maunerving..and checking with higher quarters..and may come up with something new, at the next session of the negotiators.

Today, our Sabrejets drove more than 50 enemy jets from Mig alley..claimed to have destroyed one of them. And the destroyer Orleck, operating off the east coast, had a good day. It spotted an enemy train racing south.. smashed the tracks in front of the train..then shot up the last car to prevent any backing-up..and then proceeded to bombard 20 cars carrying ammunition, tanks and artillery pieces. Carrier planes finished the job.

In New York, two subway trains, loaded with rush hour passengers collided in a tunnel under lower Manhattan. Seventy-five persons were taken to hospitals and another 25 received emergency treatment.

Senator Wiley of Wisconsin today emphasized the obvious when he said that between now and the time the new administration takes over next January, there will be a period of confusion and uncertainty; indecision at home and abroad, in regard to our foreign policy. The Senator said that such a period could only serve to the advantage of the Soviet Union which could in turn fully exploit it by a "knock-out blow." The Senator from Wisconsin is the senior Republican on the Senate foreign relations committee, and if the Republicans win in November, he will probably be chairman of that powerful committee. Senator Wiley has a solution for this period of "uncertainty and indecision at home and abroad." He wants the Truman administration to invite General Eisehhower to authorize leading Republican foreign policy experts to confer, formally or informally, with the administration regarding basic and continuing international problems, and challenges that may arise between now and next inauguration day. The Senator says his proposal would not prevent either party from criticizing the other during the political campaign. Either party could break off the talks if it felt the other party was not acting in good faith.

Secretary of State Acheson's reaction to this proposal was most cautious. He said it was a very important matter, but made it clear that any decision on the proposal will have to be made by the White House.

Senator Wiley is undoubtedly right when he says that such consultations would help combat Communist propaganda that American foreign policy will be paralyzed during the rest of the year. The Communists will try to persuade the world that any agreement or pledge by American diplomats during the next six months will be worthless. However, the realities of American politics make such an arrangement highly improbable. If General Eisenhower were to agree to it, he would come under immediate fire from the still sullen wing of Taft supporters in his own party. Moreover, a mixture of consultation and criticism might confuse and bewilder our allies even more than is now the case.

The Democrats will naturally be fearful of such a proposal because their's would still be the responsibility for forming and executing foreign policy while the Republican consultants, however broadminded and objective they might be, could scarcely resist the temptation to take credit for success and blame the Democrats for such failures as might occur in the field of foreign affairs during the next six months.

A similar proposal was made by Herbert Hoover in nineteen thirty-two after his defeat at the polls by Franklin Roosevelt. Becasue of the deepening economic crisis, Mr. Hoover wanted representatives of the newly elected president who had not yet taken office to share in the grave decisions that had to be made. For a while he thought Mr. Roosevelt would go along, but finally he didn't and Mr. Hoover still contends that this was one of the facts that made the crisis worse than it would have otherwise been. There is, of course, one substantial difference in the two cases. Roosevelt had already been elected, and Eisenhower hasn't been. The Democrats are not likely to concede, (even by implication) that he will be.

19

There is no doubt that our allies, particularly those in Europe, were considerably relieved at General Eisenhower's nomination. He was, in a sense, their candidate; they felt that he knows them and their problems, and that his election would not signal any drastic change in American foreign policy.

There may well continue to be informal consultations between the State Department and Republican foreign policy leaders as there has been in the past. But in the end of the day, the responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs must rest with the Democratic administration. So it would seem that our allies must simply share our confusion and uncertainty, at least until the votes are counted in November. Senator Wiley's proposal, statesmanlike as it may appear to be in the vacuum, does not seem to be politcially practicable, and to this reporter, it overlooks one important consideration. We will be confused as to where we are going in the next six months. So will our allies; but before this campaign is over, the Russians may be just about as confused as the rest of us, and confusion in the camp of the enemy is seldom a bad thing. #

WORD FOR TODAY

Soon we shall be entering the period of confusion, censure, claim and counter-claim, where efforts will be made to damage and destroy not just political programs and ideas, but individuals as well. As Jonathan Swift said: "Censure is the "tax" a man pays to the public for being eminent". Elbert Hubbard counseled: "Never try to explain. Your friends will understand, and your enemies will not believe you anyhow".

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - JULY 16, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Two of the leading Democratic presidential contenders, Senators Russell and Kefauver, flew into Chicago today. And Senator Russell made the big news. He wants to repeal the Taft-Hartley law because, he says, "it is weighted against labor." Senator Russell voted for that law in the Senate, and voted to override the President's veto. But today he said it has been apparent for some time that the law failed to accomplish its purpose, failed to stabilize relations between management and labor. The Senator's statement is interpreted as a bid for the support of northern labor. His advisers have considered his stands on labor and civil rights to be his biggest handicaps in winning the Democratic nomination.

Senator Russell says he expects to win between the fifth and eighth ballots. Kefauver thinks he will win the fifth. The Senator from Tennessee said today he considers Russell his principle rival. Jacob Arvey, the Illinois Democratic leader, greeted both candidates at the airport and told reporters he has "no hope at all" that Illinois' Governor Stevenson will enter the race, and he thinks its "extremely unlikely" that Stevenson will be drafted.

The convention's preliminary platform drafting committee started work today. It heard representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange speak against the Brannon Plan. Both argued that the Administration now is depending too much on artificial and restrictive measures to make the farmer prosperous. Tomorrow the committee starts hearing arguments on a civil rights program, and that debate has already started. Senator Lehman of New York says he has the backing of the President and a majority of the delegates for a plank that will be at least as strong as that of 1948, (which caused the walkout of some souther delegates. But Senator Sparkman of Alabama says he's confident the convention will adopt a civil rights plank acceptable to the South.

Two members of Congress, Senator Douglas of Illinois and Representative Bennett of Florida, argued the committee to approve a platform plank calling for national party primaries to select presidential nominees.

The President is in a Washington hospital but "doing fine." The 68-year-old Mr. Truman entered Walter Reed hospital this morning, after a four day bout with what the White House calls "a mild virus infection." We're told he went in for a check-up, is getting very close to complete recovery, doesn't expect his illness to interfere with his plans to come to Chicago. Major General Graham, the President's physician says: "He's fine. I hope I can keep him in the hospital for two or three days." Mrs. Truman has left Independence by train to be with her husband. The White House says she was not summoned; just feels her husband may get lonely. And the White House emphasizes that the President's illness is not serious. Secret Service men are allowed to say he walked around his room in pajamas and robe, laughing, seemingly enjoying his stay. Mr. Truman found time during the day to sign 37 of the bills recently passed by Congress. One extends most GI Bill of Rights benefits to veterans of the Korean war; such things as free schooling, guaranteed loans on homes and for business, and mustering out pay. The other bill gives federal mine inspectors authority to shut down any mines when they find an immediate danger of fire, explosion, floods or accidents. Operators who refuse to close their mines when ordered to do so, may appeal to the Federal Bureau of Mines, and eventually to federal courts. If they violate such orders, they are liable to fines of up to 2-thousand dollars.

Mr. Truman apparently is not in a hurry to see Tom Gavin, the Kansas City Democrat, who will be his alternate to the convention that opens next week here in Chicago. Mr. Gavin flew to Washington to get the word from the President on who he supports for the presidential nomination, but there was no appointment, no telephone communication, so Mr. Gavin is flying home - apparently "uninstructed."

There was no move made in public today to settle the steel strike.

Iron Age, an industry publication, says a settlement could be reached in a week, if the strike leaders could agree among themselves. Union officials call this ridiculous.

The Aluminum Company of America today asked the Government for a price increase of at least ten per cent to cover increased costs for materials and labor. Price officials say if this is granted, it will mean higher prices for such things as pots and pans, nuts, screws, refrigerators and radio and television sets.

Secretary of State Acheson said today he has only a "feeble" hope of Communist China living up to the Geneva Convention on treating war prisoners. The communist radio says Peiping will support the Convention with some reservation with some reservations. Mr. Acheson hopes this will mean a forward step in treating allied prisoners now held by the Chinese. But he points out that in the past they have not lived up to any of the war prisoner provisions.

In Korea, the communist announcement on the Geneva Convention, and their latest request for another two-day recess in the truce talks are taken as a "hopeful" sign - by correspondents - if not by officials connected with the truce talks. There is a feeling that the enemy is manuvering and checking with higher quarters, and may come up with something new at the next session of the negotiators.

Today, our Sabrejets drove more than 50 enemy jets from MIG alley; claimed to have destroyed one of them. And the destroyer Orleck, operating off the east coast, had a good day. It spotted an enemy train racing south, smashed the tracks in front of the train, then shot up the last car to prevent any backing up, and then proceeded to bombard 20 cars carrying ammunition, tanks, and artillery pieces. Carrier planes finished the job.

In New York, two subway trains, loaded with rush hour passengers collided in a tunnel under lower Manhattan. Seventy-five persons were taken to hospitals and another 25 received emergency treatment.

Senator Wiley of Wisconsin today emphasized the obvious, when he said that between now and the time the new administration takes over next January, there will be a period of confusion and uncertainty - indecision at home and abroad in regard to our foreign policy. The Senator said that such a period could only serve to the advantage of the Soviet Union, which could in turn fully exploit it by a "knock-out blow." The Senator from Wisconsin is the senior Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and if the Republicans win in November, he will probably be chariman of that powerful committee. Senator Wiley has a solution for this period of "uncertainty and indecision at home and abroad." He wants the Truman Administration to invite General Eisenhower to authorize leading Republican foreign policy experts to confer, formally or informally, with the Administration regarding basic and continuing international problems, and colleagues that may arise between now and next inauguration day. The Senator says his proposal would not prevent either party from crticizing the other during the political campaign. Either party could break off the talks, if it felt the other party was not acting in good faith.

Secretary of State Acheson's reaction to this proposal was most cautious. He said it was a very important matter, but made it clear that any decision on the proposal will have to be made by the White House.

Senator Wiley is undoubtedly right when he says that such consultations would help combat communist propaganda that American foreign policy will be paralyzed during the rest of the year. The Communists will try to persuade the world that any agreement or pledge by American diplomats during the next six months will be worthless. However, the realities of American politics make such an arrangement highly improbable. If General Eisenhower were to agree to it, he would come under immediate fire from the still sullen wing of Taft supporters, in his own party. Moreover, a mixture of consultation and criticism might confuse and bewilder our allies even more than is now the case.

The Democrats will naturally be fearful of such a proposal because their's would still be the responsibility for forming and executing foreign policy while the Republican consultants, however broadminded and objective they might be, could scarcely resist the temptation to take credit for success and blame the Democrats for such failures as might occur in the field of foreign affairs during the next six months.

A similar proposal was made by Herbert Hoover in nineteen thirty-two after his defeat at the polls by Franklin Roosevelt. Because of the deepening economic crisis, Mr. Hoover wanted representatives of the newly elected president, who had not yet taken office, to share in the grave decisions that had to be made. For a while he thought Mr. Roosevelt would go along, but finally he didn't, and Mr. Hoover still contends that this was one of the facts that made the crisis worse than it would have otherwise been. There is, of course, one substantial difference in the two cases. Roosevelt had already been elected, and Eisenhower hasn't been. The Democrats are not likely to concede, (even by implication), that he will be.

There is no doubt that our allies, particularly those in Europe, were considerably relieved at General Eisenhower's nomination. He was, in a sense, their candidate; they felt that he knows them and their problems, and that hsi election would not signal any drastic change in American foreigh policy.

There may well continue to be informal consultations, between the State Department and Republican foreign policy leaders, as there has been in the past. But in the end of the day, the responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs must rest with the Democratic Administration. So it would seem that our allies must simply share our confusion and uncertainty, at least until the votes are counted in November. Senator Wiley's proposal statesmanship as it may appear to be in the vacuum, does not seem to be politically practicable, and to this reporter, it overlooks one important consideration. We will be confused as to where we are going in the next six months. So will our allies; but before this campaign is over, the Russians may be just about as confused as the rest of us, and confusion in the camp of the enemy is seldom a bad thing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Soon we shall be entering the period of confusion, censure, claim and counter-claim, where efforts will be made to damage and destroy not just political programs and ideas, but individuals as well. As Johathan Swift said: "Censure is the "tax" a man pays to the public for being eminent." Elbert Hubbard counseled: "Never try to explain. Your friends will understand, and your enemies will not believe you anyhow."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thurs.
July 17, 1952

This is the news:

A third Democratic presidential candidate flew into Chicago today. (with another victory prediction.) Averell Harriman told reporters: he supports the Fair Deal and the New Deal.. he has no reason to believe the President will support him.. but he is sure he can win.. he refuses to predict on what ballot. Mr. Harriman feels that the issues are important..that the party, when it convenes in convention on Monday, will not go back on the issues it has stood for these past years. Two other candidates now here in Chicago contributed their bit to keep the many reporters here busy, with something to write about. Senator Kefauver says his main hope is in "just little people." He feels that the big city political organizations have shown more interest in him since the Republicans nominated Eisenhower. He says his campaign is geared against what he calls "many entrenched interests in the party." And Senator Kefauver says he will support New York Senator Lehman's move for a party platform plank calling for an end to Senate filibusters. Senator Russell of Georgia, the third candidate in town, feels this would mean a gag rule in the Senate... he's opposed to it. At his own news conference, Russell had this to say:

he thinks the convention will agree on a civil rights platform that will be acceptable to both the northern and southern branches of the party. He thinks it "highly improbable" that some southern states will bolt the party as they did four years ago. He is very much interested in the support of big city machines..has conferred with Chicago's Jacob Arvey.. but received no promises. Senator Russell also said he hopes to confer with C.I.O. President Murray when Murray arrives here for a meeting with his union's vice presidents and with the C.I.O. Political Action Committee.

Senator Russell's announcement yesterday that he favors an end to the Taft-Hartley law had repercussions in Virginia today. Senator Byrd and the state Democrats had long been pushing the Russell campaign. But in convention today, the keynote speaker dropped Senator Russell's name from his prepared speech. and the convention voted to send an uninstructed delegation to Chicago. Senator Byrd, still supporting Russell, disagreed with the Russell view on Taft-Hartley. Senator Russell sent Byrd a telegram saying he is not for the elimination of all Taft-Hartley provisions.. just favors a complete rewriting of the bill.

This southern objection to Russell's new views on labor laws came as Governor Talmadge of Georgia made it clear that his state's delegation to the convention opposes any civil rights plank in the party platform.. compulsory or otherwise. This may make more difficult the compromise solution Senator Russell and his aides are looking forward to. The preliminary platform committee today heard three hours of ARGUMENT for a strong civil rights plank. These advocates not only want the party to repeat all that it said four years ago..with emphasis on a compulsory Fair Employment Practises Commission..but they also want the party to go on record against the filibuster in the Senate. The committee was warned by some witnesses that to do otherwise might mean a Negro boycott of the Democratic party. James Carey, a C.I.O. official, said organized labor considers civil rights to be "the most important issue" before the convention. And Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reminded the committee that there are 17 states, with 281 electroal votes, in which Negroes hold the balance of power. [redacted] But he made it clear that his organization, and 52 others he represents, are not associated with any threat of a Negro boycott of the Democratic ticket.

Representative Celler of New York called on the committee to make its civil rights stand "so plain, simple and unequivocal" that Even General Eisenhower "with all his naivete and gullibility"--as Celler put it--could understand it. [redacted]

At today's committee session southern members, and southern representatives, were unusually quiet..lending credence to reports that a serious effort will be made to compromise the issue to the extent that all sides will go along with it.(even if no one is happy about it.)

Tomorrow the credentials committee hears a battle for seats among rival Texas and Mississippi delegates... 70 votes in all. The committee plans to settle both contests in one day..even if it means night sessions.

One more note on the Democratic convention. Senator Taft, returning to Washington for the first time since the Republican convention ended, again predicted that the Democratic presidential candidate will be--Harry Truman. Taft says: " I have always felt that they'd fall back on Harry. I don't see what else they can do."

The President spent another day in Walter Reed hospital. For the first time since he was hit by a "mild virus infection" on Sunday, his temperature was normal all day. Mrs. Truman, who arrived from Independence this morning, lunched with the president..then visited the White House & return to the hospital suite later, for dinner with her husband. White House aides say Mr. Truman should be back in the White House on Saturday.

Senator Joseph Mc Carthy is also in the hospital.. at Bethesda. He underwent a minor sinus operation, and his physicians says he will not be able to make any speeches for one or two months.

Two of our biggest industries.. aviation and auotombile.. made it clear today that the 46-day-old steel strike is having a very harmful effect. Automotive News, trade publication, says that unemployment in the industry next week, may be greater than at any time since the depression. Production of new cars fell to a new post-war low this week. And the paper says August production "may be nil."

Admiral Ramsey, president of Aircfat Industries Association, says the steel strike is heading the aviation industry toward what he calls "a grave and perhaps desperate crisis." He says that by the first of August a significant number of manufacturers of aircraft parts will be seriously affected by the lack of steel.

The United Press financial editor, Elmer C. Walzer, estimates that by Saturday, when the strike ends its 7th week, the cost to the nation will be more than one billion dollars: in the loss of wages and profits, taxes to the government, and its affect on allied industries.

Some industry sources say that the gap between labor and industry is "very narrow"... but no efforts are being made--in public at least--to close that gap.

Attorney General Mc Granery says a federal grand jury will investigate a reputed international oil cartel, involving seven of the world's largest oil companies. Mc Granery says they are: Standard Oil of New Jersey ...Standard Oil of California... the Texas Company... Socony-Vacuum.. and Gulf Oil. In addition to these American concerns, Mc Granery lists: Royal Dutch Shell and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

Only yesterday Senator Hennings of Missouri charged that five American and two British firms control "practically the entire world industry, outside the United States." He said that six of the seven members of the alleged cartel "dominate the oil industry within the United States.

Last week stockholders of Standard Oil of New Jersey were told by their president, Eugene Holman, that their company "is not a party to illegal arrangements of any kind."

Iran's premier Mossadegh resigned tonight, after the Shah refused to permit him to become his own war minister in a new cabinet. The shah named former Premier Ahmed Ghavam to form a new cabinet. Ghavam is 80-years old..was premier three times.. led his country through disputes with Russia, after the second World War. There is no indication yet on what effect, if any, this may have on the long quarrel between Iran and Britain over Mossadegh's nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian oil company.

The State Department says that India has been negotiating with the Chinese Communists in an effort to end the Korean war..but the talks have not made any apparent progress. The truce negotiators get together again tonight at Panmunjom after a two day recess. Today, bad weather in Korea grounded almost all of our planes, and kept ground activitiy to a minimum.

In London, the British were told today that the Russians have agreed to withdraw the second secretary of the soviet embassy in London. He had been named in a British spy trial.

At the Olympic games in Helsinki, Nationalist China withdrew its athletes after the International Olympic Committee decided that both Nationalist and Communist teams from China could compete. And the Russian Olympic basketball team took its first practise today.. using red basket balls.

The Democrats say they are going to streamline their convention next week. The leading candidates have agreed with Chairman McKinney that the nominating speeches shall be limited to fifteen minutes, and there will be only two seconding speeches, of five minutes each. And they've agreed on something else, too. There will be no professional, paid demonstrators. This particular form of hysteria will be confined to delegates and alternates. It's a Democratic show, and they have a right to make their own rules, but this one hardly seems fair. After all, it's not so long ago that an American citizen could hire a substitute to go out and fight in a war for him. Seems reasonable that some delegate who has a tight pair of shoes, or doesn't like being hit over the head with banners, or is too old, or too wise, to desire to participate in the demonstrations, ought to be able to go out and hire himself a substitute. But the boys have got together and said,"nothing doing". The marching, and the shouting, and the sweating is supposed to be done by the duly accredited representatives of the people. This may cause some to wish they had stayed home. The chances are there will be some volunteers down there anyway, for there is no scorecard to tell you the difference between a delegate or an alternate and any other citizen who appears to have taken leave of his senses.

One thing that's bothering reporters here is the question of who's got the telephone. One day early next week it will ring; the man on the other end will be Mr. Truman. The trouble is we haven't yet been able to find out who the man on this end of the telesphone will be. Whoever he is, he will deliver the message that will probably determine who is nominated.

WORD FOR TODAY

Will Rogers wrote this about the Houston convention of nineteen twenty-eight: "I wouldn't stay for the thing, but I know that a Democrat is just like a baby. If it's hollering and making a lot of noise, there is nothing serious the matter with it. But if it's quiet and still, and don't pay much attention to anything, why that's when it's really dangerous." No one knows what is going to happen here next week, but it's going to be worth staying for.

Good Night & good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - JULY 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A third Democratic presidential candidate flew into Chicago today - with another victory prediction. Averell Harriman told reporters he supports the Fair Deal and the New Deal; he has no reason to believe the President will support him, but he is sure he can win; he refuses to predict on what ballot. Mr. Harriman feels that the issues are important, that the Party, when it convenes in convention on Monday, will not go back on the issues it has stood for these past years. Two other candidates now here in Chicago contributed their bit to keep the many reporters here busy with something to write about. Senator Kefauver says his main hope is in "just little people." He feels that the big city political organizations have shown more interest in him since the Republicans nominated Eisenhower. He says his campaign is geared against what he calls "many entrenched interests in the Party." And Senator Kefauver says he will support New York Senator Lehman's move for a Party platform plank calling for an end to Senate filibusters. Senator Russell of Georgia, the third candidate in town, feels this would mean a gag rule in the Senate; he's opposed to it. At his own news conference, Russell had this to say: he thinks the convention will agree on a civil rights platform that will be acceptable to both the northern and southern branches of the Party; he thinks it "highly improbable" that some southern states will bolt the Party as they did four years ago. He is very much interested in the support of big city machines - has conferred with Chicago's Jacob Arvey - but received no promises. Senator Russell also said he hopes to confer with CIO President Murray, when Murray arrives here for a meeting with his union's vice presidents and with the CIO Political Action Committee.

Senator Russell's announcement yesterday that he favors an end to the Taft-Hartley law had repercussions in Virginia today. Senator Byrd and the state Democrats had long been pushing the Russell campaign. But in convention today, the Keynote Speaker dropped Senator Russell's name from his prepared speech, and the convention voted to send an uninstructed delegation to Chicago. Senator Byrd, still supporting Russell, disagreed with the Russell view on Taft-Hartley. Senator Russell sent Byrd a telegram saying he is not for the elimination of all Taft-Hartley provisions, just favors a complete rewriting of the bill.

This Southern objection to Russell's new views on labor laws came as Governor Talmadge of Georgia made it clear that his state's delegation to the convention opposes any civil rights plank. These advocates not only want the Party to repeat all that it said four years ago - with amphasis on a compulsory Fair Employment Practices Commission - but they also want the Party to go on record against the filibuster in the Senate. The Committee was warned by some witnesses that to do otherwise might mean a Negro boycott of the Democrat Party. James Carey, a CIO official, said organized labor considers civil rights to be "the most important issue" before the convention. And Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reminded the Committee, that there are 17 states, with 281 electoral votes, in which Negroes hold the balance of power. But he made it clear that his organization, and 52 others he represents, are not associated with any threat of a Negro boycott of the Democratic ticket.

Representative Celler of New York called on the Committee to make its civil rights stand "so plain, simple and unequivocal" that even General Eisenhower "with all his naivete and gullibility" - as Celler put it - could understand it.

At today's Committee session, Southern members and Southern representatives were unusually quiet, lending credence to the reports that a serious effort will be made to compromise the issue to the extent that all sides will go along with it, (even if no one is happy about it).

Tomorrow the Credentials Committee hears a battle for seats among rival Texas and Mississippi delegates - 70 votes in all. The Committee plans to settle both contests in one day, even if it means night sessions.

One more note on the Democratic Convention. Senator Taft returning to Washington for the first time since the Republican Convention ended, again predicted that the Democratic presidential candidate will be - Harry Truman. Taft says: "I have always felt that they'd fall back on Harry. I don't see what else they can do."

The President spent another day in Walter Reed hospital. For the first time since he was hit by a "mild virus infection" on Sunday, his temperature was normal all day. Mrs. Truman, who arrived from Independence this morning, lunched with the President, then visited the White House and returned to the hospital suite later for dinner with her husband. White House aides say Mr. Truman should be back in the White House on Saturday.

Senator Joseph McCarthy is also in the hospital at Bethesda. He underwent a minor sinus operation, and his physicians say he will not be able to make any speeches for one or two months.

Two of our biggest industries, aviation and automible, made it clear today that the 46-day-old steel strike is having a very harmful effect. Automotive News, trade publication, says that unemployment in the industry next week may be greater than at any time since the depression. Production of new cars fell to a new post-war low this week, and the paper says August production "may be nil."

Admiral Ramsey, president of Aircraft Industries Association, says the steel strike is heading the aviation industry toward what he calls "a grave and perhaps desperate crisis." He says that by the first of August, a significant number of manufacturers of aircraft parts will be seriously affected by the lack of steel.

The United Press financial editor, Elmer C. Walzer, estimates that by Saturday, when the strike ends its 7th week, the cost to the nation will be more than one billion dollars in the loss of wages and profits, taxes to the Government, and its affect on allied industries.

Some industry sources say that the gap between labor and industry is "very narrow", but no efforts are being made in public at least to close that gap.

Attorney General McGranery says a federal grand jury will investigate a reputed international oil cartel, involving seven of the world's largest oil companies. McGranery says they are Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, the Texas Company, Socony-Vacuum, and Gulf Oil. In addition to these American concerns, McGranery lists Royal Dutch Shell, and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. Only yesterday Senator Hennings of Missouri charged that five American and two British firms control "practically the entire world industry, outside the United States." He said that six of the seven members of the alleged cartel "dominate the oil industry within the United States. Last week stockholders of Standard Oil of New Jersey were told by their president, Eugene Holman, that their company "is not a party to illegal arrangements of any kind."

Iran's Premier Mossadegh resigned tonight, after the Shah refused to permit him to become his own war minister in a new cabinet. The Shah named former Premier Ahmed Ghavam to form a new cabinet. Ghavam is 80-years old, was Premier three times, led his country through disputes with Russia after the second World War. There is no indication yet on what effect, if any, this may have on the long quarrel between Iran and Britain over Mossadegh's nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian oil company.

The State Department says that India has been negotiating with the Chinese Communists in an effort to end the Korean war, but the talks have not made any apparent progress. The truce negotiators get together again tonight at Panmunjom after a two day recess. Today, bad weather in Korea grounded almost all of our planes and kept ground activity to a minimum.

In London, the British were told today that the Russians have agreed to withdraw the second secretary of the Soviet Embassy in London. He had been named in a British spy trial.

At the Olympic games in Helsinki, Nationalist China withdrew its athletes after the International Olympic Committee decided that both Nationalist and Communist teams from China could compete. And the Russian Olympic basketball team took its first practice today - using red basket balls.

The Democrats say they are going to streamline their convention next week. The leading candidates have agreed with Chairman McKinney that the nominating speeches shall be limited to fifteen minutes, and there will be only two seconding speeches, of five minutes each. And they've agreed on something else, too. There will be no professional, paid demonstrators. This particular form of hysteria will be confined to delegates and alternates. It's a Democratic show, and they have a right to make their own rules, but this one hardly seems fair. After all, it's not so long ago that an American citizen could hire a substitute to go out and fight in a war for him. Seems reasonable that some delegate who has a tight pair of shoes, or doesn't like being hit over the head with banners, or is too old, or too wise, to desire to participate in the demonstrations, ought to be able to go out and hire himself a substitute. But the boys have got together and said, "nothing doing." The marching, and the shouting, and the sweating is supposed to be done by the duly accredited representatives of the people. This may cause some to wish they had stayed home. The chances are there will be some volunteers down there anyway, for there is no scorecard to tell you the difference between a delegate or an alternate and any other citizen who appears to have taken leave of his senses.

One thing that's bothering reporters here is the question of who's got the telephone. One day early next week it will ring; the man on the other end will be Mr. Truman. The trouble is we haven't yet been able to find out who the man on this end of the telephone will be. Whoever he is, he will deliver the message that will probably determine who is nominated.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Will Rogers wrote this about the Houston convention of nineteen twenty-eight: "I wouldn't stay for the thing, but I knowthat a Democrat is just like a baby. If it's hollering and making a lot of noise, there is nothing serious the matter with it. But if it's quiet and still, and don't pay much attention to anything, why that's when it's really dangerous." No one knows what is going to happen here next week, but it's going to be worth staying for.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday - July 18, 1952 7/18

This is the news:

The government may be preparing to seize a part of the steel industry.. under the draft act. Administration sources say the White House has asked the Justice Department, to prepare the necessary papers. Industry sources call this "a disgraceful attempt to scare us." And Price Stabilizer Arnall now says that the government will allow the industry a $2.84 a ton price increase..and no more. Presidential Assistant Steelman is believed to have offered the industry an increase of $5.65 for a quick settlement. BUT Mr. Arnall now says that Mr. Steelman, and Economic Stabilizer Putnam, agree with him...$2.84 is the limit.

U.S. Steel has signed a contract with some 2-thousand workers it employes on a subsidairy railroad. The workers are members of the C.I.O. steel workers. And the contract provides for a compulsory union shop. (one of the stumbling blocks to settlement of the steel strike.) Phil Murray, head of the strikers, says this is proof of what he calls the industry's "hypocrticial position".. A company spokesman says this union shop is strictly a railroad matter doesn't apply to steel.. and he admits it gives the union "good propaganda."

Mr. Murray was here in Chicago today conferring with other C.I.O. and A.F. of L. leaders..on who to support for the presidential nomination. He predicts any Democrat can beat Eisenhower and Nixon.

Illinois' Governor Stevenson came to Chicago today still determined not to be a candidate. He told reporters: he will resist efforts to place his name in nomination... will discourage any supporters.. will ask delegates not to vote for him. A reporter asked: if there's a deadlock and the convention offers you the job what then? The Governor said:"I can't answer that until I come to it...such a situation is inconceivable."

Vice President Barkley also came to town today..confident that he'll get the nomination. And Senator Kerr, another candidate, predicts he'll get it on the fifth or sixth ballot. Senator Kerr says "nobody will be drafted by this convention."

Senator Kefauver today denied reports that his forces and those of Averell Harriman are teaming-up to vote together on some convention "issues" ..such as civil rights and which of the contested delegations to seat. If these two men can rally their supporters they will control almost 400 votes between them. Senator Russell says that if Kefauver and Harriman are teaming up it would be in the nature of a stop Russell movement.. a conspiracy [redacted] against Russell.

Senator Humphrey, a "favorite son" candidate from Minnesota, told reporters its more important to carry enough states to win in November than it is to keep the South..solidly in the Democratic column. He says it would be "political suicide" to "compromise away" the program the Democrats have used to win five national elections.

Senator Hill of Alabama today denied that his candidate--Senator Russell--can be accused of "opportunism" for deciding now that he doesn't like the Taft-Hartley law. Hill says such a charge is "absolutely unfair."

The President is still in Walter Reed hospital.. doing well.. and preparing to return to the White House tomorrow. Today he signed a bill that will raise social security payments five dollars OR MORE a month for some four and a half million retired persons. This and other benefits will cost the government an additional 540-million dollars a year.

The President today accepted the resignation of John J. Mc Cloy the high commissioner for Germany..and appointed Walter J. Donnelly to succeed him. Mr. Donnelly has been our ambassador to Austria.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has authorized the Pullman Company to increase its minimum sleeping cars rates by 23 per cent.. effective the end of this month. This will bring in more than 4-million a year in new revenue, but the company says it will still have an operating deficit of 15-million at the end of this year.

In Korea, the truce talks are in session again..after a four-day recess. An allied spokesman says yesterday's meeting was "business-like"..with both sides reading prepared papers. But there was nothing of the big development some correspondents had expected.

On the western front the Chinese, with heavy artillery support, attacked allied positions day and night. An allied officer describes the enemy shelling as "quite intense" but offers no details on what's happening in this area, west of Chorwon.

On Formosa, Chiang Kai Shek says he doesn't think a blockade of the Communist China coast would provoke another war. He says his Nationalists do not need foreign manpower to invade the mainland and recover China. But he says his forces need, and are entitled to claim, "other necessary assistance."

In Iran today, the new Premier Ahmed Qavam said he is going to get a friendly settlement of his country's dispute with the British over the Anglo-Iranian oil company. If he doesn't..he says he'll resign. Qavahm charged that former premier Mossadegh, who seized the British-owned company a year ago, followed a faulty policy.. and turned a legal question into "enmity between two nations." Now he has warned all Iranian troublemakers to stay out of his way as he attempts a peaceful settlement. He said:"I warn everyone that the period of disorder and uprisings is over."

The Argentine State Radio said tonight that the condition of President Peron's wife, Eva, "has declined noticeably this afternoon." There has never been an official diagnosis of Mrs. Peron's illness. She underwent an operation last November after an examination by a New York cancer and tumor specialist. The radio bulletin today was obviously intended to tell the people of Argentina that Eva Peron is near death.

The Democrats will manage to nominate a couple of candidates here in Chicago next week. But exactly how it is to be done, baffles even the leading contenders. Having spoken off the record with several of them today, I should be able to put together what is called in the trade a "think piece". But unfortunately the conversations just don't add up to ~~anything~~ very much. Everyone is confident; has figued out a way he can win. But the figures won't add. So far, this is really an open convention, and there is a growing feeling that it may remain that way; that President Truman will not intervene, or if he does, it will be too late to be effective.

When the Democrats convene on Monday there will be a huge block of uninstructed delegates, with no one to instruct them. It will require six hundred and sixteen votes to nominate, and the chances are that anyone who gets above the four-hundred mark will make it. But no one will be near that figure on the first couple of ballots. It appears likely that Vice President Barkley's first-ballot vote will be substantial, because there is a disposition to give him a vote of thanks for long service to the Party, and also because a vote for Barkley will leave the delegation free to switch later on.

It's even going to be difficult to work out the traditional deals and trades, because none of the front runners can be sure they can deliver in a trade all of the delegates now pledged to them. Senator Dick Russell of Georgia has the most coherent and compact group, and they hope to pick up strength from Maryland, Missouri, the far West, and perhaps even from Illinois, as the balloting progresses. If Senator Russell can't win the nomination himself he will, more than any other candidate, be in a position to determine who does get it. If Kefauver's strength should begin to wane, the Russell supporters expect to gather in some of his delegates. And if Russell fails to gain strength, the Kefauver managers hope that he can pick up some of those Southern delegates, Now Pledged to Russell

Harriman is as willing as any man here to take on Eisenhower. His stand on the basic issues conforms more closely to Mr. Truman's than any of the other candidates. He has expectations of substantial labor support and believes that the delegates and the Democrats in the country will not compromise on the basic principals of the New and Fair Deals.

So far as the favorite son candidates are concerned, here again, the bargains will be hard to strike. Because few, if any, of them can be sure that they can deliver more than a fraction of their delegation to the candidate of their choice. As things stand now, this looks like being a convention, without any great personal bitterness between the leading candidates; without any irreconcilable differences as to policy and program; a convention where one well-timed and effective piece of oratory might actually change votes. It would be a convention where a southerner has a real chance of being nominated; where a vigorous and indeed beloved party member of seventy-four would win it; or a man who made his reputation on television could bring it off; or where a millionaire banker with wide forgign experience could win with the aid of labor. As a matter of fact, someone who hasn't yet been heard from on a national scale could win.

18

There is not discernible here any disposition to look for a "caretaker ticket" in anticipation of defeat in the Fall and a comeback four years later. The nomination of General Eisenhower has not created the alarm and despondency in Democratic ranks that many of his supporters had anticipated. The Democrats think they can win in November - after all, they remember forty-eight. But there is going to be an awful lot of oratory and negotiating before they find the combination they think can win for them. There is no doubt that Mr. Truman could still exercise enormous influence over the convention. Some of the candidates are hoping for that; others fear it. But if he waits to make his preference known until the first ballot, his power will be much less than it is now. Each day that passes reduces the President's influence upon the convention. When the delegates convene they will resemble more a mob than a well-trained, well-led battalion. Many of them seem to be rather bewildered at the prospect of having to make up their own minds. The Republicans here last week resembled the meeting of two big bulldozers, with Warren and Stassen in the middle. It rather looks as though the Democrats are going to have to do it with pick and shovel.

5

WORD FOR TODAY

It was Benjamin Disraeli who said: "The secret of success in life is for a man to be ready for his opportunity when it comes." There is no shortage of men here in Chicago who believe they are "ready." The situation as Chicago fills up with delegates to the Democratic convention may have been described by John Wray when he wrote: "Merry is the feast-making, till we come to the reckoning".

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - JULY 18, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Government may be preparing to seize a part of the steel industry - under the draft act. Administration sources say the White House has asked the Justice Department to prepare the necessary papers. Industry sources call this "a disgraceful attempt to scare us." And Price Stabilizer Arnall now says that the Government will allow the industry a $2.84 a ton price increase - and no more. Presidential Assistant Steelman is believed to have offered the industry an increase of $5.65 for a quick settlement. But Mr. Arnall now says that Mr. Steelman, and Economic Stabilizer Putnam agree with him; $2.84 is the limit.

U. S. Steel has signed a contract with some 2-thousand workers it employes on a subsidiary railroad. The workers are members of the CIO steelworkers, and the contract provides for a compulsory union shop, (one of the stumbling blocks to settlement of the steel strike). Phil Murray, head of the strikers, says this is proof of what he calls the industry's "hypocritical position." A company spokesman says this union shop is strictly a railroad matter - doesn't apply to steel - and he admits it gives the union "good propaganda." Mr. Murray was here in Chicago today conferring with other CIO and A.F. of L. leaders on who to support for the presidential nomination. He predicts any Democrat can beat Eisenhower and Nixon.

Illinois' Governor Stevenson came to Chicago today still determined not to be a candidate. He told reporters he will resist efforts to place his name in nomination, will discourage any supporters, will ask delegates not to vote for him. A reporter asked if there's a deadlock and the convention offers you the job, what then? The Governor said: "I can't answer that until I come to it.....such a situation is inconceivable."

Vice President Barkley also came to twon today, confident that he'll get the nomination. And Senator Kerr, another candidate, predicts he'll get it on the fifth or sixth ballot, Senator Kerr says: "Nobody will be drafted by this convention."

Senator Kefauver today denied reports that his forces and those of Averell Harriman are teaming-up to vote together on some convention "issues", such as civil rights and which of the contested delegations to seat. If these two men can rally their supporters, they will control almost 400 votes between them. Senator Russell says that if Kefauver and Harriman are teaming up, it would be in the nature of a stop Russell movement - a conspiracy against Russell.

Senator Humphrey, a "favorite son" candidate from Minnesota, told reporters it's more important to carry enough states to win in November than it is to keep the South solidly in the Democratic column. He says it would be "political suicide" to "compromise away" the program the Democrats have used to win five national elections.

Senator Hill of Alabama today denied that his candidate, Senator Russell, can be accused of "opportunism" for deciding now that he doesn't like the Taft-Hartley law. Hill says such a charge is "absolutely unfair."

The President is still in Walter Reed Hospital, doing well, and preparing to return to the White House tomorrow. Today he signed a bill that will raise social security payments five dollars or more an month for some four and a half million retired persons. This and other benefits will sost the Government an additional 540-million dollars a year.

The President today accepted the resignation of John J. McCloy, the High Commissioner for Germany, and appointed Walter J. Donnelly to succeed him. Mr. Donnelly has been our ambassador to Austria.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has authorized the Pullman Company to increase its minimum sleeping cars rates by 23 per cent, effective the end of this month. This will bring in more than 4-million a year in new revenue, but the company says it will still have an operating deficit of 15-million at the end of this year.

In Korea, the truce talks are in session again after a four-day recess. An allied spokesman says yesterday's meeting was "business-like" with both sides reading prepared papers. But there was nothing of the big development some correspondents had expected.

On the western front the Chinese, with heavy artillery support, attacked allied positions day and night. An allied offer describes the enemy shelling as "quite intense" but offers no details on what's happening in this area, west of Chorwon.

On Formosa, Chiang Kai Shek says he doesn't think a blockade of the Communist China coast would provoke another war. He says his Nationalists do not need foreign manpower to invade the mainland and recover China. But he says his forces need, and are entitled to claim, "other necessary assistance."

In Iran today, the new Premier Ahmed Qavam said he is going to get a friendly settlement of his country's dispute with the British, over the Anglo-Iranian oil company. If he doesn't, he says he'll resign. Qavam charged that former premier Mossadegh, who seized the British-owned company a year ago, followed a faulty policy, and turned a legal question into "enmity between two nations." Now, he has warned all Iranian troublemakers to stay out of his way as he attempts a peaceful settlement. He said: "I warn everyone that the period of disorder and uprisings is over."

The Argentine State Radio said tonight that the condition of President Peron's wife, Eva, "has declined noticeably this afternoon." There has never been an official diagnosis of Mrs. Peron's illness. She underwent an operation last November after an examination by a New York cancer and tumor specialist. The radio bulletin today was obviously intended to tell the people of Argentine that Eva Peron is near death.

The Democrats will manage to nominate a couple of candidates here in Chicago next week. But exactly how it is to be done, baffles even the leading contenders. Having spoken off the record with several of them today, I should be able to put together what is called in the trade a "think piece." But unfortunately, the conversations just don't add up to very much. Everyone is confident - has figured out a way he can win. But the figures won't add. So far, this is really an open convention, and there is a growing feeling that it may remain that way; that President Truman will not intervene, or if he does, it will be too late to be effective.

When the Democrats convene on Monday there will be a huge block of uninstructed delegates with no one to instruct them. It will require six hundred and sixteen votes to nominate, and the chances are that anyone who gets above the four-hundred mark will make it. But no one will be near that figure on the first couple of ballots. It appears likely that Vice President Barkley's first-ballot vote will be substantial, because there is a disposition to give him a vote of thanks for long service to the Party, and also because a vote for Barkley will leave the delegation free to switch later on.

It's even going to be difficult to work out the traditional deals and trades, because none of the front runners can be sure they can deliver in a trade all of the delegates now pledged to them. Senator Dick Russell of Georgia has the most coherent and compact group, and they hope to pick up strength from Maryland, Missouri, the far West, and perhaps even from Illinois, as the balloting progresses. If Senator Russell can't win the nomination himself, he will, more than any other candidate, be in a position to determine who does get it. If Kefauver's strength should begin to wane, the Russell supporters expect to gather in some of his delegates. And if Russell fails to gain strength, the Kefauver managers hope that he can pick up some of those Southern delegates now pledged to Russell.

Harriman is as willing as any man here to take on Eisenhower. His stand on the basic issues conforms more closely to Mr. Truman's than any of the other candidates. He has expectations of substantial labor support and believes that the delegates and the Democrats in the country will not compromise on the basic principals of the New and Fair Deals.

So far as the favorite son candidates are concerned, here again, the bargains will be hard to strike. Because few, if any, of them can be sure that they can deliver more than a fraction of their delegation to the candidate of their choice. As things stand now, this looks like being a convention, without any great personal bitterness between the leading candidates; without any irreconcilable differences as to policy and program - a convention where one well-timed and effective piece of oratory might actually change votes. It could be a convention where a Southerner has a real chance of being nominated; where a vigorous and indeed beloved party member of seventy-four could win it; or a man who made his repubation on television could bring it off; or where a millionaire bankdr with wide foreign experience could win with the aid of labor. As a matter of fact, someone who hasn't yet been heard from on a national scale could win.

There is not discernible here any disposition to look for a "caretaker ticket" in anticipation of defeat in the Fall, and a comeback four years later. The nomination of General Eisenhower has not created the alarm and despondency in Democratic ranks that many of his supporters had anticipated. The Democrats think they can win in November; after all, they remember forty-eight. But there is going to be an awful lot of oratory and negotiating before they find the combination they think can win for them. There is no doubt that Mr. Truman could still exercise enormous influence over the convention. Some of the candidates are hoping for that; others fear it. But if he waits to make his preference known until the first ballot, his power will be much less than it is now. Each day that passes reduces the President's influence upon the convention. When the delegates convene, they will resemble more a mob than a well-trained, well-led battalion. Many of them seem to be rather bewildered at the prospect of having to make-up their own minds. The Republicans here last week resembled the meeting of two big bulldozers with Warren and Stassen in the middle. It rather looks as though the Democrats are going to have to do it with pick and shovel.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It was Benjamin Disraeli who said: "The secret of success in life is for a man to be ready for his opportunity when it comes." There is no shortage of men here in Chicago who believe they are "ready". The situation, as Chicago fills up with delegates to the Democratic convention, may have been described by John Wray when he wrote: "Merry is the feast-making till we come to the reckoning."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Mon - July 21 - 1952 -

This is the news:

Adlai Stevenson, the governor of Illinois, received an enthisiastic reception when he greeted delegates tothe opening session of the Democratic convention here in Chicago. Governor Stevenson, in the winds of rumor and fact that blow through these hotel halls and the convention ampitheater, now appears to be a "leader" for the party's nomination. I'd like to review his speech..and his chances in a few minutes.

The opening session of the convention went smoothly..because the expected fight on rules was postponed..because the platform committee is just beginning its secret sessions to try to work out words that will offend neither north or south.

Illinois's Democratic Senator..Paul Douglas..spoke to the delegates today..reviewed the Korean war..reminded them that the chief of staff who recommended, in 1947, that Korea had little strategic value was one General Eisenhower.

Yesterday the delegates and the reporters were telling each other that Vice President Barkley would get the nod from the White House..was

The favored candidate. Today leaders of the AF of L and the C.I.O. informed Mr. Barkley, reluctantly..that they could not support him because of his age. And trouble was reported in another headquarters..that of Averell Harriman as some of New York state's 94 delegates made it clear they had other preferences. NOTABLY, BARKLEY AND [redacted] Governor Stevenson. The state chairman and the Harriman campaign manager, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Junior appealed to the New York delegates to stick with Harriman "at least on the first ballot."

Mr. Roosevelt and representatives of the five other leading contenders are now meeting in an effort to work out an agreement on the convention rules. The Harriman and Kefauver groups, with other liberal support, want two things: they propose that the contested delegates from Texas and [redacted] Mississippi SHOULD not be permitted to vote on the convention floor until both cases have been decidedly finally; and two, they want both delegations to take what's called a loyalty oath. to promise to support the party and its nominee in November. Many southern delegates object to this, and promise a bitter floor fight. This issue was scheduled for presentation to the convention today. BUT was put off until tomorrow.

Another floor fight may be expected over the party platform. Walter Reuther, head of the C.I.O. auto workers, told the preliminary drafting committee today that the platform must stand for "PEOPLE AGAINST [redacted] PRIVILEGE" ..it cannot compromise basic issues. Reuther said unless the convention adopts a strong no-compromise "human rights" platform.. with an anti-filibuster plank.. labor leaders will not be able to deliver a Democratic vote in November.

The White House is particularly uncomunicative about what has been happening or rumored to be about to happen here in Chicago. Secretary Short told reporters many of these Chicago rumors will remain exclusive permanently..will never be confirmed. He said the President has watched the big show on television..returned to his desk for the first time since he was hospitalized.. is feeling fine and looking chipper..but not one word that would help any delegate HERE reach any [redacted] conslusions on anything.

The wage policy committee of the striking C.I.O. steelworkers decided today to continue with their strike--now in its 50th day-- until the industry agrees to give the steelworkers a union shop. President Phil Murray charged that the industry repudiated a settlement he tentatively worked out with one company last June. The union leaders invited industry leaders to meet with them..four industry executives walked into the union meeting in shirt sleeves..presented their views.. andthen were told : the [redacted] STRIKE GOES on.

An earthquake struck much of California today..was felt by residents from the Mexican border to San Fransisco. Hardest hit was the little town of Tehachapi [redacted] WHERE 11 were killed..including nine children. The walls of [redacted] each of the town's 15 major buildings crumbled. And over a wide area: water mains were broken, power circuits thrown out of order.. and highway and railroad lines blocked.

The air force in Washington says it has received reports that from seven to ten unidentified aerial objects were sighted around midnight Saturday near the Washington airport. This is being investigated.

In Korea, allied and enemy troops fought for a sixth day on Old Baldy hill on the western front. And the 15th secret negotiating session at Panmunjom produced no positive results.

In Iran, the new premier Ahmed Quavam has resigned after four days in office..presumably because of the bloody battles that have been going on for two days between government troops and Nationalists with Communist support. The demonstrations were touched off by Qavam's announcement that he would try to settle the dispute with Britain over the Angl-Iranian oil company. [redacted]

In the Olympics American shot putters won the first three places: Parry O'Brien of Southern California.. followed by Darrow Hooper and Jim Fuchs. Charley Moore of New York won the 400 meter low hurdles..Lindy Remigino of Manhattan college won the 100 meter dash and Jerome Biffle of the army [redacted] won the broad jump.

The Democrats opened their convention by attacking Republicans rather than each other,..It may be Democrat against Democrat later on the subject of civil rights,but today they belaboured the Republicans,...Governor Adlei Stephenson welcomed the delegates,...and receved a prolonged ovation,..He reviewed the record of the last twenty years;said the republicans called it all a miserable failure,progress in peace,victory in war,and bold leadership in this anxious hour they regarded as the misbegotten spawn of bungling, corruption, socialism, mismanagement, waste, and worse,...Said Stephenson;"they captured tied and dragged that idea in here and furiously beat it to death;..first they slaughtered each other,and then they went after us,....The Governor of Illinois warned the Democrats not to look back,not to confuse words with action,asked for orderly proceedings,open and fair decisions.And he said:"Where we have erred,let there be no denial;.where we have wronged the public trust,let there be no excuses,.. Self criticism is the secret weapon of democracy,and candour and confession are good for the political soul,"....Stevensons speech was brief,.and when he was finished,many of his supporters were heard to sigh in relief,..they had feared that he would utter the words that would remove him irrevocably from ~~considerable~~ consideration for the nomination,...He didnt speak them,..and tonight, there is a strong Stevenson tide running in this steaming city of Chicago,...

Stevenson has been playing the role of the reluctant candidate for months;.. asked his own delegation not to nominate him,.asked delegates not to vote for him,..said laughingly he'd shoot himself if nominated..But he has refused to say he wouldn't accept or wouldn't serve...and yet, his strength increases,..My Colleague, ERIC SEVAREID, knows more of Stevenson and the Stevenson story than anyone I know,. and I've asked him to talk about it,...

IN ONE EAR

sevareid - murrow 6:45 p.m. july 21--

3.50

Adlai Stevenson will be the democratic nominee -- unless one thing happens: Unless he gets up on that convention platform and declares he will refuse the nomination. Few people here see how he can possibly do that now; it would probably ruin him politically; he knows that, and in a moment of deep emotion, said he might have to take that chance. But the odds would seem against that.) ~~don't look for it~~. So it's nine to one, he's it.

The applause for him today was spontaneous. One former Chicago alderman had wanted to organize a demonstration; all such efforts were squelched in advance. The applause came from the delegates, as well as from the galleries. It proved what we all knew - that the latent Stevenson support is very strong, in almost every delegation.

As it stood this afternoon, there ~~will be~~ are about a hundred and seventy five votes for him on the first ballott, coming from at least twenty states. By ballotting time, the number will probably be higher..... The Stevenson for President Committee in the Hilton, (a group of volunteers whom Stevenson refuses to recognize) ~~or having anything to do with~~ -- their headquarters have been swamped with delegates since Saturday.

A significant point -- not one of them has asked what Stevenson stands for. None have picked up the literature about his views on public issues,

They want a man, a leader, a winner; they think he is it; they want one who can unify this party; they think he can do that.

The steam is already escaping from the Barkley boiler. Some of his supporters now say the Barkley move was started only as a holding operation for Stevenson. I doubt if that is true, but it is significant of the Stevenson power here that they would say that, now.

President Truman has been cool toward Stevenson; doesn't regard him as a passionate enough fair dealer; but there is nothing truman can do now to stop him -- Only Stevenson himself could do that, and it would take an extaordinary act of public political suicide to do it.

How explain Stevenson's state of mind? Well - he has always been willing to accept a genuine party draft; knew he could not refuse that; knew that it would allow him to campaign uncommitted to anyone, with no major enemies in the party, with no promises anywhere, not even to Mr. Truman. Knew it would honorably relieve him of his Illinois committments. That's the way he's wanted it, if it had to come. It has been a logical, honest position, much as it has many Democrats.

But it is happening in a different way. He will be put in nomination. Even if he shouldn't be, many delegates will vote for him on the first ballott, which under these rules, they can do. Thus, he becomes a competitor with the other candidates. This he does not like, at all. The truth is, he is seeking a distinction without a difference. Even if he goes over, in this fashion, after two or three ballots, it still amounts to a spontaneous, rank and file draft of Stevenson - just as much, really, as if the convention deadlocked on the others, then turned to him because, in all reality, the convention is deadlocked - deadlocked before it was started..... He can still get his wish — no committments, no deals, no major enemies - because he has not connived, because this is a natural, rank and file surge, beyond the influence of any bosses.

These are days of decision for Adlai Stevenson, imaginative enough, to know that all the rest of his personal life, the life of his three sons, may be radically altered by what happens here, and now. He is a student of Lincoln, who was a friend of his Illinois' ancestors; Lincoln is his precept and example..... One distinguished American writer, who wants Stevenson for president, closes all his letters to the Governor with the words; "Remember Abe." Meaning -- you face nothing more burdensome than what lincoln faced; meaning - if you would try to live up to your hero, put your doubts aside, as Lincoln had to do..... Adlai Stevenson tonight is sitting in the Chicago house of a young assistant, trying to escape the pressure, trying to think clearly. And, one would guess, probably reading Abraham Lincoln for light and counsel.

750

What Will Rogers had to say about the opening day of the 1928 Democratic Convention still seems appropriate tonite: "Everything is as quiet, restful and beautiful, you wouldn't think there was a Democrat in a thousand miles. But if the boys are not shouting and singing here, it's because they not only have a convention on their hands, but a problem." -- There are 19 hopefuls in the field.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - JULY 21, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Adlai Stevenson, the governor of Illinois, received an enthusiastic reception when he greeted delegates to the opening session of the Democratic Convention here in Chicago. Governor Stevenson, in the winds of rumor and fact that blow through these hotel halls, and the convention amphitheater, now appears to be a "leader" for the party's nomination. I'd like to review his speech, and his chances, in a few minutes.

The opening session of the convention went smoothly because the expected fight on rules was postponed, and becuase the Platform Committee is just beginning its secret sessions to try to work out words that will offend neither North or South.

Illinois' Democratic Senator, Paul Douglas, spoke to the delegates today, reviewed the Korean war, reminded them that the Chief of Staff who recommended, in 1947, that Korea had little strategic value was one General Eisenhower

Yesterday the delegates and the reporters were telling each other that Vice President Barkley would get the nod from the White House, was the favored candidate. Today leaders of the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. informed Mr. Barkley, reluctantly, that they could not support him, because of his age. And trouble was reported in another headquarters, that of Averell Harriman as some of New York state's 94 delegates made it clear they had other preferences - notably Barkley and Governor Stevenson. The state chairman and the Harriman campaign manager, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Junior, appealed to the New York delegates to stick with Harriman "at least on the first ballot."

Mr. Roosevelt and representatives of the five other leading contenders, are now meeting in an effort to work out an agreement on the convention rules. The Harriman and Kefauver groups, with other liberal support, want two things: they propose that the contested delegates from Texas and Mississippi should not be permitted to vote on the convention floor until both cases have been decidedly finally - and two, they want both delegations to take what's called a "loyalty oath", to promise to support the Party and tis nominee in November. Many Southern delegates object to this, and promise a bitter floor fight. This issue was scheduled for presentation to the convention today, but was put off until otmorrow.

Another floor fight may be expected over the Party Platform. Walter Reuther, head of the C.I.O. auto workers, told the preliminary drafting committee today, that the platform must stand for "people against privilege"; it cannot compromise basic issues. Reuther said unless the convention adopts a strong no-compromise "human rights" platform, with an anti-filibuster plank, labor leaders will not be able to deliver a Democratic vote in November.

The White House is particularly uncommunicative about what has been happening, or rumored to be about to happen here in Chicago. Secretary Short told reporters many of these Chicago rumors will remain exclusive permanently - will never be confirmed. He said the President has watched the big show on TV, returned to his desk for the first time since he was hospitalized, is feeling fine and looking chipper, but not one word that would help any delegate here reach any conclusions on anything.

The Wage Policy Committee of the striking C.I.O. steelworkers, decided today to continue with their strike, now in its 50th day, until the industry agrees to give the steelworkers a union shop. President Phil Murray charged that the industry repudiated a settlement he tentatively worked out with one company last June. The union leaders invited industry leaders to meet with them; four industry executives walked into the union meeting in shirt sleeves, presented their views, and then were told - the strike goes on.

An earthquake struck much of California today; was felt by residents from the Mexican border to San Francisco. Hardest hit was the little twon of Tehachapi where 11 were killed, including hine children. The walls of each of the town's 15 major buildings crumbled. And over a wide area, water mains were broken, power circuits thrown out of order, and highway and railroad lines blocked.

The Air Force in Washington says it has received reports that from seven to ten unidentified aerial objects were sighted around midnight Saturday near the Washington airport. This is being investigated.

In Korea, allied and enemy troops fought for a sixth day on Old Baldy hill on the western front. And the 15th secret negotiating session at Panmunjom produced no positive results.

In Iran, the new Premier Ahmed Quavam has resigned after four days in office, presumably because of the bloody battles that have been going on for two days between government troops and Nationalists with communist support. The demonstrations were touched off by Qavam's announcement that he would try to settle the dispute with Britain over the Anglo-Iranian oil company.

In the Olympic's, American shot putters won the first three places: Parry O'Brien of Southern California, followed by Darrow Hooper and Jim Fuchs. Charley Moore of New York won the 400 meter low hurdles, Lindy Remigino of Manhattan College won the 100 meter dash and Jerome Biffle of the Army won the broad jump.

The Democrats opened their Convention by attacking Republicans rather than each other. It may be Democrat against Democrat later, on the subject of civil rights, but today they belabored the Republicans. Governor Adlai Stevenson welcomed the delegates, and received a prolonged ovation. He reviewed the record of the last twenty years; said the Republicans called it all a miserable failure: progress in peace, victory in war, and bold leadership in this anxious hour they regarded as the misbegotten spawn of bungling, corruption, socialism, mismanagement, waste and worse. Said Stevenson: "They captured tied and dragged that idea in here and furiously beat it to death; first they slaughtered each other, and then they went after us. The Governor of Illinois warned the Democrats not to look back, not to confuse words with action, asked for orderly proceedings, open and fair decisions. And he said: "Where we have erred, let there be no denial; where we have wronged the public trust, let there be no excuses. Self Criticism is the secret weapon of democracy, and candour and confession are good for the political soul." Stevenson's speech was brief, and when he was finished, many of his supporters were heard to sigh in relief; they had feared that he would utter the words that would remove him irrevocably from consideration for the nomination. He didn't speak them, and tonight, there is a strong Stevenson tide running in this steaming city of Chicago.

Stevenson has been playing the role of the reluctant candidate for months; asked his own delegation not to nominate him, asked delegates not to vote for him, said laughingly he'd shoot himself if nominated. But he has refused to say he wouldn't accept or wouldn't serve - and yet, his strength increases. My colleague, Eric Sevareid, knows more of Stevenson and the Stevenson story than anyone I know, and I've asked him to talk about it.

SEVAREID: Adlai Stevenson will be the democratic nominee - unless one thing happens; unless he gets up on that convention platform and declares he will refuse the nomination. Few people here see how he can possibly do that now; it would probably ruin him politically. He knows that, and in a moment of deep emotion, said he might have to take that chance. But the odds would seem against that, so it's nine to one, he's it.

The applause for him today was spontaneous, One former Chicago alderman had wanted to organize a demonstration; all such efforts were squelched in advance. The applause came from the delegates, as well as from the galleries. It proved what we all knew - that the latent Stevenson support is very strong, in almost every delegation.

As it stood this afternoon, there are about a hundred and seventy five votes for him on the first ballot, coming from at least twenty states. By balloting time, the number will probably be higher. The Stevenson for President Committee in the Hilton, (a group of volunteers whom Stevenson refuses to recognize) their headquarters have been swamped with delegates since Saturday.

A significant point - not one of them has asked what Stevenson stands for; none have picked up the literature about his views on public issues. They want a man, a leader, a winner; they think he is it. They want one who can unify this party; they think he can do that.

The steam is already escaping from the Barkley boiler. Some of his supporters now say the Barkley move was started only as a holding operation for Stevenson. I dobut if that is true, but it is significant of the Stevenson surge here that they would say that, now.

President Truman has been cool toward Stevenson, doesn't regard him as a passionate enough Fair Dealer; but there is nothing Truman can do now to stop him. Only Stevenson himself could do that, and it would take an extraordinary act of public political suicide to do it.

How explain Stevenson's state of mind? Well - he has always been willing to accept a genuine party draft, knew he could not refuse that; knew that it would allow him to campaign uncommitted to anyone, with no major enemies in the party, with no promises anywhere, not even to Mr. Truman; knew it would honorably relieve him of his Illinois' commitments. That's the way he's wanted it, if it had to come. It has been a logical, honest position, much as it has annoyed many Democrats.

But it is happening in a different way; he will be put in nomination. Even if he shouldn't be, many delegates will vote for him on the first ballot, which under these rules, they can do. Thus, he becomes a competitor with the other candidates. This he does not like, at all. The truth is, he is seeking a distinction without a difference. Even if he goes over, in this fashion, after two or three ballots, it still amounts to a spontaneous, rank and file draft of Stevenson - just as much, really, as if the convention deadlocked on the others, they turned to him because, in all reality, the convention is deadlocked - deadlocked before it was started. He can still get his wish - no commitments, no deals, no major enemies - because he has not connived, because this is a natural, rank and file surge beyond the influence of any bosses.

These are days of decision for Adlai Stevenson, who is imaginative enough to know that all the rest of his personal life, the life of his three sons, may be radically altered by what happens here, an now. He is a student of Lincoln, who was a friend of his Illinois' ancestors; Lincoln is his precept and example. One distinguished American writer, who wants Stevenson for president, closes all his letters to the Governor with the words: "Remember Abe!" Meaning - you face nothing more burdensome than what Lincoln faced; meaning - if you would try to live up to your hero, put your doubts aside, as Lincoln had to do. Adlai Stevenson tonight is sitting in the Chicago house of a young assistant, trying to escape the pressure, trying to think clearly. And, one would guess, probably reading Abraham Lincoln for light and counsel.

MURROW: You have just been listening to Eric Sevareid. This is Edward R. Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What Will Rogers had to say about the opening day of the 1928 Democrati Convention still seems appropriate tonight: "Everything is as quiet, restful and beautiful, you wouldn't think there was a Democrat in a thousand miles. But if the boys are not shouting and singing here, it's because they not only have a convention on their hands, but a problem." There are 19 hopefuls in the field.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tues. July 22 -1952-

This is the news:

Missouri's Senator Thomas Hennings said today the President has told him that events here in Chicago have outdated some ideas Mr. Truman held a few days ago. The Senator reported to a Missouri caucus, on a telephone conversation he had with the President. Hennings said the President told him: "In view of events, the letter which I gave Thomas Gavin no longer has any force or binding effect." (Mr. Gavin is the President's alternate delegate to this convention.) Senator Hennings went on to quote the President as saying: "Conditions have shaped up in such a fashion to make the letter meaningless at this time." Mr. Truman refused to ~~go any further~~ say any more on the subject. It could be that the President originally instructed Mr. Gavin to vote for Vice President Barkley, for the Democratic nomination. Mr. Barkley has withdrawn from the race. The United Press reported earlier that it has learned that the President now believes that Governor Stevenson of Illinois is a sure bet for the nomination.

2.)

[redacted]

Indiana's Governor Scrhicker said today:"Let's be practical. [redacted] Stevenson [redacted] is the only choice for president." And the Democratic convention, here in Chicago, has been seconding that all day. Schricker saw Stevenson, and then told reporters, that the governor of Illinois told him: if nominated he will run. Stevenson did not deny this. A group of Democrats running for the Senate in their home states, endorsed the governor, asked others to join them, showed their resolution to Stevenson. He said: "I am flattered but unhappy." AND, [redacted]

Quoting Mathew, he told reporters:"O, [redacted] my father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." The governor has been staying away from this convention hall today.. spending his time at his state office in Chicago. He told reporters: he doesn't concede for a moment that he'll get the nomination..hasn't considered a vice presidential candidate, in the event he's nominated... because "I'm worried about my own problem." Massachusetts' favorite son,

[redacted]

Governor Dever, says there is "considerable" Stevenson's entiment in his delegation. Illinois' state chairman..Jacob Arvey..has asked Illinois delegates not to promote Stevenson against hiw will..Stevenson might take himself out of the picture completely.

But at the moment Stevenson is the picture... and the convention is waiting to settle its fight over a loyalty oath. Last night the convention agreed that delegates must do what they can to help get the party's national ticket on state ballots. Four southern states now say they cannot give such a pledge. All are angry..but agree they won't walk out..will wait to be thrown out. National Chairman Mc Kinney says this will not happen. ..he's not going to throw out, or lock out..anbody. As far as he is concerned the whole loyalty question effects only two contested delegations..from Texas and Missippi..(those contests are being heard through the day and tonight.) Senator Ellendar of Louisiana says he has been told by the convention parliamentarian, that only the contested delegations must be concerned with the loyalty pledge... not those delegations which have been seated, without contest, under the old rules. Senator Moody of Michigan..sponsor of the resolution.. plans to get together with southern friends to try to "quiet this thing down." He says "the only persons this resolution will frustrate are those who would sit in this convention, and then go out and knife its nominees." This north-south battle is one of two facing the convention; tomorrow the platform committee is expected to report on its civil rights plank.

The attitude of some southern states has led to one report that Senator Russell of Georgia may not permit his name to be placed in nomination for the Presidency. Representative Cox of Georgis told this to reporters. But Russell himself says he's in the race to stay.. He says he is determined [redacted] "to prevent the party from being taken over by a few radical leaders of ADA..Americans for Democratic Action...in association with a few labor bosses." Leaders of A.D.A. says this is the last gasp of a defeated candidate.."Russell knows he is not acceptable to A.D.A. as a candidate for either the presidency or vice presidency."

Senator Kefauver calls Stevenson "the Arvey-draft" candidate. [redacted]

Averell Harriman says he [redacted] is in the race to stay..Senator Kerr says he is strengthened by the withdrawal of Vice President Barkley. The Veep will not permit his aides to offer details on the reason for his withdrawal. But labor leaders, in this case the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, smarting under the Barkley attack on some labor people, say the Vice President's has permitted his disappointment to cloud his judgment. And they claim that Mr. Barkley's great name and reputation were being used "by those who always have opposed the policies he has advocated."

So much for the Democrats. In Colorado today, General Eisenhower's party headquarters announced that Governor Sherman Adams of New Hampshire will be a sort of political chief of staff for the Republican candidate..and also act as liason with the Republican National Committee.

At the White House..where neither the President nor his aides had a word to say on politics.. it was made known that no immediate action is planned on the steel strike. The army says its largest plant for making artillery shells..the Chevrolet plant in St. Louis..has been closed because of a steel shortage.

In Korea our troops are still engaged in a bitter battle with the enemy on the western front. Today our planes bombed and strafed enemy positions. Both sides are now dug in on the hill.. staying in their fox holes..trying to dodge enemy shells. There was no progress at the truce talks.

In Iran today, former premier Mossadegh returned to his old job... he resigned less than a week ago. And informed sources say the Shah has given him control of the army. Mossadegh won another argument when the World Court, by a 9 to five vote, decided it was not competent to judge Britain's complaints against Iran's nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

[redacted]

And in New York, Federal Judge Goddar denied a motion for a new trial filed by attorneys for Alger Hiss. [redacted]

It looks like another long session here in Chicago tonight. There will be speeches by Mrs. Roosevelt, Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn, and Mrs. India Edwards; there will also be consideration of the permanent rules for this convention, and probably the report of the Credentials Committee, on the disputed delegations from Texas and Mississippi. It is the present plan of the northern Democrats to make last night's temporary rules permanent; a rule requiring that all delegates commit themselves to do whatever they honorably can; see to it that the nominees of this convention are placed on the ballot in their home states. ~~Any delegate who refuses to make this undertaking will not be seated.~~ DR So it was stated last night ~~Most of the southern spokemen during the day have continued to assert that they are bound by state legislation, or by resolutions of their state committees, in such fashion they cannot make this undertaking. No southern delegation has said it would walk out, but several have implied that they will wait to be thrown out. The chances are that will not happen and that the southern delegations will remain.~~ This whole question revolves around the issue of what is the will of the Democratic party. Is it expressed and controlled by state legislation and state conventions, or merely by and through the rules adopted by the national convention.

Whatever happens here tonight, and in tomorrow's fight over the Civil Rights plank of the platform, one man stands to lose nothing no matter how accrimonious the debate may be. That man is Governor Adali Stevenson, who remains above the battle; is not required to make decisions or attempt to influence delegations. The more bitter the battle becomes, the more indispensible is Stevenson as the ultimate peacemaker. The governor of Illinois has now reached the point of no return; he cannot now disavow his supporters without having his whole public career blow up in one great burst of cynical laughter. Governor Stevenson has not been seeing reporters today, but we are told that he has not received any formal or informal word from the White House. The absence of such a message should not displease him because one of his primary concerns has been to disassociate himself from any deals, agreements, or inheritance from the Truman administration.

Governor Stevenson had planned to come out to the Amphitheatre tonight to listen to Mrs. Roosevelt's speech, but the latest word is that he is not coming for fear of touching off a premature demonstration. Some of the governor's more enthusiastic backers are now predicting his nomination on the first ballot, but this would require major desertions from favorite sons, the collapse of Senator Russell, or the abdication of Mr. Harriman.

We are told that Stevenson has now made peace with his own conscience; believes that what's happening is an honest and legitimate draft; is prepared to go through with it, but has given no thought to his acceptance speech or his running mate. It remains at least remarkable that most of the delegates now beating the drums for Stevenson, have not bothered to inform themselves of his stand on controversial issues. (In this sense his nomination, if it comes, and only a major miracle can prevent it, will be similar to that of General Eisenhower.) Most delegates to conventions have a personal and political interest, not in states' rights, or in platforms, or in rules, but in a winner. And the collective judgment of these delegates appears to be that they've got a better chance to win with Stevenson than with anyone else. A few days ago many people here in Chicago, including this reporter, were stressing the importance of "the word" that was expected to come from Mr. Truman in Washington. That is no longer the case. The Stevenson backers don't want it; the President's support for another candidate would not be decisive; and Mr. Truman, like most politicians, has no fondness for backing a loser. Whatever control Mr. Truman might have exercised over this convention a few days ago, has now gone. It is not easy to tell how a group of delegates make up their minds in an un-bossed convention anymore than it is easy to tell why a mob chooses to go down one street rather than another. But this convention has decided to take the Stevenson road, perhaps not because of anything he, or his amateur or professional supporters have done; rather because they sense that their best chance of victory in November lies in that direction.

Sam Rayburn

For the first time in twenty years, Democrats are undergoing the experience of a completely "un-bossed" convention. How 12-hundred odd delegates manage to reach agreement on a candidate, is a major miracle. But Thoreau perhaps had the answer when he said:"We shall see but a little way, if we are required to understand what we see. How few things can a man measure with the tape of his understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - JULY 22, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Missouri's Senator Thomas Hennings said today the President has told him that events here in Chicago have outdated some ideas Mr. Truman held a few days ago. The Senator reported to a Missouri caucus on a telephone conversation he had with the President. Hennings said the President told him: "In view of events, the letter which I gave Thomas Gavin no longer has any force or binding effect." Mr. Gavin is the President's alternate delegate to this convention. Senator Hennings went on to quote the President as saying: "Conditions have shaped up in such a fashion to make the letter meaningless at this time." Mr. Truman refused to say any more on the subject. It could be that the President originally instructed Mr. Gavin to vote for Vice President Barkley for the Democratic nomination. Mr. Barkley has withdrawn from the race. The United Press reported earlier, that it has learned that the President now believes that Governor Stevenson of Illinois is a sure bet for the nomination.

Indiana's Governor Schricker said today: "Let's be practical. Stevenson is the only choice for president." And the Democratic convention, here in Chicago, has been seconding that all day. Schricker saw Stevenson, and then told reporters, that the Governor of Illinois told him: if nominated he will run. Stevenson did not deny this. A group of Democrats runing for the Senate in their home states, endorsed the Governor, asked others to join them, showed their resolution to Stevenson. He said: "I am flattered but unhappy." And quoting Matthew, he told reporters: "Oh, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." The Governor has been staying away from this convention hall today, spending his time at his state office in Chicago. He told reporters he doesn't concede for a moment that he'll get the nomination, hasn't considered a vice presidential candidate, in the vent he's nominated, because "I'm worried about my own problem."

Massachusetts' favorite son, Governor Dever, says there is "considerable" Stevenson sentiment in his delegation. Illinois' state chairman, Jacob Arvey, has asked Illinois delegates not to promote Stevenson against his will; Stevenson might take himself out of the picture completely.

But at the moment, Stevenson is the picture, and the convention is waiting to settle its fight over a loyalty oath. Last night the convention agreed that delegates must do what they can to help get the party's national ticket on state ballots. Four Southern states now say they cannot give such a pledge. All are angry, but agree they won't walk out - will wait to be thrown out. National Chairman McKinney says this will not happen; he's not going to throw out, or lock out anybody. As far as he is concerned, the whole loyalty question effects only two contested delegations from Texas and Missippi; (those contests are being heard through the day and tonight). Senator Ellendar of Louisiana says he has been told by the convention parliamentarian, that only the contested delegations must be concerned with the loyalty pledge, not those delegations which have been seated, without contest, under the old rules. Senator Moody of Michigan, sponsor of the resolution, plans to get together with Southern friends to try to "quiet this thing down." He says: "The only persons this resolution will frustrate are those who would sit in this convention, and then go out and knife its nominees." This north-south battle is one of two facing the convention; tomorrow the Platform Committee is expected to report on its civil rights plank.

The attitude of some Southern states has led to one report that Senator Russell of Georgia may not permit his name to be placed in nomination for the presidency. Representative Cox of Georgia told this to reporters. But Russell himself says he's in the race to stay. He says he is determined "to prevent the Party from being taken over by a few radical leaders of ADA, Americans for Democratic Action, in association with a few labor bosses." Leaders of ADA say this is the last gasp of a defeated candidate: "Russell knows he is not acceptable to ADA as a candidate for either the presidency or vice presidency."

Senator Kefauver calls Stevenson "the Arvey-draft" candidate.

Averell Harriman says he is in the race to stay. Senator Kerr says he is strengthened by the withdrawal of Vice President Barkley. The Veep will not permit his aides to offer details on the reason for his withdrawal. But labor leaders, in this case the CIO Political Action Committee, smarting under the Barkley attack on some labor people, say the Vice President has permitted his disappointment to cloud his judgment. And they claim that Mr. Barkley's great name and reputation were being used "by those who always have opposed the policies he has advocated."

So much for the Democrats. In Colorado today, General Eisenhower's party headquarters announced that Governor Sherman Adams of New Hampshire will be a sort of poltical chief of staff for the Republican candidate, and also act as liason with the Republican National Committee.

At the White House, where neither the President nor his aides had a word to say on politics, it was made known that no immediate action is planned on the steel strike. The Army says its largest plant for making artillery shells, the Chevrolet plant in St. Louis, has been closed because of a steel shortage.

In Korea our troops are still engaged in a bitter battle with the enemy on the western front. Today our planes bombed and strafed enemy positions. Both sides are now dug in on the hill, staying in their fox holes, trying to dodge enemy shells. There was no progress at the truce talks.

In Iran today, former premier Mossadegh returned to his old job; he resigned less than a week ago. And informed sources say the Shah has given him control of the army. Mossadegh won another argument when the World Court, by a 9 to five vote, decided it was not competent to judge Britain's complaints against Iran's nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

And in New York, Federal Judge Goddar denied a motion for a new trial filed by attorneys for Alger Hiss.

It looks like another long session here in Chicago tonight. There will be speeches by Mrs. Roosevelt, Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn, and Mrs.

India Edwards; there will also be consideration of the permanent rules for this convention and probably the report of the Credentials Committee on the disputed delegations from Texas and Mississippi. It is the present plan of the northern Democrats to make last night's temporary rule permanent - a rule requiring that all delegates commit themselves to do whatever they honorably can to see that the nominees of this convention are placed on the ballot in their home states. This whole question revolves around the issue of what is the will of the Democratic Party. Is it expressed and controlled by state legislation and state conventions, or merely by and through the rules adopted by the National Convention.

Whatever happens here tonight, and in tomorrow's fight over the civil rights plank of the platform, one man stands to lose nothing, no matter how accrimonious the debate may be. That man is Governor Adlai Stevenson, who remains above the battle, is not required to make decisions, or attempt to influence delegations. The more bitter the battle becomes, the more indispensible is Stevenson as the ultimate peacemaker. The Governor of Illinois has now reached the point of no return; he cannot now disavow his supporters without having his whole public career blow up in one great burst of cynical laughter. Governor Stevenson has not been seeing reporters today, but we are told that he has not received any formal or informal word from the White House. The absence of such a message should not displease him, because one of his primary concerns has been to disassociate himself from any deals, agreements, or inheritance from the Truman Administration.

Governor Stevenson had planned to come out to the amphitheater tonight to listen to Mrs. Roosevelt's speech, but the latest word is that he is not coming for fear of touching off a premature demonstration. Some of the Governor's more enthusiastic backers are now predicting his nomination on the first ballot, but this would require major desertions from favorite sons, the collapse of Senator Russell, or the abdication of Mr. Harriman and Senator Kefauver.

We are told that Stevenson has now made peace with his own conscience; believes that what's happening is an honest and legitimate draft; is prepared to go through with it, but has given no thought to his acceptance speech or his running mate. It remains at least remarkable that most of the delegates now beating the drums for Stevenson have not bothered to inform themselves of his stand on controversial issues. (In this sense his nomination, if it comes, and only a major miracle can prevent it, will be similar to that of General Eisenhower.) Most delegates to conventions have a personal and political interest, not in state's rights, or in platforms, or in rules, but in a winner. And the collective judgment of these delegates appears to be that they've got a better chance to win with Stevenson than with anyone else. A few days ago many people here in Chicago, including this reporter, were stressing the importance of "the word" that was expected to come from Mr. Truman in Washington. That is no longer the case. The Stevenson backers don't want it; the President's support for another candidate would not be decisive; and Mr. Truman, like most politicians, has no fondness for backing a loser. Whatever control Mr. Truman might have exercised over this convention a few days ago has now gone. It is not easy to tell how a group of delegates make up their minds in an un-bossed convention anymore than it is easy to tell why a mob chooses to go down one street rather than another. But this convention has decided to take the Stevenson road, perhaps not because of anything he or his amateur or professional supporters have done; rather because they sense that their best chance of victory in November lies in that direction.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For the first time in twenty years, Democrats are undergoing the experience of a completely "un-bossed" convention. How 12-hundred odd delegates manage to reach agreement on a candidate, is a major miracle. But Thoreau perhaps had the answer when he said: "We shall see but a little way, if we are required to understand what we see. How few things can a man measure with the tape of his understanding."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed July 23
— 1952 —

This is the news:

The Democratic convention here in Chicago today seated anti-Truman delegations from Texas and Mississippi, and ~~passed on on~~ approved its ~~own~~ Permanent rules. #

These rules require a "loyalty pledge"..which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes..and among other things they: limit demonstrations to 20 minutes, and provide that only delegates and alternates can participate in such demonstrations. No hired performers -

The Platform committee is now completing its work. The civil rights plank appears to satisfy both wings of the party. Although not yet finally approved, its known to call on Congress to take action to protect the basic rights of all citizens, regardless of race, color or creed. Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, on the one hand, and Alabama's Senator Sparkman, on the other, are calling on their supporters to approve the platform.. avoid a floor fight.

Tonight Speaker Rayburn, and Vice President Barkley, address the convention. John L. Lewis has called on a Kentucky delegate to place the Vice president's name in nomination for the presidency, but this seems unlikely to occur. Governor Stevenson still is the "leading candidate" with his opponents trying to figure out ways to stop him. Senator Russell says Stevenson is the man to beat.. his boom has "dangerous potentialities for other candidates." Russell says its the work of professional politicians. Averell Harriman again denies that he will withdraw..says he's in the fight to the finish. Senator Kefauver, says Stevenson's backers are "conniving and scheming" to nominate him on what Kefauver calls "a synthetic draft." Senator Kefauver also feels that people who are " mad" at him for his work with the crime committee, are trying to prevent his nomination. And he says the people want to know where Stevenson stands on the major issues. The Governor TODAY stayed away from this convention hall.. met for a two hour breakfast with Secretary of Interior Chapman.. a Truman advisor.. and had no comment to make on politics. The President now plans to arrive here on Friday to address the convention and introduce the man the delegates select as their presidential candidate.

Today the President called Phil Murray of the steelworkers, and Benjamin Fairless of United States steel to meet with him at the White House tomorrow. And as the strike went through its 52 day Defense Secretary Lovett told reporters that the affect of the strike has been "a darn sight worse than any bombing raid anybody ever launched." He said: no enemy nation could have inflicted more damage..this is a calamity.. military production is beginning to grind to a halt.. the worst thing is we've done it to ourselves.. its just plain murder to the defense program.. the situation will get worse every day. Mr. Lovett says the government will lose 20 to 30 per cent of the weapons and ammunition it had counted on this year. And he wonders, whether the government should set up its own steel plants, to guard against any future strikes, causing similarly harmful effects.

Charles White, president of Republic Steel, says the government has been at fault..since the strike began..for not asking for more production for defense needs. Iron Age, an industry publication, estimates that the total number of unemployed--as a result of the strike--is close to two million persons.

A spokesmen for Western Pennsylvania Coal Operators says John L. Lewis has served notice of the end of his contract agreement with the soft coal operators. But neither Mr. Lewis or any industry spokesmen will confirm this.

In Egypt today, King Farouk approved an army coup, which forced the resignation of the new premier, and the commander in chief of the armed forces. The military revolt, centering in Cairo, was undertaken on the grounds that "traitors" have trifled with the national interest.

In Korea today, allied planes, in two seperate attacks, caused much damage to a big enemy ammunition depot at Onsan, 10 miles south of Wonsan on the Korean east coast. There was no progress at the Panmunjum truce talks. And the Pentagon reports that our Korean casualty list now numbers 113,363, The Pentagon says that in the last week of fighting 83 men were killed and 440 wounded.

The Democratic convention didn't get very much done today. (Nor last night either for that matter.) Today they voted to seat the anti-Truman delegations from Texas and Mississippi, and adopted the permanent rules for the convention. The big fight over the rules started on Monday night; it has been going on ever since, in the midst of confusion, contradiction, and parlimentary procedure that would not do credit to a highschool debating team. What happened was this: On Monday night Senator Moody of Michigan introduced a resolution demanding that all delegates agree to do what they honorably could, to see to it that the nominees of this convention are placed on the ballot in their states in November. The language of the resolution was obscure; its supporters couldn't agree what it meant; the leaders of some state delegations hadn't read it, before they were asked to vote on it; but the resolution was jammed through by a voice vote. Yesterday, the explanations and compromising began. It was finally agreed that any delegation that couldn't sign this "pledge," "agreement," "contract," - even the supporters of the resolution couldn't decide what to call it; that such a delegation could still sign, with the proviso that it wouldn't have to do anything contrary to its own state's laws, or the instructions of it's own state convention. That offered an out for most of the southern states, but Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana, refused to sign anything. Said Senator Byrd of Virginia: "We'll just keep quiet and wait for them to throw us out. Temporary Chairman Dever was asked whether these three states would be allowed to vote, and he said each decision would be taken by the chairman. The chairman is now the Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn from Texas. A meeting is now going on trying to reach a compromise with these three southern delegations. The chairman of the national committee, Mr. McKinney, says that unless they sign the pledge they will not be elegible to vote. But it's Rayburn who will make the decision. So far, these three southern states are standing firm with a chip on both shoulders; they don't plan to walk out, and they don't think they'll be thrown out. McKinney contends that individual members of the delegations who will sign the pledge should be entitled to vote. McKinney also said that the President has been watching the proceedings of the convention on television; quoted Mr. Truman as saying he was very pleased with the way things were going. The wrangle over whether some delegations, Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana who had refused to sign a loyalty pledge should be allowed to vote have added "spice and life to the convention."

This argument, confused, repititious, and bungled, as it has been, is not just an effort to tie legally or morally southern delegations to the Democratic nominees selected by this convention. This convention cannot, has not the power to force any delegate to violate his state laws or the instructions of his state committee. That's why the compromise permitted a delegation to sign the pledge with reservations. This move is not aimed so much at this year and this year's election as at nineteen fifty-six. What is being said, in effect, to these delegations is this: Those of you that have laws or state rules that permit you to bolt the party or keep its candidate off the ballot had better do something about it before the next convention or you'll be in real trouble. This is an effort by the national convention to reduce both the power and the unpredictability of the southern wing of the party. To make the southerners toe the line as marked down by the majority at a national convention. This is merely another stage in the continuing struggle between the two wings of the party. Back in nineteen thirty-two, the northern Democrats including Franklin Roosevelt, tried to eliminate the rule that required a two-thirds vote to nominate a candidate. This rule had given the south enormous power in national conventions. In nineteen thirty-two the northerners could not eliminate that two-thirds rule. But four years later, in nineteen thirty-six, they had the votes; the two-thirds rule was thrown out and the veto power of the south over the party's nominees went with it. [redacted] What is being said to the southern delegations now is if your laws prevent you from making this pledge now, then you can stay here and vote, but you have got to promise to do everything you can to change this situation before the next convention. So far, Virginia, South Carolina, and Louisiana have said we won't sign anything; we won't walk out; and we sort of dare you to throw us out. Nobody wants to throw them out. And there the matter stands as of now. Efforts are still being made to reach a compromise with the three hold-out Southern states. If these efforts had been made earlier and quietly, this situation might not have arisen. The northern liberals tried to do something with force and spped before they had even reduced their proposal to intelegible language. It required hours of public wrangling before either side fully understood what was involved, and there are some who still don't understand it. This spectacle may have added "spice and life" to the proceedings, but it's no way to run a convention. The ~~convention~~ score so far on both conventions would seem to indicate that the Republicans and the Democrats are doing their best to help each other.

It would seem the Democrats have concluded an uneasy truce with most the southern faction. How long it will last remains to be seen. For as La Rochefoucauld once said:"It is ordinary to see a man change his tastes. It is extraordinary to see him change his inclinations." As for the Platform, like the Republicans one Will Rogers observed in 1928: "When it's ready, there won't be a wire-walker in America that can stand on it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - JULY 23, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Democratic Convention here in Chicago today seated anti-Truman delegations from Texas and Mississippi, and approved its permanent rules. These rules require a "loyalty pledge" which I'd like to discuss in a few minutes. Among other things they limit demonstrations to 20 minutes and provide that only delegates and alternates can participate in such demonstrations, (no hired performers).

The Platform Committee is now completing its work. The civil rights plank appears to satisfy both wings of the Party. Although not yet finally approved it's known to call on Congress to take action to protect the basic rights of all citizens, regardless of race, color or creed. Senator Humphrey of Minnesota, on the one hand, and Alabama's Senator Sparkman on the other, are calling on their supporters to approve the platform - avoid a floor fight.

Tonight Speaker Rayburn and Vice President Barkley, address the convention. John L. Lewis has called on a Kentucky delegate to place the Vice President's name in nomination for the presidency, but this seems unlikely to occur. Governor Stevenson still is the "leading candidate" with his opponents trying to figure out ways to stop him. Senator Russell says Stevenson is the man to beat; his boom has "dangerous potentialities for other candidates." Russell says its the work of professional politicians. Averell Harriman again denies that he will withdraw; says he's in the fight to the finish. Senator Kefauver, says Stevenson's backers are "conniving and scheming" to nominate him on what Kefauver calls "a synthetic draft." Senator Kefauver also feels that people who are "mad" at him for his work with the crime committee are trying to prevent his nomination. And he says the people want to know where Stevenson stands on the major issues. The Governor today stayed away from this convention hall, met for a two hour breakfast with Secretary of Interior Chapman, a Truman advisor, and had no comment to make on politics. The President now plans to arrive here on Friday to address the convention and introduce the man the delegates select as their presidential candidate.

Today the President called Phil Murray of the steelworkers and Benjamin Fairless of United States Steel to meet with him at the White House tomorrow. And as the strike went through its 52 day, Defense Secretary Lovett told reporters that the affect of the strike has been "a darn sight worse than any bombing raid anybody ever launched." He said no enemy nation could have inflicted more damage... this is a calamity....military production is beginning to grind to a halt....the worst thing is we've done it to ourselves....its just plain murder to the defense program...the situation will get worse every day. Mr. Lovett says the Government will lose 20 to 30 per cent of the weapons and ammunition it had counted on this year. And he wonders whether the Government should set up its own steel plants, to guard against any future strikes causing similarly harmful effects.

Charles White, president of Republic Steel, says the Government has been at fault, since the strike began, for not asking for more production for defense needs. Iron Age, an industry publication, estimates that the total number of unemployed, as a result of the strike, is close to two million persons.

A spokesman for Western Pennsylvania Coal Operators says John L. Lewis has served notice of the end of his contract agreement with the soft coal operators. But neither Mr. Lewis or any industry spokesmen will confirm this.

In Egypt today, King Farouk approved an army coup, which forced the resignation of the new premier and the commander in chief of the armed forces. The military revolt, centering in Cairo, was undertaken on the grounds that "traitors" have trifled with the national interest.

In Korea today, allied planes, in two separate attacks, caused much damage to a big enemy ammunition depot at Onsan, 10 miles south of Wonsan on the Korean east coast. There was no progress at the Panmunjom truce talks. And the Pentagon reports that our Korean casualty list now numbers 113,363. The Pentagon says that in the last week of fighting 83 men were killed and 440 wounded.

The Democratic Convention didn't get very much done today. (Nor last night either for that matter.) Today they voted to seat the anti-Truman delegations from Texas and Mississippi, and adopted the permanent rules for the convention. The big fight over the rules started on Monday night; it has been going on ever since in the midst of confusion, contradiction, and parliementary procedure that would not do credit to a highschool debating team. What happened was this: On Monday night Senator Moody of Michigan introduced a resolution demanding that all delegates agree to do what they honorably could to see to it that the nominees of this convention are placed on the ballot in their states in November. The language of the resolution was obscure; its supporters couldn't agree what it meant; the leaders of some state delegations hadn't read it, before they were asked to vote on it; but the resolution was jammed through by a voice vote. Yesterday, the explanations and compromising began. It was finally agreed that any delegation that couldn't sign this "pledge", "agreement", "contract", - even the supporters of the resolution couldn't decide what to call it; that such a delegation could still sign with the proviso that it wouldn't have to do anything contrary to its own state's laws or the instructions of it's own state convention. That offered an out for most of the Southern states, but Virginia, South Carolina, and Louisiana, refused to sign anything. Said Senator Byrd of Virginia; "We'll just keep quiet and wait for them to throw us out." Temporary Chairman Dever was asked whether these three states would be allowed to vote, and he said each decision would be taken by the Chairman. The Chairman is now the Speaker of the House, Sam Rayburn from Texas. A meeting is now going on trying to reach a compromise with these three Southern delegations. The chairman of the National Committee, Mr. McKinney, says that unless they sign the pledge they will not be elegible to vote. But it's Rayburn who will make the decision. So far, these three Southern states are standing firm with a chip on both shoulders; they don't plan to walk out, and they don't think they'll be thrown out. McKinney contends that individual members of the delegations who will sign the pledge should be entitled to vote. McKinney also said that the President has been watching the proceedings of the convention on television; quoted Mr. Truman as saying he was very pleased with the way things were going. The wrangle over whether some delegations, Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana who had refused to sign a loyalty pledge should be allowed to vote have added "spice and life to the convention."

This argument, confused, repetitious, and bungled, as it has been, is not just an effort to tie legally or morally Southern delegations to the Democratic nominees selected by this convention. This convention cannot, has not the power to force any delegate to violate his state laws or the instructions of his state committee. That's why the compromise permitted a delegation to sign the pledge with reservations. This move is not aimed so much at this year, and this year's election as an nineteen fifty-six. What is being said, in effect, to these delegations is this: Those of you that have laws or state rules that permit you to bolt the Party, or keep its candidate off the ballot, had better do something about it before the next convention, or you'll be in real trouble. This is an effort by the National Convention to reduce both the power and the unpredictability of the Southern wing of the Party. To make the Southerners toe the line as marked down by the majority at a national convention. This is merely another stage in the continuing struggle between the two wings of the party. Back in nineteen thirty-two, the northern Democrats including Franklin Roosevelt, tried to eliminate the rule that required a two-thirds vote to nominate a candidate. This rule had given the South enormous power in national convention. In nineteen thirty-two the northerners could not eliminate that two-thirds rule. But four years later, in nineteen thirty-six, they had the votes; the two-thirds rule was thrown out, andthe veto power of the South over the party's nominees went with it. What is being said to the Southern delegations now is, if your laws prevent you from making this pledge now, then you can stay here and vote, but you have got to promise to do everything you can to change this situation before the next convention. So far, Virginia, South Carolina, and Louisiana have said we won't sign anything; we won't walk out; and we sort of dare you to throw us out. Nobody wants to throw them out. And there the matter stands as of now. Efforts are still being made to reach a compromise with the three hold-out Southern states. If these efforts had been made earlier and quietly, this situation might not have arisen. The northern liberals tried to do something with force and speed - before they had even reduced their proposal to inteligible language. It required hours of public wrangling before either side fully understood what was involved, and there are some who still don't understand it. This spectacle may have added "spice and life" to the proceedings, but it's no way to run a convention. The score so far, on both conventions, would seem to indicate that the Republicans and the Democrats are doing their best to help each other.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem the Democrats have concluded an uneasy truce with most of the Southern faction. How long it will last remains to be seen. For as La Rochefoucauld once said: "It is ordinary to see a man change his tastes. It is extraordinary to see him change his inclinations." As for the Platform, like the Republican one Will Rogers observed in 1928: "When it's ready, there won't be a wire-walker in America that can stand on it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Per Gerald
$50
pd

FRI
July 25

This is the news:

The Democratic convention, here in Chicago, has now taken two roll call votes on the nomination for President. Senator Kefauver has led on both votes..but is still far from the required majority of 616 votes.

THE RESULTS OF THE SECOND BALLOT---WHICH LASTED ALMOST TWO HOURS---SHOWS [redacted] KEFAUVER HANGING STUBBORNLY TO HIS LEAD. GOVERNOR [redacted] STEVENSON MOVED UP ON THE TENNESSEE SENATOR...BUT THE EXPECTED LANDSLIDE FOR THE ILLINOIS GOVERNOR HAS, AS YET, FAILED TO MATERIALIZE.

THE OFFICIAL RESULTS OF THE SECOND BALLOT GIVE KEFAUVER 362-AND-ONE-HALF VOTES, TO 324-AND-ONE-HALF FOR STEVENSON. THAT'S A GAIN OF 22-AND-ONE-HALF VOTES FOR KEFAUVER AND A GAIN OF 51-AND-ONE-HALF FOR STEVENSON.

SENATOR [redacted] RUSSELL ALSO PICKED UP STRENGTH, RECEIVING 294 VOTES ON THE SECOND BALLOT TO 268 ON THE FIRST. AVERELL HARRIMAN LOST TWO-AND-ONE-HALF VOTES, GETTING 121 ON THE SECOND BALLOT.

THE REMAINDER OF THE VOTES WERE DISTRIBUTED THIS WAY: SENATOR ROBERT HERR FIVE-AND-ONE-HALF...GOVERNOR PAUL DEVER 30-AND-ONE-HALF...VICE-PRESIDENT ALBEN BARKLEY 78-AND-ONE-HALF...PRESIDENT TRUMAN SIX...SENATOR PAUL DOUGLAS THREE...FEDERAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATOR OSCAR EWING THREE...[redacted]

THE CONVENTION THEN TOOK A RECESS UNTIL [redacted] 8:30 CHICAGO TIME.

APPEARS TO LIE

THE BALANCE OF POWER NOW [redacted] WITH THE FORCES OF SENATOR RUSSELL AND POSSIBLY ALBEN BARKLEY, WHO GOT 78-AND-ONE-HALF VOTES ON THE SECOND BALLOT.

RUSSELL BACKERS ARE JUBILANT AT HIS CONSISTENT SHOWING AND ARE CONVINCED THAT IT PUTS THE GEORGIA SENATOR IN A POWERFUL BARGAINING POSITION EVEN IF HE IS UNABLE TO WIN THE NOMINATION FOR HIMSELF.

ONE TOP SOUTHERN PARTY LEADER HAD SAID EARLIER THAT RUSSELL'S FORCES WOULD CONFER WITH STEVENSON LEADERS AFTER THE SECOND BALLOT TO SEE WHAT SHOULD BE DONE TO STOP KEFAUVER.

2/

2

[redacted] LABOR LEADERS---WHO THREW THEIR SUPPORT BEHIND STEVENSON ---SAY THEY ARE CONFIDENT THAT THE ILLINOIS GOVERNOR WILL BEGIN TO SHOW REAL STRENGTH BY THE FOURTH BALLOT AT LEAST.

IF THE VOTING GOES TO THAT MANY BALLOTS, IT MEANS PRESIDENT TRUMAN IS GOING TO SPEND A LOT OF TIME COOLING HIS HEELS IN CHICAGO'S BLACKSTONE HOTEL.

THE PRESIDENT AND MRS. TRUMAN ARRIVED IN CHICAGO LATE THIS AFTERNOON FROM WASHINGTON.

MR. TRUMAN WAS SCHEDULED TO GO TO THE CONVENTION HALL TONIGHT TO INTRODUCE THE MAN THE CONVENTION HAD NOMINATED TO TAKE OVER HIS LEASE ON THE WHITE HOUSE.

BUT THERE IS SOME DOUBT NOW WHETHER HE WILL BE ABLE TO MAKE THAT INTRODUCTION TONIGHT.

[redacted]

10

3.

THE STRIKING STEEL WORKERS HAVE BEEN ORDERED BACK TO WORK.

C-I-O PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY ORDERED THE 650-THOUSAND WORKERS TO RETURN TO THEIR JOBS TODAY AFTER THE UNITED STEELWORKERS' WAGE-POLICY COMMITTEE RATIFIED THE WHITE HOUSE STEEL AGREEMENT.

THE ACTION FORMALLY ENDED THE LONGEST AND MOST COSTLY STEEL STRIKE IN THE NATION'S HISTORY. THE 54-DAY COST FOUR-AND-ONE-HALF-BILLION DOLLARS IN LOST WAGES AND PRODUCTION. IT'S IMPOSSIBLE TO MEASURE THE OVERALL LOSS TO THE NATION'S ECONOMY.

THE FIRST FULL SHIFTS PROBABLY WILL START TO WORK MONDAY. BUT IT'S ESTIMATED THAT IT WILL TAKE THE INDUSTRY TWO OR THREE WEEKS TO REACH NORMAL PRODUCTION.

-0-

[redacted]

SENATOR BRIEN MCMAHON IS REPORTED TO HAVE TAKEN A TURN FOR THE WORSE AT A WASHINGTON HOSPITAL AFTER A SPINAL OPERATION.

THE CONNECTICUT SENATOR'S FAMILY HAS BEEN CALLED TO HIS BEDSIDE.

-0-

[redacted]

AUTHORITIES AT THE NAVAL MEDICAL CENTER AT BETHESDA, MARYLAND, SAYS SENATOR JOSEPH MCCARTHY IS IN GOOD CONDITION.

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN UNDERWENT A MAJOR ABDOMINAL OPERATION YESTERDAY WHICH IS EXPECTED TO KEEP HIM ON THE POLITICAL SIDELINES FOR TWO MONTHS.

-0-

[redacted]

(5) [redacted]

THE AIR FORCE HAS DISCLOSED THAT IT IS GOING TO STOP BUILDING THE B-36 HEAVY-INTERCONTINENTAL BOMBERS...THE BOMBERS WHICH CAUSED A SERIOUS AIR FORCE-NAVY CONTROVERSY IN 1948.

ALL B-36'S NOW IN PRODUCTION WILL BE COMPLETED IN 1954 AND NO MORE OF THE HEAVY BOMBERS WILL BE ORDERED. AIR FORCE UNDERSECRETARY ROSWELL GILPATRIC TOLD CONSOLIDATED-VULTEE AIRCRAFT THAT "OTHER ESSENTIAL WORK" WILL BE SCHEDULED FOR THE FORT WORTH PLANT...NOT ONLY INCLUDING PRESENT MODELS BUT PROTOTYPES. HE APPARENTLY REFERRED TO THE B-60...THE ALL-JET VERSION OF THE B-36.

[redacted]

-0-

[redacted]

KAR170

[redacted] NXR164

[redacted]

THE UNITED STATES IS GOING TO CONTINUE TO SEND AID TO DENMARK DESPITE THE DELIVERY OF A NEW DANISH TANKER TO THE SOVIET UNION.

UNDER PRESENT LAW AID TO FOREIGN NATIONS CAN BE CUT OFF IF THEY SEND STRATEGIC MATERIALS TO THE SOVIET BLOC UNLESS THE PRESIDENT REFUSES TO IMPOSE SUCH A BAN. TODAY, MR. TRUMAN DIRECTED THAT AMERICAN AID CONTINUE, SAYING "THE AGGRESSIVE INTENTIONS OF THE SOVIET UNION OVERRODE THE LEGAL CONSIDERATIONS INVOLVED IN THE PROPOSED TRANSACTIONS."

-0-

[redacted]

-0-

[redacted]

THE SIX-NATION SCHUMAN PLAN TO POOL WEST EUROPE'S COAL AND STEEL RESOURCES HAS GONE INTO EFFECT.

THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE MEMBER NATIONS SIGNED COPIES OF THE 50-YEAR PACT TO FOREIGN MINISTER ROBERT SCHUMAN OF FRANCE.

-0-

[redacted]

EGYPT'S IRON MAN IS TIGHTENING HIS HOLD ON THE COUNTRY.

GENERAL MOHAMED NAGUIB HAS ORDERED SWEEPING ARRESTS OF HIGH OFFICIALS OF THE INTERIOR MINISTRY AND SECRET POLICE...TO SMASH WHAT HE DESCRIBES AS "A CONSPIRACY" AGAINST PUBLIC SECURITY.

-0-

[redacted]

ALLIED OFFICIALS ARE REDICTING A RENEWAL OF BLOODY COMBAT IN KOREA.

THEY BASE THEIR PREDICTIONS ON THE RESULT OF SECRET NEGOTIATIONS ON THE EXCHANGE OF WAR PRISONERS...THE ONLY ISSUE BLOCKING AN ARMISTICE.

-0-

[redacted]

83

Looks like Truman will have to wait again.....

The fatigue of delegates....

The Barkley strategy....holding action...prove no one can win....

pros.

Russels hopes....conservative swing.....young men tried it....badly

Moody - F.O.R.

handled...the old guard took over..seated southern delegates...compromised themselves...out of business.....how Stevenson got hurt...Jake arvey

6:00 yesterday confident of victory switched Ill.vote on seating Virginia.....

Where we stand now....probably at least two more ballots and there is no limit limit to the number there might be...Kefauver strength like Tafts..in little pieces....Struggle here for Vice Pres...not really battle between north n and south...but between liberal and conservative wings of party...

Conclusion.....

Stevenson has most reserve strength...but if fails to make it on next two ballots the thing may go on for a long long time.....

After two ballots, the Democratic Convention finds itself still deadlocked. And as might be expected, there are all sorts of rumors of deals and coalitions floating about the floor. Cato gave some good advice when he said:"Believe nothing rashly." For as E.J. Hardy once concluded:"It is the unexpected that constantly happens."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - JULY 25, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Democratic Convention here in Chicago has now taken two roll-call votes on the nomination for president. Senator Kefauver has led on both votes, but he's still far from the required majority of 616 votes. The leading contenders remain confident and many of the delegates confused. The results of the second ballot, which lasted almost two hours, shows Kefauver hanging stubbornly to his lead. Governor Stevenson moved up on the Senator from Tennessee, but the expected and predicted landslide for the Governor of Illinois has not as yet materialized. The official results of the second ballot give Senator Kefauver 362½ votes; 324½ for Stevenson. Senator Russell also picked up strength, receiving 294 votes on the second ballot to 268 on the first. Mr. Averell Harriman lost two and a half votes, getting 121 on the second ballot. The remainder of the votes were distributed in this fashion. Senator Robert Kerr, 5½; Governor Paul Dever, 30½; Vice President Alben Barkley, 78½; President Truman, 6; Senator Paul Douglas, 3; Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, 3. The convention is now in recess and the huge amphitheater that lies here below us is almost empty. It will reconvene at eight-thirty Chicago time. It would seem from the figures above that the balance of power now appears to lie with the forces of Senator Russell and possibly with Alben Barkley, who moved up to 78½ votes on the second ballot. Senator Russell's backers are jubilant; they're happy at his consistent showing and they're convinced that it puts the Georgia Senator in a powerful bargaining position, even if he is unable to win the nomination for himself. He holds a close-knit group of delegates and, if he does decide to trade, can probably deliver more of them than could any other candidate. One top Southern party leader said earlier, that Russell's forces would confer with Stevenson leaders after the second ballot to see what should be done to stop Kefauver. Labor leaders who threw their support behind Stevenson say they're confident that the Illinois'

Governor will begin to show real strength by the fourth ballot at the latest. If the voting goes to that many ballots. it means that President Truman is going to spend a lot of time cooling his heels outside this convention hall. Of course, that's something he's rather accustomed to since he sat in a blind alley at Philadelphia in 1948 until about four in the morning, before he could come in and make his acceptance speech. The President and Mrs. Truman arrived in Chicago late this afternoon from Washington. Mr. Truman was scheduled to go to the convention hall tongiht to introduce the man whom the convention has nominated, but they will first of all have to nominate a president and then a vice president before Mr. Truman will come to the hall. At least, that's the supposition at the moment.

The striking steel workers have been ordered back to work. CIO President Phil Murray ordered the 650,000 workers to return to their jobs today, after the United Steel Workers Wage Policy Committee ratified the White House steel agreement. This action formally ended the longest and most costly steel strike in the nation's history. The first full shifts in the steel mills will probably start to work on Monday, but it's estimated that it will take the industry as much as two or three weeks to reach normal standard production.

Senator Brian McMahon is reported to have taken a turn for the worse in a Washington hospital after a spinal operation.

Authorities at the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Maryland, say Senator Joseph McCarthy is in good condition. The Wisconsin Republican underwent a major abdominal operation yesterday, which is expected to keep him on the political sidelines for two months.

The Air Force has disclosed that it is going to stop building the B-36 heavy bomber. All B-36's now in production will be completed in 1954 and no more of the heavy bombers will be ordered. Air Force Under-Secretary Rozel Kilpatrick told Consolidated Multi-Aircraft that other essential work will be scheduled for their Fort Worth plant.

The six nation Schumann Plan Pool - the plan to pool West Europe's coal and steel resources - has gone into effect.

Allied officials are predicting a renewal of bloody combat in Korea. They base their predictions on the results of secret negotiations on the exchange of war prisoners. That's the only issue blocking an armistice.

Well, as we sit here high above this convention hall waiting for the convention to reconvene at eight-thirty Chicago time, I've asked Eric Sevareid to sit in with me and we're going to see if we can add up these figures and make an informed guess as to what the evening may hold. Eric, how do you view the situation as it stands now?

SEVAREID: Well, this last - the second ballot, Ed, was a kind of locked situation. The situation is still locked - before this recess was taken and none of us staying in the hall can know and won't know for some time what sort of arrangements or deals may take place outside of this hall over in the Stockyards Inn or downtown. Maybe that's going to be the answer. If you try to figure out what deals - what big shifts of vote could take place, it's a little confusing. Harriman certain cannot shift to Kefauver. He has stated he would not do that. No one knows how many votes he could shift over anyway. Kefauver who's in the lead position is certainly not going to shift behind Harriman. Harriman will try to shift certainly as much as he can to Stevenson, but nobody knows how far that will go. Both he and Mr. Lehman in that New York delegation would prefer Stevenson here. There's no question about it. Barkley has what now? About 80 votes there to play with. It depends on what happens with his people. May be the President or someone else, Mr. Barkley himself could persuadehis passionate and devoted followers to pull out of this thing fairly soon. Where will they go? I think a good deal of Kentucky would go to Stevenson; where the rest go, I'm not sure.

MURROW: Well, one thing interests me about this Barkley drive, Eric, and that is that this is not being done by a group of enthusiastic amateurs who are new to this game of politics; these are the old pros who have in a sense defied Truman, and their strategy from the beginning has been if they can stop Stevenson and get this thing deadlocked, that finally in desperation, the convention reaching for a man who could unite the various factions will finally come around to the Veep, and I would guess that if Stevenson doesn't show great strength on the fourth or the latest, the fifth ballot, that the strategy could conceivably work.

SEVAREID: Yes, it could work in a remote case, Ed; maybe not so remote at that, because his vote is not so very great here. But there is still so much Russell vote here, which as you said earlier, he can probably control fairly well and direct fairly completely - and there's still this New York situation. Now, if they could get together with Adlai Stevenson, presumably on this vice presidential problem, they may have enough there to do it. I don't think that Russell would try to direct a great deal to Kefauver. He's had a bitter struggle with him in Florida and Kefauver here, in this convention, has been identified, (though he really is a Southerner), he has been identified with this northern liberal labor wing in all these previous struggles. It's a little hard for me to imagine Russell going to him, though that sort of thing could happen. The pressures are terrible and the heat is terrific. This is a pretty savage cut-throat business at this stage.

MURROW: And of course, it's true too - wouldn't you guess, Eric - that one of Kefauver's weakness could be said to be the fact that he has got his strength in little pockets. He's rather in the position that Senator Taft was, and if you got only two or three Kefauver people in a large delegation, there the heat really comes on.

SEVAREID: Yes, it's the Southern stuff that goes in big blocs when they jump with it.

MURROW: Well, would you say that this argument, particularly about the vice presidency, is somewhat similar to the one that started here last Monday, which is not really the old fashioned traditional battle between the North and the South

It is rather a battle between the more conservative and more liberal wings of this party?

SEVAREID: Yes, if anybody is going to take somebody from the South, it would certainly be a great effort to take a liberal Southerner such as Mr. Sparkman or Hill or someone of that kind. I can't decide in my own mind who's won this fight all week between North and South. They both won and they've both lost on the resolutions and on what happened last night. The Northeners did get the southern governors - the three of them - to rather ask to come back in the convention, and then they expressed gratitude and so on. However, they didn't sign that - this pledge of temperance and loyalty as the Northerns had expected - and now they can vote.

MURROW: Eric, I have the feeling that what happened over that whole struggle on the seating of the Southern delegations was this: that a group of young men led by Moody and Franklin D. Roosevelt came in here an produced a resolution - an amendment - which was done in great haste, couched in very obscure language. The parliamentary wrangle became so great, that they then finally started to compromise and compromise and at about six o'clock yesterday one had the feeling that this was a confident convention - that they thought they could win - they thought they wouldn't have great difficulty in selecting a candidate, and then up came the Virginia matter and Jake Avrey came back and switched the vote of the Illinois delegation, and then suddenly, the elderstatesmen - if one can call tham that - of the party, said to the young men: "Go away...we will take over... we're experienced in these matters." I've had the feeling that maybe the liberals, who were badly organized - no question about it - picked the wrong year and the wrong apparent candidate to do this kind of a left wing move. If they had a different - a real strong candidate - all-out left wing Trumanite what-not, maybeit would have worked.

SEVAREID: Well, I have the feeling that what happened to the liberals was what Woodrow Wilson used to remark upon, when he said that liberals could agree upon an objective but they could very seldom agree upon the route they were to follow in order to reach that objective, and as they followed different paths through the forest of obstruction, that the conservatives would fall upon them and destroy them one by one, and I had the feeling that something of that sort happened here.

MURROW: Well, in the course of the evening, no one can be sure of what's going to happen. It does seem at the moment that Governor Stevenson has more reserve strength in evidence that can be brought to play. But I would guess, too, that if Governor Stevenson fails to show a substantial strength on either the fourth or fifth ballot, then we may be here for an indefinite length of time.

SEVAREID: Knowing something of the Governor's character, I think, I think it might just be possible that if this really gets strangled here for a long time, he could conceivably make a statement and take himself out, because after all, till this moment, he's still not a formal committed candidate.

MURROW: Well, of course your suggestion on that score would really make the confusion complete here in Chicago. I'm very much impressed by how tired these delegates are, but they will probably have enough enthusiasm to come back here at eight-thirty tonight Chicago time and put on somemore demonstrations.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: After two ballots, the Democratic convention here in Chicago finds itself still deadlocked. As might be expected, there are all sorts of rumors of deals and coalitions floating about the floor and down in the hotels in Chicago Cato gave some good advice when he said: "Believe nothing rashly." For as E. J. Hardy once concluded: "It is the unexpected that constantly happens."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday - July 28, 1952

This is the news:

The two presidential candidates returned to their desks today. Governor Stevenson went back to work at the state house in Springfield, after telling cheering audiences there, and at Bloomington, INDIANA: "I am undertaking an assignment I didn't want, with profound feeling and obligation of duty." He said: "I am not under obligation to anyone.. if I can live up to the spirit of goodwill shown today, I will have been more than rewarded, and my country will not be disappointed." The Governor promised "to do what fate assigned me to do" with "all the strength and courage I can muster."

General Eisenhower returned to his office in a Denver hotel, after ten days of vacationing. He immediately started a series of meetings with campaign leaders, visiting strategists, and members of Congress.

The President was in Kansas City today..at his hotel penthouse office..shaking hands, and talking with old Missouri friends.

From there he sent a message to the Wage Stabilization Board for "the grand job it has done under the most trying circumstances." The board will be replaced by a new board on Wednesday. Mr. Truman said in time "everyone will see" that the old Board's recommendation in the steel dispute were finally adopted by both parties. Today Economic Stabilizer Putnam promised to try to prevent what he called the "exhorbitant" steel price increase from increasing inflationary pressures. Mr. Putnam said the $5.20 a ton increase was exacted from the people to get the mills going again. He hopes some day to find out about what he calls "the real motives behind the mysterious conduct" of the steel industry in the strike..why it was dragged out for 53 days only to be settled on substantially the same wage and price terms which the companies could have had nearly four months ago."

Defense Production Administrator Fowler says this strike was "the worst production stoppage in our history." He expects that for months there will by many thousands of workers laid off as a result of the strike...because steel stocks have been exhausted.

For awhile today it looked as if the Aluminum Company of America might face a strike by C.I.O. steelworkers tomorrow. But the Wage Stabilization Board says an agreement has been reached for the union members to continue work.

The government tonight raised the ceiling prices on hams..chops and other lean pork cuts..the price will go up from one to eight cents a pound in different sections of the country. The Office of Price Stabilization says this is necessary to comply with an amendment the Congress wrote into the new economic controls law. It provides that processors must be given higher ceilings to make up for higher prices paid to farmers. The increases are seasonal and are expected to continue through October, after which they may be reduced.

In Washington today the Air Force said its interceptor jets are ready to take-off from bases throughout the country as soon as it receives new reports of baffling "objects" in the sky. A spokesman made this announcement after the objects were sighted over Washington or near Washington on two successive Saturday nights.

Senator Brian McMahon died in a Georgetwon Hospital today --of cancer. The 48-year old Senator from Connecticut had been chairman of the congressional atomic energy committee... one of the nation's top authorities on atomic weapons. Only recently he appealed to the Senate for universal disasrmamemnt. The President today praised Senator Mc Mahon as "one of the first to see the fantastic possibilities for good in the wise use of atomic power." He called the Senator "a good friend."

In Argentina, where Eva Peron died on Saturday..presumably from cancer.. at least four persons died today, thousands were hurt, in the crush to view the body of President's Peron's first lady. Queues a mile long stretched outside the Ministry of labor where she lay in state.

In Korea today it rained..hard..all along the front. One reporter, describing the mud and misery facing the troops, said there was almost six inches of rain on the western front. There was little fighting.. as infantrymen tried to keep dry or get dry in bunkers, trenches and foxholes. The British announced that Major General Stephen Newton Shoosmith, a veteran liason officer, will be appointed deputy chief of staff to General Mark Clark. And while there was no progress at the truce talks, Admiral Fechteler..chief of naval operations, returned from an inspection tour of the Far East to predict that there will be an armistice in Korea because--he says --"the Communists want it." The Admiral says "every time the Communists stick their heads up, they get hurt".

In Egypt, the powerful Wafd party today gave its blessings to the army-supported government that forced the ABDICATION of King Farouk and promised a drive to end corruption.

Andrei Gromyko, Russia's new ambassador to London, arrived there today and was greeted by demonstrators who shouted "Go home to Russia Gromyko..we don't want you here."

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito told visiting American clergymen, educators and lawyers that his country will "stick by its promises to fulfill its obligations"..and defend its soil from any attack from the East.

At the Olympics, the American basketball team beat the Russians 86 to 58 in a semi-final game.

This reporter, like most who spent the past three weeks in Chicago, has a few notes left over. The conclusions are personal, and certainly debateable; here they are for what they're worth: Both parties managed to nominate "reluctant candidates" -- both Eisenhower and Stevenson did everything short of what would have been effective to take themselves out of the race. Both men clearly wrestled with their conscience and their sense of duty, and both decided they would be "willing" to be president. No two candidates were ever more their "own men," able to steer their own course; yet both have asserted they are in the hands of others.

Political parties change course slowly. Both parties changed course during the conventions. To employ political shorthand, the Republicans moved slightly to the left; the Democrats considerably to the right. In both conventions young men played a prominent part. The young Republicans, either as a result of their skill, or because they had a better issue, won. The young Democrats, through haste, parliamentary ineptitude, and a willingness to compromise, were beaten.

There is much less open ground between the two parties now, than there would have been had the line been drawn between Taft, and Kefauver or Harriman. Both parties decided to go for moderate men. There are lieutenants on both sides who could work for the other man without doing violence to their conscience or their records.

This ought to be what is generally called a "clean campaign" so far as the two principles are concerned, because both are men accustomed to practicing ~~strength~~ restraint and a degree of tolerance. Both men favor economy in government; there has not appeared so far any substantial difference between them on our foreign policy. Both believe in reserving maximum power to the states, and are against what is loosely referred to as "big government". So the argument will be not about the direction of change in this country, but the rate or speed of the change. The differences between the two men and between the two parties, both of them divided, will emerge in the course of the campaign. Whoever wins will be in a position to "hoe his own row", choose his own associates with remarkable freedom, because neither man is heavily mortgaged to any given segment of his party. Whoever wins, the basic pivot of our forgign policy will be in Europe rather than Asia.

It is worth noting that the delegates probably knew less about the stands on controversial issues taken by the two men they nominated, than about any of the other candidates presented to them. Both parties were looking for a winner. Worth noting, too, that Stevenson entered no state primary, and Eisenhower did so only by proxy. The two men who appeared least on television + Radio.

won the nomination. It would be a bold man who drew conclusions from this fact, but it is a fact. I would guess, or perhaps hope, that four years from now the entire nation would not be made a "captive audience" for an entire week; that those programming television + Radio would exercise sufficient editorial judgment so that the country would have [redacted] alternative [redacted] to listening to speeches without [redacted] literary distinction or substantial content. The viewer and the listener should be provided with alternative sources of information and entertainment even during a political convention. Monopoly, even if it lasts for only two weeks, is not agreeable.

The two best written speeches were, in this [redacted] reporter's opinion, those by General MacArthur and Speaker Sam Rayburn; neither was a success so far as the delegates were concerned. The two best extemporaneous expositions of a complicated issue were by Christian Herter of Massachusetts and young Mr. Eastvold of the state of Washington in connection with the disputed Republican delegations from the south. The greatest example of personal political courage was by Senator Russell Long of Louisiana when he broke with his own delegation over the matter of the so-called loyalty pledge, and publicly stated his reasons for doing so. The man who most nearly held the convention in his hand was Vice President Barkley in a great speech without notes which was probably the best he has ever delivered.

More Democrats than Republicans lost their voices; I don't suppose this proves a thing. To President Harry S. Truman goes the distinction, so far as I could observe, of being the only man to applaud mention of his own name.

[redacted] The Democratic delegates were more unruly than the Republicans; gave their chairman a tougher time, but they usually do. I was impressed with the stamina of delegates and alternates at both conventions, particularly the older ones; impressed, too, with the wealth of young talent coming up in both parties. But more than anything else; impressed with what might be called the good manners of the losers; the ability of men like Taft, Kefauver and Harriman to [redacted] smile, congratulate the winner while they must have been thinking of all the hands they'd shaken, the weary nights on trains and planes; the hopes that they had entertained, and the men who had backed them. There were moments of real dignity at these conventions, and they came more in defeat than in victory. Neither of these conventions was rigged, bossed, or bought. Different tactics might have produced victory for Taft; might have won for the thorough going element of the New and Fair Deal wings of the Democratic party. Delegates made up their minds, with a few exceptions, in a manner as mysterious, as difficult of definition, as will the voters in November. I do not myself believe this is the best way to pick a Presidential candidate, but it has worked. Both candidates have a freedom of action that is unique; both must contend with divergent elements within their own party; both will at times be embarrassed by their friends. Neither one actively sought the job; however, you can't actually be drafted for government service in this country except in the army. Maybe the first one who says he's really got an appetite for it; thinks he could do a whale of a job with it, will have an advantage, at least, initially.

Both of the Presidential candidates are moderate men. And because they are, doubtless would go along with Henry George's contention that "great changes can best be brought about under old forms." Both also understand what Thomas Wilson meant when he said:"A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us a liberty of changing them without blushing."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - JULY 28, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The two presidential candidates returned to their desks today. Governor Stevenson went back to work at the State House in Springfield, after telling cheering audiences there, and at Bloomington, Indiana: "I am undertaking an assignment I didn't want, with profound feeling and obligation of duty." He said: "I am not under obligation to anyone....if I can live up to the spirit of goodwill shown today, I will have been more than rewarded, and my country will not be disappointed." The Governor promised "to do what fate assigned me to do" with "all the strength and courage I can muster."

General Eisenhower returned to his office in a Denver hotel after ten days of vacationing. He immediately started a series of meetings with campaign leaders, visiting strategists and members of Congress.

The President was in Kansas City today at his hotel penthouse office, shaking hands, and talking with old Missouri friends.

From there he sent a message to the Wage Stabilization Board for "the grand job it has done under the most trying circumstances." The Board will be replaced by a new board on Wednesday. Mr. Truman said in time "everyone will see" that the old Board's recommendation in the steel dispute, were finally adopted by both parties. Today Economic Stabilizer Putnam promised to try to prevent what he called the "exhorbitant" steel price increase from increasing inflationary pressures. Mr. Putnam said the $5.20 a ton increase was exacted from the people to get the mills going again. He hopes some day to find out about what he calls "the real motives behind the mysterious conduct" of the steel industry in the strike; why it was dragged out for 53 days only to be settled on substantially the same wage and price terms which the companies could have had nearly four months ago."

Defense Production Administrator Fowler says this strike was "the worst production stoppage in our history." He expects that for months, there will be many thousands of workers laid off as a result of the strike, because steel stocks have been exhausted.

For awhile today it looked as if the Aluminum Company of America might face a strike by CIO steelworkers tomorrow. But the Wage Stabilization Board says an agreemmnt has been reached for the union members to continue work.

The Government tonight raised the ceiling prices on hams, chops and other lean port cuts. The price will go up from one to eight cents a pound, in different sections of the country. The Office of Price Stabilization says this is necessary to comply with an amendment the Congress wrote into the new economic controls law. It provides that processors must be given higher ceilings to make up for higher prices paid to farmers. The increases are seasonal - are expected to continue through October after which they may be reduced.

In Washington today, the Air Force said its interceptor jets are ready to take-off from bases throughout the country, as soon as it receives new reports of baffling "objects" in the sky. A spokesman made this announcement after the objects were sighted over Washington or near Washington on two successive Saturday nights.

Senator Brian McMahon died in a Georgetown Hospital today of cancer. The 48-year-old Senator from Connecticut had been chairman of the Congressional Atomic Energy Committee, one of the nation's top authorities on atomic weapons. Only recently he appealed to the Senate for universal disarmament. The President today praised Senator McMahon as "one of the first to see the fantastic possibilities for good in the wise use of atomic power." He called the Senator "a good friend."

In Argentina, where Eva Peron died on Saturday, presumably from cancer, at least four persons died today, thousands were hurt, in the crush to view the body of President's Peron's first lady. Queues a mile long stretched outside the Ministry of Labor, where she lay in state.

In Korea today it rained - hard - all along the front. One reporter, describing the mud and misery facing the troops, said there was almost six inches of rain on the western front. There was little fighting, as infantry men tried to keep dry or get dry in bunkers, trenches and foxholes. The British announced that Major General Stephen Newton Shoosmith, a veteran liason officer, will be appointed Deputy Chief of Staff to General Mark Clark. And while there was no progress at the truce talks, Admiral Fechteler, Chief of Naval Operations, returned from an inspection tour of the Far East, to predict that there will be an armistice in Korea because, he says, "The Communists want it." The Admiral says, "every time the Communists stick their heads up, they get hurt."

In Egypt, the powerful Wafd party today gave its blessings to the army-supported government that forced the abdication of King Farouk, and promised a drive to end corruption.

Andrei Gromyko, Russia's new ambassador to London, arrived there today and was greeted by demonstrators who shouted "Go home to Russia, Gromyko; we don't want you here."

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito told visiting American clergymen, educators, and lawyers, that his country will "stick by its promises to fulfill its obligations" and defend its soil from any attack from the East.

At the Olympics, the American basketball team beat the Russians 86 to 58 in a semi-final game.

This reporter, like most who spent the past three weeks in Chicago, has a few notes left over. The conclusions are personal, and certainly debateable; here they are for what they're worth. Both parties managed to nominate "reluctant candidates"; both Eisenhower and Stevenson did everything short of what would have been effective to take themselves out of the race; both men clearly wrestled with their conscience and their sense of duty, and both decided they would be "willing" to be president. No two candidates were ever more their "own men", able to steer their own course; yet both have asserted they are in the hands of others.

Political parties change course slowly. Both changed course during the conventions. To employ political shorthand, the Republicans moved slightly to the left; the Democrats considerably to the right. In both conventions young men played a prominent part. The young Republicans, either as a result of their skill, or because they had a better issue, won. The young Democrats, through hast, parliamentary ineptitude, and a willingness to compromise, were beaten.

There is much less open ground between the two parties now, than there would have been had the line been drawn between Taft, and Kefauver or Harriman. Both parties decided to go for moderate men. There are lieutenants on both sides who could work for the other man without doing violence to their conscience, or their records.

This ought to be what is generally called a "clean campaign," so far as the two principles are concerned, because both are men accustomed to practicing restraint and a degree of tolerance. Both men favor economy in government; there has not appeared so far any substantial difference between them on our foreig policy. Both believe in reserving maximum power to the states, and are against what is loosely referred to as "big government." So the argument will be not about the direction of change in this country, but the rate or speed of the change. The differences between the two men and between the two parties, both of them divided, will emerge in the course of the campaign. Whoever wins will be in a position to "hoe his own row," choose his own associates, with remarkable freedome, because neither man is heavily mortgaged to any given segment of his party. Whoever wins, the basic pivot of our foreign policy will be in Europe rather than Asia.

It is worth noting that the delegates probably knew less about the stands on controversial issues taken by the two men they nominated, than about any of the other candidates presented to them. Both parties were looking for a winner. Worth noting, too, that Stevenson entered no state primary, and Eisenhower did so only by proxy. The two men who appeared least on television and radio won the nomination. It would be a bold man who drew conclusions from this fact, but it is a fact. I would guess, or perhaps hope, that four years from now the entire nation would not be made a "captive audience" for an entire week; that those programming television and radio would exercise sufficient editorial judgment so that the country would have an alternative to listening to speeches without literary distinction or substantial content. The viewer and the listener should be provided with alternative sources of information and entertainment, even during a political convention. Monopoly even if it lasts for only two weeks, is not agreeable.

The two best written speeches were, in this reporter's opinion, those by General MacArthur and Speaker Sam Rayburn; neither was a success so far as the delegates were concerned. The two best extemporaneous expositions of a complicated issue were by Christian Herter of Massachusetts and young Mr. Eastvold of the state of Washington in connection with the disputed Republican delegations of the South. The greatest example of personal political courage was by Senator Russell Long of Louisiana, when he broke with his own delegation, over the matter of the so-called loyalty pledge, and publicly stated his reasons for doing so. The man who most nearly held the convention in his hand was Vice President Barkley in a great speech without notes, which was probably the best he has ever delivered.

More Democrats than Republicans lost their voices; I don't suppose this proves a thing. To President Harry S. Truman goes the distinction, so far as I could observe, of being the only man to applaud mention of his own name.

The Democratic delegates were more unruly than the Republicans; gave their chairman a tougher time, but they usually do. I was impressed with the stamina of delegates and alternates at both conventions, particularly the older ones; impressed, too, with the wealth of young talent coming up in both parties. But more than anything else, impressed with waht might be called the good manners of the losers; the ability of men like Taft, Kefauver, and Harriman to smile, congratulate the winner, while they must have been thinking of all the hands they'd shaken, the weary nights on trains and planes; the hopes that they had entertained, and the men who had backed them. There were moments of real dignity at these conventions, and they came more in defeat than in victory. Neither of these conventions was rigged, bossed, or bought. Different tactics might have produced victory for Taft; might have won for the thorough going element of the New and Fair Deal wings of the Democratic party. Delegates made up their minds, with a few exceptions, in a manner as mysterious, as difficult of definition, as will the voters in November. I do not myself believe this is the best way to pick a presidential candidate, but it has worked. Both candidates have a freedom of action that is unique; both must contend with divergent elements within their own party; both will at times be embarrassed by their friends. Neither one actively sought the job; (however, you can't actually be drafted for government service in this country, except in the army). Maybe the first one who says he's really got an appetite for it; thinks he could do a whale of a job with it, will have an advantage - at least, initially.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Both the Presidential candidates are moderate men, and because they are, doubtless would go along with Henry George's contention that "Great changes can best be brought about under old forms." Both also understand what Thomas Wilson meant when he said: "A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us at liberty of changing them without blushing."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday - July 29, 1952

This is the news:

The air force says its analysis of "flying saucers", over the past six years, reveals "no pattern that shows anything remotely consistent with any menace to the United States." As a result of recently reported sightings of "objects" in the sky..in Washington..Los Angeles..Miami Beach..Des Moines..Cleveland and points in between..air force intelligence experts, and operations and technical experts, held a news conference this afternoon. They made it plain that the Air Force will continue to give "adequate attention, but not frantic attention" to all saucer reports. Major General Samford, director of air force intelligence, says he believes the objects, recently sighted over Washington, were the result of natural causes..perhaps due to temperature changes that can cause distrubances on radarscopes. Air Force examination of saucer reports in the past, shows that most have been: friendly planes..hoaxes..meteorological phenomena and electronics. But now 200 special cameras will be set up to try to check on these reports.

While the Air Force was explaining all this, Robert L. Farnsworth, president of the United States Rocket Society, urged defense officials not to permit our planes to fire at any flying saucers. He says this might "alienate mankind from beings of far superior forces."

Farnsworth feels that "friendly contact should be sought as long as possible."

At Fort Meade, Maryland, today, Second Army headquarters announced that Major General Robert W. Grow, our former military attache to Moscow, has been convicted by a court martial of failing to properly safeguard classified military information and improperly using such information for private records. This is a reference to a private diary the General kept.. a diary that was borrowed by Soviet agents long enough to photograph excerpts urging "war.. as soon as possible." General Grow was sentenced by the court to a reprimand. And he was suspended from command for a six months period.

The F.B.I. today released a long-secret report it has made, based on the writings of Communist leaders. The reports says Stalin has decided Communists can get power in this country only by "forcible destruction" of the government.. never by peaceful means.

Senator Nixon, the Republican vice presidential candidate, says he is going to make many campaign speeches.. probably major addresses on fifth column activity in this country and corruption. Nixon feels General Eisenhower has an advantage over Governor Stevenson, the Democratic presidential candidate, because Eisenhower has a "down to earth quality". Senator Butler of Nebrasks called on Eisenhower in Denver today..promised full support, and predicted that Senator Taft would take an active part in the campaign. Eisenhower's headquarters says the General will address the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Los Angeles a week from today. Its described as "entirely non-political in nature."

Governor Stevenson today cancelled two speeches he was to have made in Illinois. (because of the pressure of business that accumulated while he was in Chicago.) In Texas, former Congressman Martin Dies appears to have won the democratic nomination for Congressman-at-large.. In Texas, that just about means he's elected.

In Washington today the Wage Stabilization Board went out of business. Chairman Feinsinger said the board had settled 60-thousand cases.. and only one decision (in the steel case) led to a strike. A new board will be set up tomorrow..without authority to make any recommendations for settling nation-wide labor disputes. Mr. Feinsinger predicts that "we cannot have a stabilization program, without a disputes program."

As a result of the recent steel strike, the government today ordered tinplate manufacturers to give top priority to making tins cans ....in another move to save the summer food and vegetable crop. The government also told canning companies they must not accept deliveries of sanitary cans unless they are used specifically for packaging foods.

In Mexico City today, Ambassador O'Dwyer denied reports that he is consdering becoming a Mexican citizen and setting up a legal practise in Mexico. O'dwyer summoned news correspondents to say the story is not true. He said: "My plans on citizenship are the plans of a man who prizes and loves his citizenship."

In Argentina, President Peron announced that the body of his wife, Eva, will be kept on display for another month or two, if necessary, to give all mourners who want to, a chance to see it. Additional thousands of visitors have been arriving in Beunos Aires to view the body lying in state in the Ministery of the Interior.

In Korea today it was raining again..and the only action occurred on the western front: three small but lenghty battles. The rain again grounded most planes. There was no progress at the truce talks by staff officers. And the North Korean radio warned that American stubbornness may wreck the negotiations and expand the war.

The North Koreans and their Russian and Chinese allies told the International Red Cross meeting in TORONTO that the United Nations are using germ warfare in Korea. Nobody seemed impressed.

Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer.. R.A. Butler--told the House of Commons today that Britain will sell more than 123-million dollars worth of arms to the United States, and other allies, to earn critically-needed dollars. And he hinted that because of this the government may be forced to stretch-out or cut-back its own four year, 13-billion-dollar rearmamemnt program. Butler called for a great expansion in exports.. more belt-tightening, and a hold-the-line policy on wages.

In East Germany, the Communist regime has issued a decree that warns residents not to leave their homes for more than 24 hours, without notifying the police. Persons who want to travel to west Germany..or west Berlin.. must explain why they want to go and whom they intend to see.

In Iran today, several deputies in the lower house of Parliament demanded that the American military missions be withdrawn. The Parliament gave Premier Mossadegh an almost unanimous vote of confidence. And one Teheran newspaper reported Mossadegh has decided to end the services of the American missions.

Ex-King Farouk of Egypt arrived in Italy today.. stepped from a royal yacht into foreign exile. Farouk was in tears.. And as some of his 200 trunks.. whiskey and jewels were being unloaded..he went into conference with the owner of two gambling casinos in Naples. (There are reports that he may come to the United States.)

From time to time we shall have occasion to refer to specific portions of the record that was written in Chicago. But tonight for probably the last time, I should like to make reference to the conduct of the conventions Specifically, in relation to the political exploitation of religion. This is a delicate subject, but it is a fact that certain of the prayers sounded more like keynote speeches than appeals for divine guidance. The current issue of a non-denominational Protestant weekly, "The Christian Century"comments upon this aspect of the conventions. It suggests that true faith in God ought not to be worn once every four years, like a campaign button." And the editorial continues: "Men not known previously for piety had suddenly become polite and profuse in their public references to God. Others who seldom darken the door of a church openly identified themselves and their causes with religion. Scriptural references prop up unexpectedly in addresses, and sometimes the holy name of God is mentioned in the body of a political speech."

But the"Christian Century" has not only hard words for politicians. There is criticism of some religious leaders who offered prayers at the conventions. The question is asked: "Were these petitions really addressed to God, who judges the heart, and is not impressed by windy intercessions. Or were they tailored as if they were political speeches to the television audience. The length, and especially the substance, of many of the prayers indicate they were designed for human not divine ears." "The Crhistian Century" editorial continues: "With some exceptions, the religious leaders to whom was entrusted the exalted ministry of prayer at these conventions, prayed as though God were indeed a mythical Uncle Sam, or possibly, even a mythical Uncle Republican or Uncle Democrat. God is not a Republican, much as that assertion may dismay the citizens of Maine or Vermont; or a Democrat, even though that may be disbelieved in the solid South. He is not even an American, shocking as it may be to say it. And it is just possible that he thinks no more of the Star Spangled Banner than he did of the battle cries of the Phillistines or the war whoops of the Navahos." That is the end of the quotation from the lead editorial in the current issue of "The Christian Century".

I think it was my friend Bob Trout who said that the conventions were disposed to argue about everything except the invocation and the ~~XXX~~ Star Spangled Banner. Now there is argument about the invocations. Candor impels the confession that that editorial is quoted here in part not just because there isn't much news today, or because it is rather well written, but because this reporter agrees with it. There were some exceptions, as mentioned in the editorial, but they were not numerous. There is even a question that could be raised about the playing of the Star Spangled Banner. Not, perhaps, at political conventions, but elsewhere. The national anthem played and sung before a couple of second-rate fighters belabor each other about the head; before horses run; or the ball players try to earn their pay, does not necessaarily add dignity to the song or the event. Symbols of belief in nations or faith in a Supreme Being probably ought to be used sparingly and in suitable circumstances lest both suffer from collision with commercial or partisan interests. It would seem reasonable to request and expect as "The Christian Century" does that a speaker's platform, temporarily turned into a pulpit, should be regarded as a privileged place unsuited for partisan pleading. There was enough of that from the laymen present.

19

Abraham Lincoln was a man not unwise in the ways of politics; neither was he one unaware of the comfort religion could offer ~~particularly~~ in ~~times of emergency~~. 90 years ago, he remarked to the Senate Chaplain: "We, on our side, are praying to Him to give us victory, because we believe we are right; ~~[illegible]~~ but those on the other side pray to Him too, for victory, believing they are right. What must He think of us ?"

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday - July 30, 1952

This is the news:

Sixty-six of our B-29's, have carried out the biggest night bombing of the Korean war. They spent three hours hitting an enemy light metals plant IN NORTH KOREA just eight miles from the enemy jet air base in Manchuria. The Superforts dropped 660-tons of explosives WITH what are described as "excellent results." We're told our planes ran into intense night fighter attacks, and heavy anti-aircraft fire..but there is no word on our losses, if any. This attack was announced soon after General Van Fleet, the 8th army commander, told reporters in Seoul, that the best way to win in Korea is by keeping pressure on the enemy. Van Fleet says:"Recent trends indicate there is less chance for an armistice than ever before." (Just the other day, Admiral Fechteler, chief of naval operations, returned from the Far East predicting that there would be an armistice because, he said, the Communists want it.) But today General Van Fleet said the enemy in Korea now appears to be set to wait out the war..appears confident there will be no armistice..and that there will be no major allied attack.

It rained again in Korea today..the sixth straight day of rain. #

And the Pentagon reported that we suffered another 305 casualties last week. The total casualty list is now 113, 576.

In Washington today, a Defense department official said it would take twice as much steel..for at least six months..to get our production program back in high gear. Before the recent strike, the military was using from 12to 15 per cent of all steel produced in this country. Now it will require 30 per cent.. and 30 officers have been assigned to the mills to see that the military gets first crack at whatever is produced. This, of course, will cut into the supply of steel available for civilian use. The Defense department says it is willing to go to extra expense to speed- up the production of steel. And today the government issued orders permitting the industry to put higher prices into effect on all steel delivered on or after last Saturday.

The Federal Reserve Board says that as a result of the strike, industrial production dropped to the lowest point since the Korean war started. #

And there are reliable reports that John L. Lewis has started to talk about a new contract for his soft coal miners. If no agreement is reached with the industry by September 22, the miners could strike. Its believed Lewis will ask for at least the 21 cents an hour package granted the steelworkers..plus an increase in the present 30 cents a ton royalty that goes into the miners welfare fund.

Price officials in Washington say that although the cost of living is now at a record high, they expect it to go up some more...they see every indication that prices in many fields will soon be doing just that. They point to the steel settlmenet--which will raise the prices of many products made of steel. They expect to grant an increase for aluminum.. feel this will result in more demands for wage increases, and resultant price increases...including coal.

The President today set-up a new Wage Stabilization Board, and named as its chairman, Archibald Cox, a Harvard law professor.

The Army said tonight that Russian propagandists completely falsified and twisted many of the excerpts they claim to have copied from a diary kept by Major General Grow. The general was convicted yesterday of writing classified information in his diary and not properly safeguarding such information while he was military attache in Moscow. The Army says that the dairy--for example--did not contain the words:"War..as soon as possible".. as reported by enemy propagandists. The Communists made up other "excerpts" and "twisted" some they copied from the Grow diary.

In Illinois today, Governor Stevenson held his first news conference since he was chosen as the Democratic presidential nominee. He said: he feels more "combatant" all the time.. he intends to run his own campaign as far as ideas and the contents of his speeches go. He doesn't plan on a "give em hell campaign" because--he said--"I don't believe I'm gifted with talents of that kind." He feels his biggest hazard is that he's not well enough known... plans to remedy that, by extensive travel, and as much use of television as the party can afford. The Governor said: "I feel very strongly that foolish or irresponsible promises on tax reduction can be very misleading." [This was in answer to a question about a remark attributed to General Eisenhower..promising a 40-billion dollar budget cut at some future time.] The governor was asked what he plans to do about his own feeling that the Taft-Hartley law should be amended..and the platform statement calling for its repeal. He said: The objective is important, not the method by which its obtained. He feels it might be wise to remove the political symbol of the Taft-Hartley name.

Senator Lodge, one of the Eisenhower aides, arrived in Denver today and told reporters he thinks the presidential contest will be a "horse race"..with Eisenhower the winner...because the country is fed up with twenty years of Democratic administration. [redacted]

The new Republican National Chairman, Arthur Summerfield, said today: the Democratic ticket was handpicked by Harry Truman.. the people will come to realize Stevenson and Sparkman can do nothing but carry on the Truman administration. He says the Republicans are going to attack the Stevenson record as governor. He said this will be done "in ways that will be unfolded." Summerfield also said the bitterness in the Republican party has started to disappear..he expects Senator Taft to take an active part in the speaking campaign..he feels Governor Dewey will be available for "counsel."

In North Carolina today, the state's Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan...Thomas L. Hamilton.. was sentenced to four years at hard labor for his part in a wave of flogging incidents. He had admitted ordering at least four floggings. Seventeen of his followers were sentenced to prison terms and 45 other Klansmen were given fines and suspended sentences.

In West Germany, the Upper house of parliament has approved a law requiring all businesses with more than 500 workers to give one third of the seats [redacted] on their boards of directors to representatives of labor.

And in WIESBADEN an American court found Mrs. Katherine G. Reed of Michigan, wife of an air force colonel, guilty of black marketing. She was fined 39-hundred dollars.

In Egypt, the new government has abolished all titles of Egyptian nobility..such as pasha and bey. And all persons jailed because they offended the dignity of the former King Farouk have been released from their cells. Farouk..now on the isle of Capri.. has demoted himself to be a mere prince.

It would seem that two weeks of oratory at Chicago didn't do anything to change the defense and foreign policy problems confronting us. Mr. Churchill told the House of Commons today that Britain was going to switch part of its industry from armaments, to export goods; will also sell arms abroad. The British Prime Minister reported remarkable strides in the development of guided missiles and rockets. Britain is going to concentrate on these rather than conventional armaments. Her Majesty's government will draft ~~three hundred thousand~~ 30-THOUSAND men fewer than scheduled next year, because it is reported there is a shortage of non-coms to train them. Mr. Churchill says Britain must keep its rearmament effort within the limits of her economic strength. This is precisely what the left wing of the Labor Party has been saying for more than a year. There was a vote of confidence on Mr. Churchill's proposal; ~~however~~ AND he won it by the usual narrow majority.

The French are not happy. We had promised them an extra one hundred and eight-six million dollars for armaments; they wanted about four times that much. Part of the money will be used to finance the production of a French fighter, which is inferior to those now being produced in Britain and in this country. Secretary Acheson says our failure to produce more ~~weapons~~ MONEY or to buy more weapons in France, is a disappointment to everyone, but we just haven't got the money. He blamed it on Congress for having cut about two billion dollars out of the President's foreign aid bill. The French government is reported as being "shocked," and the French press critical. The net result is a slowdown of the rearmament effort in both Britain and France, and the conversion of certain industries from armaments to peaceful production. It does not appear that either western Europe or this country will meet the schedules in terms of men or metal agreed upon at the last meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Lisbon. Spain is not a member of that organization; primarily because our allies in western Europe are reluctant to be associated with what they regard a Fascist state. We have been trying for the last six months to work out a two-way deal with Spain; we to get air and naval bases in return for economic and military aid. The Spaniards have let us know informally what they want in return for letting us establish and use these bases. They want a hundred and twenty-five million dollars immediately; (Congress has already appropriated that much) and they want it with no restrictions as to how it should be used. In addition, Spain wants very large military aid to modernize the army; Spain also wants what would be, in effect, an American Spanish alliance. After these conditions have been met Spain would be willing to "consider" letting us use the air and naval bases. The Franco governement will shortly be informed that these conditions are unacceptable, and then of course, the Spaniards will be unhappy, along with the French. There may be sound military or political reasons for our attempting to make this deal with Spain, in the face of reluctance or opposition from our allies, but it is worth noting that none of our political or military leaders have explained those reasons to the American public. So we have a situation where Britain is going to export guns in order to get butter, of which they have little enough; where the French want more money from us, and want us to buy more from them; and where Spain makes exhorbitant demands, which could well run into billions of dollars, for the use of air and naval bases.

Governor Stevenson suggested today that there was no substantial difference between General Eisenhower and himself on foreign policy. On the basis of their published and rather generalized utterances, this is true. But if they desire to disagree there is plenty of room to maneuver. Big talk + Big decisions in Chicago But There is, I think, an old French proverb that says: "The more things change the more they are the same".

Monday night we were in error. In reporting the news, we spoke of Gov. Stevenson's ~~return to~~ passing thru - Bloomington, Indiana. It should, of course, have been Bloomington, Illinois. We trust you'll agree with O.A. Battista that "an error doesn't become a mistake, until you refuse to correct it." For our part, this line from Ovid would seem appropriate:"If it was an error, its causes were honorable."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - JULY 30, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Sixty-six of our B-29's carried out the biggest night bombing of the Korean war. They spent three hours hitting an enemy light metals plant in North Korea, just eight miles from the enemy jet-air base in Manchuria. The Superforts dropped 660-tons of explosives with what are described as "excellent results." We're told our planes ran into intense night fighter attacks and heavy anti-aircraft fire, but there is no word on our losses, if any. This attack was announced soon after General Van Fleet, the 8th Army Commander, told reporters in Seoul, that the best way to win in Korea is by keeping pressure on the enemy. Van Fleet says: "Recent trends indicate there is less chance for an armistice than ever before." (Just the other day, Admiral Fechteler, Chief of Naval Operations, returned from the Far East predicting that there would be an armistice because, he said, the Communists want it.) But today General Van Fleet said the enemy in Korea now appears to be set to wait out the war; appears confident there will be no armistice, and that there will be no major allied attack.

It rained again in Korea today, the sixth straight day of rain. And the Pentagon reported that we suffered another 305 casualties last week. The total casualty list is now 113,576.

In Washington today, a Defense Department official said it would take twice as much steel - for at least six months - to get our production program back in high gear. Before the recent strike, the military was using from 12 to 15 per cent of all steel produced in this country. Now, it will require 30 per cent and 30 officers have been assigned to the mills to see that the military gets first crack at whatever is produced. This, of course, will cut into the supply of steel available for civilian use. The Defense Department says it is willing to go to extra expense to speed-up the production of steel. And today the Government issued orders permitting the industry to put higher prices into effect on all steel delivered on or after last Saturday.

The Federal Reserve Board says that as a result of the strike, industrial production dropped to the lowest point since the Korean war started.

And there are reliable reports that John L. Lewis has started to talk about a new contract for his soft coal miners. If no agreement is reached with the industry by September 22, the miners could strike. It's believed Lewis will ask for at least the 21 cents an hour package granted the steelworkers, plus an increase in the present 30 cents a ton royalty that goes into the miners welfare fund.

Price officials in Washington say that although the cost of living is now at a record high, they expect it to go up some more; they see every indication that prices in many fields will soon be doing just that. They point to the steel settlement, which will raise the prices of many products made of steel. They expect to grant an increase for aluminum; feel this will result in more demands for wage increases, and resultant price increases, including coal.

The President today set-up a new Wage Stabilization Board, and named as its chairman, Archibald Cox, a Harvard law professor.

The Army said tonight that Russian propagandists completely falsified and twisted many of the excerpts they claim to have copied from a diary kept by Major General Grow. The General was convicted yesterday of writing classified information in his diary and not properly safeguarding such information, while he was military attache in Moscow. The Army says that the diary - for example- did not contain the words, "War...as soon as possible," as reported by enemy propagandists. The Communists made up other "excerpts" and "twisted" some they copied from the Grow diary.

In Illinois today, Governor Stevenson held his first news conference since he was chosen as the Democratic presidential nominee. He said he feels more "combatant" all the time; he intends to run his own campaign, as far as ideas and the contents of his speeches go. He doesn't plan on a "give 'em hell campaign" because, he said, "I don't believe I'm gifted with talents of that kind." He feels his biggest hazard is that he's not well enough known; plans to remedy that, by extensive travel, and as much use of television as the Party can afford. The Governor said: "I feel very strongly that foolish or irresponsible promises on tax reduction can be very misleading." (This was in answer to a question about a remark attributed to General Eisenhower promising a 40-billion dollar budget cut at some future time.) The Governor was asked what he plans to do about his own feeling that the Taft-Hartley law should be amended, and the platform statement calling for its repeal. He said the objective is important, not the method by which its obtained. He feels it might be wise to remove the "political symbol" of the Taft-Hartley name.

Senator Lodge, one of the Eisenhower aides, arrived in Denver today, and told reporters he thinks the presidential contest will be a "horse race", with Eisenhower the winner, because the country is fed-up with twenty years of Democratic administration.

The new Republican National Chairman, Arthur Summerfield, said today: the Democratic ticket was handpicked by Harry Truman; the people will come to realize Stevenson and Sparkman can do nothing but carry on the Truman administration. He says the Republicans are going to attack the Stevenson record as Governor. He said this will be done "in ways that will be unfolded." Summerfield also said the bitterness in the Republican Party has started to disappear; he expects Senator Taft to take an active part in the speaking campaign; he feels Governor Dewey will be available for "counsel".

In North Carolina today, the state's Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, Thomas L. Hamilton, was sentenced to four years at hard labor for his part in a wave of flogging incidents. He had admitted ordering at least four floggings. Seventeen of his followers were sentenced to prison terms, and 45 other Klansmen were given fines and suspended sentences.

In West Germany, the Upper House of Parliament has approved a law requiring all businesses with more than 500 workers to give one third of the seats on their boards of directors to representatives of labor.

And in Wiesbaden, an American court found Mrs. Katherine G. Reed of Michigan, wife of an Air Force colonel, guilty of black marketing. She was fined 39-hundred dollars.

In Egypt, the new government has abolished all titles of Egyptian nobility, such as Pasha and Bey. And all persons jailed because they offended the dignity of the former King Farouk have been released from their cells. Farouk, now on the isle of Capri, has demoted himself to be a mere prince.

It would seem that two weeks of oratory at Chicago didn't do anything to change the defense and foreign policy problems confronting us. Mr. Churchill told the House of Commons today that Britain was going to switch part of its industry from armaments, to export goods; will also sell arms abroad. The British Prime Minister reported remarkable strides in the development of guided missiles and rockets. Britain is going to concentrate on these rather than conventional armaments. Her Majesty's Government will draft 30-thousand men fewer than scheduled next year, because it is reported there is a shortage of non-coms to train them. Mr. Churchill says Britain must keep its rearmament effort within limits of her economic strength. This is precisely what the left wing of the Labor Party has been saying for more than a year. There was a vote of confidence on Mr. Churchill's proposal, and he won it by the usual narrow majority.

The French are not happy. We have promised them an extra one hundred and eighty-six million dollars for armaments; they wanted about four times that much. Part of the money will be used to finance the production of a French fighter, which is inferior to those now being produced in Britain and in this country. Secretary Acheson says our failure to produce more money or to buy mor weapons in France, is a disappointment to everyone, but we just haven't got the money. He blamed it on Congress, for having cut about two billion dollars out of the President's Foreign Aid Bill. The French Government is reported as being "shocked", and the French press critical. The net result is a slowdown of the rearmament effort in both Britain and France, and the conversion of certain industries from armaments to peaceful production. It does not appear that either western Europe or this country will meet the schedules in terms of men or metal agreed upon at the last meeting of the North Atlantic Organization in Lisbon.

Spain is not a member of that organization, primarily because our allies in western Europe are reluctant to be associated with what they regard a Fascist state. We have been trying for the last six months to work out a two-way deal with Spain - we to get air and naval bases in return for economic and military aid. The Spaniards have let us know informally what they want to return for letting us establish and use these bases. They want a hundred and twenty-five million dollars immediately. Congress has already appropriated that much, and they want it with no restrictions as to how it should be used. In addition, Spain wants very large military aid to modernize the army; Spain also wants what would be, in effect, an American-Spanish alliance. After these conditions have been met, Spain would be willing to "consider" letting us use the air and naval bases. The Franco Government will shortly be informed that these conditions are unacceptable, and then of course, the Spaniards will be unhappy along with the French. There may be sound military or policital reasons for our attempting to make this deal with Spain, in the face of reluctance or opposition from our allies, but it is worth noting that none of our political or military leaders have explained those reasons to the American public. So we have a situation where Britain is going to export guns in order to get butter of which they have little enough; where the French want more money from us, and want us to buy more from them; where Spain makes exhorbitant demands, which could well run into billions of dollars for the use of air and naval bases.

Governor Stevenson suggested today that there was no substantial difference between General Eisenhower and himself on foreign policy. On the basis of their published and rather generalized utterances, this is true. But if they desire to disagree, there is plenty of room to maneuver big talk and big decisions in Chicago. But there is, I think, an old French proverb that says: "The more things change, the more they are the same."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Monday night we were in error. In reporting the news, we spoke of Governor Stevenson's passing through Bloomington, Indiana. It should, of course, have been Bloomington, Illinois. We trust you'll agree with O. A. Battista that "An error doesn't become a mistake until you refuse to correct it." For our part, this line from Ovid would seem appropriate: "If it was an error, its causes were honorable."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday - July 31, 1952

This is the news:

A lack of rainfall and very high temperatures have burned up millions of dollars worth of crops in more than a dozen states. Secretary of Agriculture Brannon is meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, tommorrow with farm leaders. Today the government declared four states "disaster loan areas": Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky and Mississippi. The drought has just about destroyed pasture and hay crops in all of these states. Previously, Tennessee, and large parts of Missouri and Arkansas had been designated as disaster areas: this means farmers who cannot get credit from local private, or co-operative sources, may borrow money from the government. (from the Farmers Home Administration.). to buy such things and hay and livestock feed. The Agriculture Department is studying conditions in New England.. North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Virginia and Florida. (all have been affected by the heat and lack of rainfall). Massachusett's Governor Dever has closed forest areas in eight of his STATE'S counties. The Maine agriculture department estimates that 70 per cent of its three and a half million dollar oat crop has been destroyed... more than 85-hundred acres of forrests have been burned out, since the first of this month. And the weather bureau. noting that the combination of heat and lack of rain is becoming more serious in many eastern and southern sections, says: crops are deteriorating..wells and ponds drying up.. and serious fire hazards exist.

In Washington today, the Atomic Energy Commission announced that it has awarded a contract for the construction of an atomic power plant "for large naval vessels, such as aircraft carriers." Westinghouse Electric Corporation, ..now building an atomic engine for a submarine.. will work on the larger atomic plant. A semi-annual report from the Atomic Energy Commission says we have made an agreement for uranium shipments from Australia..will soon get [redacted] uranium from South Africa. AND additional supplies from Canada, and from production in this country.

Price Stabilizer Arnall [redacted] predicts that the new increase in steel prices will cost the average family about 100-dollars a year in higher prices. And government officials say the aluminum industry will soon be given a price increase, averaging about five per cent..half OF what the industry wanted. This will mean higher costs for planes, ships and other defense products..as well as for many consumer goods.

The Office of Price Stabilization today filed suits totalling almost one million dollars against 12 New York city restaurants and night clubs, for alleged price violations... making savings in food and drinks costs, and failing to pass these on to the customers in the form of lower prices.

The new chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, Archibold Cox took office today and said that even though Congress had stripped the board of most of its powers, it still can give the nation "very effective controls."

The Government today urged persons who use coal to make their purchases as soon as possible this year "to ease potential" shortages this winter. And Interior Secretary Chapman told Congress private industry should begin building plants for the production of synthetic liquid fuels.. from both oil shale, and coal.

The Federal Reserve Board says that installment credit increased 593 million dollars in June, on top of a 447-million increase in May. Credit controls were lifted on May 7. The total debt of installment buyers is now at a new all-time high: thirteen and three quarter billions.

Air Force chief General Vandenbergh said today: "I don't believe there are such things as flying saucers." He feels that reports of unidentified objects in the sky are the result of "double vision."

General MacArthur today became chairman of Remington-Rand, Incorporated, manufacturers of business machines, and electronic equipment. The General, who keynoted the Republican convention, says he will take no part in the election campaign.. will not be a part of the political picture.

In Denver, General Eisenhower has made it known he will keep out of all Republican state primary contests. Today, Governor Peterson of Nebraska urged him to DISREGARD both the extreme left, and the extreme right, in his campaign. National Chairman Summerfield told Ohio Republicans that the party will crack the solid south in November. Ohio's Senator Taft is not attending the state convention. (he's fishing in Canada) Today, Senator Nixon, the vice presidential candidate, charged that Governor Stewenson, the Democratic candidate, is a "captive candidate" of the C.I.O., the BIG CITY political bosses, and the Truman administration. Nixon said that in his campaign he will exploit the Alger Hiss case.

Governor Stevenson, in Springfield, met with Wilson Wyatt, the former federal housing expediter, and with Senator Kerr of Oklahoma.

IN Detroit today the army designated 22-year-old Arthur Weinfeld as the one millionth man to be drafted since the war in Korea started. The sun broke out in Korea today..after six days and 12 and a half inches of rainfall. In a matter of hours the muddy battlefields were turned to dust. And then our troops in what is described as "a bloody attack" drive Chinese Communists off the crest of Old Baldy Hill on the western front.

[redacted]

Two American helicopters arrived in Scotland today after crossing the Atlantic. They made one hop of 850 miles from Iceland to Scotland.. a non-stop distance record for helicopters.

[redacted]

In Sweden, six Swedish Communists were convicted of selling defense secrets to Russia; Two were sentenced to life in prison..the others received shorter prison terms.

On the Isle of Capri, former King Farouk of Egypt told reporters: "I am no longer a rich man, although by the standards of the poor I am still to be envied." He said he has made no plans about where to live in the future.. wishes the men who threw him out of office "good luck".. because they'll need it.

In The British House of Commons there is a procedure known as a "vote of confidence." This means that the House makes up its mind whether it continues to repose confidence in the Prime Minister and his government. When the government loses a vote of confidence on a matter of major importance, it must resign. It seems to this reporter that the forthcoming Presidential campaign will be essentially a "test of confidence". It will not be a test between the Truman administration and Senator Taft as it might have been. Neither candidate is beholden to the traditional machinery of the party he represents. Whichever man is elected will have unique opportunities for freedom of action in determining both policy and personnel of his [redacted] administration. It will be a contest between an officer and a gentleman, and a politician and a gentleman. Each must try to win the vote of confidence, not on the basis of his party's platform, and not really on the basis of his party's record. For neither man can swallow many of the things for which his party has stood during the past few years. And there will be skirmishing about the Taft-Hartley Law; rumblings of revolt over civil rights; promises of reduced expenditures; and integrity and honesty in public office. The second-string Democratic speakers will say in effect, Did you ever have it so good. The Republicans will say, Twenty years in office leads to corruption, inefficiency, and a general [redacted] weakening of the moral fiber.

The New Deal has been played out. The Democratic party confirmed that at Chicago. The Taft wing of the Republican party was dealt out, also at Chicago. There is no demand from either of the candidates for a basic or drastic reversal of national policy. Even as controversial a matter as the Korean war was dealt with formally only twice; once by General MacArthur, and again by Senator Paul Douglas.

It is uniquely in the character of both candidates to inspire confidence. It is impossible to talk with either man privately without becoming aware that [redacted] they share, to a remarkable degree, the realization of the tragedy that may impend. The internal and external threats to our civilization and our existence. Both are aware that these massive and complex issues and the methods by which they may be resolved are beyond the comprehension of the average man. There is honest and prayerful humility in both candidates. There are considerable areas of public policy where both are uncertain and confused; (for both have said as much) It seems to me, therefore, that both candidates must of necessity concentrate upon building a body of confidence rather than upon belaboring each other with secondary issues. Each must attempt to persuade the voter that the chances of peace are improved if he is elected in November; each must attempt to persuade that he can and will inaugurate an era of responsible, respectable and incorruptible administration of the nation's affairs. Both candidates must attempt to convey the impression that they are surrounded by able men of integrity and character who will form the nucleus of the new government. Neither man is likely to promise easy, quick, or painless solutions to the nation's problems; for if he does he will not be believed. Both candidates may have some difficulty in restraining some of their more ardent and irrational supporters.

I do not suggest that there are not issues of substance dividing the two parties, or that the positions of Stevenson and Eisenhower are so similiar they might as well draw straws and save us the trouble of a long campaign. But I do believe that in the absence of some unexpected development that this campaign more than any in our recent history will hinge upon which man can inspire the greatest degree of confidence in his own person and his own judgment.

There has been so much loss of confidence in basketball scores, in tax collectors, ambassadors in politicians, in our allies, and perhaps even in ourselves, that there exists I think a real desire to repose confidence in an individual and what he stands for. In spite of party platforms, regional differences, party strategy, and traditional loyalties, the vote is likely to go to the more believeable man.

It would be astonishing to this reporter if either man engages in personalities, and yet, this will be one of the most "personal" campaigns in our history. Essentially it will be a vote of confidence not on the Fair Deal, that is finished; not on the Republican platform; not on Eisenhower's military record or on Stevenson's political record; it will be a vote of confidence as between the two men, the character, credibility, and believeability that they can establish between now and November. Senator Lodge said the other day it was going to be a horserace. It seems to me more likely to be a thoroughly [redacted] human race.

There is good reason to believe that the campaign will be conducted on a respectable level. Both candidates, through personal experience, know well what Robert Quillen meant when he said:"Character is made by what you stand for; reputation by what you fall for." The Frenchman - Vovnarg once remarked "few people have enough character to endure the truth, and to speak it." At this point, it would appear that the 2 candidates ~~will have no difficulty on this score.~~ have a fair chance of doing just that.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday - August 1, 1952

This is the news:

The government says food prices are nowhigher than ever before. And Price Chief Arnall says unless "strong action" is taken, the cost of living will continue to go up. The government reports--on the basis of a spot check in eight cities--that food prices went up one-point-two per cent during the first two weeks in July. This was due--mainly..to an 18 per cent increase in the price of eggs, now selling for [redacted] 75 cents a dozen. Food prices have now gone up nearly 16 per cent since the Korean war started. And Mr. Arnall, noting that the cost of living is at an all-time high, says this index can be expected to rise. Arnall points out that other factors are pushing prices up: changes the Congress made in the economic control law..higher prices for steel and aluminum.. and the drought in eastern and southern states, that is burning up great crops.

The government today added three more states to the drought disaster area: South Carolina..Massachusetts and Maine. That makes a total of eight states..(and parts of two others).in which farmers can get quick federal loans, to stay in production. Agricultural leaders, meeting in Nashville today, agreed that their primary problem is to get feed for starving livestock... herds are down in weight.. and milk production, in the affected areas, is below normal. A spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation--just returned from a tour of the southern states--says the situation there is beginning to approach the conditions of 1936.

The government today ordered the steel industry to reserve FROM five to 100 per cent of its production for military, atomic and machine tool orders. The percentage will differ, depending on the particular steel turned out by each mill.

In Denver today, General Eisenhower held his first news conference since the Republican convention. He told reporters: the great issue for the country and the world is "the initiation of a sound program for peace." He said: "We have got to get on the right road to peace very soon." Again the General promised that he and Senator Nixon will go into every corner of the country in an intensive, fighting campaign. He expects to hit the road about the first of September. He feels it's very important to "continue the enthusiasm and fervor" of the independents, who supported him for the nomination. And he feels it's equally important for the Republicans to win control of both the Senate and House in November. General Eisenhower told the reporters that he will be his own boss in the campaign.

In Illinois, Governor Stevenson announces that his personal campaign manager will be Wilson Wyatt, of Louisiville, the former federal housing expediter . And Mr. Wyatt says headquarters for the campaign will be in Springfield.. because "the campaign must obviously be directed by the governor." Wyatt says there will be "very close liason" with the Democratic National Committee..of which Frank Mc Kinney is [redacted] chairman. Earlier in the day, Governor Stevenson announced that Senator Kefauver has accepted an invitation to visit him in Springfield..and similar invitations will be extended two other convention candidates: Senator Russell, and Averell Harriman.

Here in New York today, the federal court of appeals again denied an appeal by Frank Costello, from a contempt of congress conviction. Costello's attorney plans a further appeal.

Secretary of State Acheson left Washington today for a conference with [redacted] the foreign ministers of Australia and New Zealand in Honolulu. His plane was forced to make a landing at Denver when one of its four engines went dead. The plane then took off, 30-minutes after landing.

Over Korea today our jets fought enemy Migs for the first time in nine days. We shot down three of them, damaged another two..no word on our losses, if any. The air force says that during July we shot down 32 enemy planes. Two of ours were shot down...in air battles. We lost 17 other planes to enemy ground fire and unknown causes. Allied planes today attacked Chinese positions on [redacted] Old Baldy hill.

In Germany, Russian General Chuikov, charges that the western allies have violated the four-power agreement signed to end the Berlin blockade. The Russian says the western powers are interfering with trade between east and west Germany.. banning certain [redacted] west zone goods from being shipped to the Soviet zone.. and taking "reprisals" against certain west German firms that want to trade with the East.

In Britain, the House of Commons has approved the allied peace contract with West Germany. Britain is the second country to ratify it.. we were first. The vote and debate produced the first split on a major [redacted] foreign policy issue between the Conservative and Labor parties.. and it produced a public battle between former Prime Minister Atlee and left-wing LABOR leader Aneurin Bevan.

In Moscow today, the english-lanaguege magazine, "News" said: There is not now, and never has been, a hate America campaign, conducted by any Russian leader, or any Russian publication.

The Cuban government says 13 men have been arrested, charged with plotting to overthrow President Batista's government. Six of them are police officials..may be shot. The others are civilians. They've been freed because of a lack of sufficient evidence.

In Argentina today, President Peron, office indicated that the body of his wife, Eva, may be so embalmed that it can be placed on permanent public view. An an Argentine union of food workers has petitioned Pope Pius to make her a saint.

TOMORROWXZXX

Well thats the news....Tomorrow this reporter,together with his principle colleagues..Jesse Zousmer and John Aaron depart for a few weeks vacation... Since this is a political year...we have attempted to say our thanks and aufweidershein in the paraphrase of certain recent acceptance speeches..#

Mr. Chairman, my fellow listeners:

May I first thank you ~~on behalf of my sponsors and myself~~ for the warmth of your welcome and your criticism during this past year. It is most heartwarming. And before I proceed with the thoughts that I should like to address briefly to you, may I have the temerity to congratulate the sponsor's on the selection of my replacement for the next four weeks. A man who has shown statesmanlike qualities in many ways, but has a special talent, an ability to ferret out the news - Larry Le Seuer.

Ladies and Gentlemen, you have summoned me on behalf of millions of your fellow Americans to lead a great crusade - (that is, take a month away from this microphone.) I take up this task therefore in a spirit of deep obligation - mindful of the fish that will be biting...the golf balls waiting to be struck...the open road beckoning my car. I accept the summons. I will take this vacation.

Our aims are clear: to sweep from office all the unanswered mail...the heavy burden of reporting unpleasant news...the anixieties of competing against the stop-watch...~~to build a firm foundation for the future.~~

To achieve these aims, we must have a total vacation. To achieve these aims I will keep nothing in reserve...once I have gained some sleep, built up my strength, and have something in reserve again.

Before every broadcast, it has been my practice to seek out men in their camps, and on the roads, and talk with them face to face, about their concerns. # In the next month, I will do no such thing.

In this vacation to which I have committed my sponsors, it will be my practice to meet and talk to no-one...in no section, no corner, no nook or cranny of this land. (I'm tired.)

I know that such a momentous vacation can not be had by a few. Sp to all of those on my staff who have worked long hours at difficult tasks in support of this broadcast, I extend an earnest call to join up; this is not a job for one of us, or for just a few of us. It will take the best of all of us to appreciate and enjoy this vacation. #

Since this morning, I have had helpful and heartwarming talks with my sponsor and summer replacement, Larry Le Seuer. ~~I wanted them to know, as I want you to know, that in the hard month ahead, we will work intimately together to promote a good news show.~~ I was strengethened, and heartened by their instant agreement that our salary will not be stopped while leading this vacation crusade.

~~We [redacted] ory~~

~~We are now at a moment in history when the destiny of mankind hangs~~ in the balance on ~~what we do and say. History will simply have to wait~~ until ~~we return from vacation.~~

As we launch this great vacation crusade, we call to go forward with us others who work with their hands and minds. This cause needs their enthusiasm, their devotion. We call to go forward with us on vacation the women of America; farmers, businessmen. As we go to the country, Americans in every walk of life can have confidence that our single-minded purpose is to relax and enjoy ourselves..(and to strengthen ourselves for the long pull ahead.)

We go out from here with unbounded trust in our lisnteners. We go out from here to merit their unbounded trust in our summer replacement... and a return of our audience in the fall.

I accept this vacation in deep humility...(and with some relief) I accept it "unfettered." None of you can wholly appreciate what is in my heart...after 11 months of continous broadcasts, five nights a week Plus T.V. on Sunday. It would be unfair to say that I have not sought this vacation. I did seek it because the burdens of this office at times stagger the imagination.

That my heart has been troubled, that I have sought this vacation, that I did seek it in good conscience, that I did seek it in honest self-appraisal is not to say that I value it less. ~~And now that the Doctor has made his decision~~ I will fight to enjoy this vacation with all my heart and soul. From such a prospect(namely, a vacation) one does not shrink in fear or in false humility. I wanted it!

I know you will join with me in gratitude and respect for those responsible for making this vacation possible. I shall need them, we shall need them because, when we return in the Fall - we shall need our sponsors once more. ~~Your vacation, pleasant as I find it, has not enlarged my own capacities, but it does bring a sense of relief. So I am perfectly happy.~~

Wherever I am, I will end each day of this coming vacation, thinking of you all, full of good hope for the future.

Ladies and Gentlemen, my dear friends that have heaped upon me such a vacation, it is more than that, that I accept tonite. It is a dedication to the shining promise of tomorrow...a dedication not to listen to Murrow tomorrow, but to LeSeuer tomorrow. As together we face that tomorrow...Monday that is...I wish you all good luck and God-speed.

As eventually comes to Fortunate men, tonite I begin a four-week vacation. It may well turn out, as William Cowper once said that "a life at ease is a difficult pursuit." I [redacted] return. But at this moment, I'm inclined to go along with this sentiment by Ted Robinson: "Write me a verse, my old machine, I lack for an inspiration. The skies are blue and the trees are green and I long for a long vacation."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - AUGUST 1, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Government says food prices are now higher than ever before. And Price Chief Arnall says unless "strong action" is taken, the cost of living will continue to go up. The Government reports - on the basis of a spot check in eight cities - that food prices went up one-point-two per cent during the first two weeks in July. This was due - mainly - to an 18 per cent increase in the price of eggs, now selling for 75 cents a dozen. Food prices have now gone up nearly 16 per cent since the Korean war started. And Mr. Arnall, noting that the cost of living is at an all-time high, says this index can be expected to rise. Arnall points out that other factors are pushing prices up: changes the Congress made in the economic control law, higher prices for steel and aluminum, and the drought in eastern and southern states that is burning up great crops.

The Government today added three more states to the drought disaster area: South Carolina, Massachusetts and Maine. That makes a total of eight states - and parts of two others - in which farmers can get quick Federal loans to stay in production. Agricultural leaders meeting in Nashville today, agreed that their primary problem is to get feed for starving livestock; herds are down in weight, and milk production in the affected areas is below normal. A spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation, (just returned from a tour of the southern states), says the situation there is beginning to approach the conditions of 1936.

The Government today ordered the steel industry to reserve from five to 100 per cent of it prodution for military, atomic, and machine tool orders. The percentage will differ depending on the particular steel turned out by each mill.

In Denver today, General Eisenhower held his first news conference since the Republican Convention, He told reporters the great issue for the country and the world is "the initiation of a sound program for peace." He said: "We have got to get on the right road to peace very soon." Again the General promised that he and Senator Nixon will go into every corner of the country in an intensive, fighting campaign. He expects to hit the road about the first of September. He feels it's very important to "continue the enthusiasm and fervor" of the independents, who supported him for the nomination. And he feels it's equally important for the Republicans to win control of both the Senate and House in November. Genera Eisenhower told the reporters that he will be his own boss in the campaign.

In Illinois, Governor Stevenson announces that his personal campaign manager will be Wilson Wyatt, of Louisiville, the former Federal housing expediter. And Mr. Wyatt says headquarters for the campaign will be in Springfield, because "the campaign must obviously be directed by the Governor." Wyatt says there will be "very close liason" with the Democratic National Committee of which Frank McKinney is chairman. Earlier in the day, Governor Stevenson announced that Senator Kefauver has accepted an invitation to visit him in Springfield, and similar invitations will be extended to other candidates - Senator Russell and Averell Harriman.

Here in New York today, the Federal Court of Appeals again denied an appeal by Frank Costello from a contempt of Congress conviction. Costello's attorney plans a further appeal.

Secretary of State Acheson left Washington today for a conference with the foreign ministers of Australia and New Zealand in Honolulu. His plane was forced to make a landing at Denver when one of its four engines went dead. The plane then took off 30-minutes after landing.

Over Korea today, our jets fought enemy MIGs for the first time in nine days. We shot down three of them, damaged another two; no word on our losses, if any. The Air Force says that during July we shot down 32 enemy planes. Two of ours were shot down in air battles. We lost 17 other planes to enemy ground fire and unknown causes. Allied planes today attacked Chinese positions on Old Baldy Hill.

In Germany, Russian General Chuikov, charges that the Western Allies have violated the four-power agreement signed to end the Berlin blockade. The Russian says the Western Powers are interfering with trade between East and West Germany, banning certain west zone goods from being shipped to the Soviet zone, and taking "reprisals" against certain West German firms that want to trade with the East.

In Britain, the House of Commons has approved the Allied Peace Contract with West Germany. Britain is the second country to ratify it; we were first. The vote and debate produced the first split on a major foreign policy issue between the Conservative and Labor parties, and it produced a public battle between former Prime Minister Atlee and left-wing Labor leader, Aneurin Bevan.

In Moscow today, the english-language magazine, "News" said: There is not now, and never has been, a hate-America campaign, conducted by any Russian leader or any Russian publication.

The Cuban Government says 13 men have been arrested, charged with plotting to overthrow President Batista's Government. Six of them are police officials - may be shot. The others are civilians. They've been freed because of a lack of sufficient evidence.

In Argentina today, President Peron's office indicated that the body of his wife, Eva, may be so embalmed, that it can be placed on permanent public view. And an Argentine union of food workers has petitioned Pope Pius to make her a saint.

Well, that's the news. Tomorrow this reporter, together with his principle colleagues, Jesse Zousmer and John Aaron, depart for a few weeks vacation. Since this is a political year, we have attempted to say our thanks and aufweidershe in the paraphrase of certain recent acceptance speeches.

Mr. Chairman, my fellow listeners:

May I first thank you for the warmth of your welcome and your criticism during this past year. It is most heartwarming. And before I proceed with the thoughts that I should like to address briefly to you, may I have the temerity to congratulate the sponsors on the selection of my replacement for the next four weeks. A man who has shown statesmanlike qualities in many ways, but has a special talent, an ability to ferret out the news - Larry LeSueur.

Ladies and gentlemen, you have summoned me on behalf of millions of your fellow Americans to lead a great crusade - that is, take a month away from this microphone. I take up this task, therefore, in a spirit of deep obligation - mindful of the fish that will be biting, the golf balls waiting to be struck, the open road beckoning my car. I accept the summons; I will take this vacation.

Our aims are clear: to sweep from office all the unanswered mail, the heavy burden of reporting unpleasant news, the anxieties of competing against the stop-watch. To achieve these aims, we must have a total vacation. To achieve these aims, I will keep nothing in reserve, (once I have gained some sleep, built up my strength, and have something in reserve again).

Before every broadcast, it has been my practice to seek out men in their camps, and on the roads, and talk with them face to face about their concerns. In the next month, I will do no such thing. In this vacation to which I have committed my sponsors, it will be my practice to meet and talk to no-one, in no section, no corner, no nook or cranny of this land. I'm tired.

I know that such a momentous vacation can not be had by a few. So to all of those on my staff, who have worked long hours at difficult tasks in support of this broadcast, I extend an earnest call to join up; this is not a job for one of us, or for just a few of us. It will take the best of all of us to appreciat and enjoy this vacation.

Since this morning, I have had helpful and heartwarming talks with my sponsor and summer replacement, Larry LeSueur. I was strengthened, and heartened by their instant agreement that our salary will not be stopped while leading this vacation crusade.

As we launch this great vacation crusade, we call to go forward with us others, who work with their hands and minds. This cause needs their enthusiasm, their devotion. We call to go forward with us on vacation the women of America, farmers, and businessmen. As we go to the country, Americans in every walk of life can have confidence, that our singleminded purpose is to relax and enjoy ourselves, and to strengthen ourselves for the long pull ahead.

We go out from here with unbounded trust in our listeners. We go out from here to merit their unbounded trust in our summer replacement - and a return of our audience in the Fall.

I accept this vacation in deep humility and with some relief. I accept if "unfettered." None of you can wholly appreciate what is in my heart after 11 months of continuous broadcsts, five nights a week, plus TV on Sunday. It would be unfair to say that I have not sought this vacation. I did seek it, because the burdens of this office at times stagger the imagination.

That my heart has been troubled, that I have sought this vacation, that I did seek it in good conscience, that I did seek it in honest self-appraisal is not to say that I value it less. I will fight to enjoy this vacation with all my heart and soul. From such a prospect, (namely - a vacation), one does not shrink in fear or in false humility. I wanted it!

I know you will join with me in gratitude and respect for those responsible for making this vacation possible. I shall need them, we shall need them because, when we return in the Fall, we shall need our sponsors once more. Wherever I am, I will end each day of this coming vacation thinking of you all, full of good hope for the future.

Ladies and gentlemen, my dear friends that have heaped upon me such a vacation, it is more than that, that I accept tonight. It is a dedication to the shining promise of tomorrow, a dedication not to listen to Murrow tomorrow, but to LeSueur tomorrow. As together we face that tomorrow, Monday, that is, I wish you all good luck and God-speed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As eventually comes to fortunate men, tonight I begin a four-week vacation. It may well turn out, as William Cowper once said, that "A life at ease is a difficult pursuit." But at this moment, I'm inclined to go along with this sentiment by Ted Robinson: "Write me a verse, my old machine; I lack for an inspiration. The skies are blue and the trees are green, and I long for a long vacation."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow
Monday - 7:45
September 1, 1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson today called for a new labor law, to replace the Taft-Hartley law. He told a Labor Day meeting in Detroit, he doeen'T believe the Taft-Hartley act is a "slave labor" law. (as many union leaders have called it.) He doesn't believe that everything in it is wrong. But Governor Stevenson said it is "a tangled snarl of legal barbed wire, filled with ugly sneers at labor unions, and built around the discredited labor injunction." The Democratic presidential candidate said the law was biased... politically inspired...has not improved labor relations in a single plant. #

What he wants is a "minimum law on labor relations"... he feels the greatest hope for industrial peace is not in laws, but in private agreements. He wants A [redacted] law that would have unions, like corporations, be responsible representatives of their INTERESTS OF THEIR members. He wants unions to conform to "standards of fair conduct and equal protection" for all members to exercise their rights..no ban on union membership, because of the color of one's skin. Governor Stevenson wants to ban jurisdictional strikes, and secondary boycotts. He would outlaw labor injunctions... feels that the 80-day colling off period of the Taft-Hartley law is a "tyrannical power" that can be used to order men and women back to work "in smothered silence."

Governor Stevenson also would have the Congress give the President a "choice" in dealing with national emergency strikes..different ways of trying to reach a settlement for different strikes..instead of one method, proclaimed by law. And he told his labor audience this country cannot tolerate shutdowns which threaten the national safety.

The Governor made a number of other speeches in Michigan during the day. At Grand Rapids he said the Republicans are hopelessly divided on foreign policy. At Hamtramck he said that General Eisenhower's recent speech to the American Legion had aroused speculation that [redacted], if elected to the White House, Eisenhower might start "some reckless action" to liberate the European peoples now under Soviet tyranny. At Pontiac he said that the General [redacted] appears to be telling Labor and Management to lie down together for a little while and after the election he will come and tuck the covers up around them. At Flint he said the Republican desire for a change is understandable. Governor Stevenson EXPLAINED: "I suppose if I had been sewn up in the same underwear for twenty years I'd want a change too."

A Republican spokesman in Washington says Stevenson's call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law proves that his "pose of independence is a fraud." Wayne Hood, executive secretary of the Republican National Committee, issued a statement saying "Truman has repeatedly called for Taft-Hartley repeal. Now his puppet calls for a new law. There is no difference."

General Eisenhower was here in New York today..preparing to leave for a two day trip to Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Arkansas. His aides say the General will talk on "the mess in Washington"..and place the blame for it "squarely where it belongs." Today, the General spoke informally to a convention of the National Association for Letter carriers. He promised that if elected he would not authorize or condone any firing of civil service employes..would work for a more efficient mail service and more frequent deliveries. The General said he was "sore" because of a situation in Kansas where the Democratic national committeeman had asked mail (CARRIERS) for $100 dollar contributions and warned them they might lose their jobs if the Republicans win the election. Senator Carlson, an Eisenhower advisor, presented the details to the convention. Later, Kenneth Anderson, the Kansas Democrat, said he had sent out such a letter said this was not an illegal practise.--THE REPUBLICANS DO IT, TOO!

The President is out campaigning again. He speaks in Milwaukee tonight.. an address that can be heard over many of these stations at 10;30 p.m. eastern daylight time. On his way to Milwaukee by train, the President started his whistle-stop talks. He said: the Republicans are trying to win the election by abuse of the Democrats and by mud-slinging. He said they don't have any principles of their own.. want to change something around so they can get in power...Stevenson can and will win.. Mr. Truman said if the Republicans win in November it would be "too terrible to contemplate". And he revealed that in his campaigning he will talk of Democratic accomplishments in the past, while Governor Stevenson talks about the future.

Phillip Murray, head of the C.I.O., today called on leaders of industry to prove they are willing to work with labor by helping repeal the Taft-Hartley law. And William Green, head of the A.F. of L., said its its time for the voters to pay more attention to the candidates they elect to Congress.

In Korea today Navy planes carried out their biggest one-day attack of the war. Carrier planes from the Essex, Princeton and Boxer, struck at an oil refinery in North Korea just a dozen miles below the Soviet frontier. They hit a cluster of iron and chemical plants to the south. And they ended the day with another attack on the North Korean port of Chongjin. Seventh Fleet Commander Admiral Clark says:"This is a signal to the Communists that we mean business and will fight for our way of life." #

~~Trygvie Lie, the secretary-general of the United Nations, says there is a great deal of "impatience, resentment and doubt" as a result of repeated disappointments at the peace talks at Panmunjom. Lie told member nations that if a truce agreement i reached, based on the present battle line, public opinion would welcome it with enthusiasm and much of the present anxiety and disillusionment would disappear."~~

Edward R. Murrow: September 1, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Since this is Labor Day, the end of a vacation which was I hope as pleasant for you as it was for me, I should like to talk briefly about the "labors" of the radio reporter during an election campaign. For the next couple of months there will be many political speeches to report, and ample opportunity to undertake an analysis of the campaign and the candidates.

You are entitled to know the ground rules under which this program will operate. This network has no editorial policy in the sense that it favors one candidate over another. This reporter is not a member of any political Party. I do not know the political orientation of my sponsors - they have never in the past attempted to influence in any way my handling of the news. Should such an effort be made in the course of this campaign, I will be the first to inform you of it.

I am aware, as a result of some experience, that a fair and even-handed condensation and correlation of political speeches and issues is not easy. There is no such thing as a wholly objective, neutral and impartial reporter. We are all the prisoners of our own upbringing, reading, experience and personal relations. Many of us believe that we are uttering profound truths when we are merely re-arranging our own prejudices. Two able reporters of experience and integrity will often differ regarding the important and newsworthy elements in a speech or policy statement. This merely means that they are in disagreement; it does not prove that either man is partisan or dishonest.

For our own part we shall try to remember that five nights a week, for fifteen minutes, we enjoy the monopolised opportunity to talk - that people who may well be abler and wiser do not have the opportunity to answer back. It should be our function to provide the raw materials from which intelligent and rational opinion can be formed.

When we draw a personal conclusion it will be labelled as such, and the facts, the information that led to that conclusion will be spelled out ~~XX~~ - so that if those established facts lead you to a different conclusion, then you merely decide that we were wrong. (And the record shows that we have not always been right.)

So far as the two candidates are concerned, we shall try to be courteously sceptical of both of them - constantly alert for the traditional if not inevitable compromises made by candidates in the course of a campaign. We have available a substantial file of what they have said in the past; and we shall try to relate those past utterances to what they say now.

I do not know if any radio or television commentator has ever influenced the outcome of an election. I am disposed to doubt it. But any effort to do so is an abuse of privilege and of responsibility.

I am entitled to argue with my friends, entitled to my vote; but this loud voice which reaches from one end of the country to the other does not entitle me through selection of material, through inflection of voice or the suppression of information to attempt to influence a single vote. That is the job of the politicians; mine is merely to transmit to you as honestly and objectively as I can what they say and do.

The place for those who wish to agitate and influence is on clearly labelled political broadcasts, not on news programs. If all this sounds a little sanctimonious and self-righteous, permit me to say that I know I shall frequently fail to meet these standards, because radio reporters are in no sense exempt from carrying about with them the normal luggage of vanity, confidence and prejudice.

If this reporter had opportunity to exercise influence in connection with this campaign, it would not be exercised on behalf of either Eisenhower or Stevenson. It would be rather in the direction of a fuller presentation to a larger number of people of precisely where each man stands; and in the direction of persuading more people to vote. The French, the British, the Italians, the Germans, the South Koreans have in recent years gone to the polls in larger numbers than have we to select their national leaders. In a very real sense we represent their hope of survival. And if only about half of us go to the polls, as we have in the past, then it would seem to follow that only about half of us care what happens to us and to them. Will Rogers once said when this country was in its reckless adolescence that we shouldn't worry too much about who was elected, because no one man could ruin this country. That may have been true then. But the man elected in November will be in a position to do more than any other human to ruin or revive what is left of the free world.

The reporting of what in a happier day was called the great game of politics, where every citizen has a blue chip of equal value, is fairly serious business. We shall attempt to do it in the fashion indicated, in the knowledge that those who play and those who don't will share the same fate.

This is the end of another holiday weekend. And if you're on the road tonight, drive carefully...don't take unncessary chances. Long before man conceived the automobile, the Chinese had a proverb which goes like this:"In a narrow road look out for a dagger." That's still pretty good advice. For as Sir Edward (Coke) once remarked:"Excessive precaution does no harm."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday - September 2, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower today called for a top-to-bottom cleanup in Washington... said: "We've got an Administration of stumble, fumble and fall." And the President, making more whistle-stop speeches, as his train returns to Washington, charged that the Republicans are playing "cruel, gutter politics" with foreign policy. (I'd like to review both of these speeches in a few minutes.)

Democratic Senator Monroney, head of his party's speakers bureau, says General Eisenhower's current tour of some southern cities is "futile." He called it "the same old roadshow, with a new leading man" and demanded that General Eisenhower explain his charges of a "mess" in Washington, with specific points.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio says Eisenhower's charges, of a mess in Washington, is "the kind of thing we have been wanting and waiting for." Bricker says Senator Taft has told him he will make two campaign speeches in Ohio next month, for General Eisenhower, and the state republican ticket.

Senator Nixon, the Republican candidate for vice president, said in Maine today that he thinks General Eisenhower will not mention the names of his opponents..Stevenson and Sparkman. But Nixon says he is going to "name names".. he is going to "lower the boom on the Democrats"... expose communist subversion, corruption and offer some legislative and administrative remedies.

Mrs. Eisenhower met with women reporters here in New York today. She told them one of her main chores is to police her husband.. see that he goes to bed on time, and keep him from getting irritated by small things.

The Eisenhower speech to the American Legion last week came up in the annual convention of the British Trades Union Congress. Left-wing members charged it was a "suicidal declaration of war." But the Congress defeated the left-wingers and endorsed Britain's re-armament program "within the limits of our power."

The Organization for European Ecomic Co-operation reported today that there has been a slight drop in the rate of western Europe's industrial production..the first such slip since 1947...just before the Marshal plan began.

In West Germany, General Ridgeway called on Chancellor Adenauer, then urged all nations concerned, to approve quickly their treaties with Western Germany. General Ridgeway said he is deeply impressed by the "amazing and admirable spirit which shows itself in the recovery on every hand, in West Germany."

In Iran today, an important Nationalist newspaper attacked President Truman for joining Prime Minister Churchill in a proposal to end the British-Iranian oil dispute. The paper says the President should tell the British that the only way open to them is "unconditional surrender to the rights of the Iranian people."

The State Department said today that there is "no basis whatever" for published reports that we are discussing with the British the possible movement of troops into Iran.

At the United Nations today, Jacob Malik of Russia again demanded that the Security Council admit to the United Nations..in one package.. 9 western states and five Soviet satellites. This proposal has twice been rejected . But today Malik made it clear that he will veto the admission of other countries if Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania and Mongolia are not admitted to membership in the U.N.

In Korea today bad weather kept air action to a minimum. And Chinese Communists sent patrols to test our defenses along the hills they lost to allied troops during the summer.

In Washington, the State Department has revised its passport regulations... created an appeals board to hear protests from persons who are denied passports. Such persons may be represented by legal counsel and present evidence to the new board.

4-A

A House judiciary subcommittee today heard testimony for more than four hours from T. Lamar Caudle, the former chief tax prosecutor who was fired by the President. The committee did not permit any information, from behind its closed doors, on what questions Caudle was being asked. The inquiry is known to concern two disputed tax cases.

Economic Stabilizer Putnam says his job would be much easier if various groups in the country would have "the spirit of sacrifice that comes with all-out war." Mr. Putnam told the C.I.O. oil workers convention, that until there is real assurance for peace in the world, we must keep at least stand-by control machinery in order.

Defense Secretary Lovett says the armed forces will probably ask for about the same amount of money next year, as they received this year..46 and a half billion dollars. He says the defense buildup can start "levelling off" after July first, 1953

The Miami Weather Bureau says a tropical hurricane, with winds up to 135 miles an hour, is now sweeping north, some thousand miles southeast of Miami. All ships in the course of the hurricane have been advised to exercise caution. The Weather Bureau says the hurricane should continue its course for several days, far away from any land areas.

Edward R. Murrow: September 2, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

The political campaign progresses (anyway it moves.) President Truman has concluded, that the man he once offered to help make President, (namely General Eisenhower) has become a hypocrite. And Mr. Truman feels that the Republican Party didn't do right by Senator Taft. According to Truman Governor Dewey "took the nomination away from him by proxy." That was unfair to Taft, because he represents the Republican Party.

The President's main complaint about Eisenhower and his high command is that they are increasing the risk of war, by talking loosely about liberating the enslaved peoples of eastern Europe. They are "playing cheap politics with the needs, fears and hopes of these enslaved peoples; increasing the risk of war, simply to get votes." Mr. Truman said Eisenhower must know that the Iron Curtain and the Kremlin will not "come tumbling down from a few blasts on a campaign trumpet." The President said Eisenhower had helped vigorously to carry out the Administration's foreign policy, but is now being shown how to be a hypocrite, in a few easy lessons, by some Republican masterminds. # Mr. Truman wanted to know how the peoples of eastern Europe were to be liberated without war; said nothing could be worse than to raise false hopes of liberation in eastern Europe; nothing could be worse than to incite uprisings that can only end by giving a new crop of victims to the Soviet executioners.

Mr. Truman was obviously perturbed lest Eisenhower's American Legion speech had raised false hopes behind the Iron Curtain, and created fear of war amongst our allies. # Apparently the President had forgotten, that in March, he told a group of Czecho-slovaks that their country would again be free; that he was "doing everything he possibly could to help that time arrive as promptly as possible." Last May the President told a Rumanian delegation: "If I can continue our program, which I inaugurated, you are going to be a free country before you pass on to the next world."

It is in the record that both Eisenhower and Truman have said substantially the same thing. They just said it at different times. Neither man suggests how this liberation is to be accomplished. Both seem to assume that one day the Russians will ~~decide~~ conclude that it wasn't a nice thing they did to their neighbors, and decide to go home. It is my own view that no permanent damage will result from such obvious and irresponsible tactics, because neither the peoples behind the Iron Curtain, nor the Poles, Czechs and Rumanians in this country are likely to be misled by the promises of Truman or Eisenhower.

General Eisenhower had a big reception in Atlanta, Georgia, today.

It was the beginning of his political airlift through the South. Bill Downs tells me that for the first time there were smiles of confidence on the faces of Ike's staff, instead of nervous grins of anxiety. # Atlanta Republican leaders were surprised by the large turn-out and enthusiasm of the crowd. Police estimated that about a hundred thousand came out to see Eisenhower. # Eisenhower let fly at corruption in Washington, saying: "It is not a one agency mess, or a one bureau mess, or a one department mess. It's a top-to-bottom mess." Too many men who are too small for their jobs, too big for their breeches, and too long in power." # (That phrase got him his biggest applause.) Eisenhower said the cost of the Washington mess is being taken out of each of us, through higher taxes, higher prices, and by cutting down the value of the dollar. He said we all pay for the incompetence, the stupidity and corruption, on the part of those who have been caught, and those who have not been caught.

This is the first time that a Republican presidential candidate has undertaken such vigorous personal campaigning in the South. Today found Eisenhower in Atlanta, Jacksonville and Miami; tomorrow he will be in Tampa, Birmingham and Little Rock, Arkansas. The General's theme in the South is an appeal for what he calls "common woodshed honesty in government," and a contention that the Democrats have for too long taken the South for granted. # Today the General dwelt at some length on the Internal Revenue Bureau cases in Boston, St. Louis and San Francisco. And in direct reference to Governor Stevenson, though not by name he said: "No man, however honest, can clean up this mess if he is elected as the nominee of the Administration which created it."

The leaders of both Parties are trying to concentrate on the XXXX weakness of the other; the Republicans believing they have a real chance in the South; the Democrats hoping they can keep alive the bitter feud in the Republican Party that erupted in Chicago. #

The state of Georgia once had two Governors at the same XXXX time. We now have two candidates but, in a sense, four Parties. In the next couple of months the Southerners and the Taft supporters will have to decide where they're going ~~in November~~ on election day, even if it's only fishing.

Murrow: September 2, 1952: WORD FOR TODAY

It is as dangerous to generalize about politicians as about lawyers, doctors or broadcasters. / But as this campaign progresses we may find that William Draper had a point when he said: "Most men's politics sit much too loosely about them." / And there may be those who fit the description penned by Lord Chesterfield: "Politicians neither love nor hate. Interest, not sentiment, directs them."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - SEPTEMBER 2, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower today called for a top-to-bottom cleanup in Washington....said: "We've got an Administration of stumble, fumble and fall." And the President, making more whistle-stop speeches, as his train returns to Washington, chargdd that the Republicans are playing "cruel, gutter politics" with foreign policy. (I'd like to review both of these speeches in a few minutes.)

Democratic Senator Monroney, head of his party's speakers bureau, says General Eisenhower's current tour of some southern cities is "futile". He called it "the same old roadshow with a new leading man" and demanded that General Eisenhower explain his charges of a "mess" in Washington with specific points.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio says Eosenhower's charge of a "mess" in Washington is "the kind of thing we have been wanting and waiting for." Bricker says Senator Taft has told him he will make two campaign speeches in Ohio next month for General Eisenhower and the state Republican ticket.

Senator Nixon, the Republican candidate for vice president, said in Maine today that he thinks General Eisenhower will not mention the names of his opponents, Stevenson and Sparkman. But Nixon says he is going to "name names"; He is going to "lower the boom on the Democrats," expose communist subversion, corruption, and offer some legislative and administrative remedies.

Mrs. Eisenhower met with women reporters here in New York today. She told them one of her main chores is to police her husband, see that he goes to bed on time, and keep him from getting irritated by small things.

The Eisenhower speech to the American Legion last week came up in the annual convention of the British Trades Union Congress. Leftwing members charged it was a "suicidal declaration of war." But the Congress defeated the left-wingers and endorsed Britain's re-armament program "within the limits of our power."

The Organization for European Economic Corporation reported today that there has been a slight drop in the rate of western Europe's industrial production, the first such slip since 1947 just before the Marshal Plan began.

In West Germany, General Ridgway called on Chancellor Adenauer, then urged all nations concerned to approve quickly their treaties with Western Germany. General Ridgway said he is deeply impressed by the "amazing and admirable spirit which shows itself in the recovery on every hand in West Germany."

In Iran today, an important Nationalist newspaper attacked President Truman for joining Prime Minister Churchill in a proposal to end the British-Iranian oil dispute. The paper says the President should tell the British that the only way open to them is "unconditional surrender to the rights of the Iranian people."

The State Department said today that there is "no basis whatever" for published reports that we are discussing with the British the possible movement of troops into Iran.

At the United Nations today, Jacob Malik of Russia again demanded that the Security Council admit to the United Nations, in one package, 9 western states and five Soviet satellites. This proposal has twice been rejected. But today Malik made it clear that he will veto the admission of other countries if Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania and Mongolia are not admitted to membership in the UN.

In Korea today bad weather kept air action to a minimum. And Chinese Communists sent patrols to test our defense along the hills they lost to allied troops during the summer.

In Washington, the State Department has revised its passport regulations, created an appeals board to hear protests from persons who are denied passports. Such persons may be represented by legal counsel and present evidence to the new board.

A House judiciary subcommittee today heard testimony for more than four hours from T. Lamar Caudle, the former chief tax prosecutor who was fired by the President. The committee did not permit any information, from behind its closed doors, on what questions Caudle was being asked. The inquiry is known to concern two disputed tax cases.

Economic Stabilizer Putnam says his job would be much easier if various groups in the country would have "the spirit of sacrifice that comes with all-out war." Mr. Putnam told the CIO oil workers convention, that until there is real assurance for peace in the world, we must kepp at least stand-by control machinery in order.

Defense Secretary Lovett says the armed forces will probably ask for about the same amount of money next year as they received this year - 46 and a half billion dollars. He says the defense buildup can start "leveling off" after July first, 1953.

The Miami Weather Bureau says a tropical hurricane, with winds up to 135 miles an hour, is now sweeping north, some thousand miles southeast of Miami. All ships in the sourse of the hurricane have been advised to exercise caution. The Weather Bureau says the Hurricane should continue its course for several days far away from any land areas.

The political campaign progesses - anyway, it moves. President Truman has concluded, that the man he once offered to help make President, (namely General Eisenhower), has become a hypocrite. And Mr. Truman feels that the Republican Party didn't do right by Senator Taft. According to Truman Governor Dewey" took the nomination away from him by proxy." That was unfair to Taft, because he represents the Republican Party.

The President's main complaint about Eisenhower and his high command is that they are increasing the risk of war by talking loosely about liberating the enslaved peoples of eastern Europe. They are "playing cheap politics with the needs, fears and hopes of these enslaved peoples...increasing the risk of war simply to get votes." Mr. Truman said Eisenhower must know that the Iron Curtain and the Kremlin will not "come tumbling down from a few blasts on a campaign trumpet." The President said Eisenhower had helped vigorously to carry out the Administration's foreign policy, but is now being shown how to be a hypocrite in a few easy lessons by some Republican masterminds. Mr. Truman wanted to know how the peoples of eastern Europe were to be liberated without war; said nothing could be worse than to raise false hopes of liberation in eastern Europe nothing could be worse than to incite uprisings that can only end by giving a new crop of victims to the Soviet executioners.

Mr. Truman was obviously perturbed lest Eisenhower's American Legion speech had raised false hopes behind the Iron Curtain, and created fear of war amongst our allies. Apparently the President had forgotten that in March, he told a group of Czecho-slovaks that their country would again be free, that he was "doing everything he possibly could to help that time arrive as promptly as possible." Last May the President told a Rumanian delegation: "If I can continue our program, which I inaugurated, you are going to be a free country before you pass on to the next world."

It is in the record that both Eisenhower and Truman have said substantially the same thing. They just said it at different times. Neither man suggests how this liberation is to be accomplished. Both seem to assume that one day the Russians will conclude that it wasn't a nice thing they did to their neighbors, and decide to go home. It is my own view that no permanent damage will result from such obvious and irresponsible tactics, because neither the peoples behind the Iron Curtain, nor the Poles, Czechs and Rumanians in this countr are likely to be misled by the promises of Truman or Eisenhower.

General Eisenhower had a big reception in Atlanta, Georgia, today. It was the beginning of his political airlift through the South. Bill Downs tells me that for the first time there were smiles of confidence on the faces of Ike's staff, instead of nervous grins of anxiety. Atlanta Republican leaders were surprised by the large turn-out and enthusiasm of the crowd. Police estimated that about a hundred thousand came out to see Eisenhower. Eisenhower let fly at corruption in Washington, saying: "It is not a one agency mess, or a one bureau mess, or a one department mess. It's a top-to-bottom mess." Too many men who are too small for their jobs, too big for their breeches, and too long in power." (That phrase got him his biggest applause.) Eisenhower said the cost of the Washington mess is being taken out of each of us through higher taxes, highter prices, and by cutting down the value of the dollar. He said we all pay for the incompetence, the stupidity and corruption on the part of those who have been caught, and those who have not been caught.

This is the first time that a Republican presidential candidate has undertaken such vigorous personal campaigning in the South. Today found Eisenhower in Atlanta, Jacksonville, and Miami; tomorrow he will be in Tampa, Birmingham and Little Rock, Arkansas. The General's theme in the South is an appeal for what he calls "common woodshed honesty in government," and a contention that the Democrats have for too long taken the South for granted. Today the General dwelt at some length on the Internal Revenue Bureau cases in Boston, St. Louis and San Francisco. And in direct reference to Governor Stevenson, though not by name, he said: "No man, however honest, can clean up this mess, if he is elected as the nominee of the Administration which created it."

The leaders of both Parties are trying to concentrate on the weakness of the other: the Republicans believing they have a real chance in the South; the Democrats hoping they can keep alive the bitter feud in the Republican Party that erupted in Chicago.

The state of Georgia once had two Governors at the same time. We now have two candidates but, in a sense, four Parties. In the next couple of months the Southerners and the Taft supporters will have to decide where they're going on election day - even if it's only fishing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is as dangerous to generalize about politicians as about lawyers, doctors or broadcasters. But as this campaign progresses we may find that William Draper had a point when he said: "Most men's politics sit much too loosely about them." And there may be those who fit the description penned by Lord Chesterfield: "Politicians neither love nor hate. Interest, not sentiment, directs them."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday - September 3, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said in Tampa today: there is a difference between the Democratic and Republican parties; "one is saddled with a mess, the other wants to clear it up." IN speeches in Tampa, Birmingham and Little Rock, the General finished this southern tour IN WHICH HE spoke to an estimated 150-thousand persons, and received an enthusiastic greeting everywhere. In Tampa he made an appeal for a return to the spiritual and moral standards of our forefathers.. referred to the unalienable rights mentioned in the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE. And then, in the closest HE CAME to the civil rights issue, General Eisenhower said the founding fathers did not try to explain these rights, in terms of color of skin, religion or anything else. He said in Tampa: "I am down here to make certain that there are two parties in the south..don't you be taken for granted." IN Birmingham the General said: "I'm down here to try to cut taxes." He acknowledged that we must spend a lot of money for national defemse. But he said, we can cut taxes, reduce federal spending, if we eliminate "the duplication, bungling and graft" of the Democratic administration. The General said many veterans in his audience would recall seeing duplication and WASTE at their bases and stations. He said we must get the most value in security for the dollars we sepnd. At Little Rock the General said: we can have prosperity without war.. a prosperity that makes anything in the past seem puny.

As Eisenhower completed his two-day southern tour, Governor Stevenson's advisors, in Springfield, told reporters Stevenson had PREVIOUSLY planned a southern trip.. with no reference to Eisenhower's recent one. This unidentified advisor says Stevenson will go ahead with his planned campaign..will not put aside ~~their~~ HIS program to answer any statements made by Eisenhower. ~~The Governor~~ Stevenson today told the Democratic finance committee: "I like the idea of a drive for contributions that will be without promises and without threats. And of course"..he added.."Make it successful." The finance chairman, Beardsley Ruml says the party has spent most of the ONE million dollars it ~~had~~ has raised to date.

The President is back in the White House pleased with the success of his campaigning to and from his Milwaukee speech. And today, John Foster Dulles, an Eisenhower advisor, accused Mr. Truman of following the Russian line in his attack on Eisenhower. Mr. Truman had accused the General and his "masterminds" of "gutter policies".. that might bring on war. Mr. Dulles says the President is trying to belittle and besmirch Eisenhower. He says: "We can trust the man who won peace rather than the man who lost it." In a statement to reporters, Dulles said "it is natural that President Truman should resent the idea that there can be better policies than his policies." He added: "It is absurd to suggest that General Eisenhower anticipates invoking wholesale insurrection by unarmed slaves."

And Secretary of State Acheson, approving what the President has said about the Eisenhower and Dulles suggestions, indicates he may defend the Administration's foreign policy..possibly in a speech in Kansas City on Thursday. Senator Kefauver today called on all of his supporters to back Governor Stevenson. He said Stevenson will "fight to rout out corruption..continue the good fight for the Democratic ideal."

The state of Nevada today was considering one of the biggest political upsets in its history. Thomas W. Mechling, a 31-year-old former Washington newspaperman who has been in the state for seven months, defeated former state attorney general Alan Bible in the race for the Democratic senatorial nomination. Bible was supported by Senator McCarran, the state's PRESENT Democratic senator. Mechling won by some 700 votes in a campaign directed against what he called the McCarran machine. Republican Senator Malone easily won his party's renomination.

In Washington today, former Justice Department attorney James A. Mullally told a House committee that he received 750-dollars in 1947 from a law firm which helped a company facing federal charges. Mullally, who resigned after he was suspended from the Department two weeks ago, said this was the "outside legal activitiy" which brought about his suspension. He said there was nothing "sinister or dishonest" about his action.. the money was a "gift" rather than a payment. The case against the company was later dismissed. Mullally said he had absolutely nothing to do with the case... just helped bring the law firm and company "together." A Justice Department official testified that the case ..against the Carnation Milk Company..was dropped because it was a borderline case , a minor offense, and Carnation was a reputable firm with an excellent record.

Officials of the United Mine Workers today told reporters they are "making progress" in negotiations with the hard coal industry. [redacted]

The Army today ordered the early release of "several thousand" reserve officers who were called to active duty involuntarily, from the inactive or volunteer reserve. They will be released two or three months earlier than planned because: many other officers have extended their terms of service and more new second lieutenants are now being assigned to duty. [redacted]

It rained in Korea today.. as much as three and a half inches... grounding almost all of our planes and making life at the front more [redacted] miserable.

The truce talks resume in a few hours.. ending the fifth straight week-long recess.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 403 casualtiee in Korea last week. The list now has 116, 655 names... including 20, 506 dead.

In Moscow, where Chinese and Russian leaders have been meeting for 17 days, Stalin and Mao Tze-Tung exghanged greetings in which they said they were pleased at the friendship between their two countries. The Russian press made it clear the Chinese owe a debt to Soviet military might. All this was to MARK the anniversary of the Japanese surrender.

In Tokyo, spokesmen for 818 minor Japanese war criminals, told foreign correspondents, they consider their jail sentences unreasonable, and illegal. They want to be released at once.

In Belgium the minister of Justice resigned as a result of nation-wide criticism over the release of two Belgian war criminals.

And in Paris the ministers of the North Atlantic treaty organization called a Paris meeting for about December 15th.

Here in New York, the state's crime commission has subpenaed the bank records of 300 union and political leaders...in a drive on the waterffront rackets.

And Miami storm forecasters say the hurricane now 700 miles off

Palm Beach.. is moving towards the northwest "on a potentially dangerous course."

Edward R. Murrow: September 3, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Several months ago, the President set up a commission, headed by General Jimmy Doolittle, to make recommendations about airfields in this country. # The commission recommended the integration of airfields with other means of transportation; said that airfields ought to be moved closer to the cities they serve, (not more than forty minutes by car from the centre of the city.) The Government ought to spend more money for airports, and there should be helicopter taxi service between the airport and the city.

Obviously not much is going to be done about existing airports, but the Doolittle commission made some sound recommendations about future plans. It said that any new airport should have a clear level area a thousand feet wide, and at least a half-mile long, stretching beyond the end of each main runway. / And there should be no buildings for at least two miles in the funnel leading into the runway - the outer end of the funnel being six thousand feet wide.

President Truman today approved the recommendations, and directed the appropriate federal agencies to start putting them into effect. This action won't increase either the capacity or the safety of our airfields immediately, but it's a sensible piece of long-range planning.

Plans for settling the six months' old dispute between Britain and Iran, regarding the nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, aren't progressing too well. Last week-end President Truman and Prime Minister Churchill published their offer to Iranian Premier Mossadegh. They promised ten million dollars from this country; proposed that the matter of how much should be paid for the British oil interests, be left to the International Court of Justice. The British agreed to lift their ban on shipments to Iran; and agreed to market the oil now stored there. Premier Mossadegh turned down these proposals, because he said "they would not make a favorable impression on the Iranian people."

Today Secretary of State Acheson publicly urged Mossadegh to reconsider his refusal of the Anglo-American proposal. He said it was fair and reasonable, and had no strings attached. But the Iranian Government wants no part of it.

It seems to this reporter that we have handled the whole Iranian situation in a curiously casual and inept fashion. This involves the stability of the Middle East, not just the oil from the big refineries at Abadan. The only thing new in our recent proposals was the offer of ten million American dollars; an offer made publicly, which Mossadegh could scarcely accept, because he could not make it appear as a victory over the British, a victory which he badly needs, in order to maintain his own domestic position. The Iranian economy is near collapse; the Shah still holds the loyalty of most of the army officers, but can no longer be sure of the support of the rank and file. The communist-controlled Tudeh Party is probably the most cohesive, powerful single unit in the country. And what we do is to offer, openly and publicly, ten million dollars, which in this situation is either too much or too little. It would seem that this is a case where a little secret diplomacy might have been more effective than a public proposal, which did not even attempt to state why we thought it necessary or advisable to put up the ten million. As matters stand now we have not yet evolved a method of persuading the Iranians to accept our money.

We were speaking of secrecy and diplomacy. ~~Both work well when there~~ are [redacted]. ~~But~~ As John Ray once said:"You must not speak of secret matters, in a field, that is full of little hills." Of course, secrecy is a delicate thing. And to keep one, Henry Taylor back in 1836 gave this sound advice:"A secret may sometimes best be kept, by keeping the secret of its being a secret."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - SEPTEMBER 3, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said in Tampa today: there is a difference between the Democratic and Republican parties: "One is saddled with a mess, the other wants to clear it up." In speeches in Tampa, Birmingham and Little Rock, the General finished this southern tour in which he spoke to an estimated 150-thousand persons and received an enthusiastic greeting everywhere. In Tampa he made an appeal for a return to the spiritual and moral standards of our forefathers, referred to the unalienable rights mentioned in the Declaration of Independence, and then, in the closest he came to the civil rights issue, General Eisenhower said the founding fathers did not try to explain these rights in terms of color of skin, religion or anything else. He said in Tampa: "I am down here to make certain that there are two parties in the South....don't you be taken for granted." In Birmingham the General said: "I'm down here to try to cut taxes." He acknowledged that we must spend a lot of money for national defense. But he said we can cut taxes, reduce federal spending, if we eliminate "the duplication, bungling and graft" of the Democratic administration. The General said many veterans in his audience would recall seeing duplication and waste at their bases and stations. He said we must get the most value in a security for the dollars we spend. At Little Rock the General said we can have prosperity without war... a prosperity that makes anything in the past seem puny.

As Eisenhower completed his two-day southern tour, Governor Stevenson's advisors, in Springfield, told reporters Stevenson had previously planned a southern trip with no reference to Eisenhower's recent one. This unidentified advisor says Stevenson will go ahead with his planned campaign, will not put aside his program to answer any statements made by Eisenhower. Stevenson today told the Democratic finance committee: "I like the idea of a drive for contributions that will be without promises and without threats. And of course" he added, "make it successful." The finance chairman, Beardsley Ruml says the Party has spent most of the one million dollars it has raised to date.

The President is back in the White House pleased with the success of his campaigning to and from his Milwaukee speech. And today, John Foster Dulles, an Eisenhower advisor, accused Mr. Truman of following the Russian line in his attack on Eisenhower. Mr. Truman had accused the General and his "masterminds" of "gutter policies", that might bring on war. Mr. Dulles says the President is trying to belittle and besmirch Eisenhower. He says: "We can trust the man who won peace rather than the man who lost it." In a statement to reporters, Dulles said: "It is natural that President Truman should resent the idea that there can be better policies than his policies." He added: "It is absurd to suggest that General Eisenhower anticipates invoking wholesale insurrection by unarmed slaves."

And Secretary of State Acheson, approving what the President has said about the Eisenhower and Dulles suggestions, indicates he may defend the Administration's foreign policy, possibly in a speech in Kansas City on Thursday. Senator Kefauver today called on all of his supporters to back Governor Stevenson. He said Stevenson will "fight to rout out corruption....continue the good fight for the Democratic ideal."

The state of Nevada today was considering one of the biggest political upsets in its history. Thomas W. Mechling, a 31-year-old former Washington newspaperman, who has been in the state for seven months, defeated former state Attorney General, Alan Bible, in the race for the Democratic senatorial nomination. Bible was supported by Senator McCarran, the state's present Democratic Senator. Mechling won by some 700 votes in a campaign directed against what he called the McCarran machine. Republican Senator Malone easily won his party's renomination.

In Washington today, former Justice Department attorney, James A. Mullally, told a House committee that he received 750-dollars in 1947 from a law firm which helped a company facing federal charges. Mullally, who resigned after he was suspended from the Department two weeks ago, said this was the "outside legal activity" which brought about his suspension. He said there was nothing "sinister or dishonest" about his action; the money was a "gift" rather than a payment. The case against the company was later dismissed. Mullally said he had absolutely nothing to do with the case; just helped bring the law firm and company "together." A Justice Department official testified that the case against the Carnation Milk Company was dropped because it was a borderline case, a minor offense, and Carnation was a reputable firm with an excellent record.

Officials of the United Mine Workers today told reporters they are "making progress" in negotiations with the hard coal industry.

The Army today ordered the early release of "several thousand" reserve officers, who were called to active duty involuntarily, from the inactive or volunteer reserve. They will be released two or three months earlier than planned because many other officers have extended their terms of service and more new second lieutenants are now being assigned to duty.

It rained in Korea today, as much as three and a half inches, grounding almost all of our planes and making life at the front more miserable.

The truce talks resume in a few hours, ending the fifth straight week-long recess.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 403 casualties in Korea last week. The list now has 116,655 names, including 20,506 dead.

In Moscow, where Chinese and Russian leaders have been meeting for 17 days, Stalin and Mao Tze-Tung exchanged greetings in which they said they were pleased at the friendship between their two countries. The Russian press made it clear the Chinese owe a debt to Soviet military might. All this was to mark the anniversary of the Japanese surrender.

In Tokyo, spokesmen for 818 minor Japanese war criminals told foreign correspondents, they consider their jail sentences unreasonable, and illegal. They want to be released at once.

In Belgium the minister of Justice resigned as a result of nation-wide criticism over the release of two Belgian war criminals.

And in Paris the ministers of the North Atlantic treaty organization called a Paris meeting for about December 15th.

Here in New York, the state's crime commission has subpenaed the bank records of 300 union and political leaders in a drive on the waterfront rackets.

And Miami storn forecasters say the hurricane now 700 miles off Palm Beach is moving towards the northwest "on a potentially dangerous course."

Several months ago the President set up a commission headed by General Jimmy Doolittle, to make recommendations about airfields in this country. The commission recommended the integration of airfields with other means of transportation; said that airfields ought to be moved closer to the cities they serve, (not more than forty minutes by car from the centre of the city). The Government ought to spend more money for airports, and there should be helicopter taxi service between the airport and the city.

Obviously not much is going to be done about existing airports, but the Doolittle commission made some sound recommendations about future plans. It said that any new airport should have a clear level area a thousand feet wide, and at least a half-mile long, stretching beyond the end of each main runway. And there should be no buildings for at least two miles in the funnel leading into the runway - the outer end of the funnel being six thousand feel wide.

President Truman today approved the recommendations, and directed the appropriate federal agencies to start putting them into effect. This action won't increase either the capacity or the safety of our airfields immediately, but it's a sensible piece of long-range planning.

Plans for settling the six months' old dispute between Britain and Iran regarding the nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, aren't progressing too well. Last week end President Truman and Prime Minister Churchill published their offer to Iranian Premier Mossadegh. They promised ten million dollars from this country; proposed that the matter of how much should be paid for the British oil interests be left to the International Court of Justice. The British agreed to lift their ban on shipments to Iran; and agreed to market the oil now stored there. Premier Mossadegh turned down these proposals, because he said "they would not make a favorable impression on the Iranian people."

Today Secretary of State Acheson publicly urged Mossadegh to reconsider his refusal of the Anglo-American proposal. He said it was fair and reasonable, and had no strings attached. But the Iranian Government wants no part of it.

It seems to this reporter that we have handled the whole Iranian situation in a curiously casual and inept fashion. This involves the stability of the Middle East, not just the oil from the big refineries at Abadan. The only thing new in our recent proposals was the offer of ten million American dollars, an offer made publicly, which Mossadegh could scarcely accept, because he could not make it appear as a victory over the British, a victory which he badly needs in order to maintain his own domestic position. The Iranian economy is near collapse; the Shah still holds the loyalty of most of the army officers, but can no longer be sure of the support of the rank and file. The communist-controlled Tudeh Party is probably the most cohesive, powerful single unit in the country. And what we do is to offer, openly and publicly ten million dollars which in this situation is either too much or too little. It would seem that this is a case where a little secret diplomacy might have been more effective than a public proposal, which did not even attempt to state why we thought it necessary or advisable to put up the ten million. As matters stand now, we have not yet evolved a method of persuading the Iranians to accept our money.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of secrecy and diplomacy. As John Ray once said: "You must not speak of secret matters in a field that is full of little hills." Of course, secrecy is a delicate thing. And to keep one, Henry Taylor back in 1836 gave this sound advice: "A secret may sometimes best be kept by keeping the secret of its being a secret."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday - Sept. 4, 1952

This is the news:

General Eusenhower tonight will accuse the Administration of "bungling" into the Korean war, and the brink of world war. The General will speak in Philadelphia. And in a few minutes I'd like to summarize for you the main points he will make. #

Governor Stevenson speaks in Denver tomorrow...and Wilson Wyatt, his campaign manager, says Stevenson "will pay his respects to the catch phrases and slogans" of the Republicans..such as "its time for a change." # The governor follows the Denver speech, with a nine-day tour of nine western states. Mr. Wyatt told reporters today that he is not worried about Eisenhower's southern trip.. And when a reporter said that the reaction to Stevenson's Labor Day speech in Detroit was something less than enthusiastic, Wyatt replied:"It wasn't a rip-roaring speech. The response we want is on election day, and I Believe we'll get it." He said the Governor will not "write down" to the American people..thinks its a good thing to treat the people as the adults they are.

The State Department said today that Secretary Acheson will not enter the politica campaign.. but he may make speeches to "clarify" some of the terms being used in foreign policy discussions.

Editor and Publisher magazine says today that the nation's daily newspapers favor General Eisenhower over Governor Stevenson by a five to one margin.. The magazine's survey shows that Eisenhower has the greatest newspaper support of any Republican candidate in recent history..due largely to the switch by many southern papers to a [redacted] REPUBLICAN candidate.

In Chicago, Colonel Mc Cormick, editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune, predicts that four years from now there will be a third major political party with a candidate campaigning for the presidency. He says a third party has to come because too many of our people are not now represented by either the Republicans or Democrats. The publisher says he considers himself "the most hereditary Republican in America."

The government reported today that July production of planes, tanks, guns and ammunition reached a new peak.. a slight increase over the two billion dollars worth of military goods produced in June. Acting Defense Mobilizer Steelman says the steel industry is taking "extraordinary steps" to speed up ammunition production.

The President today called on the nation to do more for the physically disabled. And he set up a special commission to study and evaluate our immigration and nationalization policies.

The Civil Service Commission says it will suspend a woman employe in connection with the leak of confidential Loyalty Review Board records to Senator Mc Carthy. The Commission says Miss Mariam Dehass, has refused to answer certain questions a commission representative asked

Her

Attorney General Mc Granery says he is expanding the Justice Department's INTERNAL security section...starting a new program to put the spolight on subversive elements in this country. The department will develop more fully information it gets from the F.B.I.

A Senate Committee today asked the Department to consider perjury action against leaders of the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America. The committee says the union is dominated by "agents of the Kremlin"...its top officers have been identified as Communists, but signed non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley law.

The United Mine Workers and representatives of the hard coal industry today recessed their negotiations until next week..without agreement on a new contract.

In Korea, the air force says our Sabre Jets today shot down 12 enemy Migs, and damaged three others...one of the biggest victories of the air war. At least one of our planes failed to return.

India today returned to Communist China an 84-thousand dollar donation for famine relief. The Chinese insisted that the money be distributed through a certain Communist-sponsored famine committee in India. The government therefore returned the money.

5

In Iran today, five persons were killed and 10 injured when police fired into a rioting mob of Communists and anti-communists. Press reports say the trouble started when anti-Communists tried to take over a factory, occupied by the Communist party in the town of Semnan.

In Breat Britain, the Trades Union Congress approved an appeal by its leaders that all unions show restraint in their wage demands because of Britain's critical economic situation.

In Rome, Carlo Sforza died after a lengthy illness. The 79-year-old Sforza resigned as foreign minister last year, because of his health. He spent 17 years in voluntary exile, mostly in this country, after Mussolini seized power in Italy. Secretary of State Acheson says Sforza was a great statesman who served not only his own country but Europe and the world.

Edward R. Murrow: September 4, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

About an hour-and-a-half from now General Eisenhower will deliver his first major speech on foreign policy, in Philadelphia. He will say again that there is only one issue in this campaign, and that is "the mess in Washington." The only way to clean it up is to elect the Republicans to office. What Washington is in need of is not new administrators of the policies of the old administration; but a new administration with new policies.

Before outlining his own policies, Eisenhower will present his indictment of the present Administration; will contend that it has "bungled us perilously close to World War Three." Today freedom falters and communism crusades. For seven years men, women and children have been delivered into communist slavery, at the appalling rate of one hundred million a year. Today our economy is a war economy. Our initiative, imagination and productive system are tied and shackled to war, and the prospect of war. Our prosperity is a war prosperity.

Eisenhower will then answer the question: "Why are we at war in Korea?" Because this Administration grossly underestimated the actual threat. Because it allowed America to become weak; failed to build up adequate strength for South Korea's defense. The Administration abandoned China to the communists, and wrote off most of the Far East, as beyond our direct concern. That will be the indictment against the present Administration.

General Eisenhower will then turn to the future. We can win the battle for peace only after the Republicans have won the battle for Washington. There must be no curtain of evasion, of suppression or double talk between his Administration and the people. We must be strong enough, so that no move against us can threaten the nation's security, economy and peace. / That goal immediately "destroys" any idea of isolationism. / Our allies must be bound to us in terms of their own enlightened self-interest. / There must be no American imperialism. # General Eisenhower will say that we must aid by every peaceful means the right to live in freedom. We shall never be truculent but we shall never appease. We must give unwavering support to the United Nations. This country must be economically strong and increase its productive strength. We must also be strong militarily, while at the same time striving for general disarmament. We must make imaginative and practical use of every means for preventing war. That means skillful and constant use of the power of truth; able diplomacy, and mutually profitable trade relations.

The final point in the General's ten-point program will be that we must root out of government, those who would betray our system, or abuse our confidence. The General will assert that through this program future Koreas can be avoided, and the present Korean war brought more surely to an honorable and successful end. We can discourage future aggression, speed up economic progress, restore tranquility and confidence to American life.

That is, I think, a fair summary of the speech General Eisenhower will deliver in Philadelphia tonight.

In this reporter's opinion, the General's ten-point foreign policy program contains little that the present Administration would object to. In broad outline he appears to support the Administration's foreign policy, while maintaining that the Republicans could conduct it more effectively and honestly.

The General's reference to the peaceful liberation of the enslaved people of eastern Europe was obviously intended to reassure those people both here and abroad who had concluded, as a result of his statement to the American Legion that we would never rest content until they were free, he meant that we would undertake a war in order to free them. This he didn't say and didn't intend. So his reference to "peaceful means" tonight is meant as an amplification rather than a ~~contraction~~ retraction.

General Eisenhower is against isolationism; for the United Nations; against imperialism; for freer trade; in favor of an honorable end to the Korean war; in favor of general disarmament; against anything that smacks of American imperialism. # On all of these subjects he is in agreement the public utterances of Administration spokesmen. # His position is, however, at variance with the voting record of a substantial number of his fellow Republicans in the House and Senate. # Given this broad area of agreement between the Republican candidate and the Administration on foreign policy, where do we find the difference between them? # In the General's own words there is only one issue: the mess in Washington - wasters, bunglers, incompetence. Past mistakes, particularly in Asia, that have led us ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ perilously close to World War 111.

The General's argument with the Administration about our foreign policy is clearly not concerned with the direction in which it's moving, or its ultimate objectives. It is rather about the manner and method in which it has been conducted, and the competence of those who have conducted it. He appears to agree that the Administration has found the right road, but he wants a new driver and conductor for this star-spangled bus, in order to avoid detours, operate it more efficiently and avoid wrecks or collisions before reaching the final destination.

At this point in the campaign the spokesmen of both Parties appear to be in general agreement as to the destination and the route to be followed. They are arguing about who is to do the driving. This is a state of affairs calculated to encourage our allies and bring no comfort to our enemies.

If the present tenor of the argument over foreign policy continues it may remind some of an old Russian proverb which goes like this: "It's just like two bald-headed men arguing over a comb." And for no reason at all that reminds me of a profound political question put by E.B. White: "Who has a longer view of things, anyway? A Prime Minister in a closet, or a man on a barn roof?"

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - SEPTEMBER 4, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower tonight will accuse the Administration of "bungling" into the Korean war and the brink of world war. The General will speak in Philadelphia. And in a few minutes I'd like to summarize for you the main points he will make.

Governor Stevenson speaks in Denver tomorrow, and Wilson Wyatt, his campaign manager, says Stevenson "will pay his respects to the catch phrases and slogans" of the Republicans, such as "its time for a change." The Governor follows the Denver speech with a nine-day tour of nine western states. Mr. Wyatt told reporters today that he is not worried about Eisenhower's southern trip. And when a reporter said that the reaction to Stevenson's Labor Day speech in Detroit was something less than enthusiastic, Wyatt replied: "It wasn't a rip-roaring speech. The response we want is on election day, and I believe we'll get it." He said the Governor will not "write down" to the American people; thinks it's a good thing to treat the people as the adults they are.

The State Department said today that Secretary Acheson will not enter the political campaign, but he may make speeches to "clarify" some of the terms being used in foreign policy discussions.

Editor and Publisher magazine says today that the nation's daily newspapers favor General Eisenhower over Governor Stevenson by a five to one margin. The magazine's survey shows that Eisenhower has the greatest newspaper support of any Republican candidate in recent history, due largely to the switch by many southern papers to a Republican candidate.

In Chicago, Colonel McCormick, editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune, predicts that four years from now, there will be a third major political party with a candidate campaigning for the presidency. He says a third party has to come because too many of our people are not now represented by either the Republicans or Democrats. The publisher says he considers himself "the most hereditary Republican in America."

The Government reported today that July production of planes, tanks, guns and ammunition reached a new peak - a slight increase over the two billion dollars w rth of military goods produced in June. Acting Defense Mobilizer Steelman says the steel industry is taking "extraordinary steps" to speed up ammunition production.

The President today called on the nation to do more for the physically disabled. And he set up a special commission to study and evaluate our immigration and nationalization policies.

The Civil Service Commission says it will suspend a woman employee in connection with the leak of confidential Loyalty Review Board records to Senator McCarthy. The Commission says Miss Mariam Dehass, has refused to answer certain questions a commission representative asked her.

Attorney General McGranery says he is expanding the Justice Department's internal security section, starting a new program to put the spotlight on subversive elements in this country. The Department will develop more fully information it gets from the F.B.I.

A Senato Committee today asked the Department to consider perjury action against leaders of the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America. The Committee says the union is dominated by "agents of the Kremlin"; its top officers have been identified as Communists, but signed non-communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley law.

The United Mine Workers and representatives of the hard coal industry today recessed their negotiations until next week, without agreement on a new contract.

In Korea, the Air Force says our Sabre Jets today shot down 12 enemy MIGs and damaged three others, one of the biggest victories of the air war. At least one of our planes failed to return.

India today returned to Communist China an 84-thousand dollar donation for famine relief. The Chinese insisted that the money be distributed through a certain communist-sponsored famine committee in India. The government therefore returned the money.

In Iran today, five persons were killed and 10 injured when police fired into a rioting mob of communists and anti-communists. Press reports say the trouble started when anti-communists tried to take over a factory occupied by the communist party in the town of Semnan.

In Great Britain, the Trades Union Congress approved an appeal by its leaders that all unions show restraint in their wage demands, because of Britain's critical economic situation.

In Rome, Carlo Sforza died after a lengthy illness. The 79-year-old Sforza resigned as foreign minister last year because of his health. He spent 17 years in voluntary exile, mostly in this country, after Mussolini seized power in Italy. Secretary of State Acheson says Sforza was a great statesman, who served not only his own country but Europe and the world.

About an hour-and-a-half from now, General Eisenhower will deliver his first major speech on foreign policy, in Philadelphia. He will say again that there is only one issue in this campaign, and that is "the mess in Washington." The only way to clean it up is to elect the Republicans to office. What Washington is in need of is not new administrators of the policies of the old administration, but a new administration with new policies.

Before outlining his own policies, Eisenhower will present his indictment of the present Administration, will contend that it has "bungled us perilously close to World War Three." Today freedom falters and communism crusades. For seven years men, women and children have been delivered into communist slavery at the appalling rate of one hundred million a year. Today our economy is a war economy. Our initiative, imagination and productive system are tied and shackled to war and the prospect of war. Our prosperity is a war prosperity.

Eisenhower will then answer the question: "Why are we at war in Korea?" Because this Administration grossly underestimated the actual threat - because it allowed America to become weak - failed to build up adequate strength for South Korea's defense. The Administration abandoned China to the communists, and wrote off most of the Far East as beyond our direct concern. That will be the indictment against the present Administration.

General Eisenhower will then turn to the future. We can win the battle for peace only after the Republicanshave won the battle for Washington. There must be no curtain of evasion, of suppression or double talk between his Administration and the people. We must be strong enough, so that no move against us can threaten the nation's security, economy and peace. That goal immediately "destroys" any idea of isolationism. Our allies must be bound to us in terms of their own enlightened self-interest. There must be no American imperialism. General Eisenhower will say that we must aid by every peaceful means the right to live in freedom. We shall never be truculent but we shall never appease. We must give unwavering support to the United Nations. This country must be economically strong and increase its productive strength. We must also be strong militarily, while at the same time striving for general disarmament. We must make imaginative and practical use of every means for preventing war. That means skillful and constant use of the power of truth, able diplomacy, and mutually profitable trade relations.

The final point in the General's ten-point program will be that we must root out of Government those who would betray our system or abuse our confidence. The General will assert that through this program future Koreas can be avoided, and the present Korean war brought more surely to an honorable and successful end. We can discourage future aggression, speed up economic progress, restore tranquility and confidence to American life.

That is, I think, a fair summary of the speech General Eisenhower will deliver in Philadelphia tonight.

In this reporter's opinion, the General's ten-point foreign policy program contains little that the present Administration would object to. In broad outline he appears to support the Administration's foreign policy, while maintaining that the Republicans could conduct it more effectively and honestly.

The General's reference to the peaceful liberation of the enslaved people of eastern Europe was obviously intended to reassure those people both here and abroad who had concluded as a result of his statement to the American Legion, that we would never rest content until they were free, he meant that we would not undertake a war in order to free them. This he didn't say and didn't intend. So his reference to "peaceful means" tonight is meant as an amplification rather than a retraction.

General Eisenhower is against isolationism, for the United Nations, against imperialism, for freer trade, in favor of an honorable end to the Korean war, in favor of general disarmament, against anything that smacks of American imperialism. On all of these subjects he is in agreement the public utterances of Administration spokesmen. His position is, however, at varieance with the voting record of a substantial number of his fellow Republicans in the House and Senate. Given this broad area of agreement between the Republican candidate and the Administration on foreign policy, where do we find the difference between them? In the General's own words there is only one issue: the mess in Washington - wasters, bunglers, incompetence - past mistakes, particularly in Asia that have led us perilously close to World War Three.

The General's argument with the Administration about our foreign policy is clearly not concerned with the direction in which it's moving or its ultimate objectives. It is rather about the manner and method in which it has been conducted, and the competence of those who have conducted it. He appears to agree that the Administration has found the right road, but he wants a new driver and conductor for this star-spangled bus, in order to avoid detours, operate it more efficiently and avoid wrecks or collisions before reaching the final destination.

At this point in the campaign the spokesmen of both Parties appear to be in general agreement as to the destination and the route to be followed. They are arguing about who is to do the driving. This is a state of affairs calculated to encourage our allies, and bring no comfort to our enemies.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: If the present tenor of the argument over foreign policy continues, it may remind some of an old Russian proverb, which goes like this: "It's just like two bald-headed men arguing over a comb." And for no reason at all, that reminds me of a profound political question put by E. B. White: "Who has a longer view of things, anyway? A Prime Minister in a closet, or a man on a barn roof?"

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday - September 5, 1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson says "any crooks he finds in government will be exposed and punished." General Eisenhower says he's going to try to draw Senator Taft onto his team..to lead a very important section of his fight for the presidency. Senator Taft says he'll meet with Eisenhower next week.. to determine what part he'll play in the campaign.

In a fewminutes we'll have direct reports from Chicago and Denver, on the activities of the two major candidates.

At the United Nations, Jacob Malik of Russia said the President, Secretary of State Acheson and General Eisenhower don't really want peace.. they want war. Malik used the word "snollygosters".. INTRODUCED [redacted] by the President IN A POLITICAL SPEECH [redacted] last week.. and said American political leaders are "hypocrites, liars and warmongers."

In Connecticut, the state republican convention has chosen Prescott Bush to be the republican candidate for the Senate ~~death~~ Seat left vacant by the death of Democratic Senator Mc Mahon. Former Representative Clare Booth Luce was third in a field of eight persons who received votes.

The President today named Henry H. Fowler, now the defense production administrator, to become defense mobilizer..the job left vacant when Charles E. Wilson resigned last spring.

Arthur S. Fleming, head of the mobilization office's manpower commission, says it may be necessary to draft fathers.. and change or repeal the present deferments for college students.

Dr. Edward U. Condon, former director of the Bureau of Standards, told the House un-American activities committee, he knew "socially" a group of scientists accused of communist activities... once had them in his home. Dr. Condon said he was aware of espionage charges made against Dr. Joseph Weinberg, a scientist, but does not believe them..they have not been proved.

~~Senator Byrd reported today that the government's civilian payroll at the end of June contained nearly two million more persons th for the year ending July first cost nearly two billions more than for the previous year... because of pay raises voted by Congress and the fact that there are more government workers... nine and a half million of them.~~

A National Labor Relations Board report says the National Paper Company of Atlanta and Southern Detectives, Inc, have violated the law. The paper company is accused of hiring armed guards and using "virtual chain gang tactics in watching employes at work..in an attempt to discourage union membership.

General Van Fleet told reporters in Korea today: the Communists have now built their armies to more than one million men.. but we have built our lines into "a strong coast to coast installation." The General praised allied air attacks.. saying they hurt the Communists badly..but still the enemy has "ample stocks for an offensive." The Communists today made another attempt to seize Bunker Hill. We claim to have killed 400 of them. But one of our wounded soldiers says:"They were in front of us, on our flanks and behind us. They got in our trenches. Some of our guys got it from bayonets. It was slaughter."

A "highly placed source" in India says the 300-man Indian army medical unit in Korea, will be called home in November..and not replaced. There is no comment from the India defense ministry.

In East Germany, the Communist government has confiscated all goods, vehicles, money and businesses, owned by West Berliners. The West Berlin government says the business places have been turned into "nationalized property."

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Friday, September 5, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... All this week, Gen. Eisenhower and Gov. Stevenson have been busy speech-making, planning, conferring on their political campaigns. One of our correspondents has spent a week with each of the candidates. And we thought you might like to hear their estimates of the progress made in both camps. First, let's hear a report from Bill Downs in Chicago.

DOWNS: It's evident now that the Eisenhower organization is going to depend upon two things to win a Republican victory in November: Sin and personality. The General's hard-hitting attacks against corruption in government - against what he calls scandalous incompetence and the so called administration policies of stumble, fumble and fall - all this constitutes the 'sin' department. In the personality department, even Eisenhower's own advisers have been astounded by the way that their man has developed into a candidate. He's not perfect yet, but is coming along and even shows signs of liking the sound of his own words. Equally surprising is the drawing power of the Eisenhower name, proved by the swing through the South that still has the GOP leaders talking of cracking that solid Democratic stronghold.

And some observers say that the only thing comparable in recent political history to Eisenhower's emotional reception in Philadelphia last night, was the reception given President Franklin Roosevelt in Chicago, in 1944.

Well, a few hours ago, here in Chicago, Gen. Eisenhower met with a group of GOP leaders from Indiana, Michigan and Illinois. After a brief speech in which he called for a crusade of strong idealism, he called on his fellow politicians for questions. "If any of you want to drive a few nails," Eisenhower said, "I'll temporarily mount the cross."

Well, he was asked questions alright and tough ones. A Negro Chicago Republican asked if Eisenhower intended to appoint any anti-

Negro southerners to his cabinet, and asked if possibly he would not consider a Negro for a place on the cabinet. The General replied that he would have no one around him in a position of responsibility who was going to take a reactionary view about the basic tenets of our Constitution, - that we are 'created equal regardless of race or religion.' Then he declared, "I will search for merit wherever it is. I will search for the qualifications needed to serve the United States well. And if in a particular field you can find someone whose appointment wouldgive reassurance to the great body of Negroes, I should very much like to do such a thing."

Another Illinois Republican wanted to know Eisenhower and his former GOP opponent, Senator Taft, were going to get together. This politician said that pro-Taft Republicans in his district were threatening to stay home on Election Day. Well, the General said that as far as he's concerned the meeting could take place any day. He pointed out that Taft's on vacation and added "realizing his great responsibility of the Senate leader, it would be foolish for me to abstain." Eisenhower said, "I'll try to draw him in on my team not only as a consultant but as a man who will lead a very important section of the fight."

As Ed Murrow told you earlier, Taft tonight confirms that he will meet with the General next week.

But always Eisenhower returns to the issue of morality. He declared that if we carry tothe people a message of honest government 'we've got the nub ofthecampaign.' He said the Republicans can win in November only by convincing the people they are sincere and not merely making political promises.

It's been an encouraging week for the Eisenhower camp. But there are questions still remaining to be answered about his campaign. For example; Were the large crowds in the South anything more than curiosity seekers; can a campaign - based mainly on emotional idealism - stand up to the rapier wit and cutting analysis ofthe Democratic candidate; will Eisenhower be driven into a corner on such things as F.E.P.C. and the farm program. Well, we'll know more about the Eisenhower appeal to farmers when he speaks to the National Plowing Contest in Kasson, Minnesota, tomorrow.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Governor Stevenson speaks in Denver tonight. For a summary of that speech and the week's work by the Democrats, let's hear from Ed Morgan in Denver.

MORGAN: On his first sally into the wide open spaces of the west as a candidate, Denver has so far received Gov. Stevenson quietly, almost without demonstration. Whether this is a mark of sophistication achieved by Denver's having been his opponents GHQ, whether this indicates an aloofness with political ramifications, it is impossible to say. But the very dimensions of the big country emphasize the vastness of the governor's job in registering himself upon it.

In a major speech here tonight, though, he is aiming some more of the rapier-like Stevenson rhetoric not just at the West, but at the electorate as a whole. With the tip of his sword of argument, he attempts to impail that telling Republican slogan: "It's time for a change," and he counter-thrusts with the question: "Change to what?"

"I wouldbe perfectly willing," he says boldly, "to have the outcome of this election decided on these questions: "Which party best understands the meaning of change in the modern world? Which party has ignored it? Which has anticipated the need for a change and done something about it? Which party has resisted about every important change for the past 25-yrs.?"

And looking ahead now, "Which party is most likely to cope effectively with the vast changes already in the making?"

"I shall not argue," he goes on, "that it is necessarily fatal to change horses in mid-stream. But I doubt if it is wise to jump on a struggling two-headed elephant, trying to swim in both directions at the same time, in very rough water."

Despite manifest White House sensitivity on the subject, the Governor attempts to meet head on the Eisenhower challenge of the 'mess in Washington.' "Corruption in public office," he says, "is treason." He would root out andpunish crooks as quickly as he cound catch them. He adds the pointed boast that he knows more about catching them than his opponent because of the practice he had in trying to clean up what he called the 'magnificent Republican rascality of his predecessor in Illinois!

Indignantly, Stevenson accuses Gen. Eisenhower of having been badgered into slinging mud at home by attacking his honesty and his fidelity to public trust. "I had not expected that from the General," Stevenson says crisply, "and I will not repay him in kind, but I would thank him to read more carefully what I don't believe he would write himself."

The governor winds up in a bid for the independent vote with the observation that the discerning citizen believes not in the slogans of people out of office and wanting in, but in the power and right of peaceful continuous change for the better.

The impact of this speech can't bemeasured immediately. This man Stevenson is a rare species of political fauna anyway. How are you going to catalogue a man who reveals a hole in the sole of his shoe in Flint, Michigan, and sails into the west, as he did this morning by plane, wearing a Homburg hat.

Again the governor has spurned the whoop and holler approach as completely alien to his makeup. If he manages to conquerthis rugged independent domain, it will be with the earnestness of a county agent and with an urbanity more carefully tailored than any store-bought suit.

All in all, it's an unusual ... political combination as ever seen in these or any other parts. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

(30)

All this week, General Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson have been busy speech-making, planning, confering on their political campaigns. One of our correspondents has spent the week with each of the candidates and we thought you might like to hear their estimates of the progress made in both camps.

First, let's hear a report from Bill Downs in Chicago;

(runs 3;30 t return cue: "This is Bill Downs in Chicago. Now back to ERM in NY)

Governor Stevenson speaks in Denver tonight. For a summary of that speech and the week's work, let's hear from Ed Morgan in Denver:

(runs 3;30 ending: Now back to E Murrowin New York)

That was Correspondent Edward P. Morgan reporting from Denver.

Tomorrow our two correspondents meet in Kasson, Minnesota, where both candidates speak to the National Plowing Contest. No meeting has been arranged between the General and the Governor.

— Susquehanna —

We are now being subjected to ~~a seemingly endless~~ the usual round of political speeches. Two hundred years ago, the Englishman, Benjamin Wichkut remarked:"Man is born with the faculty of speech. But why should he be able to speak before he has anything to say." Alfred Blomfield once set up a pretty good standard when he said:"His speeches are those of one who has something to say, not of one who has to say something."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - SEPTEMBER 5, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson says: "Any crooks he finds in Government will be exposed and punished." General Eisenhower says he's going to try to draw Senator Taft onto his team, to lead a very important section of his fight for the presidenc Senator Taft says he'll meet with Eisenhower next week to determine what part he'll play in the campaign.

In a few minutes we'll have direct reports from Chicago and Denver on the activities of the two major candidates.

At the United Nations, Jacob Malik of Russia said the President, Secretary of State Acheson and General Eisenhower don't really want peace; they want war. Malik used the word "snollygosters" introduced by the President in a political speech last week, and said American political leaders are "hypocrites, liars and warmongers."

In Connecticut, the state republican convention has chosen Prescott Bush to be the republican candidate for the Senate seat left vacant by the death of Democratic Senator McMahon. Former Representative Clare Booth Luce was third in a field of eight persons who received votes.

The President today named Henry H. Fowler, now the defense production administrator, to become defense mobilizer, the job left vacant when Charles E. Wilson resigned last spring.

Arthur S. Fleming, head of the mobilization office's manpower commission, says it may be necessary to draft fathers, and change or repeal the present deferments for college students.

Dr. Edward U. Condon, former director of the Bureau of Standards, told the House un-American activities committee, he knew "socially" a group of scientists accused of communist activities; once had then in his home. Dr. Condon said he was aware of espionage charges made against Dr. Joseph Weinberg, a scientist, but does not believe them; they have not been proved.

A National Labor Relations Board report says the National Paper Company of Atlanta and Southern Detectives, Inc, have violated the law. The paper company is accused of hiring armed guards and using "virtual chain gang tactics" in watching employees at work in an attempt to discourage union membership.

General Van Fleet told reporters in Korea today the communists have now built their armies to more than one million men, but we have built our lines into "a strong coast to coast installation." The General praised allied air attacks, saying they hurt the communists badly, but still the enemy has "ample stocks for an offensive." The communists today made another attempt to seize Bunker Hill. We claim to have killed 400 of them. But one of our wounded soldiers says: "They were in front of us on our flanks and behind us. They got in our trenches. Some of our guys got it from bayonets. It was slaughter."

A "highly placed source" in India says the 300-man Indian army medical unit in Korea will be called home in November and not replaced. There is no commen from the India defense ministry.

In East Germany, the communist government has confiscated all goods, vehicles, money and businesses owned by West Berliners. The West Berlin government says the business places have been turned into "nationalized property."

All this week, General Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson have been busy speech-making, planning, confering on their political campaigns. One of our correspondents has spent the week with each of the candidates, and we thought you might like to hear their estimates of the progress made in both camps.

First, let's hear a report from Bill Downs in Chicago:

DOWNS: It's evident now that the Eisenhower organization is going to depend upon two things to win a Republican victory in November: sin and personality. The General's hard-hitting attacks against corruption in government - against what he calls scandalous incompetence and the so called administration policies of stumble, fumble and fall - all this constitutes the 'sin' department. In the personality department, even Eisenhower's own advisers have been astounded by the way that their man has developed into a candidate. He's not perfect yet, but is coming along and even shows signs of liking the sound of his own words. Equally surprising is the drawing power of the Eisenhower name, proved by the swing through the South that still has the GOP leaders talking of cracking that solid Democratic stronghold.

And some observers say that the only thing comparable in recent political history to Eisenhower's emotional reception in Philadelphia last night, was the reception given President Franklin Roosevelt in Chicago, in 1944.

Well, a few hours ago, here in Chicago, General Eisenhower met with a group of GOP leaders from Indiana, Michigan and Illinois. After a brief speech in which he called for a crusade of strong idealism, he called on his fellow politicians for questions. "If any of you want to drive a few nails," Eisenhower said, "I'll temporarily mount the cross."

Well, he was asked questions alright and tough ones. A negro Chicago Republican asked if Eisenhower intended to appoint any anti-negro southerners to his cabinet, and asked if possibly he would not consider a Negro for a place on the cabinet. The General replied that he would have no one around him in a position of responsibility who was going to take a reactionary view about the basic tenets of our Constitution; that we are 'created equal regardless of race or religion.' Then he declared; "I will search for merit wherever it is. I will search for the qualifications needed to serve the United States well. And if in a particular field you can find someone whose appointment would give reassurance to the great body of negroes, I should very much like to do such a thing."

Another Illinois Republican wanted to know Eisenhower and his former GOP opponent, Senator Taft, were going to get together. This politician said that pro-Taft Republicans in his district were threatening to stay home on Election Day. Well, the General said that as far as he's concerned, the meeting could take place any day. He pointed out that Taft's on vacation and added, "realizing his great responsibility of the Senate leader, it would be foolish for me to abstain." Eisenhower said: "I'll try to draw him in on my team not only as a consultant, but as a man who will lead a very important section of the fight."

As Ed Murrow told you earlier, Taft tonight confirms that he will meet with the General next week.

But always Eisenhower returns to the issue of morality. He declared that if we carry to the people a message of honest government, 'we've got the nub of the campaign.' He said the Republicans can win in November only by convincing the people they are sincere and not merely making political promises.

It's been an encouraging week for the Eisenhower camp. But there are questions still remaining to be answered about his campaign. For example: Were the large crowds in the South anything more than curiosity seekers; can a campaign - based mainly on emotional idealism - stand up to the rapier wit and cutting analysis of the Democratic candidate; will Eisenhower be driven into a corner on such things as FEPC, and the farm program. Well, we'll know more about the Eisenhower appeal to farmers when he speaks to the National Plowing Contest in Kasson, Minnesota, tomorrow.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Governor Stevenson speaks in Denver tonight. For a summary of that speech and the week's work by the Democrats, let's hear from Ed Morgan in Denver.

MORGAN: On his first sally into the wide open spaces of the west as a candidate Denver has so far received Gov. Stevenson quietly, almost without demonstration. Whether this is a mark of sophistication achieved by Denver's having been his opponents GHQ, whether this indicates an aloofness with political ramifications, it is impossible to say. But the very dimensions of the big country emphasize the vastness of the governor's job in registering himself upon it.

In a major speech here tonight, though, he is aiming some more of the rapier-like Stevenson rhetoric not just at the West, but at the electorate as a whole. With the tip of his sword of argument, he attempts to impail that telling Republican slogan: "It's time for a change," and he counter-thrusts with the question: "Change to what?"

"I would be perfectly willing," he says boldly, "to have the outcome of this election decided on these questions: 'Which party best understands the meaning of change in the modern world? Which party has ignored it? Which has anticipated the need for a change and done something about it? Which party has resisted about every important change for the past 25 years?'."

And looking ahead now, "Which party is most likely to cope effectively with the vast changes already in the making?"

"I shall not argue," he goes on, "that it is necessarily fatal to chang horses in mid-stream. But I doubt if it is wise to jump on a struggling two-headed elephant, trying to swim in both directions at the same time, in very rough water."

Despite manifest White House sensitivity on the subject, the Governor attempts to meet head on the Eisenhower challenge of the 'mess in Washington.' "Corruption in public pffice," he says "is treason." He would root out and punish crooks as quickly as he could catch them. He adds the pointed boast that he knows more about catching them than his opponent because of the practice he had in trying to clean up what he called the 'magnificent Republican rascality of his predecessor in Illinois.'

Indignantly, Stevenson accuses General Eisenhower of having been badgered into slinging mud at home by attacking his honesty and his fidelity to public trust. "I had not expected that from the General," Stevenson says crisply, "and I will not repay him in kind; but I would thank him to read more carefully what I don't believe he would write himself."

The Governor winds up in a bid for the independent vote with the observation that the discerning citizen believes not in the slogans of people out of office and wanting in, but in the power and right of peaceful continuous change for the better.

The impact of this speech can't be measured immediately. This man Stevenson is a rare species of political fauna anyway. How are you going to catalogue a man who reveals a hole in the sole of his shoe in Flint, Michigan, and sails into the West, as he did this morning by plane, wearing a Homburg hat.

Again the Governor has spurned the whoop and holler approach as completely alien to his makeup. If he manages to conquer this rugged independent domain, it will be with the earnestness of a county agent and with an urbanity more carefully tailored than any store-bought suit.

All in all, it's an unusual.....political combination as ever seen in these or any other parts. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was correspondent Edward P. Morgan reporting from Denver.

Tomorrow our two correspondents meet in Kasson, Minnesota, where both candidates speak to the National Plowing Contest. No meeting has been arranged between the General and the Governor.

This is Ed Murrow.. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are now being subjected to the usual round of political speeches. Two hundred years ago, the Englishman, Benjamin Wichkut remarked: "Man is born with the faculty of speech. But why should he be able to speak before he has anything to say." Alfred Blomfield once set up a pretty good standard when he said: "His speeches are those of one who has something to say, not of one who has to say something."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday - September 8, 1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will say in Seattle tonight, that he favors further development of America's natural resources.. he believes these resources are a common trust. Public and private interests must stop fighting over them. The Governor says, we must be sure that any big development projects must benefit the general public, not just one area. He is not sure that the office of the presidency is well enough equipped, "as things stand now," to appraise natural resource projects with [redacted] "detachment and critical authority." Earlier, in Portland, the Governor told a group of newspaper editors that he is "considerably concerned" by the extent to which "we are developing a one-party press, in a two-party country." He said the overwhelming majority of the press seems to be against Democrats.. (not after a considered review of all alternatives.) but just automatically, "as dogs are against cats." He said many columnists commentators, analysts, and feature writers use the very [redacted] demagoguery, claptrap [redacted] distortion and falsehood, that the press condemns FROM [redacted] politicians.

Charles [redacted] McCahill, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association says "the one party press" Stevenson talks of is the result of "the one-party mess in Washington."

General Eisenhower was in Ohio today...received the public support of almost all the state's top Republican leaders. He told them he is looking forward to meeting Senator Taft.. hopes Taft will play a major role in the campaign.. feels Taft will be one of the greatest figures in any Republican Administration.

Senator Taft, in Washington after his 7-week vacation, met with Republican National Chairman Summerfield. Mr. Summerfield later said: he's confident Taft will play a major part in the campaign..confident there will be a meeting of minds when Taft and Eisenhower meet soon. [redacted]

[redacted] later in a statement and in talking with reporters, Taft made it clear: he wants to meet with Eisenhower.."is interested in [redacted] his views and what policies his administration intends to adopt when elected." Taft said: he will never again make whistle-stop speeches. He's willing to urge the voters to elect the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket but: he doesnt know what part the party wants him to play. And he feels his part [redacted] will depend on the ways, methods and extent of the campaigning requested of him. Senator Taft said he may reply to attacks by Truman and Stevenson.

John Foster Dulles said today that the Administration's foreign policy..which the party platform calls "successful"..resulted in the loss of all or part of 18 independent nations to our enemies.

Republican Chairman Summerfield, on the eve of the primary election in Wisconsin, has noted that he is "glad that Senator McCarthy has so many good people working for him."

In Washington, T. Lamar Caudle, former head of the Justice Department's tax division, has told Congressmen that he was under pressure from government officials, including Congressmen, to take actions he considered improper. Caudle said none of the pressure brought on him, when he was in the Justice department, ever succeeded.

The government today authorized increases in the ceiling prices of steel, copper and aluminum. Its estimated this will cost consumers 900-million dollars.

Secretary of Air Finletter says deliveries of planes sent to the air force last July were five times greater than when the Korean war started.

In Korea today, our Sabre jets destroyed five enemy Migs. And for a [redacted] fourth day South Korean infantryman fought Chinese Communists at Capital Hill on the central front. The [redacted] enemy has fired his greatest artillery and mortar barrage of the war against the ROK Capital Division. An American officer says the South Koreans attacked at night with "bayonets, fists, grenades, daggers and clubs." The Communists still hold the top of the hill after five South Korean counter-attacks.

In Egypt, General Naguib, who became premier yesterday, has directed the arrest of seven members of former King Farouk's family..and 8 leaders of the powerful Wafdist party. Naguib pledges to curb inflation, purge corruption in public office and enforce a limit on ownership of farm land.

In Chicago today, Alfonso Tommaro, an official of the Atomic Energy Commission, said it is "entirely feasible" to build a nuclear power plant that could produce [redacted] electric power at competitive prices.

The Justice Department has started proceedings to take [redacted] citizenship papers away from Frank Costello who is now serving an 18 months term in a federal prison. The Department says Costello made false statements when he applied for his [redacted] PAPERS.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, Sep. 8, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... The British High Commissioner in Malaya is General Sir Gerald Templar. Here is a recording of what he told JusticeDouglas about the war in Malaya.

TEMPLAR: There is war in Malaya today - a real fighting war of guns and bullets and hand grenades. Who are we fighting? We're fighting Communism, the same Communism as others are fighting today in other lands and in other climes. It is the Malayan manifestation of international Communism. Who are these Communist terrorist? They're 95% of them Chinese, of the type who settled near here in more or less recent years and who still wish to owe their allegiance to Communist China rather than Malaya and who have been bitten by this disease of Communism. They don't fight in the open. It would be easier for us if they did. They live in the deep jungle - and it's real jungle in this country - dark, wet, unfriendly, smelling of decay. They raid villages, which up to recently have been defenseless but are now beginning to be able to look after themselves better, since they've been given some special constabulary and since the inauguration of an armed Home Guard which is every day increasing its efficiency. The villages (villagers?) are now developing a better sense of civic consciousness, and hence the determination to protect themselves against extortion and sudden death.

The Communist terrorists lay ambushes on the roads and tracks; they attack the railways; they prey on the largely defenseless workers on the rubber estates and tin mines. They murder men and women with great barbarity if their demands for money and for food are refused. These men, organized into regiments, companies and platoons, have links outside this country. Their religion is Communism; they are fanatic in their creed of hate and terror and murder. Their aim is the conquest of Malaya - the "liberation" of Malaya, as they have the impertinence to call it. God help a country which has such a liberation.

They try to pretend they're leading a national independence movement. I'll tell you the truth. It is self-evident for all to see in this country today. If this is a national liberation movement, it follows that we would be trying to fight it with unwilling soldiers and police, forced into these services against their will. We are, in fact, fighting this menace with security forces, both military and armed police, of a strength far greater than this small country can afford today. By which I mean to say that we are not able to do all the good things we want to do, the good things for the people, such as greater improvements in education and rural health services and the raising of the standard of life of the poorer classes of all the communities, be they Malay, Chinese, or Indian, because of the money we are spending on the fighting. This is, of course, just what the Communists like. They care nothing for the people. They want economic chaos, out of which they hope to gain power over these people. Well, they won't.

You may be wondering why, with so much on our side, we can't finish the business. The Communist terrorists usually fight in uniform. I have no complaint in that respect. But when they want to take it off they merge, without recognition, in the ordinary life of the country, looking just like anybody else. Their supporters, the mimuhin, as they are called, are in fact ordinary members of the population, mainly Chinese and living in the towns and villages just as ordinary citizens, moving about their illicit business secretly. They're hard to spot and hard to get on to. And the reason is this: Fear has stalked this land too long. We have been too long in the toils of a vicious circle. One can't win a battle of this sort unless the population is behind one. One can't get the backing of the population until they can visibly see that we're winning. And so you're back again where you started. We want information. The people have got it - anyway, lots of them have got it. They're scared to give it. To be discovered in giving it means instant death, maybe tied to a tree, with your hands cut off as a start. The Communists in China don't have magistrates and peace courts and judges and courts of appeal. They have murder gangs and no questions asked.

Gradually this situation is changing. Confidence that we are going to win is entering the hearts and minds of the people. The flow of information increases in direct proportion; so do successful contacts in the jungle or in the rubber plantations; so do the kills; so do the captures; so do the surrenders. And as all this happens, the toll on the Communist leaders gets heavier, by death or by capture. We are making headway. But, make no mistake, we've got a long way to go yet. This war is one phase of the war which International Communism is waging against the free world. This war in Malaya is a war against all the democracies. Here in Malaya are great human resources. This is a front line where the fight for freedom is being fought, a front line that gives security - not only to England and Australia and New Zealand, but to the Philippines, India and America as well.

MURROW: That was General Sir Gerald Templar, British High Commissioner to the Federation of Malaya. He directs the security forces battling the Communists in that part of the single worldwide struggle. The recording was made for us in Malaya, just a few days ago, by Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, who has recently completed a tour of the whole Malayan Peninsula.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheimer

Supreme court Justice William O Douglass recently completed a tour of Malaya...where British and Malayan forces have been fighting communist terrorists for more than five years.../...The ~~Bririx~~ British High Comissioner in Malaya is General Sir Gerald Templer...Here is a recording of what he told Justice Douglass, about the war in Malaya.....

RETURN CUE: "...but to the Phillipines, India and America as well."

That was General, Sir Gerald Templer, British High comissioner to the Federation of Malaya.../..he directs the security forces battling the communists in that part of a world wide struggle...The recording was made for us in Malaya by Supreme court Justice Wm O Douglass.....

As we heard a moment ago, the people of Malaya are part of a very real war. It may be as Seneca once remarked:"Most men wonder at things which deceive them by distance." Malaya is a long way off. But perhaps General Templer's report will bear out Benjamin Franklin's observation that"paintings and fightings are best seen at a distance."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - SEPTEMBER 8, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will say in Seattle tonight, that he favors further development of America's natural resources; he believes these resources are a common trust. Public and private interests must stop fighting over them. The Governor says we must be sure that any big development projects must benefit the general public - not just one area. He is not sure that the office of the presidency is well enough equipped, "as things stand now," to appraise natural resource projects with "detachment and critical authority." Earlier, in Portland, the Governor told a group of newspaper editors that he is "considerably concerned" by the extent to which "we are developing a one-party press in a two-party country." He said the overwhelming majority of the press seems to be against Democrats, (not after a considered review of all alternatives), but just automatically, "as dogs are against cats." He said many columnists, commentators, analysists and feature writers use the very demagoguery, claptrap, distortion and falsehood that the press condemns from politicians.

Charles McCahill, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association says "the one-party press" Stevenson talks of is the result of "the one-party mess in Washington."

General Eisenhower was in Ohio today; received the public support of almost all the state's top Republican leaders. He told them he is looking forward to meeting Senator Taft; hopes Taft will play a major role in the campaign; feels Taft will be one of the greatest figures in any Republican Administration.

Senator Taft, in Washington after his seven week vacation, met with Republican National Chairman Summerfield. Mr. Summerfield later said: he's confident Taft will play a major part in the campaign...confident there will be a meeting of minds when Taft and Eisenhower meet soon.

Later in a seatement and in talking with reporters, Taft made it clear he wants to meet with Eisenhower; "is interested in his views and what policies his administration intends to adopt when elected." Taft said he will never again make whistle-stop speeches. He's willing to urge the voters to elect the Eisenhower Nixon ticket, but he doesn't know what part the party wants him to play. And he feels his part will depend on the ways, methods and extent of the campaigning requested of him. Senator Taft said he may reply to attacks by Truman and Stevenso

John Foster Dulles said today that the Administration's foreign policy, which the party platform calls "successful", resulted in the loss of all or part of 18 independent nations to our enemies.

Republican Chairman Summerfield, on the eve of the primary election in Wisconsin has noted that he is "glad that Senator McCarthy has so many good people working for him."

In Washington, T. Lamar Caudle, former head of the Justice Department's tax division, has told Congressmen that he was under pressure from government officials, including Congressmen, to take actions he considered improper. Caudle said none of the pressure brought on him, when he was in the Justice Department, ever succeeded.

The Government today authorized increases in the ceiling prices of steel, copper and aluminum. It's estimated this will cost consumers 900-million dollars.

Secretary of Air Finletter says deliveries of planes sent to the Air Force last July were five times greater than when the Korean war started.

In Korea today, our Sabrejets destroyed five enemy Migs, and for a fourth day, South Korean infantrymaen fought Chinese Communists at Capital Hill on the central front. The enemy has fired his greatest artillery and mortar barrage of the war against the ROK Capital Division. An American officer says the South Koreans attacked at night with "bayonets, fists, grenades, daggers and clubs." The communists still hold the top of the hill after five South Korean counter-attacks.

In Egypt, General Naguib, who became premier yesterday, has directed the arrest of seven members of former King Farouk's family and eight leaders of the powerful Wafdist party. Naguib pledges to curb inflation, purge corruption in public office and enforce a limit on ownership of farm land.

In Chicago today, Alfonso Tommaro, an official of the Atomic Energy Commission said it is "entirely feasible" to build a nuclear power plant, that could produce electric power at competitive prices.

The Justice Department has started proceedings to take citizenship papers away from Frank Costello, who is now serving an 18 months term in a federal prison. The Department says Costello made false statements when he applied for his papers.

Supreme Court Justice, William O. Douglas recently completed a tour of Malaya, where British and Malayan forces have been fighting communist terrorists for more than five years. The British High Commissioner in Malaya is General Sir Gerald Templer. Here is a recording of what he told Justice Douglas about the war in Malaya.

TEMPLAR: There is war in Malaya today - a real fighting war of guns and bullets and hand grenades. Who are we fighting? We're fighting communism, the same communism as others are fighting today in other lands and in other climes. It is the Malayan manifestation of international communism. Who are these communist terrorist? They're 95% of them Chinese, of the type who settled near here in more or less recent years and who still wish to owe their allegiance to Communist China rather than Malaya and who have been bitten by this disease of communism. They don't fight in the open. It would be easier for us if they did. They live in the deep jungle - and it's real jungle in this country - dark, wet, unfriendly, smelling of decay. They raid villages, which up to recently have been defenseless but are now beginning to be able to look after themselves better, since they've been given some special constabulary and since the inauguration of an armed Home Guard,which is every day increasing its efficiency. The villagers are now developing a better sense of civic consciousness, and hence the determinatio to protect themselves against extortion and sudden death.

The communist terrorists lay ambushes on the roads and tracks; they attack the railways; they prey on the largely defenseless workers on the rubber estates and tin mines. They murder men and women with great barbarity if their demands for money and for food are refused. These men, organized into regiments, companies and platoons, have links outside this country. Their religion is communism; they are fanatic in their creed of hate and terror and murder. Their aim is the conquest of Malaya - the "liberation" of Malaya, as they have the impertinence to call it. God help a country which has such a liberation.

They try to pretend they're leading a national independence movement, I'll tell you the truth. It is self-evident for all to see in this country today. If this is a national liberation movement, it follows that we would be trying to fight it with unwilling soldiers and police, forced into these services against their will. We are, in fact, fighting this menace with security forces, both military and armed police, of a strength far greater than this small country can afford today. By which I mean to say that we are not able to do all the good things we want to do, the good things for the people, such as greater improvements in education and rural health services and the raising of the standard of life of the poorer classes of all the communities, be they Malay, Chinese, or Indian, because of the money we are spending on the fighting. This is, of course, just what the communists like. They care nothing for the people. They want economic chaos, out of which they hope to gain power over these people. Well, they won't.

You may be wondering why, with so much on our side, we can't finish the business. The communist terrorists usually fight in uniform. I have no complaint in that respect. But when they want to take it off they merge, without recognition, in the ordinary life of the country, looking just like anybody else. Their supporters, the minuhin, as they are called, are in fact ordinary members of the population, mainly Chinese and living in the towns and villages just as ordinary citizens, moving about their illicit business secretly. They're hard to spot and hard to get on to. And the reason is this; Fear has stalked this land too long. We have been too long in the toils of a vicious circle. One can't win a battle of this sort unless the population is behind one. One can't get the backing of the population until they can visibly see that we're winning. And so you're back again where you started. We want information. The people have got it - anyway, lots of them have got it. They're scared to give it. To be discovered in giving it means instant death, maybe tied to a tree, with your hands cut off as a start. The communists in China don't have magistrates and peace courts and judges and courts of appeal. They have murder gangs and no questions asked.

Gradually this situation is changing. Confidence that we are going to win is entering the hearts and minds of the people. The flow of information increases in direct proportion; so do successful contacts in the jungle or in the rubber plantations; so do the kills; so do the captures; so do the surrenders. And as all this happens, the toll on the communist leaders gets heavier, by death or by capture. We are making headway. But, make no mistake, we've got a long way to go yet. This war is one phase of the war which international communism is waging against the free world. This war in Malaya is a war against all the democracies. Here in Malaya are great human resources. This is a front line where the fight for freedom is being fought, a front line that gives security - not only to England and Australia and New Zealand, but to the Philippines, India and America as well.

MURROW: That was General Sir Gerald Templar, British High Commissioner to the Federation of Malaya. He directs the security forces battling the communists in that part of the single worldwide struggle. The recording was made for us in Malaya, just a few days ago, by Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, who has recently completed a tour of the whole Malayan Peninsula.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As we heard a moment ago, the people of Malaya are part of a very real war. It may be as Seneca once remarked: "Most men wonder at things which deceive them by distance." Malaya is a long way off. But perhaps General Templer's report will bear out Benjamin Franklin's observation that "Paintings and fightings are best seen at a distance."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday - September 9, 1951

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson says the greatest threat to the free world, is the danger of Russian conquest of Asia. General Eisenhower says Stevenson is the hand-picked Administration heir (who wants no part of the heirlooms.) Both candidates are making speeches tonight..the General in Indianapolis..the Governor in San Fransisco.

Stevenson is confing his speech to foreign policy. He says Europe is not yet wholly secure, but the goal of security is within sight. But he cannot underestimate the dangers we face in Asia..perhaps for many years. Russia holds the key, to when we can cut taxes; when we can reduce our defense program. The Governor says he believes, that with time, we may come to regard intervention in Korea as a major turning point in history. A point which led, not to another war..but the first historic demonstration, that an effective system of collective security is possible. He is proud we had the fortitude, to risk extending the war..despite Communist provocations, and reckless Republican criticism. Without mentioning Senator Taft by name, Governor Stevenson attacked Taft for refering to Korea as a usleless war. Stevenson said: "[redacted] "whatever unscrupulous politicians may say to exploit grief, tragedy and discontent for votes, history will never record Korea as a useless war unless today's heroism is watered with tomorrow's cowardice." The Governor said: war is not inevitable.. he will never appease..but he WOULD negotiate and make adjustments to advance the world toward secure peace. Stevenson said that General Eisenhower's recent foreign policy speech actually endorsed the Democratic program. But--he said..the Old Guard Republicans would never go along with Eisenhower.. He asked:"How can a disunited party unite the country for the hard tasks ahead?.. No matter how great their commander, divided and bitter men do not win battles." The Governor advised Republicans that they could better demonstrate their good faith, their concern for Asia, by doing something about India today, rather than talking about CHINA yesterday.

General Eisenhower, In Indianapolis, said he will support the entire Republican ticket, from top to bottom. This would include Senator Jenner of Indiana, who introduced the General...and who is on the record as disagreeing with many of the Eisenhower views. I should like to discuss this endorsement in a few minutes. Eisenhower QUOTED from the Bible:"There is a time to keep and a time to cast away." He said he wants to keep America's faith in the Constiution and the Declaration of Independence.. faith that the future can be charted boldly.. the belief that government is close to the people and responsive to their will..faith in our leadership in the world. He would cast away: the incompetent, the unfit, the cronies and the chiselers in Washington... he won't tolerate subversion or disloyalty in government office.. he would cast away the alien philosophy that our national destiny lies in the supremacy of government over all. He would cast away fear... He said: "This nation was not destined to stagger from crisis to crisis." The General said he has enlisted in a crusade to make our government again worthy of its origin and its people.

In eight states today primary elections are under way. In Wisconsin, where Senator Mc Carthy is seeking renomination the voting has been very heavy... twice what it was in the last two primaries in some of the bigger cities. But there is no indication what this means to the chances of Mc Carthy or his principal opponent Leonard Schmitt.

[redacted]

In Maine, Governor Payne was elected to the Senate to replace Owen Brewster.

In Texas, Governor Shivers told the Democratic state convention that ADLAI STEVENSON'S NAME should go on the state ballot. But he is not going to vote for Stevenson and other Democrats don't have to. Shivers said the only legal and moral thing to do is put the national ticket on the ballot. But, he said: "I want to see an end to Trumanism in this nation, and when the contest is between Trumanism and Texas, we chose Texas."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says that "at this time" it favors the election of Governor Stevenson, because of "the clarity and courage of his pronouncements" on racial issues. The group says it is "impressed" with General Eisenhower"s statements against segregation and discrimination..asks him to re-examine his position on civil rights legislation.

In Washington today, Attorney General Mc Granery said more than 50 Canadians have been arrested in Detroit, on deportation warrants. They are charged with obtaining immigration visas through fraud.

The Defense Department and the Atomic Energy Commission announce that a new series of atomic weapons tests will be held at Eniwetok, in the mid-Pacific, this fall. The tests will be "toward the development of atomic weapons". Only official observers will be present.

In Korea today our pilots destroyed seven more enemy Migs and damaged another dozen. This was the sixth day of the air battles. On the ground, South Korean troops are still fighting Chinese infantryman on the central front. An allied officer said that "as of this morning"..."nobody owned Capital Hill"... the scene of the battle.

Karl. L. Rankin, the top American diplomat assigned to Nationalist China, said today that there is no truth to the report that our military authorities have recommended the use of Nationalist troops in Korea. Mr. Rankin conferred with the President and then told reporters he has not heard anything about such a recommendation.

In Berlin, Walter J. Donnelly, the American high commissioner, said that the Russians have prevented our military police from leaving our sector of Berlin...for [redacted] duty on the highway to western Germany. We are protesting.

In Egypt, Major General Naguib, the military premier, told Egypt's political parties they have thirty days to purge themselves of corruption. If they don't, they may be banished from the political scene. Naguib's new cabinet has approved measures for cutting up Egypt's big estates.. limiting ownership of arable lands to 200 acres for one person.

Edward R. Murrow: September 9, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

In this reporter's opinion today's news gives us an example of the way politics is played, (the way it's played by both Parties.) The rules are flexible; there is no umpire except the voter; personal friendship is disregarded; there is only one objective, and that is to win.

Both candidates are trying to keep uneasy coalitions together, because both Parties are divided. # Today General Eisenhower made a big decision, and it was in the tradition of the political game. He spent most of the day with Indiana's Senator William Jenner, (who will introduce him when he speaks tonight in Indianapolis.) Senator Jenner, in his speeches and voting record, is about as far from General Eisenhower as he could possibly be. He has called General George Marshall "a living lie" and "a front man for traitors". Eisenhower has defended General Marshall. AND Eisenhower calls for Jenner's re-election. Yesterday Eisenhower's national chairman endorsed Senator McCarthy, another vigorous critic of Marshall, whose voting record does not conform to the statements made by Eisenhower. # But the issue is not personal friendship, not agreement as to policies to be pursued, but who's going to win. What happened today was that General Eisenhower tried to make a tent big enough to cover all Republicans. He and his advisors beat that wing of the Republican Party represented by Taft, Jenner, McCarty, Kem and others at the Convention. Now the General and his advisors have decided to join them.

Senator Taft raised the question repeatedly as to whether Eisenhower, if nominated, would attack the Administration with sufficient vigor. The General's speech tonight ought to reassure Senator Taft on that score. The Administration is made up, according to the General, of quack doctors, barefaced looters, FEAR-MONGERS, vandals and a gang of robbers. He is sure that Senator Jenner and other Republicans will support his policies when he is elected. (This will require considerable change, either in the Senator or in General Eisenhower's policy.)

Tonight's speech will be the roughest and most hard-hitting that the General has yet delivered. It is also his major bid to those forces in the Republican Party that he defeated for the nomination. He needs their support if he is to win. And if in order to win he must take the Jenners and the McCarthys in with him, that is quite all right. Eisenhower's contention is, that the people in each state are best equipped to know, to choose, the kind of men they want to represent them in Washington. And so long as the men selected are Republicans he'll support them. Whether they have in the past supported ~~his~~ the generals' policies, or whether they can be counted upon to do so in the future, are both beside the point. The effort is to do what can be done, to heal the bitter breach in the Party created in Chicago. There is nothing new or unprecedented in this situation. In politics, as in war, there is no substitute for victory.

Governor Stevenson will face something of the same problem when he starts campaigning in the South. He must do what he can to explain to southern voters his stand on civil rights; but he must at the same time remember those large blocks of negro votes, which can very well be decisive in three or four northern states.

Even though our political campaigns are now conducted in the sight and hearing of the whole country, the traditional practises prevail. The candidates say and do, in the south, in Indiana, or in New England, what they think will win them the most votes. For the objective is not consistency, nor personal friendship, nor adherence to the Party's platform - the objective is not to purge those members of the Party who disagree with, or oppose, the candidate's basic beliefs. The objective is simply to win. After that is done will come the opportunity for the struggle within the Party to decide what to do with the victory.

This campaign started off on a fairly high level, but it is losing altitude rapidly. Of course there's nothing new about that, either.

In politics, a not unimportant consideration is how to assure yourself of more votes than the opposition. The Englishman, George Borrow, once made an appropriate observation when he said:"I am invariably of the politics of people at whose table I sit or beneath whose roof I sleep." And every politician seeking office knows what J. Fennimore Cooper meant when he said:"Principles become modified in practice by facts."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday - September 10, 1952

This is the news:

South Korean troops now hold Capital Hill in central Korea. And they have stopped three Chinese counter-attacks...in hand-to-hand battles. And 8th army officer says the South Koreans are "up there to stay." And General Van Fleet says the enemy use of [redacted] ARTILLERY amazes him.. it indicates they have enough supplies and ammunition at the front. There was no air fighting today. Our jets went up to the Manchurian border but the Migs preferred to stay home.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 582 casualties in Korea last week...the casualty list now totals 117,237.

Secretary of State Acheson says we are trying to get a "meeting of minds" with our allies in Korea on how to deal with the war at the United Nations General Assembly meeting next month.

And Mr. Acheson says the Chinese Communists are now holding at least 156 Americans in China..mistreating them.. arresting them on trumped up charges..refusing them permission to communicate with the outside.. and trying to force confessions from them.

Governor Stevenson campaigned in California today...making whistle-stop [redacted] speeches from a train carrying him from San Fransisco to Los Angeles. The Governor said he's flattered by the manner in which the Opposition always approves Democratic programs during elections, and then seems to forget them after Congress convenes. He said Eisenhower says the only issue is corruption. And the Governor says he is getting tired going around the country telling people he is an honest man.

General Eisenhower is in New York tonight, after a brief stop in Washington, on his way back from Indiana. He told party workers in Washington he has found that the desire for a change in Administrations exceeds even a yearning for peace... that people feel a new Administration will offer a better promise of peace, [redacted] lower taxes and prices, and restore pride in our government.

The General refused comment on the overwhelming victory of Senator Mc Carthy in Wisconsin PRIMARY. At last report, Mc Carthy, seeking re-nomination, had 537-thousand votes to 210-thousand for his closest opponent. The Senator SAYS HE accepts this vote as an endorsement of his campaign to get rid of the subversive forces, that would destroy the government. He promises all-out support to General Eisenhower.. and to continue his charges. Wisconsin's other Republican Senator, Senator Wiley, says the Democratic attempt to use Mc Carthyism to split the Republican party--will fail. Senator Hickenlooper of Iowa says the vote is a magnificent tribute to Mc Carthy's work. Senator Taft says he is "delighted.." approves Mc Carthy's accomplishments in rooting out Communists in government. Senator Sparkman, the Democratic candidate for vice president, says Mc Carthy's victory must make this one of General Eisenhower's "darkest days."

In Texas, the state Democratic convention has agreed to put the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket on the November ballot. But the convention calls on all Democrats to vote for General Eisenhower.

In Washington today, Treasury Secretary Snyder "reported to the taxpayers" that 174 employes of the Internal Revenue Bureau were dismissed last year...77 of them for taking bribes, or gifts, or for embezzlement. The others were fired for: failure to pay proper taxes.. falsifying records, and miscellaneous reasons. Snyder says the Bureau of Internal Revenue is "already a rejuvenated and strong organization."

Dun and Bradstreet says that its wholesale food price index this week showed the sharpest over-all drop in nearly two years.

The Department of Agriculture says crop prospects improved during August and the nation's harvest could be the second largest on record.

John L. Lewis and the Southern coal operators agreed on "some items" for a new contract today but failed to reach conclusions on "major items."

In Paris, General Gruenther, chief of staff to General Ridgeway, told a French newspaper that he does not think the western nations can liberate the people behind the Iron Curtain without war

In Berlin, Walter J. Donnelly, the American high commissioner, says he intends to meet "head on" future Russian threats to the Allies in Berlin, [redacted] Mr. Donnelly says we are not going to use force but: "We are not going to give up our rights. "He is [redacted] convinced that many times the Russians are bluffing." He said: "This is a risk..but its a risky world." The Russians have again banned the movement of our military police on the Autobahn to the American checkpoint at the Soviet zone frontier.

In Luxembourg today, representatives of West Germany and Isreal signed an agreement under which the Germans will pay Isreal the equivalent of 822 million dollars to compensate Jewish victims of Nazi prosecutions. The ceremony took ten minutes: there was no conversation..no hand-shaking.

Edward R. Murrow: September 10, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

It seems that every four years the normal midsummer madness lingers; (citizens stay out too long in the noonday sun of politics.) # To a very considerable extent they are engaged in trying to attach labels, and to make those labels stick. Eisenhower is Dewey's prisoner, a distinguished hitch-hiker on the Democratic platform. Stevenson is Truman's prisoner, an heir who wants nothing to do with the heirlooms. Democrats are bare-faced looters; while Republicans are just a lot of old snollygosters. Eisenhower is too serious and somber; while Stevenson is too flippant, being unable to make up his mind whether he's playing Hamlet or Falstaff. The business of putting on XXX labels and trying to make them stick is not new, and of course most of the labels aren't true. A political "Pure Foods and Drugs Act" would probably ban most of them as making fraudulent and unwarranted claims.

Still we seem to derive a certain satisfaction from this process; and happy the ghost writer who hears one of his favorite phrases or puny puns uttered over radio and television.

+ if they do they might be charged thus name

It is even possible that the Dodgers "won't blow it again." Tonight, as a sort of change of pace, I am able to report (I have no doubt exclusively) that the Hungarians behind the Iron Curtain are having some trouble with labels, too. My source: two recent issues of Hungarian newspapers, published, of course, under communist control. #The Hungarians, being economically hard-pressed, have been engaging in a nation-wide scrap metal and salvage campaign. Yesterday was the first anniversary of this drive. # Two Hungarian newspapers suggested that maybe the thing has been carried too far - stated that in the cosmetics industry and in drug stores and food shops it's no longer possible to know what you are buying. #In order to fulfil their obligations under the Salvage and Conservation movement, Hungarian factories have salvaged already used tubes, jars, bottles and other receptacles, and refilled them, but not necessarily with what the original label or marking says they contained. Thousands of complaints are being received from consumers who find themselves brushing their teeth with shaving cream, smoothing down their hair with toothpaste, drinking perfume for apricot brandy, and sprinkling themselves with paint remover.

It is similarly reported that sardines are being sold in fruit jars, and sacks of sugar turn out to be weed killer; while a can labelled shoe ~~XXXXXX~~ polish is really mustard, and mustard is really Easter Egg dye. One Hungarian newspaper remarks that actually there's no need for all this confusion, because each refilled container must carry a new label pasted over the old one. But the new labels all fall off, thus indicating that the glue is really corn remover. #

This is of course a deplorable state of affairs, a condition which could not exist in this country. When we buy something labelled toothpaste or brandy, or sardines we may be reasonably certain that that's what is in the container. But in politics it's part of the art, or something, to paste new labels on old cans. They don't always stick. I suppose the moral of all this, if there is one, is that the voter ought to examine the labels carefully, and then sample the contents delicately rather than swallowing the whole business, which may just possibly have been mislabelled. There is, I suppose, no sure way of telling corn from caviar if both are in a can and the labels have been switched.

The way things are going all candidates, national, state and local, might well lay in a supply of skin-thickener and insult-repellent.

The Hungarians have another difficulty, also reported by their newspapers. There are no telegraph blanks with flowers or other appropriate decorations and slogans suitable for the sending of birthday or anniversary telegrams. There are only four specially decorated telegraph blanks, entitled: "Co-operative Conference", "Steam Hammer in Operation", "Tractor Drivers' Meeting" and "Children Saving Scrap Metal".

It occurs to me that there is an acute shortage here in this country of appropriate, ready-made political slogans that would fit nicely in the ten or twenty-word telegram. We are a nation fond of slogans. There are many who still cannot understand why Professor Coue was not an American. Neither political headquarters lacks for advertising men. Here is a challenge, an opportunity for fame and glory, and perhaps the chance of being ~~appointed~~ rewarded with an appointment as Ambassador to Brotsylvania. The only one I can think of at the moment likely to be accepted by the telegraph companies is: "Look Behind the Label".

This whole matter of names and labels is really relative. Someone once remarked:"It doesn't matter what kind of a label you put on an empty bottle." And for personalities, as well as merchandise, that still holds true. In politics, Woodrow Wilson said:"Names are much more persistent, than the functions, upon which they were originally bestowed."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday - September 11, 1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson said today: "we have driven Communists out of any places of responsibility they may have gained in our society...and we will not permit them to return." He told a Los Angeles audience: "The fear of Communists is a real fear. We are confronted at home, by a vast international conspiracy. We need, at home and abroad, to take measures to protect ourselves against it." The governor promised to expose and identify Communists, at every step along the way. He had many things to say in two speeches in Los Angeles today:

2

(1 A)

[redacted]

[redacted]: the Republicans are the voice of despair in the land..their leadership sometimes talks big, but acts small...the belief that Democrats are extravagant, and Republicans provident, is part of what he called "a phoney folklore." Governor Stevenson went on: I do not, and have not, and will not, condone excuse or explain away, any corruption in government... such corruption involves only a minute fraction of tens of thousands of public employes.. it is no more surprising to find occasional dishonesty in government than in private industry... American business LOSES [redacted] one billion dollars a YEAR [redacted] from windling by its employes.. some lawmakers [redacted] bleat about [redacted] economy and efficiency in government while voting for special interests. Maybe the word for this is not [redacted] "CORRUPTION" but "EXPEDIENCY." [redacted] And the governor CRITICIZED [redacted] General Eisenhower for supporting all Republicans..good, bad or indifferent.

Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana says he has sent the General a letter thanking him for the unqualified endorsement EISENHOWER [redacted] gave Jenner in Indianapolis Tuesday night.

The President said today that General Eisenhower in calling for the election of a Republican Congress WOULD get an isolationist Congress.. if the Republicans win in November. The President told reporters such a Congress will not bring peace. Mr. Truman had no comment on Eisenhower's support of Jenner.. Senator Mc Carthy's primary victory in Wisconsin, or Governor Shivers appeal to Texas Democrats to vote for Eisenhower.

Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey met with the General today and then told reporters: he disagrees 100 per cent with the President's statement, that a Republican victory would mean an isolationist Congress. Senator Smith said: every Republican member of the Senate will support the General's foreign policy. Senator Smith also expects that a meeting tomorrow between General Eisenhower and Senator Taft will find both men in "complete agreement." Senator Taft arrived in New York today..for the breakfast meeting tomorrow. He had nothing to say but agreed to meet with reporters after he talks with Eisenhower.

Democratic leaders from the northeastern states met here in New York today, and National Chairman Stephen Mitchell told reporters:

Governor Stevenson will campaign in Texas and perhaps other parts of the South, if he has time. Mitchell said he will let Texans take care of Texas matters. And he thinks the people of the South would like to get General Eisenhower's views on tidelands..and oil.

In Brooklyn today, a federal grand jury indicted Daniel A. Bolich, on charges of evading his income taxes over a five-year period. Bolich was the Number Two man in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, until he retired. The indictment says BOLICH reported less income than he made, and he should have paid the government another seven thousand 400 dollars in taxes for the five-year period.

The President today named Jack M. Mc Fall to be United States minister to Finland. He is now assistant secretary of state in charge of congressional relations.

In Boston, naval intelligence and the F.B.I. are investigating possible sabotage of the U.S. Destroyer Pritchett. The destroyer was damaged a month ago as a result of metal chips in vital machinery. The chips bit into delicate gears, and did 300-thousand dollars worth of damage.

The Korean armistice talks resume again later today..ending a sixth consecutive one-week recess. On the central front, South Koreans turned back two more savage Chinese attacks against the South Korean positions on Capital Hill. Allied warplanes hit the enemy positions at night, and our big guns pounded them by day.. to give some help to the weary ROK troops. The Communists used a record artillery and mortar barrage during the night.. 48-thousand rounds. Reporters at the front say the defense, and counter-attacks, of the South Koreans in the past few days have been among the most valiant of the whole Korean war.

In Berlin, General Chuikov, head of the Soviet Control Commission, has informed American authorities that the three-day blockade of American police patrols has been lifted by his order. Russian soldiers HAD stopped our patrols, attempting to move between Berlin and a ~~frontier~~ Check Point ~~outpost~~. U. S. High Commissioner Donnelly had personally asked the Russian General to stop what he called "this unwarranted heckling of western occupation troops."

The Russians today released an American official..Elmer L. Babb of Maine.. and two British officers who had been arrested in East Berlin and East Germany.

In Strasbourg, France, Paul Henri Spakk of Belgium was chosen president of the Schuman Plan assembly.

And in Cairo, American Ambassador Jefferson Caffrey conferred ~~wit~~ for thirty minutes with Premier General Naguib.. on the British-Egyptian dispute which is delaying western plans for Middle East defense.

Edward R. Murrow: September 11, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Later tonight Secretary of State Acheson is addressing a labor convention in Kansas City. It will be a defense of the Administration's foreign policy. The speech is labelled as "non-political," but of course there isn't any such thing. Mr. Acheson denounces those who call for a forceful liberation of the Russian satellites, for giving us a "positive prescription for disaster." [General Eisenhower has made it clear that he would use only "peaceful" means to aid the liberation of the enslaved nations.] Our Secretary of State will express impatience with any attempt to "walk through the dangers of the present, on a bridge of glittering adjectives, such as "dynamic", "positive" and "affirmative"." He wants the critics of the Administration to get down to cases. He will say it is something of a new experience to be urged to be more positive, dynamic and bold, by many whose chief contribution until now has been in holding back. "They have their hands on the horn and their feet on the brake." He will say "our coat-tails are ragged from the hands of those who thought we showed too much of all these dynamic qualities when President Truman saved the Middle East in the Greek-Turkish program in 1947 - when the Marshall Plan was developed." "There were no cries that we were too negative when we undertook the Berlin Airlift, signed the North Atlantic Treaty and put forward the Point Four Program.

Acheson will say

The proposal for the unified NATO army and command, which General Eisenhower served so well, was not called negative. On the contrary, it produced the Great Debate about whether it was too positive, too dynamic.

It seems to this reporter that the record supports Acheson's contention that many of those now demanding a more firm, dynamic foreign policy have voted against every effort to develop such a policy. But He is on less stable ground when he suggests, by implication, that Eisenhower and his supporters would undertake a war to liberate the satellite countries. The record shows that the Republicans, including General Eisenhower, have used some rather loose language on this subject, but they have never advocated forceful liberation of the Russian satellites.

So far as the two major candidates are concerned the argument about foreign policy isn't getting anywhere. (They are too nearly in agreement as to what should be done.) The real area for speculation is how many of the Taft wing of the Republican Party would support Eisenhower's policies as he has stated them, if he should be elected. #

Today President Truman added his contribution to Governor Stevenson's recent criticism of newspapers and magazines. The President agreed with the Governor, adding that "newspapers, especially daily newspapers, have become big business, and big business traditionally has always been Republican." In 1948 only about ten percent of the daily papers in this country supported Mr. Truman. Almost all the big circulation magazines were pro-Republican. But Mr. Truman thinks it doesn't make much difference what they do. He thinks it's rather pitiful, the small amount of political influence that the great free Press of the United States has. The President thinks that fairness in the news columns has been increasing, since Governor Stevenson's speech.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, before returning to England, had some comments to make on modern communications. (They were, of course, non-political.) He merely said "the world would have been a happier place if television had never been discovered." He called it "a mass-produced form of education which is potentially one of the greatest dangers in the world today. Television contributes to ~~XXX~~ the uneasiness of life today." # He thinks if you could use television once every six months it would be a great amenity. "Now and again it serves a very useful purpose." / In the opinion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth next June would be such an occasion. His Grace will of course be the central figure next to the Queen at that ceremony.

Much of what the Archbishop said about television was of course said about the printing press, the telephone, the internal combustion engine and radio. I have always contended that the commanding figures in the church, in politics, in military life, or anywhere else, make up their minds and juggle their prejudices just about the same way the rest of us do. The Archbishop confessed that during his visit to this country his wife had become a complete baseball fan, by way of television. I presume that for a man who doesn't like or understand baseball this could be very trying.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has some qualms about that new means of communication called television. Thomas Macaulay once said:"Society is constantly advancing in knowledge. The tail is now where the head was some generations ago. It is delightful to think that in due time the last of those who struggle in the rear of the great march will occupy the place now occupied by the advanced guard."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - SEPTEMBER 11, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson said today: "We have driven Communists out of any places of responsibility they my have gained in our society, and we will not permit them to return." He told a Los Angeles audience: "The fear of Communists is a real fear. We are confronted at home by a vast international conspiracy. We need, at home and abroad, to take measures to protect ourselves against it." The Governor promised to expose and identify Communists at every step along the way. He had many things to say in two speeches in Los Angeles today: the Republicans are the voice of despair in the land; their leadership sometimes talks big, but acts small; the belief that Democrats are extravagant and Republicans provident is part of what he called "a phoney folklore." Governor Stevenson went on: I do not and have not and will not condone excuse or explain away any corruption in Government; such corruption involves only a minute fraction of tens of thousands of public employes; it is no more surprising to find occasional dishonesty in government than in private industry; American business looses one billion dollars a year from swindling by its employes; some lawmakers bleat about economy and efficiency in government while voting for special interests. Maybe the word for this is not "corruption", but "expediency". And the Governor criticized General Eisenhower for supporting all Republicans - good, bad or indifferent.

Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana says he has sent the General a letter thanking him for the unqualified endorsement Eisenhower gave Jenner in Indianapolis Tuesday night.

The President said today that General Eisenhower in calling for the election of a Republican Congress would get an isolationist Congress, if the Republicans win in November. The President told reporters such a Congress will not bring peace. Mr. Truman had no comment on Eisenhower's support of Jenner, Senator McCarthy's primary vicotry in Wisconsin or Governor Shivers appeal to Texas Democrats to vote for Eisenhower.

Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey met with the General today and then told reporters: he disagrees 100 per cent with the President's statement, that a Republican victory would mean an isolationist Congress. Senator Smith said: every Republican member of the Senate will support the General's foreign policy. Senator Smith also expects that a meeting tomorrow between General Eisenhower and Senator Taft will find both men in "complete agreement." Senator Taft arrived in New York today for the breakfast meeting tomorrow. He had nothing to say but agreed to meet with reporters after he talks with Eisenhower.

Democratic leaders from the northeastern states met here in New York today and National Chairman Stephen Mitchell told reporters: Governor Stevenson will campaign in Texas and perhaps other parts of the South, if he has time. Mitchell said he will "let Texans take care of Texas matters." And he thinks the people of the South would like to get General Eisenhower's views on tidelands and oil.

In Brooklyn today, a federal grand jury indicted Daniel A. Bolich, on charges of evading his income taxes over a five year period. Bolich was the Number Two man in the Bureau of Internal Revenue - until he retired. The indictment says Bolich reported less income than he made, and he should have paid the Government another seven thousand 400 dollars in taxes for the five year period.

The President today named Jack M. McFall to be United States minister to Finland. He is now Assistant Secretary of State in charge of congressional relations.

In Boston, naval intelligence and the F. B. I. are investigating possible sabotage of the U. S. Destroyer Pritchett. The destroyer was damaged a month ago as a result of metal chips in vital machinery. The chips bit into delicate gears and did 300-thousand dollars worth of damage.

The Korean armistice talks resume again later today, ending a sixth consecutive one-week recess. On the central front, South Koreans turned back two more savage Chinese attacks against the South Korean positions on Capital Hill. Allied war planes hit the enemy positions at night and our big guns pounded them by day to give some help to the weary ROK troops. The Communists used a record artillery and mortar barrage during the night - 48-rounds. Reporters at the front say the defense and counter-attacks of the South Koreans in the past few days have been among the most valiant of the whole Korean war.

In Berlin, General Chuikov, head of the Soviet Control Commission, has informed American authorities that the three-day blockade of American police patrols has been lifted by his order. Russian soldiers had stopped our patrols attempting to move between Berlin and a check-point. U. S. High Commissioner Donnelly had personally asked the Russian General to stop what he called "this unwarranted heckling of western occupation troops."

The Russians today released an American official, Elmer L. Babb, of Maine and two British officers, who had been arrested in East Berlin and East Germany.

In Strasbourg, France, Paul Henri Spakk of Belgium was chosen president of the Schuman Plan assembly.

And in Cairo, American Ambassador Jefferson Caffrey conferred for thirty minutes with Premier General Naguib on the British-Egyptian dispute which is delaying western plans for Middle East defense.

Later tonight Secretary of State Acheson is addressing a labor convention in Kansas City. It will be a defense of the Administration's foreign policy. The speech is labelled as "non-political," but of course there isn't such thing. Mr. Acheson denounces those who call for a forceful liberation of the Russian satellites for giving us a "positive prescription for disaster." (General Eisenhower has made it clear that he would use only "peaceful" means to aid the liberation of the enslaved nations.) Our Secretary of State will express impatience with any attempt to "walk through the dangers of the present on a bridge of glittering adjectives, such as "dynamic", "positive", and "affirmative". He wants the critics of the Administration to get down to cases. He will say it is something of a new experience to be urged to be more positive, dynamic and bold, by many whose chief contribution until now has been in holding back. "They have their hands on the horn and their feet on the brake." He will say "our coat-tails are ragged from the hands of those who thought we showed too much of all these dynamic qualities when President Truman saved the Middle East in the Greek-Turkish program in 1947 - when the Marshall Plan was developed." There were no cries that we were too negative when we undertook the Berlin Airlift, signed the North Atlantic Treaty and put forward the Point Four Program.

Acheson will say the proposal for the unified NATO army and command, which General Eisenhower served so well, was not called negative. On the contrary, it produced the Great Debate about whether it was too positive, too dynamic.

It seems to this reporter that the record supports Acheson's contention that many of those now demanding a more firm, dynamic foreign policy have voted against every effort to develop such a policy. But he is on less stable ground, when he suggests, by implication, that Eisenhower and his supporters would undertake a war to liberate the satellite countries. The record shows that the Republicans, including General Eisenhower, have used some rather loose language on this subject, but they have nevdr advocated forceful liberation of the Russian satellites.

So far as the two major candidates are concerned the argument about foreign policy isn't getting anywhere. (They are too nearly in agreement as to what should be done.) The real area for speculation is how many of the Taft wing of the Republican Party would support Eisenhower's policies, as he has stated them, if he should be elected.

Today President Truman added his contribution to Governor Stevenson's recent criticism of newspapers and magazines. The President agreed with the Governor, adding that "newspapers, especially daily newspapers, have become big business, and big business traditionally has always been Republican." In 1948 only about ten percent of the daily papers in this country supported Mr. Truman. Almost all the big circulation magazines were pro-Republican. But Mr. Truman thinks it doesn't make much difference what they do. He thinks it's rather pitiful - the small amount of political influence that the great free Press of the United States has. The President thinks that fairness in the news columns has been increasing since Governor Stevenson's speech.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, before returning to England, had some comments to make on modern communications. (They were, of course, non-political.) He merely said "The world would have been a happier place if television had never been discovered." He called it "a mass-produced form of education which is potentially one of the greatest dangers in the world today. Television contributes to the uneasiness of life today." He thinks if you could use television once every six months, it would be a great amenity. "Now and again it serves a very useful purpose." In the opinion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth next June would be such an occassion. His Grace will of course be the central figure next to the Queen at that ceremony.

Much of what the Archbishop said about television was of course said about the printing press, the telephone, the internal combustion engine and radio. I have always contended that the commanding figures in the church, in politics, in military life, or anywhere else, make up their minds and juggle their prejudices just about the same way the rest of us do. The Archbishop confessed that during his visit to this country, his wife had become a complete baseball fan, by way of television. I presume that for a man who doesn't like or understand baseball, this could be very trying.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Archbishop of Canterbury has some qualms about that new means of communication called television. Thomas Macaulay once said: "Society is constantly advancing in knowledge. The tail is now where the head was some generations ago. It is delightful to think that in due time, the last of those who struggle in the rear of the great march will occupy the place now occupied by the advanced guard."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday - September 12, 1952

This is the news:

Senator Taft says he is "completely satisfied with General Eisenhower's views." And after a two-hour conference with the General here in New York he called on all his supporters [redacted] to work and vote for the General. | Taft said they are agreed on domestic issues and "to a large extent" on foreign issues. | He said there is no qualification in his support for Eisenhower..he'll do everything possible, in the way of making speeches, to assure Eisenhower's election in November. The Senator read reporters a 7-page statement explaning his and Eisenhower's views, [redacted]. He and his supporters wanted certain assurances, and received them. | Taft says Eisenhower will not repudiate the Republican platform..will not approve New Deal policies..will not purge those Republicans [redacted] who worked against President Truman and Secretary Acheson. | Taft says Eisenhower agrees with him, that the issue in this campaign is: Liberty versus creeping socialism. | An Eisenhower Administration would be inspired with a philosophy to extend liberty. Taft says Eisenhower believes the word and spirit of a [redacted] 24 February, 1950 statement by Republicans in Congress. | Eisenhower promises to reduce government expenditures..cut taxes. | Eisenhower approves the constiutional limitation on the power of the government. He is opposed to unlimited power for the President. Taft says Eisenhower approves the basic principles of the Taft-Hartley law..is [redacted] opposed to repealing the law. Taft says Eisenhower has promised not to discriminate against Taft supporters in appointments he would make as president. And the Senator says the General has promised to consult all factions in the party for their views. The Senator also said: his differences with the General on foreign policy are differences of degree... [redacted] He will not abandon any of the principles he has [redacted] supported for 14 years..or friends who supported him at Chicago. Senator Taft also answered questions put to him by reporters, and in a few minutes we'll hear some of these [redacted] ANSWERS.

General Eisenhower had little to say after the Taft meeting..told reporters: "We had a very enjoyable talk."

Out in Arizona, Governor Stevenson took note of what he called "the spectacle of the candidate who won the Republican nomination, begging for a kind word from his defeated rival." Stevenson asked: "Who won at Chicago and who is really my opponent?" He said: "Maybe the Republicans now have a six star general." The governor also asked: "What happened to the voices of the men who urged Eisenhower to seek the nomination, and then helped him win it.. Someone seems to have muzzled them." [redacted], Governor Stevenson said General Eisenhower seems to have promoted Senator Jenner of Indiana to his first team...to play under a banner that reads:"Throw the rascals in." Again he recalled that Jenner had called General George C. Marshal "a living lie." He said Eisenhower has said that most federal employes are patriotic, while Jenner is on record as saying that the list of unpatriotic federal workers is endless.

[redacted]

~~Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says: "General Eisenhower, was able to win on the battlefield. But he has completely surrendered in the political arena"..to Taft and "the Dewey autocrats." [redacted] the Taft statement to mean that if Eisenhower is elected Republicans in Congress would frustrate his foreign policy, prevent work on fair labor laws, inflation control and an adequate farm program.~~

Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says: "General Eisenhower was able to win on the battlefield. But he has completely surrendered in the political arena" ...to Taft and "the Dewey autocrats." Mitchell interprets the Taft statement to mean that if Eisenhower is elected; Republicans in Congress would frustrate his foreign policy...prevent work on fair labor laws, inflation control and an adequate farm program.

Two other political notes; John Foster Dulles says the Democrats are following a course of defeatism in their policies against Communism.. are unwilling to use even peaceful methods, to check the Communist threat. And the White House says the President will make an eight thousand five hundred mile political tour..visiting 24 states over a two week period.

The Air Force says the tornado which sewpt Carswell air force base in Texas on September first, did 48-million dollars worth of damage to planes and installations. Seventy-one of our giant B-36's were damaged.. one destroyed. Thirty-five more B-36's were damaged at the nearby Consolidated Aircraft plant. More than half of the heavy bombers damaged at Carswell have returned to service.

Attorney General Mc Granery today named Charles S. Lyon, the chief counsel to the House Tax scandal investigators, to be the Justice Department's top tax prosecutor. He replaces Ellis N. Slack, who has been moved to another section of the tax division.

[redacted]

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, Sep. 12, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... Now, here is a recorded report of the news conference Senator Taft held after his meeting with General Eisenhower today. First, the Senator read his prepared statement, which I summarized a few minutes ago. And then a reporter asked: Did you prepare that statement before you left Cincinnati?

TAFT: That has been changed a lot. I drafted the part of it about what I had to say for myself, which is, of course, more than half of it. I drafted it very carefully before I left Cincinnati. The different places in which I state General Eisenhower's views were roughly sketched in and then written in here after my ... during and after my two-hour conference with the General.

MURROW: The next question: Will you speak under the auspices of the Eisenhower headquarters or the Senate Campaign Committee?

TAFT: Well, I have been talking with Senator Dirksen about a campaign, and I'll probably work primarily with him but, I trust, also with the National Committee.

MURROW: Will you do your utmost to assure a Republican victory - without qualifications?

TAFT: No qualifications at all, no. I thought that that would ... I mean, after all, ... no, I certainly ... (laughs) certainly, no such implication is justified. I'm glad to do everything in the way of making speeches in any way that will help the campaign. I will do, as I said in Chicago, everything possible in the campaign to secure his election.

MURROW: You say your differences with Eisenhower on foreign policy are a matter of degree. Would you care to define the degree?

TAFT: No, I don't think so. That would require long and an accurate discussion ... a long, lengthy discussion. I can't do that. I'll make my own speeches on ~~f~~ what I think about foreign policy. And, as I said, I think the differences are differences of degree. Spending, for instance, and so forth, altho there's a fair agreement now as to what we want to do in .....? spending.

MURROW: Do You believe your statement today will reassure those who supported you in Chicago?

TAFT: I did everything possible to say what I thought would accomplish that purpose, yes. And I think it was very important that these various statements be brought to them as well as simply my ... just a request from me personally would no more, I think ... would not have nearly the effect it could have had, that it can have now, after a conference with General Eisenhower and my assurance to them that he believes in the basic principles which I believe in, American ... in the ... in domestic policy, at least, and, to a large extent, foreign policy.

MURROW: What about reports that the Taft supporters are dragging their feet in the campaign?

TAFT: Well, I have not been in this country and I'm not ... I haven't any ... oh, I get some correspondence of that kind, but I would hope that most of them would go along. Of course, when you say "Taft supporters", it isn't quite that. It's people who ... (interruption) No, it's people who are, so to speak, on the conservative side on the ... on the ... who are concerned about the things that I have stated here. I've tried to state the ... the things that I stated here I got largely from letters. People have been concerned that General Eisenhower didn't believe in these things which I thought he believed in all the time, and knew it, but I thought that if I could obtain definite assurance it would be much more effective with these people than if I simply said please vote for him.

MURROW: How is the campaign going?

TAFT: I haven't been in this country, and I don't think I want to comment today on the progress of the campaign. I don't know (sic) no more about it than you do. The campaign is still in its early stages, and we can tell much better in another month how it's going.

MURROW: Did you or Ike discuss support of McCarthy in Wisconsin?

TAFT: No, we didn't.

MURROW: Did his name come up in the discussions?

TAFT: No.

MURROW: Will there be a difference in your foreign policy speeches and those of Eisenhower's?

TAFT: Well, I don't see any reason for a particular difference in foreign policy, as to the future. What I'd have to say about the ... I might say more things about the Truman Administration .....? than the General seems to be prepared to say.

VOICE: Well, on that point ...

TAFT: ... past, but as to the future, I don't see why there should be any great difference.

MURROW: Eisenhower says he won't deal in personalities. Will you?

TAFT: I have no hesitation about dealing in personalities. (laughter)

MURROW: You mentioned points of agreement with Ike. Would you discuss anything on which you two disagree?

TAFT: Well, I ... I don't suppose we agree on everything. I don't know. That'll come out. I mean, I don't think that's essential. The party is a group that subordinates ... the very purpose of a two-party system is that members of a party shall subordinate their views on what they regard as incidental issues ... their differences on incidental issues in order to agree on a basic principle. I certainly wouldn't guarantee that we may not have many differences on different subjects. That's a question that's going to develop.

MURROW: What do you think of Colonel McCormick's proposal for a third party?

TAFT: Well, it certainly is not feasible in 1952, and after the election it's impossible to tell what .....? look like. I don't ... Third parties have not been very easy to organize at any time.

MURROW: And those were recorded excerpts from Senator Taft's news conference, which he held after a two-hour talk with General Eisenhower here in New York this morning.

-30-

Ediphone trans..E. Scheiner

In Korea, the armistice negotiations have been postponed for yet another week. On the central front, a South Korean tank-infantry team raided Chinese lines and then withdrew after a four hour battle.

Now, here is a recorded report of [redacted] the news conference Senator Taft held after his meeting with General Eisenhower today. First, the General read his prepared statement..(which I' summarized a few minutes ago..) and then a reporter asked:"Did you prepare that statement before you left Cincinnati?"

TAPE RUNS 5:15

RETURN CUE

"THIRD PARTIES HAVE NOT BEEN EASY TO ORGANIZE AT ANY TIME."

Those were recorded excerpts from Senator Tafts news conference, which he held after a two hour talk with General Eisenhower... ..It would appear that Senator Taft got the assurances he wanted on most subjects except foreign policy..and on this subject he reserves his right to oppose Eisenhowers views. It was a formidible and detailed list of agreement. The probability is that the supporters of Taft and Eisenhower will not be wholly happy about it...The Democrats of course profess to be. The degree and depth of the agreement, can be better measured, when the two men start making a few more speeches....

Corr

General Eisenhower and Senator Taft have met...and for the record at least appear to have compromised their views. Sydney Smith once argued that "All great alterations in human affairs are produced by compromise." But James Russell Lowell contended that "compromise is a temporary expedient - often wise in party politics, but almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - SEPTEMBER 12, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Taft says he is "completely satisfied with General Eisenhower's views." And after a two-hour conference with the General here in New York he called on all his supporters to work and vote for the General. Taft said they are agreed on domestic issues and "to a large extent" on foreign issues. He said there is no qualification in his support for Eisenhower...he'll do everything possible, in the way of making speeches, to assure Eisenhower's election in November. The Senator read reporters a 7-page statement explaining his and Eisenhower's views. He and his supporters wanted certain assurances and received them. Taft says Eisenhower will not repudiate the Republican platform... will not approve New Deal policies...will not purge those Republicans who worked against President Truman and Secretary Acheson. Taft says Eisenhower agrees with him, that the issue in this campaign is: Liberty versus creeping socialism. An Eisenhower Administration would be inspired with a philosophy to extend liberty. Taft says Eisenhower believes the word and spirit of a February, 1950 statement by Republicans in Congress. Eisenhower promises to reduce government expenditures...cut taxes. Eisenhower approves the constitutional limitation on the power of the government. He is opposed to unlimited power for the President. Taft says Eisenhower approves the basic principles of the Taft-Hartley law...is opposed to repealing the law. Taft says Eisenhower has promised not to discriminate against Taft supporters in appointments he would make as president. And the Senator says the General has promised to consult all factions in the party for their views. The Senator also said: his differences with the General on foreign policy are differences of degree...He will not abandon any of the principles he has supported for 14 years...or friends who supported him at Chicago. Senator Taft also answered questions put to him by reporters, and in a few minutes we'll hear some of these answers.

General Eisenhower had little to say after the Taft meeting...told reporters: "We had a very enjoyable talk."

Out in Arizona, Governor Stevenson took note of what he called "the spectacle of the candidate who won the Republican nomination, begging for a kind word from his defeated rival." Stevenson asked: "Who won at Chicago and who is really my opponent?" He said: "Maybe the Republicans now have a six-star general." The governor also asked: "What happened to the voices of the men who urged Eisenhower to seek the nomination, and then helped him win it... Someone seems to have muzzled them." Governor Stevenson said General Eisenhower seems to have promoted Senator Jenner of Indiana to his first team...to play under a banner that reads: "Throw the rascals in." Again he recalled that Jenner had called General George C. Marshal "a living lie." He said Eisenhower has said that most federal employes are patriotic, while Jenner is on record as saying that the list of unpatriotic federal workers is endless.

Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says: "General Eisenhower was able to win on the battlefield. But he has completely surrendered in the political arena"...to Taft and "the Dewey autocrats." Mitchell interprets the Taft statement to mean that if Eisenhower is elected; Republicans in Congress would frustrate his foreign policy...prevent work on fair labor laws, inflation control and an adequate farm program.

Two other political notes; John Foster Dulles says the Democrats are following a course of defeatism in their policies against Communism...are unwilling to use even peaceful methods, to check the Communist threat. And the White House says the President will make an eight thousand five hundred mile political tour...visiting 24 states over a two-week period.

The Air Force says the tornado which swept Carswell air force base in Texas on September first, did 48-million dollars worth of damage to planes and installations. Seventy-one of our giant B-36's were damaged...one destroyed. Thirty-five more B-36's were damaged at the nearby Consolidated Aircraft plant. More than half of the heavy bombers damaged at Carswell have returned to service.

Attorney General McGranery today named Charles S. Lyon, the chief counsel to the House Tax scandal investigators, to be the Justice Department's top tax prosecutor. He replaces Ellis N. Slack, who has been moved to another section of the tax division.

In Korea, the armistice negotiations have been postponed for yet another week. On the central front, a South Korean tank-infantry team raided Chinese lines and then withdrew, after a four hour battle.

Now, here is a recorded report of the news conference Senator Taft held after his meeting with General Eisenhower today. First, the General read his prepared statement..(which I summarized a few minutes ago..) and then a reporter asked: "Did you prepare that statement before you left Cincinnati?"

TAFT: That has been changed a lot. I drafted the part of it about what I had to say for myself, which is, of course, more than half of it. I drafted it very carefully before I left Cincinnati. The different places in which I state General Eisenhower's views were roughly sketched in and then written in here after my...during and after my two-hour conference with the General.

MURROW: The next question: Will you speak under the auspices of the Eisenhower headquarters or the Senate Campaign Committee?

TAFT: Well, I have been talking with Senator Dirksen about a campaign, and I'll probably work primarily with him but, I trust, also with the National Committee.

MURROW: Will you do your utmost to assure a Republican victory - without qualifications?

TAFT: No qualifications at all, no. I thought that that would...I mean, after all,...no, I certainly...(laughs) certainly, no such implication is justified. I'm glad to do everything in the way of making speeches in any way that will help the campaign. I will do, as I said in Chicago, everything possible in the campaign to secure his election.

MURROW: You say your differences with Eisenhower on foreign policy are a matter of degree. Would you care to define the degree?

TAFT: No, I don't think so. That would require long and an accurate discussion...a long, lengthy discussion. I can't do that. I'll make my own speeches on what I think the differences are differences of degree. Spending, for instance, and so forth, altho there's a fair agreement now as to what we want to do in...? spending.

MURROW: Do you believe your statement today will reassure those who supported you in Chicago?

TAFT: I did everything possible to say what I thought would accomplish that purpose, yes. And I think it was very important that these various statements be brought to them as well as simply my...just a request from me personally would no more, I think...would not have nearly the effect it could have had, that it can have now, after a conference with General Eisenhower and my assurance to them that he believes in the basic principles which I believe in, American...in the...in domestic policy, at least, and, to a large extent, foreign policy.

MURROW: What about reports that the Taft supporters are dragging their feet in the campaign?

TAFT: Well, I have not been in this country and I'M not...I haven't any... oh, I get some correspondence of that kind, but I would hope that most of them would go along. Of course, when you say "Taft supporters", it isn't quite that. It's people who...(interruption) No, it's people who are, so to speak, on the conservative side on the...on the...who are concerned about the things that I have stated here. I've tried to state the...the things that I stated here I got largely from letters. People have been concerned that General Eisenhower didn't believe in these things which I thought he believed in all the time, and knew it, but I thought that if I could obtain definite assurance it would be much more effective with these people than if I simply said please vote for him.

MURROW: How is the campaign going?

TAFT: I haven't been in this country, and I don't think I want to comment today on the progress of the campaign. I don't know any more about it than you do. The campaign is still in its early stages, and we can tell much better in another month how it's going.

MURROW: Did you or Ike discuss support of McCarthy in Wisconsin?

TAFT: No, we didn't.

MURROW: Did his name come up in the discussions?

TAFT: No.

MURROW: Will there be a difference in your foreign policy speeches and those of Eisenhower's?

TAFT: Well, I don't see any reason for a particular difference in foreign policy, as to the future. What I'd have to say about the...I might say more things about the Truman Administration...? than the General seems to be prepared to say.

VOICE: Well, on that point...

TAFT: ...past, but as to the future, I don't see why there should be any great difference.

MURROW: Eisenhower says he won't deal in personalities. Will you?

TAFT: I have no hesitation about dealing in personalities. (laughter)

MURROW: You mentioned points of agreement with Ike. Would you discuss anything on which you two disagree?

TAFT: Well, I...I don't suppose we agree on everything. I don't know. That'll come out. I mean, I don't think that's essential. The party is a group that subordinates...the very purpose of a two-party system is that members of a party shall subordinate their views on what they regard as incidental issues...their differences on incidental issues in order to agree on a basic principle. I certainly wouldn't guarantee that we may not have many differences on different subjects. That's a question that's going to develop.

MURROW: What do you think of Colonel McCormick's proposal for a third party?

TAFT: Well, it certainly is not feasible in 1952, and after the election it's impossible yo tell what....? look like. I don't...Third parties have not been very easy to organize at any time.

Those were recorded excerpts from Senator Taft's news conference, which he held after a two-hour talk with General Eisenhower...It would appear that Senator Taft got the assurances he wanted on most subjects except foreign policy...and on this subject he reserves his right to oppose Eisenhower's views. It was a formidible and detailed list of agreements. The probability is that the supporters of Taft and Eisenhower will not be wholly happy about it...The Democrats of course profess to be. The degree and depth of the agreement, can be better measured when the two men start making a few more speeches...

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word for Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL.

MURROW: General Eisenhower and Senator Taft have met...and for the record at least appear to have compromised their views. Sydney Smith once argued that "All great alterations in human affairs are produced by compromise." But James Russell Lowell contended that "Compromise is a temporary expedient—often wise in party politics, but almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Mon. Sept. 15, 1952

This is the news:

John L. Lewis indicated today that some 230-thousand soft coal miners may strike on Monday. Lewis says he and Harry M. Moses, of the northern soft coal operators, agreed on a new contract. (Moses denies this) But the coal operators turned it down. (Moses denies that any such agreement was reached.) Lewis called this decision "most disturbing, most unstabilizing, distinctly unfortunate". He then indicated that while hard coal miners would continue working (because he expects a contract agreement quickly) it might be necessary to stop all work east of (INDIANA) when the present contract expires at midnight Saturday. A contract for southern coal miners expires ten days later.

Earlier, Lewis made another suggestion for unity among all the nation's organized workers. He said this was necessary for the elections, and to smash what he called "the infamous Taft Hartley slave law."

Lewis's statement came in response to another appeal from A.F. of L. President William Green. Mr. Green had called on Lewis to return to the Federation. And Green told his union's convention: the A.F. of L. must use its full political power to repeal the Taft-Hartley law... He said Labor will be a very deciding factor in the November elections. He has indicated that the A. F. of L. will support Governor Stevenson.)

Republican Senator Morse of Oregon who says he will vote for Eisenhower..but not campaign for him...conferred for two hours today with Harold Stassen, an emissary from Eisenhower'sheadquarters. Morse says he believes Democrat Stevenson has taken a sound position on the Taft-Hartley law.. he has reason to believe that he will be able to support the labor position General Eisenhower will outline to the A. F. of L. convention on Wednesday.

The General was whistle-stopping in Indiana today.. He said his mission is to serve "all America, not any particular part". He attacked Governor Stevenson for the humorous remarks he has included in his campaign speeches. The General said: he can see nothing funny about such things as the Korean war.. He said we were "fumbled into IT" [redacted] without any plans to win it. He sees nothing funny about Communism, corruption or high taxes. Again Eisenhower appealed for honesty in government..attacked what he called the mess in Washington...said every new AMERICAN [redacted] baby is born with a debt of 18-hundred dollars over its head. The General said: we must not let the government get too powerful in our lives.. [redacted]

Ed Morgan?

[redacted] And he said: [redacted] workers must get the highest possible wages that a propserous industry can afford to pay. Then, he said, we'll have a more [redacted] prosperous agriculure, because we will eat better and eat more.

Governor Stevenson is back in Springfield, working on the speeches he will make when he brings his campaign east later this week. Today the Governor held a news conference..and answered a number of questions. My Colleague, Ed Moragn was there. Ed, how did it go?

Ed Morgan - Springfield.

(3.30 ending...

.."and he didn't appear to be joking.)

One more political note: A Republican leader in Massachusetts reveals that he has a letter from Senator Taft promising to support Senator Lodge for re-election. Lodge ran the Eisenhower campaign against Taft at the Chicago convention.

In Washington, the Federal Reserve Board has suspended its [redacted] Regulation X.. which limited the amount of credit for people buying new houses. This regulation required down payments of five per cent for houses costing up to 7-thousand dollars... down payments up to 40 per cent on houses valued at 25-thousand or more. Now, instiutions that lend money to home buyers will be guided only by state and local regulations.

The President today accepted the resignation of Cyrus Ching, head of the federal mediation service. Mr. Truman noted that the 76-year-old Mr. Ching had stayed on the job four years longer than had been expected. The new head of the mediation service will be David L. Cole of New Jersey.

A federal grand jury in Washington today indicted Clovis D. Walker, and an Egyptian cotton importer, on charges of conspiring to defraud this government. Walker, former head of the cotton branch in the Agriculture Department, is accused of giving the Egyptian confidential information on purchases the government was making of Egyptian cotton.

Two new top Russian diplomats arrived in New York today. Georgi Zarubin, the new ambassador, said everything he does will be designed to strengthen peace and cooperation between Russia and the Unitee States. Valerian Zorin, the new chief Soviet delegation to the United Nations, refused to discuss the Korean war.

The Moscow Radio says tonight that those long talks between Russian and Chinese Communist diplomats has reaffirmed the decision by both countries to strengthen their friendship.

In Korea, allied jet pilots report that they shot down eight Communist jets . A Royal Air Force pilot lured another Mig into crashing into a group of trees. There was very little ground fighting during the day.

Edward R. Murrow: September 15, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

I think it could be fairly contended that we have the Russians to thank for high taxes, the war in Korea, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and abiding uncertainty. Since the end of the late war they have held the diplomatic and military initiative. They have also claimed to have discovered, or invented, the electric light, penicillin, the airplane, the telephone, radio, the first oil well and sound movies, (and many other things.) Today the Russians chose an appropriate season to announce through their magazine for Soviet youth that baseball is nothing more than a distortion and vulgarization of an old Russian game called "Lapta", played in the villages of Russia hundreds of years before anybody heard of America, and many more years before Durocher was heard of.

This is the first time in recent years that a Russian publication has sought to inform its readers on the subject of baseball. This sport is, according to the magazine of the Young Communist League, "a beastly battle; a bloody fight with mayhem and murder. Players are bought and sold like sheep." There are pictures, too. One shows a player knocked out on the field; it carries the caption: "Episode in game between Sen Luis and Rogers - Del Rios having received blow struck on the back of his head being carried unconscious from the field." The magazine says:

"Businessmen from sports make fabulous profits from the game; train young boys in the special techniques of rough play so they will be able to inflict injuries on their opponents; such for instance is the New York Club, the Rogers, which has a special training camp for this purpose." Win, lose or draw, the Dodgers get top billing in this Moscow magazine, (even if they don't spell the name right.)

The magazine says of the players: "They sell them, buy them, and throw them out the door when they are no longer needed." Now that's just the plain, unvarnished ~~XXXXX~~ truth. But as any American child could tell them, the losing club always sells the wrong ones, buys the wrong ones, and leaves too many inside the door that should be thrown out.

We are pleased to announce, in the Russian vernacular, that that "business man from sports, that buyer and seller of slaves" who knows a lot about this "beastly battle," has agreed to cover the World Series for us again this year. I refer, of course, to Branch Rickey, formerly of the "Rogers," now Commissar of the Pirates, and I hate to think what the Russians will make of that announcement. (With Pictures)

Comm

We were speaking of inventions. Will Rogers once said:"America is a nation that conceives many odd inventions for getting somewhere, but can think of nothing to do when it gets there." Mark Twain looked at it another way:"We are called the nation of inventors. And we are. We could still claim that title, and wear its loftiest honors, if we had stopped with the first thing we ever invented - human liberty."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, September 15, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Governor Stevenson is back in Springfield, working on the speeches he will make when he brings his campaign east later this week. Today, the Governor held a news conference and answered a number of questions. My colleague, Ed Morgan, was there.

Ed, how did it go?

MORGAN: This hoe-down this morning, Ed, was Governor Stevenson's fifth news conference since his nomination. It was held in the pink-walled ballroom of the Abraham Lincoln Hotel. The reporters called a fast tune of questions. The Governor didn't exactly dance to them, but he executed, not always happily, some plain and fancy replies. First, he read a statement calling the result of the Taft-Eisenhower conference a great surrender of the General to the Senator. He added ... quote: "We will welcome the many Republicans whose hopes for a new leadership in their Party have been dashed." (unquote) Later he fitted another piece to that. He conceded it was probably a fair statement that, although not to the exclusion of others he was concentrating on winning the independent vote whose fifteen-million-odd might well decide this election, but he emphatically predicted that the supposedly doubtful southern States of Texas, Louisiana, and Florida would go Democratic overwhelmingly, thus, indicating he expected to carry pretty much the whole south. A correspondent spoke up: "I am asking you at this moment," he said, "do you endorse all Democratic candidates just as General Eisenhower endorses all Republican candidates?" Stevenson replied: "I do not. I will endorse individuals." Earlier he had said: "I shall never support anybody whom I basically disagree with or who I fear is offending the public dignity." Someone wondered whether Senator McCarthy's primary victory might show on a national scale that other people have opinions not in agreement with Stevenson's. The Governor said it might, then again it might show an attitude indigenous to Wisconsin.

He thought he would not propose the appointment of an Ambassador to the Vatican. Asked why, he said he thought the feeling in this country is that it constitutes an official recognition of a religion, of a denomination, and that this is highly incompatible with our theory of the separation of church and state.

This reporter understands that that was not precisely the answer the Governor had intended for that question. According to a trustworthy source, he had not meant to hang his reply on the church-state issue, but, rather, simply to stress there appeared no real nedessity for such a move now, that if the necessity arose the question would be considered then.

The conference touched a variety of other subjects, too. Stevenson favored letting 18-year-olds vote. He'll have something to say about military training and price controls later in the campaign. He couldn't see any really big cut in the budget until the rearmament program has been finished, but he hoped a reduction could come in the fiscal year 1955 with a complementary slicing in taxes. Queried about his Detroit labor speech, the Governor said he had gathered that there had been some discontent among some union leaders about his position in favor of writing a new labor law that would retain much of the Taft-Hartley Act, but that he was sticking to his positions. He emphasized that there was no conflict between his campaigning and President Truman's campaigning and said that the President had written him some pleasant letters of encouragement about Stevenson's own efforts. Allegedly stung by Stevenson's barbed witticisms, the Republicans are now countering, as you reported, with the admonition that running for President is no laughing matter. During his hour-long gruelling it struck me that the Governor couldn't have agreed with them more. As for his humor, he said he was sorry but he could only conduct his campaign in his own manner and he didn't appear to be joking.

Ed. trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

John L. Lewis indicated today that some 230-thousand soft coal miners may strike on Monday. Lewis says he and Harry M. Moses, of the northern soft coal operators, agreed on a new contract (Moses denies this), but the coal operators turned it down. Lewis called this decision "most distrubing, most unstabilizing, distinctly unfortunate". He then indicated that while hard coal miners would continue working (because he expects a contract agreement quickly) it might be necessary to stop all work east of Indiana, when the present contract expires, at midnight Saturday. A contract for southern coal miners expires ten days later.

Earlier, Lewis made another suggestion for unity among all the nation's organized workers. He said this was necessary for the elections, and to smash what he called "the infamous Taft-Hartley slave law."

Lewis's statement came in response to another appeal from A.F. of L. President William Green. Mr. Green had called on Lewis to return to the Federation. And Green told his union's convention: the A.F. of L. must use its full political power to repeal the Taft-Hartley law...He said: "Labor will be a very deciding factor in the November elections." (He has indicated that the A.F. of L. will support Governor Stevenson.)

Republican Senator Morse of Oregon, who says he will vote for Eisenhower...but not campaign for him...conferred for two hours today with Harold Stassen, an emissary from Eisenhower's headquarters. Morse says he believes Democrat Stevenson has taken a sound position on the Taft-Hartley law... he has reason to believe that he will be able to support the labor position General Eisenhower will outline to the A.F. of L. convention on Wednesday.

The General was whistle-stopping in Indiana today...He said his mission is to serve "all America, not any particular part." He attacked Governor Stevenson on the humorous remarks he has included in his campaign speeches. The General said: he can see nothing funny about such things as the Korean war...He said we were "fumbled into it" without any plans to win it. He sees nothing funny about Communism, corruption or high taxes. Again Eisenhower appealed for honesty in government...attacked what he called the mess in Washington...said every new American baby is born with a debt of 18-hundred dollars over its head. The General said: "We must not let the government get too powerful in our lives." And he said: "Workers must get the highest possible wages that a prosperous industry can afford to pay. Then," he said, "we'll have a more prosperous agriculture, because we will eat better, and eat more."

Governor Stevenson is back in Springfield, working on the speeches he will make when he brings his campaign east later this week. Today the Governor held a news conference...and answered a number of questions. My Colleague, Ed Morgan was there. Ed, how did it go?

MORGAN: This hoe-down this morning, Ed, was Governor Stevenson's fifth news conference since his nomination. It was held in the pink-walled ballroom of the Abraham Lincoln Hotel. The reporters called a fast tune of questions. The Governor didn't exactly dance to them, but he executed, not always happily, some plain and fancy replies. First, he read a statement calling the result of the Taft-Eisenhower conference a great surrender of the General to the Senator. He added...quote: "We will welcome the many Republicans whose hopes for a new leadership in their Party have been dashed." (unquote) Later he fitted another piece to that. He conceded it was probably a fair statement that, although not to the exclusion of others he was concentrating on winning the independent vote whose fifteen-million-odd might well decide this election, but he emphatically predicted that the supposedly doubtful southern States of Texas, Louisiana, and Florida would go Democratic overwhelmingly, thus, indicating he expected to carry pretty much the whole south. A correspondent spoke up: "I am asking you at this moment," he said, "do you endorse all Democratic candidates just as General Eisenhower endorses all Republican candidates?" Stevenson replied: "I do not. I will endorse individuals." Earlier he had said: "I shall never support anybody whom I basically disagree with or who I fear is offending the public dignity." Someone wondered whether Senator McCarthy's primary victory might show on a national scale that other people have opinions not in agreement with Stevenson's. The Governor said it might, then again it might show an attitude indigenous to Wisconsin.

He thought he would not propose the appointment of an Ambassador to the Vatican. Asked why, he said he thought the feeling in this country is that it constitutes an official recognition of a religion, of a denomination, and that this is highly incompatible with our theory of the separation of church and state.

This reporter understands that that was not precisely the answer the Governor had intended for that question. According to a trustworthy source, he had not meant to hang his reply on the church-state issue, but, rather, simply to stress there appeared no real necessity for such a move now, that if the necessity arose the question would be considered then.

The conference touched a variety of other subjects, too. Stevenson favored letting 18-year-olds vote. He'll have something to say about military training and price controls later in the campaign. He couldn't see any really big cut in the budget until the rearmament program has been finished, but he hoped a reduction could come in the fiscal year 1955 with a complementary slicing in taxes. Queried about his Detroit labor speech, the Governor said he had gathered that there had been some discontent among some union leaders about his position in favor of writing a new labor law that would retain much of the Taft-Hartley Act, but that he was sticking to his positions. He emphasized that there was no conflict between his campaigning and President Truman's campaigning and said that the President had written him some pleasant letters of encouragement about Stevenson's own efforts. Allegedly stung by Stevenson's barbed witticisms, the Republicans are now countering, as you reported, with the admonition that running for President is no laughing matter. During his hour-long gruelling it struck me that the Governor couldn't have agreed with them more. As for his humor, he said he was sorry but he could only conduct his campaign in his own manner and he didn't appear to be joking.

MURROW: One more political note: A Republican leader in Massachusetts reveals that he has a letter from Senator Taft promising to support Senator Lodge for re-election. Lodge ran the Eisenhower campaign against Taft at the Chicago convention.

In Washington, the Federal Reserve Board has suspended its Regulation X...which limited the amount of credit for people buying new houses. This regulation required down payments of five per cent for houses costing up to 7-thousand dollars...down payments up to 40 per cent on houses valued at 25-thousand or more. Now, institutions that lend money to home buyers will be guided only by state and local regulations.

The President today accepted the resignation of Cyrus Ching, head of the federal mediation service. Mr. Truman noted that the 76-year-old Mr. Ching had stayed on the job four years longer than had been expected. The new head of the mediation service will be David L. Cole of New Jersey.

A Federal grand jury in Washington today indicted Clovis D. Walker, and an Egyptian cotton importer, on charges of conspiring to defraud this government. Walker, former head of the cotton branch in the Agriculture Department, is accused of giving the Egyptian confidential information on purchases the government was making of Egyptian cotton.

Two new top Russian diplomats arrived in New York today. Georgi Zarubin, the new ambassador, said everything he does will be designed to strengthen peace and cooperation between Russia and the United States. Valerian Zorin, the new chief Soviet delegation to the United Nations, refused to discuss the Korean war.

The Moscow Radio says tonight that those long talks between Russian and Chinese Communist diplomats has reaffirmed the decision by both countries to strengthen their friendship.

In Korea, allied jet pilots report that they shot down eight Communist jets. A Royal Air Force pilot lured another Mig into crashing into a group of trees. There was very little ground fighting during the day.

I think it could be fairly contended that we have the Russians to thank for high taxes, the war in Korea, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and abiding uncertainty. Since the end of the late war they have held the diplomatic and military initiative. They have also claimed to have discovered, or invented, the electric light, penicillin, the airplane, the telephone, radio, the first oil well and sound movies, (and many other things.) Today the Russians chose an appropriate season to announce, through their magazine for Soviet youth, that baseball is nothing more than a distortion and vulgarization of an old Russian game called "Lapta", played in the villages of Russia hundreds of years before anybody heard of America, and many more years before Durocher was heard of.

This is the first time in recent years that a Russian publication has sought to inform its readers on the subject of baseball. This sport is, according to the magazine of theYoung Communist League, "a beastly battle; a bloody fight with mayhem and murder. Players are bought and sold like sheep." There are pictures, too. One shows a player knocked out on the field; it carries the caption: "Episode in game between San Luis and Rogers - Del Rios having received blow struck on the back of his head, being carried unconscious from the field." The magazine says: "Businessmen from sports make fabulous profits from the game; train young boys in the special techniques of rough play, so they will be able to inflict injuries on their opponents; such for instance is the New York Club, the Rogers, which has a special training camp for this purpose." Win, lose or draw, the Dodgers get top billing in this Moscow magazine, (even if they don't spell the name right.)

The magazine says of the players: "They sell them, buy them, and throw them out the door when they are no longer needed." Now that's just the plain, unvarnished truth. But as any American child could tell them, the losing club always sells the wrong ones, buys the wrong ones, and leaves too many inside the door that should be thrown out.

We are pleased to announce, in the Russian vernacular, that that "business man from sports, that buyer and seller of slaves," who knows a lot about this "beastly battle," has agreed to cover the World Series for us again this year. I refer, of course, to Branch Rickey, formerly of the "Rogers," now Commissar of the Pirates, and I hate to think what the Russians will make of that announcement. (With Pictures)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROWN: We were speaking of inventions. Will Rogers once said: "America is a nation that conceives many odd inventions for getting somewhere, but can think of nothing to do when it gets there." Mark Twain looked at it another way: "We are called the nation of inventors. And we are. We could still claim that title, and wear its loftiest honors, if we had stopped with the first thing we ever invented - human liberty."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday — September 16, 1952

This is the news:

The President today again called for a National Health Insurance program, "at a price people can afford to pay." Mr. Truman told the American Hospital Association convention in Philadelphia, that this is not socialism... but "a goal of American enterprise." And the President took occassion to link General Eisenhower to those, WHO, he said, "want to go back to the horse and buggy days." Without mentioning the General by name, he quoted from Eisenhower's Sunday statement calling for "locally administered, indigent medical care programs." The President said "That's like saying we don't need any form of social security, except the county poor house." The President also commented on the Eisenhower political campaign in a letter sent to the American Federation of Labor convention, here in New York.

Mr. Truman said Eisenhower is supporting the most anti-labor platform submitted to the country in the last 16 years. He said some of "the special interests" are grinding their axes for a fresh attack on labor..in the event of a Republican victory in November. The President said plans are afoot in Wall Street, in case the Republicans win, "to make the Taft-Hartley law "even more oppressive and unfair than it is at present." Mr. Truman also said that he knows there was a definite plot hatched at the close of World War Two to "smash our trade union movement."

General Eisenhower addresses the A.F. of L. convention tomorrow. He is now flying to New York from Minnesota. Yesterday we brought you a report from Governor Stevenson's headquarters in Springfield. Tonight we have asked Bill Downs..assigned to the Eisenhower train through Indiana, Illinois and Minnesota, to talk with us. Here's a report from Bill Downs in Minneapolis:

(2;30 ending.. now back to ERM in New York)

~~The Republican National Committee today joined General Eisenhower in pointing to what they call the humor and jokes in Governor Stevenson's speeches. The Committee says: "The voters can hardly wait to see how Stevenson will handle the 50-cent dollar and those un-funny taxes."~~

~~Senator Monroney, of the Democratic National Committee, says General Eisenhower is trying to take away the nation's sense of humor.. telling America to "wipe the smile off its face."~~

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Mr. Murrow's office
17

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, September 16, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... General Eisenhower addresses the AFL Convention tomorrow. He is now flying to New York from Minnesota. Yesterday, we brought you a report from Governor Stevenson's headquarters in Springfield. Tonight we have asked Bill Downs, assigned to the Eisenhower train, through Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota, to talk with us.

Here's a report from Bill Downs in Minneapolis.

DOWNS: The Republican presidential candidate has finally emerged from his political cocoon and the metamorphosis of GOP nominee, Dwight Eisenhower, is something to behold. This new Ike started developing on the aerial swing through the southern states and, then, when we started on this current whistle-stop tour last Sunday, you could see him relax and start talking with the people instead of at them. In Fort Wayne, Indiana, he pulled his first really clever checkrein on the wit of his opponent, Governor Stevenson, by admitting that he, Eisenhower, is no comedian. "I'm no Bob Hope," he says, "and, besides, what's funny about the things wrong with the Government?" This "what's funny" line is the first time Eisenhower has laid an oratorical glove on Stevenson. Well, the crowds through northern Indiana and Illinois have been unusually large and even though it is generally regarded as territory already captured and under occupation by the Republicans, and today when we hit the Minnesota farm country the crowds were even larger by comparison. Today, in communities named Albert Lee, Owatonna, and Northfield, another facet of the new Eisenhower political personality exposed itself. This is the evangelical or Billy Sunday gambit. Well, some people call the words platitudes, call them trite and naive, but the people seem to hang on them. At Lordfield (?), Minnesota, Eisenhower spoke before a football stadium packed with students from various Minnesota colleges. Now, listen. You can almost feel the people concentrate on his words.

EISENHOWER: The observance and practice of this desire to cooperate is what will bring freedom in the world. Again we find our problem at home related to our problem abroad. Indeed, they cannot be separated, but if you can prove day by day, and by you I mean one hundred fifty-five million people, a people that under God comprise the greatest and mightiest force that has ever been placed upon this (inaudible), if you can by cooperation show that you can outdo, outthink, outwork, outearn any dictatorship that has ever existed, no matter what (inaudible) you will have done your part.

DOWNS: As I said, Ed, ten thousand people were listening there in the same attentiveness; the same almost-reverential hanging-on-old-truisms has been evident up and down the line. The Eisenhower crusade appears to be developing overtones almost of a kind of political religion. Whether it will get votes for him in November ... well, no one can tell right now.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

Governor Stevenson held a number of conferences in Springfield, TODAY. #

Tennessee Democratic leaders said the entire party ticket will win in November. / Thomas Fairchild, who will oppose Senator Mc Carthy for the Senate in Wisconsin, told Stevenson he has a very good fighting chance to win. / He urged the Governor to campaign in Wisconsin. / Laurence F. Lee, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, told the Governor that the nation's businessmen are worried about government spending. They want a substantial cut made.

In Texas, a district judge issued a temporary injunction barring the "Texas Democratic Party" from putting General Eisenhower's name on the November ballot, as its candidate. An official of this INSURGENT group told the court that its state convention was attended by ten persons.. [redacted]

[redacted].

In Washington, Telford Taylor, resigning as head of the Small Defense Plants Administration, told the President today, that Defense Secretary Lovett has shown a lack of enthusiasm for placing military orders with small companies. / Mr. Lovett says he has "great enthusiasm for procuring the right material at the right price at the right time."

The Secretary also told reporters that strikes at two west coast plants..Lockheed and Douglas aircraft at El Segundo...are very serious to the defense effort.

Former Defense Mobilizer Wilson proposed today that people be permitted to trade in their defense bonds for participating stock in government-owned power and water projects. He said this would cut the national debt by ten per cent.

Ralph W. Hardy, an official of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, told a House committee today that some radio and television programs are "most improper." He urged the committee to permit the industry to enforce its own codes rather than have the government lay down rules on what people can see or hear.

At the United Nations, Jacob Malik cast Russia's 51st security council veto.. against Libya's membership. [redacted]

[redacted] is acting

[redacted]

Out in the Pacific, a typhoon with winds up to 160-miles an hour, [redacted] hit Wake island.. AND smashed nearly everything on the island, [redacted] TWO PERSONS WERE INSURED. [redacted]

The Navy discloses that six Marine Pantherjet pilots were killed last Thursday when they rammed into a Korean mountainside. The men were flying in heavy clouds.. [redacted] trying to land at a base other than their own. Today, our Sabrejets shot down four more enemy Migs.. [redacted].

The State Department says Moscow's announcement on the Russian-Chinese conferences are phrased in "typical Soviet language,, and don't give much information. THIS IS consistent with the usual Communist line of keeping secrets from their people."

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh says he's willing to let the World Court decide what compensation the British should receive for the now nationalized Anglo-Iranian oil company.

Edward R. Murrow: September 16, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today in Paris General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, warned our European allies and us that there is no easy or cheap way of defending Western Europe. Bradley said that the American Joint Chiefs were convinced that any "wishful thinking" that American atomic weapons would modify the need for infantry strength could be "both misleading and dangerous." He said that the scheduled North Atlantic Defense forces are insufficient either to launch a counter-offensive or win a possible war. It would be premature for any planners to attempt to substitute atomic weapons for sound, balanced forces. General Bradley said: "All of us feel that atomic weapons may, (and I emphasize the word may,) have some effect on force requirements, but that is something for the future." He said: "No matter how many atomic weapons or bombs the western defense may eventually have on hand, there will always be need for sufficient ground strength to force the enemy to concentrate for attack. If the enemy wanted to disperse his forces so that the soldiers walk a hundred yards apart, they could advance in the face of the greatest atomic power on earth unless other men were there to stop them."

Bradley was disturbed by press reports that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was behind schedule -(he didn't deny that it was,) but he thinks we have done better than he would have thought possible three years ago.

My colleague Alex Kendrick has just concluded a three-week swing through the Balkans and south-eastern Europe, and reports a constantly increasing tempo of defense preparations. He says the Turks, Greeks and Yugoslavs alike seem to be taking most seriously their obligations, whether formal or informal, to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says that Balkan unity is arriving at a point it's never before attained. To all intents and purposes there is now a military alliance between the Greeks, Turks and Yugoslavs. The driving force was, in Kendrick's opinion, the American decision of two months ago to increase military aid to Tito - supply him with tanks, heavy artillery and bombers. The Yugoslavs are sending a military mission to both Greece and Turkey for what will be, in effect, the co-ordination of planning of all three General Staffs. A good-sized American naval squadron is now in Yugoslav ports for more than a mere social visit.

This all sounds very promising. But Russia and her satellites in eastern Europe have not been idle. There are now available some details of a military conference held in Prague the first week in August.

It was attended by the commanders and defense ministers of all the satellite states, presided over by the Russian Marshal Bulganin, with Marshals Zhukov and Vasilievsky also in attendance. The top commanders of the satellite forces are now all Soviet-trained. Much progress has been made in the standardization of arms and equipment. The ground forces, excluding eastern Germany, amount to about ninety divisions. The east European satellite air strength is about fifteen hundred planes.

There is no indication that this Prague conference planned any particular military moves, but it reflected the increasing military potential of our enemies in south-east Europe. Whether we shall continue to support our friends in that area may well be one of the many aspects of foreign policy upon which General Eisenhower and Senator Taft disagree.

Cont'

General Bradley contends that even modern science can't replace the foot soldier in ~~war~~. The Roman Tacitus once said:"The proper qualities of a general are judgement and deliberation." Bradley has both and knows well what F.C. Appley and William Summer meant when they said:

"Artificial optimism alienates more friends than it makes...every man of sense is a pessimist, that is to say he is cautious."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tacitus

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - SEPTEMBER 16, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today again called for a National Health Insurance program, "at a price people can afford to pay." Mr. Truman told the American Hospital Association convention in Philadelphia that this is not socialism... but "a goal of American enterprise." And the President took occasion to link General Eisenhower to those who, he said, "want to go back to the horse and buggy days." Without mentioning the General by name, he quoted from Eisenhower's Sunday statement calling for "locally administered, indigent medical care programs." The President said "That's like saying we don't need any form of social security, except the county poor house." The President also commented on the Eisenhower political campaign in a letter sent to the American Federation of Labor convention, here in New York.

Mr. Truman said Eisenhower is supporting the most anti-labor platform submitted to the country in the last 16 years. He said some of "the special interests" are grinding their axes for a fresh attack on labor...in the event of a Republican victory in November. The President said plans are afoot in Wall Street, in case the Republicans win, "to make the Taft-Hartley law "even more oppressive and unfair than it is at present." Mr. Truman also said that he knows there was a definite plot, hatched at the close of World War Two, to "smash our trade union movement."

General Eisenhower addresses the A.F. of L. convention tomorrow. He is now flying to New York from Minnesota. Yesterday we brought you a report from Governor Stevenson's headquarters in Springfield. Tonight we have asked Bill Downs...assigned to the Eisenhower train through Indiana, Illinois and Minnesota, to talk with us. Here's a report from Bill Downs in Minneapolis:

DOWNS: The Republican presidential candidate has finally emerged from his political cocoon and the metamorphosis of GOP nominee, Dwight Eisenhower, is something to behold. This new Ike started developing on the aerial swing through the southern states and, then, when we started on this current whistle-stop tour last Sunday, you could see him relax and start talking with the people instead of at them. In Fort Wayne, Indiana, he pulled his first really clever checkrein on the wit of his opponent, Governor Stevenson, by admitting that he, Eisenhower, is no comedian. "I'm no Bob Hope," he says, "and, besides, what's funny about the things wrong with the Government?" This "what's funny" line is the first time Eisenhower has laid an oratorical glove on Stevenson. Well, the crowds through northern Indiana and Illinois have been unusually large and even though it is generally regarded as territory already captured and under occupation by the Republicans, and today when we hit the Minnesota farm country the crowds were even larger by comparison. Today, in communities named Albert Lee, Owatonna, and Northfield, another facet of the new Eisenhower political personality exposed itself. This is the evangelical or Billy Sunday gambit. Well, some people call the words platitudes, call them trite and naive, but the people seem to hang on them. At Lordfield, Minnesota, Eisenhower spoke before a football stadium packed with students from various Minnesota colleges. Now, listen. You can almost feel the people concentrate on his words.

EISENHOWER: The observance and practice of this desire to cooperate is what will bring freedom in the world. Again we find our problem at home related to our problem abroad. Indeed, they cannot be separated, but if you can prove day by day, and by you I mean one hundred fifty-five million people, a people that under God comprise the greatest and mightiest force that has even been placed upon this (inaudible), if you can by cooperation show that you can outdo, outthink, outearn any dictatorship that has ever existed, no matter what (inaudible) you will have done your part.

DOWNS: As I said, Ed, ten thousand people were listening there in the same attentiveness; the same almost-reverential hanging-on-old-truisms has been evident up and down the line. The Eisenhower crusade appears to be developing overtones almost of a kind of political religion. Whether it will get votes for him in November...well, no one can tell right now. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Governor Stevenson held a number of conferences in Springfield today. Tennessee Democratic leaders said the entire party ticket will win in November. Thomas Fairchild, who will oppose Senator McCarthy for the Senate in Wisconsin, told Stevenson he has a very good fighting chance to win. He urged the Governor to campaign in Wisconsin. Laurence F. Lee, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, told the Governor that the nation's businessmen are worried about government spending. They want a substantial cut made.

In Texas, a district judge issued a temporary injunction barring the "Texas Democratic Party" from putting General Eisenhower's name on the November ballot, as its candidate. An official of this insurgent group told the court that its state convention was attended by ten persons.

In Washington, Telford Taylor, resigning as head of the Small Defense Plants Administration, told the President today, that Defense Secretary Lovett has shown a lack of enthusiasm for placing military orders with small companies. Mr. Lovett says he has "great enthusiasm for procuring the right material at the right price at the right time."

The Secretary also told reporters that strikes at two west coast plants...Lockheed and Douglas aircraft at El Segundo...are very serious to the defense effort.

Former Defense Mobilizer Wilson proposed today that people be permitted to trade in their defense bonds, for participating stock in government-owned power and water projects. He said this would cut the national debt by ten per cent.

Ralph W. Hardy, an official of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, told a House committee today that some radio and television programs are "most improper." He urged the committee to permit the industry to enforce its own codes rather than have the government lay down rules on what people can see or hear.

At the United Nations, Jacob Malik cast Russia's 51st security council veto...against Libya's membership.

Out in the Pacific, a typhoon, with winds up to 160 miles an hour, hit Wake Island and smashed nearly everything on the island, two persons were injured. The Navy discloses that six Marine Pantherjet pilots were killed last Thursday, when they rammed into a Korean mountainside. The men were flying in heavy clouds...trying to land at a base other than their own. Today, our Sabre-jets shot down four more enemy Migs...

The State Department says Moscow's announcement on the Russian-Chinese conferences are phrased in "typical Soviet language, and don't give much information. This is consistent with the usual Communist line of keeping secrets from their people."

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh says he's willing to let the World Court decide what compensation the British should receive, for the now nationalized Anglo-Iranian oil company.

Today in Paris, General Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, warned our European allies, and us, that there is no easy or cheap way of defending Western Europe. Bradley said that the American Joint Chiefs were convinced, that any "wishful thinking" that American atomic weapons would modify the need for infantry strength could be "both misleading and dangerous." He said that the scheduled North Atlantic Defense forces are insufficient, either to launch a counter-offensive, or win a possible war. It would be premature for any planners to attempt to substitute atomic weapons for sound, balanced forces. General Bradley said: "All of us feel that atomic weapons may, and I emphasize the word may,) have some effect on force requirements, but that is something for the future." He said "No matter how many atomic weapons or bombs the western defense may eventually have on hand, there will always be need for sufficient ground strength, to force the enemy to concentrate for attack. If the enemy wanted to disperse his forces, so that the soldiers walk a hundred yards apart, they could advance in the face of the greatest atomic power on earth, unless other men were there to stop them."

Bradley was disturbed by press reports that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was behind schedule (he didn't deny that it was), but he thinks we have done better than he would have thought possible three years ago.

My colleague Alex Kendrick has just concluded a three-week swing through the Balkans, and south-eastern Europe, and reports a constantly increasing tempo of defense preparations. He says the Turks, Greeks and Yugoslavs alike, seem to be taking most seriously their obligations, whether formal or informal, to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says that Balkan unity is arriving at a point it's never before attained. To all intents and purposes there is now a military alliance between the Greeks, Turks and Yugoslavs. The driving force was, in Kendrick's opinion, the American decision of two months ago to increase military aid to Tito - supply him with tanks, heavy artillery and bombers. The Yugoslavs are sending a military mission to both Greece and Turkey for what will be, in effect, the co-ordination of planning of all three General Staffs. A good-sized American naval squadron is now in Yugoslav ports, for more than a mere social visit.

This all sounds very promising. But Russia and her satellites in eastern Europe have not been idle. There are now available some details of a military conference held in Prague the first week in August.

It was attended by the commanders and defense ministers of all the satellite states, presided over by the Russian Marshal Bulganin, with Marshals Zhukov and Vasilievsky also in attendance. The top commanders of the satellite forces are now all Soviet-trained. Much progress has been made in the standardization of arms and equipment. The ground forces, excluding eastern Germany, amount to about ninety divisions. The east European satellite air strength is about fifteen hundred planes.

There is no indication that this Prague conference planned any particular military moves, but it reflected the increasing military potential of our enemies in southeast Europe. Whether we shall continue to support our friends in that area, may well be one of the many aspects of foreign policy, upon which General Eisenhower and Senator Taft disagree.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Bradley contends that even modern science can't replace the foot soldier. The Roman Tacitus once said: "The proper qualities of a general are judgement and deliberation." Bradley has both and knows well what F.C. Appley and William Sumner meant when they said: "Artificial optimism alienates more friends than it makes...every man of sense is a pessimist, that is to say, he is cautious."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

General Eisenhower Wednesday Sept. 17, 1952

This is the news: [redacted] General Eisenhower TODAY told the American Federation of Labor that he favors amending the Taft-Hartley law..he is against repealing it. The General spoke WITH the knowledge of reports that the convention will endorse Governor Stevenson after he makes his speech on Monday. We've recorded for you a portion of the General's remarks on the labor law:

(3;45 ending: ..to be a true friend of labor.)

In Springfield, Ohio, tonight Senator Taft is making a speech, in which he will call for General Eisenhower's election because, he says, the General has proved his capacity to lead...has a sound knowledge of men and world conditions and has a grasp of the fundemntal principles of American free Government. The Senator says the great fundamental issue in the campaign is the choice between [redacted] the free American way of life and all-powerful and arbitrary government. The Senator says the [redacted] average workingman in this country now pays to the government, directly or indirectly, 25 per cent of his income. He says the average worker is losing one-fourth of his liberty because he has lost the right to spend one-fourth of the money he has earned. Senator Taft says there has been a decrease in the standard of

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Mr. Murrow's Office
17th

Wednesday, September 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... We've recorded for you a portion of the General's remarks on the labor law.

EISENHOWER: Now I suppose you've been waiting for me to say something about the Taft-Hartley Act. (applause) I will tell you exactly how I feel. I believe that your own executive council stated that it was prepared to take what it called a "realistic" view of amendments to the law. And that is my position. I give it to you simply and clearly. I am in favor not of repealing, but of amending, that law.

I will not support any amendments which weaken the rights of working men and women. In seeking desirableamendments, I will ask the advice and suggestions of all groups - public, management and labor. And, gentlemen, I assure you that this invitation of mine will be genuine and in good faith. It will not be one of those empty theatrical gestures so often made in recent years. In my own mind I have complete confidence that this job of amending the law can be worked out so that no fair-minded member of your group will consider the results unreasonable. No such legislation must ever be regarded as final. In considering amendments to labor legislation, one thing I promise if I have any executive responsibility, labor will have an equal voice with all others. (applause) It isthe American way to take what we have and constantly seek to make it better.

Here are some of the principles I think it is important we continue in law: The encouragement of collective bargaining; the right to strike; an advance notice before a strike is called; a requirement that both unions and employers live up to their contracts; the assurance that members of unions get a regular report on their organization's finances.

I have talked about the Taft-Hartley Act both with labor and industry people. I know howthe law might be used to break unions. That must be changed. America wants no law licensing union busting, and, neither do I. (applause)

I also think that since patriotic American union leaders must swear that they are not communists, then the employers with whom they deal should be subject to the same requirement. (applause) Ladies and gentlemen, let me explain my viewin personal terms. I would not mind every morning swearing an oath of loyalty to the United States of America. I would be proud every night to give my sworn ~~xxxxxxxx~~ oath that I am not a communist. But I would resent doing this, and I would resent it bitterly, if I were singled out to do it because I happened to be a veteran, or someone who lived in Kansas - or if I were a laborunion official. (applause)

My pledge to you is simply this: To the limit my judgment can discern, you will always get both justice and fairness from me. Moreover, I repeat my promise of Labor Day, take whatever political action your conscience dictates; Iwill always try to be a true friend of American labor.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

living in the last two years: real wages have been stationery, while the steady increase of taxes has reduced take-home pay to a point, where most families are now worse off than they were before the Korean war.

Senator Carlson of Kanas, a top Eisenhower advisor, says he fully expects that Senator McCarthy "will be speaking vigorously for the Republican ticket, as soon as he recovers fully from his recent operation."

In Springfield today, Governor Stevenson conferred with Senator Fulbright of Arkansas. The Senator says he will support Stevenson very strongly.. thinks he'll carry the entire south "if the people are as wise as I think they are." Fulbright does not agree with Stevenson's approval of a plan to modify the Senate filibuster rule. And he told reporters, he does not think that the "sins" of the Truman Administration should be "visited" on Stevenson.

The President said today that some persons are "using the Big Lie in order to reap personal or partisan advantage". He called this just as un-American as Hitler or Stalin. Mr. Truman told a National Conference on Citizenship in Washington that: "It's a big lie to say we tolerate Communists, or other disloyal persons in our government. It is a big lie to attack one of the greatest generals and patriots this country ever had..and to call him a traitor." This was an obvious refernce to attacks by Senators McCarthy and Jenner on General Marshal. Mr. Truman said we have been waging a relentless fight against the internal attack by Communism.

3/

And later the Department of Justice announced that the F.B.I. today arrested 18 Communist leaders from three states. The arrests were made in ten different cities. All 18 are charged with conspiring to advoctae the overthrow of the government by force.

Former Attorney General Mc Grath told a House committee today that he believes T. Lamar Caudle should not have been summarily fired by the President..that Caudle should have been given a chance to resign. [Caudle is the former head of the Justice Department's tax division.] Mc Grath told the committee "I think if firings were the order of the day, there were plenty of places to start beside Caudle." (He offered no details.) The former attorney general would not say anything about the way he was fired by the President. But he did testify that no one in the Justice Department tried to end a tax scandal investigation in St. Louis. He "dared" the committee to produce evidence that what he said is not true.

John L. Lewis today signed "an interim agreement" with the hard coal industry..to keep the mines working after the present contract expires on October first. The agreement calls for an increase in the royalty paid hard coal miners for their welfare fund. Its now 30 cents a ton..goes up to 50 cents a ton.

There were no developments in the soft coal situation..where a strike may be ordered at midnight Sunday. Joseph E. Moody, chief negotiator for the Southern soft coal operators, says it would be "economic suicide" for them to accept Lewis' demands. Moody says Lewis wants a $1.80 a day wage increase.. a ten cent per ton boost in the royalty payments and a shorter working day. The government tomorrow will issue an order freezing shipments of soft coal AT THE MINES -- to keep an emergency stockpile in the event of a prolonged strike.

At the United Nations today, Ambassador Austin proposed that Japan be admitted to membership as "a peace-loving nation." Jacob Malik of Russia charged that we are dragging Japan into the Korean war. He said he will oppose membership for Japan so that Japanese troops cannot be thrown Into the war.

There were a number of small patrol clashes in Korea today. And in the air, our jets destroyed one enemy Mig.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 736 casualties last week. The total now is 117, 973.

Edward R. Murrow: September 17, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

According to a delayed, and XXX censored report (it was written by an Associated Press photographer sixteen days ago) the Navy has experimented with air-to-air controlled missiles in Korea. It was flown off the aircraft carrier Boxer, on September 1st. The control/ship was an A.D. 2 Douglas attack plane, flying behind and above the guided missile. The target was more than a hundred and fifty miles from the Boxer. The despatch does not indicate what, if anything, in the target area was hit. The Navy says a "number" of these missiles have been used successfully against enemy targets in Korea. They are designed primarily for use against "heavily defended" target areas, that is, places where the enemy has a large concentration of anti-aircraft guns.

The United Press reports that the missiles were old Navy "hellcat" dive bombers, equipped with a television transmitter, a lot of electronic gear, and carrying a two thousand pound bomb.

The carrier launches the hellcat, starts it climbing by electronic controls, and then the A.D.2 up above takes over control, and guides the pilotless dive bomber to the target.

This procedure has been known and practised for a considerable time.

The Navy has merely begun experimenting with it under combat conditions. This is not the latest development in the field of controlled missiles. And it is not the beginning of an era where men need not risk their lives in order to put the bombs in the right place. This was merely a demonstration ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ under what might be called almost ideal combat conditions of something that has been done many times before in maneuvers.

cam.

Tonight's dispatches from Korea [redacted] indicate that we have effectively employed an [redacted] Electronically-controlled [redacted] missle. Albert Einstein once remarked:"Why does magnificiently applied science, bring us so little happiness ? The simple answer is, that we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it."/George Bernard Shaw put it more simply when he said:" Science never solves a problem, without creating ten more."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - SEPTEMBER 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower today told the American Federation of Labor that he favors amending the Taft-Hartley law...he is against repealing it. The General spoke with the knowledge of reports that the convention will endorse Governor Stevenson, after he makes his speech on Monday. We've recorded for you a portion of the General's remarks on the labor law:

EISENHOWER: Now I suppose you've been waiting for me to say something about the Taft-Hartley Act. (applause) I will tell you exactly how I feel. I believe that your own executive council stated that it was prepared to take what it called a "realistic" view of amendments to the law. And that is my position. I give it to you simply and clearly. I am in favor not of repealing, but of amending, that law.

I will not support any amendments which weaken the rights of working men and women. In seeking desirable amendments, I will ask the advice and suggestions of all groups - public, management and labor. And gentlemen, I assure you that this invitation of mine will be ginuine and in good faith. It will not be one of those empty theatrical gestures so often made in recent years. In my own mind I have complete confidence that this job of amending the law can be worked out so that no fair-minded member of your group will consider the results unreasonable. No such legislation must ever be regarded as final. In considering amendments to labor legislation, one thing I promise if I have any executive responsibility, labor will have an equal voice with all others. (applause) It is the American way to take what we have and constantly seek to make it better.

Here are some of the principles I think it is important we continue in law: The encouragement of collective bargaining; the right to strike; an advance notice before a strike is called; a requirement that both unions and employers live up to their contracts; the assurance that members of unions get a regular report on their organization's finances.

I have talked about the Taft-Hartley Act both with labor and industry people. I know how the law might be used to break unions. That must be changed. America wants no law licensing union busting, and, neither do I. (applause)

I also think that since patriotic American union leaders must swear that they are not communists, then the employers with whom they deal should be subject to the same requirement. (applause) Ladies and gentlemen, let me explain my view in personal terms. I would not mind every morning swearing an oath of loyalty to the United States of America. I would be proud every night to give my sworn oath that I am not a communist. But I would resent doing this, and I would resent it bitterly, if I were singled out to do it because I happened to be a veteran, or someone who lived in Kansas - or if I were a labor union official. (applause).

My pledge to you is simply this: To the limit my judgment can discern, you will always get both justice and fairness from me. Moreover, I repeat my promise of Labor Day, take whatever political action your conscience dictates; I will always try to be a true friend of American labor.

In Springfield, Ohio, tonight Senator Taft is making a speech, in which he will call for General Eisenhower's election because, he says, the General has proved his capacity to lead...has a sound knowledge of men and world conditions and has a grasp of the fundamental principles of American free Government. The Senator says the great fundamental issue in the campaign is the choice between the free American way of life, and all-powerful and arbitrary government. The Senator says the average workingman in this country now pays to the government, directly or indirectly, 25 per cent of his income. He says the average worker is losing one-fourth of his liberty, because he has lost the right to spend one-fourth of the money he has earned. Senator Taft says there has been a decrease in the standard of living in the last two years: real wages have been stationery, while the steady increase of taxes has reduced take-home pay to a point, where most families are now worse off than they were before the Korean War.

Senator Carlson of Kansas, a top Eisenhower advisor, says he fully expects that Senator McCarthy "will be speaking vigorously for the Republican ticket, as soon as he recovers fully from his recent operation."

In Springfield today, Governor Stevenson conferred with Senator Fulbright of Arkansas. The Senator says he will support Stevenson very strongly.. thinks he'll carry the entire south "if the people are as wise as I think they are." Fulbright does not agree with Stevenson's approval of a plan to modify the Senate filibuster rule. And he told reporters, he does not think that the "sins" of the Truman Administration should be "visited" on Stevenson.

The President said today that some persons are "using the Big Lie in order to reap personal or partisan advantage." He called this just as un-American as Hitler or Stalin. Mr. Truman told a National Conference on Citizenship in Washington that: "It's a big lie to say we tolerate Communists, or other disloyal persons in our government. It is a big lie to attack one of the greatest generals and patriots this country ever had...and to call him a traitor." This was an obvious reference to attacks by Senators McCarthy and Jenner on General Marshal. Mr. Truman said we have been waging a relentless fight against the internal attack by Communism.

And later the Department of Justice announced that the F.B.I. today arrested 18 Communist leaders from three states. The arrests were made in ten different cities. All 18 are charged with conspiring to advocate the overthrow of the government by force.

Former Attorney General McGrath told a House committee today that he believes T. Lamar Caudle should not have been summarily fired by the President...that Caudle should have been given a chance to resign. Caudle is the former head of the Justice Department's tax division. McGrath told the committee "I think if firings were the order of the day there were plenty of places to start beside Caudle." (He offered no details.) The former attorney general would not say anything about the way he was fired by the President. But he did testify that no one in the Justice Department tried to end a tax scandal investigation in St. Louis. He "dared" the committee to produce evidence that what he said is not true.

John L. Lewis today signed "an interim agreement", with the hard coal industry...to keep the mines working after the present contract expires on October first. The agreement calls for an increase in the royalty paid hard coal miners, for their welfare fund. It's now 30 cents a ton...goes up to 50 cents a ton.

There were no developments in the soft coal situation...where a strike may be ordered at midnight Sunday. Joseph E. Moody, chief negotiator for the Southern soft coal operators, says it would be "economic suicide," for them to accept Lewis' demands. Moody says Lewis wants a $1.80 a day wage increase...a ten cent per ton boost in the royalty payments, and a shorter working day. The government tomorrow will issue an order freezing shipments of soft coal at the mines...to keep an emergency stockpile, in the event of a prolonged strike.

At the United Nations today, Ambassador Austin proposed that Japan be admitted to membership as "a peace-loving nation." Jacob Malik of Russia charged that we are dragging Japan into the Korean war. He said he will oppose membership for Japan so that Japanese troops cannot be thrown into the war.

There were a number of small patrol clashes in Korea today. And in the air, our jetsdestroyed one enemy Mig.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 736 casualties last week. The total now is 117,973.

According to a delayed and censored report (it was written by an Associated Press photographer sixteen days ago) the Navy has experimented with an air-to-air controlled missiles in Korea. It was flown off the aircraft carrier Boxer on September 1st. The control ship was an A.D. 2 Douglas attack plane, flying behind and above the guided missile. The target was more than a hundred and fifty miles from the Boxer. The dispatch does not indicate what, if anything, in the target area was hit. The Navy says a "number" of these missiles have been used successfully against enemy targets in Korea. They are designed primarily for use against "heavily defended" target areas, that is, places where the enemy has a large concentration of anti-aircraft guns.

The United Press reports that the missiles were old Navy "hellcat" dive bombers, equipped with a television transmitter, a lot of electronic gear, and carrying a two thousand pound bomb.

The carrier launches the hellcat, starts it climbing by electronic controls, and then the A.D. 2 up above takes over control, and guides the pilotless dive bomber to the target.

This procedure has been known and practised for a considerable time. The Navy has merely begun experimenting with it under combat conditions. This is not the latest development in the field of controlled missiles. And it is not the beginning of an era where men need not risk their lives, in order to put the bombs in the right place. This was merely a demonstration under what might be called almost ideal combat conditions of something that has been done many times before in maneuvers.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tonight's dispatches from Korea indicate that we have effectively employed an electronically-controlled missle. Albert Einstein once remarked: "Why does magnificiently applied science bring us so little happiness? The simple answer is that we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it." George Bernard Shaw put it more simply when he said: "Science never solves a problem without creating ten more."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Sept. 18, 1952

This is the news:

The Democrats today called on REPUBLICAN Senator Nixon to get out of the race for vice president. The demand was made after a California attorney disclosed that a group of Republicans there had paid 16-thousand dollars worth of Nixon's bills in the last two years. The Senator says it all went for "political expenses." (I should like to review the facts in a few minutes.)

General Eisenhower is in Omaha. Tonight he will promise again that if he's elected he will drive OUT OF WASHINGTON, THOSE HE CALLS "the crooks and the cronies, the experts in shady and shoddy operations." He says all of us have had enough of what's humorously called the Fair Deal. What we want is an "honest deal." In his whistle stop tours and his speech tonight, the general is making these points: farmers should have more control over farm programs.. they should not be put in chains by federal administrators who use the programs as a political tool. We must halt crazy expenditres. He accuses the Administration of an arrogance "born of being too long in the seat of the mighty." He says Secretray of Agriculture Brannon told Congress that five million dollars was not very much to lose in the 10-billion dollar Commodity Credit Corporation program. The General said he'd be worried if a nickle was lost. Eisenhower said its not true to say that Iowa is the heart of isolationism. He said: "Its not intelligent to be an isolationist. And I have never seen a group of Americans gathered together, who didn't have intelligence." And the General..who recently made many speeches criticing the humor of his opponenet, said today: "To win a fight you never go about it with long faces. You put on a grin and go after it."

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in Connecticut today, took note of the Eisenhower remarks on his humor. The Governor said: "If I was in intimate alliance with some of the one-eyed brigands, who are swarming onto the General's campaign train, I wouldn't find it very humorous either." Stevenson again refered to what he called Eisenhower's "abject surrender" to Senator Taft. He said: the Democrats "are not sitting around the breakfast table splitting up the party pie, matching principles, against pennies." He charged that Eisenhower's endorsement of Indiana's Senator Jenner amounts to "pursuit of power at any price; this is distatesful to any honorable man." Stevenson also said: "Like the crossed palm, the tarnished mind and the troubled heart are threats to democracy, too. Win or lose I will not accept the proposition that party regularity is more important than political ehtics. [redacted] And in a speech he is making on atomic energy tonight, Stevenson will say:"There is no evil in the atom; only in men's souls. We have dealt with evil men before and so have our Fathers before us. The way to deal with evil men has never varied; stand up for the right, and, if needs be, fight for the right."

In South Carolina, Governor Jimmy Byrnes, a Democrat all his life, put himself on record in favor of General Eisenhower. The Governor said the General is a world leader...is opposed to the Fair Employment Practises act...and favors lower taxes. BYRNES TOLD NEWSMEN: [redacted]

[redacted]

(runs 1;05 ending

"And I shall vote for General Dwight D. Eisenhower."

In Washington, the President told reporters today: the Democratic campaign is in good shape.. he's going to campaign as hard as he can.. Governor Stevenson and he agree on how things should be handled. And he agrees with the Governor that General Eisenhower has surrendered control of the party to Senator Taft. The President was asked about a story credited to "informed sources" that when General Eisenhower was army chief of staff, in 1946, he refused to take command of railroad workers who might have been drafted because of a strike. The President said "he" had no such conversation with Eisenhower. No chief of staff would tell the Commander in Chief that he would not obey an order.

[redacted].

Here in New York, Republican Senator Morse of Oregon told the American Federation of Labor that he will not campaign for Eisenhower. He says Senator Taft..whom he called "a dazed quarterback" is now leading the party to defeat. He said the statement Senator Taft read after his breakfast with General Eisenhower is "a fantastic document of political compromise." Senator Morse said he agrees with Eisenhower that the Taft-Hartley law could be used to break unions. He feels much of Eisenhower's speech to the A.F. of L. yesterday was "ill-advised and confusing."

A House committee today was told by T. Lamar Caudle, one-time head of the Justice Department's criminal division, that White House Assistant David Niles used to call him "many times" on behalf of conscitious objectors . Caudle said he always conferred with these persons.. many of them members of the Jehova Witness Sect..who wanted to ESCAPE prosecution. Mr. Niles has since left the White House. Caudle also testified that in 1944, when he was U.S. attorney in North Carolina, Tom Clark ordered him to drop an O.P.A. violation case against a North Carolina Lumberman. Clark..now a supreme court justice..was then head of the Justice Department's criminal division. Caudle says Clark made his decision after talking with Clyde Hooey. Hooey, now a Senator, was then senator-elect. Both Caudle and Senator Hooey said today they felt there were no grounds for prosecuting this case. Caudle said O.P.A. attorneys thought they had a strong case.

The State Department tonight issued a 69-page white paper accusing Russia of brutal treatment of millions of slave laborers. The report says Russian slave laborers are treated worse than the dogs who guard them. The report says this represents "the most extreme violation of human rights on the face of the earth today."

At the United Nations, the Russians used their 53rd veto to kill Japan's application for membership. The United States denied the Soviet charge that we are turning Japan into a military base.

In Korea today, South Korean soldiers drove Chinese Communists off a hill on the central front. And there were no jet battles.

From Navy officials in Tokyo and Washington we get these additional details on the guided missiles now in operation in Korea: the Korean missiles are primitive.. we have better ones.. the Russians have the technical information to make much better pilotless planes.. the Navy has made progress toward making the jamming of such planes very difficult. Continent-to-continent missiles are possible. Robots are more manuverable than piloted planes.

In Washington [redacted], the White House announced the death of Joseph Short, press secretary to the President. Mr. Short 48 was taken ill last Tuesday... had been recuperating at home. The White House says he collapsed at his home tonight.

Edward R. Murrow: September 18, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

This is the story, so far as we have it, of what may come to be called "The Affair Nixon". Today a Los Angeles tax attorney, Dana C. Smith, confirmed that he was a member of a group of Californians, that had provided more than sixteen thousand dollars in the last two years, toward defraying the expenses of Senator Richard M. Nixon, the Republican candidate for Vice President. / Smith said, this money was not provided for Nixon's personal use; it was to help the Senator pay for such things as Christmas cards, telephone calls, stamps, travel and radio recordings. Attorney Smith said the fund was to help Nixon do, "a selling job in behalf of private enterprise;" was designed to keep him free from the pressure of special interests; and that no one who contributed to the fund had ever asked for personal favors. # Mr. Smith said the money wasn't paid directly to Nixon. He, Smith, just paid some of Nixon's bills and, in a few "minor instances," reimbursed the Senator for a few things he had to pay in Washington.

When first informed of this disclosure Senator Nixon declined to comment. Later, he said the money was used to handle postage, travel expenses, the cost of printing speeches and documents, and to enable him to hire extra clerical help. He said the money was used to take care of political expenses "which I believe should not be charged to the Federal Government." And he said: "As an alternative I might have used free government transportation, or might have put my wife on the federal payroll, as did the Democratic nominee for Vice President." [Nixon also said he hadn't been accepting law fees on the side while sitting as a member of Congress.]

The Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Stephen A. Mitchell, called upon General Eisenhower to demand the resignation of Senator Nixon, because he had accepted this money from the California group. Mitchell said Eisenhower should demand that Nixon get out, or Eisenhower should admit the statement that he would rather not be elected President than to be elected by the help of those who have lost their sense of public morals, is just plain campaign hogwash. ~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~ Mitchell said: "By no standard of public morals, or of private morals, can such conduct be condoned or explained away."

The original story of the Nixon subsidy was broken by The New York Post. Confirmation and explanation have now been offered by the tax attorney who handled the fund, and by Senator Nixon. A Senator's salary is twelve thousand, five hundred dollars a year, plus a yearly tax-free expense account of two thousand, five hundred dollars. The essential facts in this situation are not in dispute. The public and private morals and ethics are. ~~Fortunately for us, we are the custodians of neither~~

Cohen

The association of ethics and public service is not new to us. And sometimes the line is a thin one. Ernest Hemingway set up a good standard when he wrote:"What is moral is what you feel good after. What is immoral is what you feel bad after." But Mohammed had the definitive answer when he said:"Actions will be judged according to intentions."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Mr. Murrow's Office
17

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, September 18, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... In South Carolina, Governor Jimmie Byrnes, a Democrat all his life, put himself on record in favor of General Eisenhower. The Governor said the General is a world leader, is opposed to the Fair Employment Practices Act, and favors lower taxes. Byrnes told newsmen ...

BYRNES: Do not be misled. If you want more of the Truman Administration you should vote for Governor Stevenson. If you've had enough, you should vote for General Eisenhower. General Eisenhower is not an office-seeker. He believed there should be a change in Washington and he sought the Republican nomination. If those Democrats who favored his nomination four years ago, and one year ago, should vote against him now solely because he calls himself a Republican, surely they will be voting for a label and not for principles or for the man they believe best qualified. I shall not vote for a label. I shall do what I have heretofore urged others to do. I shall place loyalty to my country above loyalty to a political party and I shall vote for General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - SEPTEMBER 18, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Democrats today called on Republican, Senator Nixon, to get out of the race for vice president. The demand was made after a California attorney disclosed that a group of Republicans there had paid 16 thousand dollars worth of Nixon's bills, in the last two years. The Senator says it all went for "political expenses." (I should like to review the facts in a few minutes.)

General Eisenhower is in Omaha. Tonight he will promise again that if he's elected he will drive out of Washington, those he calls the crooks and the cronies, the experts in shady and shoddy operations." He says all of us have had enough of what's humorously called the Fair Deal. What we want is an "honest deal." In his whistle stop tours, and his speech tonight, the general is making these points: farmers should have more control over farm programs...they should not be put in chains by federal administrators, who use the programs as a political tool. We must halt crazy expenditures. He accused the Administration of an arrogance "born of being too long in the seat of the mighty." He says Secretary of Agriculture Brannon told Congress that five million dollars was not very much to lose in the 10-billion dollar Commodity Credit Corporation program. The General said he'd be worried if a nickle was lost. Eisenhower said its not true to say that Iowa is the heart of isolationism. He said: "It's not intelligent to be an isolationist. And I have never seen a group of Americans gathered together who didn't have intelligence." And the General...who recently made many speeches criticizing the humor of his opponent, said today: "To win a fight you never go about it with long faces. You put on a grin and go after it."

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in Connecticut today, took note of the Eisenhower remarks on his humor. The Governor said: "If I was in intimate alliance with some of the one-eyed brigands who are swarming onto the General's campaign train, I wouldn't find it very humorous either." Stevenson again referred to what he called Eisenhower's "abject surrender" to Senator Taft. He said: the Democrats "are not sitting around the breakfast table splitting up the party pie, matching principles against pennies." He charged that Eisenhower's endorsement of Indiana's Senator Jenner amounts to "pursuit of power at any price; this is distasteful to any honorable man." Stevenson also said: "Like the crossed palm, the tarnished mind and the troubled heart are threats to democracy, too. Win or lose I will not accept the proposition that party regularity is more important than political ethics." And in a speech he is making on atomic energy tonight, Stevenson will say: "There is no evil in the atom; only in men's souls. We have dealt with evil men before, and so have our Fathers before us. The way to deal with evil men has never been varied; stand up for the right, and, if needs be, fight for the right."

In South Carolina, Governor Jimmy Byrnes, a Democrat all his life, put himself on record in favor of General Eisenhower. The Governor said the General is a world leader...is opposed to the Fair Employment Practices act... and favors lower taxes. Byrnes told newsmen:

BYRNES: Do not be misled. If you want more of the Truman Administration you should vote for Governor Stevenson. If you've had enough, you should vote for General Eisenhower. General Eisenhower is not an office-seeker. He believed there should be a change in Washington and he sought the Republican nomination. If those Democrats who favored his nomination four years ago, and one year ago, should vote against him now solely because he calls himself a Republican, surely they will be voting for a label and not for principles or for the man they believe best qualified. I shall not vote for a label. I shall do what I have heretofore urged others to do. I shall place loyalty to my country above loyalty to a political party and I shall vote for General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In Washington, the President told reporters today: the Democratic campaign is in good shape...he's going to campaign as hard as he can...Governor Stevenson and he agree on how things should be handled. And he agrees with the Governor that General Eisenhower has surrendered control of the party to Senator Taft. The President was asked about a story credited to "informed sources" that when General Eisenhower was army chief of staff, in 1946, he refused to take command of railroad workers, who might have been drafted, because of a strike. The President said he had no such conversation with Eisenhower. No chief of staff would tell the Commander in Chief that he would not obey an order.

Here in New York, Republican Senator Morse of Oregon told the American Federation of Labor that he will not campaign for Eisenhower. He says Senator Taft...whom he called "a dazed quarterback" is now leading the party to defeat. He said the statement Senator Taft read after his breakfast with General Eisenhower is "a fantastic document of political compromise." Senator Morse said he agrees with Eisenhower that the Taft-Hartley law could be used to break unions. He feels much of Eisenhower's speech to the A.F. of L. yesterday was "ill-advised and confusing."

A House committee today was told by T. Lamar Caudle, one-time head of the Justice Department's criminal division, that White House Assistant David Niles used to call him "many times" on behalf of consciencious objectors. Caudle said he always conferred with these persons...many of them members of the Jehova Witness Sect...who wanted to escape prosecution. Mr. Niles has since left the White House. Caudle also testified that in 1944, when he was U.S. attorney in North Carolina, Tom Clark ordered him to drop an O.P.A. violation case against a North Carolina Lumberman. Clark...now a supreme court justice...was then head of the Justice Department's criminal division. Caudle says Clark made his decision after talking with Clyde Hoocy. Hoocy, now a Senator, was then senator-elect. Both Caudle and Senator Hoocy said today they felt there were no grounds for prosecuting this case. Caudle said O.P... attorneys thought they had a strong case.

The State Department tonight issued a 69-page white paper accusing Russia of brutal treatment of millions of slave laborers. The report says Russian slave laborers are treated worse than the dogs who guard them. The report says this represents "the most extreme violation of human rights on the face of the earth today."

At the United Nations, the Russians used their 53rd veto to kill Japan's application for membership. The United States denied the Soviet charge that we are turning Japan into a military base.

In Korea today, South Korean soldiers drove Chinese Communists off a hill on the central front. And there were no jet battles.

From Navy officials in Tokyo and Washington we get these additional details on the guided missiles now in operation in Korea: the Korean missiles are primitive...we have better ones...the Russians have the technical information to make much better pilotless planes...the Navy has made progress toward making the jamming of such planes very difficult. Continent-to-continent missiles are possible. Robots are more manuverable than piloted planes.

In Washington, the White House announced the death of Joseph Short, press secretary to the President. Mr. Short, 48, was taken ill last Tuesday... had been recuperating at home. The White House says he collapsed at his home tonight.

This is the story, so far as we have it, of what may come to be called "The Affair Nixon". Today a Los Angeles tax attorney, Dana C. Smith, confirmed that he was a member of a group of Californians that had provided more than sixteen thousand dollars in the last two years toward defraying the expenses of Senator Richard M. Nixon, the Republican candidate for Vice President. Smith said this money was not provided for Nixon's personal use; it was to help the Senator pay for such things as Christmas cards, telephone calls, stamps, travel and radio recordings. Attorney Smith said the fund was to help Nixon do a "selling job in behalf of private enterprise;" was designed to keep him free from the pressure of special interests; and that no one who contributed to the fund had ever asked for personal favors. Mr. Smith said the money wasn't paid directly to Nixon. He, Smith, just paid some of Nixon's bills and, in a few "minor instances," reimbursed the Senator for a few things he had to pay in Washington.

When first informed of this disclosure Senator Nixon declined to comment. Later, he said the money was used to handle postage, travel expenses, the cost of printing speeches and documents, and to enable him to hire extra clerical help. He said the money was used to take care of political expenses "which I believe should not be charged to the Federal Government." And he said: "As an alternative I might have used free government transportation, or might have put my wife on the federal payroll, as did the Democratic nominee for Vice President." Nixon also said he hadn't been accepting law fees on the side while sitting as a member of Congress.

The Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Stephen A. Mitchell, called upon General Eisenhower to demand the resignation of Senator Nixon, because he had accepted this money from the California group. Mitchell said Eisenhower should demand that Nixon get out, or Eisenhower should admit the statement that he would rather not be elected President than to be elected by the help of those who have lost their sense of public morals, is just plain campaign hogwash. Mitchell said: "By no standard of public morals, or of private morals, can such conduct be condoned or explained away."

The original story of the Nixon subsidy was broken by The New York Post. Confirmation and explanation have now been offered by the tax attorney who handled the fund, and by Senator Nixon. A Senator's salary is twelve thousand, five hundred dollars a year, plus a yearly tax-free expense account of two thousand, five hundred dollars. The essential facts in this situation are not in dispute. The public and private morals and ethics are.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word for Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The association of ethics and public service, is not new to us, and sometimes the line is a thin one. Ernest Hemingway set up the standard when he wrote: "What is moral is what you feel good after. What is immoral is what you feel bad after." But Mohammed had the definitive answer when he said: "Actions will be judged according to intentions."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday September 19, 1952.

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that he believes his Republican running-mate, Senator Nixon, is an honest man. The General is confident that the Senator will place before the American people..."fairly and squarely"..all the facts concerning the 16-thousand dollars in expense money, he has received from a group of California admirers, OVER A TWO-YEAR PERIOD. In a statement issued as his train whistle-stopped through Nebraska, Eisenhower said: "I have long admired Senator Nixon's American faith, and his determination to drive Communist sympathizers from offices of public trust. There has recently been levelled against him a charge of unethical practises. I believe Dick Nixon to be an honest man. I am confident he will place all the facts before the American people fairly and squarely. I intend to talk with him, "the General said," at the earliest possible time we can reach each other by telephone."

Senator Nixon was in telphonic communication with the Eisenhower train today. A Nixon aide says the Senator DID NOT SPEAK WITH EISENHOWER spoke with Senator Seaton of Nebraska.. about the expense money, among other things. During his whistle-stop tour in California today, ~~the Senator~~ Nixon was heckled by a voice that cried out: "What about the 16-thousand dollars?" Senator Nixon orddred that his train be held while he made a statement. He said the story was brought into the open by "crooks and communists"...was an attempt to stop him from exposing corruption and Communism in Washington. He said the more he is "smeared" the more he is going to expose Communists in Washington. He said he has never accepted a legal fee in Washington.. He said by accepting [redacted] expense money from his California friends he was saving the taxpayers money. He said his wife did a lot of work for him and was never paid one penny. The Senator told reporters he did not report this 16-thousand dollars on his income tax.

The California State Franchise Tax Board is making what it calls a "routine" investigation of the money.

Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says the time has come for Eisenhower to "cast away either his principles or his running mate." [redacted]

[redacted] has been [redacted] Eisenhower-Nixon [redacted] says "Nixon should withdraw" [redacted] fer him [redacted] similar [redacted]

He called on Senator Nixon to tell all: who gave him the money...how he spent it. to produce cancelled checks and bills.. Mr. Mitchell said General Eisenhower's statement today meant in effect:"Nixon is innocent and I will get the facts later to prove it." Mitchell said he would like to see the whole case thoroughly investigated by the newspapers.

Tonight, the Washington Post, which is supporting the Republican ticket, will call on Nixon to withdraw from the race. The Posts' editorial will say there is no decent course but for the Senator to remove himself.. that his statement about others having cut similar corners is no defense at all.

All of this has caused much concern to the party leaders now accompanying General Eisenhower. My Colleague Bill Downs has been on the campaign train through the day and arrived in Kansas City tonight to cover a speech the General is making on corruption. Bill, what happened on the train after the Nixon story broke?

(4 mins ending: now back to ERM in NY)

That's the story from Bill Downs with the Eisenhower train. A few minutes ago Ed Morgan..who has been touring Connecticut and Massachusetts with Governor Stevenson, stopped off in the newsroom for a few hours..before going on to Richmond tomorrow. Ed, what did the Stevenson people think of all this:

(Morgan ends: the initials GOP mean Grouchy old Pessimists)

In Ohio today, Republican Senator Dirksen said he's quite certain that at the recent Eisenhower-Taft meeting "there were assurances", that in the event of a Republican victory in November "Governor Dewey will not leave New York state." He offered no details.

In Washington today, T. Lamar Caudle, formerly of the Justice Department, told House investigators that he isn't sure "if pressure " was put on him, but he "sure did a lot of conferring" about tax matters, with members of Congress. He said that former Senator Pepper, Democrat from Florida, Democrat Representative Doughton of North Carolina, Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota and Democratic Senator Kilgore of West Virginia, AND FORMER DEMOCRATIC SENATOR LUCAS OF ILLINOIS -- had all conferred with him..either directly or through aides..on tax cases. Caudle said in each case the [redacted] Justice Department went ahead with prosecutions. ~~And in each case, except the one Kilgore was interested in, juries returned convictions. Caudle also said that former Democratic Senator Lucas of Illinois made numerous appeals to have a woman defendant in Milwaukee spared the court trial on grounds her case, she was [illegible] husband was convicted.~~ ALSO ~~Caudle said that he interceded with a number of high government officials, in the Internal~~ Revenue bureau, treasury department ~~and Democratic~~ committee to get ~~former St.~~ Louis tax collector ~~Finnegan to resign. Finnegan eventually did~~ resign. ~~Caudle also said that Ellis N. Slack, Justice Department attorney, was sent to Asheville and Milwaukee to help get tax cases dismissed.~~

The Government announced today that the cost of living went up slightly in the middle of August... to set a new high record, for the third month in a row. Its now twelve and three tenths per cent above what it was when the Korean war started.

The Justice Department says that if Charlie Chaplin, the movie comedian, attempts to return to this country he will be held for an investigation by the Immigration Service. Chaplain , his wife and three children left for England on Wednesday. He has lived here many years..is not a citizen. The Justice Department gave no reason for its order.

At the United Nations today, the Russians vetoed the admission of three Indo-Chinese countries: Viet Nam...Laos and Cambodia.

In Korea, our Superforts made a daylight raid for the first time in 11 months..dropped 300 tons of bombs on Hamhung.. on the east coast. All returned safely. On the ground, an allied unit--headquarters does not identify it--was "virtually annihilated" on the western front. The Chinese, in a four hour attack, killed, wounded or captured all but a handful of the United Nations troops. We are not told the size of the allied force.

In Berlin today, George Kennan, our ambassador to Moscow, said that Russia's hate-America campaign has become "serious." He said western diplomats in Moscow are now forced to live in "complete isolation.". Not even their servants are permitted to talk to the diplomats, except on Business matters.

[redacted]

There is no such thing as a "little mistake" in an election year. And the Nixon "incident" poses quite a problem for General Eisenhower and his advisers. The Chinese philosopher Men-shy-us put the problem well when he said:"Men must be decided on what they will not do and then they are able to act with vigor in what they ought to do." Lomgfellow had this advice:"Decide not rashly. The decision made can never be recalled."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - SEPTEMBER 19, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that he believes his Republican running-mate, Senator Nixon, is an honest man. The General is confident that the Senator will place before the American people..."fairly and squarely"...all the facts concerning the 16-thousand dollars in expense money he has received from a group of California admirers over a two-year period. In a statement issued as his train whistle-stopped through Nebraska, Eisenhower said; "I have long admired Senator Nixon's American faith, and his determination to drive Communist sympathizers from offices of public trust. There has recently been levelled against him a charge of unethical practises. I believe Dick Nixon to be an honest man. I am confident he will place all the facts before the American people fairly and squarely. I intend to talk with him, " the General said, "at the earliest possible time we can reach each other by telephone."

Senator Nixon was in telephonic communication with the Eisenhower train today. A Nixon aide says the Senator did not speak with Eisenhower. He spoke with Senator Seaton of Nebraska...about the expense money, among other things. During his whistle-stop tour in California today, Nixon was heckled by a voice that cried out: "What about the 16-thousand dollars?" Senator Nixon ordered that his train be held while he made a statement. He said the story was brought into the open by "crooks and communists"...was an attempt to stop him from exposing corruption and Communism in Washington. He said he has never accepted a legal fee in Washington...He said by accepting expense money from his California friends he was saving the taxpayers money. He said his wife did a lot of work for him and was never paid one penny. The Senator told reporters he did not report this 16-thousand dollars on his income tax.

The California State Franchise Tax Board is making what it calls a "routine" investigation of the money.

Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says the time has come for Eisenhower to "cast away either his principles or his running mate."

He called on Senator Nixon to tell all: who gave him the money... how he spent it...and to produce cancelled checks and bills...Mr. Mitchell said General Eisenhower's statement today meant in effect: "Nixon is innocent, and I will get the facts later to prove it." Mitchell said he would like to see the whole case thoroughly investigated by the newspapers.

Tonight, the Washington Post, which is supporting the Republican ticket, will call on Nixon to withdraw from the race. The Posts' editorial will say there is no decent course but for the Senator to remove himself...that his statement about others having cut similar corners is no defense at all.

All of this has caused much concern to the party leaders now accompanying General Eisenhower. My Colleague Bill Downs has been on the campaign train through the day and arrived in Kansas City tonight to cover a speech the General is making on corruption. Bill, what happened on the train after the Nixon story broke?

DOWNS: Candidate Dwight Eisenhower is learning that the science of politics is even more uncertain and unpredictable than the science of war, and it'd be a fair guess tonight, Ed, to say that the famous wartime general probably wishes he'd never left the Army.

It was only last Monday that the GOP nominee began this current whistle-stop tour through the mid-west. He was fresh from his successful aerial swing through the southern states, and he took immediately to the whistle-stop technique, drawing big crowds throughout the mid-west, hitting the Administration hard on the issue of corruption. But then last night, the news broke and was confirmed that Eisenhower's running mate, GOP Vice Presidential candidate, Richard Nixon, that Nixon had been receiving payments from a group of wealthy Californians that over the past 2 years amounted to between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars.

Well, the story at first attracted little attention on the Eisenhower train. Mostly because the pro-Republican press in this part of the country buried it deep inside their news pages. Yesterday afternoon, Eisenhower made a fighting speech before a large crowd in Des Moines, again calling for an end to corruption in government and reasserting his determination to clean up the "mess" in Washington. It was after this speech that his managers began to get the full implications of the Nixon story. By this time, the Eisenhower special had arrived in Omaha, that was late yesterday evening. Top Republican leaders on the train immediately put in long distance telephone calls for Nixon, who was on a whistle-stop train of his own, touring Central California. Eisenhower had to leave for a major speech on agriculture. By this time he and his managers got hold of the Vice Presidential nominee while he was away.

What transpired in this initial conversation, has not been made public but, apparently, Nixon confirmed his receipt of the money. However, by this time the entire atmosphere of the Eisenhower train had changed. Advisers and assistants, who only a dozen hours before were predicting that the General would be elected tomorrow, if the voting were held then, well, from top to the bottom of this staff, the optimism changed to worry and concern. The lights in the official cars, at the end of the special train, burned late last night. The trainside telephone lines were kept busy. There were more conferences this morning. And, finally, about 11:00 o'clock, Eisenhower's press secretary, Jim Haggerty, called a news conference and read a statement from the General which you've already heard.

Well, the Eisenhower statement is a defense of his running mate, but implied in it are reservations. Because if it's established that Nixon's non-official California expense account and his acceptance of the money is, in fact, unethical, then it would cut the ground out from under the entire Eisenhower crusade thus far. And some observers say it could cost him the election.

Presumably, right now, Eisenhower is contacting Senator Nixon. He must also prepare for a major speech in Kansas City tonight, a speech ironically which was to be another king-size blast at the Administration graft in the former Boss Pendergast stronghold and President Truman's own bailiwick. No one in the Eisenhower organization, from the General on down, is taking this threat to his political chances (indistinct)...By his statement Eisenhower implies that he is reserving judgment. Some of his advisers are hinting that it may be that the Vice Presidential candidate will be asked to resign. Others are saying that further investigation will prove that there's nothing serious to the story, that it will be forgotten in the heat of future campaign.

Well, a short time ago, this afternoon, we made a whistle-stop at St. Joseph, Mo. The Nixon story already is front-page stuff in that pro-Republican newspaper, the "St. Joseph News Press." An unidentified printer on this newspaper composed himself a poem, which the editor ran on the front page alongside the story. The reaction is interesting - coming from a Republican newspaper. The Poem's entitled: "They're Fixing Mr. Nixon." It goes: "We've often heard the shout, 'we must turn the rascals out' - the (unintelligible) leading us to ruin isn't slow. But cleaning out their own backyard may be just a wee bit hard when millionaires are slipping them the dough." That's all there is to the poem. But it would appear that in addition to having taken on the mess in Washington, candidate Dwight Eisenhower now has one of his own in his own party. Whether it's more than just a long distance campaign mixup, remains to be seen. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That's the story from Bill Downs with the Eisenhower train. A few minutes ago Ed Morgan...who has been touring Connecticut and Massachusetts with Governor Stevenson, stopped off in the newsroom for a few hours...before going on to Richmond tomorrow. Ed, what did the Stevenson people think of all this:

MORGAN: Well, Ed, the Governor himself isn't saying anything yet. Landing in New York tonight from Springfield, Massachusetts, he had no comment but he indicated he would have plenty to say when he was ready. This seems to be in line with the Stevenson strategy of exploiting this pregnant situation, but slowly and with care, letting the other side make its protests and do its explaining first. The Governor's aides think quite enthusiastically that Nixon may have handed them their most important single break so far in the campaign. Stevenson's friends quickly recalled his ringing Los Angeles speech just last week on government messiness and happily underlined the Governor's possibly fortuitous foresight in selecting then the following quotation from Charles Evans Hughes: "Neither political party has a monopoly on virtue or rascality. Let no partisan Pecksniffs effect a holier-than-thou attitude." One Stevenson lieutenant wryly put the situation to me in the following nutshell: "The Democrats now have a new issue - corruption."

Stevenson has had two successful days with a motorcade campaign in Connecticut and Massachusetts and tomorrow he invades the south for the first time, making a major speech at Richmond, Virginia, with the decision of Governor Byrnes, of South Carolina, to vote for Eisenhower perhaps ringing at least faintly in his ears. Stevenson is moving more and more to the attack and he's getting his humor down to a more applied science. The crowd roared in Springfield, Massachusetts, at noon today when he suggested the initials GOP really meant grouchy old pessimists.

In Ohio today, Republican Senator Dirksen said he's quite certain that at the recent Eisenhower-Taft meeting, "there were assurances" that in the event of a Republican victory in November, "Governor Dewey will not leave New York state." He offered no details.

In Washington today, T. Lamar Caudle, formerly of the Justice Department, told House investigators that he isn't sure "if pressure" was put on him, but he "sure did a lot of conferring" about tax matters with members of Congress. He said that former Senator Pepper, Democrat from Florida, Democrat Representative Doughton of North Carolina, Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota and Democratic Senator Kilgore of West Virginia, and former Democratic Senator Lucas of Illinois...had all conferred with him...either directly or through aides...on tax cases. Caudle said in each case the Justice Department went ahead with prosecutions.

The Government announced today that the cost of living went up slightly in the middle of August...to set a new high record, for the third month in a row. Its now twelve and three tenths per cent above what it was when the Korean war started.

The Justice Department says that if Charlie Chaplin, the movie comedian, attempts to return to this country he will be held for an investigation by the Immigration Service. Chaplin, his wife and three children left for England on Wednesday. He has lived here many years...is not a citizen. The Justice Department gave no reason for its order.

At the United Nations today, the Russians vetoed the admission of three Indo-Chinese countries: Viet Nam...Laos and Cambodia.

In Korea, our Superforts made a daylight raid for the first time in 11 months...dropped 300 tons of bombs on Hamhung...on the east coast. All returned safely. On the ground, an allied unit - (headquarters does not identify it) was "virtually annihilated" on the western front. The Chinese, in a four hour attack, killed, wounded or captured all but a handful of the United Nations troops. We are not told the size of the allied force.

In Berlin today, George Kennan, our ambassador to Moscow, said that Russia's hate-America campaign has become "serious." He said western diplomats in Moscow are now forced to live in "complete isolation." Not even their servants are permitted to talk to the diplomats except on business matters.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with "The Word for Today." Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is no such thing as a "little mistake" in an election year. And the Nixon "incident" poses quite a problem for General Eisenhower and his advisers. The Chinese philospher Men-shy-us put the problem well when he said:

"Men must be decided on what they will not do and then they are able to act with vigor in what they ought to do." Longfellow had this advice: "Decide not rashly. The decision made can never be recalled."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Friday, September 19, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Bill Downs has been on the campaign train through the day, and arrived in Kansas City tonight to cover a speech the General is making on corruption. Bill, what happened on the train after the Nixon story broke.

DOWNS: Candidate Dwight Eisenhower is learning that the science of politics is even more uncertain and unpredictable than the science of war, and it'd be a fair guess tonight, Ed, to say that the famous wartime general probably wishes he'd never left the Army.

It was only last Monday that the GOP nominee began this current whistle-stop tour through the mid-west. He was fresh from his successful aerial swing through the southern states, and he took immediately to the whistle-stop technique, drawing big crowds throughout the mid-west, hitting the Administration hard on the issue of corruption. But then last night, the news broke and was confirmed that Eisenhower's running mate, GOP Vice Presidential candidate, Richard Nixon, that Nixon hadbeen receiving payments from a group of wealthy Californians that overthe past 2-yrs. amounted to between sixteen and seventeen thousand dollars.

Well, the story at first attracted little attention on the Eisenhower train. Mostly because the pro-Republican press in this part of the country buried it deep inside their news pages. Yesterday afternoon, Eisenhower made a fighting speech before a large crowd in Des Moines, again calling for an end to corruption in government and reasserting his determination to clean up the 'mess' in Washington. It was after this speech that his managers began to get the full implications of the Nixon story. By this time, the Eisenhower special had arrived in Omaha, that was late yesterday evening. Top Republican leaders on ~~it~~ the train immediately put in long distance telephone calls for Nixon, who was on a whistle-stop train of his own, touring central California. Eisenhower had to leave for a major speech on agriculture by this time his (sic) and his managers got hold of the Vice Presidential nominee while he was away.

What transpired in this initial conversation, hasx not been made public but, apparently, Nixon confirmed his receipt of the money. However, by this time the entire atmosphere of the Eisenhower train had changed. Advisers and assistants, who only a dozen hours before were predicting that the General would be elected tomorrow, if the voting were held then, well, from top to the bottom ofthis staff, the optimism changed to worry and concern. The lights in the official cars, at the end ofthe special train, burned late last night. The trainside telephone lines were kept busy. There were more conferences this morning. And, finally, about 11:00 o'clock, Eisenhower's press secretary, Jim Haggerty, called a news conference and read a statement from the General which you've already heard.

Well, the Eisenhower statement is a defense of his running mate, but implied in it are reservations. Because if it's established that Nixon's non-official California expense account and his acceptance ofthe money is, in fact, unethical, then it would cut the ground out from under the entire Eisenhower crusade thus far. And some observers say it could cost him the election.

Presumably, right now, Eisenhower is contacting Senator Nixon. He must also prepare for a major speech in Kansas City mmg tonight, a speech ironically which was to be another king-size blast at the Administration graft in the former Boss Pendergast stronghold and President Truman's own bailiwick. No one in the Eisenhower sgx organization, from the General on down, is taking this threat to his politifal chances kmx (indistinct)... By his statement Eisenhower implies that he is reserving judgment. Some of his advisers are hinting that it may bethat the Vice Presidential candidate will be asked to resign. Others are saying that further investigation will prove that there's nothing serious to the story, that it will be forgotten in the hmmx heat of future campaign.

Well, a short time ago, this afternoon, we made a whistle-stop at St. Joseph, Mo. The Nixon story already is front-page stuff in that pro-Republican newspaper, the "St. Joseph News Press." An unidentified printer on this newspaper composed himself a poem, which the editor ran on the front page alongside the story. The reaction is interesting - coming from a Republican paper. The poem's entitled: "They're Fixing Mr. Nixon." It goes: "We've often heard the shout, 'we must turn the rascals out' - the (unintelligible) leading us to ruin isn't slow. But cleaning out their own backyard may be just a wee bit hard when millionaires are slipping them the dough." That's all there is to the poem. But it would appear that in addition to having taken on the mess in Washington, candidate Dwight Eisenhower now has one of his own in his own party. Whether it's more than just a long distance campaign mixup, remains to be seen. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

(30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, September 19, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: .....A few minutes ago Ed Morgan, who has been touring Connecticut and Massachusetts with Governor Stevenson, stopped off in the News Room for a few hours before going on to Richmond tomorrow.

Ed, what did the Stevenson people think of all this?

MORGAN: Well, Ed, the Governor himself isn't saying anything yet. Landing in New York tonight from Springfield, Massachusetts, he had no comment but he indicated he would have plenty to say when he was ready. This seems to be in line with the Stevenson strategy of exploiting this pregnant situation, but slowly and with care, letting the other side make its protests and do its explaining first. The Governor's aides think quite enthusiastically that Nixon may have handed them their most important single break so far in the campaign. Stevenson's friends quickly recalled his ringing Los Angeles speech just last week on government messiness and happily underlined the Governor's possibly fortuitous foresight in selecting then the following quotation from Charles Evans Hughes: "Neither political party has a monopoly on virtue or rascality. Let no partisan Pecksniffs effect a holier-than-thou attitude." One Stevenson lieutenant wryly put the situation to me in the following nutshell: "The Democrats now have a new issue - corruption."

Stevenson has had two successful days with a motorcade campaign in Connecticut and Massachusetts and tomorrow he invades the south for the first time, making a major speech at Richmond, Virginia, with the decision of Governor Byrnes, of South Carolina, to vote for Eisenhower perhaps ringing at least faintly in his ears. Stevenson is moving more andmore to the attack and he's getting his humor down to a more applied science. The crowd roared in Springfield, Massachusetts, at noon today when he suggested the initials GOP really meant grouchy old pessimists.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

Monday, Sept. 22, 1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson today called the Taft-Hartley law "spiteful," and said again that he would have it repealed. In a few minutes we'll hear some of the things the Governor told the American Federation of Labor convention. #

General Eisenhower whistle-stopped through Indiana, Kentucky, and speaks tonight from Cincinnati..sharing the platform with Senator Taft. In his foreign policy speech tonight, and his platform speeches this afternoon, the General attacked the Administration's foreign policy record. He said we were permitted to drift into the Korean war without plans for winning it. The government should find a way to end the war quickly. He says Governor Stevenson recently scolded the people for their anxiety about the war.. "treated it lightly, by telling us it was no athletic event..no mere 100 yards dash." The General also recalled that the Governor had said, that the Soviet Union fixes the level of our defense spending and taxes. Eisenhower called this "a dismaying example of faintness of heart, a curiously defensive way of thinking." The General said that both the Berlin airlift, and Korea.. "although inescapble decisions"..

were necessary because of diplomatic blunders by the Administration. He said military intervention, in BOTH cases, was necessary to "snatch military victory from political defeat." And then, without mentioning names, the General said: "It is not hard to find men of fine intellect and faint heart. But this is no time for men of refined and elaborate indecision. Our most urgent need is leadership by men whose strength of mind is matched by their strength of will." Eisenhower said our allies are bound to us more by the loans they needed than by a faith we might have inspired. He wants a policy to make Moscow's captive countries strain against the Soviet bond ..something that will cause them to seethe with discontent. AND the General said we are tired of alibis , "aristorcratic explanations and Harvard words."

Throughout the day as his train approached Cincinnati, the General made no public mention of the CORRUPTION issue he has been hitting hard. And reporters on the train tell us many of the visiting politicians said they were worried by the Nixon case. The General told reporters that in a phone conversation last night he "commended" Senator Nixon's plan to broadcast a complete financial accounting.

Senator Nixon today broke off his campaign trip and returned to

Los Angeles to make what an aide calls "the most important speech of his life." The Republican national committee, and its senatorial and congressional committees say they will spend more than 75-thousand dollars for television and radio NETWORKS. Nixon may be heard over many of these stations at 9;30 p.m. eastern daylight time... "The highest possible authority" aboard the Eisenhower train says the General will decide, after he hears the speech, whether to keep Nixon on the ticket. National Chairman Summerfield says the story of Nixon accepting aid from an 18-thousand dollar fund is a smear "initiated by men who have promoted Communism, supported traitors and never fought one day for their country."

Democratic Chairman Mitchell says Eisenhower is stalling on what to do about Nixon "for political rather than moral reasons." Mitchell says if Eisenhower drops Nixon as a vice presidential candidate, "after four days of wavering indecision," his action will be attributed to public pressure.

Wilbur Renk, chairman of Wisconsin's Eisenhower-Nixon organization, has called for Nixon's resignation..says he is morally wrong.. naive.

In Chicago, Kent Chandler, a manufacturer and Eisenhower supporter, has called on Governor Stevenson to acknowledge that he supported A [redacted] private funds to aid public officials in Illinois. Mr. Chandler says that Stevenson told him and others that he wanted to raise private funds to attract capable men to key jobs in Illinois. Chandler wants Stevenson to name the contributors to this fund and the amounts contributed.

In Washington, Mrs. Elizabeth Ives, Stevenson's sister, told reporters her brother is "very troubled" by the Nixon fund. She said: "Adlai is very just. He dislikes slander..extravagant statements are distatesful to him. He'd be the last man in the world to say: 'That man is guilty'. He feels you have to have proof."

~~Jack Arnold, national director of the C.I.O. PAC says Senator Nixon is "the man who called on to believe he is the pure, the incurruptible, the [illegible] knight on the white horse leading the charge against Communism." [illegible] added: "Some knight. Some horse."~~

In Detroit, a federal grand jury has indicted six of the 18 Communist party leaders rounded up by the F.B.I. last Wednesday. Evidence against the others is now being presented to other federal juries.

In Korea today, allied forces with tank and artillery support recaptured a hill in the eastern front..after a 15 hour battle. In the west, we strengthened our positions on Old Baldy. It was quiet there today for the first time since Wednesday. And an allied officer acknowledged that the Second Division suffered heavy casualties in this sector. The Chinese made another unsuccessful attempt to capture a ridge on the central front. South Korean troops beat them back.

The Chinese radio in Peiping says the allied plan to reclassify 11-thousand prisoners to civilin status makes the basis of the armistice talks "null and void."

Charlie Chaplin arrived in France today where the French press almost unanimously came to his support. Attorney General Mc Granery has ordered that Chaplin be barred from returning to this country until an Immigration Board investigates him. Chaplin told reporters he has no political convictions. He intends to return to the United States.

Here in New York today, Governor Stevenson addressed the convention of the American Federation of Labor..(as did General Eisenhower last week.) At that time we brought you excerpts from the General's address. Now, here are recorded portions of what Governor Stevenson had to say. He began by saying the Republicans apparently don't approve of his [redacted] humor. [redacted] He continued:

(runs 5 mins ending:

let them speak out..which of these things they want changed (plus two seconds applause)

The A.F. of L. convention is expected to endorse Stevenson for President tomorrow.

BEFORE the Governor [redacted] TALKED today, A.F. of L. President Green told the convention:"There are a lot of people sitting in this hall who believe he will be the next President of the United States."

Cuem

The candidates disagree on many things. (including labor legislation.)

I'm reminded of these lines by Joseph Addison: "If men would consider not so much wherein they differ, as wherein they agree, there would be far less angry feeling in this world." ~~But of course we're in an election year.~~ And because we are in an election year - we'd do well to follow this advice by Sir James MacIntosh, who contended: "Men are never so good or so bad as their ~~opinions~~ opinions."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, September 22, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Here, in New York, today Governor Stevenson addressed the Convention of the American Federation of Labor as did General Eisenhower last week. At that time we brought you excerpts from the General's address. Now, here are recorded portions of what Governor Stevenson had to say. He began by saying the Republicans apparently don't approve of his humor. He continued:

STEVENSON: Gentlemen, there is business before your house and I propose to get right to it, obeying as far as I can what seems to me to be coming to be known as the Republican law of gravity. (applause)(laughter) First, I should like, if I may, to dispose of this matter of the Taft-Hartley Law. The Democratic platform says that the Taft-Hartley Act is inadequate, unworkable, and unfair, and should be replaced by a new law. (applause) I developed on Labor Day the five basic respects in which the present law seems to me defective and I outlined some five principles to guide the writing of a new one. How to get a new one? The method, whether by amendment of the existing law or replacement with a new one, has, frankly, seemed to me less important than the objective, but, because the required changes are major changes, because the present law is spiteful, and because it has become a symbol of dissension and bitterness, I urge, therefore, as I did on Labor Day that the Taft-Hartley Law be repealed. (applause) The Republican platform commends the Taft-Hartley Act because among other things it guarantees to the working man, and I quote: "the right to quit his job at any time." (laughter) To this deceit they add the insistence that the real issue here is whether the present law should be amended or repealed. This is not the real issue. The real issue is what changes should be made in the law of the United States, but if repeal were in itself the issue I would remind Senator Taft that he himself has publicly recognized twenty-three mistakes in his favorite law and it seems not unreasonable to recommend that a tire with twenty-three punctures and five blow-outs (laughter), I think it's not unreasonable to suggest that sucha tire needs junking andnot a recap job (laughter) and especially a recap job with reclaimed Republican rubber. (applause)

It was charged that I had embraced ... and I quote thw words: "The principle of contention by asking for the power as President to compel arbitration of disputes which threaten the national safety." Now, after that great reunion with Senator Taft on the loveseat at Columbia University I must say I respect the General's authority on the subject of embraces. (laughter) But if he (drowned out) that he said he had not read what I said. (applause and laughter) We are told that we have gone too far. What do they mean? Are they saying that our people are too well-fed? Toowell-clothed? Too well-housed? Do they say that our children are getting more and better schooling than they should? Have we gone too fast in our effort to provide equal opportunities to working men and women of all races and color? Are the sixty-two million workers of America too healthy, too happy? Should fewer of them be working? The Republicans say they want a change. Well, let them then speak up. Which of these things do they want changed? (applause)

MURROW: That was Governor Stevenson before the AFL Convention.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson today called the Taft-Hartley law "spiteful," and said again that he would have it repealed. In a few minutes we'll hear some of the things the Governor told the American Federation of Labor convention.

General Eisenhower whistle-stopped through Indiana, Kentucky, and speaks tonight from Cincinnati...sharing the platform with Senator Taft. In his foreign policy speech tonight, and his platform speeches this afternoon, the General attacked the Administration's foreign policy record. He said we were permitted to drift into the Korean war without plans for winning it. The government should find a way to end the war quickly. He says Governor Stevenson recently scolded the people for their anxiety about the war..."treated it lightly, by telling us it was no athletic event...no mere 100 yard dash." The General also recalled that the Governor had said that the Soviet Union fixes the level of our defense spending and taxes. Eisenhower called this "a dismaying example of faintness of heart, a curiously defensive way of thinking." The General said that both the Berlin airlift and Korea..."although inescapable decisions"...were necessary because of diplomatic blunders by the Administration. He said military intervention, in both cases, was necessary to "snatch military victory from political defeat." And then, without mentioning names, the General said: "It is not hard to find men of fine intellect and faint heart. But this is no time for men of refined and elaborate indecision. Our most urgent need is leadership by men whose strength of mind is matched ny their strength of will." Eisenhower said our allies are bound to us more by the loans they needed than by a faith we might have inspired. He wants a policy to make Moscow's captive countries strain against the Soviet bond...something that will cause them to seethe with discontent. And the General said we are tired of alibis, "aristocratic explanations and Harvard words."

Throughout the day as his train approached Cincinnati, the General made no public mention of the corruption issue he has been hitting hard. And reporters on the train tell us many of the visiting politicians said they were worried by the Nixon case. The General told reporters that in a phone conversation last night he "commended" Senator Nixon's plan to broadcast a complete financial accounting. Senator Nixon today broke off his campaign trip and returned to Los Angeles to make what an aide calls "the most important speech of his life." The Republican national committee, and its senatorial and congressional committees say they will spend more than 75-thousand dollars for television and radio networks. Nixon may be heard over many of these stations at 9:30 p.m. eastern daylight time...tomorrow night. "The highest possible authority" aboard the Eisenhower train says the General will decide, after he hears the speech, whether to keep Nixon on the ticket. National Chairman Summerfield says the story of Nixon accepting aid from an 18-thousand dollar fund is a smear "initiated by men who have promoted Communism, supported traitors and never fought one day for their country."

Democratic Chairman Mitchell says Eisenhower is stalling on what to do about Nixon "for political rather than moral reasons." Mitchell says if Eisenhower drops Nixon as a vice presidential candidate, "after four days of wavering indecision," his action will be attributed to public pressure.

Wilbur Renk, chairman of Wisconsin's Eisenhower-Nixon organization, has called for Nixon's resignation...says he is morally wrong...naive.

In Chicago, Kent Chandler, a manufacturer and Eisenhower supporter, has called on Governor Stevenson to acknowledge that he supported a private fund to aid public officials in Illinois. Mr. Chandler says that Stevenson told him and others that he wanted to raise private funds to attract capable men to key jobs in Illinois. Chandler wants Stevenson to name the contributors to this fund and the amounts contributed.

In Washington, Mrs. Elizabeth Ives, Stevenson's sister, told reporters her brother is "very troubled" by the Nixon fund. She said: "Adlai is very just. He dislikes slander...extravagant statements are distasteful to him. He'd be the last man in the world to say: 'That man is guilty.' He feels you have to have proof."

In Detroit, a federal grand jury has indicted six of the 18 Communist party leaders rounded up by the F.B.I. last Wednesday. Evidence against the others is now being presented to other federal juries.

In Korea today, allied forces with tank and artillery support recaptured a hill in the eastern front...after a 15 hour battle. In the west, we strengthened our positions on Old Baldy. It was quiet there today for the first time since Wednesday. And an allied officer acknowledged that the Second Division suffered heavy casualties in this sector. The Chinese made another unsuccessful attempt to capture a ridge on the central front. South Korean troops beat them back.

The Chinese radio in Peiping says the allied plan to reclassify 11-thousand prisoners to civilian status makes the basis of the armistice talks "null and void."

Charlie Chaplin arrived in France today where the French press almost unanimously came to his support. Attorney General McGranery has ordered that Chaplin be barred from returning to this country until an Immigration Board investigates him. Chaplin told reporters he has no political convictions. He intends to return to the United States.

Here in New York today, Governor Stevenson addressed the convention of the American Federation of Labor...(as did General Eisenhower last week.) At that time we brought you excerpts from the General's address. Now, here are recorded portions of what Governor Stevenson had to say. He began by saying the Republicans apparently don't approve of his humor. He continued:

STEVENSON: Gentlemen, there is business before your house and I propose to get to it, obeying as far as I can what seems to me to be coming to be known as the Republican law of gravity. (applause) (laughter) First, I should like, if I may, to dispose of this matter of the Taft-Hartley Law. The Democratic platform says that the Taft-Hartley Act is inadequate, unworkable, and unfair, and should be replaced by a new law. (applause) I developed on Labor Day the five basic respects in which the present law seems to me defective and I outlined some five principles to guide the writing of a new one. How to get a new one? The method, whether by amendment of the existing law or replacement with a new one, has, frankly, seemed to me less important than the objective, but, because the required changes are major changes, because the present law is spiteful, and because it has become a symbol of dissension and bitterness, I urge, therefore, as I did on Labor Day that the Taft-Hartley Law be repealed. (applause) The Republican platform commends the Taft-Hartley Act because among other things it guarantees to the working man, and I quote: "the right to quit his job at any time." (laughter) To this deceit they add the insistence that the real issue here is whether the present law should be amended or repealed. This is not the real issue. The real issue is what changes should be made in the law of the United States, but if repeal were in itself the issue I would remind Senator Taft that he himself has publicly recognized twenty-three mistakes in his favorite law and it seems not unreasonable to recommend that a tire with twenty-three punctures and five blow-outs (laughter), I think it's not unreasonable to suggest that such a tire needs junking and not a recap job (laughter) and especially a recap job with reclaimed Republican rubber. (applause)

It was charged that I had embraced...and I quote the words: "The principle of contention by asking for the power as President to compel arbitration of disputes which threaten the national safety." Now, after that great reunion with Senator Taft on the loveseat at Columbia University I must say I respect the General's authority on the subject of embraces. (laughter) But if he (drowned out) that he said he had not read what I said. (applause and laughter) We are told that we have gone too far. What do they mean? Are they saying that our people are too well-fed? Too well-clothed? Too well-housed? Do they say that our children are getting more and better schooling than they should? Have we gone too fast in our effort to provide equal opportunities to working men and women of all races and color? Are the sixty-two million workers of America too healthy, too happy? Should fewer of them be working? The Republicans say they want a change. Well, let them then speak up. Which of these things do they want changed? (applause)

MURROW: That was Governor Stevenson before the AFL Convention. The AFL convention is expected to endorse Stevenson for President tomorrow.

Before the Governor talked today, AFL President Green told the convention: "There are a lot of people sitting in this hall who believe he will be the next President of the United States."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROWN: The candidates disagree on many things...(including labor legislation.) I'm reminded of these lines by Joseph Addison: "If men would consider not so much wherein they differ, as wherein they agree, there would be far less angry feeling in this world." And because we are in an election year, we'd do well to follow this advice by Sir James MacIntosh, who contended: "Men are never so good or so bad as their opinions.")

Good Nite and Good Luck!

R

Tuesday September 23 1952.

This is the news:

Senator Nixon tells all about his 18-thousand dollar political fund at 9;30 p.m. eastern daylight time. [His speech will be heard over many of these stations.] Today, the man who administered the fund.. Dana C. Smith..acknowledged that he was helped by one of Nixon's aides in arranging a conference with the Justice Department. Mr. Smith says John J. Irwin, who was formerly on Nixon's staff,, arranged a conference at which Smith consulted on a tax refund claim of 600-thousand dollars. Smith says he asked for the help..there was nothing unethical about it.. he made the "standard approach" through the Senator's office. The St. Louis Post Dispatch, which first printed this story, also says that "Eisenhower forces" have hired a Los Angeles firm to check the legality of the Nixon fund.

The White House announced today that the President has asked the Justice Department to investigate the fund.. and the whole question of the legality of extra funds received by public officials. Later the White House secretary who made the announcement said he was in error.. the President has made no such request.

In Illinois, former Senator Wayland Brooks, now Republican national committeeman, called on Governor Stevenson to withdraw from the presidential race. And Brooks wants Congress to investigate a fund that Stevenson promoted in Illinois, to [redacted] aid public officials. The Governor says there was such a fund.. it was not a secret or improper... it was used to relieve the financial strain of men who gave up good paying jobs to work for the state. The governor said none of the money went to office-holders or office seekers.. just people he appointed to office. Reporters in Illinois say that some of the Governor's cabinet members never heard of this fund. Brooks wants a complete accounting..with a list of those who contributed, how much, and what their business connections are.

Democratic National Chairman Mitchell says Brooks' demand for Stevenson's withdrawal is "ridiculous." Mitchell also told reporters that he has turned down TWO offers of LARGE contributions to the party..one for more than 180-thousand dollars.. because he considered both offers "improper."

Senator Nixon spent the day preparing the speech he will deliver tonight. And General Eisenhower, in Cleveland, delayed a speech he is to make, so that he can see and hear Nixon's explanation by radio or television.

The Eisenhower speech will accuse the Administration of deliberately pursuing a cheap money policy. He says this is the "oldest standard device of a regime dictated to perpetuating itself in power." The General says this policy aims to fool the people with more money.. give them a deceptive prosperity. He calls this the "mark of an administration that cares more for the next election than for the next generation. The General says he is sure that substantial savings can be made in the defense program.. without slowing down or cutting the size of the program we need.

Governor Stevenson is in Baltimore tonight..speaking about inflation. He says the Republican leaders in Congress have sabotaged every anti-inflation move in the last two years. Stevenson wants price, wage and rent controls continued, until prices stop going up. He says he would trim government expenses with "a sharp knife and a miserly eye".. treat every penny spent as if it were a five dollar bill. Stevenson also would have taxes "as close as possible to the pay-as-we-go standard."

The American Federation of Labor today endorsed Stevenson for president--as expected. This is the first time in the AF of L's 71-year history that its convention has endorsed any presidential candidate. Convention leaders appealed to the AF of L's eight million members to get behind the Democrats..(financially as well as politically.)

In Washington today, T. Lamar Caudle, the former assistant attorney general, told a House committee, that he has been told that the President now believes he did Caudle "a grave injustice" when he fired him last November. Caudle says the President's views were relayed to him by Representative Boykin of Alabama. The White House quickly denied this.. said the President has never had misgivings over firing Caudle. ~~The House investigators heard Caudle testify that a number of congressmen tried to influence his judgement on tax fraud cases and other criminal prosecutions. He said he received phone calls from David K. Niles, a former presidential secretary and Mathew Connelly, who is still a secretary to the President.~~

Mr. Truman today named Mrs. Beth Campbell Short as one of his three 18-thousand dollar a year secretaries. She is the widow of Joe Short, the press secretary, who died last week.

The Senate Agriculture Committee said today that the Agriculture Department's lack of enforcement was partially responsible for 10-million dollars worth of embezzlements in government-owned grain. The committee says it has evidence of 131 private warehousemen embezzling, or converting, the grain trusted to them. The committee says no department employe profited personally...or was criminally involved in any of these cases.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee today released testimony by Judy Holloday, the stage and screen actress, in which she said she was never a member of the Communist party. Miss Holliday said she was "more than slightly stupid" and irresponsible, in getting mixed up with various Communist front organizations.

Here in New York, a federal judge today acquitted ~~two of the 15 Communists~~ being tried on charges of conspiring to advocate the overthrow of the government by force. Federal Judge Dimmock said the government had failed to implicate Isadore Begun and Simon W. Gerson in the charges of violating the Smith Act.

General Bradley said today that sooner or later we are going to have to give atomic secrets to allied military commanders in Europe.... such as French General Juin, now the ground force commander in western Europe. General Bradley says the question must be discussed with government officials and members of the Congressional atomic energy committee before any such action is taken.

In Korea today Chinese patrols jabbed at our lines in 20 places. But the action was much quieter than it has been for the past week. Our night bombers reported they destroyed 158 enemy trucks.

In Yugoslavia, the official news agency says Marshal Tito has accepted an invitation to visit London.

Edward R. Murrow: September 23, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

About an hour-and-a-half from now, Senator Richard Nixon will explain his actions and his ethics, on radio and television. There are very subtle issues, both legal and moral, involved. This reporter is unable to adopt the unrestrained language, either of defense or condemnation, applied to Senator Nixon's actions. Whatever happens to him, the nation is likely to survive. Other young men of his age have faced greater tests, though not with such attendant instruments of publicity. Perhaps a "symbol" of this sort is required to remind us, that we do not run the nation's business very well, and that something should be done about it. This question bulks rather larger than the "keeping or casting away" of Senator Nixon. In recent days there has developed quite a ~~volume~~ line of volunteers in Washington, willing to testify that they can't live on their salaries as Senators or Representatives. The answer to this question would seem to be obvious - raise their pay. They're running the biggest business in the world, and being a Senator shouldn't be a part-time job. Independence from financial worries will not guarantee independence of mind and action, (but it ought to help) It's a big company we're running, and there's no reason why Senators shouldn't draw twenty-five or even fifty, thousand dollars a year. But a raise in pay wouldn't solve the problem, wouldn't take care of the men whose votes consistently just happen to coincide with the interests of those who contributed to their campaign funds. Campaigning has become a very expensive business, and the persuasive power of the contributor is inevitably much greater than that of the man who didn't contribute.

In theory there is no reason why all campaign contributions in a national election should not be abolished, made illegal. Let the Federal Government appropriate a given sum on a per capita basis, so many cents a head for each voter, and limit Party expenditures to that amount under a rigid system of inspection. There are obvious dangers in this plan, but it would prevent the Party with the biggest war chest from buying the most newspaper space, or the greatest amount of radio and television time. More importantly, it would eliminate the present system where a candidate is likely to mortgage his future vote, knowingly or unknowingly, in return for XXXX financial contribtuions to his campaign fund. Under this system men in the House and the Senate would be free to intervene with government agencies on behalf of their constituents, without being accused of paying off for past contributions. The rich men running for public office would have no advantage over the man of modest means. And once the successful candidate reached Washington he would be paid enough to live on and discharge his official duties. You couldn't staff a moderate-sized corporation with moderately competent officers for the salaries paid to either elected or appointed government officials.

No legislator can be insulated from either prejudice or pressure by money. But the present low level of pay is not likely to attract ability or contribute toward integrity.

In addition to higher pay, and no private contributions to campaign funds, we might consider a really adequate pension plan under which a Senator, for example, would receive an adequate lifetime pension upon the completion of his duties, no matter whether he served six years or thirty. The amount of money involved would not be considerable, and the independence of mind and action - particularly in an election year - might be substantial.

I would contend that men of great ability, or of none at all, who have been ~~xxxxx~~ elected should not be penalised because they are working for the taxpayers; and the taxpayers ought to pay them adequately, and of course watch them carefully. It could be contended that this would set up a sort of Welfare State for politicians - maybe it would. Certainly it would be no guarantee that the individuals would consult the national rather than the Party interests. But it might serve to create a little more independence, both financial and otherwise, on the part of politicians.

There are subtle and ill-defined issues in the Nixon affair; and there is precedent for what he did. It is no part of a reporter's function to defend or denounce him. I am merely suggesting that the issue should not be either so subtle or ill-defined. The rules ought to be spelled out, and then enforced.

Comm.

Tonite, Senator Nixon speaks to the American people. He will tell his side of the story. Until that time we would best reserve judgement. We might also do well to keep in mind these observations by the ancient Menander and Ralph Waldo Emerson: "A man's character is revealed by his speech...a man can not speak but he judges himself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wed 24th 1952

This is the news:

Senator Nixon says the telegrams he has received in response to last night's radio and television talk are the most "gratifying experience of his political life." Nixon had explained his 18-thousand dollar fund and called on his listeners to let their Republican national committeeman know if they thought Nixon should be kept or dropped from the ticket. Republican headquarters in Washington and other key centers say there has been a very heavy response to Nixon's appeal.. almost all in favor of keeping him running for vice president. Western Union officials in Washington says the response there may exceed the 125-thousand telegrams that came to Washington within a few days after the President fired General MacArthur.

Right now, Senator Nixon is flying to Wheeling, West Virginia, from Missoula, Montana...at the request of General Eisenhower. Nixon left Missoula after telling a crowd of 4-thousand persons:"We are going to meet Eisenhower. All I can say to you is that we have just begun to fight." And he told college students in his audience:"Don't ever come to the conclusion that you shouldn't go into POLITICS because it happens to be a dirty game. You should go in and clean it up. If you know you're right..that's satisfaction enough."

Nixon is expected in Wheeling, later tonight. General Eisenhower plans to personally meet him at the airport.

~~My colleague Eric Saveraid is on the Eisenhower Campaign train.. which has now stopped in Wheeling. Eric, what happened on the train today?~~

~~(3 mins ending? now back to Wm)~~

We had hoped to bring you a report from Eric Saveried, who is on the Eisenhower train. But the train is running behind time and has not yet arrived in Wheeling.

Today the General whistle-stopped THROUGH Ohio, making it clear, as he did in a speech in Cleveland last night, that he likes Nixon. At one stop the General said:"There are a good many hundred thousand people in the United States proving that they like Dick. As a matter of fact, I like Dick too. All day the Eisenhower campaign train was unusually busy. His top aides were getting on and off, making telehone calls..reporting back to the General..then continuing the calls at the next whistle-stop. At one station..Portsmouth, Ohio, the General himself squeezed into a phone booth with Governor Adams and talked for eight minutes..with National Chairman Summerfield in Cleveland. Reporters on the train tell us that the gloom of the last few days..since the story of the Nixon fund was first made public..has now given way to the feeling that the whole story may boomerang against the Democrats. The General used every opportunity to continue his attacks on the Administration. Among other things he said: the Administration is guilty of crazy duplication and crazy spending. It has become "inept, or incompetent, or just complacent or arrogant." He said government should be run not for one class but for all Americans. He accused the Administration of trying to get votes by playing off one class against another. And he said we have not made very much progress abroad largely due to the government's lack of prestige.

And at a later stop.. in Point Pleasant, West Virginia, the general returned to the Nixon case. He said:"I think he did a most courageous and wonderful thing last evening. He laid all the facts of an attempted smear on the record. He put them in front of the American people, and, as I tried to say in Cleveland, I like courage."

2 mins

5

Republican National Chairman Summerfield said in Cleveland today: "There is no doubt in my mind that Nixon will be kept on the ticket." He told reporters: the whole episode has backfired on the Democrats... this is the turning point of the campaign.. he feels sure the Democrats are sorry they ever started this thing. Reporters in the various states say they have been unable to find a single Republican national committeeman who disagrees with this view.

And Mr. Summerfield today turned to the attack..picking up where Senator Nixon left off last night..asking Governor Stevenson to explain, in detail, just what the fund he promoted in Illinois was used for.

The governor had something to say about this fund in Baltimore this morning before he flew back to Springfield. My colleague Ed Morgan is covering the Stevenson campaign. Ed, what's the major question newsmen want answered:

(runs 3 mins ending "on both sides andon many issues")

#6

~~House~~

Senator Sparkman, the democratic candidate for vice president, said in Nebraska today that he doesn't have to make a report on his financial record..as suggested by Senator Nixon. Sparkman said: "Nobody has accused me of getting 18-thousand dollars, and I have no expense fund." He acknowledged that Mrs. Sparkman has worked in his office for the last ten years..and says she earned every penny of it.

There was no comment from the White House today on the Nixon story. But Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico.. after a visit with the President.. told reporters that he didn't know what Nixon was talking about last night, when he said he used no part of the expense fund for personal purposes. Anderson said Nixon used some of the money for Christmas cards.. recording speeches.. and travel expenses. Anderson said the members of Congress he knows about, use their own money for these things, if they are not covered by government expense accounts.

Senator Taft says Governor Stevenson was "talking through his hat" when he said the Taft-Hartley law is filled with ugly snears at labor unions. The Senator, in a political speech in Michigan, says the whole basis of the law is "free and representative collective bargaining without government dictation." The Senator said he disagrees with General Eisenhower's worry that the law might be used for union-busting. But he agrees to support any amendment to prevent this possibility. He charged that Stevenson is playing for the labor vote when he demands repeal of the law. Taft says all Stevenson wants to do is amend it.

In Washington today, T. Lamar Caudle told House investigators that former attorney General Mc Grath once told him:"I know enough about the White House clique to blow it so high the force of gravity would never bring it back to earth." Caudle, who was fired by the President from his Justice Department job, said he hopes this is an accurate report of what Mc Grath told him.. he's not sure.. Mc Grath was mad at the time.. it was shortly after Mc Grath had been fired as attorney general. Caudle says he doesn't know who was in the White House clique Mc Grath referred to. Caudle "guesses" it consisted of the late Joe Short, a press secretary... Mathew Connelly, special counsel to the President.. and David Stowe , an administrative assistant.

Mr. Mc Grath, now in Rhode Island, said "There is nothing I want to say at this time." There is no comment from the White House.

The Pentagon today announced that we suffered an additional 596 casualties in Korea last week. The total now is 118, 569.

In Korea today, the Communists carried out a series of mountain raids. General Mark Clark, on a flying visit to Korea, says the enemy does not know what our intentions are.. is trying to get some information. There were reports of patrol actions all along the front. And again bad weather kept air operations to a minimum.

Secretary of State Acheson today called on Russia to get rid of "kidnappers and terrorists" in East Germany.. so that free elections can be held to unify all of Germany. Last night we rejected Russia's plan for a "dictated" peace treaty as "an insult" to the German nation.

The ~~Campaign is in high gear now, and~~ As Will Rogers said before the twenty eight election..."From now till november, neither of the boys can be themselves... They are on parade...They are eating and sleeping in a show window..They are acting..every minute...a nd I dont care how smart you are...If you say something,you are liable to say something foolish,and the longer you talk, the more fool things you will say....

good night and good luck

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - SEPTEMBER 24, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Nixon says the telegrams he has received in response to last night's radio and television talk are the most "gratifying experience of his political life." Nixon had explained his 18-thousand dollar fund, and called on his listeners to let their Republican national committeeman know if they thought Nixon should be kept or dropped from the ticket. Republican headquarters in Washington and other key centers say there has been a very heavy response to Nixon's appeal...almost all in favor of keeping him running for vice president. Western Union officials in Washington says the response there, may exceed the 125-thousand telegrams that came to Washington within a few days after the President fired General MacArthur.

Right now, Senator Nixon is flying to Wheeling, West Virginia, from Missoula, Montana...at the request of General Eisenhower. Nixon left Missoula after telling a crowd of 4-thousand persons: "We are going to meet Eisenhower. All I can say to you is that we have just begun to fight." And he told college students in his audience: "Don't ever come to the conclusion that you shouldn't go into politics because it happens to be a dirty game. You should go in and clean it up. If you know you're right...that's satisfaction enough."

Nixon is expected in Wheeling later tonight. General Eisenhower, plans to personally meet him at the airport.

We had hoped to bring you a report from Eric Saveried, who is on the Eisenhower train. But the train is running behind time and has not yet arrived in Wheeling.

Today the General whistle-stopped through Ohio, making it clear as he did in a speech in Cleveland last night, that he likes Nixon. At one stop the General said: "There are a good many hundred thousand people in the United States proving that they like Dick. As a matter of fact, I like Dick too." All day the Eisenhower campaign train was unusually busy. His top aides were getting on and off making telephone calls...reporting back to the General... then continuing the calls at the next whistle-stop. At one station...Portsmouth, Ohio, the General himself squeezed into a phone booth with Governor Adams and talked for eight minutes...with National Chairman Summerfield in Cleveland. Reporters on the train tell us that the gloom of the last few days...since the story of the Nixon fund was first made public...has now given way to the feeling that the whole story may boomerang against the Democrats. The General used every opportunity to continue his attacks on the Administration. Among other things he said: the Administration is guilty of crazy duplication and crazy spending. It has become "inept, or incompentent, or just complacent or arrogant." He said government should be run not for one class but for all Americans. He accused the Administration of trying to get votes by playing off one class against another. And he said we have not made very much progress abroad largely due to the government's lack of prestige.

And at a later stop...in Point Pleasant, West Virginia, the general returned to the Nixon case. He said: "I think he did a most courageous and wonderful thing last evening. He laid all the facts of an attempted smear on the record. He put them in front of the American people, and, as I tried to say in Cleveland, I like courage."

Republican National Chairman Summerfield said in Cleveland today: "There is no doubt in my mind that Nixon will be kept on the ticket." He told reporters: the whole episode has backfired on the Democrats...this is the turning point of the campaign...he feels sure the Democrats are sorry they ever started this thing. Reporters in the various states say they have been unable to find a single Republican national committeeman who disagrees with this view.

And Mr. Summerfield today turned to the attack...picking up where Senator Nixon left off last night...asking Governor Stevenson to explain, in detail, just what the fund he promoted in Illinois, was used for.

The governor had something to say about this fund in Baltimore this morning before he flew back to Springfield. My colleague Ed Morgan is covering the Stevenson campaign. Ed, what's the major question newsman want answered:

(ED MORGAN TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

MURROW: Senator Sparkman, the democratic candidate for vice president, said in Nebraska today that he doesn't have to make a report on his financial record... as suggested by Senator Nixon. Sparkman said: "Nobody has accused me of getting 18-thousand dollars and I have no expense fund." He acknowledged that Mrs. Sparkman has worked in his office for the last ten years...and says she earned every penny of it.

There was no comment from the White House today on the Nixon story. But Democratic Senator Anderson of New Mexico...after a visit with the President... told reporters that he didn't know what Nixon was talking about last night when he said he used no part of the expense fund for personal purposes. Anderson said Nixon used some of the money for Christmas cards...recording speeches...and travel expenses. Anderson said the members of Congress he knows about use their own money for these things if they are not covered by government expense accounts.

Senator Taft says Governor Stevenson was "talking through his hat" when he said the Taft-Hartley law is filled with ugly smears at labor unions. The Senator, in a political speech in Michigan, says the whole basis of the law is "free and representative collective bargaining, without government dictation." The Senator said he disagrees with General Eisenhower's worry that the law might be used for union-busting. But he agrees to support any amendment to prevent this possibility. He charged that Stevenson is playing for the labor vote when he demands repeal of the law. Taft says all Stevenson wants to do is amend it.

In Washington today, T. Lamar Caudle told House investigators that former Attorney General, McGrath, once told him: "I know enough about the White House clique to blow it so high the force of gravity would never bring it back to earth." Caudle, who was fired by the President from his Justice Department job, said he hopes this is an accurate report of what McGrath told him...he's not sure... McGrath was mad at the time...it was shortly after McGrath had been fired as Attorney General. Caudle says he doesn't know who was in the White House clique McGrath referred to. Caudle "guesses" it consisted of the late Joe Short, a press secretary...Mathew Connelly, special counsel to the President...and David Stowe, an administrative assistant.

Mr. McGrath, now in Rhode Island, said "There is nothing I want to say at this time." There is no comment from the White House.

The Pentagon today announced that we suffered an additional 596 casualties in Korea last week. The total now is 118,569.

In Korea today, the Communists carried out a series of mountain raids. General Mark Clark, on a flying visit to Korea, says the enemy does not know what our intentions are...is trying to get some information. There were reports of patrol actions all along the front. And again bad weather kept air operations to a minimum.

Secretary of State Acheson today called on Russia to get rid of "kidnappers and terrorists" in East Germany...so that free elections can be held to unify all of Germany. Last night we rejected Russia's plan for a "dictated" peace treaty as "an insult" to the German nation.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As Will Rogers said, before the twenty eight election.."From now till November, neither of the boys can be themselves...They are on parade...They are eating and sleeping in a show window...They are acting...every minute...and I don't care how smart you are...If you say something, you are liable to say something foolish, and the longer you talk, the more fool things you will say...

Good Night and Good Luck!

Mr. E. R. Murrow's Office
17th

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, Sep. 24, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Ed Morgan is covering the Stevenson campaign. Ed, what's the major question newsmen want answered out there?

MORGAN: Governor Stevenson has been outspoken, even blunt, on every major issue of this campaign. But in the midst of the furore, Ed, over Senator Nixon's privately-subscribed expense account, questions have arisen about that bonus fund, also privately-subscribed, which the Governor has been using in Illinois to attract and retain men in state jobs who might not otherwise be able to afford the sacrifice of salary involved. Several persons and papers contend that if there is a basic difference between this and the Nixon account, Stevenson has not made it sufficiently clear. This morning before we left Baltimore, theGovernor, at a Volunteers for Stevenson breakfast, explained the money was usually distributed as Christmastime gifts to key non-elected personnel. He said this created no sense of obligation to anyone because the recipients didn't know who the donors were and vice versa and the amounts weren't made public. But some of the Governor's ~~frim~~ friends feel that if the procedure in all its propriety is not blueprinted in more detail, theDemocrats won't be able to exploit the Nixon case as thoroly as they'd like to. Even reporters have been infected with a certain amount of puzzlement and frustration on the matter, as witness this recorded exchange when Stevenson landed in Springfield a few hours ago.

SPEAKER: ..... impression of your eastern trip, Governor?

STEVENSON: I enjoyed it very much. I think it was a satisfactory trip.

VOICE: A little louder, please. Louder!

STEVENSON: Well, I'm not saying anything worthwhile. (laughter) I said I'd had a very ... enjoyed my trip thru New England and New York and Maryland very much.

VOICE: Virginia. Virginia, too.

STEVENSON: And Virginia ... but that I was always glad to get home. I'll have to talk to Mr. Wyatt. I'm not too clear about the balance ... when we leave again. I believe it's Friday, isn't it?

WYATT: Yes.

STEVENSON: Friday, yes.

WYATT: ... Indiana, then southerly to Kentucky.

SPEAKER: Yes, we're very anxious to have a press conference with you the next day or two ...(drowned out) .... so that you'd know it was a round robin request and not just one or two ...

SPEAKER: No referendum; just a .....

STEVENSON: Well, I don't know. I've got so much work to do at the mansion and preparation for this next trip, that whether I'll be able to arrange it or not, I very much doubt.

SPEAKER: Well, we'd like very much to have it. It has been about ten days since you had one.

STEVENSON: Haven't I been able to feed you fellows enough every day?

SPEAKER: Well, there's a difference between being able to ask questions, too, Governor. (laughter)

SPEAKER: Governor, do you want to make any differentiation in your remarks this morning at the breakfast ... between your remarks this morning at the breakfast and any reaction you might have about the so-called Nixon fund?

STEVENSON: No, I have ... no, I have nothing more to say about it. If I do have anything to say, I'll say it.

SPEAKER: Thank you, sir.

STEVENSON: Not at all. It seems much warmer here ...

MORGAN: And warmer the whole campaign is bound to get, too, on both sides and on many issues.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E.S.

regard regard
Thu 25 th 1952

This is the news:

Governor Sherman Adams, of the Eisenhower staff, today called on Governor Stevenson to make a public statement on the fund he helped create in Illinois. Governor Adams said he thought Stevenson was going to try to "brazen out the fact, that he had a private fund, to provide Christmas Bonuses, and regular monthly gift payments, to deserving Democrats in his state Administration." Adams, taking up the demand where Senator Nixon left off, said Stevenson would make the details public unless he had something to hide. He added: "The American people will never let him get away with it, and neither will we." Then he said he was not prejudging Governor Stevenson.. but he would wait and see.

In Springfield, Governor Stevenson's aides told reporters through the day, that the Governor was working on speeches he will make this week-end in Indiana and Kentucky. (was too busy to take note of the Adams demand at this time). But within the past few hours, Wilson Wyatt, Stevenson's campaign manager, announced that the Governor will make a further statement on the fund..personally.. although he could not say where, or when. ~~Some employees in Springfield think such a statement may be issued very soon.~~

Today the Republicans put an end to their official concern with the Senator Nixon fund. National Chairman Summerfield, announced that "the matter is a closed book..Nixon has been completely vindicated..he remains the vice presidential candidate." This, of course, follows what General Eisenhower said last night.

Today reporters were busy trying to track down details on the Stevenson fund. For one thing, in Chicago, Herman Dunlap Smith, national chairman of the Volunteers for Stevenson, gave reporters some details on the money the Governor collected, to help those state appointees ~~who~~ he said were making a sacrifce in taking state jobs. Mr. Smith said: two or three Chicago business men contributed between 500 dollars and 1-thousand dollars to this fund. (One contributor was a Republican.) Mr. Smith said the contributions were not solicited. He refused to name the names of the contributors. The Governor,too, has refused..saying this would be a breach of faith.

One recipient of part of this money made his story public today. Illinois Supreme Court Justice Walter V. Schaefer said that he received a 500-dollar check from the governor. This contribution was made before Scahefer was on the bench. He was then on leave from his job as law professor at Northwestern University. He was working for the state as head of its state Hoover Commission.. in 1950. Justice Scahefer says he took "quite a financial licking" as head of the commission.. his family had to sell every defense bond it owned.

Another report..on another fund.. came from William J. Mc Kinney, former Illinois state purchasing agent, who had been asked to resign by Governor Stevenson. In a story first reported by the Scripps-Howard newspapers, Mr. Mc Kinney estimated that at least 100-thousand dollars in political contributions was collected from state suppliers in the 1949-1950 period. He said he understands part of the money went to Governor Stevenson...part to the Illinois state Democratic committee. He said there were no "forced" contributions.. he thinks it was "a very legitimate approach from this standpoint."

In California, the trustee of the Nixon fund.. Dana Smith told reporters that he has received 2-thousand dollars...in contributions ranging from one cent to 250-dollars...for Senator Nixon. And he said 11-thoussnd dollars previously collected for the Senator, since he was nominated for vice president, will now be shifted to campaign purposes. Senator Nixon himself, after his meeting with General Eisenhower last night, is flying to Utah to resume his campaign.

Last night at this time we told you that the Eisenhower train was late in arriving at Wheeling, West Virginia.. depriving us of a report from my colleague Eric Saveried, who is accompanying the campaign train. Now, we're assured the train is in Baltimore and Correspondent Sevaried is standing by. Eric, what happened on the train today?

(3 mins ending Now back to erm)

That was Eric Severeid reporting from Baltimore, where General Eisenhower speaks tonight. Complaints to Baltimore Police -

Western Union officials now say that more than 150-thousand telegrams have shuttled across the nation in response to Senator Nixon's radio and television appeal. Republican headquarters in Washington says it has received 80-thousand such telegrams plus 18 sacks of mail.

The President held a newsconference today. He refused to comment on the Nixon fund, or the Stevenson fund. Mr. Truman did remind reporters that just a year ago he asked Congress for a law requiring all

Congressmen, and all top government officials, to make a public statement on their public and private income. Congress never took any action on this suggestion. Mr. Truman declined to make an election prediction.. said he's not a pollster, or a prophet. And he told reporters that those who objected to what he called Governor Stevenson's "mixing good humor in his talks" should be reminded of the gospel according to St. Mathew:"Be not as hypocrites, sad of countenance."

Mr. Truman said he is not sorry he fired T. Lamar Caudle from his Justice Department job. And he said he had no idea what "clique" Caudle was referring to, when he quoted former Attorney General Mc Grath as saying that he knew all about a White House clique AND could blow it up.

The President also said that his recent speech on health insurance, in Philadelphia, was the reason the American Medical Association has disbanded its organization to fight national health insurance

Senator Taft was campaigning in Michigan and Wisconsin today. He said the November election may decide the course of the nation for the next 50 years. He wants a Republican victory to cut down the size of a government (?)

that, he says, has grown so big people are afraid of it.

The new Russian ambassador, Georgi Zarubin, called at the White House today..to present his credentials. Zarubin told the President, the people of the Soviet Union "entertain a feeling of sincere friendship" toward the people of the United States. The President told Zarubin "the people of the United States have only the friendliest feelings for the peoples of the Soviet Union." The whole formal ceremony took five minutes.

In Washington today, six major steel companies, in a report on the 54-day steel strike, said its chief cause was "the unnecessary intervention of the Administration, into the collective bargaining process." The company's say, a way must be found "for more permanent solutions, and fair and just procedures" to prevent a repitition of "such disasters."

In Korea, Peurto Rican troops on the western front, were thrown off a hill by enemy troops they describe as "giants from Outer Mongolia"... men who weighed at least 200 pounds, measured six feet four inches and more in height. Rain kep most operations, on the ground and in the air, to a minimum.

Iran's Premier Mossadegh today sent the British a new proposal for settling the dispute over the Anglo-Iranian oil Company. Mossadegh says Britain must agree to pay Iran 137-million dollars in disputed royalties. And Britain must accept the rest of the Iranian plan within ten days. The Iranian note contained what some diplomats consider a warning that Iran may go Communist unless the plan is accepted. Mossadegh says unless he can settle the dispute & raise the standard of living of his people, Iran might have to surrender to "probable future events which would be to the detriment of world peace."

In Boston today, the New York Yankees defeated the Red Sox, three to two, and clinched a tie for the American League Pennant. The Yankees have a two and a half game lead. They have three games left to play--at Philadelphia. And the second-place Cleveland Indians have two more games.. both at Detroit. A single victory for the Yankees.. or a single loss for Cleveland, gives the Yanks the pennant.

Near Toronto today, six boxes of gold worth 375-thousand dollars were stolen at an airport, FROM AN UNGUARDED SHED, ~~while in transit from gold mines to~~ Northern Ontario. Its the biggest gold THEFT in Canadian history.

NO ONE KNOWS WHO NOW has the FUND.

To some reporters travelling on campaign trains ~~the progress in the speechmaking~~ in speechmaking seems very slow..there is much repetition...Mark Twain once complained about trains in this fashion..."Because of the slowness of the railway,we advised the conductor to put the cowcatcher on the other end of the train,because we were not going to overtake any cows, but there is no protection against their climbing aboard at the other end,and biting the passengers....

good night and good luck

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - SEPTEMBER 25, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Sherman Adams, of the Eisenhower staff today called on Governor Stevenson to make a public statement on the fund he helped create in Illinois. Governor Adams said he thought Stevenson was going to try to "brazen out the fact, that he had a private fund, to provide Christmas Bonuses and regular monthly gift payments to deserving Democrats in his state Administration." Adams, taking up the demand where Senator Nixon left off, said Stevenson would make the details public unless he had something to hide. He added: "The American people will never let him get away with it, and neither will we." Then he said he was not prejudging Governor Stevenson...but he would wait and see.

In Springfield, Governor Stevenson's aides told reporters through the day that the Governor was working on speeches he will make this week-end in Indiana and Kentucky...(was too busy to take note of the Adams demand at this time.) But within the past few hours, Wilson Wyatt, Stevenson's campaign manager, announced that the Governor will make a further statement on the fund... personally...although he could not say where, or when.

Today the Republicans put an end to their official concern with the Senator Nixon fund. National Chairman Summerfield, announced that "the matter is a closed book...Nixon has been completely vindicated...he remains the vice presidential candidate." This, of course, follows what General Eisenhower said last night.

Today reporters were busy trying to track down details on the Stevenson fund. For one thing, in Chicago, Herman Dunlap Smith, national chairman of the Volunteers for Stevenson, gave reporters some details on the money the Governor collected to help those state appointees he said were making a sacrifice in taking state jobs. Mr. Smith said: two or three Chicago men business men contributed between 500 dollars and 1-thousand dollars to this fund. (One contributor was a Republican.) Mr. Smith said the contributions were not solicited. He refused to name the names of the contributors. The Governor, too, has refused...saying this would be a breach of faith.

One recipient of part of this money made his story public today. Illinois Supreme Court Justice Walter V. Schaefer said that he received a 500 dollar check from the governor. This contribution was made before Schaefer was on the bench. He was then on leave from his job as law professor at Northwestern University. He was working for the state as head of its state Hoover Commission...in 1950. Justice Schaefer says he took "quite a financial licking" as head of the commission...his family had to sell every defense it owned.

Another report...on another fund...came from William J. McKinney, former Illinois state purchasing agent, who had been asked to resign by Governor Stevenson. In a story first reported by the Scripps-Howard newspapers, Mr. McKinney estimated that at least 100-thousand dollars in political contributions was collected from state suppliers in the 1949-1950 period. He said he understands part of the money went to Governor Stevenson...part to the Illinois state Democratic committee. He said there were no "forced" contributions...he thinks it was a "very legitimate approach from this standpoint."

In California, the trustee of the Nixon fund...Dana Smith told reporters that he has received 2-thousand dollars...in contributions ranging from one cent to 250-dollars...for Senator Nixon. And he said 11-thousand dollars previously collected for the Senator, since he was nominated for vice president, will now be shifted to campaign purposes. Senator Nixon himself, after his meeting with General Eisenhower last night, is flying to Utah to resume his campaign.

Last night at this time we told you that the Eisenhower train was late in arriving at Wheeling, West Virginia...depriving us of a report from my colleague Eric Saveried, who is accompanying the campaign train. Now, we're assured the train is in Baltimore and Correspondent Sevaried is standing by. Eric, what happened on the train today?

(SEVARIED TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

That was Eric Severeid reporting from Baltimore, where General Eisenhower speaks tonight.

Western Union officials now say that more than 150-thousand telegrams have shuttled across the nation in response to Senator Nixon's radio and television appeal. Republican headquarters in Washington says it has received 80-thousand such telegrams plus 18 sacks of mail.

The President held a news conference today. He refused to comment on the Nixon fund or the Stevenson fund. Mr. Truman did remind reporters that just a year ago he asked Congress for a law requiring all Congressmen and all top government officials, to make a public statement on their public and private income. Congress never took any action on this suggestion. Mr. Truman declined to make an election prediction...said he's not a pollster or a prophet. And he told reporters that those who objected to what he called Governor Stevenson's "mixing good humor in his talks" should be reminded of the gospel according to St. Mathew: "Be not as hypocrites, sad of countenance."

Mr. Truman said he is not sorry he fired T. Lamar Caudle from his Justice Department job. And he said he had no idea what "clique" Caudle was referring to when he quoted former Attorney General McGrath as saying that he knew all about a White House clique and could blow it up.

The President also said that his recent speech on health insurance in Philadelphia was the reason the American Medical Association has disbanded its organization to fight national health insurance.

Senator Taft was campaigning in Michigan and Wisconsin today. He said the November election may decide the course of the nation for the next 50 years. He wants a Republican victory to cut down the size of a government that, he says, has grown so big people are afraid of it.

The new Russian ambassador, Georgi Zarabin, called at the White House today...to present his credentials. Zarubin told the President the people of the Soviet Union "entertain a feeling of sincere friendship" toward the people of the United States. The President told Zarubin "the people of the United States have only the friendliest feelings for the peoples of the Soviet Union." The whole formal ceremony took five minutes.

In Washington today, six major steel companies, in a report on the 54-day steel strike, said its chief cause was "the unnecessary intervention of the Administration into the collective bargaining process." The company's say a way must be found "for more permanent solutions and fair and just procedures" to prevent a repetition of "such disasters."

In Korea, Puerto Rican troops on the western front were thrown off a hill by enemy troops they describe as "giants from Outer Mongolia"...men who weighed at least 200 pounds, measured six feet four inches and more in height. Rain kept most operations, on the ground and in the air to a minimum.

Iran's Premier Mossadegh today sent the British a new proposal for settling the dispute over the Anglo-Iranian oil Company. Mossadegh says Britain must agree to pay Iran 137-million dollars in disputed royalties. And Britain must accept the rest of the Iranian plan within ten days. The Iranian note contained what some diplomats consider a warning that Iran may go Communist unless the plan is accepted. Mossadegh says unless he can settle the dispute, and raise the standard of living of his people, Iran might have to surrender to "probable future events which would be to the detriment of world peace."

In Boston today, the New York Yankees defeated the Red Sox, three to two, and clinched a tie for the American League Pennant. The Yankees have a two and a half game lead. They have three games left to play at Philadelphia. And the second-place Cleveland Indians have two more games...both at Detroit. A single victory for the Yankees..or a single loss for Cleveland, gives the Yanks the pennant.

Near Toronto today, six boxes of gold worth 375-thousand dollars were stolen at an airport, from an unguarded shed, while in transit from gold mines to Northern Ontario. Its the biggest gold theft in Canadian history. No one knows who now has the fund.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: To some reporters, travelling on campaign trains seems very slow.... there is much repetition in speeches etc., Mark Twain once complained about trains in this fashion..."Because of the slowness of the railway, we advised the conductor to put the cowcatcher on the other end of the train, because we were not going to overtake any cows, but there is no protection against their climbing aboard at the other end, and biting the passengers..."

Good Nite and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Mr. Murrow's Office

Thursday, Sep. 25, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Last nite at this time we told you that the Eisenhower train was late in arriving at Wheeling, W.Va., depriving us of a report from my colleague Eric Sevareid, who is accompanying the campaign train. Now we're assured the train is in Baltimore - and correspondent Sevareid is standing by.

Eric, what happened on the train today?

MURROW: Well, Ed, the most startling thing that happened to me, anyway, happened at the Baltimore station about an hour ago. Two husky policemen jumped into the press car, carrying a kind of rogues' gallery photograph of the man they were seeking. And it turned out to be me. They hustled me off and tossed me in a squad car and we went screaming across the town. It seems they had orders that one Edward R. Murrow wanted me on a program.

Of course, the Nixon and the Stevenson funds are the serious political business now, and they do still dominate all the conversation on the Ike train. Ike himself did not mention the Stevenson funds in his speeches along the way today, but Sherman Adams put out that statement you've just given. The Ike staff seems convinced they have the Democrats badly on the defensive now, and they will pressure Stevenson unmercifully - and none of us sees how he can avoid making answer.

We've had a weird twenty-four hours with the Eisenhower party. Last nite's affair in Wheeling was as bizarre an episode as anything I remember in politics. As you know, Ike leapt into the Nixon plane, said "you're my boy", and both men burst into tears. There was no sign of the conference and then the decision that Ike had talked about in Cleveland. Now Ike talks a good deal at the whistle-stops about Mr. Nixon. He uses the phrase "Dick and I" in talking of his crusade. At Frederick, Md., he said, "Dick is my partner right down to the end." Praise for Nixon now gets just as big a hand as the familiar attack on ~~the~~ Administration corruption. There are 20,000 telegrams on the train now, running almost exactly 100-to-1 for Nixon. Obviously, the Republicans now have a double-barreled campaign gun, because Nixon gets just as big crowds and as much attention as Ike himself. Of course, there is some apprehension, but not much, about a Democratic counter-attack, but the Republican staff indicates it will have more ammunition of its own. I noticed that Republican Representative Keating of New York got on the train today. He's a member of the Chelf committee investigating the Justice Department, and he carried a bulging briefcase.

But in all truthfulness, Ed, it must be said that the attitude in the press car about the Nixon business is quite different from that in the Ike staff or perhaps ~~in~~ from the general public. A great many of the journalists, including some who are personally pro-Ike, are forced to conclude that Ike did make his own decision on Nixon on the basis of Nixon's broadcast and the response to it, which is what he indicated in Cleveland he would not do. If he ever received any further detailed evidence on that fund, none of us knows how or when he could have done so or what it might be. After Ike's public endorsement last nite, he and Nixon had a conference very late at nite in Wheeling. That, I'm told, was about campaign strategy. And so the long Nixon flight to Wheeling served some useful purpose, but as far as we can see it had nothing to do with making up Ike's mind on keeping Nixon. We could be wrong about that. If any later light on all this changes ~~this~~ that picture, of course we'll report it. But that's the way it looks to practically every reporter on board right now.

And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was Eric Sevareid, reporting from Baltimore, where General Eisenhower speaks tonite. Our compliments to the Baltimore police, Eric!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

S

Sept. 26, 52

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will say in Indianapolis tonight: that because of the threat of Communism, we must have a high budget, for a long time." Anyone who tells you anything else, is deciving you. Deceit may win elections, but it will never win wars, or save civilization." The Governor says the Republicans, one day promise budget cuts of 10, 20 or 40 billions..the next day they say they will increase our armed strength. He said: "This is nonsense.. the oldest and cheapest of political tricks. In the name of common sense," he asked, "have we not outgrown such childishness?" The Governor also referred to Republican suggestions that a "General" could cut military waste. He said a Senate committee reported recently, that military men for centuries have operated on the thoery, that cost is not a compelling consideration. Governor Stevenson also said: "On the rare occassions when the General has ventured to talk plainly, he has called for the election of all Republicans: good, bad and outrageous." ~~Stevenson then attacked, without naming him, Indiana Senator Jenner, said he "slanders one of our greatest patriots (General Marshal) and deprecates the gallantry and sacrifice of Korea and the fight for freedom and peace."~~ Before he left Springfield this morning, Stevenson took further note of the demand that he give details on a fund he raised in Illinois. Correspondent Edward P. Morgan, is now with the Stevenson party in Indianapolis. Ed, what are the latest developments on the Stevenson fund story?

(2;30 ending: "For the governor, its Indianapolis tonight: Paducah and Louisville tomorrow)"

That was Edward P. Morgan reporting from Indianapolis.

Senator Nixon campaigned in Utah and Colorado today..and again called on Stevenson to make public the details of his fund. Reporters wanted to question Nixon about the fund raised in his behalf..particularly where he got the 20-thousand dollars for a down payment on his Washington home. Nixon told them: He definitely would not answer questions on his personal finances. Everything is obvious in the financial statement he made on radio and television..the answer can be found there. he said.

General Eisenhower speaks in Richmond tonight. Today, whistle-stopping through North Carolina into Virginia, he said: The people don't know what our foreign policy is. "No one has told us and apparently no one intends to inform us." He said the Administration has no understanding of the economic problems of the people...if elected he will bring the finest men and women into government..regardless of race, color or creed. #

Eisenhower said this country needs collective bargaining, but not the "washington kind", that stirs up a mess everytime the bargaining period comes around.

Senator Taft--in Chicago today--said Eisenhower's concept of government is "the same as mine." [redacted] "But," he said,"I'M not so sure of some of his supporters." [redacted]

~~Chicago that "no man can sit down today and figure how to start a new business and make it pay."~~

The President spoke today to a Citizens Committee for a United Nations Day. He asked that world problems be left out of politics, warned of a growing attempt by "the old isolationists" to undermine the United Nations. The President said: enemies of the U.N. tell us one day, to pull out of Korea, and the next day they want us to extend the war. They propose a cut in defense spending, and steps to create a greater risk of total war. The President said these isolationists "lament the loss of millions of people to Communist enslavement", and yet recommend that we cut off aid to those who are still free.

Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa today resigned as head of a Senate elections subcommittee that has been investigating the dispute between Senators Mc Carthy and Benton. Gillette says he has been subject to personal attack, doesn't want to impede or jeoparidize the committee's fine work. The new chairman, Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri, doubts that there will be any new hearings until after the November election.

Attorney General Mc Granery today announced that indictments have been returned against four employes of Florida state prisons.. for mistreating prisoners. And the Justice Department says William LIAS, a millionaire West Virginia sportsman, has been arrested for deportation. The Department says he is a native of Greece and ~~was born~~ ~~naturalized~~ Reentered the Country illegally in 1935

In Korea, our Jets destroyed four enemy Migs. There was no heavy ground fighting.

In Moscow, Pravda called American ambassador George F. Kennan "a slanderer masking as a diplomat".. acuused him of vicious hostility against Russia. There was no comment from Ambassador Kennan, now visiting in London.

Edward R. Murrow: September 26, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

In this campaign some candidates are accused of mishandling money, others of mishandling the truth. Other accusations of other things will undoubtedly follow. Today Secretary of State Acheson paid his compliments to General Eisenhower by saying that the General, knowingly or unknowingly, had done violence to the truth. It all goes back to a speech Acheson made in 1950, quoted by General Eisenhower in his speech in Cincinnati on Monday night. ~~THE GENERAL IN HIS SPEECH~~ The Acheson speech said that "our defense perimeter in the Pacific runs along the Aleutians to Japan, then goes to the Ryukous, and from the Ryukous to the Philippine Islands." But Acheson went on to say that the defense of areas beyond that line would rest with the United Nations.

Eisenhower's speech in Cincinnati quoted only part of the earlier speech by Acheson. Today Acheson accused Eisenhower of misquoting and misrepresenting him; and he said that when Eisenhower was Chief of Staff of the Army he agreed with the statement Acheson made. Eisenhower in Cincinnati quoted Acheson as saying: "No person can guarantee these areas against military attack. It must also be clear that such a guarantee is hardly sensible or necessary. It is a mistake in considering Pacific and Far Eastern problems to become obsessed with military considerations."

Today Mr. Acheson recorded this comment on the General's quotation:

TAPE: (End of Acheson): ..."What I did not say."

Having read both the original Acheson speech and the Eisenhower quotation from it, this reporter is convinced that the General, or his writers, did in fact distort the content and substance of the Acheson speech. There is nothing in the record to show that at the time he spoke, there was any body of ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ military opinion contending that our defensive perimeter should be extended to include Korea, or other areas on the Asiatic mainland. Any reporter knows that it's difficult to extract the essential quotations from a speech. In this case Eisenhower, or his writers left out the couple of essential sentences that would have put the Acheson policy statement in proper ~~XXXXXX~~ perspective.

Tonight John Foster Dulles, Eisenhower's advisor on foreign policy, again accused the Democrats of being willing for the Kremlin to continue its rule of eight hundred million captive peoples, provided the Russians will leave us alone. Mr. Dulles also accused the Administration of seeking to bypass the United Nations. General Eisenhower in his formal speech in Cincinnati on Monday, which was on the subject of foreign policy, bypassed the United Nations completely - didn't even mention it.

The campaign has now reached a point where honorable men are calling each other thieves, crooks and liars. There are still five weeks to go - another couple of weeks and this high-level campaign will reach the point where the sign "Fasten Your Seat Belts" would be appropriate.

The campaign is getting warmer. And charges are beginning to fly from both sides. Plautus once observed that "if you speak insults you will also hear them." But apparently this is no deterrent. Of course, you can always brush the opposition's charges aside. But Thomas Jefferson, wise in the ways of politics concluded:"One insult pocketed soon produces another."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Mr. Murrow
17 kr

Friday, September 26, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Our correspondent, Edward P. Morgan, is now with the Stevenson party in Indianapolis. Ed, what are the latest developments on the Stevenson fund story.

MORGAN: We're waiting for the governor's promised statement, Ed, which will reveal presumably the names of the persons who donated to the fund and the state officials, some 8 or 9 of them, who got bonuses from him. The statement may come tonight. It's long and they had to be broken into two parts. As we were about to board the plane in Springfield this morning, Stevenson told us he was having trouble contacting contributors; there had been so many of them. They had chipped in anonymously and he feels he would be violating a confidence if he released their names before clearing with them all.

But as we wait for details, it is becoming apparent that what might be called the 'governor's banana peel handling of this story,' represents a mistake. Perhaps the first important one he has made in his campaign.

While he was looking the other way, while he was concentrating on other matters, principally the perfecting of his speeches, he slipped by failing to answer simply but quicklyand clearly the very questions his tempered statement, last week, asked of the Republicans about the Nixon fund, namely, 'who gave the money; was any question of influence on public issues involved; was any law violated.' His staff maintains that Stevenson can and will answer these questions with impunity. That the fund is just what he says it is, - a kind of kitty subscribed by public spirited citizens to encourage worthy officials to stick to state jobs against the lure of higher pay in private enterprise.

His reluctance toward the fullreply, however, has not only laid the ~~government~~ governor open to the opposition's innuendoes, it has handcuffed his own camp from exploding what they feel is a telling weakness in Senator Nixon's explanation of his affair, that is, the contention that he by no means fully answered the key questions but obscured them behind what they call a thoroughly theatrical performance.

Moving back into the mainstream of the campaign, there is a certain amount of drama in Stevenson's visit to Indiana. He spoke at noon, at Evansville, to nearly 8,000 people, substantially more than turned out for General Eisenhower at a whistle-stop appearance there on Monday. And he was cheered when by implication he denounced Indiana's Senator Jenner whom the general has endorsed despite Jenner's attacks on General Marshall.

But preliminary returns from a newspaper poll, give Eisenhower something of an edge over Stevenson in Evansville, and Evansville in its Vanderburgh county have been on the winning side of every presidential election since 1896.

For the rest of the governor's current tour, it's Indianapolis tonight, Paducah and Louisville tomorrow.

MURROW: That was Edward P. Morgan reporting from Indianapolis.

(M O R E)

ED. R. MURROW: 9/26/52 (continuation of program)

Today, Mr. Acheson recorded this comment on the general's quotation.

ACHESON: Now that statement purports to be a quotation and an acurate paraphrase of a speech I made before the National Press Club in Washington, on December 12th, 1950. As stated, it tortures the facts; it says things I didn't say and omits a significant and relevant part of what I did say.

The general could have discovered this by reading my speech. The general's speech says that I excluded areas in the Asiatic mainland such as Korea. Now areas on the Asiatic mainland also include Indo-China, Malaya, Thailand, Burma, Pakistan andIndia. So, presumably, he meant that I excluded them also. The fact is, however, that I used no language whatever excluding Korea or any other area in the Asiatic mainland, or suggesting any lack of interest by the United States in the event of an attack on any area of the Asiatic mainland in general, or Korea in particular.

The general's statement represents me as saying what I did not say.

MURROW: Having read both the original ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - SEPTEMBER 26, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will say in Indianapolis tonight: that because of the threat of Communism, we must have a high budget for a long time." Anyone who tells you anything else is deceiving you. Deceit may win elections, but it will never win wars or save civilization." The Governor says the Republicans, one day promise budget cuts of 10, 20 or 40 billions...the next day they say they will increase our armed strength. He said: "This is nonsense...the oldest and cheapest of political tricks. In the name of common sense," he asked, "have we not outgrown such childishness?" The Governor also referred to Republican suggestions that a "General" could cut military waste. He said a Senate committee reported recently that military men for centuries have operated on the theory that cost is not a compelling consideration. Governor Stevenson also said: "On the rare occasions when the General has ventured to talk plainly, he has called for the election of all Republicans: good, bad and outrageous." Before he left Springfield this morning, Stevenson took further note of the demand that he give details on a fund he raised in Illinois. Correspondent Edward P. Morgan is now with the Stevenson party in Indianapolis. Ed, what are the latest developments on the Stevenson fund story?

MORGAN: We're waiting for the governor's promised statement, Ed, which will reveal presumably the names of the persons who donated to the fund and the state officials, some 8 or 9 of them, who got bonuses from him. The statement may come tonight. It's long and they had to be broken into two parts. As we were about to board the plane in Springfield this morning, Stevenson told us he was having trouble contacting contributors; there had been so many of them. They had chipped in anonymously and he feels he would be violating a confidence if he released their names before clearing with them all.

But as we wait for details, it is becoming apparent that what might be called the 'governor's banana peel handling of this story,' represents a mistake. Perhaps the first important one he has made in his campaign.

While he was looking the other way, while he was concentrating on other matters, principally the perfecting of his speeches, he slipped by failing to answer simply but quickly and clearly the very questions his tempered statement, last week, asked of the Republicans about the Nixon fund, namely, 'who gave the money; was any question of influence on public issues involved; was any law violated.' His staff maintains that Stevenson can and will answer these questions with impunity. That the fund is just what he says it is, - a kind of kitty subscribed by public spirited citizens to encourage worthy officials to stick to state jobs against the lure of higher pay in private enterprise.

His reluctance toward the full reply, however, has not only laid the governor open to the opposition's innuendoes, it has handcuffed his own camp from exploding what they feel is a telling weakness in Senator Nixon's explanation of his affair, that is, the contention that he by no means fully answered the key questions but obscured them behind what they call a thoroughly theatrical performance.

Moving back into the mainstream of the campaign, there is a certain amount of drama in Stevenson's visit to Indiana. He spoke at noon, at Evansville, to nearly 8,000 people, substantially more than turned out for General Eisenhower at a whistle-stop appearance there on Monday. And he was cheered when by implication he denounced Indiana's Senator Jenner whom the general has endorsed despite Jenner's attacks on General Marshall.

But preliminary returns from a newspaper poll, give Eisenhower something of an edge over Stevenson in Evansville, and Evansville in its Vanderburgh county have been on the winning side of every presidential election since 1896.

For the rest of the governor's current tour, it's Indianapolis tonight, Paducah and Louisville tomorrow.

MURROW: That was Edward P. Morgan reporting from Indianapolis.

Senator Nixon campaigned in Utah and Colorado today...and again called on Stevenson to make public the details of his fund. Reporters wanted to question Nixon about the fund raised in his behalf...particularly where he got the 20-thousand dollars for a down payment on his Washington home. Nixon told them: He definitely would not answer questions on his personal finances. Everything is obvious in the financial statement he made on radio and television...the answer can be found there, he said.

General Eisenhower speaks in Richmond tonight. Today, whistle-stopping through North Carolina into Virginia, he said: "The people don't know what our foreign policy is. No one has told us and apparently no one intends to inform us." He said the Administration has no understanding of the economic problems of the people...if elected he will bring the finest men and women into government...regardless of race, color or creed. Eisenhower said this country needs collective bargaining, but not the "Washington kind", that stirs up a mess everytime the bargaining period comes around.

Senator Taft--in Chicago today--said Eisenhower's concept of government is "the same as mine." "But," he said, "I'm not so sure of some of his supporters."

The President spoke today to a Citizens Committee for a United Nations Day. He asked that world problems be left out of politics, warned of a growing attempt by "the old isolationists" to undermine the United Nations. The President said: "Enemies of the U.N. tell us one day to pull out of Korea, and the next day they want us to extend the war. They propose a cut in defense spending and steps to create a greater risk of total war. The President said these isolationists "lament the loss of millions of people to Communist enslavement," and yet recommend that we cut off aid to those who are still free."

Democratic Senator Gillette of Iowa today resigned as head of a Senate elections subcommittee that has been investigating the dispute between Senators McCarthy and Benton. Gillette says he has been subject to personal attack, doesn't want to impede or jeopardize the committee's fine work. The new chairman, Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri, doubts that there will be any new hearings until after the November election.

Attorney McGranery today announced that indictments have been returned against four employees of Florida state prisons...for mistreating prisoners. And the Justice Department says William Lias, a millionaire West Virginia sportsman, has been arrested for deportation. The Department says he is a native of Greece and re-entered the country illegally in 1935.

In Korea, our Jets destroyed four enemy Migs. There was no heavy ground fighting.

In Moscow, Pravda called American ambassador George F. Kennan "a slanderer masking as a diplomat"...accused him of vicious hostility against Russia. There was no comment from Ambassador Kennan, now visiting in London.

In this campaign, some candidates are accused of mishandling money, others of mishandling the truth. Other accusations of other things will undoubtedly follow. Today Secretary of State Acheson paid his compliments to General Eisenhower by saying that the General, knowingly or unknowingly, had done violence to the truth. It all goes back to a speech Acheson made in 1950, quoted by General Eisenhower in his speech in Cincinnati on Monday night. The Acheson speech said that our defense perimeter in the Pacific runs along the Aleutians to Japan, then goes to the Ryukous, and from the Ryukous to the Philippine Islands." But Acheson went on to say that the defense of areas beyond that line would rest with the United Nations.

Eisenhower's speech in Cincinnati quoted only part of the earlier speech by Acheson. Today Acheson accused Eisenhower of misquoting and misrepresenting him; and he said that when Eisenhower was Chief of Staff of the Army he agreed with the statement Acheson made. Eisenhower in Cincinnati quoted Acheson as saying: "No person can guarantee these areas against military attack. It must also be clear that such a guarantee is hardly sensible or necessary. It is a mistake in considering Pacific and Far Eastern problems to become obsessed with military considerations."

Today Mr. Acheson recorded this comment on the General's quotation:

ACHESON: Now that statement purports to be a quotation and an accurate paraphrase of a speech I made before the National Press Club in Washington, on December 12th, 1950. As stated, it tortures the facts; it says things I didn't say and omits a significant and relevant part of what I did say.

The general could have discovered this by reading my speech. The general's speech says that I excluded areas in the Asiatic mainland such as Korea. Now areas on the Asiatic mainland also include Indo-China, Malaya, Thailand, Burma, Pakistan and India. So, presumably, he meant that I excluded them also. The fact is, however, that I used no language whatever excluding Korea or any other area in the Asiatic mainland, or suggesting any lack of interest by the United States in the event of an attack on any area of the Asiatic mainland in general, or Korea in particular.

The general's statement represents me as saying what I did not say.

MURROW: Having read both the original Acheson speech, and the Eisenhower quotation from it, this reporter is convinced that the General, or his writers, did in fact distort the content and substance of the Acheson speech. There is nothing in the record to show that at the time he spoke, there was anybody of military opinion contending that our defensive perimeter should be extended to include Korea, or other areas on the Asiatic mainland. Any reporter knows that it's difficult to extract the essential quotations from a speech. In this case Eisenhower, or his writers left out the couple of essential sentences that would have put the Acheson policy statement in proper perspective.

Tonight John Foster Dulles, Eisenhower's advisor on foreign policy, again accused the Democrats of being willing for the Kremlin to continue its rule of eight hundred million captive peoples, provided the Russians will leave us alone. Mr. Dulles also accused the Administration of seeking to bypass the United Nations. General Eisenhower in his formal speech in Concinnati on Monday, which was on the subject of foreign policy, bypassed the United Nations completely - didn't even mention it.

The campaign has now reached a point where honorable men are calling each other thieves, crooks and liars. There are still five weeks to go - - another couple of weeks and this high-level campaign will reach the point where the sign "Fasten Your Seat Belts" would be appropriate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL.

MURROW: The campaign is getting warmer. And charges are beginning to fly from both sides. Plautus once observed that "if you speak insults you will also hear them." But apparently this is no deterrent. Of course, you can always brush the opposition's charges aside. But Thomas Jefferson, wise in the ways of politics concluded: "One insult pocketed soon produces another." Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, Sept, 29, 1952

This is the news:

General W[redacted]er Bedell Smith said today that there are Communists in practically every government security bureau, (including his own Central Intelligence Agency.) Later the General [redacted] EXPLAINED: "The Communists are so good, you have to act on the assumption that you've got a few of them. You just take it for granted." The General was giving a deposition in Senator Mc Carthy's libel suit against Senator Benton when he was asked by McCarthy's attorney, whether he believed there are any Communists in the state department. General Smith replied: "I believe there are Communists in my own organization. I am morally certain there are. They are so adept, and adriot, that they have infiltrated practically every security organization of the government." General Smith was asked: "Do you know them?" He said: "I do not. I wish I did. I do everything I can to detect them. The Central Intelligence Agency has a few thousand employes. Its job is to evaluate reports from our agents all over the world, in the light of the daily international situation. General Smith also was asked for an opinion on General Marshal.. whom Mc Carthy has charged with [redacted] a part in a "conspiracy of infamy." General Smith said: "That's like asking the molehill to comment on the mountain. Of all the great men I have known in the last ten years, I know of no one that exceeds, and few who excel him, in characteristics of loyalty, sincerity and integrity."

The General made his qualifying remark about Communists in security agencies....("that you have to act on the assumption you've got a few of them") after a number of government officials expressed surprise at his original statement. The White House had no comment.. said it would make a report to the President, now campaigning in North Dakota.

Today, in sharp attacks on General Eisenhower, and in defense of his own Administration, Mr. Truman had said: "We crushed the Communists conspiracy in this country, and stopped the advance of Communism all over the globe." He said he had cleaned out corruption wherever he found it. He said that in Korea we stopped the Communists cold, and they have not crossed any frontiers, anyplace in the world, since. #

And here's what Truman had to say about Eisenhower: He would be "an uninformed President, fronting for the big-time lobbysists." Eisenhower has been listening to strange advice on foreign policy. He is following the propaganda line of the special interests. He is trying to appeal to emotions, not to the intellect in his speeches...and so is "insulting" the American people. The President went on: The general has been in the army all his life, and doesn't know much about what's going on in this country. Eisenhower has said that if the people want security, the best place to find it is in jail. The President called Governor Stevenson "the most promising leader we have had in a generation." He told farmers not to trust Republicans: "They will cut your throat." And he said of the Republicans in general: "I'M going to tear em apart before I am through."

The Republican National Committee said the President's speeches misrepresented the communist..and corruption issues.. and did not report correctly on Republican votes in Congress.

Here in New York today, General Eisenhower's headquarters announced that the General will make a statement on his finances. [redacted] NO DATE WAS SUGGESTED [redacted] Governor Stevenson, making his tax reports public yesterday, [redacted] had suggested that all candidates for high office should do this. Senator Sparkman, the Democratic vice presidential NOMINEE [redacted], says he hopes he can make his report on Saturday.

Senator Nixon, the Republican candidate for vice president, does not intend to make his income tax files public. His secretary, James Bassett told INQUIRING reporters: "The Senator has already made a statement on his personal income".. a reference to last week's radio and television broadcast. Senator Sparkman told reporters: "Nixon challenged Stevenson and me. I don't see why he is not willing to make as full a disclosure, as he expects of us."

Stevenson today invited the Eisenhowers to make a social call at the Governors Mansion, when the General campaigns in Springfield on Thursday. (The General replied that his schedule would not allow him the time.)

IN Washington today John L. Lewis, and the northern coal operators, signed a new one-year contract. And Mr. Lewis warned southern producers to accept the same terms, or face a strike at midnight Tuesday.

In France today, General Ridgeway said that it will take more than a year to build up enough military strength to protect western Europe. He told reporters: we are short on military protection, and will be for the next twelve months. He said we are suffering from a serious lack of air bases in western Europe.. we don't have the rock bottom minimum we need. He blamed much of this on the French government's red tape.. and on slow work by French laborers. He said French union regulations are responsible. [redacted] This is the strongest criticiism of any NATO member since the defense organization was founded in 1951. [redacted]

In Great Britain today, Aneurin Bevan told the Labor Party convention: the United States is "hag-ridden by two fears: war and unemployment..the fear of peace." The left-wing leader demanded more and tougher socialism for his country.

The Russians anounce that Andrei Vishinsky will lead their delegation to the United Nations assembly here in New York next month.

In Korea, the Communists made eight seperate attacks along the central front.. and seized one hill. Our Sabrejets destroyed two enemy Migs.

Here in New York, the Yankees and Dodgers announced their pitchers for Wednesday's world series opener. It will be Joe Black for the Dodgers and Allie Reynolds for the Yankees.

Edward R. Murrow: September 29, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Now let's consider another election campaign. Who knows? - we might learn something from foreign practises. The Japanese people go to the polls on Wednesday - a national election to choose members for the Lower House of their Parliament. Today Prime Minister Yoshida expelled two leading members of his Party. His action is described by his opponents as "Lawless", "invalid" and "undemocratic", "the kind of method fascists employ." (So far Japanese elections sound about like ours.) But in Japan they have laws about political campaigns. Sound trucks can be operated only from six in the morning until nine at night. The Japanese politician is prohibited from buying time on the radio. He is allowed to use posters and pictures only in his office, or on his sound truck. He is permitted by law to make only sixty speeches during the campaign.

I think Eisenhower and Stevenson should be asked to state publicly, whether they would favor a similar law in this country. (The chances are they'd both be for it.)

In Japan, if a politician gets his picture in a newspaper, he may be identified with just his name, or as an unnamed candidate, but not as both. The Japanese candidate is permitted to buy newspaper advertising space only once during a campaign. Newspapers are forbidden to give editorial support to any candidate, and public opinion polls may be taken only on the standing of the Parties, not on individual candidates. The law says that a candidate cannot plead for support in house-to-house canvassing. If he attends a party, political discussion is taboo. (If that law were applied here, what a gracious silence would descend upon social gatherings.)

In Japan the law says a candidate may not ply voters with liquor or food. Theoretically each candidate's expenditure is limited to a maximum of about one thousand dollars; but in practise the richer ones may spend twenty times this amount.

Any American politician campaigning under the restrictions imposed on the Japanese would either withdraw in despair or ration his words.

This is the fourth national election since Japan's surrender, and the first since the country regained its sovereignty, when the Peace Treaty went into effect about five months ago. The lack of real issues in the campaign has produced a feeling of apathy or cynicism among Japan's voters. The only clearcut issue is between the communists on the far Left, and the middle-of-the-road and Conservative Parties on the other. The Communists and Left Wing socialists are against re-armament, against the agreement that permits us to keep forces in Japan, and in favor of a peace treaty with Russia and Communist China. The other Parties are in favor of "gradual" re-armament, (but they are trying to soft-pedal the issue.)

In the last Japanese election, in 1949, the Communists polled about ten percent of the vote. Japanese political experts think they'll get less than that in Wednesday's voting. More than a third of the candidates are what is called "depurgees", that is, men who were banned by General MacArthur from holding public office, because they were too nationalistic or militaristic; but they were reinstated later by the Japanese Government.

Japanese women, who outnumber the men by more than two million, are apparently becoming more apathetic towards politics. In the first election after the war, eighty-two women ran for the lower House of Parliament. In this campaign there are only twenty-six women running for office.

Co-operation with this country will continue, under either a Liberal or a coalition government. But the new government will be somewhat more difficult to deal with. The years of occupation are producing the inevitable reactions. The Japanese resent foreign interference; and it is likely that the new government - whatever its complexion - will try to revise the agreement under which we maintain military bases in Japan.

Nevertheless, there will be continued Japanese-American military and economic co-operation, because it's in the interests of both countries.

If the rules ~~XXXXXXXX~~ and methods of conducting a political campaign in Japan appear strange to us, imagine how ours must appear to them.

There is ~~much~~ something to be said ~~in favor of~~ for Japan's election system. And though the Japanese and we are separated by many miles and many ideas, Terrence was right when he said: "We should look at the lives of all, as at a mirror, and take from others an example for ourselves." But this is no easy task, as Mark Twain once noted: "Few things are harder to put up with, than the annoyance of a good example."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - SEPTEMBER 29, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Bedell Smith said today that there are Communists in practically every government security bureau, (including his own Central Intelligence Agency.) Later the General explained: "The Communists are so good, you have to act on the assumption that you've got a few of them. You just take it for granted." The General was giving a deposition in Senator McCarthy's libel suit against Senator Benton when he was asked by McCarthy's attorney whether he believed there are any Communists in the state department. General Smith replied: "I believe there are Communists in my own organization. I am morally certain there are. They are so adept, and adriot, that they have infiltrated practically every security organization of the government." General Smith was asked: "Do you know them?" He said: "I do not. I wish I did. I do everything I can to detect them." The Central Intelligence Agency has a few thousand employes. Its job is to evaluate reports from our agents all over the world, in the light of the daily international situation. General Smith also was asked for an opinion on General Marshal..whom McCarthy has charged with a part in a "conspiracy of infamy." General Smith said: "That's like asking the molehill to comment on the mountain. Of all the great men I have known in the last ten years, I know of no one that exceeds, and few who excel him in characteristics of loyalty, sincerity and integrity."

The General made his qualifying remark about Communists in security agencies...("that you have to act on the assumption you've got a few of them") after a number of government officials expressed surprise at his original statement. The White House had no comment...said it would make a report to the President, now campaigning in North Dakota.

Today, in sharp attacks on General Eisenhower, and in defense of his own Administration, Mr. Truman had said: "We crushed the Communists conspiracy in this country and stopped the advance of Communism all over the globe." He said he had cleaned out corruption wherever he found it. He said that in Korea "we stopped the Communists cold and they have not crossed any frontiers, anyplace in the world since." And here's what Truman had to say about Eisenhower: He would be "an uninformed President, fronting for the big-time lobbyists." Eisenhower has been listening to strange advice on foreign policy. He is following the propaganda line of the special interests. He is trying to appeal to emotions, not to the intellect, in his speeches...and so is "insulting" the American people. The President went on: "The general has been in the army all his life, and doesn't know much about what's going on in this country. Eisenhower has said that if the people want security, the best place to find it is in jail. The President called Governor Stevenson "the most promising leader we have had in a generation." He told farmers not to trust Republicans: "They will cut your throat." And he said of the Republicans in general: "I'm going to tear 'em apart, before I am through."

The Republican National Committee said the President's speeches misrepresented the communist...and corruption issues...and did not report correctly on Republican votes in Congress.

Here in New York today, General Eisenhower's headquarters announced that the General will make a statement on his finances. No date was suggested. Governor Stevenson, making his tax reports public yesterday, had suggested that all candidates for high office should do this. Senator Sparkman, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, says he hopes he can make his report on Saturday. Senator Nixon, the Republican candidate for vice president, does not intend to make his income tax files public. His secretary, James Bassett told inquiring reporters: "The Senator has already made a statement on his personal income"... a reference to last week's radio and television broadcast. Senator Sparkman told reporters: "Nixon challenged Stevenson and me. I don't see why he is not willing to make as full a disclosure, as he expects of us."

Stevenson today invited the Eisenhowers to make a social call at the Governor's Mansion when the General campaigns in Springfield on Thursday. The General replied that his schedule would not allow him the time.

In Washington today John L. Lewis and the northern coal operators signed a new one-year contract. And Mr. Lewis warned southern producers to accept the same terms or face a strike at midnight Tuesday.

In France today, General Ridgeway said that it will take more than a year to build up enough military strength to protect western Europe. He told reporters: "we are short on military protection and will be for the next twelve months. He said we are suffering from a serious lack of air bases in western Europe...we don't have the rock bottom minimum we need. He blamed much of this on the French government's red tape...and on slow work by French laborers. He said French union regulations are responsible. This is the strongest criticism of any NATO member since the defense organization was founded in 1951.

In Great Britain today, Aneurin Bevan told the Labor Party convention: the United States is "hag-ridden by two fears: war and unemployment...the fear of peace." The left-wing leader demanded more and tougher socialism for his country.

The Russians announce that Andrei Vishinsky will lead their delegation to the United Nations assembly here in New York next month.

In Korea, the Communists made eight separate attacks along the central front...and seized one hill. Our Sabre jets destroyed two enemy Migs.

Here in New York, the Yankees and Dodgers announced their pitchers for Wednesday's world series opener. It will be Joe Black for the Dodgers and Allie Reynolds for the Yankees.

Now let's consider another election campaign. Who knows? we might learn something from foreign practises. The Japanese people go to the polls on Wednesday - a national election to choose members for the Lower House of their Parliament. Today Prime Minister Yoshida expelled two leading members of his Party. His action is described by his opponents as "Lawless", "invalid" and "undemocratic", "the kind of method fascists employ." (So far Japanese elections sound about like ours.) Bur in Japan they have laws about political campaigns. Sound trucks can be operated only from six in the morning until nine at night. The Japanese politician is prohibited from buying time on the radio. He is allowed to use posters and pictures only in his office or on his sound track. He is permitted by law to make only sixty speeches during the campaign.

I think Eisenhower and Stevenson should be asked to state publicly, whether they would favor a similar law in this country. (The chances are they'd both be for it.)

In Japan if a politician gets his picture in a newspaper, he may be identified with just his name, or as an unnamed candidate, but not as both. The Japanese candidate is permitted to buy newspaper advertising space only once during a campaign. Newspapers are forbidden to give editorial support to any candidate, and public opinion polls may be taken only on the standing of the Parties, not on individual candidates. The law says that a candidate cannot plead for support in house-to-house canvassing. If he attends a party, political discussion is taboo. (If that law were applied here, what a gracious silence would descend upon social gatherings.)

In Japan the law says a candidate may not ply voters with liquor or food. Theoretically each candidate's expenditure is limited to a maximum of about one thousand dollars; but in practice the richer ones may spend twenty times this amount.

Any American politician campaigning under the restrictions imposed on the Japanese would either withdraw in despair or ration his words.

This is the fourth national election since Japan's surrender, and the first since the country regained its sovereignty when the Peace Treaty went into effect about five months ago. The lack of real issues in the campaign has produced a feeling of apathy or cynicism among Japan's voters. The only clearcut issue is between the communists on the far Left, and the middle-of-the-road and Conservative Parties on the other. The Communists and Left Wing socialists are against re-armament, against the agreement that permits us to keep forces in Japan, and in favor of a peace treaty with Russia and Communist China. The other Parties are in favor of "gradual" re-armament, (but they are trying to soft-pedal the issue.)

In the last Japanese election, in 1949, the Communists polled about ten percent of the vote. Japanese political experts think they'll get less than that in Wednesday's voting. More than a third of the candidates are what is called "depurgees", that is, men who were banned by General MacArthur from holding public office because they were too nationalistic or militaristic; but they were reinstated later by the Japanese Government.

Japanese women, who outnumber the men by more than two million, are apparently becoming more apathetic towards politics. In the first election after the war, eighty-two women ran for the lower House of Parliament. In this campaign there are only twenty-six women running for office.

Co-operation with this country will continue under either a Liberal or a coalition government. But the new government will be somewhat more difficult to deal with. The years of occupation are producing the inevitable reactions. The Japanese resent foreign interference; and it is likely that the new government - whatever its complexion - will try to revise the agreement under which we maintain military bases in Japan. Nevertheless, there will be continued Japanese-American military and economic co-operation, because it's in the interests of both countries.

If the rules and methods of conducting a political campaign in Japan appear strange to us, imagine how ours must appear to them.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL.

MURROW: There is something to be said for Japan's election system. And though the Japanese and we are separated by many miles and many ideas, Terrence was right when he said: "We should look at the lives of all, as at a mirror, and take from others an example for ourselves." But this is no easy task, as Mark Twain once noted: "Few things are harder to put up with than the annoyance of a good example."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

1. Tuesday, Sept. 30 1952.

No..this is Robert Trout. Ed Murrow is now six stories above us..on the roof of CBS Radio headquarters here in New York. We'll be hearing from him in a few minutes. First, here's a summary of the news:

General Bedell Smith and Governor Stevenson have now asked that the Central Intelligence Agency be kept out of politics. IT WAS GEN SMITH WHO THE HEAD OF THE CIA Yesterday the G[redacted] said that Communists have infiltrated every security agency of our government. Today, at a news conference, and by communicating with the President, WRITE Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower, General Smith explained THAT his remarks were based on a logical assumption. He says: "It would be foolish and criminally negligent if my agency did not act on the assumption of red infiltration." BUT The General added that he has never detected a Communist in his agency. (46)

The first Republican reaction to GEN Smith's original statement was to call it "a shocking revelation.. further evidence that our national safety is endangered by the incredible looseness of our security program." (57)

Tonight Governor Stevenson issued a statement saying, in part:

(1A)

Tpnight, Governor Stevenson issued a statement saying in part:

General Smith's statement yesterday was treated sensationally in many newspapers. Today, in a second statement, THE GEN explained that his remarks had been misunderstood and stated his views clearly." Governor Stevenson went on to say he hopes this second statement gets equal prominence. He said what the Smith episode shows is that the problem of fighting Communist penetration in government is a job that never ends. Governor Stevenson added:"General Smith's statement makes ludicrous the claim of the Republicans that this is a simple job which can be done easily if it is turned over to them." He added the hope that the C.I.A. will not be used by Republicans as a "political football," GOV STEVENSON ended:"Political opportunism will never catch Communists."

General Smith's remarks yesterday were misunderstood and treated sensationally in many newspapers. The Governor hopes that the C.I.A. will not be used by the Republicans as a political football. He adds: "Political opportunism will never catch Communists." (115)

The President campaigned in Montana today. And he TOLD CROWDS ~~charged~~ that in 1945, while General Eisenhower was in command of our forces IN Europe, he made it clear that he saw no reason why we could not remain the closest possible friends with the Russians. The President says this statement was a grave blunder and did a great deal of harm because it made it more difficult to awaken the American people to the dangers of Communism, later. ON. The President said we all make mistakes, SO He wants Eisenhower to admit his mistake. (144)

~~ought to be honest and admit his mistakes. Then the President said:~~

~~"I like Ike, too.. as a commanding general in France,, not as a President.~~

~~Republican~~

The President's attacks yesterday and today brought from Republican National Chairman Summerfield this comment: ~~The~~ President's (TRUMAN'S) whistle-stop tour is "a degrading and disgraceful spectacle that will make votes for Eisenhower." (155) Mr. Summerfield says: ~~Truman~~ (THE PRESIDENT) is the hatchet man of the 52 campaign.. (2) a pee-wee Ickes who is degrading the office of President. Mr. Summerfield continues: The American people will not be fooled by the ~~bombastic~~ Big Lie technique of the 1948 campaign. (210)

General Eisenhower was in South Carolina today, ~~he was~~ ~~introduced by Governor Byrnes in Columbia by Governor Byrnes who said: "In this hour of peril I would rather have a professional soldier than a professional politician as President." The General then~~

~~he charged~~ (CHARGING) that Governor Stevenson recently had attempted to blame the "people" of the nation for what he called "the Washington mess." He said the Governor is trying to get out from under Democratic failures through a wholesale indictment of the American people. (226) General Eisenhower pledged support for every measure of Social security. He promised, if elected, a clear program, with decisive leadership, that could bring the Korean war to a speedier end, prevent future Koreas and greatly lessen the threat of a Third World War.

[redacted]

In Washington today, Republican Senator Williams of Delaware urged the government not to try to deport Racketeer Frank Costello until three questions have been asnwered: has cOstello settled his tax account?.. who has been protecting him? who is responsible for the long delay in the deportation proceedings? The Senator also says Costello could be a witness at trials of "some of our former key officials." But he didn't explain..or offer any names.

A Federal grand jury here in New York today indicted Mr. and Mrs. Earl Browder on charges of lying about Mrs. Browder's Communist party membership when she sought American citizenship in 1949. (315) Both [redacted] TESTIFIED THAT Mrs. Browder was never a party member. They are in jail tonight because they were not able to post 25-hundred dollars in bail--each. (324)

In Washington today, a high official of the Defense Department said he has "no optomism about an armistice in Korea." He said "he has no real hope, no real expectation of any progress in the truce talks." This UN-NAMED official also [redacted] said we will continue our heavy air attacks on the enemy to make it [redacted] desireable for them to stop fighting and negotiate. (343) Today, 45 of our Superforts attacked a chemical plant on the south bank of the Yalu. (349) And the Chinese, continuing their heavy attacks on the central front, captured a third hill from South Korean forces. (355) In Seoul, a "highly placed" Eighth army officer says: the Russians now have several thousands troops in North Korea, ~~He says they are~~ serving [redacted] in "a support capacity".. technicians, advisors, and probably manning anti-aircraft guns. (407)

The United Press reports from Korea that General Van Fleet has asked to stay on as commander of the 8th army until the Korean war is ended. The United Press says "reliable sources" say the General has told the Pentagon he will retire from the army if he is replaced before the war is over; And if he [redacted] retires he would like to go hunting in Africa. The General himself has no comment on all this.. says he knows nothing about reports that he soon will be [redacted] relieved as 8th army commander.

In Great Britain today, two veteran members of the Labor Party lost their seats on the party's National Eexcutive Committee to left-wing supporters of Aneurin Bevan. (415) Both former foreign secretary Herbt Morrison and former Chancellor of the Exchequer Hugh Dalton were replaced by big votes. (420) It ws a big victory for Aneurin Bevan over t Labor Party's leader, Clement Atlee.

Trout cue to Murrow

7;51;00

And now let's switch to Ed Murrow on the roof of the CBS building here in New York:

533

Mr. Murrow's Office
17th

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, Sep. 30, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

TROUT: ... And now let's switch to Ed Murrow on the roof of the CBS building here in New York.

MURROW: There is now in progress a simulated (repeat, simulated) air raid on New York. Just about a minute ago, the last wail of those obscene, abrasive sirens died away, seemed to fade out down the canyons of this fabulous city. There's a full moon riding high in a dark blue sky. It's the sort of moon we used to call a bomber's moon in London. The lights are still on in the buildings; the traffic continues to move in the streets below. There are about nine searchlights, fingers of light scratching the blue of the sky above. No aircraft have appeared yet, altho we did see the lights of one fighter just a moment ago. Larry Lesueur is over near Times Square, down on the ground. Larry, what do you have to report from there?

LESUEUR: Well, Ed, I'm actually standing on the marquee of the Hotel Astor, and the searchlights are criss-crossing overhead. Ed, the first thing I want to report is that my hair still rises on the back of my neck when I hear those air raid sirens wailing in the nite, even tho I haven't got as much hair as I used to have when we covered the London blitz together. It does give me an eerie feeling to think of you standing up there on the roof of CBS under a bomber's moon, as you said, instead of back at the old bomb-battered BBC in London. But traffic is still moving here, and Robert Mitchum is playing in a show called "A Minute to Zero" across the way from me, and there is an air raid alert on. But this wasn't meant for audience or, rather, public participation, as you know, but the big crowds of strollers here along the Great White Way and on Times Square seem to have entered into the spirit of the thing. When the sirens sounded, some of them went over to the side streets and some of them stood on the edges. They seemed to enter into the thing sort of consciously or unconsciously. The people here did react. They quickened their pace and a lot of them looked around nervously, kept to the sidewalks and the sides of the buildings. Yet nobody seems to be too concerned, of course, since they're not actually supposed to participate. I can see some of them buying tickets right now for the Broadway shows. But the most famous street in the world -- 42nd Street -- is locked off, and busloads of supposedly bombed-out people are being rushed along it.

The Civil Defense Emergency Station up the street there has opened up a soup kitchen. There's a big crowd around it. It's going to feed them and register them. They expect to register some 200,000 people in similar stations thruout the city tonite. Ed, it was my impression that these Civil Defense people are pretty well organized, just as well as they were in London before the blitz started. They seem to be pretty proud of the job they're doing - feeding a couple of hundred people right now. I can see them standing up in front of the kitchen. I must say, however, that as an old blitz reporter, I feel pretty old-fashioned, even half-naked, standing here with all the lights of Broadway blazing and bombers supposedly overhead. They tell me that a blackout isn't necessary now, because planes bomb on radar, and a blackout is as unnecessary as the two-pants suit that the Bond Clothing people used to sell on the sign across the street.

Incidentally, one cop said to me he had definite instructions not to participate in this drill because, he said, everything would be stolen in the side streets if he left them.

Well, that's Times Square in New York. And now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This simulated attack on New York is merely a practice, the fourth since the end of the war. I can see one interceptor now at about seven or eight thousand feet, which appears to be going up the Hudson. The searchlights continue to comb the sky. Traffic along Madison Avenue is normal. This simulated attack will be carried out by B-26s and B-29s, coming in at about six thousand feet.

Incidentally, here in New York City there is a need for about another half-million Civil Defense volunteers. I wonder how it is in your city?

It's a rather eerie sight, to stand up on this building at Madison and 52nd and see this great forest of buildings, all properly lighted. I can hear bombers off in the distance now. The searchlights are reaching for them. Not very powerful lights, incidentally. There is a B-29 directly overhead now, wearing his navigating lights, the little green light on the right wing. Just about six thousand feet - a single aircraft. The lights haven't picked him up yet. Now they have. One has him. Now he loses him. Searchlight work is not too good, as I view it from here. That one came up from down toward the Battery and seems to be flying straight up over Fifth Avenue. A fighter off in the distance, over the East River, or at least it appears to be a fighter. The searchlights continue to roam the sky. You can probably hear that B-29 off in the distance. The lights caught and held him for just a moment and then lost him.

Incidentally, those bombers may have come in in the simulated attack under the radar screen. There's another B-29 coming in now over the East River. There are only about one-third of the people required in the Ground Observer Corps - and the Grand Observer Corps is the only addition, visually speaking, to the radar screen. The B-29 is now directly overhead. Seems to be carrying additional lights. There are three B-26s in tight formation passing directly overhead now.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: (C O M M E R C I A L)

That's my word for today. And here's Mr. Murrow with his Word for Today.

MURROW: Thruout all of history, those prepared for possible disaster have had the best chances of survival. Many centuries ago, the Roman Horace wrote:

"Who can hope to be safe, who sufficiently cautious, guard himself as he may, for every moment's an ambush!" The need for Civilian Defense workers is still very real. And perhaps Goethe was right when he said: "To make sacrifices in little things is what we are seldom equal to." That seems to be particularly appropriate standing up here watching this simulated air raid.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - SEPTEMBER 30, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

No...this is Robert Trout. Ed Murrow is now six stories above us... on the roof of CBS Radio headquarters here in New York. We'll be hearing from him in a few minutes. First, here's a summary of the news: General Bedell Smith and Governor Stevenson have now asked that the Central Intelligence Agency be kept out of politics. It was General Smith, the head of the CIA, who yesterday said that Communists have infiltrated every security agency of our government. Today, at a news conference, and by communicating with the President, with Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower, General Smith explained that his remarks were based on a logical assumption. He says: "It would be foolish and criminally negligent if my agency did not act on the assumption of red infiltration." But the General added that he has never detected a Communist in his agency.

The first Republican reaction to General Smith's original statement was to call it "a shocking revelation...further evidence that our national safety is endangered by the incredible looseness of our security program."

Tonight, Governor Stevenson issued a statement saying in part: General Smith's statement yesterday was treated sensationally in many newspapers. Today, in a second statement the General explained that his remarks had been misunderstood and stated his views clearly." Governor Stevenson went on to say he hopes this second statement gets equal prominence. He said what the Smith episode shows is that the problem of fighting Communist penetration in government is a job that never ends. Governor Stevenson added: "General Smith's statement makes ludicrous the claim of the Republicans that this is a simple job which can be done easily if it is turned over to them." He added the hope that the C.I.A. will not be used by Republicans as a "political football". Governor Stevenson ended: "Political opportunism will never catch Communists."

The President campaigned in Montana today, and he told the crowds that in 1945, while General Eisenhower was in command of our forces in Europe, he made it clear that he saw no reason why we could not remain the closest possible friends with the Russians. The President says this statement was a grave blunder and did a great deal of harm because it made it more difficult to awaken the American people to the dangers of Communism, later on the President said we all make mistakes, so he wants Eisenhower to admit his mistake.

The President's attacks yesterday and today brought from Republican National Summerfield this comment: President Truman's whistle-stop tour is "a degrading and disgraceful spectacle that will make votes for Eisenhower." Mr. Summerfield says: The President is the hatchet man of the '52 campaign... a pee-wee Ickes who is degrading the office of President. Mr. Summerfield continues: The American people will not be fooled by the Big Lie technique of the 1948 campaign.

General Eisenhower was in South Carolina today, charging that Governor Stevenson recently had attempted to blame the "people" of the nation for what he called "the Washington mess." He said the Governor is trying to get out from under Democratic failures through a wholesale indictment of the American people. General Eisenhower pledged support for every measure of Social Security. He promised, if elected, a clear program, with decisive leadership, that could bring the Korean war to a speedier end, prevent future Koreas and greatly lessen the threat of a Third World War.

In Washington today, Republican Senator Williams of Delaware urged the government not to try to deport Racketeer Frank Costello until three questions have been answered: Has Costello settled his tax account?..who has been protecting him?..who is responsible for the long delay in the deportation proceedings? The Senator also says Costello could be a witness at trials of "some of our former key officials." But he didn't explain...or offer any names.

A Federal grand jury here in New York today indicted Mr. and Mrs. Earl Browder on charges of lying about Mrs. Browder's Communist party membership when she sought American citizenship in 1949; both testified that Mrs. Browder was never a party member. They are in jail tonight because they were not able to post 25-hundred dollars in bail...each.

In Washington today, a high official of the Defense Department said he has "no optimism about an armistice in Korea." He said "he has no real hope, no real expectation of any progress in the truce talks." This unnamed official also said we will continue our heavy air attacks on the enemy to make it desirable for them to stop fighting and negotiate.

Today, 45 of our Superforts attacked a chemical plant on the south bank of the Yalu. And the Chinese, continuing their heavy attacks on the central front, captured a third hill from South Korean forces. In Seoul, a "highly placed" Eighth army officer says: the Russians now have several thousand troops in North Korea serving in "a support capacity"...technicians, advisors, and probably manning anti-aircraft guns.

The United Press reports from Korea that General Van Fleet has asked to stay on as commander of the 8th army until the Korean war is ended. The United Press says "reliable sources" say: the General has told the Pentagon he will retire from the army if he is replaced before the war is over; and if he retires he would like to go hunting in Africa. The General himself has no comment on all this...says he knows nothing about the reports, that he soon will be relieved as 8th army commander.

In Great Britain today, two veteran members of the Labor Party lost their seats on the party's National Executive Committee to left-wing supporters of Aneurin Bevan. Both former foreign secretary Herbert Morrison and former Chancellor of the Exchequer Hugh Dalton were replaced by big votes. It was a big victory for Aneurin Bevan over the Labor Party's leader, Clement Attlee.

TROUT CUE TO MURROW

7:51:00

And now let's switch to Ed Murrow on the roof of the CBS building here in New York:

MURROW: There is now in progress a simulated (repeat, simulated) air raid on New York. Just about a minute ago, the last wail of those obscene, abrasive sirens died away, seemed to fade out down the canyons of this fabulous city. There's a full moon riding high in a dark blue sky. It's the sort of moon we used to call a bomber's moon in London. The lights are still on in the buildings; the traffic continues to move in the streets below. There are about nine searchlights, fingers of light scratching the blue of the sky above. No aircraft have appeared yet, altho we did see the lights of one fighter just a moment ago. Larry Lesueur is over near Times Square, down on the ground. Larry, what do you have to report from there?

LESUEUR: Well, Ed, I'm actually standing on the marquee of the Hotel Astor, and the searchlights are criss-crossing overhead. Ed, the first thing I want to report is that my hair still rises on the back of my neck when I hear those air raid sirens wailing in the nite, even tho I haven't got as much hair as I used to have when we covered the London blitz together. It does give me an eerie feeling to think of you standing up there on the roof of CBS under a bomber's moon, as you said, instead of back at the old bomb-battered BBC in London. But traffic is still moving here, and Robert Mitchum is playing in a show called "A Minute to Zero" across the say from me, and there is an air raid alert on. But this wasn't meant for audience or, rather, public participation, as you know, but the big crowds of strollers here along the Great White Way and on Times Square seem to have entered into the spirit of the thing. When the sirens sounded, some of them went over to the side streets and some of them stood on the edges. They seemed to enter into the thing sort of consciously or unconsciously. The people here did react. They quickened their pace and a lot of them looked around nervously, kept to the sidewalks and the sides of the buildings. Yet nobody seems to be too concerned, of course, since they're not actually supposed to participate. I can see some of them buying tickets right now for the Broadway shows. But the most famous street in the world - 42nd Street - is locked off, and busloads of supposedly bombed-out people are being rushed along it.

The Civil Defense Emergency Station up the street there has opened up a soup kitchen. There's a big crowd around it. It's going to feed them and register them. They expect to register some 200,000 people in similar stations throughout the city tonite. Ed, it was my impression that these Civil Defense people are pretty well organized, just as well as they were in London before the blitz started. They seem to be pretty proud of the job they're doing - feeding a couple of hundred people right now. I can see them standing up in front of the kitchen. I must say, however, that as an old blitz reporter, I feel pretty old-fashioned, even half-naked, standing here with all the lights of Broadway blazing and bombers supposedly overhead. They tell me that a blackout isn't necessary now, because planes bomb on radar, and a blackout is as unnecessary as the two-pants suit that the Bond Clothing people used to sell on the sign across the street.

Incidentally, one cop said to me he had definite instructions not to participate in this drill because, he said, everything would be stolen in the side streets if he left them.

Well, that's Times Square in New York. And now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This simulated attack on New York is merely a practice, the fourth since the end of the war. I can see one interceptor now at about seven or eight thousand feet, which appears to be going up the Hudson. The searchlights continue to comb the sky. Traffic along Madison Avenue is normal. This simulated attack will be carried out by B-26s and B-29s, coming in at about six thousand feet.

Incidentally, here in New York City there is a need for about another half-million Civil Defense volunteers. I wonder how it is in your city?

It's a rather eerie sight, to stand up on this building at Madison and 52nd and see this great forest of buildings, all properly lighted. I can hear bombers off in the distance now. The searchlights are reading for them. Not very powerful lights, incidentally. There is a B-29 directly overhead now, wearing his navigating lights, the little green light on the right wing. Just about six thousand feet - a single aircraft. The lights haven't picked him up yet. Now they have. One has him. Now he loses him. Searchlight work is not too good, as I view it from here. That one came up from down toward the Battery and seems to be flying straight up over Fifth Avenue. A fighter off in the distance, over the East River, or at least it appears to be a fighter. The searchlights continue to roam the sky. You can probably hear that B-29 off in the distance. The lights caught and held him for just a moment and then lost him.

Incidentally, those bombers may have come in in the simulated attack under the radar screen.. There's another B-29 coming in now over the East River. There are only about one-third of the people required in the Ground Observer Corps - and the Grand Observer Corps is the only addition, visually speaking, to the radar screen. The B-29 is now directly overhead. Seems to be carrying additional lights. There are three B-26s in tight formation passing directly overhead now.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Throughout all of history, those prepared for possible disaster have had the best chances of survival. Many centuries ago, the Roman Horace wrote: "Who can hope to be safe, who sufficiently cautious, guard himself as he may, for every moment's an ambush!" The need for Civilian Defense workers is still very real. And perhaps Goethe was right when he said: "To make sacrifices in little things is what we are seldom equal to." That seems to be particularly appropriate standing up here watching this simulated air raid.

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday October 1

This is the news:

~~The Brooklyn Dodgers today won the first game of the world series. They beat the Yankees, four to two. In a few minutes I'd like to review the game with a former Dodger official who now does business in Pittsburgh, Mr. Branch Rickey.~~

General Eisenhower campaigned through Michigan today, charging that the Administration is threatening the bi-partisan approach to foreign policy. The General said: "Democrats claim all the credit for the good fruits of the bipartisan approach; and blame Republicans for the bad fruits." Eisenhower said, if he is elected he will co-operate with Democrats in Congress, make them "real partners" in working out basic foreign policies. And again the General attacked what he called "the scandal-a-day" Administration. Eisenhower also took note of Democratic COMMENTS ON HIS support OF all Republican candidates. He explained: "I am on a true crusade. If those men the Democrats object to, want to establish permanent peace, stop cheapening of the dollar, eliminate waste, and establish a complete loyalty in our government, I say that's a real crusade."

The President was in Montana where he dedicated Hungry Horse dam, the third highest in the world. And he said that Eisenhower had adopted the line of the private power monoploy.. that if Eisenhower is elected "it will be a long time before you see another" dam like Hungry Horse. Mr. Truman said the Republican slogan writers take the view that dams such as this.. government transmission lines and low cost public power, are all [redacted] "creeping socialism."

The Republican National Committee says its has assigned four Senators to speak along the President's whistle-stop route; following up behind him and answering some of his charges..or leap-frogging ahead of him and asking questions they would like to have him answer. Chairman Sumerfield says this is necessary to answer what he calls the President's "distortions, irresponsible slanders, and political prevarications."

Governor Stevenson, in Springfield, worked on speeches today. Officials of the "Volunteers for Stevenson" charge that the Republicans are planning a 2-million dollar radio and television campaign "BLITZ" to win 12 key states. George Ball, executive director of the volunteers, says the Republicans, in the last three weeks of the campaign, will try to sell what he calls "an inadequate ticket" in the same way they sell soap, toothpaste, hair tonic and bubble gum. A Republican spokesman says he knows of no such plan..(never heard of it.)

Senator Taft, In Cleveland, says he cannot pass judgment on the Eisenhower campaign because "after all, Eisenhower is the one who is running." He doesn't think its right to praise or condemn the campaign to date.

In Washington , House investigators charged today that former Attorney General Mc Grath had "a deplorable lack of knowledge" about the Justice department... showed no enthusiasm for cleaning it up.. in fact, "appeared to wish to delay and frustrate investigation." Mr. Mc Grath says he will comment on this when the committee has concluded its work.

~~The Veterans Administration says it will discharge two thousand two hundred and fifty employes on November fourth, to stay within the appropriation voted by Congress.~~

~~Secretary of State Acheson says the so-called Peace Conference that starts in Peiping tomorrow is "obviously another Red propaganda operation." The Secretary is checking to determine whether Americans attending it have violated any law.~~

Off Korea today..on the island of Cheju... 45 Communist prisoners were killed and 120 wounded..after they refused to end a celebration of Communist China's "Independence Day." A United Nations spokesman at the prisoner of war camp said:"It was a real fight. It has been the policy of the command to meet challenges with force."

Chinese troops again attacked on the Central front today but made little headway.

The Air Force says that a year ago an F-80 Shooting Star jet stayed in the air for more than 14 hours.. and made five combat missions..after air-to-air refueling. And in the month of September, we lost 7 American jets shot down in air battles.. 5 planes to enemy ground fire.

(The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 810 casualties last week. The total now is: 119, 379.)

About half the votes have been counted in the Japanese election. They show enthusiastic approval of Prime Minister Yoshida's policy. So far not one Communist has won a seat in the Lower House of the Diet. (They won 35 in the last election.)

~~In Paris, Navy Secretary Kimball said we have a special guided-missile ship "already in being." Presumably he means the old battleship.~~

In Great Britain, Arthur Deakin, trades union leader in the Labor Party, challenged the party's left-wingers to a showdonw at the Labor Convention. Aneurin Bevan, the left-wing leader, said he and Deakin "are the same kind of chaps".. He added: the reason we have to fight is because the Conservatives..the natural whipping boy of a Socialist conference.. ARP down and out."

Edward R. Murrow: October 1, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

In the last twenty-four hours this reporter has witnessed two remarkable sights. Last night I saw something called "Cinerama", which is a new and truly sensational method of presenting motion pictures. It sort of wraps a big screen around you, and you sit right in the middle of the action. If the picture is taken from an airplane you feel that you're the pilot. If it is the picture of a pipe band in Edinburgh, you feel that they are marching right down the aisle and that you could reach out and touch their kilts.

I don't know how long it will be before this this thing called Cinerama is available to the general public; (there are still tough technical problems to be solved;) but it's more impressive than the first sound movies, or the addition of color. Somewhere in the future, through this process, there is both sight and sound the like of which we've not seen before. This Cinerama process was presented by my colleague Lowell Thomas in accordance with the current practise of full disclosure it should be said that I have no financial interest in it - but when a reporter accustomed to deal in sight and sound sees something for the first time which extends the horizon of both sight and sound, it's a pleasure to report it.

The other remarkable event witnessed was the winning of first game (4 to 2) in the World Series by Joe Black and eight other members of the Dodger Baseball Club. We have acquired again this year the services of a promising reporter, widely believed to be knowledgeable on the subject of baseball, to report the World Series for you. It may be that in keeping with the times he is highly partisan, because once he ran the Dodgers. (He sort of raised most of the boys who won the ballgame today.) Now he's raising some more in Pittsburgh. He's agreed to drop in each evening during the Series and tell us more than the score. Branch Rickey.

Negro umpire -

Is Ralph Kiner for Sale -

The Dodgers got the "jump" in the Series. And [redacted], it would probably be hard to find anyone in Brooklyn tonite who doesn't think the "Bums" will make it. Oscar Wilde...never one to be stampeded, once warned:"The advantage of the emotions is that they lead us astray." But Mark Twain realistically remarked:"We don't reason where we feel; we just feel." Whatever the case, they feel good in Brooklyn tonite.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, October 1, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... We have acquired again this year, the services of a promising reporter, widely believed to be knowledgeable on the subject of baseball, to report the World Series for you. It may bethat in keeping with the times he is highly partisan, because once he ran the Dodgers; he sort of raised most of the boys who won the ball game today. Now he's raising some more in Pittsburgh. He's agreed to drop in each evening, during the series, and tell us more than the score. Mr. Branch Rickey.

RICKEY: Good Evening! Do you have any questions that you want to ask me, Ed, before I tell you what I thought of this gametoday?

MURROW: You carry straight on, Branch.

RICKEY: Well, this game showed why each club is a championship team. It was positively marked by brilliant defensive work on both sides, and superb pitching. But this was a game, in my judgment, where power was a decisive factor.

Now this ever-repeating Yankee club under able management - off the field as well as on it - continues to show the heritage of a man who, in my judgment, was and is one of the greatest baseball men of my time. So long as the vestigas of the work of Edward Barrow remain on thepersonnel of the Yankee club and office just so long will it be dangerous to all its competitors.

I wish I had the time to mention the really wonderful plays in the field; some of them didn't get into the score book -- men backing up where not once in a hundred times they would be needed, creating potential defenses that only once in the game, perhaps, found its way into the score book. A center-field fly in the 9th to dead center, was caught by Snyder; Berra hit it. Pafko was within 60,70-feet of Snyder when he caught that fly and the right-fielder, Furillo, was not much farther off. If Pafko had made the same effort to have caught and backed up Snider and the ball hit against the screen by Woodring, in the 8th inning, my judgment is it would have held it to a 2-bagger and then Woodring could not have scored.

That is what I mean by this thing called 'effort,' called 'morale.' Other pitching was good. An experienced, skillful pitcher in Reynolds against a first year boy in Black, Manager Dressen's trust in this chap was justified, and he made a courageous decision in starting the boy. If Black had failed Dressen surely would have been severely criticized by everybody in baseball.

This pitching is something - and power is something. But there's another point in determining a short series that I believe will be a deciding factor in this present World Series, namely, the spirit of adventure. Some people call it 'chance taking.' It is a willingness to accept to risk of defeat in order to make improbable but possible plays that bring victory. Managers generally call it a desire to win; and it is just that -- a demanding, consuming purpose that makes a club put itself all out by asking no quarter and, of course, giving none.

Campanella's attempted steal of second base, with nobody out in the second inning, meant something; and if had held the bag as I saw the play, he would have stolen the base and that would havee meant something. When Cox was stealing later only a sensational play by Rizzuto retired him on Berra's throw.

The Dodgers are running. Campanella had a good lead and a fine break and Cox's lead, however, was cut down. You see we have and I want to remark about it, we have in the rule book a sound ruling defining a balk; and further - a couple of years ago, passed a supporting rule written for no other purpose than to redefine the balk and compel its enforcement. And in spite of the fact that Reynolds repeatedly balked in his pitching today, and without protest from the Dodgers or warning of the umpire, it's a dead rule -- in spite of all these, the Dodgers are running. It is possible that they have a keener and more persistent morale if I can call it that at the moment than do the Yankees - and I use the much abused word 'morale' without apology.

General Eisenhower spoke of morale in his book frequently; more than weapons, more than ammunition, logistics or manpower, more than industrial support or government appropriations, more than any one of these, he emphasized 'morale' as the dominant and determining factor in winning a war - and it's true in a game of baseball like in a Series here, the size, and age and weight and experience of these boys are about the same, the management is experienced and sound, the running speed's about the same, perhaps the advantage should be given to the Yankees in pitching and perhaps the Dodgers have the advantage in power. And I think that this thing we call desire to win, this thing called spirit, is a determining thing in this Series that we're in front of - and I think it will determine it.

MURROW: Thank you very much indeed, Branch Rickey. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is Bob Dickson.

ANNOUNCER: (C O M M E R C I A L)

(30)

Ed. trans.P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - OCTOBER 1, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower campaigned through Michigan today charging that the Administration is threatening the bi-partisan approach to foreign policy. The General said: "Democrats claim all the credit for the good fruits of the bi-partisan approach; and blame Republicans for the bad fruits." Eisenhower said if he is elected he will co-operate with Democrats in Congress, make them "real partners" in working out basic foreign policies. And again the General attacked what he called "the scandal-a-day" Administration. Eisenhower also took note of Democratic comments on his support of all Republican candidates. He explained: "I am on a true crusade. If those men the Democrats object to want to establish permanent peace, stop cheapening of the dollar, eliminate waste, and establish a complete loyalty in our government, I say that's a real crusade."

The President was in Montana where he dedicated Hungry Horse dam, the third highest in the world. And he said that Eisenhower had adopted the line of the private power monopoly...that if Eisenhower is elected "it will be a long time before you see another" dam like Hungry Horse. Mr. Truman said the Republican slogan writers take the view that dams such as this...government transmission lines and low cost public power, are all "creeping socialism."

The Republican National Committee says it has assigned four Senators to speak along the President's whistle-stop route; following up behind him and answering some of his charges...or leap-frogging ahead of him and asking questions they would like to have him answer. Chairman Sumerfield says this is necessary to answer what he calls the President's "distortions, irresponsible slanders, and political prevarications."

Governor Stevenson, in Springfield, worked on speeches today. Officials of the"Volunteers for Stevenson" charge that the Republicans are planning a 2-million dollar radio and television campaign "Blitz" to win 12 key states. George Ball, executive director of the volunteers, says the Republicans, in the last three weeks of the campaign, will try to sell what he calls "an inadequate ticket" in the same way they sell soap, toothpaste, hair tonic and bubble gum. A Republican spokesman says he knows of no such plan..(never heard of it.)

Senator Taft, in Cleveland, says he cannot pass judgment on the Eisenhower campaign because "after all, Eisenhower is the one who is running." He doesn't think its right to praise or condemn the campaign to date.

In Washington, House investigators charged today that former Attorney General McGrath had a "deplorable lack of knowledge" about the Justice Department.. showed no enthusiasm for cleaning it up...in fact, "appeared to wish to delay and frustrate investigation." Mr. McGrath says he will comment on this when the committee has concluded its work.

Off Korea today...on the island of Cheju...45 Communist prisoners were killed, and 120 wounded...after they refused to end a celebration of Communist China's "Independence Day." A United Nations spokesman at the prisoner of war camp said: "It was a real fight. It has been the policy of the command to meet challenges with force."

Chinese troops again attacked on the Central front today, but made little headway.

The Air Force says that a year ago an F-80 Shooting Star jet stayed in the air for more than 14 hours...and made five combat missions...after air-to-air refueling. And in the month of September, we lost 7 American jets shot down in air battles...5 planes to enemy ground fire.

(The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 810 casualties last week. The total now is: 119, 379.)

About half the votes have been counted in the Japanese election. They show enthusiastic approval of Prime Minister Yoshida's policy. So far not one

Communist has won a seat in the Lower House of the Diet. (They won 35 in the last election.)

In Great Britain, Arthur Deakin, trades union leader in the Labor Party, challenged the party's left-wingers to a showdown at the Labor Convention. Aneurin Bevan, the left-wingleader, said he and Deakin "are the same kind of chaps"..He added: "the reason we have to fight is because the Conservatives.... the natural whipping boy of a Socialist conference...are down and out."

In the last twenty-four hours this reporter has witnessed two remarkable sights. Last night I saw something called "Cinerama", which is a new and truly sensational method of presenting motion pictures. It sort of wraps a big screen around you, and you sit right in the middle of the action. If the picture is taken from an airplane you feel that you're the pilot. If it is the picture of a pipe bank in Edinburgh, you feel that they are marching right down the aisle and that you could reach out and touch their kilts.

I don't know how long it will be before this thing called Cinerama is available to the general public; (there are still tough technical problems to be solved;) but it's more impressive than the first sound movies, or the addition of color. Somewhere in the future, through this process, there is both sight and sound the like of which we've not seen before. This Cinerama process was presented by my colleague Lowell Thomas in accordance with the current practise of full disclosure it should be said that I have no financial interest in it -- but when a reporter accustomed to deal in sight and sound sees something for the first time which extends the horizon of both sight and sound, it's a pleasure to report it.

The other remarkable event witnessed was the winning of the first game (4 to 2) in the World Series by Joe Black and eight other members of the Dodger Baseball Club. We have acquired again this year the services of a promising reporter, widely believed to be knowledgeable on the subject of baseball, to report the World Series for you. It may be that in keeping with the times he is highly partisan, because once he ran the Dodgers. (He sort of raised most of the boys who won the ballgame today.) Now he's raising some more in Pittsburgh. He's agreed to drop in each evening during the Series and tell us more than the score. Branch Rickey.

RICKEY: Good Evening! Do you have any questions that you want to ask me, Ed, before I tell you what I thought of this game today?

MURROW: You carry straight on, Branch.

RICKEY: Well, this game showed why each club is a championship team. It was positively marked by brilliant defensive work on both sides, and superb pitching. But this was a game, in my judgment, where power was a decisive factor.

Now this ever-repeating Yankee club under able management - off the field as well as on it - continues to show the heritage of a man who, in my judgment, was and is one of the greatest baseball men of my time. So long as the vestiges of the work of Edward Barrow remain on the personnel of the Yankee club and office just so long will it be dangerous to all its competitors.

I wish I had the time to mention the really wonderful plays in the field; some of them didn't get into the score book - men backing up where not once in a hundred times they would be needed, creating potential defenses that only once in the game, perhaps, found its way into the score book. A center-field fly in the 9th to dead center, was caught by Snyder; berra hit it. Pafko was within 60, 70-feet of Snyder when he caught that fly and the right-fielder, Furillo, was not much farther off. If Pafko had made the same effort to have caught and backed up Snyder and the ball hit against the screen by Woodring, in the 8th inning, my judgment is it would have held it to a 2-bagger and then Woodring could not have scored.

That is what I mean by this thing called 'effort,' called 'morale.' Other pitching was good. An experienced, skillful pitcher in Reynolds against a first year boy in Black, Manager Dressen's trust in this chap was justified, and he made a courageous decision in starting the boy. If Black had failed Dressen surely would have been severely criticized by everybody in baseball.

This pitching is something - and power is something. But there's another point in determining a short series that I believe will be a deciding factor in this present World Series, namely, the spirit of adventure. Some people call it 'chance taking.' It is a willingness to accept to risk of defeat in order to make improbable but possible plays that bring victory. Managers generally call it a desire to w n; and it is just that - a demanding, consuming purpose that makes a club put itself all out by asking no quarter and, of course, giving none.

Campanella's attempted steal of second base, with nobody out in the second inning, meant something; and if had held the bag as I saw the play, he would have stolen the base and that would have meant something. When Cox was stealing later only a sensational play by Rizzuto retired him on Berra's throw.

The Dodgers are running. Campanella had a good lead and a fine break and Cox's lead, however, was cut down. You see we have and I want to remark about it, we have in the rule book a sound ruling defining a balk; and further - a couple of years ago, passed a supporting rule written for no other purpose than to redefine the balk and compel its endorcement. And in spite of the fact that Reynolds repeatedly balked in his pitching today, and without protest from the Dodgers or warning of the umpire, it's a dead rule - in spite of all these, the Dodgers are running. It is possible that they have a keener and more persistent morale if I can call it that at the moment than do the Yankees - and I use the much abused word 'morale' without apology.

General Eisenhower spoke of morale in his book frequently; more than weapons, more than ammunition, logistics or manpower, more than industrial support or government appropriations, more than any one of these, he emphasized 'morale' as the dominant and determining factor in winning a war - and it's true in a game of baseball like in a Series here, the size, and age and weight and experience of these boys are about the same, the management is experienced and sound, the running speed's about the same, perhaps the advantage should be given to the Yankees in pitching and perhaps the Dodgers have the advantage in power. And I think that this thing we call desire to win, this thing called spirit, is a determining thing in this Series that we're in front of - and I think it will determine it.

MURROW: Thank you very much indeed, Branch Rickey. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Dodgers got the "jump" in the Series. And it would probably be hard to find anyone in Brooklyn tonite who doesn't think the "Bums" will make it. Oscar Wilde...never one to be stampeded, once warned: "The advantage of the emotions is that they lead us astray." But Mark Twain realistically remarked: "We don't reason where we feel; we just feel." Whatever the case, they feel good in Brooklyn tonite.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Oct 2, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that American troops should no longer have to bear the brunt of the fighting in Korea. Traveling through Illinois today, the General said: "If we cannot win the war, at least let us not shed so much of our blood in that region." He wants to make certain that the South Koreans can be prepared to defend their own front lines. And General Eisenhower said: "We do not want Asia to feel that the white man of the west is his enemy. If there must be a war there, let it be Asians against Asians, with the United States on the side of freedom." The General also charged that World War One, [redacted] World War Two [redacted]

AND the Korean war might have been avoided under better leadership. He said the only prosperity the Democrats achieved in the past twenty years was the result of war.. that the only economic improvement the nation achieved in the past 20 years was during World War Two.

Governor Stevenson remained at the Governor's Manion in Springfield, heard part of a speech the General made in that city by radio.

The Pr sident was in Washington state today. He said he wants to send Eisenhower "back to the army if I get a chance." Mr. Truman said:

You cannot trust Republicans...they don't care about the people's welfare.. they control the big-time lobbies. And Mr. Truman said he didn't have much help from Republicans, in getting approval of Columbia River basin development projects.

Senator Nixon says there's only one month left "to save America"; accuses Governor Stevenson of having an "unbreakable tie", with what he calls the "Mink Administration."

Senator Sparkman says General Eisenhower has dumped Governor Dewey for Senator Taft.. feels "the switch will cost the general the election."

Senator Connally says he will campaign for the Stevenson ticket in Texas. And Governor Shivers of Texas announced formally that he'll vote for Eisenhower.

The Internal Revenue Bureau says it collected a record-breaking 65-billion dollars in taxes in the last fiscal year.. an average of more than 415-dollars for every MAN WOMAN & CHILD in the nation. The tax receipts were 29 per cent over the previous year.

Attorney General Mc Granery says he plans to take AmericAN citizenship away from 100 naturalized aliens.. "figures in the underworld and organized crime." Mc Granery says he will restore "the dignity of citizenship" by starting de-naturalization proceedings against "those ungrateful recipients of American hospitality." He also told reporters that Charlie Chaplin will be denied re-entry to this country.. until a hearing has been held on his case... because Mc Granery feels he is "an unsavory character, whose statements have indicated a leering, sneering attitude toward this country."

Price Stabilizer Woods says his cross-country [redacted] sampling of housewives opinions, shows that a stronger price control law is necessary...particularly for foods.

The Office of Price Stabilization has approved a 20-cent a ton increase for hard coal prices.. as a result of a recent "interim contract" between the United Mine Workers, and the hard coal mine operators.

In Korea today, South Korean troops fought to within 50 feet of the top of a hill the Chinese took from them on Monday.

On Cheju island, American officials say the Wednesday riot, in which 56 prisoners of war were killed, was to SIGNAL THE START OF [redacted] a mass break of almost six thousand enemy prisoners. Eighty American infantrymen moved into the 500-prisoner compound where the trouble started... shot or bayoneteed 56 of the prisoners and wounded at least another 100.

At Pamnujum, as expected, the Communists have protested what they call this "major incident of massacre."

Complete returns from the election in Japan show that Prime Minister Yoshida's Liberal Party will have a majority of seats in the Lower House of the Diet..the Communists will have no representation.

The State Department says this demonstrates "the strong spirit of democracy and is evidence of the success of democratic procedures in Japan."

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh says if the British do not accept his latest proposal for settling the oil dispute Iran will withdraw her diplomats from London.

And in Berlin, the Russian military commander in Germany demands that the western powers "close down" what he calls six espionage, kidnapping and sabotage centers which the United States is financing in West Berlin,

Edward R. Murrow: October 2, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today Josef Stalin issued one of his rare public statements. It took the form of a fifty-page article in the magazine "Bolshevik". (It does not appear that he said anything very new or sensational.) According to Stalin, the Soviet Union will not attack the capitalistic countries, and we ought to know it. So war between the Communists and the free world is not inevitable. But he thinks that the capitalistic countries will go to war among themselves because their capitalistic system is decaying. According to Stalin, Western Germany, Japan, Britain, France and Italy have fallen into American clutches; must do our bidding; but will eventually try to escape from what he calls "American enslavement."

Stalin doesn't think the capitalist countries are likely to make war against the Soviet Union, because to do so would be to risk the destruction of capitalism. He thinks the West's economic blockade of the Communist world has caused the Communists to increase their production to the point where they can soon begin exporting surpluses.

What Stalin is saying to his own people could be summed up like this. We aren't going to attack anybody. We don't think anybody is going to attack us. In due course our enemies will fall to fighting among themselves, and that would be a good thing. He also implies that our economic system is going to collapse, while the Communist world's productivity will increase. Most of this is familiar Communist doctrine; but it is interesting at least to note that he spent so much time reassuring his own people that Russia isn't going to start a war, and he doesn't think we will. Even in a country where all means of communication are controlled by the government, fear of war can be a very powerful factor in forming public opinion. # There is no reason to think that the Russian people, who have had a lot more first-hand experience with war than we have, do not dread and fear the prospect of another one, ~~quite~~ as much ~~as~~ or more than we do. Stalin was attempting to reassure them on this point, saying in effect: "Work hard. Stick to the Party line; and in due course our enemies will destroy themselves".

Yankees - 7 - 1 - Branch Rickey
Hold the game open -
What was outstanding in game -
What about Hodges -
Bad Plays -

Marshal Stalin's statement is open to various interpertations...possibly by design. Thomas Paine once observed:"Mystery is the antagonist of truth. It is a fog of human invention that obscures the truth and represents it in distortion. Truth never has to envelop itself in mystery." Many students of international politics would agree with George Byron when he said:"I wish he would explain his explanation."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Mr. Murrow's Office
17th

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, October 2, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... Well, today the Yankees won it - 7 to 1. And our friend Branch Rickey is here to tell you about it. Branch, how'd the game open?

RICKEY: Well, Ed, it opened in a rather singular manner. Two things hit me, before the first ball was pitched, as unusual. In my hearing Casey Stengel said to his men, as he walked up and down in front of his bench: "Boys, I want you to get mad, every one of you, from here." He sayd, "get mad". And then the Dodgers, having taken the field, I saw the four infielders come up to the pitcher's box, as they did yesterday, in a somewhat formal manner and gather close ~~xxxxx~~ about the pitcher. It reminded me of a basketball team that clasped hands, you know. It seemed to cement some unity of purpose in the pact, as tho they didn't have previously a sustained morale and needed something. I don't know whether it was supplication or a prayer meetin' - not that I don't believe in prayer. I do. It's a cleansing thing in a dignified time and place and almost any time it might be helpful. But these boys are mature and they're experienced. They're professionals. And the background of their morale must be founded pretty deep. And I'm wondering if that is a new formula. But the game opened on that basis, but it was dominated so completely by a great, intelligent, experienced, professional pitcher. He's a huge person, and apparently he has a fine mind. He allowed three hits, and there wasn't much chance for great defensive work. This team that looked... yesterday the Dodgers looked like a great offensive team, a running team, a team of keen desire to win. I favored it. And today this Yankee team was so superb in its pitching, and they showed a great man out there.

MURROW: You would say, then, that the pitching was the outstanding single...

RICKEY: I think the pitching was so dominant that everything else in comparison was insignificant.

MURROW: Well now, Branch, what about Hodges?

RICKEY: Well, there were two things. One good and one bad. Poor Hodges. A few years ago, very few years ago, the tall, lean, lank fellow was aggressive and self-confident and he batted behind ... right behind Robinson. He was feared - and he was a homerun hitter; he still is a homerun hitter, but he's a striker-outer more now. He showed confusion. He showed lack of confidence. As a matter of fact, his timidity kept him from coming up too close to the morale session, at the beginning of the game, to which I've referred. The feller made a confused play that contributed so definitely to the beginning, when they lost, the five-run inning that the Yankees had, the sixth or seventh. Hodges is a great athlete and shows complete frustration. When he will recover, I don't know. It usually takes some time for a man to recover it fully. But he shows a lack of confidence. On the other hand, this game showed a man who might become, in the opinion of the American public, a greater even than that very great man, DiMaggio. I believe he can outrun DiMaggio, and I believe he can outthrow him. I know that's a terrible thing to say. But that's that young feller who'll not be 21 years of age until the 20th day of October - and his name is Mantle. He's a wonder!

MURROW: Branch, what were the bad plays of the day?

RICKEY: Ah-h-h ... ah, that is not so pleasant. There were two bad plays, really. Pafko's overthrow of the relay man. When a man was on second, on first, and he was going to third ... home; he was on second and he was going home, Pafko took the single and overthrew the relay man. It's a great tendency of outfielders to want to show the distance ... the strength of their throwing arms. And there was not too much chance of him getting the man at the plate, but there was a great chance -- of course, it was a sure thing -- that if he threw the ball low enough, no trajectory in it, he would get quicker play at the plate on it, but it could be cut off by the relay man, by the intermediate man. And he didn't do it, and the man went to second in scoring distance. That was the worst play on the part of the Dodgers.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Branch Rickey. We will hope for fewer bad plays tomorrow.

-30- (Ediphone trans./E.S.)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - OCTOBER 2, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that American troops should no longer have to bear the brunt of the fighting in Korea. Traveling through Illinois today, the General said: "If we cannot win the war at least let us not shed so much of our blood in that region." He wants to make certain that the South Koreans can be prepared to defend their own front lines. And General Eisenhower said: "We do not want Asia to feel that the white man of the west is his enemy. If there must be a war there, let it be Asians against Asians with the United States on the side of freedom." The General also charged that World War One, World War Two and the Korean war might have been avoided under better leadership. He said the only prosperity the Democrats achieved in the past twenty years was the result of war...that the only economic improvement the nation achieved in the past 20 years was during World War Two.

Governor Stevenson remained at the Governor's Mansion in Springfield, heard part of a speech the General made in that city by radio.

The President was in Washington state today. He said he wants to send Eisenhower "back to the army if I get a chance." Mr. Truman said: "You cannot trust Republicans...they don't care about the people's welfare...they control the big-time lobbies. And Mr. Truman said he didn't have much help from Republicans in getting approval of Columbia River basin development projects.

Senator Nixon says there's only one month left "to save America"; accuses Governor Stevenson of having an "unbreakable tie" with what he calls the "Mink Administration."

Senator Sparkman says General Eisenhower has dumped Governor Dewey for Senator Taft...feels "the switch will cost the general the election."

Senator Connally says he will campaign for the Stevenson ticket in Texas. And Governor Shivers of Texas announced formally that he'll vote for Eisenhower.

The Internal Revenue Bureau says it collected a record-breaking 65-billion dollars in taxes in the last fiscal year...an average of more that 415 dollars for every man, woman and child in the nation. The tax receipts were 29 per cent over the previous year.

Attorney General McGranery says he plans to take American citizenship away from 100 naturalized aliens..."figures in the underworld and organized crime." McGranery says he will restore "the dignity of citizenship" by starting de-naturalization proceedings against "those ungrateful recipients of American hospitality." He also told reporters that Charlie Chaplin will be denied re-entry to this country, until a hearing has been held on his case...because McGranery feels he is "an unsavory character whose statements have indicated a leering, sneering attitude toward this country."

Price Stabilizer Woods says his cross-country sampling of housewives opinions shows that a stronger price control law is necessary...particularly for foods.

The Office of Price Stabilization has approved a 20-cent a ton increase for hard coal prices...as a result of a recent "interim contract" between the United Mine Workers and the hard coal mine operators.

In Korea today, South Korean troops fought to within 50 feet of the top of a hill the Chinese took from them on Monday.

On Cheju Island, American officials say the Wednesday riot, in which 56 prisoners of war were killed, was to signal the start of a mass break of almost six thousand enemy prisoners. Eighty American infantrymen moved into the 500-prisoner compound where the trouble started...shot or bayoneted 56 of the prisoners and wounded at least another 100.

At Pamnujum, as expected, the Communists have protested what they call this "major incident of massacre."

Complete returns from the election in Japan show that Prime Minister Yoshida's Liberal Party will have a majority of seats in the Lower House of the Diet...the Communists will have no representation.

The State Department says this demonstrates "the strong spirit of democracy and is evidence of the success of democratic procedures in Japan."

In Iran, Premier Mossadegh says if the British do not accept his latest proposal for settling the oil dispute Iran will withdraw her diplomats from London.

And in Berlin, the Russian military commander in Germany demands that the western powers "close down" what he calls six espionage, kidnapping and sabotage centers which the United States is financing in West Berlin.

Today Joseph Stalin issued one of his rare public statements. It took the form of a fifty-page article in the magazine "Bolshevik". (It does not appear that he said anything very new or sensational.) According to Stalin, the Soviet Union will not attack the capitalistic countries, and we ought to know it. So war between the Communists and the free world is not inevitable. But he thinks that the capitalistic countries will go to war among themselves because their capitalistic system is decaying. According to Stalin, Western Germany, Japan, Britain, France and Italy have fallen into American clutches; must do our bidding; but will eventually try to escape from what he calls "American enslavement."

Stalin doesn't think the capitalist countries are likely to make war against the Soviet Union, because to do so would be to risk the destruction of capitalism. He thinks the West's economic blockade of the Communist world has caused the Communists to increase their production to the point where they can soon begin exporting surpluses.

What Stalin is saying to his own people could be summed up like this. We aren't going to attack anybody. We don't think anybody is going to attack us. In due course our enemies will fall to fighting among themselves, and that would be a good thing. He also implies that our economic system is going to collapse, while the Communist world's productivity will increase. Most of this is familiar Communist doctrine; but it is interesting at least to note that he spent so much time reassuring his own people that Russia isn't going to start a war, and he doesn't think we will. Even in a country where all means of communication are controlled by the government, fear of war can be a very powerful factor in forming public opinion. There is no reason to think that the Russian people, who have had a lot more first-hand experience with war than we have, do not dread and fear the prospect of another one, as much or more than we do. Stalin was attempting to reassure them on this point, saying in effect: "Work hard. Stick to the Party line; and in due course our enemies will destroy themselves.".

Well, today the Yankees won it - 7 to 1. And our friend Branch Rickey is here to tell you about it. Branch, how'd the game open?

RICKEY: Well, Ed, it opened in a rather singular manner. Two things hit me, before the first ball was pitched, as unusual. In my hearing Casey Stengel said to his men, as he walked up and down in front of his bench: "Boys, I want you to get mad, every one of you, from here." He said, "get mad". And then the Dodgers, having taken the field, I saw the four infielders come up to the pitcher's box, as they did yesterday, in a somewhat formal manner and gather close about the pitcher. It reminded me of a basketball team that clasped hands, you know. It seemed to cement some unity of purpose in the pact, as though they didn't have previously a sustained morale and needed something. I don't know whether it was supplication or a prayer meetin' - not that I don't believe in prayer. I do. It's a cleansing thing in a dignified time and place and almost any time it might be helpful. But these boys are mature and they're experienced. They're professionals. And the background of their morale must be founded pretty deep. And I'm wondering if that is a new formula. But the game opened on that basis, but it was dominated so completely by a great, intelligent, experienced, professional pitcher. He's a huge person, and apparently he has a fine mind. He allowed three hits, and there wasn't much chance for great defensive work. This team that looked...yesterday the Dodgers looked like a great offensive team, a running team, a team of keen desire to win. I favored it. And today this Yankee team was so superb in its pitching, and they showed a great man out there.

MURROW: You would say, then, that the pitching was the outstanding single...

RICKEY: I think the pitching was so dominant that everything else in comparison was insignificant.

MURROW: Well now, Branch, what about Hodges?

RICKEY: Well, there were two things. One good and one bad. Poor Hodges. A few years ago, very few years ago, the tall, lean, lank fellow was aggressive and self-confident and he batted behind...right behind Robinson. He was feared - and he was a homerun hitter; he still is a homerun hitter, but he's a striker-outer more now. He showed confusion. He showed lack of confidence. As a matter of fact, his timidity kept him from coming up too close to the morale session, at the beginning of the game, to which I've referred. The feller made a confused play that contributed so definitely to the beginning, when they lost, the five-run inning that the Yankees had, the sixth or seventh. Hodges is a great athlete and shows complete frustration. When he will recover, I don't know. It usually takes some time for a man to recover it fully. But he shows a lack of confidence. On the other hand, this game showed a man who might become, in the opinion of the American public, greater even than that very great man, DiMaggio. I believe he can outrun DiMaggio, and I believe he can outthrow him. I know that's a terrible thing to say. But that's that young feller who'll not be 21 years of age until the 20th day of October - and his name is Mantle. He's a wonder!

MURROW: Branch, what were the bad plays of the day?

RICKEY: Ah-h-h...ah, that is not so pleasant. There were two bad plays, really. Pafko's overthrow of the relay man. When a man was on second, on first, and he was going to third...home; he was on second and he was going home, Pafko took the single and overthrew the relay man. It's a great tendency of outfielders to want to show the distance...the strength of their throwing arms. And there was not too much chance of him getting the man at the plate, but there was a great chance - of course, it was a sure thing - that if he threw the ball low enough, no trajectory in it, he would get quicker play at the plate on it, but it could be cut off by the relay man, by the intermediate man. And he didn't do it, and the man went to second in scoring distance. That was the worst play on the part of the Dodgers.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Branch Rickey. We will hope for fewer bad plays tomorrow. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the "Word For Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Marshal Stalin's statement is open to various interpretations...possibly by design. Thomas Paine once observed: "Mystery is the antagonist of truth. It is a fog of human invention that obscrues the truth and represents it in distortion. Truth never has to envelop itself in mystery." Many students of international politics would agree with George Byron when he said: "I wish he would explain his explanation."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday Oct. 3, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower will charge tonight that COMMUNISTS have contaminated virtually every branch of the government. In a speech to be delivered in Milwaukee, he says: the Administration's "soft" policy towards subversives led to this contamination. And the penetration of Communists PRODUCED foreign policies that "bowed to the Communists IN CHINA and condoned the surrender of whole nations in Europe." Further, the General says, this penetration meant a domestic policy "whose tone was set by men who SNEARED and scoffed at warnings of enemy infiltration of our most secret counsels." Then the General adds: "it meant.. in its most ugly triumph.. treason itself." All day the General has been whistlestopping in Wisconsin, home of Senator Mc Carthy, calling for the election of all Republicans. At his first stop this morning he explained that his differences with Senator Mc Carthy are well known. They have discussed them. The General SAID they agree on a common purpose: to rid the government of incompetents, the dishonest and above all the subversive and disloyal. But they disagree on the method.

Senator Mc Carthy says the differences between the two men don't make any great difference. He says: "A man even has differences with his wife at times."

Governor Stevenson spent the day in Ohio. He charged that General Eisenhower has sold out to the Old Guard, for party unity. He says the Old Guard is preaching a new isolationism. Eisenhower approves.. this could be a national tragedy. Stevenson says Eisenhower is not talking sense to the American people when he promises to cut taxes, at the same time he strengthens our armed forces and our allies. The Governor adds: "The old guard is entitled to its nightmares, and we are entitled to our dreams." Tonight, In Columbus, Stevenson will call for more workers to be covered by social security... increased [redacted] benefits.. and protections against economic disaster due to illness. But, he will say, our top priority now is defense, and inflation. "Social gains at the price of peace, or a healthy economy, on which the whole world depends, will not be gains but frightful losses."

Senator Taft is also speaking in Columbus tonight. He will say that Governor Stevenson is a representative of the left-wingers, if not a left-winger himself. He feels Stevenson's election will mean a continuation of what he calls "the pro-Communist philosophy that has almost brought this country to destruction." And Senator Taft will charge that Secretary of State Acheson's statements before the Korean war may have been made "deliberately to get us involved in Korea."

The President is campaigning in Oregon. He charges that Eisenhower abandoned every one of his principles as soon as the political-going "got tough." Mr. Truman says Eisenhower gave in on every issue to the party's Old Guard faction.... Eisenhower is a captive of the old guard. The President also says that if the Republicans win the White House and Congress they will sell the reclamation projects in the West to Big Business.. and will no longer develop the resources of the country for the people.

Senator Nixon, in Delaware, says he thinks Governor Stevenson is "tempermentally, emotionally and by training unfit" to meet the threat of Communism.

Moscow today brought Russian-American relations to a new low by demanding the immediate recall of Ambassador George F. Kennan. The Russians say he is personna non grata... (personally unacceptable). because he "slandered" the Russians. In Berlin recently, Mr. Kennan said that life in Moscow for Americans today is comparable to what he experienced when he was interned by the Nazis in Germany after Pearl Harbor. The Russians say this is a lie.. hostile to the Soviet Union.

Secretary of State Acheson called a special news conference to attack the Russian demand as "shameful." He said we do not accept the charges as valid.. Kennan's remarks will be recognized in most parts of the world as truthful. Mr. Acheson also said: at present we have no intention of asking the Russians to recall Georgi Zarubin, their new ambassador in Washington.. and we are not considering a break in diplomatic relations with Moscow. Mr. Kennan, visiting his DAUGHTER in Geneva, Swizterland, has no comment. This is believed to be the first time any American ambassador has been called "personally unacceptable" by a foreign country.

The British government tonight announced the recall of their ambassador to Washington.. Sir Oliver Franks. He will be replaced by Sir Roger Makins.. a specialist in economic affairs.

The British today successfully exploded their first atomic weapon.. on an island off northwestern Australia.

[redacted]

In Korea today our jet fighters destroyed three enemy Migs.. damaged four more. Air Secretary Finletter, in Tokyo, says a 50 per cent buildup of our air forces in the Far East is now under way. He says jet production in the United States has now caught up with Soviet production.

On the ground, the Chinese captured four hills in hand-to-hand fighting last night and today. Allied infantrymen recaptured one of the positions [redacted]

In Norway, the Nobel Prize Committee announced there will be no peace prize awarded this year.

The Italian government has lifted its ban against operations of the Church of Christ in Italy, which is American-sponsored. The American embassy announced the decision after discussions with the Italian government. [redacted]

IN Washington, a Congressional investigating group say the Armed Forces are putting speed and frills ahead of economy in their desire to complete new military bases in this country. However, the House committee, says it found "progress and accomplishments as well as deficiencies" and praises the speed with which some projects have been completed.

The Dodgers now lead the Yankees 2 to 1. But the Series is still young, and anything can happen. The question is: what ? Long before Abner Doubleday dreamed up the game of baseball, the Roman Cicero remarked: " I shall always consider the best guesser the best prophet". That's still true. It's equally true, as Finely Peter Dunne once observed:"A prophet is a man that foresees trouble." Now if we only knew which club was going to be in trouble...!

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, October 3, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

Mr. Murrow's Office
17th

MURROW: ... Well, the Dodgers won it today, 5 to 3, and are now ahead in the Series 2 to 1. And Mr. Branch Rickey is here with us again to give us his impressions of the game.

What impressed you most today, Mr. Rickey?

RICKEY: Well, first, when we moved over from the two games into the Yankee Stadium today for the third game, I just felt that while freedom of speech is in both parks, there is noticeable to me less inhibition in the use of it at Ebbet's Field - and these boys over there root very vigorously for their team. That was the first impression I had. And then it carried thru in the game, this thing I call adventure, this daringness on the part of the Brooklyn club. They run. They keep on running - and they did today. I translated it as morale the first day. And then in the second game, that great pitcher Raschi didn't give much chance for anybody to do any running. But today they ran, and they ran in spite of this balk rule that's not enforced.

MURROW: Branch, you were telling me about the balk rule earlier, and that you were going to make a proposal at the winter meeting.

RICKEY: I am, too. It's hypocrisy to have a rule as vigorously written as the original one was, and then a clarification rule to make it more effective, and no one pay any attention to it. The first day Reynolds and then Raschi, the second, and now again today Roe on occasion - but Reynolds and Raschi repeatedly and almost continuously came to no pause in their set position with men on bases. It was a continuous violation of the balk rule. Nobody pays any attention to it, I say, and I'm going to introduce a resolution to take both rules out of the book. Why have them there? Surely, the official face of baseball should be red with chagrin tonite on the non-enforcement of its ....? We're gonna change our game. We're gonna come to the place where the slugger, the feller who can't run at all, is the hero. And this thing of speed of foot is a thing of the past. Why, it was a day when, forty years ago, a man would steal as many bases in one year now as any three teams do in the major league. (???) I think it's horrible. But the speed was there. But it didn't afford us today even that great artist, that specialist in divining the break of the pitcher's arm in base-stealing, Reese - Pee Wee they call him -- Harold Reese. He's an artist. He's a finished base runner. And his beautiful lead, but particularly his breaks. (?) It was a deciding point, really, in the game. Very alert ...

MURROW: Yes, they're very alert. What was the most interesting play of the day, in your view?

RICKEY: Thrilling?

MURROW: Yes.

RICKEY: It made me look foolish once, really.

MURROW: I don't believe it.

RICKEY: Yes, I did. You know, Robinson hit a single in the midst of the game, in the middle of the game, out to center field, and with characteristic speed and that great energy of his. He overruns first base, turns directly at a ninety-degree angle towards second, and, daringly, threatened to go on to second, thinking that this young star, that marvelous player out there, Mantle, would throw behind him. And he pretended to be going on to second, daringly, threateningly, and Mantle came up and made a bluff throw back behind him and broke his weight on his front foot towards second, and then he did it again. But his technique was so perfect. He didn't just make a bluff throw with his arm; he went all the way thru - a full circle - and it pulled Robinson off towards second and then quickly Mantle recovered and threw behind him and it took a very fine slide. It was a case of fine experience and great adventure meeting up with a boy with a beautiful technique to meet it. I stood up and I applauded. I clapped my hands, and I looked all about, and there wasn't another soul anywhere. It just went into the book as Robinson's single to center field in the sixth inning, and here I was up, applauding it. I felt so foolish, I say. And yet it was the most thrilling instance in the entire game to me. It really was.

MURROW: Well, Branch, I know that you don't like to make prophecies, but how does it look to you for tomorrow?

RICKEY: If the pitching is anywhere near equal ... Now it is pitching that is dominant, you know, and it always will be. But if the pitching is anywhere near equal, the Yankees had better look out. This is a powerful club, and they're running away with it.

MURROW: Well, Branch, a final question. Do you think we will ever see a Negro umpire in the major leagues?

RICKEY: Why, don't you know there's a Negro umpire now in that little league down in Southern California, Mexican border, Mexicala, El Paso ... I can't think of the name. He is umpiring in that league, and some very fine capable men are recommending him now for employment as an umpire in the Pacific Coast league next ... Well, why not? What's the reason that you wouldn't employ him? Green, blue blood. How does pigmentation affect the ability of a man to do a job and earn a livin'? I don't understand that question.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed. You have answered it anyway. Thank you, Branch Rickey.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower will charge tonight that communists have contaminated virtually every branch of the government. In a speech to be delivered in Milwaukee, he says: The Administration's "soft" policy towards subversives led to this contamination. And the penetration of Communists produced foreign policies that "bowed to the Communists in China, and condoned the surrender of whole nations in Europe." Further, the General says, this penetration meant a domestic policy "whose tone was set by men who sneared and scoffed at warnings of enemy infiltration of our most secret counsels." Then the General adds: "it meant... in its most ugly triumph...treason itself." All day the General has been whistle-stopping in Wisconsin, home of Senator McCarthy calling for the election of all Republicans. At his first stop this morning he explained that his differences with Senator McCarthy are well known. They have discussed them. The General said they agree on a common purpose: to rid the government of incompetents, the dishonest, and above all the subversive and disloyal. But they disagree on the method.

Senator McCarthy says the differences between the two men don't make any great difference. He says: "A man even has differences with his wife at times."

Governor Stevenson spent the day in Ohio. He charged that General Eisenhower has sold out to the Old Guard for party unity. He says the Old Guard is preaching a new isolationism. Eisenhower approves...this could be a national tragedy. Stevenson says Eisenhower is not talking sense to the American people when he promises to cut taxes at the same time he strengthens our armed forces and our allies. The Governor adds: "The old guard is entitled to its nightmares, and we are entitled to our dreams." Tonight, in Columbus, Stevenson will call for more workers to be covered by social security...increased benefits...and protections against economic disaster due to illness. But, he will say, our top priority now is defense and inflation. "Social gains at the price of peace or a healthy economy, on which the whole world depends, will not be gains but frightful losses."

Senator Taft is also speaking in Columbus tonight. He will say that Governor Stevenson is a representative of the left-wingers, if not a left-winger himself. He feels Stevenson's election will mean a continuation of what he calls "the pro-Communist philosophy that has almost brought this country to destruction." And Senator Taft will charge that Secretary of State Acheson's statements before the Korean war may have been made "deliberately to get us involved in Korea."

The President is campaigning in Oregon. He charges that Eisenhower abandoned every one of his principles as soon as the political-going "got tough." Mr. Truman says Eisenhower gave in on every issue to the party's Old Guard faction... Eisenhower is a captive of the old guard. The President also says that if the Republicans win the White House and Congress they will sell the reclamation projects in the West to Big Business...and will no longer develop the resources of the country for the people.

Senator Nixon, in Delaware, says he thinks Governor Stevenson is "temperamentally, emotionally and by training unfit to meet the threat of Communism.

Moscow today brought Russian-American relations to a new low by demanding the immediate recall of Ambassador George F. Kennan. The Russians say he is personna non grata...(personally unacceptable)...because he "slandered" the Russians. In Berlin recently, Mr. Kennan said that life in Moscow for Americans today is comparable to what he experienced when he was interned by the Nazis in Germany after Pearl Harbor. The Russians say this is a lie...hostile to the Soviet Union.

Secretary of State Acheson called a special news conference to attack the Russian demand as "shameful." He said we do not accept the charges as valid... Kennan's remarks "will be recognized in most parts of the world as truthful." Mr. Acheson also said: at present we have no intention of asking the Russians to recall Georgi Zarubin their new ambassador in Washington...and we are not considering a break in diplomatic relations with Moscow. Mr. Kennan, visiting his daughter in Geneva, Switzerland, has no comment. This is believed to be the first time any American ambassador has been called "personally unacceptable" by a foreign country.

The British government tonight announced the recall of their ambassador to Washington...Sir Oliver Franks. He will be replaced by Sir Roger Makins.. a specialist in economic affairs.

The British today successfully exploded their first atomic weapon... on an island off northwestern Australia.

In Korea today our Jet fighters destroyed three enemy Migs...damaged four more. Air Secretary Finletter, in Tokyo, says a 50 per cent buildup of our air forces in the Far East is now under way. He says jet production in the United States has now caught up with Soviet production.

On the ground, the Chinese captured four hills, in hand-to-hand fighting last night and today. Allied infantrymen recaptured one of the positions.

In Norway, the Nobel Prize Committee announced there will be no peace awarded this year.

The Italian government has lifted its ban against operations of the Church of Christ in Italy, which is American-sponsored. The American embassy announced the decision after discussions with the Italian government.

In Washington, a Congressional investigating group say the Armed Forces are putting speed and frills ahead of economy in their desire to complete new military bases in this country. However, the House committee, says it found "progress and accomplishments as well as deficiencies," and praises the speed with which some projects have been completed.

MURROW: Well, the Dodgers won it today, 5 to 3, and are now ahead in the Series 2 to 1. And Mr. Branch Rickey is here with us again to give us his impressions of the game. What impressed you most today, Mr. Rickey?

RICKEY: Well, first, when we moved over from the two games into the Yankee Stadium today for the third game, I just felt that while freedom of speech is in both parks, there is noticeable to me less inhibition in the use of it at Ebbet's field - and these boys over there root very vigorously for their team. That was the first impression I had. And then it carried through in the game, this thing I call adventure, this daringness on the part of the Brooklyn Club. They run. They keep on running - and they did today. I translated it as morale the first day. And then in the second game, that great pitcher Raschi didn't give much chance for anybody to do any running. But today they ran, and they ran in spite of this balk rule that's not enforced.

MURROW: Branch, you were telling me about the balk rule earlier, and that you were going to make a proposal at the winter meeting.

RICKEY: I am, too. It's hypocrisy to have a rule as vigorously written as the original one was, and then a clarification rule to make it more effective, and no one pay any attention to it. The first day Reynolds and then Raschi, the Second, and now again today Roe on occasion - but Reynolds and Raschi repeatedly and almost continuously came to no pause in their set position with men on bases. It was a continuous violation of the balk rule. Nobody pays any attention to it, I say, and I'm going to introduce a resolution to take both rules out of the book. Why have them there? Surely, the official face of baseball should be red with chagrin tonite on the non-enforcement of its...? We're gonna change our game. We're gonna come to the place where the slugger, the feller who can't run at all, is the hero. And this thing of speed of foot is a thing of the past. Why, it was a day when, forty years ago, a man would steal as many bases in one year now as any three teams do in the major league. (???) I think it's horrible. But the speed was there. But it didn't afford us today even that great artist, that specialist in divining the break of the pitcher's arm in base-stealing, Reese - Pee Wee they call him — Harold Reese. He's an artist. He's a finished base runner. And his beautiful lead, but particularly his breaks. It was a deciding point, really, in the game. Very alert...

MURROW: Yes, they're very alert. What was the most interesting play of the day, in your view?

RICKEY: Thrilling?

MURROW: Yes.

RICKEY: It made me look foolish once, really.

MURROW: I don't believe it.

RICKEY: Yes, I did. You know, Robinson hit a single in the midst of the game, in the middle of the game, out to center field, and with characteristic speed and that great energy of his. He overruns first base, turns directly at a ninety-degree angle towards second, and, daringly, threatened to go on to second, thinking that this young star, that marvelous player out there, Mantle, would throw behind him. And he pretended to be going on to second, daringly, threateningly, and Mantle came up and made a bluff throw back behind him and broke his weight on his front foot towards second, and then he did it again. But his technique was so perfect. He didn't just make a bluff throw with his arm; he went all the way through - a full circle - and it pulled Robinson off towards second and then quickly Mantle recovered and threw behind him and it took a very fine slide. It was a case of fine experience and great adventure meeting up with a boy with a beautiful technique to meet it. I stood up and I applauded. I clapped my hands, and I looked all about, and there wasn't another soul anywhere. It just went into the book as Robinson's single to center field in the sixth inning, and here I was up, applauding it. I felt so foolish, I say. And yet it was the most thrilling instance in the entire game to me. It really was.

MURROW: Well, Branch, I know that you don't like to make prophecies, but how does it look to you for tomorrow?

RICKEY: If the pitching is anywhere near equal...Now it is pitching that is dominant, you know, and it always will be. But if the pitching is anywhere near equal, the Yankees had better look out. This is a powerful club, and they're running away with it.

MURROW: Well, Branch, a final question. Do you think we will ever see a Negro umpire in the major leagues?

RICKEY: Why, don't you know there's a Negro umpire now in that little league down in Southern California, Mexican border, Mexicala, El Paso...I can't think of the name. He is umpiring in that league, and some very fine capable men are recommending him now for employment as an umpire in the Pacific Coast League next...Well, why not? What's the reason that you wouldn't employ him? Green, blue blood. How does pigmentation affect the ability of a man to do a job and earn a livin'? I don't understand that question.

MURROW: Thank you very much indeed. You have answered it anyway. Thank you, Branch Rickey.

This id Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Dodgers now lead the Yankees 2 to 1. But the Series is still young, and anything can happen. The question is: what? Long before Abner Doubleday dreamed up the game of baseball, the Roman Cicero remarked: "I shall always consider the best guesser the best prophet." That's still true. It's equally true, as Finely Peter Dunne once observed: "A prophet is a man that foresees trouble." Now if we only knew which club was going to be in trouble...! Good Note and Good Luck!

Monday, Oct. 6, 1952

This is the news:

Secretary of State Acheson says the Russians may be about to give up their policy of "pressure and open aggression", in favor of a policy aimed at dividing the western allies. In a speech AT Pittsburgh, the Secretary said: the free world's growing strength, apparently is forcing ~~this~~ The change in Russian tactics.. to increased fifth column activities, "insidious boring from within". But Mr. Acheson says, this would only mean a change ~~[illegible]~~ in method. We must not be lulled into complacency, or the slightest relaxation of THE ~~the~~ defense effort. We would welcome any Soviet step to reduce the danger of war. But "we must not delude ourselves, that the task will be any easier than it has been."

State Department officials say Mr. Acheson's views are based on the latest available information from Moscow..including the Communist Party congress now in session there. Today, Georgi Malenkov accused the United States of rushing the West towards a war. We are accused of building military bases around the edges of the Soviet Union. We are accused of saddling other western nations with the "burdens of an aggressive policy." -- [redacted] of mercilessly "plundering, enslaving and flogging" our allies. Malenkov says Russia will not attack the west. But she is not afraid of war. No force in the world can halt Soviet progress.

Secretary of State Acheson's Pitsburgh speech was made before members of the C.I.O. electrical workers. The Secretary took the occassion to attack the foreign policy views of General Eisenhower.. (whose name he did not mention.) Acheson says Eisenhower offers escape from responsibility.. short-cuts and tax cuts.. AND promises to bring the boys back home." All of this.. the secretary says.. could lead to the edge of the cliff of disaster.

The General speaks in Seattle tonight where he will attack those he calls "the sly apostles of Fair Dealism" for trying to sell the nation "a whole hog" approach to public power. The General would replace over-all federal authorities.. (such as the Columbia Valley Authority.) with new inter-state bodies.. its state members chosen in accordance with state laws. Earlier, he said that President Truman's charge that Republicans would build no more power dams is "pure bunk." And he said any statement that labor would lose its gains under a Republican administration is also pure bunk. Again.. as he did in North Dakota.. the General referred to attacks on him by the President as harmless blanks.. said he has been shot at by real artillery and is not much concerned by these noisy . harmless blanks.

The President, in Utah today, said he does not believe the people will elect as President a man who would "surrender to Taft, Mc Carthy, Jenner and Kem." He said the General had to abandon fine principles and swallow isolationism in order to get the support of Senator Taft. He said the Republicans are trying to diguise a 20-year record of obstruction and isolationism behind what he called "the shining armor of a national hero." Mr. Truman said those who have accused him of "government by crony" know THAT IS "sheer poppycock and low politics." He said the few men in public office who have betrayed the trust have hurt him, personally.

GOVERNOR STEVENSON continued working on speeches in Springfield today. His aides announced a new 14,500 mile campaign trip that will take him through 23 states. Wilson Wyatt, the governor's campaign manager said today, the campaign is as far along as they hoped it would be at this time. He's not bothered by small crowds.. they are not as important as radio and television audiences. Wyatt does not feel that the governor is talking over the heads of people. He said the Governor will continue talking sense to the American people..and rest his case on that.

In Moscow today..at the Communist party Congress, a Lithuanian delegate took note of General Eisenhower's recent remarks about liberating the people of the Baltic states. The Lithuanian called the General "an imperialist who barks in vain at the Lithuanian people."

A United Nations committee today sent the General Assembly a proposal to recruit a volunteer reserve army of 60-thousand men to fight aggression.

In Korea, troops of the First Marine Division fought for six hours to recapture a hill position from the Chinese. Despite supprt by tanks and planes the Marines could get no farther than 50 yards FROM the top. South Korean marines have been forced back from another hill on the western front.

In Berlin today, Nikolai Shvernik, Russia's president, told the people of East Germany that they have won "an honorable place" in the Communist world.. plus Russia's "trust." This may mean a formal alliance between Moscow and the East Germany regime. My colleague Dick Hottelet reports from Germany today that the East German police have turned up in new Russian-style uniforms and say they are going to be known in the future as "the peoples army."

~~In London today, Field Marshal B. L. Montgomery called for a supreme command to unify the allied policies in the cold war against Communism.~~

In Iran, a spokesman for Premier Mossadegh says Iran must cut her diplomatic relations with Great Britain at once. He charges that the latest British and American notes on the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute have "completely sidetracked" Mossadegh's plans for a settlement.

And in Egypt, Mustapha el Nahas, the leader of the strong WAFDIST party, has yielded to demands from General Naguib and "retired from active leadership" of the party.

Montaigne once remarked:"There are some defeats, more triumphant than victories." This may be so. (But tonite, on the eve of the deciding game of the World Series, it would be hard to get a Dodger or Yankee fan to agree.) But with the Series tied, and one game remaining, all would agree with the Roman Horace who said:"In one short hour's space, can come swift death, or joyful victory." "Fabjous" day

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, October 6, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Well, the Yankees won it today, 3-2, the Series now all even, the crucial game tomorrow, and our baseball reporter, Mr. Branch Rickey, is with us again.

How did it look today, Branch?

RICKEY: Well, it's one of those great series. We've had very few that went to seven games. This one is ... and the breaking point is in front of these teams. I ... I think the psychology of the strain is in evidence already. Some of these men are in slumps. Some of them have lost their distinctive leadership. Take Robinson, for instance. He has contributed so little as his capacity is related to what he is actually doing. The boy is ina slump, that mysterious thing that seems to violate the law of cause-and-effect, that something happens to a boy and he can't find out what it is and he becomes worried and frustrated. Robinson is not like that. I cannot help thinking that Robinson still might be the star and will be tomorrow. He's a philosopher player. He wants to know about things and he has power. He's ... I could tell him something, I believe, that would help him instantly. Really, I ... I ... I'm positive about it. He needs to hit at the pitch. The first day he struck out three times on fast balls through the middle and never struck at a ball. He did it again today. He has struck out more than I've ever known him to do in any series of any kind during a regular season. The boy ... the boy takes the strikes. If he'd cut and slash ... hit at the bat ball, it doesn't matter. The last two times up today he hit what seemed to be that ball, but hit them a long ways. Now, Robinson needs to do that. He can be the man that will determine this series.

Raschi runs true to form this game, I say. Raschi was a great pitcher and they had ... there are two great pitchers in there today and they'll have them in there tomorrow, if necessary. Everything goes tomorrow, fame, money, prestige. It's all right out in front of the boys, but there's one thing I want to remark about because it affects baseball so very much in my judgment, - the people of this country are going to see a different enforcement of the balk (?) rule and it can affect our whole game. I harp on it, it seems like, but it is so important. Raschi made ten balks in the first inning today, three in the second, six in the third, and seven more in the sixth or seventh. He ... he made twenty-six balks that are beyond dispute. Nobody anywhere would say they were not balks. We must either take those rules out of the book or we must enforce them. Our boy, pitching for the Brooklyn Club, I didn't see him make any at all. He has been trained perhaps correctly, but that is a thing worth considering. Loes ... Loes was another great young pitcher. How in the name of common sense the National League or the American League in the future for that matter are going to pass up the Dodgers' potentials in the field of great young pitchers when they have shown three, or maybe four, pitchers in the World Series, boys who have never pitched in any previous year in the major leagues. That is something. Those fellers are marvelous. Did you see how they greeted Snider when he made his first home run? Now, wasn't that wonderful?

MURROW: I did, indeed!

RICKEY: Now, that (inaudible) and if you watch their outfielders they begin their 100-yard sprint the minute the ball is hit by a batsman anywhere; they go perchance to take care of a play that might result. And did you see how the other club greeted Berra in the very next inning? With the first man up he hit a home run. Well, they were enthusiastic. Oh, the Yankees have tremendous ability. There isn't any question about that. They have it all over the place. That Mantle who hit a bad pitch up above his head, he scraped the sky and it went to the left-center field fence in Ebbets Field. What a blow! Now, they have ability and they may win this Series tomorrow, but I look for the Dodgers to win it because on the edge of everything, and this big colored boy, they have him free and rested for the pitching tomorrow and I think that the Yankees may come back with all three of them, Reynolds and Raschi and Lopat and they may need them all. I'm a bit prejudiced about it..... (interruption)

MURROW: I rather suspected that, Branch, but aside from the pitching, who do you think is likely to be the key man in that game tomorrow?

RICKEY: I really look for this feller, Robinson. He has been so negligible in what he's given to us. This miraculous Cox that, as I said the other day somewhere, just makes regular play just his habit. Miracles are expected from him. Did you see the play he made today on the foul ball, that ... on the bad throw that Campanella made to him?

MURROW: Thatwas impossible!

RICKEY: Wasn't that marvelous? There's not another feller with those sticky fingers. He is a deadly snatcher. I don't know anybody like ... I'm too much prejudiced, Ed, to give any commentary. I tell you, I believe they'll win it tomorrow, the Dodgers, I mean. I ... I believe they will. They have an edge on pitching and they want to win it so much.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Branch Rickey, for this prejudiced and very informative report on today's game and tomorrow's prospects.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - OCTOBER 6, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Acheson says the Russians may be about to give up their policy of "pressure and open aggression", in favor of a policy aimed at dividing the western allies. In a speech at Pittsburgh, the Secretary said: the free world's growing strength apparently is forcing the change in Russian tactics.. to increased fifth column activities, "insidious boring from within". But Mr. Acheson says this would only mean a change in method. We must not be lulled into complacency, or the slightest relaxation of the defense effort. We would welcome any Soviet step to reduce the danger of war. But "we must not delude ourselves, that the task will be any easier than it has been."

State Department officials say Mr. Acheson's views are based on the latest available information from Moscow...including the Communist Party congress now in session there. Today, George Malenkov accused the United States of rushing the West towards a war. We are accused of building military bases around the edges of the Soviet Union. We are accused of saddling other western nations with the "burdens of an aggressive policy..."of mercilessly "plundering, enslaving and flogging" our allies. Malenkov says Russia will not attack the west. But she is not afraid of war. No force in the world can halt Soviet progress.

Secretary of State Acheson's Pittsburgh speech was made before members of the C.I.O. electrical workers. The Secretary took the occasion to attack the foreign policy views of General Eisenhower...(whose name he did not mention.) Acheson says Eisenhower offers escape from responsibility...short-cuts and tax cuts...and promises to bring the boys back home." All of this...the secretary says...could lead to the edge of the cliff of disaster.

The General speaks in Seattle tonight where he will attack those he calls "the sly apostles of Fair Dealism" for trying to sell the nation "a whole hog" approach to public power. The General would replace over-all federal authorities...(such as the Columbia Valley Authority...) with new interstate bodies.... its state members shosen in accordance with state laws. Earlier, he said that President Truman's charge that Republicans would build no more power dams is "pure bunk." And he said any statement that labor would lose its gains under a Republican administration is also pure bunk. Again...as he did in North Dakota... the General referred to attacks on him by the President as harmless blanks...said he has been shot at by real artillery and is not much concerned by these noisy... harmless blanks.

The President, in Utah today, said he dows not believe the people will elect as President a man who would "surrender to Taft, McCarthy, Jenner and Kem." He said the General had to abandon fine principles and swallow isolationism in order to get the support of Senator Taft. He said the Republicans are trying to disguise a 20-year record of obstruction and isolationism behind what he called "the shining armor of a national hero." Mr. Truman said those who have accused him of "government by crony" know that is "sheer poppycock and low politics." He said the few men in public office who have betrayed the trust have hurt him personally. Governor Stevenson continued working on speeches in Springfield today. His aides announced a new 14,500 mile campaign trip that will take him through 23 states. Wilson Wyatt, the governor's campaign manager said today, the campaign is as far along as they hoped it would be at this time. He's not bothered by small crowds...they are not as important as radio and television audiences. Wyatt does not feel that the governor is talking over the heads of people. He said the Governor will continue talking sense to the American people...and rest his case on that.

In Moscow today...at the Communist party Congress, a Lithuanian delegate took note of General Eisenhower's recent remarks about liberating the people of the Baltic states. The Lithuanian called the General "an imperialist who barks in vain at the Lithuanian people."

A United Nations committee today sent the General Assembly a proposal to recruit a volunteer reserve army of 60-thousand men to fight aggression.

In Korea, troops of the First Marine Division fought for six hours to recapture a hill position from the Chinese. Despite support by tanks and planes the Marines could get no farther than 50 yards from the top. South Korean marines have been forced back from another hill on the western front.

In Berlin today, Nikolai Shvernik, Russia's president, told the people of East Germany that they have won "an honorable place" in the Communist world... plus Russia's "trust." This may mean a formal alliance between Moscow and the East Germany regime. My colleague Dick Hottelet reports from Germany today that the East German police have turned up in new Russian-style uniforms and say they are going to be known in the future as "the peoples army."

In Iran, a spokesman for Premier Mossadegh says Iran must cut her diplomatic relations with Great Britain at once. He charges that the latest British and American notes on the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute have "completely side-tracked" Mossadegh's plans for a settlement.

And in Egypt, Mustapha el Nahas, the leader of the strong Wafdist party, has yielded to demands from General Naguib and "retired from active leadership" of the party.

Well, the Yankees won it today, 3-2, the Series now all even, the crucial game tomorrow, and our baseball reporter, Mr. Branch Rickey, is with us again. How did it look today, Branch?

RICKEY: Well, it's one of those great series. We've had very few that went to seven games. This one is...and the breaking point is in front of these teams. I...I think the psychology of the strain is in evidence already. Some of these men are in slumps. Some of them have lost their distinctive leadership. Take Robinson, for instance. He has contributed so little as his capacity is related to what he is actually doing. The boy is in a slump, that mysterious thing that happens to a boy and he can't find out what it is and he becomes worried and frustrated. Robinson is not like that. I cannot help thinking that Robinson still might be the star and will be tomorrow. He's a philosopher player. He wants to know about things and he has power. He's...I could tell him something, I believe, that would help him instantly. Really, I...I...I'm positive about it. He needs to hit at the pitch. The first day he struck out three times on fast balls through the middle and never struck at a ball. He did it again today. He has struck out more than I've ever known him to do in any series of any kind during a regular season. The boy...the boy takes the strikes. If he'd cut and slash... hit at the bat ball, it doesn't matter. The last two times up today he hit what seemed to be that ball, but hit them a long ways. Now, Robinson needs to do that. He can be the man that will determine this series.

Raschi runs true to form this game, I say. Raschi was a great pitcher and they had...there are two great pitchers in there today and they'll have them in there tomorrow, if necessary. Everything goes tomorrow, fame, money, prestige. It's all right out in front of the boys, but there's one thing I want to remark about because it affects baseball so very much in my judgment, - the people of this country are going to see a different enforcement of the balk rule and it can affect our whole game. I harp on it, it seems like, but it is so important. Raschi made ten balks in the first inning today, three in the second, six in the third, and seven more in the sixth or seventh. He...he made twenty-six balks that are beyond dispute. Nobody anywhere would say they were not balks. We must either take those rules out of the book or we must enforce them. Our boy, pitching for the Brooklyn Club, I didn't see him make any at all. He has been trained perhaps correctly, but that is a thing worth considering. Loes...Loes was another great young pitcher. Now in the name of common sense the National League or the American League in the future for that matter are going to pass up the Dodgers' potentials in the field of great young pitchers when they have shown three, or maybe four, pitchers in the World Series, boys who have never pitched in any previous year in the major leagues. That is something. Those fellers are marvelous.

Did you see how they greeted Snider when he made his first home run? Now, wasn't that wonderful?

MURROW: I did, indeed!

RICKEY: Now, that (inaudible) and if you watch their outfielders they begin their 100-yard sprint the minute the ball is hit by a batsman anywhere; they go perchance to take care of a play that might result. And did you see how the other club greeted Berra in the very next inning? With the first man up he hit a home run. Well, they were enthusiastic. Oh, the Yankees have tremendous ability. There isn't any question about that. They have it all over the place. That Mantle who hit a bad pitch up above his head, he scraped the sky and it went to the left-center field fence in Ebbets Field. What a blow! Now, they have ability and they may win this Series tomorrow, but I look for the Dodgers to win it because on the edge of everything, and this big colored boy, they have him free and rested for the pitching tomorrow and I think that the Yankees may come back with all three of them, Reynolds and Raschi and Lopat and they may need them all. I'm a bit prejudiced about it...

MURROW: I rather suspected that, Branch, but aside from the pitching, who do you think is likely to be the key man in that game tomorrow?

RICKEY: I really look for this feller, Robinson. He has been so negligible in what he's given to us. This miraculous Cox that, as I said the other day somewhere, just makes regular play just his habit. Miracles are expected from him. Did you see the play he made today on the foul ball, that...on the bad throw that Campanella made to him?

MURROW: That was impossible!

RICKEY: Wasn't that marvelous? There's not another feller with those sticky fingers. He is a deadly snatcher. I don't know anybody like...I'm too much prejudiced, Ed, to give any commentary. I tell you, I believe they'll win it tomorrow, the Dodgers, I mean. I...I believe they will. They have an edge on pitching and they want to win it so much.

Tuesday Oct. 7, 1952

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists are again attacking in Korea..along 100 miles of the 155-mile front. They are using an estimated 12-thousand troops... following through on last night's attack. In their first drive the enemy over-ran seven of our hill positions. They launched about 35 seperate attacks. (13 of them against the Marines.) We counter-attacked today against enemy gains in the hills guarding Chorwon.. on the road to Seoul. Allied officers at the front call it a limited attack. [redacted] the heaviest enemy drive IN A year. It appears that we had at least three days warning that it was coming and were in position to blunt it.

Defense Secretary Lovett says the South Koreans now have more than 400-thousand soldiers...50 per cent more than we have in Korea. Reporters without mentioning Eisenhower's name asked him about the General's [redacted] recent proposal to eventually have South Koreans replace American troops at the front..let Asians fight Asians..if there must be a war in Korea. Secretary Lovett [redacted] had this to say: [redacted] as the number of South Korean troops increases it will strengthen the allied forces and permit greater rotation, if not relief, of United Nations troops. We are doing all we can safely do, at the moment, in training the South Koreans and putting more of them into the war. As time goes on we will get more troops from South Korea. Secretary Lovett says he would not be competent to say whether we will get additional troops from other U.N. nations.

On the political scene today, both Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower charged that the other fellow's party is helping the Communists AND hurting our allies.

Stevenson, in Michigan, said Eisenhower's recent statement that we are in a war economy..enjoying a war prosperity.. is the sort of thing one expects from "irresponsibles and isolationists".. but not from a man "who was formerly looked on as an understanding leader in world affairs." Stevenson says this gives comfort to the Russians because they are shouting to the world that our WHOLE defense program is not to insure peace but to prevent a depression at home. Stevenson says Eisenhower could do "no greater disservice" to America than this remark. And tonight in Detroit, he will ask: "Is Eisenhower seriously trying to root out Communists in Washington or is he deliberately scaring people to get votes?" The Governor says the General implies THAT the government deliberately conceals Communists in Washington, but offers only silence about a possible cure. He says the Democrats have fought Communism for 20 years: by licking the Depression and Communism's hope for a revolution here...by strengthening the free people of the world in their fight against Communism.. by instituting an elaborate security program and a loyalty program. ~~Most of this, says the Governor, has been "ridiculed and sabotaged" by Republicans. He charges that political demagogues are hunting for votes more than they are hunting Communists.~~

The General, in Oregon, charges that the "mess in Washington" is hurting us abroad. He says every SCANDAL is really a betrayal of our country. He says: "When we give Communists this ammunition to call us crooked and dirty in high places, it is exactly the same as giving them a secret weapon. It also lowers our prestige with our allies, and robs us of pride in our government.. and gives the Communists an effective aid in the struggle for men's minds." ~~The General calls on Democrats to cleanse themselves of mutual hatred... join his "Grand Crusade" against what he calls "the mental yokes of the Truman administration."~~

Mr. Truman, in Colorado, said today he made a "very serious mistake" in 1945 when he said Eisenhower was qualified to be president. Truman says: Eisenhower --since his nomination-- has betrayed every principle of foreign policy and national defense that he thought Eisenhower believed in. Truman says this has been a bad experience for him. He charges that the General is trying to win votes by playing on our casualties in Korea..

(LED)

Four Republican Senators following up the President's campaign train, charged in Utah today: that the President offers the nation only "wheel chairs and wooden legs, plus permanent lodgings in psychiatric hospitals." This is in answer to the Truman statement that an Eisenhower victory would mean that "the devil would take an awful lot of young people just getting started in life."

In Cincinnati, John L. Lewis told the United Mine Workers convention that it is "beyond his comprehension" how anyone with a wife and child[redacted] to support could endorse Senator Taft or.. as he put it.."any man whom Taft would wish to lead around with a collar around his neck." [redacted]

Senator TAFT speaking in Chicago suburbs.. said those who have accused Eisenhower of surrendering to Taft principles cannot point out one instance in which Eisenhower has changed his views. Taft said the whole purpose of his New York meeting with the General was to dispel fears that Eisenhower might have New Deal LEANINGS... some of his followers WERE WORRIED because a good many "New Deal" newspapers supported Eisenhower for the Nomination at Chicago.

[redacted]

Beria..the head of the secret police..

In Moscow today, [redacted] charged that the United States is "again" pushing people toward "the abyss of a world war." As the 15-hundred delegates to the Communist Congress cheered wildly, Beria said such a war would mean America's disaster... Soviet strength is "invincible".. The Communists approved a report [redacted] pledging [redacted] Moscow to seek peaceful collaboration with Capitalist nations. They also approved a report warning that "the Soviet army will beat them AGAIN [redacted] if they attack the Motherland."

In East Berlin, the Communists today staged a parade with 500 men identified as "air police" of the Soviet zone.. the first public display of the long-rumored new Communist Luftwaffe. Another 4-thousand soldiers, hailed as "the peoples army" [redacted] also paraded.

B.P. &

The Dodgers lost another World Series. (And it's reliably reported that there's "no joy in Brooklyn tonite.) But perhaps these lines by Walt Whitman will offer some encouragement:"Whether I come to my own today, or in ten thousand, or ten million years, I can cheerfully take it now, or with equal cheerfulness, I can wait." Brooklyn translation: "Wait 'till next year."
Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

~~Monday~~ TUES., October 7, 1952
7:45 to 8:00 p.m.

MURROW: And again we have our friend and baseball reporter, Branch Rickey. Mr. Rickey, as you were saying about this time last night - the Dodgers could win it. What happened? Do you blame the umpires?

RICKEY: No Ed, of course I don't blame the umpires. But there's an observation to be made at that point. The umpires are selected by the Commissioner but they are selected as employees of the American and National League, equally from each league. And of course there has been criticism over a period of years that the umpires might be influenced in their decisions because they would want the American or the National League to win, depending upon their identification. I think it would be better if the Commissioner did hire all the umpires so long as we have a World Series between the American and National League, for obvious reasons. But the singular thing about this series - and it was noticeable and talked about. The decisions that were questionable, objected to, were almost completely made by the umpire against the team in theleague in which he works. Now, that was something. Of course they were not leaning backwards. It was splendid umpiring by and large, as it always is in the World Series. These men are honest men. There's a marvelous thing, you know, in the history of umpires throughout all baseball, there's never been a single man charged with crookedness. Now, that's remarkable. That's in answer to your question about umpires. You bring that up. I dismiss it. That hasn't anything to do with - we lost a great world series. I'm a National Leaguer, of course I am - but particularly I was for Brooklyn. I had a fondness for these boys. I know them all and have known them for years and I did want them to win, but (?) beat us and men like (?). But more particularly, this series goes down for three or four outstanding things. First, it's a series that proves what has been said very many times. That two great pitchers can win a world series - win any short series -

MURROW: That's Reynolds and Rasche -

RICKEY: Reynolds and Rasche - and they did a job, and I don't know how many times they appeared. It seemed to me that every time I looked out, one or the other of them was in the game and they are really great pitchers. Then there was another thing about this series. I don't believe that history books will ever record that any series had so many - was so completely pregnant with the might-have-beens, the ought-to-have-beens. It had it every day, where one slight change of a detail, as early as the first inning could have affected the outcome of a game. The play of chance, you see, was in it, which I decry very much. I don't like to give much room to it, but it leads me to another point and that is, that the orthodox baseball men - the old timers as well as the modern fellows - will find occasion to discuss the tactics and the strategy of the Brooklyn management. There isn't any question about it - right or wrong - that will be a matter of discussion for many years to come. Then the question would be to pick out the hero - the star - of this series, and that is difficult. Matta(?) was great - these two pitchers were great - Cox was magnificent - Peewee Reese was just about as good as a human could be. It would be much easier for me to find the goats, as we call them. Robinson, with three hits out of 25 times at bat - that great player - a marvelous gentleman and a competitor deluxe. You can't imagine him going seven games with a contribution of that sort. And Hodges - the home run hitter - the great Hodges of a former day - without a single hit in the seven games. Those are things we could point out on the adverse side. The pitching on both sides was fairly good all the way through. I'd like to tell you - would you like to have me tell you what I think was the most startling play in today's game and decided the world series?

MURROW: By all means.

RICKEY: Well, it was that - the youngster - Martin - that second base for the Yankees, with the bases full and a little popfly beside the pitcher's box. Well, it seemed to me that the first baseman had voluntarily elected to be a spectator, and this Martin came from a deep position, frantically running - I never saw anybody run harder and faster. His hat went off and he made a half dive and caught that popfly in front of the pitcher's box and to the right, and if he had dropped it, two runs were across and the World Series was over - and he caught it. It was a startling play - alertness. A general desire to win at any cost - I'll be where I'm not needed, that was his slogan - and he was needed. And then there was another startling play that I don't think anybody noticed and that was in the fourth inning - the bases were full - Hodges at bat - and he hit the only ball in the series that was meaningful - a line drive to the left fielder. Robinson tagged up at second base and ran down a ways and stopped, and when he saw the trajectory of the ball from the left fielder why he knew that he had no chance and when it was high, he ran to third. That was a startling play.

MURROW: Thank you very, very much Branch Rickey.....

-30-

trans.SSpence

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - OCTOBER 7, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists are again attacking in Korea...along 100 miles of the 155-mile front. They are using an estimated 12-thousand troops...following through on last night's attack. In their first drive the enemy over-ran seven of our hill positions. They launched about 35 separate attacks...13 of them against the Marines. We counter-attacked today against enemy gains in the hills guarding Chorwon...on the road to Seoul. Allied officers at the front call it a limited attack...the heaviest enemy drive in a year. It appears that we had at least three days warning that it was coming and were in position to blunt it.

Defense Secretary Lovett says the South Koreans now have more than 400 thousand soldiers...50 per cent more than we have in Korea.. Reporters without mentioning Eisenhower's name asked him about the General's recent proposal to eventually have South Koreans replace American troops at the front... let Asians fight Asians...if there must be a war in Korea. Secretary Lovett had this to say: "as the number of South Korean troops increases, it will strengthen the allied forces and permit greater rotation, if not relief, of United Nations troops. We are doing all we can safely do, at the moment, in training the South Koreans and putting more of them into the war. As time goes on we will get more troops from South Korea. Secretary Lovett says he would not be competent to say whether we will get additional troops from other U.N. nations.

On the political scene today, both Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower charged that the other fellow's party is helping the Communists and hurting our allies.

Stevenson, in Michigan, said Eisenhower's recent statement that we are in a war economy...enjoying a war prosperity...is the sort of thing one expects from "irresponsibles and isolationists"...but not from a man "who was formerly looked on as an understanding leader in world affairs." Stevenson says this gives comfort to the Russians because they are shouting to the world that our whole defense program is not to insure peace but to prevent a depression at home. Stevenson says Eisenhower could do "no greater disservice" to America than this remark. And tonight in Detroit, he will ask: "Is Eisenhower seriously trying to root out Communists in Washington or is he deliberately scaring people to get votes?" The Governor says the General implies that the government deliberately conceals Communists in Washington, but offers only silence about a possible cure. He says the Democrats have fought Communism for 20 years: by licking the Depression, and Communism's hope for a revolution here...by strengthening the free people of the world in their fight against Communism...by instituting an elaborate security program and a loyalty program.

The General, in Oregon, charges that the "mess in Washington" is hurting us abroad. He says every scandal is really a betrayal of our country. He says: "When we give Communists this ammunition to call us crooked and dirty in high places, it is exactly the same as giving them a secret weapon. It also lowers our prestige with our allies, and robs us of pride in our government... and gives the Communists an effective aid in the struggle for men's minds."

Mr. Truman, in Colorado, said today he made a "very serious mistake" in 1945 when he said Eisenhower was qualified to be president. Truman says: "Eisenhower since his nomination has betrayed every principle of foreign policy, and national defense that he thought Eisenhower believe in. Truman says this has been a bad experience for him. He charges that the General is trying to win votes by playing on our casualties in Korea.

Four Republican Senators following up the President's campaign train, charged in Utah today that the President offers the nation only "wheel chairs and wooden legs, plus permanent lodgings in psychiatric hospitals." This is in answer to the Truman statement that an Eisenhower victory would mean that "the devil would take an awful lot of young people just getting started in life."

In Cincinnati, John L. Lewis told the United Mine Workers convention that it is "beyond his comprehension" how anyone with a wife and child to support could endorse Senator Taft or...as he put it..." any man whom Taft would wish to lead around with a collar around his neck."

Senator Taft speaking in Chicago suburbs...said those who have accused Eisenhower of surrendering to Taft principles cannot point out one instance in which Eisenhower has changed his views. Taft said the whole purpose of his New York meeting with the General was to dispel fears that Eisenhower might have New Deal leanings...some of his followers were worried because a good many New Deal newspapers supported Eisenhower for the Nomination at Chicago.

Beria...the head of the secret police...in Moscow today, charged that the United States is "again" pushing people toward "the abyss of a world war." As the 15-hundred delegates to the Communist Congress cheered wildly, Beria said such a war would mean America's disaster...Soviet strength is "invincible"...The Communists approved a report pledging Moscow to seek peaceful collaboration with Capitalist nations. They also approved a report warning that "the Soviet army will beat them again if they attack the Motherland."

In East Berlin, the Communists today staged a parade with 500 men identified as "air police" of the Soviet zone...the first public display of the long-rumored new Communist Luftwaffe. Another 4-thousand soldiers, hailed as "the peoples army" also paraded.

And again we have our friend and baseball reporter, Branch Rickey. Mr. Rickey, as you were saying about this time last night - the Dodgers could win it. What happened? Do you blame the umpires?

RICKEY: No, Ed, of course I don't blame the umpires. But there's an observation to be made at that point. The umpires are selected by the Commissioner but they are selected as employees of the American and National League, equally from each league. And of course there has been criticism over a period of years that the umpires might be influenced in their decisions because they would want the American or the National League to win, depending upon their identification. I think it would be better if the Commissioner did hire all the umpires so long as we have a World Series between the American and National League, for obvious reasons. But the singular thing about this series - and it was noticeable and talked about. The decisions that were questionable, objected to, were almost completely made by the umpire against the team in the league in which he works. Now, that was something. Of course they were not leaning backwards. It was splendid umpiring by and large, as it always is in the World Series. These men are honest men. There's a marvelous thing, you know, in the history of umpires throughout all baseball, there's never been a single man charged with crookedness. Now, that's remarkable. That's in answer to your question about umpires. You bring that up. I dismiss it. That hasn't anything to do with - we lost a great world series. I'm a National Leaguer, of course I am - but particularly I was for Brooklyn. I had a fondness for these boys. I know them all and have known them for years and I did want them to win. But more particularly, this series does down for three or four outstanding things. First, it's a series that proves what has been said very many times. That two great pitchers can win a world series - win any short series -

MURROW: That's Reynolds and Rasche -

RICKEY: Reynolds and Rasche - and they did a job, and I don't know how many times they appeared. It seemed to me that every time I looked out, one or the other of them was in the game and they are really great pitchers. Then there was another thing about this series. I don't believe that history books will ever record that any series had so many - was so completely pregnant with the might-have-beens, the ought-to-have-beens. It had it every day, where one slight change of a detail, as early as the first inning could have affected the outcome of a game. The play of chance, you see, was in it, which I decry very much. I don't like to give much room to it, but it leads me to another point and that is, that the orthodox baseball men - the old timers as well as the modern fellows - will find occasion to discuss the factics and the strategy of the Brooklyn management. There isn't any question about it - right or wrong - that will be a matter of discussion for many years to come. Then the question would be to pick out the hero - the star - of this series, and that is difficult. Mantle was great - these two pitchers were great - Cox was magnificent - Peewee Reese was just about as good as a human could be. It would be much easier for me to find the goats, as we call them. Robinson, with three hits out of 25 times at bat - that great player - a marvelous gentleman and a competitor deluxe. You can't imagine him going seven games with a contribution of that sort. And Hodges - the home run hitter - the great Hodges of a former day - without a single hit in the seven games. Those are things we could point out on the adverse side. The pitching on both sides was fairly good all the way through. I'd like to tell you - would you like to have me tell you what I think was the most startling play in today's game and decided the world series?

MURROW: By all means.

RICKEY: Well, it was that - the youngstor - Martin - that second base for the Yankees, with the bases full and a little popfly beside the pitcher's box. Well, it seemed to me that the first baseman had voluntarily elected to be a spectator, and this Martin came from a deep position, frantically running - I never saw anybody run harder and faster. His hat went off and he made a half dive and caught that popfly in front of the pitcher's box and to the right, and if he had dropped it, two runs were across and the World Series was over - and he caught it. It was a startling play - alertness. A general desire to win at any cost - I'll be where I'm not needed, that was his slogan - and he was needed. And then there was another startling play that I don't think anybody noticed and that was in the fourth inning - the bases were full - Hodges at bat - and he hit the only ball in the series that was meaningful - a line drive to the left fielder. Robinson tagged up at second base and ran down a ways and stopped, and when he saw the trajectory of the ball from the left fielder why he knew that he had no chance and when it was high, he ran to third. That was a startling play.

MURROW: Thank you very, very much Branch Rickey...This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Dodgers lost another World Series. And it's reliably reported that there's "no joy in Brooklyn tonite.) But perhaps these lines by Walt Whitman will offer some encouragement: "Whether I come to my own today, or in ten thousand or ten million years, I can cheerfully take it now or with equal cheerfulness, I can wait." Brooklyn translation: "Wait 'till next year."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed Oct. 8, 1952

This is the news:

South Korean troops today fought back to the top of the important "White Horse hill," on the central front. It was the seventh time in three days that they've reached the summit. (only to be driven off in the past.) Our fighter-bombers are attacking the Chinese Communists in this area... and they're meeting the heaviest anti-aircraft fire they've ever experienced on close support missions. Both sides are using a great deal of artillery. Reporters at the front say both sides are pouring "thousands of troops into the battle.. regiments of artillery..dozens of tanks. General Van Fleet says the enemy attack has been halted; they have not penetrated any of our main battle positions. An indication of the stepped-up fighting along the whole Korean front comes from the Pentagon: (the report that we suffered 890 casualties last week. The total now is 120, 269.)

Some officers at the front believe that the enemy is attempting to bring military pressure to bear on us in the hope of having his way at the armistice talks. But last night we "postponed indefinitely" these talks at Panmunjom.

Secretary of State Acheson says this does not mean that the talks have ended. He says it does not represent any loss of hope for an eventual armistice. But the Secretary says our negotiators will not attend the conference "merely to be subjected to Communist abuse, and propaganda harrangues." We are ready to resume negotiations as soon as the enemy accepts our "fair and reasonable proposals" for an agreement..or until the enemy makes a constructive offer on his own. Secretary Acheson calls this "indefinite postponment" an "affirmative step"; to make the Communists realize that we are standing firm.. they they cannot toy with the world's hope for peace.. that we will never abandon our stand against the forcible repatriation of prisoners that we hold. How long will this recess last? The Secretary says that's up the the enemy.

Trygvie Lie, the secretary general of the United Nations, tonight calls for an armistice along the present Korean battle line... and for more U.N. members to contribute to the war in Korea. [redacted]

General Eisenhower also is giving some new attention to the war in Korea. My colleague Edward P. Morgan is on the campaign train, following the candidate. Eisenhower makes a major speech in San Fransisco tonight. Ed, what's the highlight of that speech?

(5 secon pause

runs 2;30 return cue

"or so this particular Republican official's reasoning runs."

Governor Stevenson was busy campaigning in Wisconsin today... Bill Downs has been following the Stevenson caravan. What do you have to report tonight, Bill?

(runs 2;30

return cue: Now back to ERM)

While the two candidates were making their speeches, (the President and Senator Taft spoke from the same platform.. two hours apart.. at Shenandoah, Iowa.) Mr. Truman said: Eisenhower's farm views are an unbeleivable hode-pogde of genaralities, platitudes, half-truths, and plain misrepresentations. He said Eisenhower is "downright silly" when he accuses the Democrats of "enslaving the farmer." He said the General speaks either in ignorance or deceit.. (And the Pres. added— it just goes to show that the General does not know what's been going on in the United States during the 40 years he spent in the army.) Later, Senator Taft charged that the President is a master of the art of demagoguery. He said Truman brings forward so many misrepresentations, that while you're answering one, three others have been made. He said Truman's campaign technique is the strategy of lying... he drags in bogey men like "Wall Street lobbies." Taft said that from Truman's speech one would think the New Deal had invented agriculture, and invented prosperity.

Later, at Jefferson City, Missouri, (the President charged that Eisenhower in 1949, while president of Columbia University, had lent his prestige to Republican Congressmen, who defeated a bill for federal aid to education.

5

In London tonight, Scotland Yard is still adjusting the casualty toll in the railroad wreck at Harrow, 10 miles northwest of London. For a time this afternoon, we were told that 116 had been killed... now the figure has been revised. At last report the list of dead numbered 85.. with 170 persons hospitalized. The accident occurred at 8 a.m. London time. A suburban train was standing still at the station..loaded with 600 passengers. An express came through Harrow, hit the suburban train's rear.. rammed through its wooden coaches. This accident blocked both main lines. Seconds later another express train came through Harrow, rammed the wreckage. Its two locomotives jumped the track plunged ONTO a platform full of waiting passengers. The wreckage of all three trains reached 55 feet into the air.. knocked out part of an over-head crosswalk... plunged some pedestrians into the wreck below.

The State Department has now told Russia that Ambassador Kennan was right in his criticism of restrictions on Americans in Moscow. The Russians demanded Kennan's recall as a result of these remarks. We say that the Russians have "grossly violated the traditions and customs in international intercourse developed over generations". We reject their demand as invalid. But Kennan will not return to Moscow.. (he's now in Germany.) And the State Department makes no note of any retaliation.

The State Department also informs us that an American diplomat in Czechoslvakia has again been permitted to see William Otis, the American reporter who has been in prison since April of 1951. Otis is described as being in about the same physical and mental condition as when Ambassador Briggs visited him last April.

Over western Germany today, two Soviet jets..Migs.. fired at an unarmed American hospital plane flying along the corridor from Berlin to Frankfort. None of the Russia bullets hit our plane...its nurse and five crew members. General Mathewson, the Berlin commandant has protested this "hostile and unfriendly act."

7

Off Japan, American search planes have found an oil spot where a B-29 Superfort was last heard from two days ago. There is a suggestion that the plane and its 8 crewmen might have been shot down by the Russians. The air force says its radar scopes showed an unidentified, non-allied plane approaching the Superfort just before she made her last distress call. The "accident" occurred just off the Kuriles Islands.

E

SDFD WEXI BS 166 OK GA

NY 1-3353 CLG COLLECT

OK GA

CBS1891

NY OCT 8,1952

ED MURROW

NEWSROOM

WEEI

THE CAMPAIGN IS WARMING UP. AND AS IT MOVES INTO THE CLOSING WEEKS, BOTH CANDIDATES HAVE APPARENTLY DECIDED TO STOP SPARRING AND START SLUGGING. WE HAVE NOT LACKED FOR CHARGES AND CRITICISM. BUT I,M REMINDED OF SOMETHING JAMES HUNEKER ONCE SAID. "NO CRITIC HAS OVER SETTLED ANYTHING." BOTH MEN MIGHT KEEP IN MIND THIS OBSERVATION BY MARK TWAIN." THE PUBLIC IS THE ONLY CRITIC WHOSE OPINION IS WORTH ANYTHING AT ALL."

AARON

Good night & good luck -

Downs -
Howard Smith -

CBS C 114

NY OCT 8, 1952222222222222222222222222222222222222222222222222222

SEC

PLS

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wed. ~~Tuesday~~, October 8, 1952
7:45 to 8:00 p.m.

MURROW: My colleague, Edward P. Morgan, is on the campaign train following the candidate. Eisenhower makes a major speech in San Francisco tonight. Ed, what's the highlight of that speech?

MORGAN: ...told of American casualties in Korea unquote. That's a sobering order, but particularly with the news from Korea what it is today, it becomes perhaps the most imposing pledge of the whole Republican campaign. The General doesn't spell out yet how he would achieve this objective except to repeat an earlier suggestion that more South Koreans should be trained and armed to replace Americans at the front. But there is more than this to his speech, which may well be the most carefully thought out statement he has yet made on foreign policy. First, Eisenhower denies President Truman's accusation that as Army Chief of Staff he had a decisive responsibility in ruling Korea outside our defense perimeter, a decision which conceivably invited the conflict there. Incidentally, he refers to the President as the always right and never wrong chief of the party now in power. Conceding that the joint chiefs did make a military appraisal along that line, he emphasizes that the State Department must take the responsibility for basis a political decision on it and then making it public surprisingly, Eisenhower said, to a potential enemy. But now that the cold war and its hot counterparts are here, the General says we must try to win out with a unified and coherent foreign policy which, incidentally, he contends we have not got now. Eisenhower adds we shouldn't be afraid of the term psychological warfare because it contains a five dollar five syllable word. He proposes to win the struggle for men's minds with concerted action, in which all responsible agencies are synchronized to one overall strategy. As for the strategy of the General's own presidential campaign, he's running more against the Truman record still than the Stevenson program. The prevailing atmosphere is still one of confidence but there are air pockets in it. One of California's most responsible Republican officials indicates to this reporter, the Democrats may succeed in re-opening the Nixon case. When Senator Nixon challenged Governor Stevenson to reveal the details of his fund, Stevenson and Senator Sparkman went further and published their income tax returns. If Nixon and the General don't now match that move, it will be their turn to face pressurized allegations such as Nixon first applied to Stevenson, raising the question of whether there was anything to hide, or so this particular Republican official's information and reasoning run.

MURROW: And Governor Stevenson was busy campaigning in Wisconsin today. Bill Downs has been following the Stevenson caravan. What do you have to report tonight, Bill?

DOWNS: Well Ed, we just this moment got into the studio and our thoughts are a little confused but Howard Smith is sitting across the table here from me. We've both been watching this, what looks to me, like the most successful tour yet of the Eisenhower - of the Stevenson campaign. Howard, how did it look to you?

SMITH: Well, I watched General Eisenhower come into Cincinnati, Bill, and I think that was one of his biggest receptions and I think the crowd on the streets here in Milwaukee has favorably compared with that. For five or ten miles coming in, the streets were thickly lined with people holding up many Stevenson posters. The local Democratic organization has apparently at last done a job of organizing this thrust into McCarthy-land. Most of the rest of the day the Governor spent in solid Republican territory, but he got fairly respectable crowds there too. He won over some of his enemies, I think, not perhaps their votes but anyhow their good humors by cracking jokes. At one point he said that he sympathized with them - that he himself had once been half Democrat and half Republican but then he had learned to read.

DOWNS: Well, a little later tonight, Ed, the Governor is going to make a very important speech here in Milwaukee at the Milwaukee Arena, and in this speech he is going to say that we have as yet no square statement from the Republican candidate on the major issues that face this country. He says that the political hucksters of the old guard Republicanism now have a nice new fancy khaki colored package; they have an honored name and a trick slogan; they have nothing in the world to worry about, he says, if they can just get the American people to buy that package without opening it. He says well, they didn't like the New Deal, they don't like the Fair Deal but, he says, we Democrats do not like the fast deal. He says that the General's speeches of the past are making it increasingly clear that the Republican signals are now being called by the substitute quarterback from Ohio, Senator Taft, and he says I believe it's the only time in history that a candidate for the presidency lost the nomination but won the nominee. Incidentally, he goes on and calls the Grand Old Party the Gloomy Old Product, the Grand Old Political Hokum and Grand Old Poppycock. He does mention Communism. He says he has not heard of anyone running on a more Communists in Government ticket and he attacks General Eisenhower again for changing his mind on foreign policy. He says he now puts his arm around Senator Jenner who called General Marshall a willing front for traitors and here in Milwaukee we are told he deleted a defense of General Marshall from his text when Senator McCarthy requested it. It looks like it's going to get tougher and tougher the next 27 days.

And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Thank you Bill Downs and Howard Smith.

trans.SSpence

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY - OCTOBER 8, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

South Korean troops today fought back to the top of the important "White Horse Hill," on the central front. It was the seventh time in three days that they've reached the summit..(only to be driven off in the past.) Our fighter-bombers are attacking the Chinese Communists in this area...and they're meeting the heaviest anti-aircraft fire they've ever experienced on close support missions. Both sides are using a great deal of artillery. Reporters at the front say both sides are pouring thousands of troops into the battle...regiments of artillery... dozens of tanks. General Van Fleet says the enemy attack has been halted; they have not penetrated any of our main battle positions. An indication of the stepped-up fighting along the whole Korean front comes from the Pentagon: (the report that we suffered 890 casualties last week. The total now is 120,269.

Some officers at the front believe that the enemy is attempting to bring military pressure to bear on us in the hope of having his way at the armistice talks. But last night we "postponed indefinitely" these talks at Panmunjom.

Secretary of State Acheson says this does not mean that the talks have ended. He says it does not represent any loss of hope for an eventual armistice. But the Secretary says our negotiators will not attend the conference "merely to be subjected to Communist abuse and propaganda harrangues." We are ready to resume negotiations as soon as the enemy accepts our "fair and reasonable proposals" for an agreement...or until the enemy makes a constructive offer on his own. Secretary Acheson calls this "indefinite postponment" an "affirmative step" to make the Communists realize that we are standing firm...they cannot toy with the world's hope for peace...that we will never abandon our stand against the forcible repatriation of prisoners that we hold. How long will this recess last? The Secretary says that's up to the enemy.

Trygvie Lie, the Secretary General of the United Nations, tonight calls for an armistice along the present Korean battle line...and for more U.N. members to contribute to the war in Korea.

General Eisenhower also is giving some new attention to the war in Korea. My colleague Edward P. Morgan is on the campaign train, following the candidate. Eisenhower makes a major speech in San Francisco tonight. Ed, what's the highlight of that speech?

MORGAN: ...told of American casualties in Korea unquote. That's a sobering order, but particularly with the news from Korea what it is today, it becomes perhaps the most imposing pledge of the whole Republican campaign. The General doesn't spell out yet how he would achieve this objective except to repeat an earlier suggestion that more South Koreans should be trained and armed to replace Americans at the front. But there is more than this to his speech, which may well be the most carefully thought out statement he has yet made on foreign policy. First, Eisenhower denies President Truman's accusation that as Army Chief of Staff he had a decisive responsibility in ruling Korea outside our defense perimeter, a decision which conceivably invited the conflict there. Incidentally, he refers to the President as the always right and never wrong chief of the party now in power. Conceding that the joint chiefs did make a military appraisal along that line, he emphasizes that the State Department must take the responsibility for basis a political decision on it and then making it public surprisingly, Eisenhower said, to a potential enemy. But now that the cold war and its hot counterparts are here, the General says we must try to win out with a unified and coherent foreign policy which, incidentally, he contends we have not got now. Eisenhower adds we shouldn't be afraid of the term psychological warfare because it contains a five-dollar five-syllable word. He proposes to win the struggle for men's minds with concerted action, in which all responsible agencies are synchronized to one overall strategy. As for the strategy of the General's own presidential campaign, he's running more against the Truman record still than the Stevenson program. The prevailing atmosphere is still one of confidence but there are air pockets in it. One of California's most responsible Republican officials indicates to this reporter, the Democrats may succeed in re-opening the Nixon case. When Senator Nixon challenged Governor Stevenson to reveal the details of his fund, Stevenson and Senator Sparkman went further and published their income tax returns. If Nixon and the General don't now match that move, it will be their turn to face pressurized allegations such as Nixon first applied to Stevenson, raising the question of whether there was anything to hide, or so this particular Republican official's information and reasoning run.

MURROW: And Governor Stevenson was busy campaigning in Wisconsin today. Bill Downs has been following the Stevenson caravan. What do you have to report tonight, Bill?

DOWN: Well Ed, we just this moment got into the studio and our thoughts are a little confused but Howard Smith is sitting across the table here from me. We've both been watching this, what looks to me, like the most successful tour yet of the Eisenhower campaign. Howard, how did it look to you?

SMITH: Well, I watched General Eisenhower come into Cincinnati, Bill, and I think that was one of his biggest receptions and I think the crowd on the streets here in Milwaukee has favorably compared with that. For five or ten miles coming in, the streets were thickly lined with people holding up many Stevenson posters. The local Democratic organization has apparently at last done a job of organizing this thrust into McCarthy-land. Most of the rest of the day the Governor spent in solid Republican territory, but he got fairly respectable crowds there too. He won over some of his enemies, I think, not perhaps their votes but anyhow their good humors by cracking jokes. At one point he said that he sympathized with them - that he himself had once been half Democrat and half Republican but then he had learned to read.

DOWNS: Well, a little later tonight, Ed, the Governor is going to make a very important speech here in Milwaukee at the Milwaukee Arena, and in this speech he is going to say that we have as yet no square statement from the Republican candidate on the major issues that face this country. He says that the political hucksters of the old guard Republicanism now have a nice new fancy khaki colored package; they have an honored name and a trick slogan; they have nothing in the world to worry about, he says, if they can just get the American people to buy that package without opening it. He says well, they didn't like the New Deal, they don't like the Fair Deal but, he says, we Democrats do not like the fast deal. He says that the General's speeches of the past are making it increasingly clear that the Republican signals are now being called by the substitute quarterback from Ohio, Senator Taft, and he says I believe it's the only time in history that a candidate for the presidency lost the nomination but won the nominee. Incidentally, he goes on and calls the Grant Old Party the Gloomy Old Product, the Grand Old Political Hokum and Grand Old Poppycock. He does mention Communism. He says he has not heard of anyone running on a more Communists in Government ticket and he attacks General Eisenhower again for changing his mind on foreign policy. He says he now puts his arm around Senator Jenner who called General Marshall a willing front for traitors and here in Milwaukee we are told he deleted a defense of General Marshall from his text when Senator McCarthy requested it. It looks like it's going to get tougher and tougher the next 27 days.

And now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Thank you bill Downs and Howard Smith.

While the two candidates were making their speeches, (the President and Senator Taft spoke from the same platform...two hours apart...at Shenandoah, Iowa.) Mr. Truman said: Eisenhower's farm views are an unbelievable hodgepodge of genaralities, platitudes, half-truths and plain misrepresentation. He said Eisenhower is "downright silly" when he accuses the Democrats of "enslaving the farmer." He said the General speaks either in ignorance or deceit...and the President added: it just goes to show that the General doesn't know what's been going on in the United States during the 40 years he spent in the army. Later Senator Taft charged that the President is a master of the art of demagoguery. He said Truman brings forward so many misrepresentations that while you're answering one, three others have been made. He said Truman's campaign technique is the strategy of lying...he drags in bogey men like "Wall Street lobbies." Taft said that from Truman's speech one would think the New Deal had invented agriculture and invented prosperity.

Later, at Jefferson City, Missouri, the President charged that Eisenhower in 1949, while president of Columbia University, had lent his prestige to Republican Congressmen who defeated a bill for federal aid to education.

In London tonight, Scotland Yard is still adjusting the casualty toll in the railroad wreck at Harrow, 10 miles northwest of London. For a time this afternoon, we were told that 116 had been killed...now the figure has been revised. At last report the list of dead numbered 85...with 170 persons hospitalized. The accident occurred at 8:00 A.M. London time. A suburban train was standing still at the station...loaded with 600 passengers. An express came through Harrow, hit the suburban train's rear...rammed through its wooden coaches. This accident blocked both main lines. Seconds later another express train came through Harrow, rammed the wreckage. Its two locomotives jumped the track plunged onto a platform full of waiting passengers. The wreckage of all three trains reached 55 feet into the air...knocked out part of an overhead crosswalk and plunged some pedestrians into the wreck below.

The State Department has now told Russia that Ambassador Kennan was right, in his criticism of restrictions on Americans in Moscow. The Russians demanded Kennan's recall as a result of these remarks. We say that the Russians have "grossly violated the traditions and customs in international intercourse developed over generations" We reject their demand as invalid. But Kennan will not return to Moscow...(he's now in Germany.) And the State Department makes no note of any retaliation.

The State Department also informs us that an American deplomat in Czechoslavakia has again been permitted to see William Otis, the American reporter who has been in prison since April of 1951. Otis is described as being in about the same physical and mental condition as when Ambassador Briggs visited him last April.

Over western Germany today, two Soviet jets...Migs...fired at an unarmed American hospital plane flying along the corridor from Berlin to Frankfort. None of the Russian bullets hit our plane...its nurse and five crew members. General Mathewson, the Berlin commandant has protested this "hostile and unfriendly act."

Off Japan, American search planes have found an oil spot where a B-29 Superfort was last heard from two days ago. There is a suggestion that the plane and its 8 crewmen might have been shot down by the Russians. The air force says its radar scopes showed an unidentified, non-allied plane approaching the Superfort just before she made her last distress call. The "accident" occurred just off the Kuriles Islands.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The campaign is warming up. And as it moves into the closing weeks both candidates have apparently decided to stop sparring and start slugging. We have not lacked for charges and criticism. But I'm reminded of something James Huneker once said: "No critic has ever settled anything." Both men might keep in mind this observation by Mark Twain: "The public is the only critic whose opinion is worth anything at all."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday Oct. 9

This is the news:

South Korean troops in bitter, close fighting with Chinese Communists, have again won control of White Horse Hill. I should like the review ~~some of these developments~~ This action in a few minutes.

In St. Louis tonight, Governor Stevenson will say that the Republican Old Guard is "talking nonsense", when it predicts that "a depression will come with peace." The Governor says contrary to Republican charges that our prosperity today is based on war, the defense effort is actually holding us back, on domestic production. A Democratic administration with "free and daring men" can lift our production 41 per cent, in the next ten years. #

Earlier, in Kansas City, where he was greeted by an estimated 75-thousand persons, (largest crowd of his campaign), the Governor said: we can avoid a depression if we do not substiute ~~for~~ "the old disciples of boom and bust", for the men who have fought for economic stability. #

He called the Republicans the "do-nothing, care-nothing, ~~know~~ KNOW-nothing party, which is an hour, a dollar, or an idea, too late." The Governor said that General Eisenhower's great crusade has become a great surrender to Senator Taft. He called the General the "honorary" Republican candidate for president. And in Harry Truman's Missouri, he called the President "a man of Independence, who rallied the free peoples against the moral threat of Communism and Russian imperialism.. a man who "won't take anything off anbody."

General Eisenhower, in Los Angeles tonight, will call for federal aid to help states that cannot afford to build their own school buildings. He would explore the possibility of federal laons to local private health insurance systems. He is against "socialized medicine." The General said he favors an end to racial segregation in Washington, and in every military and civil operation of the government. He calls Democratic charges that he would reduce social security.."not only false, but downright sinister." And he charged that the Administration is manned by power-hungry men, who want to dictate a way of life to the people.

The President , in Buffalo, New York, tonight, says some Republican hotheads..aided by some Democrats.. are conducting a phoney anti-Communism crusade. ..want to break down all of our Constiutional guarantees. He said this crusade could set loose forces that would tear the nation apart. And he said the job of resisting such pressure should not be turned over to a "professional military general."

The President said Democratic Senator Mc Carran of Nevada is "npt my kind of a Democrat." And he charged that the McCarran Immigration law "breathes prejudice against the foreign born: alien, and naturalized citizen alike." Earlier in the day--in Indiana and Ohio--the President spoke frequently about General Eisenhower. He said Eisenhower doesn't know much, if anything, about the issues in the campaign. He is just "brass window dressing" for Senator Taft. Eisenhower is practising the old flim-flam on the voters: promising tax cuts, and budget cuts. The President said Eisenhower now talks of eliminating waste in government. But the General didn't produce any conspicious examples of cutting waste, when he was army chief of staff. The President said the only way to find out what Eisenhower stands for, is to read Taft's speeches. Taft sticks to what he believes.. Eisenhower does not. Truman said that at Chicago, Eisenhower called Taft's supporters "theives and rustlers...now he's let Taft take over his campaign. Truman said the country needs a president you can trust.. a man of great principle, and strong convictions..not a man who says what the special interest lobbies want him to say. Harry Truman told a Cleveland audience the Republicans are squealing like stuck pigs, and saying that he has been unfair. But he doesn't think he's unfair. He says the Republicans are throwing mud at him. He doesn't mind. He has thrown back too much of it, and he knows how to handle it.

Senator Taft, campaigning in Indiana, told Republican campaign workers to "worry" about the campaign.. victory is not certain. And he said: "Don't underestimate Harry Truman. He's an expert in demagogery. What he says doesn't make sense, to anybody who knows politics, but the kind of things he says appeals to people who don't know politics." Taft said the Republicans can profit by talking about issues. And they must answer Harry Truman. The Ohio Senator paid tribute to Senator Jenner of Indiana; said he's never hesitated to speak his mind, is a strong right arm in the Senate, has helped to keep it on an even keel.

John L. Lewis told his United Mine Workers today, that the American people will need help, if Taft ever becomes president of the United States by proxy.

Republican National Chairman Summerfield says Governor Stevenson reached an all-time low in political campaigns when he said last night: "My opponent is worrying about my funnybone. I'm worrying about his backbone." Mr. Summerfield says Stevenson sat out the last war on a Washington swivel chair.. never came closer to combat than a fast set of tennis at the army-navy country club in Washington. (Stevenson was then a civilian aid to the late Navy Secretary Knox.)

Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota today offered a reply to Senator Taft's statement that no one has ever pointed out where Eisenhower changed his views to coincide with Taft's. Humphrey says Eisenhower was against a one billion dollar cut in foreign aid, now talks of a ten billion dollar budget cut. He says Eisenhower used to be for universal military training now has ruled it out for the duration of the campaign. The Senator says New Jersey labor leaders in August said that Eisenhower didn't know the difference bwteen the closed shop and the union shop; now the General like Taft, wants to continue a ban on the closed shop.

Republican Representative Judd of Minnesota, on the Eisenhower campaign train, says that when the President went to Potsdam in 1945 General Eisenhower warned him not to make any concessions to the Russians in order to get them into the war against Japan.

Republican Representative Halleck, co-chairman of the party's speakers bureau, says nine of the 23 Columbia University professors who recently criticized Senator Nixon's political fund, are listed in the files of the House un-American activities committee.

In Washington today, draft headquarters called for 47-thousand men to be drafted in December.. (the same number called up for October and November.)

House investigators heard Howard L. Doyle testify that while he was U.S. attorney for Southern Illinois--from 1945 to 1950--he earned 86-thousand dollars in outside legal fees. Mr. Doyle said this was almost double his salary. He testified that the cases he handled did not involve the government; HIS ACTION WAS entirely legal.

IN Great Britain today, Foreign Secretary Eden told the Conservative Party convention that a shift in Communist propaganda leads him to believe that the Russians are WAVERING in the face of the west's growing strength. He said: the Russians are beginning to doubt whether we can be destroyed by direct methods...they are counting on economic problems, internal rivalries, or differences of opinion, between the western powers.

At Harrow, England, 99 bodies have now been removed from the triple train wreck yesterday. Another 94 persons are still hospitalized. //

~~In Berlin, the Russians have rejected our protest over the firing of a Russian Mig on one of our hospital planes. The Russians demand, instead, that the crew of the hospital plane be punished. The Russians say the~~

Edward R. Murrow: October 9, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Both political candidates are now travelling so fast and talking so much that it can fairly be said, without I hope undue offense to either one, that they aren't really responsible for what they're saying. They have become repetitious, and are in a real sense the prisoners of their writers. An uncommon amount of time has been devoted to debating the past. This has been particularly true in the case of Korea; neither candidate can produce a formula for the future, so they argue about the past. General Eisenhower suggested yesterday that the South Koreans could put as many as three million men in the front lines. This would indeed be a remarkable achievement for a war-ravaged country, with a total population of about twenty-one million. We in this country have managed to get about 3-million,635th men under arms, and only a tiny fraction of those are in the front lines.

In the field of psychological warfare the writers of one or the other of the candidates might spare a few lines for what's happening in Korea now. The Republic of Korea Ninth Division at last report was holding the crest of White Horse Hill on the western sector of the line. It's the fourth night of hard fighting. The crest of that hill has changed hands more than a dozen times since the Chinese launched their attack on Monday night. At last report the fighting was at grenade and bayonet distance, under a full moon and aerial flares. An American officer estimates that the South Koreans have cut an entire Chinese division of eight thousand men to pieces, and are now fighting five thousand replacements from a second division. An American major is quoted as saying of the South Koreans that: "These little guys are unbelievable." Major General Kim Chong Oh, commanding the South Korea division says: "We will hold our front at all costs."

The enemy generally launches his attacks against South Korean units. This time they are holding, (as they have before.) In the early days of the war they broke and ran when they had only muskets to face tanks. American troops did the same.

South Korean casualties have been heavier than ours.

To judge by the political speeches, South Korea is a wasteland, inhabited only by American troops, and the important issue is who really got us into the whole thing. I was under the impression that it was the open aggression of the North Koreans and the Chinese, backed by the Russians. What considerations caused them to undertake this desperate venture I do not know, (and neither do the politicians.)

Soldiers don't have much respect for politicians, but a little recognition by the two candidates of what is happening now in Korea probably wouldn't do any harm to the morale of the South Koreans. They are merely dying in defense of their own country and their own homes. This is an undertaking in which we and our allies agreed to help them. They have helped themselves mightily. And unless we plan now to desert them, a little recognition of the present, by the candidates, might cause the South Koreans to think that they are something more than a convenient and often contrived campaign issue.

Comm.

The war in Korea is a very real war. And even in a political year there is ~~nothing~~ not much to be gained in digging up the past. The Roman, Marcus Aurelius once warned:"It is only this present - a moment of time - that man lives." And no one knows this better than the South Koreans, who doubtless agree with another Roman, Ovid, who said:" There is nothing in words. Believe only what is before your eyes."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY - OCTOBER 9, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M. EST

This is the news:

South Korean troops in bitter, close fighting with Chinese Communists, have again won control of White Horse Hill. I should like to review this action in a few minutes.

In St. Louis tonight, Governor Stevenson will say that the Republican Old Guard is "talking nonsense" when it predicts that "a depression will come with peace." The Governor says contrary to Republican charges that our prosperity today is based on war, the defense effort is actually holding us back on domestic production. A Democratic administration with "free and daring men" can lift our production 41 per cent in the next ten years.

Earlier in Kansas City where he was greeted by an estimated 75-thousand persons (largest crowd of his campaign) the Governor said: "We can avoid a depression if we do not substitute 'the old disciples of boom and bust' for the men who have fought for economic stability." He called the Republicans the "do-nothing, know-nothing party, which is an hour, a dollar, or an idea too late." The Governor said that General Eisenhower's great crusade has become a great surrender to Senator Taft. He called the General the "honorary" Republican candidate for president. And in Harry Truman's Missouri, he called the President "a man of independence, who rallied the free peoples against the moral threat of Communism and Russian imperialism...a man who "won't take anything off anybody."

General Eisenhower, in Los Angeles tonight, will call for federal aid to help states that cannot afford to build their own school buildings. He would explore the possibility of federal loans to local private health insurance systems. He is against "socialized medicine." The General said he favors an end to racial segregation in Washington, and in every military and civil operation of the government. He calls Democratic charges that he would reduce social security.....

"not only false, but downright sinister." And he charged that the Administration is manned by power-hungry men who want to dictate a way of life to the people.

The President, in Buffalo, New York, tonight, says some Republican hot-heads...aided by some Democrats...are conducting a phoney anti-Communism crusade... want to break down all of our Constitutional guarantees. He said this crusade could set loose forces that would tear the nation apart. And he said the job of resisting such pressure should not be turned over to a "professional military general."

The President said Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada is "not my kind of a Democrat." And he charged that the McCarran Immigration law "breathes prejudice against the foreign born: alien, and naturalized citizen alike." Earlier in the day---in Indiana and Ohio---the President spoke frequently about General Eisenhower. He said Eisenhower doesn't know much, if anything, about the issues in the campaign. He is just "brass window dressing" for Senator Taft. Eisenhower is practising the old flim-flam on the voters: promising tax cuts and budget cuts. The President said Eisenhower now talks of eliminating waste in government. But the General didn't produce any conspicious examples of cutting waste when he was army chief of staff. The President said the only way to find out what Eisenhower stands for is to read Taft's speeches. Taft sticks to what he believes...Eisenhower does not. Truman said that at Chicago, Eisenhower called supporters "thieves and rustlers"...now he's let Taft take over his campaign. Truman said the country needs a president you can trust...a man of great principle and strong convictions...not a man who says what the special interest lobbies want him to say. Harry Truman told a Cleveland audience the Republicans are squealing like stuck pigs and saying that he has been unfair. But he doesn't think he's unfair. He says the Republicans are throwing mud at him. He doesn't mind. He has thrown back too much of it, and he knows how to handle it.

Senator Taft, campaigning in Indiana, told Republican campaign workers to "worry" about the campaign...victory is not certain. And he said: "Don't understimate Harry Truman. He's an expert in demagogery. What he says doesn't make sense to anybody who knows politics, but the kind of things he says appeals to people who don't know politics." Taft said the Republicans can profit by talking about issues. And they must answer Harry Truman. The Ohio Senator paid tribute to Senator Jenner of Indiana; said he's never hesitated to speak his mind, is a strong right arm in the Senate, has helped to keep it on an even keel.

John L. Lewis told his United Mine Workers today that the American people will need help if Taft ever becomes president of the United States by proxy.

Republican National Chairman Summerfield says Governor Stevenson reached an all-time low in political campaigns when he said last night: "My opponent is worrying about my funnybond. I'm worrying about his backbone." Mr. Summerfield says Stevenson sat out the last war on a Washington swivel chair...never came closer to combat than a fast set of tennis at the army-navy country club in Washington. Stevenson was then a civilian aid to the late Navy Secretary Knox.

Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota today offered a reply to Senator Taft's statement that no one has ever pointed out where Eisenhower changed his views to coincide with Taft's. Humphrey says Eisenhower was against a one billion dollar cut in foreign aid, now talks of a ten billion dollar budget cut. He says Eisenhower used to be for universal military training now has ruled it out for the duration of the campaign. The Senator says New Jersey labor leaders in August said that Eisenhower didn't know the difference between the closed shop and the union shop; now the General, like Taft, wants to continue a ban on the closed shop.

Republican Representative Judd of Minnesota, on the Eisenhower campaign train, says that when the President went to Potsdam in 1945 General Eisenhower warned him not to make any concessions to the Russians in order to get them into the war against Japan.

Republican Representative Halleck, co-chairman of the party's speakers bureau, says nine of the 23 Columbia University professors who recently criticized Senator Nixon's political fund, are listed in the files of the House of un-American Activities Committee.

In Washington today, draft headquarters called for 47-thousand men to be drafted in December...(the same number called up for October and November.)

House investigators heard Howard L. Doyle testify that while he was U.S. attorney for Southern Illinois - from 1945 to 1950 - he earned 86-thousand dollars in outside legal fees. Mr. Doyle said this was almost double his salary. He testified that the cases he handled did not involve the government; his action was entirely legal.

In Great Britain today, Foreign Secretary Eden told the Conservative Party convention that a shift in Communist propaganda leads him to believe that the Russians are wavering in the face of the west's growing strength. He said: the Russians are beginning to doubt whether we can be destroyed by direct methods.. they are counting on economic problems, internal rivalries or differences of opinion between the western powers.

At Harrow, England, 99 bodies have now been removed from the triple train wreck yesterday. Another 94 persons are still hospitalized.

Both political candidates are now travelling so fast and talking so much that it can fairly be said, without I hope undue offense to either one, that they aren't really responsible for what they're saying. They have become repetitious, and are in a real sense the prisoners of their writers. An uncommon amount of time has been devoted to debating the past. This has been particularly true in the case of Korea; neither candidate can produce a formula for the future, so they argue about the past. General Eisenhower suggested yesterday that the South Koreans could put as many as three million men in the front lines. This would indeed be a remarkable achievement, for a war-ravaged country, with a total population of about twenty-one million. We in this country have managed to get about 3-million 635 men under arms, and only a tiny fraction of those are in the front lines.

In the field of psychological warfare the writers of one or the other of the candidates might spare a few lines for what's happening in Korea now. The Republic of Korea Ninth Division at last report was holding the crest of White Horse Hill on the western sector of the line. It's the fourth night of hard fighting. The crest of that hill has changed hands more than a dozen times since the Chinese launched their attack on Monday night. At last report the fighting was at grenade and bayonet distance, under a full moon and aerial flares. An American officer estimates that the South Koreans have cut an entire Chinese division of eight thousand men to pieces, and are now fighting five thousand replacements from a second division. An American major is quoted as saying of the South Koreans that: "These little guys are unbelievable." Major General Kim Chong Oh, commanding the South Korea division says: "We will hold our front at all costs."

The enemy generally launches his attacks against South Korean units. This time they are holding, (as they have before). In the early days of the war they broke and ran when they had only muskets to face tanks. American troops did the same.

South Korean casualties have been heavier than ours.

To judge by the political speeches, South Korea is a wasteland inhabited only by American troops, and the important issue is who really got us into the whole thing. I was under the impression that it was the open aggression of the North Koreans and the Chinese, backed by the Russians. What considerations caused them to undertake this desperate venture I do not know, (and neither do the politicians.)

Soldiers don't have much respect for politicians, but a little recognition by the two candidates of what is happening now in Korea probably wouldn't do any harm to the morale of the South Koreans. They are merely dying in defense of their own country and their own homes. This is an undertaking in which we and our allies agreed to help them. They have helped themselves rightily. And unless we plan now to desert them, a little recognition of the present by the candidates might cause the South Koreans to think that they are something more than a convenient and often contrived campaign issue.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The war in Korea is a very real war. And even in a political year there is not much to be gained in digging up the past. The Roman, Marcus Aurelius once warned: "It is only this present - a moment of time - that man lives." And no one knows this better than the South Koreans, who doubtless agree with another Roman, Ovid, who said: "There is nothing in words. Believe only what is before your eyes."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday October 10, 1952

This is the news:

South Korean troops have been pushed off White Horse Hill. Its changed hands for the 21st time in the four-day battle. ~~Today alone, they peak of the hill changed hands seven times.~~ At last report the men of the Ninth South Korean Division were 150 yards from the top..fighting in the ~~dar~~ dark..with knives, bayonets, fists, rifle butts. They are under heavy enemy artillery and mortar fire. (Bad weather is keeping air support to a minimum.) ~~The south Korean commander, Major General Kim Chong Oh says the Chinese commander has lost face because he has been beaten back; the Chinese General must be very angry; he will not stop until he has used up everything he has. The ROK commander says: "My division will continue to beat the Chinese back."~~

President Truman is campaigning here in New York state. As his train came south from Albany today the President said General Eisenhower is "just plain dishonest" in his campaign. "He" disqualified himself for President because of his remarks ~~mb~~ about Korea. The President says ~~they~~ THAT struck a blow at the morale of our troops and our allies. Mr. Truman says if Eisenhower cannot withstand political pressures of the campaign he'll never be able to withstand the greater pressures on a President. He says the General is not to be trusted; he never thought Eisenhower would stoop so low as to support Senator Mc Carthy, who has attacked General Marshal. Truman says that since the general left the army he hasn't even tried to master the complex problems of civil government. Eisenhower hasn't tried to talk issues.. he's been putting up a smokescreen around the country. Eisenhower wants to change the climate in Washington to see that more profits go into dividends for big corporations.

~~The President said like all good generals Eisenhower is waiting for higher authority to set his objectives; he was ready to lead the troops but he didn't know what the campaign was for. The President read statements, made in the past by Generals Eisenhower and MacArthur, indicating that a military man should not be President.~~

General Eisenhower campaigned in the southwest today. He said the free world needs our leadership to combat Communism. And we cannot lead with our present prestige...it must be restored. Dollars alone won't bring us friends and allies. We must have unity at home and the strongest kind of prestige and influence abroad.

The General announced today that he will make public a statement on his finances. Reporters on his campaign train tell us that last Sunday, in an off-the-record conference he said: he saw no reason to make such a statement.. he didn't want to dance to the other fellows tune.. he had no letters requesting such infomation. He didn't think he would do anything about it.. [redacted]. When reports to this effect were printed today, reporters asked the General for a direct answer to this question: "do you intend to make a statement , before the election, on your finances." The General replied: "Of course. If anyone is interested they can have the report as soon as it is completed."

Governor Stevenson speaks in New orleans tonight. He repeats his stand on tidelands oil and civil rights. And he offers one observation on civil rights. "One, "He SAYS," that must sadden you as it does me. It is that after 2-thousand years of Christinaity we need discuss it at all." The Governor CONDEMNS [redacted] the Taft views on foreign trade.. says that would lead to isolation and destruction. And speaking in French, (the native tongue of many residents of New orleans) he denies the Eisenhower statement that the French are "decadent." Earlier, in Oklahoma, the Governor said the issue is: peace (and) [redacted] prosperity. If you believe the Old Guard.." now fully embraced by the general can better preserve prosperity and achieve peace, then cast your vote for the Old Guard. He said if the Republicans win in November it might sadly alter our present foreign policy course.

Senator Taft, in Indiana, said today he wants Eisenhower elected. Then he added: "Of course, I am just as much interested in seeing, perhaps a little more in seeing, that we have a good Republican congress."

IN Boston today, the United States Court of Appeals granted a new trial to Denis W. delaney, the former Internal Revenue collector for Massachusetts. Delaney had been convicted of taking bribes. The court said that publicity before the trial, particularly from a House investigating committee, had made it impossible for Delaney to get a fair trial.

The Government says retail food prices dropped one per cent in the last two weeks of September.. (the sharpest drop since February.)

The United States and France are trying to play down a diplomatic hassle. IT started when we told the French they can only have 525-million in foreign aid.. (less than they wanted) Ambassador Dunn also read an "oral statement" suggesting, among other things, that the French improve their tax system... and we offered advise on their budget. Premier Pinay didn't like that.. sent the "oral statement" back to Washington to be "reconsidered." French newspapers printed headlines saying: "Strong man knows how to say no to Americans."

We're having more trouble in Western Germany. Its now revealed that some time ago we trained German guerrillas to be used in case of a Soviet attack. After we gave up the project, the guerrillas got togather and decided on a list of 80 West German leaders they would execute..in event of war. Some men on the list are Socialist leaders. They made the story public.. and they don't like it.

Edward R. Murrow: October 10, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Governor Stevenson suggests tonight that we are wallowing around in a sea of words, and might relish a little silence. A political Party might buy half-an-hour of silence on radio and television networks, during which the voters could think quietly about the choice they're going to have to make on November 4th. This set us to thinking about the choice as presented by "responsible" spokesmen of both Parties. This is all direct quotation or accurate paraphrase. It's all in the Record. "Do you want your throat cut?" And if not, what do you think of this "degrading and disgraceful spectacle?" Are you going to "cast your ballot for thieves and rustlers," or for "an unholy crew." Stand up and make your choice between "a man with a funny bone and a man with no backbone." Make up your mind whether you go for "good old American khaki, or State Department pink." Of course, now that winter is coming on, you have your choice between "a cloth coat or a mink coat." You must decide whether we "could have avoided World Wars I and II and the Korean war, and while deciding these matters, neighbors, you must "both look ahead and look out." Also beware of "counterfeit rhetoric passing as legal tender," because the "big money boys like a little unemployment and low wages." You would have a formidable list of questions to decide during Governor Stevenson's half-hour of silence. For example, you would have to decide whether you ought to "have your head examined;" whether you know the difference "between real artillery and harmless blanks;" whether what you are witnessing is "a great crusade", or a "sad and pathetic spectacle." If you decide that an egg is bad you must determine whether to throw it out. If you are a farmer you must determine whether you are, or are not about to be enslaved. And moreover you must decide "who stuck the pitchfork in the farmer's back."

"There is some very direct lying going on;" you must decide who's doing it. You must determine whether someone is trying to "scare you in order to get your vote". "Is it time for a change?" or did you never have it so good? Or, as a third alternative: "why shouldn't you have it better?" Rise up and decide, whether you want a "President by proxy" or an Administration that is "arrogant, complacent and indifferent." Are the candidates and their henchmen "discussing the issues?" or is this whole thing a "wave of filth?"

You are asked to name the man who is "just plain dishonest;" the man who is "using garbage pile tactics;" and the candidate who has "surrendered to moral scoundrels and moral pygmies." Make your choice between "free and daring men", and the "old disciples of boom and bust." You cannot avoid the issue by indulging in "a hodgepodge of platitudes, generalities, half-truths and plain misrepresentation."

One candidate made off with a plank from the other fellow's platform "in broad daylight." You must determine who did this deed and whether he is to be commended.

There appears to be an uncommon number of "pussyfooters about;" also "traitors, incompetents and crooks." But be not discouraged, for there is an adequate supply of men with "skill, XXXX know-how, vision and integrity." But if you look carefully there are "hypocrites, sad of countenance," who have surrendered something or other "lock, stock and barrel." There have been a whole lot of "unbelievable, complete and incredible surrenders" to various things at various times. You will have to decide whether these actions were honorable. Do you want to live in a "purgatory of improvisation?" Or do you want to elect all members of one Party, "good, bad and outrageous?". What's your preference - an appeal to the emotions or the intellect?

"Are you fooled by the Big Lie technique - or just half-fooled" Whichever it is, if you aren't careful the demagogues will get you. Do you want to buy a whole hog? And is your preference for nightmares or dreams? These decisions must be made because "it will be a long time before we get another chance". This is definitely the time to "cast away some stupid and wicked things." After all it should be relatively simple to determine which is the "do-nothing, know-nothing, care-nothing Party". Presumably we all want "security and solvency." We'll just have to decide who's likeliest to get it for us.

Someone resembles Little Lord Fauntleroy; and someone else is trying to "turn the clock back"; still others are "trying to bury a record". There is a "wrecking crew", running loose in the backfield; but it may be that they're "on a treadmill."

Definitely Governor Stevenson's half-hour of silence would not be sufficient to permit calm consideration of the issues. Of course, if we don't care what happens, then there's no need to register or vote. Most of our allies in the free world turn out a much larger percentage of voters than do we. Last time about 51 percent of us bothered. The British, the French and the Italians did much better; and 90 percent of the South Koreans turned out in their last election. In this one either candidate could be elected overwhelmingly by half the people who fail to vote.

My own favorite quotation from these political orations is this: "What is going to happen next November is going to be serious."

The air is being filled with considerable campaign oratory. And about the best that we can look forward to is more of the same. It's pretty much as Whit Burnett once described it when he said:"There are a lot of words in this world, and many of them are lying around loose." [redacted] do well to follow this advice from Goethe:"One ought, every day at least, to speak a few reasonable words."

For All Politicians - this advice

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY - OCTOBER 10, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

South Korean troops have been pushed off White Horse Hill. Its changed hands for the 21st time in the four-day battle. At last report, the men of the Ninth, South Korean Division were 150 yards from the top...fighting in the dark... with knives, bayonets, fists and rifle butts. They are under heavy enemy artillery and mortar fire. Bad weather is keeping air support to a minimum.

President Truman is campaigning here in New York state. As his train came south from Albany today, the President said General Eisenhower is "just plain dishonest" in his campaign. He "disqualified" himself for President, because of his remarks about Korea. The President says that struck a blow at the morale of our troops and our allies. Mr. Truman says if Eisenhower cannot withstand political pressures of the campaign, he'll never be able to withstand the greater pressures on a President. He says the General is not to be trusted; he never thought Eisenhower would stoop so low as to support Senator McCarthy, who has attacked General Marshal. Truman says that since the general left the army, he hasn't even tried to master the complex problems of civil government. Eisenhower hasn't tried to talk issues...he's been putting up a smokescreen around the country. Eisenhower wants to change the climate in Washington to see that more profita go into dividends for big corporations.

General Eisenhower campaigned in the southwest today. He said the free world needs our leadership to combat Communism. And we cannot lead with our present prestige...it must be restored. Dollars alone won't bring us friends and allies. We must have unity at home and the strongest kind of prestige and influence abraod.

The General announced today that he will make public a statement on his finances. Reporters on his campaign train tell us that last Sunday, in an off-the record conference he said: he saw no reason to make such a statement...he didn't want to dance to the other fellows tune...he had no letters requesting such information. He didn't think he would do anything about it...When reports to this effect were printed today, reporters asked the General for a direct answer to this question: "do you intend to make a statement, before the election on your finances? The General replied: "Of course. If anyone is interested they can have the report as soon as it is completed."

Governor Stevenson speaks in New Orleans tonight. He repeats his stand on tidelands oil and civil rights. And he offers one observation on civil rights. "One," he says, "that must sadden you as it does me. It is that after two-thousand years of Christianity we need discuss it at all." The Governor condemns the Taft views on foreign trade...says they would lead to isolation and destruction. And speaking in French, the native tongue of many residents of New Orleans, he denies the Eisenhower statement that the French are "decadent." Earlier, in Oklahoma, the Governor said the issue is: peace and prosperity. If you believe the Old Guard..."now fully embraced by the General" can better preserve prosperity and achieve peace, then cast your vote for the Old Guard. He said if the Republicans win in November, it might sadly alter our present foreign policy course.

Senator Taft, in Indiana, said today he wants Eisenhower elected. Then he added: "Of course, I am just as much interested in seeing, perhaps a little more in seeing, that we have a good Republican congress."

In Boston today, the United States Court of Appeals granted a new trial to Denis W. Delaney, the former Internal Revenue collector for Massachusetts. Delaney had been convicted of taking bribes. The court said that publicity before the trial, particularly from a House investigating committee, had made it impossible for Delaney to get a fair trial.

The Government says retail food prices dropped one per cent in the last two weeks of September...(the sharpest drop since February.)

The United States and France are trying to play down a diplomatic hassle. It started when we told the French they can only have 525-million in foreign aid... (less than they wanted.) Ambassador Dunn also read an "oral statement" suggesting, among other things, that the French improve their tax system...and we offered advice on their budget. Premier Pinay didn't like that...sent the "oral statement" back to Washington to be "reconsidered." French newspapers printed headlines saying: "Strong man knows how to say no to Americans."

We're having more trouble in Western Germany. It's now revealed that some time ago we trained German guerrillas to be used in case of a Soviet attack. After we gave up the project, the guerrillas got together and decided on a list of 80 West German leaders they would execute...in event of war. Some men on the list are Socialist leaders. They made the story public...and they don't like it.

Governor Stevenson suggests tonight that we are wallowing around in a sea of words and might relish a little silence. A political Party might buy half-an-hour of silence on radio and television networks, during which, the voters could think quietly about the choice they're going to have to make on November 4th. This set us to thinking about the choice as presented by "responsible" spokesmen of both Parties. This is all direct quotation or accurate paraphrase, Its all in the Record. "Do you want your throat cut?" And if not what do you think of this "degrading and disgraceful spectacle?" Are you going to "cast your ballot for thieves and rustlers," or for "an unholy crew." Stand up and make your choice between "a man with a funny bone and a man with no backbone." Mak up your mind whether you go for "good old American khaki, or State Department pink." Of course now that winter is coming on you have your choice between "a cloth coat or a mink coat." You must decide whether we "could have avoided World Wars I and II and the Korean war, and while deciding these matters, neighbors, you must "both look ahead and look out." Also beware of "counterfeit rhetoric passing as legal tender," because the "big money boys like a little unemployment and low wages." You would have a formidable list of questions to decide during Governor Stevenson's half-hour of silence. For example, you would have to decide whether you ought to "have your head examined;" whether you know the difference "between real artillery and harmless blanks;" whether what you are witnessing is "a great crusade," or a "sad and pathetic spectacle." If you decide that an egg is bad, you must determine whether to throw it out. If you are a farmer you must determine whether you are, or are not about to be enslaved. And moreover you must decide "who stuck the pitchfork in the farmer's back."

"There is some very direct lying going on;" you must decide who's doing it. You must determine whether someone is trying to "scare you in order to get your vote." "Is it time for a change?" or did you never have it so good? Or, as a third alternative: "why shouldn't you have it better?" Rise up and decide whether you want a "President by proxy" or an Administration that is "arrogant, complacent and indifferent." Are the candidates and their henchmen "discussing the issues?" or is this whole thing a "wave of filth?"

You are asked to name the man who is "just plain dishonest;" the man who is "using garbage pile tactics;" and the candidate who has "surrendered to moral scoundrels and moral pygmies." Make your choice between "free and daring men," and the "old disciples of boom and bust." You cannot avoid the issue by indulging in "a hodgepodge of platitudes, generalities, half-truths and plain misrepresentation."

One candidate made off with a plank from the other fellow's platform "in broad daylight." You must determine who did this deed and whether he is to be commended.

There appears to be an uncommon number of "pussyfooters about;" also "traitors, incompetents and crooks." But be not discouraged, for there is an adequate supply of men with "skill, know-how, vision and integrity." But if you look carefully there are "hypocrites, sad of countenance," who have surrendered something or other," lock, stock and barrel." There have been a whole lot of "unbelievable, complete and incredible surrenders," to various things at various times. You will have to decide whether these actions were honorable. Do you want to live in a "purgatory of improvisation?" Or do you want to elect all members of one Party, "good, bad and outrageous?" What's your preference - an appeal to the emotions or the intellect?

"Are you fooled by the Big Lie technique - or just half-fooled" Whichever it is, if you aren't careful the demagogues will get you. Do you want to buy a whole hog? And is your preference for nightmares or dreams? These decisions must be made because "it will be a long time before we get another chance". This is definitely the time to "cast away some stupid and wicked things." After all it should be relatively simple to determine which is the "do-nothing, know-nothing, care-nothing Party". Presumably we all want "security and solvency." We'll just have to decide who's likeliest to get it for us.

Someone resembles Little Lord Fauntleroy; and someone else is trying to "turn the clock back"; still others are "trying to bury a record". There is a "wrecking crew", running loose in the backfield; but it may be that they're "on a treadmill."

Definitely Governor Stevenson's half-hour of silence would not be sufficient to permit calm consideration of the issues. Of course, if we don't care what happens, then there's no need to register or vote. Most of our allies in the free world turn out a much larger percentage of voters than do we. Last time about 51 percent of us bothered. The British, the French and the Italians did much better; and 90 percent of the South Koreans turned out in their last election. In this one either candidate could be elected overwhelmingly by half the people who fail to vote.

My own favorite quotation from these political orations is this: "What is going to happen next November is going to be serious."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The air is being filled with considerable campaign oratory. And about the best that we can look forward to is more of the same. It's pretty much as Whit Burnett once described it when he said: "There are a lot of words in this world, and many of them are lying around loose." For all politicians - this advice from Goethe: "One ought, every day at least, to speak a few reasonable words."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Monday, Oct 13, 1952.

This is the news:

Allied forces have launched a new attack in central Korea. [redacted] It appears to be the heaviest allied blow of the year against the enemy's main line. After a very heavy artillery and mortar barrage, the United Nations troops, supported by tanks and fighter-bombers, struck at a Chinese hill fortress north of Kumhwa. This attack came as South Korean forces again were in possession of the top of White Horse Hill, 17 MILES TO THE WEST.

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

Gen. Van Fleet, on this 8th day of the battle, praised the "tremendous victory" of the South Koreans against "superior odds." He said the men of the Ninth Division showed "great heart, determination and courage." An American advisor with the South Koreans says their casualties were [redacted] considerable..they took a "terrific beating"... but they refused to quit.

In Tokyo today, Far East air force headquarters denied a Russian charge that a missing B-29 Superfort fired at Soviet fighter planes before it disappeared LAST WEEK. We say the B-29 carried no guns, and no gunners, in its five-man crew. [redacted]

The commandant of the Marine corps, General Shepherd, says the air force effort to destroy enemy supplies behind the battle line has been a "fizzle." He says the day and night air attacks have had little success. As he puts it:"Its not so simple as in the Sunday supplement stories put out by the air force." An air force spokesman says this is not true.. the operation behind the lines was not expected to stop all supplies from getting through. It was intended to prevent the enemy from getting enough equipment to sustain an offensive. (and there has been no sustained offensive since the plan went into operation.)

~~General Sherphord also say the enemy is trying to feel out a soft spot in our Korean lines, may launch a major offensive if they find one. Sherphord says the enemy used the truce talks to good advantage to build up their supplies and equipment.~~

In this country, General Eisenhower speaks tonight in New Orleans. He will accuse the President and Governor Stevenson of a "shoddy deal" in supporting federal ownership of tidelands oil. The General will say that the whole plan is an entering wedge, to get government control of rivers and lakes, as well as the sea. He says: if the federal government takes the tidelands oil from Louisiana, Texas and California.. then what about those parts of Chicago built on once submerged Lake Michigan.. what about the iron ore under Minnesota's navigable waters.. the fisheries in Florida.. the coal, under water in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. What about the real estate built on ground reclaimed on once submerged areas of New York and Pennsylvania?

The General also said its "sinister nonsense" for the Administration to claim that its policies helped the South's development. And he attacked the "terrible disillusionment" in Latin America because we dropped our war-time Good Neighbor Policy.

In Springfield today, Wilson Wyatt, Governor Stevenson's campaign manager, told reporters he doesn't want to sound "over-confident," but he believes that the Democrats "have the makings of a landslide elecotral vote." Wyatt claims the Governor will carry such states as New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and California... according to all reports he is getting.

Senator Taft says he disagrees with Wyatt's view that Independent voters are switching to Stevenson. Taft says the great bulk of independent voters are those who just are not interested enough to vote.

The United Mine Workers today unanimously voted support of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket. John L. Lewis told the miners an Eisenhower victory means he would be a figure-head while Senator Taft would be president by proxy.

~~Governor Adams, Eisenhower's campaign manager, says the General will make a financial statement in a few days. And Senator Nixon's secretary said again that the Senator has no plan for any additional statement on his finances.~~

The President, back in Washington, from a 90-speech cross-country tour, says he'll leave the White House on Thursday for a three-day swing through New England.

Democratic Senator Johnson of South Carolina told a Postmasters convention in Boston that postal subsidies for newspapers and magazines account for about half of the Post Office's 500-million dollar deficit.

The Supreme Court today rejected the appeals of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg who have been sentenced to die for helping Russia get our atomic secrets. The Rosenbergs, now in Sing Sing prison, say they are innoccent.. they believe "fellow Americans will save us."

Here in New York today, four Americans who work for the United Nations refused to tell a Senate committee whether they are Communist party members. Alfred Van Tassel...Joel Gordon...Stanley Graze and Frank Carter Bancroft all refused to answer on the grounds of self-incriminati

In Iran today the government announced that it has crushed a plot against Premier Mossadegh's regime. The government says four men have been arrested; they are said to have schemed with "a certain foreign embassy."

Many of the charges and countercharges in this political campaign can be dismissed with amusement or contempt depending on your point of view. The record on this one goes back to September 29. General Bedel Smith, head of our top secret Central Intelligence agency, one-time Chief of Staff to Eisenhower, later Ambassador to Moscow, was testifying. He was called in connection with the two-million dollar libel suit brought by Republican Senator McCarthy against Democratic Senator Benton. At that time General Smith said that he "believed" that Communists had infiltrated his own top-secret organization, and practically every other agency of the government. [He said he didn't know who they were, or he'd get rid of them.] The General's contention was that the Communists are clever and you must proceed on the assumption that they would be able to sneak agents into any department of the government. Immediately after this testimony, General Smith communicated with candidates Eisenhower and Stevenson and the result was that his testimony did not become a major issue in the campaign. At that time General Smith said "it would be well if there were no serious attempts to exploit either this organization or the general subject for political purposes."

Today General Smith appeared before an open hearing of the House Un-American Activities Committee. The Committee wanted to know about that earlier statement (that the Communists have infiltrated every security agency of the government.) The General said his statement was: "predicated on pure theory, and past performance", and he added that "I would be extremely complacent, if I believed there was no Communist infiltration in the government". Committee members wanted to know whether General Smith was certain that there were Communists in every government security agency. The General said he wasn't certain; he had found no Communists in his own organization in the United States, but he had, in the past, discovered one or two working for him outside this country. General Smith said he knew what the Communists had done elsewhere in Canada, Japan and Germany, and it would be "foolish" of us to assume that there is no infiltration here. General Smith explained that there are constant investigations into the loyalty and actions of anyone working in government security agencies. And he said that in security organizations "you are always under investigation and always under suspicion." General Smith complained that "an honest statement I made under oath has been used politically." He said, "I know both candidates and have a profound respect for the character and ability of both." The General said "I am not political and have no political affiliations or leanings." And he also said that, "if the next President, whether Democratic or Republican, does as well as President Truman in fighting Communism in the federal government the American people will have "little to worry about".

The Central Intelligence Agency, headed by General Smith, has agents and spies around the world. It is the top-secret agency which is supposed to tell the responsible officials of our government what our enemies intend as well as what our allies are doing. This Agency produces the information upon which budgets and battle plans must be based. No one can tell how good a job it is doing, because its actions and estimates are necessarily secret. But within a period of two weeks the head of this Agency is summoned once in a civilian law suit between a couple of Senators where he makes a statement that is used by the Republicans to support their charge of Communist infiltration of government agencies. Today, before the House un-American Activities Committee, he makes another statement which the Democrats will undoubtedly use to support their thesis that President Truman has done everything possible to eliminate Communists from government positions. General Smith also said today, in effect, that both political candidates are fine fellows. He knows them both, and respects their character and ability. It is my personal opinion that General Smith's estimate of the character and ability of the two candidates is worth no more and no less than yours ~~and~~ or mine, and it has no bearing upon the job his vital and important agency is doing.

General Smith's answers in this whole episode have been in the tradition of intelligence officers -- suspect everyone, take nothing for granted, believe that if you can get access to the enemy's secrets he can get hold of yours.

General Smith would appear to have been naive in not realizing his original statement would be used for political purposes. Eisenhower restrained his partisans from making undue use of it, presumably, Stevenson will prevent his supporters from attempting to capitalize upon today's statement. The questions should never have been asked or answered. There are questions to be raised about the operation of our top-secret intelligence agency, but the very nature of its work requires that they be raised by the administration responsible for the governing of the country. The C. I. A. isn't being run for Republicans or Democrats. And its purpose would probably be better served if the politicans would let it alone and if its director made fewer comments susceptible of political interpretation.

the Political Season

~~This is the political season. And as it~~ moves on, we would all do well to exercise a certain degree of reason and restraint. For the politician, some good advice from John Collins who once remarked: "We often make more enemies by what we say than friends by what we do." And for the voter, trying to make up his mind, this brief observation by Alexander Dumas: " All generalizations are dangerous - even this one!"

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY - OCTOBER 13, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied forces have launched a new attack in central Korea. It appears to be the heaviest allied blow of the year against the enemy's main line. After a very heavy artillery and mortar barrage, the United Nations troops...supported by tanks and fighter-bombers...struck at a Chinese hill fortress north of Kumhwa. This attack came as South Korean forces again were in possession of the top of White Horse Hill, 17 miles to the west.

General Van Fleet, on this 8th day of the battle, praised the "tremendous victory" of the South Koreans against "superior odds." He said the men of the Ninth Division showed "great heart, determination and courage." An American advisor with the South Koreans says their casualties were considerable...they took a "terrific beating"...but they refused to quit.

In Tokyo today, Far East air force headquarters denied a Russian charge that a missing B-29 Superfort fired at Soviet fighter planes before it disappeared last week. We say the B-29 carried no guns and no gunners in its five man crew.

The commandant of the Marine Corps, General Shepherd, says the air force effort to destroy enemy supplies behind the battle line has been a "fizzle." He says the day and night air attacks have had little success. As he puts it: "Its not so simple as in the Sunday supplement stories put out by the air force." An air force spokesman says this is not true...the operation behind the lines was not expected to stop all supplies from getting through. It was intended to prevent the enemy from getting enough equipment to sustain an offensive...(and there has been no sustained offensive since the plan went into operation.)

In this country, General Eisenhower speaks tonight in New Orleans. He will accuse the President and Governor Stevenson of a "shoddy deal" in supporting Federal ownership of tidelands oil. The General will say that the whole plan is an entering wedge to get government control of rivers and lakes as well as the sea. He says: if the federal government takes the tidelands oil from Louisiana, Texas and California...then what about those parts of Chicago built on once submerged Lake Michigan...what about the iron ore under Minnesota's navigable waters... the fisheries in Florida...the coal under water in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. What about the real estate built on ground reclaimed on once submerged areas of New York and Pennsylvania?

The General also said its "sinister nonsense" for the Administration to claim that its policies helped the South's development. And he attacked the "terrible disillusionment" in Latin America because we dropped our war-time Good Neighbor Policy.

In Springfield today, Wilson Wyatt, Governor Stevenson's campaign manager, told reporters he doesn't want to sound "over-confident," but he believes that the Democrats "have the makings of a landslide electoral vote." Wyatt claims the Governor will carry such states as New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and California according to all reports he is getting.

Senator Taft says he disagrees with Wyatt's view that Independent voters are switching to Stevenson. Taft says the great bulk of independent voters are those who just are not interested enough to vote.

The United Mine Workers today unanimously voted support of the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket. John L. Lewis told the miners an Eisenhower victory means he would be a figure-head while Senator Taft would be president by proxy.

The President, back in Washington, from a 90-speech, cross-country tour, says he'll leave the White House on Thursday for a three-day swing through New England.

Democratic Senator Johnson of South Carolina told a Postmasters convention in Boston that Postal subsidies for newspapers and magazines account for about half of the Post Office's 500-million dollar deficit.

The Supreme Court today rejected the appeals of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg who have been sentenced to die for helping Russia get our atomic secrets. The Rosenbergs, now in Sing Sing prison, say they are innocent...they believe "fellow Americans will save us."

Here in New York today, four Americans who work for the United Nations refused to tell a Senate committee whether they are Communist party members. Alfred Van Tassel...Joel Gordon...Stanley Graze and Frank Bancroft all refused to answer on the grounds of self-incrimination.

In Iran today, the government announced that it has crushed a plot against Premier Mossadegh's regime. The government says four men have been arrested; they are said to have schemed with "a certain foreign embassy."

Many of the charges and countercharges in this political campaign can be dismissed with amusement or contempt depending on your point of view. The record on this one goes back to September 29. General Bedel Smith, head of our top secret Central Intelligence agency, one-time Chief of Staff to Eisenhower, later Ambassador to Moscow, was testifying. He was called in connection with the two-million dollar libel suit brought by Republican Senator McCarthy against Democratic Senator Benton. At that time General Smith said that he "believed" that Communists had infiltrated his own top-secret organization, and practically every other agency of the government. He said he didn't know who they were, or he'd get rid of them. The General's contention was that the Communists are clever and you must proceed on the assumption that they would be able to sneak agents into any department of the government. Immediately after this testimony, General Smith communicated with candidates Eisenhower and Stevenson and the result was that his testimony did not become a major issue in the campaign. At that time General Smith said, "it would be well if there were no serious attempts to exploit either this organization or the general subject for political purposes."

Today General Smith appeared before an open hearing of the House Un-American Activities Committee. The Committee wanted to know about that earlier statement that the Communists have infiltrated every security agency of the government. The General said his statement was: "predicated on pure theory and past performance", and he added that "I would be extremely complacement if I believed there was no Communist infiltration in the government". Committee members wanted to know whether General Smith was certain that there were Communists in every government security agency. The General said he wasn't certain; he had found no Communists in his own organization in the United States, but he had in the past discovered one or two working for him outside this country. General Smith said he knew what the Communists had done elsewhere in Canada, Japan and Germany, and it would be "foolish" of us to assume that there is no infiltration here. General Smith explained that there are constant investigations into the loyalty and actions of anyone working in government security agencies. And he said that in security organizations" you are always under investigation and always under suspicion." General Smith complained that "an honest statement I made under oath has been used politically." He said "I know both candidates and have a profound respect for the character and ability of both." The General said "I am not political and have no political affiliations or leanings." and he also said that "if the next President, whether Democratic or Republican, does as well as President Truman, in fighting Communism in the federal government, the American people will have "little to worry about".

The Central Intelligence Agency, headed by General Smith, has agents and spies around the world. It is the top-secret agency which is supposed to tell the responsible officials of our government what our enemies intend as well as what our allies are doing. This Agency produces the information upon which budgets and battle plans must be based. No one can tell how good a job it is doing, because its actions and estimates are necessarily secret. But within a period of two weeks the head of this Agency is summoned once in a civilian law suit between a couple of Senators, where he makes a statement that is used by the Republicans to support their charge of Communist infiltration of government agencies. Today, before the House un-American Activities Committee, he makes another statement which the Democrats will undoubtedly use to support their thesis that President Truman has done everything possible to eliminate Communists from government positions. General Smith also said today, in effect, that both political candidates are fine fellows. He knows them both, and respects their character and ability. It is my personal opinion that General Smith's estimate of the character and ability of the two candidates is worth no more and no less than yours or mine, and it has no bearing upon the job his vital and important agency is doing.

General Smith's answers in this whole episode have been in the tradition of intelligence officers - - suspect everyone, take nothing for granted, believe that if you can get access to the enemy's secrets he can get hold of yours.

General Smith would appear to have been naive in not realizing his original statement would be used for political purposes. Eisenhower restrained his partisans from making undue use of it, presumably, Stevenson will prevent his supporters from attempting to capitalize upon today's statement. The questions should never have been asked or answered. There are questions to be raised about the operation of our top-secret intelligence agency, but the very nature of its work requires that they be raised by the administration responsible for the governing of the country. The C.I.A. isn't being run for Republicans or Democrats. And its purpose would probably be better served if the politicians would let it alone and if its director made fewer comments susceptible of political interpretation.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As the political season moves on we would all do well to exercise a certain degree of reason and restraint. For the politician, some good advice from John Collins who once remarked: "We often make more enemies by what we say than friends by what we do." And for the voter, trying to make up his mind, this brief observation by Alexander Dumas: "All generalizations are dangerous - even this one!"

Good Night and Good Luck!

-Oct 14, 1952

Tuesday

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will charge tonight that General Eisenhower has resorted to "mean motives" and dipped his campaign "somewhere near the low-water mark" to win the election. In a speech he's making at Salt Lake City, the Governor says: There was a day when the General symbolized this great nation. But now, for the sake of power, he has surrendered to Senator Taft, gathered strange allies in a queer crusade, accepted bad Senators, but far worse... has been his charge that our prosperity is based on war and re-armament. Governor Stevenson says Eisenhower thus is repeating the Kremlin's story... the "theme song" of every Communist newspaper in France and Italy, and across the iron crutain. Eisenhower's charge that our prosperity is based on war..his prediction that so-called corrupt American capitalism cannot survive... that we cannot prevent mass unemployment without war or the threat of war... all this, says Stevenson, "is written into every Kremlin textbook." The Governor says Eisenhower has challenged our role in world history..undermined the credit due this nation for using the Capitalist system wisely and humanely. Earlier, in Wyoming, the Governor charged that the Republican bosses fought with blind fury against all of our ~~prosperity~~ prosperity programs and opposed every measure to build America's alliance against the Communist conspiracy." He said the Republicans prefer slogans and emotion and confetti to facing up to the issues; Eisenhower's hesitant views "savor more of isolation and retreat than security and confidence."

The Governor is campaigning in Texas. At Houston, he called on the South to rise in a political rebellion against the Democrats. He said the Administration has been: weak-kneed and soft-headed... power-hungry... reckless drivers... discredited..power-mongers. The General said: "we have a peace that is not a peace; a war which is not a war; an armistice that is not an armistice, because the Administration has breathed first hot, then cold, then hot again." He said the charge that he would pull the rug out from under the farmer is "pure unadulterated bunk." He said the accusation that he would cut the pay of servicemen is "a poisonous lie for political purposes.

In New York today the General's aides released a statement of his income in the past ten years. They show that his gross income was $888,303 for the whole period. The major portion of this....635-thousand dollars..came from the sale of all rights to his book "Crusade in Europe." The General paid a capital gains tax on this of 159-thousand dollars; it would have been much more had he paid it as straight income. But the Bureau of Internal Revenue okayed a capital gains payment. The general netted, in the ten years, 643-thousand dollars. Governor Stevenson's recent statement showed a net income of 288-thousand for the same period. Senator Sparkman has also made his financial statement public. And Senator Nixon says his recent radio and television report on his 18-thousand-dollar political funds covers all the financial report he cares to make.

Last night Nixon charged that Governor Stevenson disqualified himself as a presidential candidate when he gave a deposition for Alger Hiss during the Hiss trial. Today, Senator Sparkman said Nixon did not mention that John Foster Dulles, Eisenhower's foreign policy advisor, recommended Hiss for a job with the Carnegie Endowment. And 22 lawyers..from both parties.. have issued a statement deploring what they call "any effort to criticiz or reproach Stevenson for testifying by deposition in the Hiss case." The lawyers say their statement is not an endorsement of Stevenson's candidacy, but they believe he acted only as a good citizen and a lawyer.

In New York today the General Assembly of the United Nations met in the new 12.½ million dollar building. Both the retiring president, Luis Padilla Nervo of Mexico, and the newly elected president, Lester Pearson of Canada, called on the delegates for a quick solution.. an armistice. for the Korean war.

In Korea today, the enemy offered tough resistance to our new attack along the eastern and western bases of the old "Iron Triangle." The South Koreans, to the west, fought for complete control of White Horse Hill for a ninth day.

Air Force Secretary Finletter says "the direct Soviet contribution to the air war in Korea is in excess of four thousand four hundred aircraft." He also says the enemy's concentration of anti-aircraft artillery, in some key areas, has approached the heaviest concentration of World War Two.

In London today, General Ridegway told the Pilgrim Society Dinner that the North Atlantic forces are far stronger than they were two years ago. But, he said: "We are still far from the minimum we need to deal with an all-out surprise attack." He said the present forces, if attacked, could make the path of an aggressor both difficult and costly. Prime Minister Churchill told the same audience that he believes a third World War is unlikely because it would begin with "horrors on a scale never dreamed of before." He said: "The torments which would fall in increasing measure upon the whole civil population of the globe would be indescribable."

General Marshal returned from Europe today.. a tour of five countries.. and visits to 15 American military cemeteries. The General says there's been a "tremendous change" since he last visited western Europe in 1948. And he was told there is a constant dwindling of Communist influence. The General said he will not vote in November.

Senator O'connor of Maryland said today that a Senate committee's investigation shows there are "American traitors" on the United Nations payroll. A total of ten American employes of the U.N. have refused to tell the committee whether they were ever Communists.

Attorney General Mc Granery today relieved Howard L. Doyle of all his duties at his own request. Doyle, who has been United States Attorney for Southern Illinois, [redacted] recently acknowledged that he made 86-thousand dollars in fees from a private law practise between 1945 and 50. He said none of the cases involved any conflict with the interest of the government.

This front-page comment appeared today in a non-communist French newspaper... It was stimulated by a news story that American soldiers are practicing combat in a replica of a European villiage set up at fort Myers VIRGINIA..here is the quotation...A European villiage isnt very complex ,just a villiage square, a church,a school,a city hall a few linden and plane trees and some houses.. I hope they didnt forget the monument to the dead that every villiage has..or the cemetery....a cemetery is an excellent place for fighting...one thing bothers me...this villiage..what style is it?.. Alsation...Bavarian,Silesian, Ukranian...Europe is big....are you sure just where you are going to fight? Moreover,why just European...That shows defeatism...Do out allies strategic plans stop on the Ural Caspian frontier...Its true that you can get a good line of fire from behind out doors...and that our walls crumble admirably under high explosive charges and that our church towers make excellent observation po posts for artillery...But we dont pretend to have a monopoly of those virtues.. So be quick about it engineers at Fort Myers..start building a central Asiatic villiage to practice in,or a camp in Kurdistan,a Hamlet in Mongolia...Be far sighted have immagination,let your maneuvre villiages spread across all types ..mongolian,Tibetan,Chinese...and who knows...after all the earth is round... why not an American Villiage...."..a bitter comment..We quoted it because it seemed somehow appropriate for the Opening day of the United Nations...

For the first time since world war two a Japanes army will parade in Tokio tomorrow...The following day the Emperor will visit a dim tree shrouded shrine where he will pay homage to the souls of all dead Japanese...it will be his first visit to the shrine since General Macarthur banned shintoism as a state religion...These two events ..the parade of the army and the visist to the shrine are not unconnected...They reflect the military and spiritual regeneration of Japan...both events appeal to the nationalistic pride of a people who are running their own country after seven years of occupation...The army is called the National safety corps..consists of a hundred and ten thousand men...volunteers...controlled by civilians but officered by professionals from the old imperial army...equipped with light automatic weapons some artillery and a few tanks...all on loan fron the United States...The uniforms are american from top to bottom...We are providing a hundred light planes for spotting and reconnaisance...also about thirty coastal patroll boats...American officers and men are training the Japanese to handle the new weapons...Service is for two years and a man may resign whenever he wants to...the right of an officer to to strike or beat his men has been abolished...We are bringing pressure to bear on Japan to rearm...we want them to have an army of two hundred and fifty thousand men and a tactical air force for close support...then american troops might be withdrawn...the growing friction over the presence of GIs would be reduced...this is going to cost money....The Japanese are not enthusiastic ...In their constitution they renounce war and military force...General Macarthur advised them to be the "Switzerland of Asia"...Few Japanese politicians will admit that the country is rearming...To the Japanese rearmament is not just a matter of bodies and military hardware..it involves the revival of the military caste that controlled political and economic life...some believe that we are forming a mercenary corps to be semt to fight wherever there is trouble in Asia...On the other hand there is the attraction of power the prospect that with an army Japan would really controll her own destiny,but then there are the scars and memories of Hiroshima and Nagasaki...There is also a legal problem...Japans constitution outlaws and armed force...to ammend the constitution the government must get a two thirds majority in the lower house ..then that amendment must be aproved by a majority of the people in a national ballot...so it would seem that Japans rearmament is certain..but for the time being it is being bootlegged,under another name....

We are talking from Harrisburg Pennsylvania tonight...came down here for oil Progress week....Herbert Spencer once said "progress is not an accident, but a necessity!"..and it was William Scarborough who remarked..."when the oil is exhausted the lamp will go out."...The first commercial oil well was drilled only about a hundred years ago, and no small part of our progress has been due to oil....

good nite & good luck—

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY - OCTOBER 14, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson will charge tonight that General Eisenhower has resorted to "mean motives" and dipped his campaign "somewhere near the low-water mark" to win the election. In a speech he's making at Salt Lake City, the Governor says: There was a day when the General symbolized this great nation. But now, for the sake of power, he has surrendered to Senator Taft, gathered strange allies in a queer crusade, accepted bad Senators, but far worse...has been his charge that our prosperity is based on war and re-armament. Governor Stevenson sayd Eisenhower thus is repeating the Kremlin's story...the "theme song" of every Communist newspaper in France and Italy and across the iron curtain. Eisenhower's charge that our prosperity is based on war...his prediction that so-called corrupt American capitalism cannot survive...that we cannot prevent mass unemployment without war or the threat of war...all this, says Stevenson, "is written into every Kremlin textbook." The Governor says Eisenhower has challenged our role in world history...undermined the credit due this nation for using the Capitalist system wisely and humanely. Earlier, in Wyoming, the Governor charged that the Republican bosses fought with "blind fury against all of our prosperity programs and opposed every measure to build America's alliance against the Communist conspiracy." He said the Republicans prefer slogans and emotion and confetti to facing up to the issues; Eisenhower's hesitant views "savor more of isolation and retreat than security and confidence."

The Governor is campaigning in Texas. At Houston, he called on the South to rise in a political rebellion against the Democrats. He said the Administration has been weak-kneed and soft-headed...power-hungry...reckless drivers...discredited...power-mongers. The General said: "we have a peace that is not a peace; a war which is not a war; an armistice that is not an armistice, because the Administration has breathed first hot, then cold, then hot again." He said the charge that he would pull the rug out from under the farmer is "pure unadulterated bunk." He said the accusation that he would cut the pay of servicemen is "a poisonous lie for political purposes."

In New York today the General's aides released a statement of his income in the past ten years. They show that his gross income was $888,303 for the whole period. The major portion of this...635-thousand dollars...came from the sale of all rights to his book "Crusade in Europe." The General paid a capital gains tax on this of 159-thousand dollars; it would have been much more he paid it as straight income. But the Bureau of Internal Revenue okayed a capital gains payment. The general netted, in the ten years, 643-thousand dollars. Governor Stevenson's recent statement showed a net income of 288-thousand for the same period. Senator Sparkman has also made his financial statement public. And Senator Nixon says his recent radio and television report on his 18-thousand dollar political funds covers all the financial report he cares to make.

Last night Nixon charged that Governor Stevenson disqualified himself as a presidential candidate when he gave a deposition for Alger Hiss during the Hiss trial. Today, Senator Sparkman said Nixon did not mention that John Foster Dulles, Eisenhower's foreign policy advisor, recommended Hiss for a job with the Carnegie Endowment. And 22 lawyers...from both parties...have issued a statement deploring what they call "any effort to criticize or reproach Stevenson for testifying by deposition in the Hiss case." The lawyers say their statement is not an endorsement of Stevenson's candidacy, but they believe he acted only as a good citizen and a lawyer.

In New York today the General Assembly of the United Nations met in the new 12½ million dollar building. Both the retiring president, Luis Padilla Nervo of Mexico, and the newly elected president, Lester Pearson of Canada, called on the delegates for a quick solution...an armistice...for the Korean war.

In Korea today, the enemy offered tough resistance to our new attack along the eastern and western bases of the Old "Iron Triangle." The South Koreans, to the west, fought for complete control of White Horse Hill for a ninth day.

Air Force Secretary Finletter says "the direct Soviet contribution to the air war in Korea is in excess of four thousand four hundred aircraft." He also says the enemy's concentration of anti-aircraft artillery, in some key areas, has approached the heaviest concentration of World War Two.

In London today, General Ridgeway told the Pilgrim Society Dinner that the North Atlantic forces are far stronger than they were two years ago. But, he said: "We are still far from the minimum we need to deal with an all-out surprise attack." He said the present forces, if attacked, could make the path of an aggressor both difficult and costly. Prime Minister Churchill told the same audience that he believes a third World War is unlikely because it would begin with "horrors on a scale never dreamed of before." He said: "The torments which would fall in increasing measure upon the whole civil population of the globe would be indescribable."

General Marshal returned from Europe today...a tour of five countries... and visits to 15 American military cemeteries. The General says there's been a "tremendous change" since he last visited western Europe in 1948. And he was told there is a "constant dwindling of Communist influence." The General said he will not vote in November.

Senator O'Connor of Maryland said today that a Senate committee's investigation shows there are "American traitors" on the United Nations payroll. A total of ten American employes of the U.N. have refused to tell the committee whether they were ever Communists.

Attorney General McGranery today relieved Howard L. Doyle of all his duties at his own request. Doyle, who has been United States Attorney for Southern Illinois, recently acknowledged that he made 86-thousand dollars in fees from a private law practice between 1945 and 1950. He said none of the cases involved any conflict with the interest of the government.

This front page comment appeared today in a non communist French newspaper...It was stimulated by a news story that American soldiers are practicing combat in a replica of a European village set up at fort Myers, Virginia...Here is the quotation...A European village isn't very complex, just a village square, a church, a school, a city hall, a few linden and plane trees and some houses... I hope they didn't forget the monument to the dead that every village has...or the cemetery...a cemetery is an excellent place for fighting...one thing bothers me...this village...what style is it? Alsation...Bavarian, Silesian, Ukranian... Europe is big...are you sure just where you are going to fight? Moreover, why just European...That shows defeatism...Do our allies strategic plans stop on the Ural Caspian frontier...Its true that you can get a good line of fire from behind our doors...and that our walls crumble admirably under high explosive charges and that our church towers make excellent observation posts for artillery...But we don't pretend to have a monopoly of those virtues...So be quick about it engineers at Fort Myers...start building a central Asiatic village to practice in, or a camp in Kurdistan, a Hamlet in Mongolia...Be far sighted,have imagination, let your maneuvre villages spread across all types...Mongolian, Tibetan, Chinese...and who knows...after all the earth is round...why not an American Village..." a bitter comment...We quoted it because it seemed somehow appropriate for the Opening day of the United Nations...

For the first time since World War Two, a Japanese army will parade in Tokyo tomorrow...The following day the Emperor will visit a dim, tree shrouded shrine, where he will pay homage to the souls of all dead Japanese...(it will be his first visit to the shrine since General MacArthur banned Shintoism as a state religion.) These two events...the parade of the army and the visit to the shrine are not unconnected...They reflect the military and spiritual regeneration of Japan...both events appeal to the nationalistic pride of a people who are running their own country after seven years of occupation...The army is called the National safety corps...consists of a hundred and ten thousand men...volunteers... controlled by civilians, but officered by professionals from the old imperial army...equipped with light automatic weapons, some artillery, and a few tanks... all on loan from the United States...The uniforms are American from top to bottom.. We are providing a hundred light planes for spotting and reconnaisance...also about thirty coastal patrol boats...American officers and men are training the Japanese to handle the new weapons...Service is for two years and a man may resign whenever he wants to...the right of an officer to strike or beat his men has been abolished...We are bringing pressure to bear on Japan to rearm...We want them to have an army of two hundred and fifty thousand men and a tactical air force for close support...then American troops might be withdrawn...the growing friction over the presence of GIs would be reduced...this is going to cost money...The Japanese are not enthusiastic. In their constitution they renounce war and military force...General MacArthur advised them to be the "Switzerland of Asia"... Few Japanese politicians will admit that the country is rearming...To the Japanese rearmament is not just a matter of bodies and military hardware...it involves the revival of the military caste that controlled political and economic life...some believe that we are forming a mercenary corps to be sent to fight wherever there is trouble in Asia...On the other hand there is the attraction of power, the prospect that with an army Japan would really controll her own destiny, but then there are the scars and memories of Hiroshima and Nagasaki... There is also a legal problem...Japan's constitution outlaws an armed force...to ammend the constitution the government must get a two-thirds majority in the lower house...then that amendment must be approved by a majority of the people in a national ballot...so it would seem that Janan's rearmament is certain...but for the time being it is being bootlegged, under another name...

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are talking from Harrisburg, Pennsylvania tonight...came down here for Oil Progress week...Herbert Spencer once said: "Progress is not an accident, but a necessity"...and it was William Scarborough who remarked..."When the oil is exhausted the lamps will go out"...The first commercial oil well was drilled only about a hundred years ago and no small part of our progress has been due to oil...

Good Nite and good luck!

Wednesday Oct. 15, 1952

This is the news:

American troops are making slow progress driving the enemy back in central Korea. Today, the Seventh Division forced the Chinese to give ground in hard hand-to-hand fighting. We now hold Triangle Hill and are trying to move down the northern slope against a thousand-man enemy counter-attack.

At sea, a strong allied task force yesterday made a mock attack on the North Korean port of Wonsan.. (in an effort to draw Communists from the battlefront) and make the enemy expose reserves he may have in the area.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 885 casualties last week. The total is now 121, 154.

The Chinese radio says the Americans have "scuttled the armistice talks" at Panmunjom. Radio Peiping says the United States presented what it calls "insolent conditions" for resuming the talks. Peiping says this has brought about "an unprecedented, serious crisis."

At the United Nations meeting here in New York today, Andrie Gromyko tried, unsuccessfully, to block a move to award special citations to all allied soldiers killed in Korea. It would read simply: "Died for the United Nations." Gromyko argued that Russia could not tolerate seeing the the flag of the U.N. used to cover what he called "the implementation of United States aggressive policies in Korea." The Russians want a full debate on the Korean war.. before our election date.

In California today, Governor Stevenson attacked what he said was General Eisenhower's suggestion that if South Koreans can man the front lines in Korea, American soldiers could be brought home sooner than they otherwise could be expected. Stevenson says Eisenhower must know that we have been training South Korean soldiers as rapidly as we could for a long time. He adds: "There is no trick that can end the Korean war and I am sure the General knows this full well. I will not play politics with war and peace. The troops will come home as soon as our national safety permits. And for my part," adds the Governor, "I deplore the suggestion that they come home sooner."

In San Fransisco tonight, Stevenson will charge that Eisenhower has rounded up a team of isolationists and cut-throat reactionries... the Old Guard surrounding him is made up of "stubborn, obstinate men who had to be dragged, screaming and kicking, into the 20th century." Of Senator Nixon, a native of California, the Governor said: "We would take his enthusiasm for investigation and disclosure more seriously if he would do a more complete job on himself." Stevenson says the Republicans have money, newspapers, advertising agencies, baloons, sky writers, slogan makers and confetti for "spontaneous" campaign demonstrations. "Never," he says, "have so many said so much, so loudly, about so little." And he adds: "But I suppose elephants always were meant to travel in circuses."

General Eisenhower ended his southern tour today.. Texas.. Louisiana and Memphis , Tennessee. The General warned that if we are cut off from the rest of the world our entire agricultural and industrial economy would collapse. He said the Democrats are peddling falsehood, selling fear of what might happen under a Republican administration. Eisenhower said: "We are not going to see the breadlines again. We have pledged the full power of the government to prevent a depression." And he said the people have a right to be deeply worried by "the terrifying possibility that the same leadership that let us drift into the Koran war might bungle us into a still greater conflict." In Memphis, he praised the Tennessee Valley Authority. But he said it should not be a "rigid pattern" for similar developments in other areas of the nation. (He wants such developments worked out the way the people in each region want it done.) Eisenhower also charged that the Democrats deliberately encouraged inflation so they could claim prosoperity. And he said "the plain fact is" that the farmers income, after expenses and taxes, is going down.

The President leaves Washington tonight for another campaign trip. And Vice President Barkley opened his campaigning in Minnesota. He says "Eisenhower went fishing for Taft and Taft pulled him into the creek."

~~He says he doesn't intend to "give [illegible] tell the truth.. but if a little "Y" creeps in he can't help it.~~

Republican Chairman Summerfield says Democratic crisiticism of Eisenhower has boomeranged.. and is costing the Democrats votes. And Democratic Chairman Mitchell says General Eisenhower, in yesterday's financial statement, did not reveal the source of more than 70-thousand dollars in income from dividends.

In Washington today, Army Secretary Pace said the Army is getting ready to fire an atomic shell from its new "atomic cannon." So far the 85-ton 11-inch weapon has fired only conventional high explosive shells. Pace says it has fired a shell that could hold an atomic warhead.

The United Mine Workers adjourned their Cincinnati convention today with John L. Lewis telling the miners to strike if their new welfare fund benefits are not paid on time. The Wage Stabilization Board is now considering the ten cent a ton royalty increase..to 40 cents.

In Chicago today, a federal grand jury indicted former postmaster John C. Haderlein and ten others--They are charged with conspiring to sell jobs in the Chicgao post office.

A Senate committee studying possible subversion among Americans working for the United Nations, today heard one witness admit that she had been a Communist. After 12 others had refused to testify on this, Ruth Elizabeth Crawford, a publications officer, said she joined the party in 1935.. and was a member for more than a year.

The British today rejected Iran's demands for a cash payment, as a condition for settling the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute. The British call this "unreasonable and unacceptable." In Teheran, a member of the Iranian senate charged that Premier Mossadegh's domestic policies, have brought poverty to the country, and endangered its security. And the Communist party says Mossadegh has bowed to American and British "imperliasm", and failed to take a single positive step to get Iranian oil flowing again.

Edward R. Murrow: October 15, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

~~This~~ Wed.

Mutual Defense Administrator Averill Harriman says that through the application of export controls the free world has slowed down the rate of military production in Russia. Mr. Harriman says Russian agents in some cases are offering up to ten times the normal price for strategic items which we and our allies refuse to ship to them.

Congress passed a law barring some two hundred and eighty-five strategic items from being sold to the Communist bloc. The same law instructed President Truman to cut off American aid from any of our allies who traded in these items. Mr. Harriman admits that there is still some smuggling going on; and he points out that some of our allies in Western Europe and Asia must trade behind the Iron Curtain in order to get commodities they need for their own defense effort. He isn't in favor of trying to cut off all trade with Russia, and believes that the West is getting more benefit than is the Soviet Union from the East-West trade that still exists.

The Russians appear to be content with their rate of production. One of their Deputy Prime Ministers told the Communist Party Congress in Moscow today that there would be no trouble in converting peacetime industry to a war basis in order to turn out everything needed by the Russian Army and Navy. "This, of course," he said, "in case the Imperialists force war upon us." It was admitted, however, that there is still a shortage of consumer goods, because Russia must concentrate on constructing the "means of production;" and that means heavy industry easily converted to military production.

There is little doubt that the sum total of Russian production has increased very considerably. At two great international trade fairs in Leipzig and Vienna they have produced huge exhibits, offering heavy machinery, trucks, tractors, automobiles, bulldozers, as well as a lot of modern equipment including linotypes, calculating machines, dental apparatus, generators and washing machines. Our government spent thousands of dollars in Vienna, buying these Russian products. Preliminary examination by our experts indicates that these Russian products are not up to American standards, and that many of them ~~were made from~~ are copies of old American models. But they are completely saleable in East European and Asian markets, which can't afford American goods.

The whole tenor of the Communist Party's Congress in Moscow XXXX indicates that they're going in for a big economic offensive, coupled with an effort to relax world tension - to persuade Western Europe particularly that there is no real urgency about looking to its defenses. For example, two days after Stalin laid down the new Party line the Polish Government cut its prices for coal down to eighteen-and-a-half dollars a ton. Poland has agreed to deliver two hundred and fifty thousand tons to Austria, and the Austrians have accepted because they've been paying twenty-two dollars a ton for American coal. The Russians have stopped stalling on their grain deliveries to Great Britain. Bulgaria is shipping ten thousand tons of corn and rye to Austria. Hungary is now dumping agricultural products into Western Europe at prices which our experts say won't even cover the production costs. Rumania is now offering timber to the Middle East at cut rate prices, and has already frozen Yugoslavia out of that market.

There has been considerable speculation that the Russians would concentrate on Germany and Japan - try to woo them economically with markets in Eastern Europe and Asia. But our experts in Vienna believe now that the Russian program is much broader, aimed at weakening the whole Western bloc. They may well have some successes. We are narrowing our assistance program in Europe, have been ruffling some feelings recently, particularly in France, by our inability to make specific financial commitments for coming years.

The Russian purpose is clear: increased trade with Western Europe, combined with a lulling of the fear of war, thus reducing the sense of urgency in re-arming Western Europe.

It would be easy, and to many of us it would be attractive ~~xxxx~~ for us to become less involved in Europe. The Russians apparently are going to do what they can to make it easier than ever for us to do just that.

The Russians...rich in natural resources [redacted]...are trying to act the role of middleman between their satallites and the west. Disraeli once described a middleman this way:" He's a man who bamboozles one party and plunders the other." In the case of Russia the evidence seems to fit the definition. But, as Thomas Jefferson once pointed out:"The selfish spirit [redacted] of commerce knows no country and feels no passion or principle except gain."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Oct. 16

This is the news:

Secretary of State Acheson told the United Nations today; we shall stop fighting in Korea only when we have achieved an armistice on just terms. (I'd like to review the Secretary's speech in a few minutes.) The chief Communist leaders in Korea today demanded of General Mark Clark, that we end what they call "the unreasonable action of breaking off armistice negotiations." But General Clark's headquarters says the enemy demand has no constructive proposal for an agreement..contains more "propaganda."

American troops today stopped two Chinese attacks against the position we hold on top to Triangle Hill, on the central front. And nearby, South Korean forces hold another hill-top they lost temporarily earlier in the day.

The President said today that if General Eisenhower has any cures for the situation in Korea, its his duty to inform the President, so that "lives can be saved right now." Mr. Truman, campaigning in Connecticut, said that the voters must keep the country "in the right groove" or we may get into the "most disastrous war in history." He also charged that if the Republicans win "you have a chance of having 28 million unemployed."

~~The President praised Secretary Acheson as having contributed more than almost anybody in the country to developing our positive program to stop~~

2

And at New Britain, the President took time to play a few bars of the "Black Hawk Waltz" on a piano set up in front of the town hall.

Here in New York tonight, General Eisenhower, who has been critical of the Administration's foreign policy, will say that with such help as the Marshal plan "European governments that might have stumbled toward communism in 1945 have held fast to their freedom." The General also says Russia has been deterred by the intervention of United Nations forces in Korea. The "vigor and courage" of the allied forces astonished a Kremlin that had been led to believe that Korea could provide a cheap and easy victory. The General also said the worst jolt suffered by Russia since 1945 is the fact that the predicted American economic collapse has never occurred. General Eisenhower says our economy remains "vulnerable and insecure in many ways." The primary task of any President would have to be to see to it that this country never again suffers a great depression. The General's speech, described as non-political, will be made before the Alfred E. Smith Memorial foundation dinner.

~~[illegible] to the free world's unity~~. Earlier, campaigning in New Jersey, the General said: "We cannot afford what we are spending today and still stay strong enough to lead the world toward peace." He said "someone" is making a terrible mistake believing that we can have and MAINTAIN military strength above our capacity to pay."

4

world Communism. He charged that General Eisenhower is trying to barter the nation's off-shore oil for votes. And, at New Britain, he took time to play a few bars of the Black Haw Waltz on a piano set up in front of the town hall.

The General campaigned in New Jersey today. He said: We cannot afford what we are spending today and still stay strong enough to lead the world toward peace. Someone is making a terrible error: believing that we can have and maintain military strength above our capacity to pay." The General denied that he ever said we cannot afford to defend ourselves. And he spoke of a feeling of uneasiness, he'd found around the nation, that the people have not been led the way they would like to be led. Earlier, the General received the support of M.A. Hutcheson, the president of the A.F of L, carpenters union. He said Eisenhower promised "a sincere effort to eradicate unfair sections" of the Taft-Hartley law.

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in California, said that the Administration acted to halt aggression in Korea. This saved the United Nations. And he believes the U.N. and international co-operation (--AND NOTHING ELSE--) will save us all. The Governor said the General now talks of expanding social security but in 1949, he said, Eisenhower said if people want security they can go to prison. Tomorrow, the governor campaigns in Texas. General Eisenhower recently completed his southern tour. My colleague, Edward P. Morgan, is now in Dallas, trying to weigh the rival claims of the two parties. Ed, how does the situation look now?

(3;30 returning:

.. "with the outcome a colossal question mark."

In Washington today the United States Court of Appeals ruled that a government worker cannot be fired merely because he is a member of an organiztion listed by the attorney general as subversive. The court said there must also be a finding [redacted] of reasonable grounds [redacted] to believe the employe is [redacted] disloyal. The case concerns James Kutcher, a member of the Socialist Workers party, who lost both his legs in Italy during the war. Kutcher calls the decision "a great victory for the civil liberties of all Americans."

Economic Stabilizer Putnam today asked the Wage Stabilization Board to postpone a decision on the soft coal contract. And an estimated 150-thousand miners, angered by the delay in approving their $1.90 a day wage increase, have walked off their jobs.

Edward R. Murrow: October 16, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today Secretary of State Acheson, addressing the United Nations General Assembly, ranged himself alongside both Presidential candidates by saying in effect that he didn't have any solution for the Korean war. He said: "We shall fight on as long as is necessary to stop the aggression and to restore peace and security in Korea." He asked for more help from the other members of the United Nations. And Mr. Acheson said, "We must convince the aggressor that continued fighting in Korea will cost him more than he can gain." Mr. Acheson said: "The United Nations fight in Korea is the fight of every nation and every individual who values freedom. "Had our nerve failed at the time of this ruthless act of aggression, these new buildings in which we meet today might already be the empty husks of our defeated hopes for this organization." Had the Republic of Korea been allowed to fall to the aggressor, the delegates to these assemblies would now be looking to their left and to their right and asking which would be the next victim on the aggressor's list."

Mr. Acheson said the United States will not commit aggression with rifles, machine guns or tanks. We will not commit aggression with atomic bombs, or any other kind of bombs. We will not permit aggression with chemical weapons or bacteriological weapons which we have been falsely and slanderously accused of using. We will not commit aggression with any weapons or by any means.

According to Secretary Acheson it is in Korea that our whole structure of collective security is meeting its supreme test.

We have word tonight that three officials of a Hungarian shoe factory have failed to meet their test. They were fired, and sentenced to wear for three days the shoes made in their own factory. There had been complaints from consumers - hundreds of them - poor quality, contents of the shoe boxes didn't match the description on the box concerning size, color or style of the shoes. Many times there was only one shoe in the box instead of two; frequently they were of different sizes and colors; nails protruded from the soles; not infrequently the toe of a shoe came off at a touch; the tongues were not attached to the shoes, but merely accompanied them. ~~THEXEXPERXXX relationship this report could have to much of the current political oratory could be found in the charge that in the case of the Hungarian shoes some of the tongues were not attached.

Iran today broke diplomatic relations with the British. Premier Mossadegh in a broadcast to his nation said the British have wasted time in trying to settle the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute. Mossadegh says this action does not mean any break in the "bonds of friendship" between the two countries.

WAashington officials say Mos adegh's action is "most unfortunate" will make any settlement of the 18-month-old dispute very difficult.

John Foster Dulles, the Republican foreign policy advisor, says Iran's decision "further illustrates the bancruptcy of the Administration's diplomacy."

We were talking of the relationship between shoe-making and speech-making. And it would seem that in both cases it's pretty much a question of the seller trying to satisfy the buyer. Plutarch, who knew much about both politics and shoes once observed:"A shoesmaker is npt a good craftsman who puts big shoes on a small foot. Because no one, including the shoemaker,can tell me where my shoes pinches me."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, October 16, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Edward P. Morgan is now in Dallas, trying to weigh the rival claims of the two parties.

Ed, how does the situation look now?

MORGAN: Ed, the situation is as tense as an old-fashioned Texas ranch range feud, with everything exploding except the six-shooters. No actual gunplay has punctuated the campaign so far, but there has been more than one report of fisticuffs at social gatherings, so high have tempers risen. Why does this bitterness run so deep? At stake are Texas' twenty-four electoral votes, almost one-tenth of the total needed to win the Presidency. But at stake, too, the observer is told, are the political and financial fortunes of many important Texans. The intensity of the conflict becomes almost unbearable because it involves a break with a Democratic voting tradition which, with the single exception of Herbert Hoover's victory over Al Smith here in 1928, which goes back clear to the Civil War. Texans don't take these changes lightly. But the break to the Republican camp this time is powerfully impressive. It is led by this fabulous state's no small number of millionnaires in oil, livestock, banking and other enterprises and it includes notably much of the state's Democratic Party organization, headed by Governor Shivers, himself a wealthy man. It also includes uncountable numbers of just ordinary folks, the so-called average voters.

But the fact that major business interests are so active in the campaign gives General Eisenhower at the outset certain apparent advantages over Governor Stevenson, particularly in finances and organization. It may sound naive to report that the Administration Democrats are on the short side of the bankroll in Texas, but that appears to be the undeniable situation this time. Speaker Sam Rayburn, who is spearheading the Stevenson campaign, goes so far as to state flatly that if they thought it necessary, the Republicans could raise as much money in Texas as the Democrats could in the entire rest of the nation. Rayburn admits the outcome in November is in doubt, but he says, "if the folks get out and vote, we're going to beat them." He is banking on an almost solid Democratic vote in the rural areas to offset inroads Eisenhower may well make in the cities. Republican spokesmen maintain a ground swell is abuilding for the general.

Another tangible development that may be in the Republican's favor is a ruling just announced by Attorney General Price Daniel that voters can scratch the names of Stevenson and Sparkman off the Democratic ballot and write in the names of Eisenhower and Nixon. This, of course, may add up to little more than confusion.

Stevenson supporters have been obliged to set up separate organizations in most Texas counties where existing party organizations have gone along with Governor Shivers' endorsement of Eisenhower. The Stevenson people charge that pressure and prejudice have been brought to bear against them from unequal play of political stories in pro-Eisenhower newspapers to actual, if subtle, threats to political job-holders and individual business men. In reply, Eisenhower forces point to the clear implication of Democratic National Chairman Mitchell that because of his endorsement of the General no Federal patronage will go to Attorney General Daniel, the nominee to succeed Senator Tom Connally.

Fresh material for speculation comes now in trying to evaluate the effect of the endorsement of Stevenson by former Vice President John Nance Garner, one of the few major Democratic figures in the state to do so. Stevenson will see Garner on Saturday. Even for Texas, accustomed to superlatives, this is one of the most furious campaigns in memory, with the outcome still a colossal question mark.

MURROW: In Washington today the United States Court of Appeals ruled that a government worker cannot be fired merely because he is a member of an organization listed by the Attorney General as subversive.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

(30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Acheson told the United Nations today; we shall stop fighting in Korea only when we have achieved an armistice on just terms. I'd like to review the Secretary's speech in a few minutes. The chief Communist leaders in Korea today demanded of General Mark Clark that we end what they call "the unreasonable action of breaking off armistice negotiations." But General Clark's headquarters says the enemy demand has no constructive proposal for an agreement...contains more "propaganda."

American troops today stopped two Chinese attacks against the position we hold on top to Triangle Hill on the central front. And nearby South Korean forces hold another hill-top they lost temporarily earlier in the day.

The President said today that if General Eisenhower has any cures for the situation in Korea, its his duty to inform the President, so that "lives can be saved right now." Mr. Truman, campaigning in Connecticut, said that the voters must keep the country "in the right groove" or we may get into the "most disastrous war in history." He also charged that if the Republicans win "you have a chance of having 28-million unemployed."

And at New Britain, the President took time to play a few bars of the "Black Hawk Waltz" on a piano set up in front of the town hall.

Here in New York tonight, General Eisenhower, who has been critical of the Administration's foreign policy, will say that with such help as the Marshal plan "European governments that might have stumbled toward communism in 1945 have held fast to their freedom." The General also says Russia has been deterred by the intervention of United Nations forces in Korea. The "vigor and courage" of the allied forces astonished a Kremlin that had been led to believe that Korea could provide a cheap and easy victory. The General also said the worst jolt suffered by Russia since 1945 is the fact that the predicted American economic collapse has never occurred. General Eisenhower says our economy remains "vulnerable and insecure in many ways." The primary task of any President would have to be to see to it that this country never again suffers a great depression. The General's speech, described as non-political, will be made before the Alfred E. Smith Memorial foundation dinner.

Earlier, campaigning in New Jersey, the General said: "We cannot afford what we are spending today and still stay strong enough to lead the world toward peace. He said "someone" is making a terrible mistake believing that we can have and maintain military strength above our capacity to pay."

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in California, said that the Administration acted to halt aggression in Korea. This saved the United Nations. And he believes the U.N. and international cooperation and nothing else...will save us all. The Governor said the General now talks of expanding social security but in 1949, he said, Eisenhower said if people want security they can go to prison. Tomorrow, the governor campaigns in Texas. General Eisenhower recently completed his southern tour. My colleague, Edward P. Morgan, is now in Dallas, trying to weigh the rival claims of the two parties. Ed, how does the situation look now?

MORGAN: Ed, the situation is as tense as an old-fashioned Texas ranch feud, with everything exploding except the six-shooters. No actual gunplay has punctuated the campaign so far, but there has been more than one report of fistcuffs at social gatherings, so high have tempers risen. Why does this bitterness run so deep? At stake are Texas' twenty-four electoral votes, almost one-tenth of the total needed to win the Presidency. But at stake, too, the observer is told, are the political and financial fortunes of many important Texans. The intensity of the conflict becomes almost unbearable because it involves a break with a Democratic voting tradition which, with the single exception of Herbert Hoover's victory over Al Smith here in 1928, which goes back clear to the Civil War. Texans don't take these changes lightly. But the break to the Republican camp this time is powerfully impressive. It is led by this fabulous state's no small number of millionaires in oil, livestock, banking and other enterprises and it includes notably much of the state's Democratic Party organization, headed by Governor Shivers, himself a wealthy man. It also includes uncountable numbers of just ordinary folks, the so-called average voters.

But the fact that major business interests are so active in the campaign gives General Eisenhower at the outset certain apparent advantages over Governor Stevenson, particularly in finances and organization. It may sound naive to report that the Administration Democrats are on the short side of the bankroll in Texas, but that appears to be the undeniable situation this time. Speaker Sam Rayburn, who is spearheading the Stevenson campaign, goes so far as to state flatly that if they thought it necessary, the Republicans could raise as much money in Texas as the Democrats could in the entire rest of the nation. Rayburn admits the outcome in November is in doubt, but he says, "if the folks get out and vote, we're going to beat them." He is banking on an almost solid Democratic vote in the rural areas to offset inroads Eisenhower may well make in the cities. Republican spokesmen maintain a ground swell is a building for the general.

Another tangible development that may be in the Republican's favor is a ruling just announced by Attorney General Price Daniel that voters can scratch the names of Stevenson and Sparkman off the Democratic ballot and write in the names of Eisenhower and Nixon. This, of course, may add up to little more than confusion.

Stevenson supporters have been obliged to set up separate organizations in most Texas counties where existing party organizations have gone along with Governor Shivers' endorsement of Eisenhower. The Stevenson people charge that pressure and prejudice have been brought to bear against them from unequal play of political stories in pro-Eisenhower newspapers to actual, if subtle, threats to political job-holders and individual business men. In reply, Eisenhower forces point to the clear implication of Democratic National Chairman Mitchell that because of his endorsement of the General no Federal patronage will go to Attorney General Daniel, the nominee to succeed Senator Tom Connally.

Fresh material for speculation comes now in trying to evaluate the effect of the endorsement of Stevenson by former Vice President John Nance Garner, one of the few major Democratic figures in the state to do so. Stevenson will see Garner on Saturday. Even for Texas, accustomed to superlatives, this is one of the most furious campaigns in memory, with the outcome still a colossal question mark.

MURROW: In Washington today the United States Court of Appeals ruled that a government worker cannot be fired merely because he is a member of an organization listed by the attorney general as subversive. The court said there must also be a finding of reasonable grounds to believe the employe is disloyal. The case concerns James Kutcher, a member of the Socialist Workers party, who lost both his legs in Italy during the war. Kutcher calls the dicision "a great victory for the civil liberties of all Americans."

Economic Stabilizer Putnam today asked the Wage Stabilization Board to postpone a dicision on the soft coal contract. And an estimated 150-thousand miners, angered by the delay in approving their $1.90 a day wage increase, have walked off their jobs.

Iran today broke diplomatic relations with the British. Premier Mossedegh in a broadcast to his nation said the British have wasted time in trying to settle the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute. Mossadegh says this action does not mean any break in the "bonds of friendship" between the two countries. Washington officials say Mossadegh's act on is "most unfortunate" will make any settlement of the 18-month old dispute very difficult.

John Foster Dulles, the Republican foreign policy advisor, says Iran's decision "further illustrates the bankruptcy of the Administration's diplomacy."

Today Secretary of State Acheson, addressing the United Nations General Assembly, ranged himself alongside both Presidential candidates by saying in effect that he didn't have any solution for the Korean war. He said: "We shall fight on as long as is necessary to stop the aggression and to restore peace and security in Korea." He asked for more help from the other members of the United Nations. And Mr. Acheson said, "We must convince the aggressor that continued fighting in Korea will cost him more than he can gain." Mr. Acheson said: "The United Nations fight in Korea is the fight of every nation and every individual who values freedom. Had our nerve failed at the time of this ruthless act of aggression, these new buildings in which we meet today might already be the empty husks of our defeated hopes for this organization." Had the Republic of Korea been allowed to fall to the aggressor, the delegates to these assemblies would now be looking to their left and to their right and asking which would be the next victim on the aggressor's list."

Mr. Acheson said the United States will not commit aggression with rifles, machine guns or tanks. We will not commit aggression with atomic bombs, or any other kind of bombs. We will not permit aggression with chemical weapons or bacteriological weapons which we have been falsely and slanderously accused of using. We will not commit aggression with any weapons or by any means.

According to Secretary Acheson it is in Korea that our whole structure of collective security is meeting its supreme test.

We have word tonight that three officials of a Hungarian shoe factory have failed to meet their test. They were fired, and sentenced to wear, for three days the shoes made in their own factory. There had been complaints from consumers hundreds of them - poor quality, contents of the shoe boxes didn't match the description on the box concerning size, color or style of the shoes. Many times there was only one shoe in the box instead of two; frequently they were of different sizes and colors; nails protruded from the soles; not infrequently the toe of a shoe came off at a touch; the tongues were not attached to the shoes, but merely accompanies them.

I don't suppose there is any moral to this story, unless it be an implied commercial for American shoe manufacturers, who seem able to get the same color and the same size into the same box. The only possible relationship this report could have to much of the current political oratory could be found in the charge that in the case of the Hungarian shoes "some of the tongues were not "attached."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the relationship between shoe-making and speech-making. And it would seem that in both cases, it's pretty much a question of the seller trying to satisfy the buyer. Plutarch, who knew much about both politics and shoes once observed: "A shoemaker is not a good craftsman who puts big shoes on a small foot. Because no one, including the shoemaker, can tell me where my shoe pinches me."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday Oct 12/1952

This is the news:

Communist Poland today proposed an immediate end to the Korean war. (under terms similar to those we have turned down at Panmunjom.) The Polish delegate told the United Nations Assembly he would want all foreign forces to withdraw from Korea (including the Chinese). He would have all prisoners of war returned to their home countries. (We have consistently opposed the return of prisoners who do not want to go back to China or North Korea.)

~~The Polish delegate spoke often and [illegible] speak for [illegible] at tomorrow's session [illegible]~~. Paul Martin of Canada told the assembly the recent allied truce proposals on war prisoners should have gone a long way toward convicing any open-minded persons that "the desire for an agreement is deep and genuine on our side."

In Korea today, some 700 Chinese troops again attacked South Korean positions on the central front. At last report the Roks were still holding their hill-top. To the west, the South Koreans withdrew from another hill ~~top~~. Official allied estimates put the Communists killed and wounded in the past nine days at 18-thousand men.

The State Department today accused Russia of the "wanton destruction of An American B-29 bomber near Japan ten days ago. In one of the sharpest notes we have sent to Moscow, we demand compensation for the plane.. for any of the eight crewmen who may have died. We accuse Moscow of "calculated misrepresentation of the facts." And we warn the Russians "seriously to consider the grave consequences which can flow from its reckless practise, if persisted in, of attacking, without provocation, the aircraft of other states." There is no amplification of what the "grave consequences" might be. This is the fourth American plane to be destroyed, or forced down, by Soviet fighters.

In this country, the politicians have been very busy..increasing the tone and the volume of their charges. On one thing, the President and General Eisenhower found themselves in agreement. Both attacked the Mc Carran Immigration Bill. The General, in Newark, New jersey tonight, will say that the law must be re-written.. that it discriminates against residents of Greece, Italy and southeastern Europe. He will say that with "leadership rather than vetoes" a better law can be worked out. The President, who vetoed the bill, wrote the Jewish Welfare Board in Washington that although the General took a leading part in liberating Europe from the Nazis, he is now willing to embrace Nazi practises, by supporting [redacted] senators who voted for the bill: such as Senators McCarthy, Jenner, and Nixon. [redacted]

ON some questions, the [redacted] General and the President.. (in advanced copies of speeches they will make tonight). touch[redacted] on the same issue. The President, in Boston, says Eisenhower cannot be trusted in the White House, because he welcomes the [redacted] slanderers of General Marshal.. a reference to Senators Mc Carthy and Jenner. Truman says a man who won't stand up for the honor and good name of a friend, cannot be trusted. [redacted] Eisenhower, in New Jersey, has this to say: "I [redacted] have abandoned no part of my belief in any of the men I consider great patriots. In this group stands General Marshal."

Eisenhower charges that the Democrats are running a fear campaign, with lying propgganda. Truman says the Republican campaign, is the most un-American since the attacks on Al Smith in the 1928 campaign.

Eisenhower says he has not departed from his deep conviction that we must work with our allies for peace and prosperity. Truman says if we mean to hold the line against Communist aggression there must be no cheap political talk about bringing the boys back from Korea.

[redacted]

Truman says Eisenhower, in supporting [redacted] men who "butcher the reputations of innocent people" has approved "a reign of terror by slander"... this threatens Democrats, liberals and all minorities. Eisenhower says the Democrats have been guilty of the systematic exploitation of minority groups.

[redacted]

The candidates & the President had much more to say. Here is a summary of each one's [redacted] contribution:

Truman said: Eisenhower is willing to undermine our national safety if that will get him elected..Eisenhower, in politics, is like a fish out of water. The General gives the impression that he, as president, would majestically bring the boys home from Korea..let South Koreans take over. [redacted] It can't be done without appeasing the Communists and Eisenhower knows it. [redacted] to [redacted] The charge that the Administration is soft on Communism is "preposterous".. TRUMAN SAYS: it would be hard to find a more fantastic perversion of the truth.

Now, here's what Eisenhower has to say: Truman, who claims to be the only true friend of the Negro, voted against the removal of poll taxes for soldier voters when he was a senator in 1942. The General says if he is elected he will personally confer with all 48 governors, urge them to take action for a fair employment practise program for those states that do not have it. The Democrats have talked civil rights for 20 years yet [redacted] "racism flourishes in the District of Columbia." [redacted]

[redacted]

"[redacted]." The General says the Administration has been arrogant and indifferent to dishonesty. Reckless expenditures put the nation in the position of living on our childrens piggy banks, and our grand-children's I.O.U's. Taxes must come down.. as soon as world conditions will permit. A Republican administration could better stabilize world conditions and hurry the day when a tax cut is possible.

Governor Stevenson started his day [redacted] California, LATER SPOKE [redacted] in Fort Worth, Texas. Here's what he has to say: it would be a world disaster if the Republicans win in November and get a chance to [redacted] torpedo our foreign policy. If the Republicans win they will abolish farm price supports.. if they "have their way" they would dry up thousands of California acres, and let the soil conservation program erode in dust. They would "presumably" repeal the minimum wage law, and abolish social security. In Fort Worth the Governor will say he couldn't pay the price [redacted] he says the General has paid for Republican party harmony. [redacted] Very aware of the fact that some Democrats in Texas are against him, Stevenson says: "This talk about infidelity in the Democratic [redacted] heart of Texas is greatly exaggerated. I have confidence the people are going to vote in this election as usual." He feels that Democratic politicisns who are working for Republican candidates "ought to be willing to call themselves Republicans".. this was a reference to Democartic Governor Shivers , among others. He said he had been warned that he might be exposed to "disorder created by organized hoodlums" in Texas, but he didn't believe it.

~~More politics: Senator Taft says the Republicans will win in November if only the voters go to the polls. Senator Nixon says the reason the boys are fighting in Korea is because we have an administration that has failed to meet the communist threat at home and abroad. Republican Senator Mundt says the President is putting on "a disgusting exhibition" and making it difficult for decent Americans to vote Democrat.~~

In Washington, Wage Stabilization Chairman Cox says the board may decide tomorrow on the new coal miners contract. An estimated 168-thousand miners have left their jobs..

Senator O'Connor says he feels the nation's security is in danger unless "Americans of questionable loyalty" are immediately driven out of the United Nations employment.

The AF of L teamsters union has chosen Dave Beck of Seattle to be its new president.. succeeding Daniel J. Tobin who resigned after 43 years.

And officials of the West German goverment say they are investigating rumors that Walter Ulbricht, East Germany's communist leader, has been killed by Polish anti-Communists aboard the Warsaw-Moscow express train.

We now depart, but not too far, from the direct reporting of politics. It is part of our purpose to sell you a book. Several years ago Jim Thurber, who uses words with a keener cutting edge than most men, produced a little volume called "Fables For Our Time". His editors have had the good sense to produce a new edition. In this book Mr. Thurber recounts a fable, not unrelated to the current political scene. The pollsters, and our reporters in the field, say that an uncommon number of citizens are cautious, hoarding their votes, haven't made up their minds, are still hesitating. Mr. Thurber's fable, which could be stretched to bear upon this dilemma, is called "The Glass in the Field".

"A short time ago, some builders, working on a studio in Connecticut, left a huge square of plate glass, standing upright in a field one day. A goldfinch, flying swiftly across the field, struck the glass, and was knocked cold. When he came to, he hastened to his club, where an attendant bandaged his head, and gave him a stiff drink. "What the hell happened?" asked a sea gull. "I was flying across a meadow, when all of a sudden the air crystallized on me", said the goldfinch. The sea gull, and a hawk, and an eagle, all laughed heartily. A swallow listened gravely. "For fifteen years, fledgling and bird, I've flown this country", said the eagle, "and I assure you, there is no such thing as air crystallizing. Water, yes; air, no." "You were probably struck by a hailstone," the hawk told the goldfinch. "Or he may have had a stroke," said the sea gull. "What do you think, swallow?" "Why, I - I think maybe the air crystallized on him," said the swallow. The large birds laughed so loudly, that the goldfinch became annoyed, and bet them each a dozen worms that they couldn't follow the course he had flown across the field, without encountering the hardened atmosphere. They all took his bet; the swallow went along to watch. The sea gull, the eagle and the hawk decided to fly together over the route the goldfinch indicated. "You come, too," they said to the swallow. "I - I - well, no," said the swallow. "I don't think I will." So the three large birds took off together, and they hit the glass together, and they were all knocked cold."

Mr. Thurber's moral is: "He who hesitates, is sometimes saved."

It's one of the best things he ever did.

That was one fable from Jim Thurber's "Fables For Our Time". The political campaign still has better than two weeks to go, and those who hesitate in their allegiance may yet be saved. On the other hand, as Mr. Thurber draws the moral from another fable in this excellent book, "a new broom may sweep clean, but never trust an old saw."

There's a certain, indescribable satisfaction one experiences from fables... possibly because they reduce this complicated, minor planet of ours, to terms we can all understand. A wise old man, named George Bernard Shaw, once remarked:"Parables are not lies, because they describe events which never happened." The Roman, Horace, put it another way:"Why laugh at satire ? change but the name and the tale is told of you."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday Oct 27, 1952

This is the news:

Democratic Senator Mc Carran of Nevada today accused both major parties of a "shameful display of demagoguery." Mc Carran, co-author of the Immigration law, says both the Democrats and Republicans are misrepresenting the law to win the votes of minority groups...both have been misled.

Someone else seems to have been misled in a new debate over what the President did or did not say about General Eisenhower being anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic. After a week-end of debate, the President tonight issued a statement saying: "I know that Eisenhower is not anti-Jewish or anti-Catholic. But why does he give his endorsement to Republican Senators who voted for the Mc Carran act.. and practise the big lie and character assassination...both identified with the Master Race theory." The President says his remarks of Friday have been distorted.. deliberately. He still feels Eisenhower is the "captive" of anti-semetic , anti-Catholic and anti-foreign forces in the Republican party. He will not withdraw a word of that critisicm.

In Springfield today, Wilson Wyatt, Governor Stevenson's campaign manager also told reporters the President's remarks had been distorted. #

He addeD: The Great Crusade, became the Great Surrender, and now its the great disillusionment.. and apparently in the final weeks of the campaign it will become the "Great Smear."

General Eisenhower, campigning in New England, said today that the Democrats had over-stepped themselves with the latest charges against him. He said: "I'M not going to answer that. My friends Cardinal Spellman, Rabbi Silver and Bernard Baruch answered for me." The General ASKED of the charges: "How low can you get in this world?"

~~Republican Senator Morse, who has switched his allegiance to Stevenson, today told Bernard Baruch he is disappointed with Mr. Baruch's week-end statement of support for Eisenhower on the racial issue. Morse asked: How can you ignore the fact that intolerant groups who stand for discrimination against minorities are entrenched in the reactionary wing of the Republican party.. and that Eisenhower has endorsed some of them."~~

It appears we will hear more on this argument in the future.

In Massachusetts today, General Eisenhower summarized some of the beliefs that make his campaign a crusade. He is a "no deal" man.. believes we cannot shrug off corruption in government.. that taxes are too high..inflation is a dangerous enemy.. the federal government should be a partner and not an oppressor of the states. And, said the General, anyone who says he wants to cut down social security, unemployment insurance and leave the ill and the aged destitute...is lying. In other speeches, the General said: we must pledge our strength against a recurrence of the crime of depression. Peace is the main problem facing the world. The Democrats are trying to sell a campaign of fear.. full of posion and fantastic lies.

Governor Stevenson was in Springfield today..preparing the speeches he will make on a 12-state campaign trip that begins tomorrow and last until Election Eve.

In Washington, Northern soft coal operators have appealed to striking soft coal miners to go back to work under the pay raise approved by the Wage Stabilization Board... $1.50 an hour. (.40 cents less than the union and management had agreed upon.) But some 300-thousand of the nation's 375-thousand soft coal miners stayed away from the pits today.. under the familiar "no contract, no work" theory of their union. John L. Lewis, who had nothing to say on the subject today, has called the union's wage policy committee to meet in Washington on Wednesday. Government experts say there is now at least a two months supply of soft coal above the ground.

Defense Mobilization Chief Fowler says he agrees with the Wage Board's decision, that to grant the miners the additional 50 cents an hour, would be inconsistent with an effective stabilization program.

Two government hearing officers.. members of the Subversive Activities Control Board..ruled today that the Communist party in this country strives incessantly to make America a Soviet America. After 14-months of hearing, Peter Campbell Brown and Dr. Kathryn Mc Hale conclude that American Communists live for the day when they can install a dictatorship of the proleteriat in America. They find that the Soviet Union directs, dominates, controls, educates, and to some extent, finances the American party. They have ruled that the Communists must register with the Justice Department, under the Mc Carran Internal Security Act, and make public a list of its members and a financial accounting. Former Congressman Marcantonio, who defended the party in the hearings, says this is a political decision: to help Gov. Stevenson prove that he's a better red hunter than Senator Mc Carthy and the Republicans. MARCANTONIO is confident the people will repudiate what he calls "this violation of the bill of rights".

The United States has proposed to the United Nations that a special commission be formed for an investigation in Korea of Communists charges that American forces have used germ warfare. The Russians vetoed a similar proposal in the Security Council last July.

Australia announced today that it will "stand firm" with the United States in rejecting forcible repatriation of prisoners in Korea.

General Clark, in Tokyo, has refused to re-open the armistice talks on the enemy's terms.

And in Korea, there was comparatively little ground fighting, as big guns from both sides dueled..and the troops dug in for another expected enemy attack.

Any reporter obliged to read and listen to campaign speeches is entitled to wonder what a "man from Mars" would make of it all. [I suspect that he would be somewhat confused.] He would observe two candidates in a capitalistic country who "never met a payroll" or belonged to a union. Two men who once asserted stoutly they didn't want the job, but are now persuaded that if they don't get it the citizens will all deserve what's coming to them. The man from Mars might conclude that we have psychological difficulties, (being unable to distinguish between "emotions and intellect;") also a certain biological confusion as for example between the backbone and the funny bone. At times he might wonder as to the identity of the two candidates, other than Truman and Taft. At times he might lose sight ~~Sight might be lost~~ of some of the major issues somewhere between Cromwell and Nixon's income tax return - (neither being visible even to a man from Mars.) He might wonder about newspapers, radio, pollsters and experts turning out millions of words, pregnant and profound, in order to conclude that "it's going to be close." Each side accuses the other of trying to spread fear and confusion, but the people somehow don't seem as fearful of the future as the candidates.

This man from Mars might wonder why, if there are so many Communists in the government, no one is saying their vote will be decisive;- might wonder, too, whether the "little men and moral pygmies" can vote; what time is it, when it's time for a change? And why, in a country that prides itself upon reason and efficiency, candidates kiss babies, when the babies can't vote? And do the special appeals to Catholics, Jews and Negroes, mean that they can vote twice? What has happened to a country where a cloth coat can get more advertising than an already publicized mink coat? [And what does a dog that has only one name have to do with all this?] What kind of discrimination is it, where the newspapers mention only two men out of a hundred and fifty million -, Joe Lewis for Stevenson, and Lou Little for Eisenhower. And Mr. Bernard Baruch will make up his mind in due course - and how many votes does he have?

This reporter is unfamiliar with industrial and agricultural conditions on Mars, but the visitor from there might wonder whether the farmers here, subjected to special appeals, have anything in common with the factory worker. And what are the prospects on this planet for men who seek employment in the ancient profession of turning back clocks?

The man from Mars would discover that both candidates are dishonest demagogues, according to the other fellow; that the basic issues are peace and prosperity, but that only one Party can achieve both. He would discover that the man whose administration formed the plans, requested the appropriations to stop aggressive Communism, is accused of being "soft" towards Communists - discover, too, that the man who led the mighty armies that conquered Nazi Germany is now being accused of being willing to accept Nazi ~~[illegible]~~ THEORY. This Martian visitor might be confused about how we got into the war in Korea. Did Acheson do it with a speech in 1950? Or did Eisenhower do it with a military decision about five years earlier. The man from Mars, having what might be called "a better global view of the situation," might decide that it was Communist aggression - North Korean, Chinese and Russian - that started the whole thing. He might be mildly interested to note that that war, for months buried inside, suddenly became Page One news, with pictures. He might wonder whether there are more captives on the political or the military front; might wonder, too, why no one has put to either candidate a question that was oft repeated and widely reported in the campaign of only four years ago. No one asks the Governor or the ~~[illegible]~~ General: "Sir, if elected, will you keep that balcony on the White House?"

The man from Mars might conclude that we're heading straight for a civilization dominated by females, since Mamie Eisenhower and Margaret Truman are indubitably the most charming and popular passengers on the campaign trains.

The man from Mars might wonder whether his journey was, in fact, necessary; but he can at least take home the report that neither Party intends aggression against his planet; and there have been no threats to reduce foreign aid in his area. And if he stays around for another couple of weeks he may discover that both Parties have engaged in some slight exaggerations here and there. And if he pursues his researches with diligence he may discover what happens to old campaign buttons; and that an individual called Santa Claus, hardly more improbable than some of our politicians, is just around the corner.

Political die-hards would conclude that their particular candidates are conducting a campaign that is "out of this world." Thus, our mythical visitor from Mars. He would probably remind "earth-people" of this line from Gilbert & Sullivan:"Things are seldom what they seem. Skim milk masquarades as cream." Agnes Repler put it in the modern version when she said:"The clear-sighted may not rule the world, but they sustain and console it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Democratic Senator McCarran of Nevada today accused both major parties of a "shameful display of demagoguery." McCarran, co-author of the Immigration law, says both the Democrats and Republicans are misrepresenting the law to win the votes of minority groups...buth have been misled.

Someone else seems to have been misled in a new debate over what the President did or did not say about General Eisenhower being anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic. After a weekend of debate, the President tonight issued a statement saying: "I know that Eisenhower is not anti-Jewish or anti-Catholic. But why does he give his endorsement to Republican Senators who voted for the McCarran Act...and practice the big lie and character assassination...both identified with the Master Race theory." The President says his remarks of Friday have been distorted...deliberately. He still feels Eisenhower is the "captive" of anti-semetic, anti-Catholic and anti-foreign forces in the Republican party. He will not withdraw a word of that criticism.

In Springfield today, Wilson Wyatt, Governor Stevenson's campaign manager also told reporters the President's remarks had been distorted. He added: "The Great Crusade became the Great Surrender and now its the great disillusionment...and apparently in the final weeks of the campaign it will become the "Great Smear."

General Eisenhower, campaigning in New England, said today that the Democrats had over-stepped themselves with the latest charges against him. He said: "I'm not going to answer that. My friends Cardinal Spellman, Rabbi Silver and Bernard Baruch answered for me." The General asked of the charges: "How low can you get in this world.?"

It appears we will hear more on this argument in the future.

In Massachusetts today, General Eisenhower summarized some of the beliefs that make his campaign a crusade. He is a "no deal" man...believes we cannot shrug off corruption in government...that taxes are too high...inflation is a dangerous enemy...the federal government should be a partner and not an oppressor of the states. And, said the General, anyone who says he wants to cut down social security, unemployment insurance and leave the ill and the aged destitute...is lying. In other speeches, the General said: we must pledge our strength against a recurrence of the crime of depression. Peace is the main problem facing the world. The Democrats are trying to sell a campaign of fear.. full of poison and fantastic lies.

Governor Stevenson was in Springfield today...preparing the speeches he will make on a 12-state campaign trip that begins tomorrow and lasts until Election Eve.

In Washington, Northern soft coal operators have appealed to striking soft coal miners to go back to work under the pay raise approved by the Wage Stabilization Board...$1.50 per hour...40 cents less than the union and management had agreed upon. But some 300-thousand of the nation's 375-thousand soft coal miners stayed away from the pits today...under the familiar "no contract, no work" the cry of their union. John L. Lewis, who had nothing to say on the subject today, has called the union's wage policy committee to meet in Washington on Wednesday. Government experts say there is now at least a two-months supply of soft coal above the ground.

Defense Mobilization Chief Fowler says he agrees with the Wage Board's decision that to grant the miners the additional 50 cents an hour would be inconsistent with an effective stabilization program.

Two Government hearing officers...members of the Subversive Activities Control Board...ruled today that the Communist party in this country strives incessantly to make America a Soviet America. After 14 months of hearing, Peter

Campbell Brown and Dr. Kathryn McHale conclude that American Communists live for the day when they can install a dictatorship of the proleteriat in America. They find that the Soviet Union directs, dominates, controls, educates and to some extent, finances the American party. They have ruled that the Communists must register with the Justice Department, under the McCarran Internal Security Act, and make public a list of its members and a financial accounting. Former Congressman Marcantonio, who defended the party in the hearings, says this is a political decision: to help Governor Stevenson prove that he's a better red hunter than Senator McCarthy and the Republicans. Marcantonio is confident the people will repudiate what he calls "this violation of the bill of rights."

The United States has proposed to the United Nations that a special commission be formed for an investigation in Korea of Communists charges that American forces have used germ warfare. The Russians vetoed a similar proposal in the Security Council last July.

Australia announced today that it will "stand firm" with the United States in rejecting forcible repatriation of prisoners in Korea.

General Clark, in Tokyo, has refused to re-open the armistice talks on the enemy's terms.

And in Korea, there was comparatively little ground fighting, as big guns from both sides dueled...and the troops dug in for another expected enemy attack.

Any reporter obliged to read and listen to campaign speeches is entitled to wonder what a "man from Mars" would make of it all. (I suspect that he would be somewhat confused.) He would observe two candidates in a capitalistic country who "never met a payroll" or belonged to a union. Two men who once asserted stoutly they didn't want the job, but are now persuaded that if they don't get it, the citizens will all deserve what's coming to them. The man from Mars might conclude that we have psychological difficulties, (being unable to distinguish between"emotions and intellect;") also a certain biological confusion as for example between the backbone and the funny bone. At times he might wonder as to the identity of the two candidates, other than Truman and Taft. At times he might lose sight of some of the major issues somewhere between Cromwell and Nixon's income tax return (neither being visible even to a man from Mars.) He might wonder about newspapers, radio, pollsters and experts turning out millions of words, pregnant and profound, in order to conclude that "it's going to be close." Each side accuses the other of trying to spread fear and confusion, but the people somehow don't seem as fearful of the future as the candidates.

This man from Mars might wonder why, if there are so many Communists in the government, no one is saying their vote will be decisive; - might wonder, too, whether the "little men and moral pygmies" can vote; what time is it, when it's time for a change? And why, in a country that prides itself upon reason and efficiency, candidates kiss babies when the babies can't vote? And do the special appeals to Catholics, Jews and Negroes mean that they can vote twice? What has happened to a country where a cloth coat can get more advertising than an already publicized mink coat? And what does a dog that has only one name have to do with all this? What kind of discrimination is it where the newspapers mention only two men out of a hundred and fifty million - Joe Lewis for Stevenson, and Lou Little for Eisenhower. And Mr. Bernard Baruch will make up his mind in due course - and how many votes does he have?

This reporter is unfamiliar with industrial and agricultural conditions on Mars, but the visitor from there might wonder whether the farmers here, subjected to special appeals, have anything in common with the factory worker. And what are the prospects on this planet for men who seek employment in the ancient profession of turning back clocks?

The man from Mars would discover that both candidates are dishonest demagogues, according to the other fellow; that the basic issues are peace and prosperity, but that only one Party can achieve both. He would discover that the man whose administration formed the plans, requested the appropriations to stop aggressive Communism, is accused of being "soft" towards Communists - discover, too, that the man who led the mighty armies that conquered Nazi Germany is now being accused of being willing to accept Nazi theory. This Martian visitor might be confused about how we got into the war in Korea. Did Acheson do it with a speech in 1950? Or did Eisenhower do it with a military decision about five years earlier. The man from Mars, having what might be called "a better global view of the situation," might decide that it was Communist aggression - North Korean, Chinese and Russian - that started the whole thing. He might be mildly interested to note that that war, for months buried inside, suddenly became Page One news, with pictures. He might wonder whether there are more captives on the political or the military front; might wonder, too, why no one has put to either candidate a question that was oft repeated and widely reported in the campaign of only four years ago. No one asks the Governor or the General: "Sir, if elected, will you keep that balcony on the White House?"

The man from Mars might conclude that we're heading straight for a civilization dominated by females, since Mamie Eisenhower and Margaret Truman are indubitably the most charming and opoular passengers on the campaign trains.

The man from Mars might wonder whether his journey was, in fact, necessary; but he can at least take home the report that neither Party intends aggression against his planet; and there have been no threats to reduce foreign aid in his area. And if he stays around for another couple of weeks he may discover that both Parties have engaged in some slight exaggerations here and there. And if he pursues his researches with diligence he may discover what happens to old campaign buttons; and that an individual called Santa Claus, hardly more improbably than some of our politicians, is just around the corner.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Political die-hards would conclude that their particular candidates are conducting a campaign that is "out of this world." Thus, our mythical visitor from Mars. He would probably remind "earth-people" of this line from Gilbert & Sullivan: "Things are seldom what they seem. Skim milk masquarados as cream." Agnes Repler put it in the modern version when she said: "The clear-sighted may not rule the world, but they sustain and console it."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Tuesday Oct 21

This is the news:

The campaigning General Eisenhower and President Truman today drew the biggest crowds of the POLITICAL YEAR. In a few minutes we'll have direct reports FROM our correspondents with both men.

Eisenhower, in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, warned that the Communists will use every treacherous method short of war to conquer the free world. ~~He said they are trying to make different groups in our nation hate and distrust each other in a plot to divide us and destroy the free world.~~ He said we can conquer Communism if we have a leadership of high purpose and moral stamina. ~~Again the General accused the Democrats of conducting an campaign of fear and abuse.~~ And the General said he knows about Communism, not from reading books, but from first-hand experience with Communism and Communists..."and --HE SAID-- not of the Yalta or Postdam kind, either." The General again stressed the President's recent remarks on anti-Catholicism and anti-Semitism. He accused the Democrats of waging a campaign of fear and abuse. In the textile centers of Massachusetts.. the General said full employment is a pre-requsite for American strength. To the unemployed in these cities, he promised that if he's elected they could come to Washington--avoid any third string clerk in a back room--and go directly to his office. The General said the Administration has given only lip service to help small business develop. He said the Administration hasn't done enough to cope with unemployment in the textile industry. ~~He promised an Administration dedicated to frugality, efficiency, and honesty. And he again answered Democratic charges that he is Senator Taft's captive. Eisenhower said: "I have lived 62 years and one week, and I have never been anyone's captive yet, and never will be."~~

The President, campaigning in Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, charged that Eisenhower has been talking like a Liberal in the East.. a reactionaery in the West and a Dixiecrat in the South. He said if the Republicans win its a "dead sure cinch" they will wipe out rent and price controls. He said Eisenhower, in ~~blaming~~ BLAMING the Democrats for high prices, either is completely uninformed or indulging in the sheerest hypocrasy. Truman said Eisenhower is speaking "the fanciest brand of double talk" he ever heard. He ridiculed the General's proposal to confer on civil rights with all 48 governors. HE ASKED: "I WONDER HOW WELL ~~he asked. [illegible] he~~ knows Jimmy Byrnes (governor of south Carolina.) ~~The President [illegible] his belief in Vice Presidential candidate Sparkman. Said Sparkman will support~~

~~the party's civil rights platform.~~ The President accused Eisenhower of praising General Marshal in New Jersey..but delteting a reference to him in a Wisconsin speech. He said Eisenhower denounced beurcrats when in New Jersey, but pledged job security for government workers when he spoke in a Maryland suburb near Washington. He said Eisenhower will compromise with anybody on anything..for votes. He predicted that a Republican victory would mean risking our chance for world peace and prosperity at home. ~~He accused the Republicans of a brazen, cruel hoax on the people, trying to tear down their confidence in government.. trafficing in panic and hysteria. And again the President said it was an "outrageous falsehood" to charge that he's been soft on Communism.~~

Governor Stevenson has left Springfield for a 12 state campaign trip. In his first whistle-stop speeches he said Eisenhower amazed him by suggesting that South Koreans be trained to replace American in the Korean front lines. Stevenson said we've been doing just that. ~~and the General is trying to kid the public that he's trying to tell an easy way to end the Korean war. The Governor says there is no easy way.~~

Later tonight, in a broadcast to the Herald Tribune Forum, the Governor will say in our bid for world peace we must never succumb to economic reactionaries and to hate and hysteria mongers. Stevenson will say: we are the first great power in history that has dedicated its strength wholly to peace.. rather than selfish expansion. He feels the image we must reflect to the world must be an image of sanity, serenity and moral and well as economic and military strength.. that he pledges to do. ~~And Stevenson will say that without our full participation in world affairs there can be no free world coalition strong enough to deal with the Russian threat.~~

Republican Senator Morse today denied reports that he had been offered a big job in the event of a Republican victory. Morse, an original Eisenhower supporter, who has switched to Stevenson, says the President offered him "one of the top positions in the government".. believed to be attorney General. Washington reports say the offer was made in December.. three months before the President fired Attorney General Mc Grath. Morse turned it down, he says, because he does not believe in Republicans in a Democratic cabinet, or the other way around. Morse also told reporters: he thinks Eisenhower is a political hypocrite. He says the General's supporters told him that Eisenhower made an agreement with Taft to "save Taft's face." And he says the General's supporters told him that after he came back from his Indiana tour, Eisenhower said he would like to punch Indiania's Senator Jenner in the nose.

In Washington today, John L. Lewis made it clear that the soft coal miners will not work until they are paid the full $1.90 a-day-raise he recently negotiated for them. The Wage Stabilization Board cut this by 40 cents a day. Lewis says that enough to buy milk for a miners family for one day... the miners will fight to protect their milk supply. He says: They have not asked [redacted] Him or the union for advice..and none has been offered. [redacted]

The government today cut civilian steel allocations for the first three months of next year to the lowest level since the start of the Korean war. Some auto makers say this may force them to shut down in February.

The Commerce Department reported today that in the past seven years we have loaned or given to our allies over ~~a~~ one tenth of our national revenue in ~~the~~ those seven years. It comes to 35-billion dollars. Nearly a third of that has been in the form of loans that the recipients have promised to pay back.

Bill Downs CBS New York Murrow show Oct. 21

Dwight Eisenhower today joined an illustrious ~~group~~ list of men -- men whose names are Douglas "wrong-way" Corrigan, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Evangelist Billy Graham.....

The Republican presidential candidate proved, as he has many times before, that he is one of the most magnetic ~~[illegible]~~ personalities now on the American scene. For like Corrigan, Roosevelt and Graham, Eisenhower packed the Boston common, which is about a section of land and requires between 75 and 100-thousand people to ~~do the job.~~ FILL IT UP.

It was a lunch-time Boston crowd made up in a large part of office workers and shoppers who came to see the show.....and of course no one is guessing how many of the people came out to see the General and how many came out to see the GOP candidate.

But nevertheless, these crowds have a tremendous impact on the reporter.....and serve to underline the fact that there is no political expert travelling with Eisenhower, Stevenson, Truman or anyone else who can safely predict what will happen on this night two weeks hence.

The General is bearing up well in his intensive whistle-stopping. He certainly is in better shape than 75 per cent of the people, travelling with him. (He even has energy enough left to get red in the face when he talks about Pres Truman's smear campaign.) After starting out with ~~the~~ Eisenhower ~~switching~~ (what he calls) to Stevenson, and then back with the Republicans again.....I'm not sure what town I'm in half the time.....let alone capable of making any predictions.

After hitting Boston today, we climbed aboard a motorcade that took us past an awful lot of people and we made a series stops in town squares -- all of which are beginning to look alike -- and the General waved and said some words.....mostly the same words....and we climbed on a plane again.....and here we are in New York.

As you know Ed, Ike has made himself famous in this campaign through that gesture of his of throwing both his arms over his head in a giant V sign. I've seen it so often that I think if I ever run into a hold-up, I would approach the victim with his hands in the air and ask for a statement.

It's been my first day back with the Eisenhower train since leaving Stevenson last week. My initial talks with some of the General's managers show that they have lost none of their optimism..... they sincerely believe that there is a land-slide in the making for their man.....a land-slide based on the American people's ardent desire for a change in Washington. They still believe that this undercurrent of demand for a change supercedes any and all of the issues.

One of the Eisenhower backers I talked with today -- and he's a big man in that organization -- actually admitted that he believed Eisenhower had lost some support since the campaign began. ~~I cannot reveal his name, or the organization. But~~ he said that the General probably did lose support from liberals, independents and unhappy Democrats when he embraced Senators Taft, McCarthy and Jenner. ~~But the man that he~~ But my informant called this a comparatively minor loss which will make no difference when the people swarm to the polls a week from Tuesday.

About Massachusetts, those Bay State politicians who we could grab on the run admit that the state's 16 electoral votes are up in the air. ~~[illegible]~~ Like most of the rest of the country, they call Massachusetts a horse race.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, October 21, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: .... Bill Costello had an opportunity to size up the reaction. Bill, tell us about the Truman crowds.

COSTELLO: When President Truman started his whistle-stopping on Labor Day, the crowds were fair-sized, the speeches were humdrum, and the applause was, well, polite but not much more. But from that day at Fargo, N.D., when he first turned his indignation against General Eisenhower, the whole atmosphere changed. Ever since, the crowds have grown steadily larger and more enthusiastic. The feeling at his appearances has been surcharged with increasing tension. You can almost feel the audience waiting for him to fire another barrage at the Republican nominee. Today, crossing New Jersey, the air of campaign excitement reached a new high pitch. There were bands galore, block after block of children waving American flags, cavalcades of politicians waiting to join the Presidential procession, and the biggest crowds of all.

At Newark this morning, where 90,000 heard him speak and nearly a quarter of a million, they say, lined the streets, police and local newsmen agreed it was the biggest turnout in the city's history. Correspondents staring out the window of the press bus exclaimed in amazement as the throng grew thicker, and finally one extrovert expressed the sentiment of at least some reporters when he shouted jubilantly: "And they say Truman is hurting Stevenson! Wowee!" Democratic politicians were equally impressed. They said New Jersey a month ago had virtually been written off to the Republicans. Today they said flatly that Stevenson has at least an even chance. All this, of course, is not without cost to at least one man - Harry Truman himself. He was talking at 7:30 this morning at Wilmington; at 10:30 he left his train and rode in a crowded car until nearly 6:00 tonite; and when he left Philadelphia he had given nine speeches. His caravan is almost always a few minutes late. It's a killing pace for us all and especially for the President, who spends virtually every moment between speeches talking and shaking hands with state and local political leaders.

Tonite, when he began his Philadelphia speech, you could see he had begun to feel the strain, but just as his voice faltered a little there was a booming voice from the crowd shouting: "Pour it on, Harry!" He grinned, straightened his shoulders, and gave. By the time he leaves Pottsville, Penna., tonite he'll have three more speeches behind him - and he's still pouring it on.

MURROW: You've heard from Bill Downs and Bill Costello.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

CUES FOR DOWNS & COSTELLO

MURROW SHOW

DOWNS RUNS 2:30 COMES AT APPROX:

MURROW:

"General Eisenhower had an eventful day in Boston. My colleague, Bill Downs, was there. Bill, what was it like ?"

RETURN CUE:

"...they call Massachussetts a horse race."

MURROW:

Two other pivotal states are New Jersey and Pennsylvania. And President Truman toured both of these today. Bill Costello had an opportunity to size up the reaction. Bill, tell us about Truman's crowds.

RETURN CUE:

"...and he's still pouring it on."

pay back.

[redacted] must [redacted]

In Korea today, South Korean troops threw back an attack by 15-hundred Chinese Communists.

General Harrison, our top peace negotiator, says "I don't believe any man can be a thorough-going Communist without being a criminal." He says this applies to the enemy negotiators at Panmunjom.

[redacted]

One out of every ten dollars our government spends is going for foreign aid. But this, after all, is the price a free world has to pay for security. It's pretty much as Hosea Ballou once said:"It is what we give up, not what we lay up, that adds to our ~~xxxx~~lasting store." John Galsworthy put it another way:" The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The campaigning General Eisenhower and President Truman today drew the biggest crowds of the political year. In a few minutes we'll have direct reports from our correspondents with both men.

Eisenhower, in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, warned that the Communists will use every treacherous method short of war to conquer the free world. He said we can conquer Communism if we have a leadership of high purpose and moral stamina. And the General said he knows about Communism, not from reading books, but from first-hand experience with Communism and Communists..."and not," he said, "of the Yalta or Potsdam kind, either." The General again stressed the President's recent remarks on anti-Catholicism and anti-Semitism. He accused the Democrats of waging a campaign of fear and abuse. In the textile centers of Massachusetts... the General said full employment is a pre-requisite for American strength. To the unemployed in these cities, he promised that if he's elected they could come to Washington..."avoid any third string clerk in a back room"...and go directly to his office. The General said the Administration has given only lip service to help small business develop. He said the Administration hasn't done enough to cope with unemployment in the textile industry.

The President, campaigning in Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, charged that Eisenhower has been talking like a Liberal in the East...a reactionary in the West and a Dixiecrat in the South. He said if the Republicans win its a "dead sure cinch" they will wipe out rent and price controls. He said Eisenhower, in blaming the Democrats for high prices, either is completely uninformed or indulging in the "sheerest hypocrasy." Truman said Eisenhower is speaking "the fanciest brand of double talk" he ever heard. He ridiculed the General's proposal to confer on civil rights with all 48 governors. He asked: "I wonder how well he knows Jimmy Brynes (governor of South Carolina.)"

The President, accused Eiswnhower of praising General Marshal in New Jersey...but deleting a reference to him in a Wisconsin speech. He said Eisenhower denounced beaucrats when in New Jersey, but pledged job security for government workers when he spoke in a Maryland suburb near Washington. He said Eisenhower will compromise with anybody on anything...for votes. He predicted that a Republican victory would mean risking our chance for world peace and prosperity at home.

Governor Stevenson has left Springfield for a 12-state campaign trip. In his first whistle-stop speeches he said Eisenhower amazed him by suggesting that South Koreans be trained to replace American in the Korean front lines. Stevenson said we've been doing just that. Later tonight, in a broadcast to the Herald Tribune Forum, the Governor will say: "In our bid for world peace we must never succumb to economic reactionaries and to hate and hysteria mongers. Stevenson will say: " we are the first great power in history that has dedicated its strength wholly to peace...rather than selfish expansion. He feels the image we must reflect to the world must be an image of sanity, serenity and moral as well as economic and military strength...that he pledges to do.

Republican Senator Morse today denied reports that he had been offered a big job in the event of a Republican victory. Morse, an original Eisenhower supporter, who has switched to Stevenson, says the President offered him "one of the top positions in the government"...believed to be Attorney General. Washington reports say the offer was made in December...three months before the President fired Attorney General McGrath. Morse also told reporters: he thinks Eisenhower is a political hypocrite. He says the General's supporters told him that Eisenhower made an agreement with Taft to "save Taft's face." And he says the General's supporters told him that after he came back from his Indiana tour, Eisenhower said he would like to punch Indiana's Senator Jenner in the nose.

In Washington today, John L. Lewis made it clear that the soft coal miners will not work until they are paid the full $1.90 a day raise, he recently negotiated for them. The Wage Stabilization Board cut this by 40 cents a day. Lewis says thats enough to buy milk for a miners family for one day...the miners will fight to protect their milk supply. He says: They have not asked him or the union for advice...and none has been offered.

The government today cut civilian steel allocations for the first three months of next year to the lowest level since the start of the Korean war. Some auto makers say this may force them to shut down in February.

The Commerce Department reported today, that in the past seven years we have loaned or given to our allies over one-tenth of our national revenue in those seven years. It comes to 35-billion dollars. Nearly a third of that has been in the form of loans that the recipients have promised to pay back.

General Eisenhower had an eventful day in Boston. My colleague, Bill Downs, was there. Bill, what was it like?"

DOWNS: Dwight Eisenhower today joined an illustrious list of men - men whose names are Douglas "wrong-way" Corrigan, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Evangalist Billy Graham...

The Republican presidential candidate proved, as he has many times before, that he is one of the most magnetic personalities now on the American scene. For like Corrigan, Roosevelt and Graham, Eisenhower packed the Boston common, which is about a section of land and requires between 75 and 100-thousand people to fill it up.

It was a lunch-time Boston crowd made up in a large part of office workers and shoppers who came to see the show...and of course no one is guessing how many of the people came out to see the General and how many came out to see the GOP candidate.

But nevertheless, these crowds have a tremendous impact on the reporter.. and serve to underline the fact that there is no political expert travelling with Eisenhower, Stevenson, Truman or anyone else who can safely predict what will happen on this night two weeks hence.

The General is wearing up well in his intensive whistle-stopping. He certainly is in better shape than 75 per cent of the people travelling with him. He even has energy enough left to get red in the face when he talks about President Truman's smear campaign.

After hitting Boston today, we climbed aboard a motorcade that took us past an awful lot of people and we made a series of stops in town squares - all of which are beginning to look alike - and the General waved and said some words - mostly the same words...and we climbed on a plane again...and here we are in New York.

It's been my first day back with the Eisenhower train since leaving Stevenson last week. My initial talks with some of the General's managers show that they have lost none of their optimism...they sincerely believe that there is a land-slide in the making for their man...a land-slide based on the American people's ardent desire for a change in Washington. They still believe that this undercurrent of demand for a change supercedes any and all of the issues.

One of the Eisenhower backers I talked with today...and he's a big man in that organization...actually admitted that he believed Eisenhower had lost some support since the campaign began. He said that the General probably did lose support from liberals, independents and unhappy Democrats when he embraced Senators Taft, McCarthy and Jenner. But my informant, called this a comparatively minor loss which will make no difference when the people swarm to the polls a week from Tuesday.

About Massachusetts, those Bay State politicians who we could grab on the run admit that the state's 16 electoral votes are up in the air. Like most of the rest of the country, they call Massachusetts a horse race.

MURROW: ...Bill Costello had an opportunity to size up the reaction. Bill, tell us about the Truman crowds.

COSTELLO: When President Truman started his whistle-stopping on Labor Day, the crowds were fair-sized, the speeches were humdrum, and the applause was, well, polite but not much more. But from that day at Fargo, N.D., when he first turned his indignation against General Eisenhower, the whole atmosphere changed. Ever since, the crowds have grown steadily larger and more enthusiastic. The feeling at his appearances has been surcharged with increasing tension. You can almost feel the audience waiting for him to fire another barrage at the Republican nominee. Today, crossing New Jersey, the air of campaign excitement reached a new high pitch. There were bands galore, block after block of children waving American flags, cavalcades of politicians waiting to join the Presidential procession, and the biggest crowds of all.

At Newark this morning, where 90,000 heard him speak and nearly a quarter of a million, they say, lined the streets, police and local newsmen agreed it was the biggest turnout in the city's history. Correspondents staring out the window of the press bus exclaimed in amazement as the throng grew thicker, and finally one extrover expressed the sentiment of at least some reporters when he shouted jubilantly: "And they say Truman is hurting Stevenson! Wowee!" Democratic politicians were equally impressed. They said New Jersey a month ago had virtually been written off to the Republicans. Today they said flatly that Stevenson has at least an even chance. All this, of course, is not without cost to at least one man - Harry Truman himself. He was talking at 7:30 this morning at Wilmington; at 10:30 he left his train and rode in a crowded car until nearly 6:00 tonite; and when he left Philadelphia he had given nine speeches. His caravan is almost always a few minutes late. It's a killing pace for us all and especially for the President, who spends virtually every moment between speeches talking and shaking hands with state and local political leaders.

Tonite, when he bagan his Philadelphia speech, you could see he had begun to feel the strain, but just as his voice faltered a little there was a booming voice from the crowd shouting: "Pour it on, Harry!" He grinned, straightened his shoulders, and gave. By the time he leaves Pottsville, Penna., tonite he'll have three more speeches behind him - and he's still pouring it on.

MURROW: You've heard from Bill Downs and Bill Costellos.

In Korea today, South Korean troops threw back an attack by 15-hundred Chinese Communists.

General Harrison, our top peace negotiator, says "I don't believe any many can be a thorough-going Communist without being a criminal." He says this applies to the enemy negotiators at Pammunjom.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: One of every ten dollars our government spends is going for foreign aid. But this, after all, is the price a free world has to pay for security. It's pretty much as Hosea Ballou once said: "It is what we give up, not what we lay up, that adds to our lasting store." John Galsworthy put it another way: "The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

"Wednesday - Oct 22 - 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower will say tonight that the Administration deliberately adopted a policy of inflation to win the election. In a speech in Troy, New York, he will say: this has imperiled the nation "like a concealed mine-field." The inflation we suffer is not an accident; it is a policy. --- To make people think they had more money.. even though it is worth less. The General says the Administration cares more about the next election than it does about the next generation. He suggests that TO beat inflation we must knock down the Administration's idol of cheap money; get unified action from all economic agencies; and slice the fat out of the budget. Again, Eisenhower said he can get "more defense for less money" by cutting the military budget. Earlier, in a tour through PARTS OF Connecticut and Massachusetts, the General said: the slogan for his crusade is "(PROSPERITY) without war, peace in the world." He said the Administration leaders fear one thing; losing their jobs. And he told a group of prominent Negro's at a breakfast in New York's Harlem that: "The basic purpose of America is to provide a home for those people who love freedom more than anything else."

The President will speak in Pittsburgh tonight. He will charge that Eisenhower is waging a false, hypocritical, circus campaign that could lead the nation to disaster. He will say Eisenhower has joined the isolationists.. by suggesting that our efforts are unncessary, our sacrifices in vain, and that there is a cheap and easy way out of our peril. The President charges the General with using the Korean casualty lists for politics. He says: "I cannot trust a man who has played this kind of game with the gravest issues of our national security." He says Eisenhower's campaign tactics have had the tendency to weaken our resolution, and endager the common determination of our people in the struggle for peace. And the President says Governor Stevenson "speaks in accents of greatness." Earlier, in a tour through Pennsylvania, the President said a Republican victory will mean an attempt to drive labor back to slavery.. there could be 28-million unemployed... it could plunge us into another depression.. might get us into a third world war. The President would rather have a civilian than a military man in the White House. He recalled: "I once found it necessary to reduce a five star general who got too big for his britches.".. an obvious reference to General MacArthur. At Northumberland, Pennsylvania, a group of youngsters insisted on heckling Truman. He said unless they stopped he would not introduce daughter Margaret.

They [redacted] stopped.

Governor Stevenson campaigned in Indiana and Ohio today, charged that Eisenhower is doing a lot of wailing about high prices but has offered no program to do anything about it. Stevenson said that last June the majority of Republicans in the House of Representatives voted three times to kill price controls altogether.

On the Notre Dame campus he praised the Catholic Church for opposing Communism. He said the church leaders approached this "disease" not "with the politicians' bombast, but with the care and method of a doctor"..as did other religious groups. Stevenson said we can never banish Communism from this nation with "the quackery of medicine-men, who claim to cure the disease with words of hate and accusations." He said the leaders of one wing of the Republican party must realize that opposition to social justice programs in America is opposition to building the strongest defense against Communism. The governor said the Democratic party played a major role in "uprooting from the soil of America, the poisoned seeds from which Communism grows."

[redacted]

~~1924, says he is for Eisenhower. General Wedemeyer, a pre-convention Taft supporter, also announces for Eisenhower and says he agrees that we should use free Asians to fight the enemy in Korea.~~

There was comparatively little fighting in Korea today..the Chinese broke off their attempt to take Sniper Ridge from the South Koreans.

The Pentagon says that we suffered 963 casualties in Korea last week..the highest number for any one week since last July. The total casualty list is now: 122. 117.

The French say that the present action in Indo-China is one of the most criticial of the Indo-China war. The Communist guerrillas are forcing further French retreats in the Hanoi perimiter.

The United Nations today agreed to an immediate debate on Korea.. and the truce deadlock. Tunisia is Number Two on the political committee's agenda.. then Morocco.

U.N. Secretary General Trygvie Lie today fired one American U.N. employe..suspended another.. and put nine others on leave. All 11 had refused to tell a Senate committee whether they are or were Communists.

Attorney General Mc Granery tonight ordered the immediate surrender of nine Communists who are facing deportation. He also ordered that steps be taken to determine whether Communist Party Chairman William Z. Foster is now well enough to face a trial under the Smith Act. And he said the Department is considering deporting or denaturalizing 10 other Communist leaders who have been among those indicted for violating the Smith act.

In addition, the Department, has filed a petition in the Federal Court here in New York to take away Frank Costello's citizenship.

In Washington, the Labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board say the board spent more time "finding ways to deny" a $1.90 a day wage raise to miners.. than the time they spent finding a way to approve. The Labor members say the board "flouted the will of Congress and created a dispute where none existed." They feel the 40 cent cut from the miners contract should not have been made.. because the miners do not get such "fringe benefits" as paid vacations, paid holidays and higher shift differentials.

In West Germany today, Chancellor Adenauer told his Parliament that its not true that his entire foreign office staff is packed with 85 per cent of old Nazis. He said its just 66 per cent.

Edward R. Murrow: October 22, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

I do not remember a political campaign where reporters, professional politicians and those who make surveys of public opinion have displayed such uncommon caution. (This may be due in part to the memory of 1948.) It may be due to the fact that neither candidate has conducted exactly the sort of campaign that was expected. It may be in part the result of Mr. Truman's vigorous and unrestrained participation in the contest. Whatever the reasons, there is a lot of caution about, and there would seem to be more votes in the "other hand" than are firmly grasped by either Party. Unless it rains, or snows, or there is a landslide, this caution and uncertainty will continue for another two weeks. Of course, trends now described as "running strongly" in one direction may reverse themselves, thereby creating a whirlpool.

~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ I do not believe that either Party, as of now, can count on more than a hundred and ~~seventy~~ sixty reasonably safe electoral votes. It requires 266 votes to elect. It seems to me that both the caution and the uncertainty arise from a simple question - ONE that is not new. (This reporter has debated it with colleagues for some twenty years, in connection with elections both here and abroad.) The question is, do people vote their hopes or their fears? In this campaign both have probably been inflated. This is an old American custom. In our third presidential election both sides hammered upon the anvil of fear. Jefferson was attacked by politicians, preachers, educators and even newspaper editors, all warning that his election would mean the closing of the churches and the installation of atheism. At that time the President of Yale College went even farther than some of our present-day educators, by warning that a Jefferson victory would see wives and daughters dishonored. The Jeffersonians warned that John Adams wanted to establish a monarchy; wanted to make Congregationalism the State religion. # In 1860 the Democrats warned that Lincoln's election would mean war. Four years later Lincoln supporters warned that the election of General McClellan, the Democrat, would mean surrender to the South even while the North was winning the war. In 1896 notices went up in some factories, reading: "If Bryan wins on Tuesday we shut down on Wednesday". In 1916 both Parties tried to frighten the nation with the prospect of war. And in 1932 President Hoover tried to frighten it with the prospect of "grass growing in the street." There doesn't seem to be any clear indication that people vote their fears or their hopes with any consistency.

In this campaign neither Party has a monopoly of either sentiment. For the Democrats Mr. Truman is the principal merchant of fear - fear of war, of depression, of losing social benefits, and of Republicans. Governor Stevenson takes the more lofty and hopeful position. For the Republicans Senator Nixon cultivates fear of Communists, corruption, and Democrats; while General Eisenhower concentrates upon Communism, Korea and corruption, coupled with the promise that all these, and other ills can be banished by a Republican victory. Neither candidate has been very specific about just what he'd do to eliminate a major fear - the fear of war. This, presumably, is because neither man knows precisely what the Russians are going to do, and when. (Conceivably the Russians don't know either.) -

I would guess that when most citizens enter the voting booth, the hand that pulls the lever or marks the ballot, is guided by hope or fear rather than by where the candidates stand on Taft-Hartley, the McCarran Act, Korea, or the Brannan Plan. And a further guess would be that a hand is more often guided by fear, than by hope. Now if we only knew which emotion will be dominant on November 4th, we could dispense with all those complicated calculating machines. One thing can be predicted, and that is that in the next couple of weeks there will be bigger and better efforts to scare us.

But the nation has survived worse than this before. Maybe it just seems that restraint and reason have fled, because radio and television amplify reason and recklessness with equal fidelity. We might wish that the insults could be couched in more cultured language. The finest example of the proper exchange of political insult came, I think, when a heckler in the crowd shouted to a speaker: "You, sir, are a liar". And the speaker, scarcely breaking stride in his oration, thundered back: "You, sir, are a gentleman, and that makes us both liars."

In the closing days of the campaign there will be increasing appeals to fear and promises of hope. La Fontaine once observed:"Everyone believes very easily whatever he fears or desires." But Havelock Ellis warned:" A man must not swallow more beliefs than he can digest." Mark Twain took the more realistic approach. "What we need," he said, "is faith - that is: believing what you know ain't so."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Oct. 23/1952

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson says the Republicans are conducting a fear campaign. General Eisenhower says the Administration is resorting to a program of fear, hate and villification. President Truman says the Republicans are using a program of fear, lies and slander.

All three men are speaking later tonight: the governor in Cleveland; the General in Buffalo, the President in Cumberland, Maryland. [And all three are using some of the ~~hardest~~ hardest words of the campaign.]

Stevenson says Eisenhower is leading a campaign of calumny and the big lie. Eisenhower says the Administration consists of power-mad rabble-rousers, ignorant and irresponsible. Truman says Eisenhower has adopted the methods of political gangsters.

Eisenhower says the national unity we sorely need in a troubled world is being undermined by the Administration. Stevenson says the Republicans are using a program aimed at sowing the seed of doubt,, a campaign of systematic innuendo and accusations.

~~Here are some details on each of the speeches.~~

Stevenson says: he deeply resents the campaign being waged on Eisenhower's behalf. He notes Senator Nixon's persistent attacks on the deposition he gave in the Hiss case, and says that both Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles "demonstrated continued personal faith" in Hiss. He recalls that Nixon has said that Eisenhower is the "captain" of the Republican team.. calling the signals. So--says the Governor--when Senator Mc Carthy next Monday makes a radio and television speech it will be with permission and the approval of Eisenhower. He says Mc Carthy recently said that if he were put aboard the [redacted] Stevenson campaign train with a club he might be able to make a good American out of Stevenson. The Governor says Eisenhower might have endorsed those Republican Senators who, in 1950, denounced smears and slander tactics. Instead, he says, the General turned to those Republicans who called Senator Margaret Chase Smith.. one of the authors of the statement.. a thief and defender of Communists.

~~Stevenson says if Eisenhower publicly embraces those who slandered General Marshal, certainly Stevenson has no reason to expect that the General would restrain those who slander the governor.~~

Eisenhower, in Buffalo, will call for the voters to write the political death-warrant for the "rabble rousers" he says are led by "an expert teacher".. a reference to the President. He says the Democrats are trying to profit politically by spreading bigotry. He wants an end to the slime of machine politics and boss rule. He says the Democratic tactics are those of unscrupulous men. He says their campaign compares to the anti-Catholic propaganda unleashed against Al Smith in the 1928 campaign. #

And the General predicts that every Administration boss will use every means..fair or foul..to attempt to win for the Democrats in November. #

Earlier, in a tour of New York state, the General said: the Democrats are the real "special interests".. seeking control of the nation, to perpetuate themselves in power by using the people's money. He wants to start a program shifting the emphasis of our economy from war production, to production for peace. He says the Korean war is the climax of a series of blunders. The only way to end it, and prevent future Koreas, is to get the best brains into government, and then build a peace structure to bring an end to this kind of thing.

The President, in Maryland, charges that Senator Mc Carthy is the ringleader of the Republican campaign of lies and fear. He says Eisenhower and Nixon have adopted the Mc Carthy technique of the big lie and the big doubt. He says Nixon is engaged in nothing less than a false campaign of personal slander and innuendo against Governor Stevenson. He says:"ThaT's how desperate the Republican party is.. how unprincipled its leadership has become from taking its own poison."

So far as we know no bones were broken during the days campaigning.

a

Senator Taft said in New Jersey today that he and the General still differ on details of policy.. but refused to answer questions on the details. He said Eisenhower "has not surrendered to me and I have not surrendered to him."

Averall Harriman, in Minnesota, said he warned General Eisenhower in 1945 of the dangers of war in the Far East--including Korea--but the General, then army commander in Europe, "refused to believe him."

Ninety-four American authors complained today that a majority of the nation's newspapers and magazines are showing a "partisanship" in news on the presidential race..(playing down Stevenson.)

Sixteen New York attorneys say Stevenson displayed "bad judgment" in giving a deposition for Alger Hiss in the Hiss case. Recently 22 other lawyers "deplored any effort to criticize" Stevenson for this.

Wittaker Chambers told a Senate committee today that the publications director of the United Nations was a member of the Communist underground in 1936. He said he knew that the official.. David Zablodowsky.. had Communist leanings in their college days together at Columbis University.

In Washington, a Federal grand jury has indicted Henry Grunewald on 22 charges of contempt of Congress. Grunewald..sometimes called "The Dutchman"..was mentioned in hearings conducted by House tax investigators.

The government tonight gave butchers permission to raise their ceilings for better pork cuts.. such as center chops, bacon and hams.. by one to two cents a pound.

At the United Nations today, the United States formally proposed that the U.N. appeal to the Chinese and Korean Communists to accept an armistice in Korea that provides for the voluntary return of prisoners.

In Korea today, allied troops threw the Communists off the top of Iron Horse Mountain.. and stopped enemy attacks on two hills to the east.

General Van Fleet says he thinks U.N. troops will have to stay in Korea "as long as there are Chinamen here."

A typhoon that tore through the Central Philippines on Tuesday and Wednesday killed at least 370 persons.. injured hundreds more.

In London, Winston Churchill told the House of Commons that the British atomic bomb--exploded off Australia early this month--was placed in the hull of a ship. It blew up a one-million-degree cloud of vapor and fragments. He said it was a test of a bomb on harbor installations.. He hopes the test may result in resuming the exchange of atomic information with the United States.

The Nobel prize in medicine today was awarded to Dr. Selman A. Waksman, the Russian-born, co-discoverer of streptomycin. Dr. Waksman is now director of the Instiute of Microbiology at Rutgers University. ~~[illegible] proof in justifying "the ancient saying land from the earth shall come they salvation." Streptomycin is an earth mold used as the first effective anti-biotic against tuberculosis.~~

Edward R. Murrow: October 23, 1952. XXXXXXX 7.45 pm

Whoever wins this election is going to have a "hangover," in fact several of them. A "hangover" is political shorthand for left-over problems, things that the last Congress didn't get done, but which must be done when the next Congress is organized, and gets down to business. Neither candidate has talked very much about the cause or cure for this hangover, which is inevitable. Whoever wins will have a fine oldfashioned running row with members of his own Party and, of course, with the Opposition. But somehow the nation's business has to get done, and the Congress and the President have to do it.

Here are a few examples of "hangovers", which neither emotion nor partisan fervor, nor the well-aged cliches of campaigning, can prevent. The mere listing of them may provide the discriminating voter with some yardstick, against which to measure the claims of candidates, both for the Presidency and the Congress. About five months after the new President takes office, the present Excess Profits Tax on corporations will expire. That's bringing in better than four billion dollars a year. Should it be continued, increased or decreased? And if the Government doesn't get that money, what expenditures can be reduced, to compensate for the loss of revenue. By the end of next year the law that raised our individual income taxes by eleven percent will also expire. That raise in the income tax rate is producing almost two-and-a-half billion dollars a year for the government. If the income tax rate is lowered, where is the money coming from? Or do we just give up trying to balance the budget?

Also next year, the new Administration and the new Congress, will have to decide about price and wage stabilization; decide about the control and allocation of vital strategic materials, (because the law covering those things expires too.) The continuation, or the abolition, of rent controls will have to be decided. The law permitting the government to call reserves back, for two years of military service will also expire. The President, whoever he is, will enter office with vast "emergency powers." Should those powers be continued, expanded or decreased? That, too, will have to be settled by the middle of next year. The whole business of the Reciprocal Trade Act - a fine old battleground between Republicans and Democrats - will have to be fought out and decided again.

The new President will inherit the power to control exports, but he'll only have it for a few months, unless Congress decides to renew the law.

As of right now there is a law on the books permitting the drafting of doctors and dentists. But that law expires on July 1st, and if our armed forces are to continue to have doctors and dentists something must be done about that.

There is a host of other problems that will have to be resolved within the next year or two. Whether we shall continue our military and economic aid to our allies, and if so to what extent. It must be determined whether adequate funds will be supplied to set up a really effective Civilian Defense organization.

In most of these matters it is the Congress that will decide. The President can but recommend. It is traditional in American politics for candidates for the presidency to make sweeping statements about matters over which they have no real control - and that's happening now.

These are but a few of the "hangovers" that will be faced by the next President. But he will be confronted by all these, and Russia too. Both candidates were reluctant, and for good reasons. But Their thirst for power appears to increase as the campaign moves downward. But the winner cannot escape the hangover, and the rest of us can't either. Still, we have survived worse emotional binges than this, and emerged with a reasonably clear head - or at least, so it appears.

Whoever becomes President next January will have no easy time of it. Both men, from their childhood, probably remember these lines from "Uncle Remus": "Breer Tarrypin sez Brer Fox you ain't seen no trouble yet." And from "Alice in Wonderland": "I sometimes wonder whether the pleasure of making a daisy chain would be worth the trouble of getting up and picking the daisies."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson says the Republicans are conducting a fear campaign. General Eisenhower says the Administration is resorting to a program of fear, hate and villification. President Truman says the Republicans are using a program of fear, lies and slander.

All three men are speaking later tonight: the governor in Cleveland; the General in Buffalo, the President in Cumberland, Maryland. And all three are using some of the hardest words of the campaign.

Stevenson says Eisenhower is leading a campaign of calumny and the big lie. Eisenhower says the Administration consists of power-mad rabble-rousers, the ignorant and irresponsible. Truman says Eisenhower has adopted the methods of political gangsters.

Eisenhower says the national unity we sorely need in a troubled world is being undermined by the Administration. Stevenson says the Republicans are using a program aimed at sowing the seed of doubt...a campaign of systematic innuendo and accusations.

Stevenson says: he deeply resents the campaign being waged on Eisenhower's behalf. He notes Senator Nixon's persistent attacks on the disposition he gave in the Hiss case and says that both Eisenhower and John Foster Dulles "demonstrated continued personal faith" in Hiss. He recalls that Nixon has said that Eisenhower is the "captain" of the Republican team...calling the signals. So...says the Governor...when Senator McCarthy, next Monday makes a radio and television speech it will be with permission and the approval of Eisenhower. He says McCarthy recently said that if he were put aboard the Stevenson campaign train with a club he might be able to make a good American out of Stevenson. The Governor says Eisenhower might have endorsed those Republican Senators who, in 1950, denounced smears and slander tactics. Instead, he says, the General turned to those Republicans who called Senator Margaret Chase Smith...one of the authors of the statement a thief and defender of Communists.

Eisenhower, in Buffalo, will call for the voters to write the political death-warrant for the "rabble rousers" he says are led by "an expert teacher"...a reference to the President. He says the Democrats are trying to profit politically by spreading bigotry. He wants an end to the slime of machine politics and boss rule. He says the Democratic tactics are those of unscrupulous men. He says their campaign compares to the anti-Catholic propaganda unleashed against Al Smith in the 1928 campaign. And the General predicts that every Administration boss will use every means...fair or foul...to attempt to win for the Democrats in November. Earlier, in a tour of New York state, the General said: the Democrats are the real "special interests"... seeking control of the nation, to perpetuate themselves in power by using the people's money. He wants to start a program shifting the emphasis of our economy from war production to production for peace. He says the Korean war is the climax of a series of blunders. The only way to end it and prevent future Koreas is to get the best brains into government and then build a peace structure to bring an end to this kind of thing.

The President, in Maryland, charges that Senator McCarthy is the ringleader of the Republican campaign of lies and fear. He says Eisenhower and Nixon have adopted the McCarthy technique of the big lie and the big doubt. He says Nixon is engaged in nothing less than a false campaign of personal slander and innuendo against Governor Stevenson. He says: "That's how desperate the Republican party is...how unprincipled its leadership has become from taking its own poison." So far as we know, no bones were broken during the days of campaigning.

Senator Taft said in New Jersey today that he and the General still differ on details of policy...but refused to answer questions on the details. He said Eisenhower "has not surrendered to me and I have not surrendered to him."

Averill Harriman, in Minnesota, said he warned General Eisenhower in 1945 of the dangers of war in the Far East...including Korea...but the General, then army commander in Europe, "refused to believe him."

Ninety-four American authors complained today that a majority of the nation's newspapers and magazines are showing a "partisanship" in news on the presidential race...(playing down Stevenson.)

Sixteen New York attorneys say Stevenson displayed "bad judgment" in giving a disposition for Alger Hiss in the Hiss case. Recently 22 other lawyers "deplored any effort to criticize" Stevenson for this.

Wittaker Chambers told a Senate committee today that the publications director of the United Nations was a member of the Communist underground in 1936. He said he knew that the official...David Zablodowsky...had Communist leanings in their college days together at Columbia University.

In Washington, a Federal grand jury has indicted Henry Grunewald on 22 charges of contempt of Congress. Grunewald...sometimes called "The Dutchman" was mentioned in hearings conducted by House tax investigators.

The government tonight gave butchers permission to raise their ceilings for better pork cuts...such as center chops, bacon and hams...by one to two cents a pound.

At the United Nations today, the United States formally proposed that the U.N. appeal to the Chinese and Korean Communists to accept an armistice in Korea that provides for the voluntary return of prisoners.

In Korea today, allied troops threw the Communists off the top of Iron Horse Mountain...and stopped enemy attacks on two hills to the east.

General Van Fleet says he thinks U.N. troops will have to stay in Korea "as long as there are Chinamen here."

A typhoon that tore through the Central Philippines on Tuesday and Wednesday killed at least 370 persons...injured hundreds more.

In London, Winston Churchill told the House of Commons that the British atomic bomb...exploded off Australia early this month...was placed in the hull of a ship. It blew up a one-million-degree cloud of vapor and fragments. He said it was a test of a bomb on harbor installations...He hopes the test may result in resuming the exchange of atomic information with the United States.

The Nobel prize in medicine today was awarded to Dr. Selman A. Waksman, the Russian-born, co-discoverer of streptomycin. Dr. Waksman is now director of the Institute of Microbiology at Rutgers University.

Whoever wins this election is going to have a "hangover," in fact several of them. A "hangover" is political shorthand for left-over problems, things that the last Congress didn't get done but which must be done when the next Congress is organized and gets down to business. Neither candidate has talked very much about the cause or cure for this hangover which is inevitable. Whoever wins will have a fine oldfashioned running row with members of his own Party and, of course, with the Opposition. But somehow the nation's business has to get done, and the Congress and the President have to do it.

Here are a few examples of "hangovers," which neither emotion nor partisan fervor, nor the well-aged cliches of campaigning can prevent. The mere listing of them may provide the discriminating voter with some yardstick against which to measure the claims of candidates, both for the Presidency and the Congress. About five months after the new President takes office, the present Excess Profits Tax on corporations will expire. That's bringing in better than four billion dollars a year. Should it be continued, increased or decreased? And if the Government doesn't get that money, what expenditures can be reduced to compensate for the loss of revenue. By the end of next year the law that raised our individual income taxes by eleven percent will also expire. That raise in the income tax rate is producing almost two-and-a-half billion dollars a year for the government. If the income tax rate is lowered, where is the money coming from? Or do we just give up trying to balance the budget?

Also next year the new Administration and the new Congress will have to decide about price and wage stabilization; decide about the control and allocation of vital strategic materials, because the law covering those things expires too. The continuation or the abolition of rent controls will have to be decided. The law permitting the government to call reserves back for two years of military service will also expire. The President, whoever he is, will enter office with vast "emergency powers." Should those powers be continued, expanded or decreased? That, too, will have to be settled by the middle of next year. The whole business of the Reciprocal Trade Act...a fine old battleground between Republicans and Democrats...will have to be fought out and decided again.

The new President will inherit the power to control exports, but he'll only have it for a few months unless Congress decides to renew the law.

As of right now there is a law on the books permitting the drafting of doctors and dentists. But that law expires on July 1st, and if our armed forces are to continue to have doctors and dentists something must be done about that.

There is a host of other problems that will have to be resolved within the next year or two. Whether we shall continue our military and economic aid to our allies, and if so to what extent. It must be determined whether adequate funds will be supplied to set up a really effective Civilian Defense organization.

In most of these matters it is the Congress that will decide. The President can but recommend. It is traditional in American politics for candidates for the presidency to make sweeping statements about matters over which they have no real control - and that's happening now.

These are but a few of the "hangovers" that will be faced by the next President. But he will be confronted by all these, and Russia too. Both candidates were reluctant, and for good reasons. But their thirst for power appears to increase as the campaign moves downward. But the winner cannot escape the hangover, and the rest of us can't either. Still, we have survived worse emotional binges than this, and emerged with a reasonably clear head - or at least, so it appears.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Whoever becomes President next January will have no easy time of it. Both men, from their childhood, probably remember these lines from "Uncle Remus": "Breer Tarrypin sez Brer Fox you ain't seen no trouble yet," and from "Alice in Wonderland": I sometimes wonder whether the pleasure of making a daisy chain would be worth the trouble of getting up and picking the daisies."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, October 24/1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower will say tonight, that if he's elected President he will go to Korea, to learn how best to end the Korean war. Governor Stevenson says he would rather lose the election, than depart from "a steadfast stand, for the cause of the United Nations in Korea." In a few minutes I'd like to review what both candidates said today about the war ~~in~~ K~~orea~~.

Secretary of State Acheson today told the United Nations that the U.N, cannot buy "peace at the price of honor" in Korea.

And on the battlefronts, as the United Nations celebrated its 7th birthday, the Chinese forced South Korean troops from the top of Sniper Ridge. And they stopped an American attack on Pikes' Peak.

Both the Chinese and North Korean radio, threaten to deal with us "ruthlessly" if we start any great offensives. Tomorrow will be the second anniversary of the Chinese Communists ~~[illegible]~~ entering the war.

General Eisenhower, before his Korean speech tonight, told audiences in Michigan, that he's been falsely accused of union-busting. He said "I'm the world's biggest opponent of union-busting." And again he charged that the Administration is singing songs of hate..hymns of villification.

Republican Sentor Morse of Oregon will say tonight that he fears the election of Eisenhower would greatly increase the chances of another world war. He charges that the General has made "shocking compromises" with the forces of reaction.. is "up to his neck in the sinkholes of reaction".. and plays politics with the cause of freedom in Asia. He says the General stooped to a new low in politics, when he gave the parents of men in Korea "the impression that if he is elected he would bring the boys back home." Morse says Eisenhower sought the Republican nomination only because he believed the election of Senator Taft would be disastrous for the country. Now, says Morse, he has "stooped to political hypocrisy" and is a "captive general." Morse says he considers that, in supporting Stevenson, he has resigned from the Republican party. He will list himself as an "independent Republican" in the ~~[illegible]~~ four more years he has to complete his present Senate term.

John Foster Dulles said today that he, Governor Stevenson and "evereybody else I know" was taken in by Alger Hiss. Mr. Dulles says he realized the truth earlier than Stevenson. Last night the Governor charged that Eisenhower and Dulles demonstrated a "continued personal faith" in Hiss when they should have been checking up on him. Dulles and Eisenhower were board members of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace at the time Hiss was president of the group.

Senator Nixon, campaigning in Wisconsin, today called for the re-election of "my good friend Joe Mc Carthy". General Eisenhower on a visit to Wisconsin didn't mention Mc Carthy by name.. called for the election of the entire Republican ticket.

~~Democratic Chairman [illegible] says the national committee will not be able to help candidates for the House and Senate because it has only 18[illegible] thousand dollars in the bank.~~

The government reported today that for the first time in six months the cost of living has gone down... two-tenths of one percent from the middle of August to the middle of September. The government attributes the drop to lower food prices.

~~Ab[illegible]~~

A majority of the nation's soft coal operators today asked Economic Stabilizer Putnam to over-rule the Wage Stabilization Board and grant the miners a $1.90 a day increase agreed to in a contract the union signed with the operators. The Wage Board had reduced this by 40 cents a day; said it felt the full amount would be inflationary.

Democratic Senator Eastland of Mississippi charged today that most of the American employes of the United Nations, who testified before the Senate internal security subcommittee, "are not fit persons to represent the United States or the U.N. and must be removed." He criticized Secretary General Trygvie Lie [redacted] for giving leave with pay to those who refused to answer a question on Communism, [redacted]. Mr. Lie issued a statement calling this an "unbridled attack".. said he is taking orderly and legal measures to deal with the situation, "without resort to lynch law and smear." Lie says he doesn't want one American in the U.N. secretariat who is disloyal to his own country.

David Zablodowsky, head of the U.N's publication division, said today he had worked with some Communist organization in what he believed to be "an underground against Hitler." [Whittaker Chambers has testified that Zablodowsky worked with the Communist "apparatus."]

Edward R. Murrow: October 24, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

It was inevitable that as the casualty lists in Korea mount, the political candidates would start talking about what they would do about The war ~~Korea~~, if elected.

Secretary of State Acheson talked to the United Nations today on the subject of Korea. He said the Russians prepared North Korea for the war - that the United Nations wishes to continue to limit the conflict to the Korean peninsula; that if the Communist aggressors really want peace, we will do all in our power to achieve an armistice. Mr. Acheson found it "unspeakable" that the Communists have charged the United Nations with using germ warfare, while refusing to allow an impartial investigation. Acheson says we screened the Communist prisoners in our hands, with the knowledge and consent of the enemy negotiators at Pan Mun Jom. He says we must fight on in Korea until the Communists agree to our peace terms. #

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in upper New York State, said today that General Eisenhower has proposed a "quick and slick way out of the Korean war." He would risk appeasement and the possibility of another war. Eisenhower said: "Let Asians fight Asians". "The General should realize that we did not go to Korea to fight Asians but to fight aggressors." Stevenson believes that it would be better for him to lose the election than for us to retreat from our position in Korea. He would rather "fail in a cause which will ultimately triumph, than triumph in a case which will ultimately fail." According to Stevenson, "if we hadn't met aggression in Korea then we would have invited it elsewhere, until in the end we would perhaps have had to meet it isolated and friendless on our own shores and in our own homes. Governor Stevenson pointed out that General Van Fleet has said that the South Koreans are not strong enough to man the entire front, as General Eisenhower has suggested. And here is one place where the General's mistake cannot be charged to ignorance.

Later tonight in Detroit General Eisenhower will pledge that if elected he will go to Korea, in an effort to bring the war in Korea to an early and honorable end. Says the General: "I shall go to Korea." Eisenhower will offer four suggestions in connection with the Korean war. The first is that he would go there personally. He would also step up the program of training and arming South Korean forces. We should give them maximum assistance to aid them in defending their own country, and we cannot abandon that unhappy land. However the United Nations forces should be pulled back into reserve positions and supporting roles. The General also promises to review and re-examine every course of action aimed at ending the Korean war. And he thinks we can shape our psychological warfare program into a weapon, capable of cracking the Communist front. The General also pledges that he will reject appeasement.

There we have the essence of three statements dealing with the Korean war. It is clear that none of the three men has a solution. General Eisenhower says he would go personally to Korea. (He gives no indication of what he would do when he got there.) All three men reject appeasement. General Eisenhower says: let's train more South Koreans and put them in the front line. Stevenson says we're already doing that, and anyway there aren't enough of them. Incidentally, the South Koreans in the front line now outnumber United Nations troops, and their military casualties are three to one over ours. We have been negotiating with the Communists for well over a year. The major sticking point has been our refusal to force unwilling prisoners of war to go home. We have never before in our history adopted such a position or policy. The two candidates do not say what they would do about this. They quote recent history at each other, and of course only the history that supports their point of view.

General Eisenhower thinks that with proper preparation and leadership we might have avoided both World Wars, and the Korean war. / And he appears to believe that his personal presence in Korea will somehow contribute to a solution of the war. / The hard fact is, that neither of the two candidates, nor the Secretary of State, have produced a formula or concrete proposals likely to contribute anything substantial to the ending of the war. Governor Stevenson paints a rather more sombre picture of the future than does General Eisenhower. / It will be up to the voters to decide which of the two men is to attempt to hammer out a solution. / And it will be up to the Communists to decide, whether they want one, under any set of circumstances. I have seen no convincing arguments since the beginning of the truce negotiations, as to why the Communists should not, in their own interests, seek to prolong this situation indefinitely.

There is word from Czechoslovakia today that the Communist authorities in that country have abolished Santa Claus, St. Nicholas, and Father Christmas. It is announced that this year, and henceforth, good little boys and girls in Czechoslovakia will be visited by "Grandfather Frost," who will bring them gifts, not from the North Pole, but from the Soviet Union. # Some of the recklessness of language in the current political campaign must be regarded by those charged with conducting Communist propaganda, as a sort of Christmas present in advance. It is always possible that foreigners, unfamiliar with our quaint customs, might take seriously - might regard as a manifestation of basic disunity - these political charges and counter-charges, tailored for the home market, and designed only to frighten the voter into voting for one or the other Party. If that were to happen it would be unfortunate, because ten days from now we will not present the same hysterical cast of countenance to the world as we now do.

For the next ten days we're going to hear a lot of high-powered political oratory...designed to ~~confuse the issues and~~ pick up votes. Tryon Edwards once remarked:"Most controversies would soon be ended if those engaged in them would first accurately define their terms and then adhere to their definitions." For, as Victor Hugo said:"Strong and bitter words usually indicate a weak cause."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower will say tonight that if he's elected President he will go to Korea to learn how best to end the Korean war. Governor Stevenson says he would rather lose the election than depart from "a steadfast stand for the cause of the United Nations in Korea." In a few minutes I'd like to review what both candidates said today about the war.

Secretary of State Acheson today told the United Nations that the U.N. cannot buy "peace at the price of honor" in Korea.

And on the battlefronts, as the United Nations celebrated its 7th birthday, the Chinese forced South Korean troops from the top of Sniper Ridge. And they stopped an American attack on Pike's Peak.

Both the Chinese and North Korean radio threaten to deal with us "ruthlessly" if we start any great offensives. Tomorrow will be the second anniversary of the Chinese Communists entering the war.

General Eisenhower, before his Korean speech tonight, told audiences in Michigan that he's been falsely accused of union-busting. He said "I'm the biggest opponent of union-busting." And again he charged that the Administration is singing songs of hate...hymns of villification.

Republican Senator Morse of Oregon will say tonight that he fears the election of Eisenhower would greatly increase the chances of another world war. He charges that the General has made "shocking compromises" with the forces of reaction...is "up to his neck in the sinkholes of reaction"...and plays politics with the cause of freedom in Asia. He says the General stooped to a new low in politics when he gave the parents of men in Korea "the impression that if he is elected he would bring the boys back home." Morse says Eisenhower sought the Republican nomination only because he believed the election of Senator Taft would be disastrous for the country. Now, says Morse, he has "stooped to political hypocrisy" and is a "captive general." Morse says he considers that, in supporting Stevenson, he has resigned from the Republican party. He will list himself as an "independent Republican" in the four more years he has to complete his present Senate term.

John Foster Dulles said today that he, Governor Stevenson and "everybody else I know" was taken in my Alger Hiss. Mr. Dulles says he realized the truth earlier than Stevenson. Last night the Governor charged that Eisenhower and Dulles demonstrated a "continued personal faith" in Hiss when they should have been checking up on him. Dulles and Eisenhower were board members of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace at the time Hiss was president of the group.

Senator Nixon, campaigning in Wisconsin, today called for the reelection of "my good friend Joe McCarthy". General Eisenhower on a visit to Wisconsin didn't mention McCarthy by name...called for the election of the entire Republican ticket.

The government reported today that for the first time in six months the cost of living has gone down...two-tenths of one percent, from the middle of August to the middle of September. The government attributes the drop to lower food prices.

A majority of the nation's soft coal operators today asked Economic Stabilizer Putnam to over-rule the Wage Stabilization Board and grant the miners a $1.90 a day increase agreed to in a contract the union signed with the operators. The Wage Board had reduced this by 40 cents a day; said it felt the full amount would be inflationary.

Democratic Senator Eastland of Mississippi charged today that most of the American employes of the United Nations who testified before the Senate internal security subcommittee "are not fit persons to represent the United States or the U.N. and must be removed." He criticized Secretary General Trygvie

Lie for giving leave with pay to those who refused to answer a question on Communism. Mr. Lie issued a statement calling this an "unbridled attack"... said he is taking orderly and legal measures to deal with the situation, "without resort to lynch law and smear." Lie says he doesn't want one American in the U.N. secretariat who is disloyal to his own country.

David Zablodowsky, head of the U.N.'s publication division, said today he had worked with some Communist organization in what he believed to be "an underground against Hitler." Whittaker Chambers has testified that Zablodowsky worked with the Communist "apparatus."

It was inevitable that as the casualty lists in Korea mount, the political candidates would start talking about what they would do about the war, if elected.

Secretary of State Acheson talked to the United Nations today on the subject of Korea. He said the Russians prepared North Korea for the war - that the United Nations wishes to continue to limit the conflict to the Korean peninsula; that if the Communist aggressors really want peace we will do all in our power to achieve an armistice. Mr. Acheson found it "unspeakable" that the Communists have charged the United Nations with using germ warfare, while refusing to allow an impartial investigation. Acheson says we screened the Communist prisoners in our hands with the knowledge and consent of the enemy negotiators at Pan Mun Jom. He says we must fight on in Korea until the Communists agree to our peace terms.

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in upper New York State, said today that General Eisenhower has proposed a "quick and slick way out of the Korean war." He would risk appeasement and the possibility of another war. Eisenhower said: "Let Asians fight Asians". "The General should realize that we did not go to Korea to fight Asians but to fight aggressors." Stevenson believes that it would be better for him to lose the election than for us to retreat from our position in Korea. He would rather "fail in a cause which will ultimately triumph, than triumph in a case which will ultimately fail." According to Stevenson, "if we hadn't met aggression in Korea then we would have invited it elsewhere, until in the end we would perhaps have had to meet it isolated and friendless on our own shores and in our own homes. Governor Stevenson pointed out that General Van Fleet has said that the South Koreans are not strong enough to man the entire front, as General Eisenhower has suggested. And he said, here is one place where the General's mistake cannot be charged to ignorance.

Later tonight in Detroit General Eisenhower will pledge that if elected he will go to Korea, in an effort to bring the war in Korea to an early and honorable end. Says the General: "I shall go to Korea." Eisenhower will offer four suggestions in connection with the Korean war. The first is that he would go there personally. He would also step up the program of training and arming South Korean forces. We should give them maximum assistance to aid them in defending their own country, and we cannot abandon that unhappy land. However the United Nations forces should be pulled back into reserve positions and supporting roles. The General also promises to review and re-examine every course of action aimed at ending the Korean war. And he thinks we can shape our psychological warfare program into a weapon capable of cracking the Communist front. The General also pledges that he will reject appeasement.

There we have the essence of three statements dealing with the Korean war. It is clear that none of the three men has a solution. General Eisenhower says he would go personally to Korea. (He gives no indication of what he would do when he got there.) All three men reject appeasement. General Eisenhower says: let's train more South Koreans and put them in the front line. Stevenson says we're already doing that, and anyway there aren't enough of them. Incidentally, the South Koreans in the front line now outnumber United Nations troops, and their military casualties are three to one over ours. We have been negotiating with the Communists for well over a year. The major sticking point has been our refusal to force unwilling prisoners of war to go home. We have never before in our history adopted such a position or policy. The two candidates do not say what they would do about this. They quote recent history at each other, and of course only the history that supports their point of view. General Eisenhower thinks that with proper preparation and leadership we might have avoided both World Wars and the Korean war. And he appears to believe that his personal presence in Korea will somehow contribute to a solution of the war. The hard fact is that neither of the two candidates, nor the Secretary of State have produced a formula or concrete proposals likely to contribute anything substantial to the ending of the war. Governor Stevenson paints a rather more sombre picture of the future than does General Eisenhower. It will be up to the voters to decide which of the two men is to attempt to hammer out a solution. And it will be up to the Communists to decide whether they want one under any set of circumstances. I have seen no convincing arguments since the beginning of the truce negotiations as to why the Communists should not in their own interests seek to prolong this situation indefinitely.

There is word from Czechoslovakia today that the Communist authorities in that country have abolished Santa Claus, St. Nicholas and Father Christmas. It is announced that this year, and henceforth, good little boys and girls in Czechoslavakia will be visited by "Grandfather Frost," who will bring them gifts, not from the North Pole but from the Soviet Union. Some of the recklessness of language in the current political campaign must be regarded by those charged with conducting Communist propaganda, as a sort of Christmas present in advance. It is always possible that foreigners, unfamiliar with our quaint customs, might take seriously - might regard as a manifestation of basic disunity - these political charges and countercharges, tailored for the home market, and designed only to frighten the voter into voting for one or the other Party. If that were to happen it would be unfortunate, because ten days from now we will not present the same hysterical cast of countenance to the world as we now do.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON:COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For the next ten days we're going to hear a lot of high-powered political oratory...designed to pick up votes. Tryon Edwards once remarked: "Most controversies would soon be ended if those engaged in them would first accurately define their terms and then adhere to their definitions." For, as Victor Hugo said: "Strong and bitter words usually indicate a weak cause."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday October 22 1952

This is the news:

Senator Mc Carthy tonight makes a speech he says will show Governor Stevenson's connection with Communist causes. In anticipation of this, both the Democratic and the Republican presidential candidates had something to say today.

[redacted] Governor Stevenson, in Massachusetts, told his audience: "Tonight you'll hear the most magnificent of all smears of all time when McCarthy tries to save the election for the Republicans." The Governor said the speech was being made with Eisenhower's full approval.

But the General, in an apparent attempt to define his differences with the Senator on the "methods" of hunting subversives, had this to say to a Pennsylvania audience: "We have ample, just and American methods of getting rid of subversives. We have to destroy the reputation of no innocent man. We can do it, and must do it promptly, but in the American way." The general's aides said he did not see an advance copy of McCarthy's speech.

General Eisenhower, who speaks in Pittsburgh tonight, will charge that Governor Stevenson has "the mentality that is completely untutored, in the tough business of world relations." Eisenhower has promised to go to Korea if he's elected. Stevenson has said the place to go to settle the war is Moscow. The General says tonight of Stevenson's comment: "IT is the cry of men whose formula for dealing with Soviet aggression has been openly stated in terms of 'give and concede.'" The General says: "If a journey to Korea, and close study of our military and political problems there, can save the life of a single American soldier, and bring peace of mind to a single American family, I must make that journey." He adds: "We are not helpless actors in this Korean tragedy. We are not prisoners of history." And he charges that last May, Governor Stevenson called for public discussion... [redacted] ."of what's necessary to concede to Russia." Eisenhower says: this language invites war itself. He hopes that men who talk this language are never allowed, in the name of the American people, to go to Moscow, or some future Yalta or Postdam. In Pittsburgh, the General also charges again that the Administration has deliberetaly encouraged inflation and a "treadmill prosperity" for workers. He blames Washington intrference for the coal strike (which John L. Lewis called off today) and for the recent steel strike. He says the Administration is engaged in double-dealing with labor and its problems. And He promises to encourage collective bargaining and to promote industrial peace.

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in New England, says Republican promises for a quick and easy solution in Korea are an effort to win votes and may have delayed an armistice. Stevenson says no one knows how to end the Korean war. But we all know that we cannot hurry the end of it by disunity or weakness at home. Because, he says, the Communists see in every sign of weakness a chance to win an advantage. "In a test of will, it is dangerous to appear to falter." Stevenson also charges that Americans distrust men who say "follow me".. and then won't say where they are going. Again the Governor said that no one has any mortgages on him, as Eisenhower is mortgaged to Senator Taft and Republican "hatchet men" and "slanderers." He says the Republicans, by design and intention, have completely confused the voters on their foreign policy. Again he promised to deal mercilessly with any disloyal persons he finds in government. And he attacked Senators Nixon and McCarthy as "ambitious and unscrupulous young men.

The President, campaigning in Ohio and Indiana, called Senator Nixon a reactionary, anti-labor Republican. He said that what Governor Stevenson has called "the murderer's row" of candidates Eisenhower is supporting, would push the country into an isolationist foreign policy if Eisenhower is elected..no matter what he might try to do as President. Truman said that in spite of the General's promises, "Taft will be standing there like Horatius at the bridge, ready to mow down any progressive legislative proposals." He recalled that recently the general said he gets "very angry" when he's accused of planning to repeal the social security laws. Truman said: "when he gets over being angry, I advise him to look at the record in Congress, of the men he calls his team." The President said Eisenhower had all his work lining up the old guard behind him, now he's gone East, and struck up a me-too song to please the less reactionary wing of the Republican party.

Leaders of both parties have warned the nation to expect a smear from the other fellow. Last night, Governor Adams, Eisenhower's manager, predicted the Democrats will step up their smear campaign and hit below the belt. Today, Democratic Chairman Mitchell said Adams' ststament is in itself a smear. Mitchell says it might be useful for Adams to have a "heart to heart talk" with Senators Nixon, Mc Carthy, Jenner and Governor Dewey.

In Washington today, John L. Lewis ordered striking soft coal miners to go back to work at once. Lewis told the miners he believes work should be resumed while the government reconsiders a recent Wage Stabilization Board ruling cutting 40 cents from the $1.90 a day pay increase the miners and operators had agreed upon. The President had appealed to Lewis to get his men back to work. Economic Stabilizer Putnam says Lewis has received no assurances that the miners will be awarded the extra 40 cents a day.

At the United Nations today, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky held up debate on the Korean question..made it known he won't be ready to talk until Wedenesday.

And in Korea, the Marines stopped a 3-thousand man attack by the Chinese.. then counter-attacked to seal a hole in the allied main line that might have been used for an enemy drive in the direction of Seoul. Late Monday night in Korea, the enemy held two of three allied outpost positions they had over-run in an attack along a three mile front. The

Marines had been subjected to 17-thousand rounds of artillery fire.. described at the heaviest such barrage ever laid down against a single Marine regiment.

Edward R. Murrow: October 27, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today spokesmen for both Parties warned against the Big Smear, the last-minute appeals to the voters emotions. This would seem to be a good time to quote at some length from a non-political speech. It was delivered on Friday night by eighty-year-old Judge Learned Hand, one of the most distinguished jurists in this country. It deserved wider circulation than it got. I quote part of it because this is my first opportunity to do so - because in the traditional fashion considerable smearing will go on this week - and I quote it because I agree with it.

Judge Hand reflected upon how "often the deepest convictions of one generation are the rejects of the next. That does not indeed deny the possibility that as time goes on we shall accumulate some body of valid conclusions. But it does mean that these we can achieve only by accumulation - that wisdom is to be gained only as we stand upon the shoulders of those who have gone before. Just as in science we cannot advance except as we take over what we inherit, so in statecraft no generation can safely start at scratch."

Judge Hand went on to say: "Our nation is embarked upon a venture as yet unproved. We have set our hopes upon a community in which men shall be given unchecked control of their own lives. That community is in peril. It is invaded from within; it is threatened from without; it faces a test which it may fail to pass. The choice is ours whether when we hear the pipes of Pan we shall stampede like a frightened flock, forgetting all those professions on which we have claimed to rest our policy. God knows there is risk in refusing to act till the facts are all in. But is there not greater risk in abandoning the conditions of all rational enquiry. Risk for risk, for myself I had rather take my chance that some traitors will escape detection than spread abroad a spirit of general suspicion and distrust, which accepts rumor and gossip in place of undismayed and unintimidated enquiry. I believe that that community is already in process of dissolution where each man begins to eye his neighbor as a possible enemy; where non-conformity with the accepted creed, political as well as religious, is a mark of disaffection; where denunciation without specification or backing takes the place of evidence; where orthodoxy chokes freedom of dissent; where faith in the eventual supremacy of reason has become so timid that we dare not enter our convictions in the open lists, to win or lose. Such fears as these are a solvent which can eat out the cement that binds the stones together. They may in the end subject us to a despotism as evil, as any that we dread. And they can be allayed only insofar as we refuse to proceed on suspicion, and trust one another, until we have tangible ground for misgiving. The mutual confidence on which all else depends can be maintained only by an open mind, and a brave reliance upon free discussion. I do not say that these will suffice. Who knows, but we may be on a slope which leads down to aboriginal savagery. But of this I am sure, if we are to escape, we must not yield a foot upon demanding a fair field and an honest race to all ideas. 'Blame not before thou hast examined. Understand first and then rebuke. Answer not before thou hast heard. Interrupt not in the midst of speech.' Those words were written nearly two thousand years ago. They came out of an experience already long, and refined, in the fires of passion and conflict. They're the product of a wisdom bought by ages of bitter trial; and by that wisdom alone shall we be saved. We who boast ourselves to be the apostles of a faith in the eventual triumph of wisdom."

That is the end of the quotation from Judge Learned Hand's speech. If it was badly read, that is because it was so well written.

I have no doubt that the politicians are right when they predict further appeals to the emotions, prejudice and bigotry. That is why it seemed appropriate that the wise and prophetic words of Judge Learned Hand should receive wider circulation. This was my effort to make a small contribution toward that end.

It would seem that Judge Learned Hand...after 40 years' service as a distinguished jurist...is well aware of what Shakespeare meant in Hamlet when he said:" Give every man thy ear, but few thy voice;take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgement." The Roman statesman Cato summed the same idea up in three brief words:"Believe nothing rashly."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator McCarthy tonight makes a speech he says will show Governor Stevenson's connection with Communist causes. In anticipation of this, both the Democratic and the Republican presidential candidates had something to say today.

Governor Stevenson, in Massachusetts told his audience: "Tonight you'll hear the most magnificent of all smears of all time when McCarthy tries to save the election for the Republicans." The Governor said the speech was being made with Eisenhower's full approval. But the General, in an apparent attempt to define his differences with the Senator on the "methods" of hunting subversives, had this to say to a Pennsylvania audience: "We have ample, just and American methods of getting rid of subversives. We have to destroy the reputation of no innocent man. We can do it, and must do it promptly, but in the American way." The general's aides said he did not see an advance copy of McCarthy's speech.

General Eisenhower, who speaks in Pittsburgh tonight, will charge that Governor Stevenson has "the mentality that is completely untutored in the tough business of world relations." Eisenhower has promised to go to Korea if he's elected. Stevenson has said the place to go to settle the war is Moscow. The General says tonight of Stevenson's comment: "It is the cry of men whose formula for dealing with Soviet aggression has been openly stated in terms of "give and concede. The General says: "If a journey to Korea and close study of our military and political problems there can save the life of a single American soldier and bring peace of mind to a single American family, I must make that journey." He adds: "We are not helpless actors in this Korean tragedy. We are not prisoners of history." And he charges that last May, Governor Stevenson called for public discussion..."of what's necessary to concede to Russia." Eisenhower says: this language invites war itself. He hopes that men who talk this language are never allowed in the name of the American people to go to Moscow or some future Yalta or Potsdam. In Pittsburgh, the General also charges again that the Administration has deliberately encouraged inflation and a "treadmill prosperity" for workers. He blames Washington interference for the coal strike (which John L. Lewis called off today) and for the recent steel strike. He says the Administration is engaged in double-dealing with labor and its problems. And he promises to encourage collective bargaining and to promote industrial peace.

Governor Stevenson, campaigning in New England, says Republican promises for a quick and easy solution in Korea are an effort to win votes and may have delayed an armistice. Stevenson says no one knows how to end the Korean war. But we all know that we cannot hurry the end of it by disunity or weakness at home, because, he says, the Communists see in every sign of weakness a chance to win an advantage." In a test of will, it is dangerous to appear to falter." Stevenson also charges that Americans distrust men who say "follow me"...and then won't say where they are going. Again the Governor said that no one has any mortgages on him, as Eisenhower is mortgaged to Senator Taft and Republican "hatchet men" and "slanderers." He says the Republicans, by design and intention, have completely confused the voters on their foreign policy. Again he promised to deal mercilessly with any disloyal persons he finds in government. And he attacked Senators Nixon and McCarthy as "ambitious and unscrupulous young men."

The President, campaigning in Ohio and Indiana, called Senator Nixon a reactionary, anti-labor Republican. He said that what Governor Stevenson has called "the murderers row" of candidates Eisenhower is supporting, would push the country into an isolationist foreign policy if Eisenhower is elected...no matter what he might try to do as President. Truman said that in spite of the General's promises, "Taft will be standing there like Horatius at the bridge, ready to mow down any progressive legislative proposals." He recalled that recently the general said he gets "very angry" when he's accused of planning to repeal the social security laws. Truman said: "when he gets over being angry I advise him to look at the record in Congress of the men he calls his team." The President said Eisenhower had all his work lining up the old guard behind him, now he's gone East, and struck up a me-too song to please the less reactionary wing of the Republican Party.

Leaders of both parties have warned the nation to expect a smear from the other fellow. Last night, Governor Adams, Eisenhower's manager, predicted the Democrats will step up their smear campaign and hit below the belt. Today, Democratic Chairman Mitchell said Adams' statement is in itself a smear. Mitchell says it might be useful for Adams to have a "heart to heart talk" with Senators Nixon, McCarthy, Jenner and Governor Dewey.

In Washington today, John L. Lewis ordered striking soft coal miners to go back to work at once. Lewis told the miners he believes work should be resumed while the government reconsiders a recent Wage Stabilization Board ruling cutting 40 cents from the $1.90 a day pay increase the miners and operators had agreed upon. The President had appealed to Lewis to get his men back to work. Economic Stabilizer Putnam says Lewis has received no assurances that the miners will be awarded the extra 40 cents a day.

At the United Nations today, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky held up debate on the Korean question...made it known he won't be ready to talk until Wednesday.

And in Korea, the Marines stopped a 3-thousand man attack by the Chinese... then counter-attacked to seal a hole in the allied main line that might have been used for an enemy drive in the direction of Seoul. Late Monday night in Korea, the enemy held two of three allied outpost positions they had over-run in an attack along a three mile front. The Marines had been subjected to 17-thousand rounds of artillery fire...described at the heaviest such barrage ever laid down against a single Marine regiment.

Today spokesmen for both Parties warned against "the Big Smear," the last-minute appeals to the voters emotions. This would seem to be a good time to quote at some length from a non-political speech. It was delivered on Friday night by eighty-year-old Judge Learned Hand, one of the most distinguished jurists in this country. It deserved wider circulation than it got. I quote part of it because this is my first opportunity to do so - because in the traditional fashion considerable "smearing" will go on this week - and I quote it because I agree with it.

Judge Hand reflected upon how "often the deepest convictions of one generation are the rejects of the next. That does not indeed deny the possibility that as time goes on we shall accumulate some body of valid conclusions. But it does mean that these we can achieve only by accumulation - that wisdom is to be gained only as we stand upon the shoulders of those who have gone before. Just as in science we cannot advance except as we take over what we inherit, so in statecraft no generation can safely start at scratch."

Judge Hand went on to say: "Our nation is embarked upon a venture as yet unproved. We have set our hopes upon a community in which men shall be given unchecked control of their own lives. That community is in peril. It is invaded from within; it is threatened from without; it faces a test, which it may fail to pass. The choice is ours whether when we hear the pipes of Pan we shall stampede like a frightened flock, forgetting all those professions on which we have claimed to rest our policy. God knows there is risk in refusing to act till the facts are all in. But is there not greater risk in abandoning the conditions of all rational enquiry. Risk for risk, for myself I had rather take my chance that some traitors will escape detection than spread abroad a spirit of general suspicion and distrust, which accepts rumor and gossip in place of undismayed and unintimidated enquiry. I believe that that Community is already in process of dissolution where each man begins to eye his neighbor as a possible enemy; where non-conformity with the accepted creed, political as well as religious, is a mark of disaffection; where denunciation without specification or backing takes the place of evidence; where orthodoxy chokes freedom of dissent; where faith in the eventual supremacy of reason, has become so timid that we dare not enter our convictions in the open lists, to win or lose. Such fears as these are a solvent which can eat out the cement that binds the stones together. They may in the end subject us to a despotism as evil as any that we dread. And they can be allayed only insofar as we refuse to proceed on suspicion, and trust one another, until we have tangible ground for misgiving. The mutual confidence on which all else depends can be maintained only by an open mind and a brave reliance upon free discussion. I do not say that these will suffice. Who knows, but we may be on a slope which leads down to aboriginal savagery. But of this I am sure, if we are to escape we must not yield a food upon demanding a fair field and an honest race to all ideas. 'Blame not before thou hast examined. Understand first and then rebuke. Answer not before thou hast heard. Interrupt not in the midst of speech." Those words were written nearly two thousand years ago. They came out of an experience already long and refined in the fires of passion and conflict. They're the product of a wisdom bought by ages of bitter trial; and by that wisdom alone shall we be saved. We who boast ourselves to be the apostles of a faith in the eventual triumph of wisdom."

That is the end of the quotation from Judge Learned Hand's speech. If it was badly read, that is because it was so well written.

I have no doubt that the politicians are right when they predict further appeals to the emotions, prejudice and bigotry. That is why it seemed appropriate that the wise and prophetic words of Judge Learned Hand should receive wider circulation. This was my effort to make a small contribution toward that end.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that Judge Learned Hand..after 40 years' service as a distinguished jurist...is well aware of what Shakespeare meant in Hamlet when he said:"Give every man thy ear, but few thy voice; take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgement." The Roman statesman Cato summed the same idea up in three brief words: "Believe nothing rashly."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tues. Oct 28 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower says the Democrats have nothing but "shallow criticism" of his plan to go to Korea..if he's elected. Governor Stevenson says he will not hold out "false promises of an easy way out of the Korean war.." even if the election depends on it. Both candidates are campaigning in the New York area today. And in a few minutes I'd like to sum up some impressions of Governor Stevenson's day.

General Eisenhower, in Long Island, explained that he wants to go to Korea to see the problems.. study how to bring it under control... reduce our casualties, and finally bring about peace. He charges that the Administration's policy of containing Communism, concedes that the Russians can indefinitely enslave peoples who love freedom. The General says we must make it clear that we look toward the eventual peaceful liberation of all those who wish to be free. The General also turned his attention to charges that he has "changed" since he started campaigning. He said:"Actually, I'm the same person, I hope a little wiser and a little more experienced. I have changed no single view, or conviction of mine, concerning the welfare, the need for decent government, and leadership in Washington." The General adds:"I bear in my heart and mind the same aspirations and high hopes for the American people that I bore" when I returned from France on June first.

The President has been campaigning in Minnesota. He charges that the policies of Eisenhower's chief backers are "bound to put the country into another Republican depression sooner or later". He says millionaries are pouring millions of dollars into the Republican campaign, and they'll "expect to get something back" if the party wins. The PRESIDENT accuses the General of hypocrisy..says Eisenhower will say almost anything he thinks will get him votes. He charges that the General, in his proposal to go to Korea, is trying to give the impression he knows how to solve the Korean war, when--says Truman-- Eisenhower knows of no solution. The President also charged that the Republicans have added slander and character assassination to what he called their smear and fear tactics.

The Democratic National Committee charges tonight that Senator Nixon's family owns real estate "conservatively valued at more than a quarter of a million dollars." The committee's newspaper says Nixon's parents and his brother own six properties he did not mention in his radio-television explanation of his finances. The Senator has not been reached for comment.

Postmaster General Donaldson says Senator Mc Carthy will be asked to pay postage on "positively not frankable" material which he mailed under his free mail privilege. Donaldson says some of this material was literature advertsing a book the Senator has written. A secretary to the Senator says he will not be back in Washington until after the election.

Senator McCarran of Nevada.. whom Governor Stevenson yesterday described as a "used to be Democrat".. charged today that the Governor "is in constant liason with the Socialist party of Ebgland."

The government today promised automobile manufacturers almost a million and a half tons of steel in the first three months of next year. This is short of the industry's request for enough steel to make one million 30-thousand cars in the three months.

Here in New York today, the government charged that John Provoo, a former army sergeant, had a part in the execution of an American army captain captured by the Japanese on Corregidor in the last war. Provoo is charged with treason.

In Korea, 700 Chinese Communists have swept to the top of Sniper Ridge on the x ntral front. At dawn W[redacted]n Wednesday they were fighting-off a counter-attack by allied forces. This is the 7th time in 15 days that the enemy has held the top of this ridge. The Marines have now taken back all three of the outposts the enemy over-ran on Sunday night. And smaller fights have been reported from five other areas along a 100-mile front.

Edward R. Murrow: October 28, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

We spent today campaigning with Governor Stevenson - got real close to him once or twice, too. That was when a lady jabbed this reporter in the ankle with a high-heeled shoe and said: "Who do you think you're pushing, Mister?" It was rugged. The Governor's day began with breakfast for volunteer workers at 9 o'clock. He then went to record a television program, Met with Jewish leaders & left his hotel again a little after noon - there was quite a crowd outside. A police captain refused to estimate its size. As the Governor's open car was backed up in front of the entrance, a lady of about 60, in a bright green coat, and a black hat, holding an antiquated camera in one hand, clung to the side like a barnacle. She exchanged some unpleasantries with a big Cop - her head came up just about level with his shield. I observed her stamp her foot a couple of times, I think on the Cop's toe. In any event, when the Governor emerged she was still in position right beside the car door, and she may have got the picture of the day. I hope so.

The Governor's car, preceded by three buses laden with reporters, moved down to the corner of 36th Street ~~on~~ & 7th Avenue, in the heart of the garment district. Bits of colored paper floated down, and even more bits of colored cloth. Governor Stevenson mounted the street corner platform. David Dubinsky, head of the Garment Workers Union, made a little speech. I'm not sure what he said because the public address system wasn't working; But I did hear him say there were a quarter of a million people crowded into those few blocks. Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall were also on the platform, (both appeared to be rather more aware than Governor Stevenson that photographers were present.) Last time I had seen Mr. Bogart in a political setting, he was taking bows from a box in the Coliseum at Denver, at an Eisenhower rally.

Governor Stevenson, in good voice, was glad to be in New York; recalled that if this many people had been on those streets twenty years ago, most of them would have been looking for work. He said that the voters still don't know where the Republicans stand on many important issues. He was confident that a third world war can be avoided. And he ~~XXXXXX~~ thought there must be a substantial improvement in the labor relations laws. A reporter who has been travelling with Stevenson looked around at the crowd, and said: "Some change since the candidate was here in mid-September. Then he came and went as inconspicuously as a cosmetics salesman."

The cavalcade then got underway again for the Commodore Hotel, a luncheon arranged by the Women Volunteers for Stevenson. Several thousand of them had paid fifteen dollars each for what the ticket said was a "Brunch". This was to be found in a cardboard box - THREE sandwiches that could not fairly be described as delectable, a piece of Danish pastry, and an apple. (The coffee was cool enough to handle) Mrs. Roosevelt introduced the Governor. He was frightened by so many women - told the old story of the one girl from a big Republican family who became a Democrat because she "took to reading." Governor Stevenson praised his running mate, Senator Sparkman; said: "Peace is the great overriding issue of our time. There is no easy solution. And the issue should not be used for the purpose of partisan vote-getting." He couldn't promise any miracles, but he would do his best. The audience was enthusiastic. The Governor explained that he had to leave promptly for New Jersey, or some other place, and the caravan rolled down Manhattan, through the Holland Tunnel, into New Jersey.

There the New Jersey cops took over; unlike New York they can use their motor-cycle sirens over there, and enjoy doing it. ~~XXX~~ By the time we reached a housing project in Jersey City the Governor knew where he was all right; remembered the Mayor's name, the name of the housing project that he was to dedicate. He talked with some eloquence, about the importance of public housing, quoted Bret Harte who said: "Nobody would ever carry a musket for a boarding house." He spoke of housing as an answer to the social forces that breed communism, delinquency and crime. And he spoke well, although his voice is showing signs of fatigue. The crowds along the route in Jersey City were not very thick.

We went on to Patterson; there the crowds were larger and more enthusiastic. It was a sullen sort of day, and the air bit keenly. The wind whipped dust off the football field where the crowd had gathered. Local politicians gave each other the elbow, in an effort to stand near the candidate when the pictures were taken. The Governor talked of how the local unions had gotten rid of the Communists; urged the election of local Democratic candidates for Congress; and reminded the crowd that they hadn't always had it so good.

On the way to Garfield, New Jersey, it began to rain but there were substantial crowds along most of the route. The Governor spoke in the rain, wearing his hat. He said pretty much what he had said before. A fellow-reporter remarked: "These must be real Democrats to stay out in this kind of weather." Some of the Governor's aides worried about what the weather would do to their candidate.

Having transferred to a closed car the Governor took off in the direction of Newark for another speech. Tonight he makes a major address in Madison Square Garden. His audiences were all attentive. The hawkers selling Stevenson buttons and emblems weren't doing very much business.

I would not know whether the Governor changed a single vote in the course of the day. But in view of what has gone before, it was a remarkable demonstration of physical stamina combined with an ability to speak coherently and with great good humor. Nevertheless, it is not possible to watch this sort of performance without doubting the wisdom of candidates for high office subjecting themselves to such prolonged physical strain.

Tomorrow, if I recover from today, will be spent watching General Eisenhower in action.

This business of getting yourself elected President is a tiring, travelling business ~~[illegible] and probably the most tiring part of it all is the [illegible]ing.~~ But it's a vote-getting necessity. And as Robert Burton once put it:"What can't be cured must be endured." After today's tour with Stevenson, I'm certain that he and Eisenhower would agree with Thomas Fuller:"Never any weary traveler complained, that he came too soon to his journey's end."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower says the Democrats have nothing but "shallow criticism" of his plan to go to Korea...if he's elected. Governor Stevenson says he will not hold out "false promises of an easy way out of the Korean war..." even if the election depends on it. Both candidates are campaigning in the New York area today. And in a few minutes I'd like to sum up some impressions of Governor Stevenson's day.

General Eisenhower, in Long Island, explained that he wants to go to Korea to see the problems...study how to bring it under control...reduce our casualties and finally bring about peace. He charges that the Administration's policy of containing Communism concedes that the Russians can indefinitely enslave peoples who love freedom. The General says we must make it clear that we look toward the eventual peaceful liberation of all those who wish to be free. The General also turned his attention to charges that he has "changed" since he started campaigning. He said "Actually, I'm the same person, I hope a little wiser and a little more experienced. I have changed no single view or conviction of mine concerning the welfare, the need for decent government and leadership in Washington." The General adds: "I bear in my heart and mind the same aspirations and high hopes for the American people that I bore" when I returned from France on June first.

The President has been campaigning in Minnesota. He charges that the policies of Eisenhower's chief backers are "bound to put the country into another Republican depression sooner or later". He says millionaires are pouring millions of dollars into the Republican campaign, and they'll "expect to get something back" if the party wins. The President accuses the General of hypocrisy...says Eisenhower will say almost anything he thinks will get him votes. He charges that the General, in his proposal to go to Korea, is trying to give the impression he knows how to solve the Korean war when...says Truman... Eisenhower knows of no solution. The President also charges that the Republicans have added slander and character assassination to what he called their smear and fear tactics.

The Democratic National Committee charges tonight that Senator Nixon's family owns real estate "conservatively valued at more than a quarter of a million dollars." The committee's newspaper says Nixon's parents and his brother own six properties he did not mention in his radio-television explanation of his finances. The Senator has not been reached for comment.

Postmaster General Donaldson says Senator McCarthy will be asked to pay postage on "positively not frankable" material which he mailed under his free mail privilege. Donaldson says some of this material was literature advertising a book the Senator has written. A secretary to the Senator says he will not be back in Washington until after the election.

Senator McCarran of Nevada...whom Governor Stevenson yesterday described as a "used to be Democrat"...charged today that the Governor "is in constant liason with the Socialist party of England."

The government today promised automobile manufacturers almost a million and a half tons of steel in the first three months of next year. This is short of the industry's request for enough steel to make one million 30-thousand cars in the three months.

Here in New York today, the government charged that John Provoo, a former army sergeant, had a part in the execution of an American army captain captured by the Japanese on Corregidor in the last war. Provoo is charged with treason.

In Korea, 700 Chinese Communists have swept to the top of Sniper Ridge on the central front. At dawn Wednesday they were fighting off a counter-attack by allied forces. This is the 7th time in 15 days that the enemy has held the top of this ridge. The Marines have not taken back all three of the outposts the enemy over-ran on Sunday night. And smaller fights have been reported from five other areas along a 100-mile front.

We spent today campaigning with Governor Stevenson - got real close to him once or twice, too. That was when a lady jabbed this reporter in the ankle with a high-heeled shoe and said: "Who do you think you're pushing, Mister?" It was rugged. The Governor's day began with breakfast for volunteer workers at 9 o'clock. He then went to record a television program, met with Jewish leaders and left his hotel again a little after noon - there was quite a crowd outside. A police captain refused to estimate its size. As the Governor's open car was backed up in front of the entrance, a lady of about 60, in a bright green coat and a black hat, holding an antiquated camera in one hand, clung to the side like a barnacle. She exchanged some unpleasantries with a big cop - her head came up just about level with his shield. I observed her stamp her foot a couple of times, I think on the cop's toe. In any event, when the Governor emerged she was still in position right beside the car door, and she may have got the picture of the day. I hope so.

The Governor's car, preceded by three buses laden with reporters, moved down to the corner of 36th Street and 7th Avenue, in the heart of the garment district. Bits of colored paper floated down, and even more bits of colored cloth. Governor Stevenson mounted the street corner platform. David Dubinsky, head of the Garment Workers Union, made a little speech. I'm not sure what he said because the public address system wasn't working; But I did hear him say there were a quarter of a million people crowded into those few blocks. Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall were also on the platform, (both appeared to be rather more aware than Governor Stevenson that photographers were present.) Last time I had seen Mr. Bogart in a political setting he was taking bows from a box in the Coliseum at Denver, at an Eisenhower rally.

Governor Stevenson, in good voice, was glad to be in New York; recalled that if this many people had been on those streets twenty years ago, most of them would have been looking for work. He said that the voters still don't know where the Republicans stand on many important issues. He was confident that a third world war can be avoided. And he thought there must be a substantial improvement in the labor relations laws. A reporter who has been travelling with Stevenson looked around at the crowd, and said: "Some change since the candidate was here in mid-September. Then he came and went as inconspicuously as a cosmetics salesman."

The cavalcade then got underway again for the Commodore Hotel, a luncheon arranged by the Women Volunteers for Stevenson. Several thousand of them had paid fifteen dollars each for what the ticket said was a "Brunch". This was to be found in a cardboard box - three sandwiches that could not be fairly described as delectable, a piece of Danish pastry, and an apple. (The coffee was cool enough to handle) Mrs. Roosevelt introduced the Governor. He was frightened by so many women - told the old story of the one girl from a big Republican family who became a Democrat because she "took to reading." Governor Stevenson praised his running mate, Senator Sparkman; said: "Peace is the great overriding issue of our time. There is no easy solution. And the issue should not be used for the purpose of partisan vote-getting." He couldn't promise any miracles, but he would do his best. The audience was enthusiastic. The Governor explained that he had to leave promptly for New Jersey, or some other place, and the caravan rolled down Manhattan, through the Holland Tunnel, into New Jersey.

There the New Jersey cops took over; unlike New York they can use their motor-cycle sirens over there, and enjoy doing it. By the time we reached a housing project in Jersey City the Governor knew where he was all right; remembered the Mayor's name, the name of the housing project that he was to dedicate. He talked with some eloquence about the impOrtance of public housing, quoted Bret Harte who said: "Nobody would ever carry a musket for a boarding house." He spoke of housing as an answer to the social forces that breed communism, delinquency and crime. And he spoke well, although his voice is showing signs of fatigue. The crowds along the route in Jersey City were not very thick.

We went on to Patterson; there the crowds were larger and more enthusiastic. It was a sullen sort of day, and the air bit keenly. The wind whipped dust off the football field where the crowd had gathered. Local politicians gave each other the elbow in an effort to stand near the candidate when the pictures were taken. The Governor talked of how the local unions had gotten rid of the Communists; urged the election of local Democratic candidates for Congress; and reminded the crowd that they hadn't always had it so good.

On the way to Garfield, New Jersey, it began to rain but there were substantial crowds along most of the route. The Governor spoke in the rain, wearing his hat. He said pretty much what he had said before. A fellow-reporter remarked: "These must be real Democrats to stay out in this kind of weather." Some of the Governor's aides worried about what the weather would do to their candidate.

Having transferred to a closed car the Governor took off in the direction of Newark for another speech. Tonight he makes a major address in Madison Square Garden. His audiences were all attentive. The hawkers selling Stevenson buttons and emblems weren't doing very much business.

I would not know whether the Governor changed a single vote in the course of the day. But in view of what has gone before, it was a remarkable demonstration of physical stamina combined with an ability to speak coherently and with great good humor. Nevertheless, it is not possible to watch this sort of performance without doubting the wisdom of candidates for high office subjecting themselves to such prolonged physical strain.

Tomorrow, if I recover from today, will be spent watching General Eisenhower in action.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This business of getting yourself elected President is a tiring travelling business. But it's a vote-getting necessity. And as Robert Burton once put it: "What can't be cured must be endured." After today's tour with Stevenson, I'm certain that he and Eisenhower would agree with Thomas Fuller: "Never any weary traveler compalined that he came too soon to his journey's end."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Oct. 29 1952.

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson and President Truman both charged today, that General Eisenhower said last June, that there is no clear-cut answer to the Korean war. And the General, campaigning here in the New York area, said we must over-haul our foreign policy, so that we are not forever caught in "this Korean trap, fighting the real enemy's second team." I'd like to review for you, in a few minutes, General Eisenhower's campaign day in the Bronx and Westchester County.

Stevenson, in Pennsylvania, charged that a speech writer from a "slick magazine, cooked up the idea" for Ike to propose a trip to Korea. He said this WAS an "idea to catch votes, by playing upon our hopes for a quick end to the war..and the general accepts it immediately." Stevenson calls the proposal cynical, says Eisenhower has changed his mind since last June fifth, when he said there was no clear cut answer to Korea.. that we could only stand firm, reduce our losses, and try to get a decent armistice. Stevenson says the General was right in June, and is wrong now in late October. Eisenhower is gambling that the people won't remember.. he is making a mistake.." playing politics with peace, will not solve our problems nor win the election.

The President, campaigning in Iowa, also referred to Eisenhower's June statement. And he said if Eisenhower is elected.. with his belief that negotiation is appeasement.. and if the people give the General a Congress that would reduce the size of our defenses and the strength of our alliances..then that would be "a fomrula for disaster." Truman says the only right way to solve the problem of Korea is what we're doing now: build up the United Nations, train and equip more South Koreans and apply every pressure for an honorable truce.

In Chicago tonight, the President will ask the General if he's sure he is "much better" than Generals Bradley, Collins, Ridgeway, Van Fleet and Vandenbergh.. all of whom have been to Korea, without being able to find how to bring about a quick and honorable peace. The President will say: "No general order is going to eliminate our problems. No "superman" is going to solve our difficulties for us. And anybody who poses and talks like a superman is a fraud."

Earlier, appealing to Iowa farmers, Truman said the present price support program will hold corn prices at $1.60 a bushel...if the "sliding scale" proposed by Senator Taft were in effect, the support price would be only $1.18.

Republican congressmen who have been following the Truman train say the present farm program was passed by the 80th Congress. Republican Representative Hope of Kansas says, the nation is now operating under the same farm program that Republican-controlled Congress passed. He says but for this, the support level would have dropped sharpley.

Senator Nixon, in Los Angeles, said today that a Democratic charge that he and his family own 250-thousand dollars worth of property is a "lie." Nixon says he has never discussed property owned by his parents, because he didn't think it was anyone else's business. He says the Democrats are attempting to divert the campaign from the main issue.. attacking the integrity and honor of his 75-year-old father , his mother and brother. National Chairman Summerfield calls the charge..made in a Democratic party paper.. "slanderous and libelous."

Democratic Chairman Mitchell demands that Nixon make public a summary of his income tax returns, as have Eisenhower, Stevenson and Sparkman. Nixon says his public radio-television statement was taken from HIS tax returns.

Senator Taft, campaigning in Washington state, says the only satisfactory solution to the Korean war is a program calling for the protection of Asia by Asians. He says: "We can't send American boys to the far flung corners of the earth every time someone wants to start a war." He adds: "Korea has been Truman's war from the beginning."

At the United Nations today, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky charged that American capitalists wanted the war in Korea because they feared an economic crisis. Vishinsky says "they needed something to bolster the tottering economy and it was bolstered by the Korean war." In a three and a half hour speech, the Russian proposed a commission to settle the war and unify Korea. He would have Russia, Communist China and all nations that have taken part in the war represented on this commission. He rejected the American proposal for a settlement.. said Secretary Acheson tried to pin the blame for the war on Russia "solely as an American election manuver." Vishinsky says he can't tell the difference between Republicans and Democrats.. blamed John Foster Dulles for "inciting" the South Koreans to attack the North Koreas.. [redacted] Secretary Acheson says the speech contained nothing we haven't heard a thousand times before at Panmunjom and here."

The Pentagon reports that we suffered an additional one thousand two hundred and seventy-eight casualties -- killed..wounded and missing. -- in Korea last week. That's the largest weekly increase in the casualty list since November of last year. The total American casualty list is now 123, 395.

Today, fresh Chinese troops tried to recapture the peaks of Sniper Ridge and Trinagle Hill as the battle went into its 17th day. Allied officers estimate that our heavy artillery fire caught at least one thousand enemy soldiers in the open.

The Fifth air force says South Korean flyers have now made their first all-Korean air strike of the war.

In Washington, the Bureau of Labor statistics says retail food prices went up seven-tenths of one per cent in eight cities during the first half of October. The Agriculture Department says prices received by farmers in the MONTH ending October 15 dropped two per cent..to the lowest level in 23 months. In the same period, the living and production costs of farmers went down one per cent...to the lowest point since September of last year.

University of Maryland officials revealed today that an attempt was made last week to bribe three of their football players to keep the score down against Louisiana State. Maryland beat Louisiana 34 to six last Saturday. The three players reported the bribe offer to their coach immediately. State police are looking for a sophomore student who approached the three players.

Edward R. Murrow: October 29, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

I spent today following a couple of red-faced politicians - General Eisenhower and New York's Governor Thomas E. Dewey. They were campaigning in the Bronx and Westchester, on the northern fringe of New York City. When we left the city a harsh wind was driving little pellets of snow along the streets. The candidate and the Governor were in an open car. Their faces were red or blue all day - that came from the weather rather than frustration or disappointment. The crowds gave the General a respectful hearing and an enthusiastic reception. Schoolchildren had been let out in some places they appeared to outnumber those of voting age. General Eisenhower made substantially the same speech wherever he went, just as Governor Stevenson did in New Jersey yesterday. He kept hammering away at the Korean issue explaining, as he has done before, why he has promised to go there. HE ALSO SAID OUR POWER SHOULD NOT BE PINNED DOWN, FIGHTING THE ENEMY IS SECOND TEAM BUT SHOULD BE HELD INSTEAD AS A MOBILE RESERVE - TO BE USED WHEN + WHERE IT'S NEEDED. He said that he was glad that his friends had come to his defense against charges of bigotry and race prejudice. And he hit rather harder than he has before on one point. He kept telling his audiences that in 1948, only four years ago, a considerable number of Democrats had wanted him as their candidate; had told him he was the only man who could save the Party. He didn't want any part of it. The Party's record didn't look good to him. And now those same Democrats who wanted to draft him in 1948 consider him "a very vile creature."

Eisenhower told his audience in the Bronx that we must have no second-class citizenship. And he referred to the liberation of the inmates of concentration camps in Germany, saying: "We fed them, we clothed them, ministered to their pitiful needs, and I saw to it personally."

Today's swing through the northern fringe of New York City was beautifully organized. The sound trucks were in the right place. In front of school building the children were out, in several cases the school teachers leading them in cheering and singing. Barbers and butchers came out of their shops still wearing their aprons. In one place there was an old Model T Ford carrying a sign: "Drive Carefully; you might hit someone voting for Ike". There were a considerable number of people waving new brooms along the way, (apparently to indicate a clean sweep). When we were in White Plains, in Westchester County, a mother had her three or four-year-old child waiting beside the General's car, waiting for him to emerge from a building. The child was unhappy, on the verge of tears. The mother insisted that the child "liked Ike;" and the child insisted it wasn't true. Said the mother: "You don't want to embarrass Mother by crying when Ike comes out." The child didn't care about that either, and said: "All right, where is he, anyway?" The mother said: "I don't know". The child said: "I do - he's taking a bath."

No stop for Lunch—

As the Eisenhower party travelled through Westchester, the General appeared to be enjoying every minute of it. He was wearing a brown camel's hair coat, and a khaki-colored scarf, which I think was the same one he wore during the war. Most of the time he wore no hat; and most of the time he was standing up in that open car, waving first with one hand and then the other. Occasionally he would sit down for a half-mile or so, and then he would see two or three people standing beside the road; he would stand up and wave ~~MX~~ at them. Once he stood up to wave at a boy and his dog, a good two hundred yards off the highway. One of the reporters in the Press bus remarked that once in Minnesota he "flushed" a farmer who was hiding, with a single wave of his arm, across a forty-acre field. I don't know how long it's been since the General did any calisthenics, but today, what with the standing up and the sitting down and arm-waving, he certainly got his exercise for this week. He picked up the keys to two cities, & two bouquets of flowers for Mrs. Eisenhower, who did not accompany him. Whether he picked up any votes will not be known until next Tuesday night.

~~XXXX

It's a generally accepted practice in a long political campaign requiring many speeches to rely on ghost writers. At this point in the campaign, many of them doubtless feel the way Mark Twain did when he said:"There ain't nothing more to write about and I'm glad of it. Because if I'd a knowed what a trouble it was, I wouldn't a tackled it. And I ain't a going to no more."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson and President Truman both charged today that General Eisenhower said last June that there is no clear cut answer to the Korean war. And the General, campaigning here in the New York area, said we must over-haul our foreign policy so that we are not forever caught in "this Korean trap, fighting the real enemy's second team." I'd like to review for you, in a few minutes, General Eisenhower's campaign day in the Bronx and Westchester County.

Stevenson, in Pennsylvania, charged that a speech writer from a "slick magazine, cooked up the idea" for Ike to propose a trip to Korea. He said this was an "idea to catch votes by playing upon our hopes for a quick end to the war... and the general accepts it immediately." Stevenson calls the proposal cynical, says Eisenhower has changed his mind since last June fifth when he said there was no clear cut answer to Korea...that we could only stand firm, reduce our losses, and try to get a decent armistice. Stevenson says the General was right in June and is wrong now in late October. Eisenhower is gambling that the people won't remember...he is making a mistake..."playing politics with peace will not solve our problems nor win the election."

The President, campaigning in Iowa, also referred to Eisenhower's June statement. And he said if Eisenhower is elected...with his belief that negotiation is appeasement...and if the people give the General a Congress that would reduce the size of our defenses, and the strength of our alliances...then that would be "a formula for disaster." Truman says the only right way to solve the problem of Korea is what we're doing now: build up the United Nations, train and equip more South Koreans and apply every pressure for an honorable truce.

In Chicago tonight, the President will ask the General if he's sure he is "much better" than Generals Bradley, Collins, Ridgeway, Van Fleet and Vandenbergh...all of whom have been to Korea, without being able to find how to bring about a quick and honorable peace. The President will say: "No general order is going to eliminate our problems. No "superman" is going to solve our difficulties for us. And anybody who poses and talks like a superman is a fraud."

Earlier, appealing to Iowa farmers, Truman said the present price support program will hold corn prices at $1.60 a bushel...if the "sliding scale" proposed by Senator Taft were in effect, the support price would be only $1.18.

Republican congressmen who have been following the Truman train say the present farm program was passed by the 80th Congress. Republican Representative Hope of Kansas says the nation is now operating under the same farm program that Republican-controlled Congress passed. He says but for this, the support level would have dropped sharpley.

Senator Nixon, in Los Angeles, said today that a Democratic charge that he and his family own 250-thousand dollars worth of property is a "lie." Nixon says he has never discussed property owned by his parents because he didn't think it was anyone else's business. He says the Democrats are attempting to divert the campaign from the main issue...attacking the integrity and honor of his 75-year-old father, his mother and brother. National Chairman Summerfield calls the charge...made in a Democratic party paper "slanderous and libelous."

Democratic Chairman Mitchell demands that Nixon make public a summary of his income tax returns as have Eisenhower, Stevenson and Sparkman. Nixon says his public radio-television statement was taken from his tax returns.

Senator Taft, campaigning in Washington state, says the only satisfactory solution to the Korean war is a program calling for the protection of Asia by Asians. He says: "We can't send American boys to the far flung corners of the earth every time someone wants to start a war." He adds: "Korea has been Truman's war from the beginning."

At the United Nations today, Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky charged that American capitalists wanted the war in Korea because they feared an economic crisis. Vishinsky says "they needed something to bolster the tottering economy and it was bolstered by the Korean war." In a three and a half hour speech, the Russian proposed a commission to settle the war and unify Korea. He would have Russia, Communist China, and all nations that have taken part in the war represented on this commission. He rejected the American proposal for a settlement... said Secretary Acheson tried to pin the blame for the war on Russia "solely as an American election manuver." Vishinsky says he can't tell the difference between Republicans and Democrats...blamed John Foster Dulles for "inciting" the South Koreans to attack the North Koreans. Secretary Acheson says the speech contained "nothing we haven't heard a thousand times before at Panmunjom and here."

The Pentagon reports that we suffered an additional one thousand two hundred and seventy-eight casualties killed...wounded and missing...in Korea last week. That's the largest weekly increase in the casualty list since November of last year. The total American casualty list is now 123,395.

Today, fresh Chinese troops tried to recapture the peaks of Sniper Ridge, and Triangle Hill, as the battle went into its 17th day. Allied officers estimate that our heavy artillery fire caught at least one thousand enemy soldiers in the open.

The Fifth air force says South Korean flyers have now made their first all-Korean air strike of the war.

In Washington, the Bureau of Labor statistics says retail food prices went up seven-tenths of one per cent in eight cities during the first half of October. The Agriculture Department says prices received by farmers in the month ending October 15 dropped two per cent...to the lowest level in 23 months. In the same period, the living and production costs of farmers went down one per cent...to the lowest point since September of last year.

University of Maryland officials revealed today that an attempt was made last week to bribe three of their football players to keep the score down against Louisiana State. Maryland beat Louisiana 34 to six last Saturday. The three players reported the bribe offer to their coach immidiately. State police are looking for a sophomore student who approached the three players.

I spent today following a couple of red-faced politicians - General Eisenhower and New York's Governor Thomas E. Dewey. They were campaigning in the Bronx and Westchester, on the northern fringe of New York City. When we left the city a harsh wind was driving little pellets of snow along the streets. The candidate and the Governor were in an open car. Their faces were red or blue all day - that came from the weather rather than frustration or disappointment. The crowds gave the General a respectful hearing and an enthusiastic reception. Schoolchildren had been let out and in some places they appeared to outnumber those of voting age. General Eisenhower made substantially the same speech wherever he went, just as Governor Stevenson did in New Jersey yesterday. He kept hammering away at the Korean issue explaining, as he has done before, why he has promised to go there. He also said our power should not be pinned down, fighting the enemy's second team, but should be held instead, as a mobile reserve - to be used when and where it's needed. He said that he was glad that his friends had come to his defense against charges of bigotry and race prejudice. And he hit rather harder than he has before on one point. He kept telling his audiences that in 1948, only four years ago, a considerable number of Democrats had wanted him as their candidate; had told him he was the only man who could save the Party. He didn't want any part of it. The Party's record didn't look good to him. And now those same Democrats who wanted to draft him in 1948 consider him "a very vile creature."

Eisenhower told his audience in the Bronx that we must have no second-class citizenship. And he referred to the liberation of the inmates of concentration camps in Germany, saying: "We fed them, we clothed them, ministered to their pitiful needs, and I saw to it personally.

Today's swing through the northern fringe of New York City was beautifully organized. The sound trucks were in the right place. In front of school buildings the children were out, in several cases the school teachers leading them in cheering and singing. Barbers and butchers came out of their shops still wearing their aprons. In one place there was an old Model T Ford carrying a sing: "Drive Carefully; you might hit someone voting for Ike." There were a considerably number of people waving new brooms along thw way, (apparently to indicate a clean sweep.) When we were in White Plains, in Westchester County, a mother had her three or four-year-old child waiting beside the General's car, waiting for him to emerge from a building. The child was unhappy, on the verge of tears. The mother insisted that the child "liked Ike;" and the child insisted it wasn't true. Said the mother: "You don't want to embarrass Mother by crying when Ike comes out." The child didn't care about that either, and said: "All right, where is he, anyway?" The mother said: "I don't know". The child said: "I do - he's taking a bath."

As the Eisenhower party travelled through Westchester, no stop for lunch, the General appeared to be enjoying every minute of it. He was wearing a brown camel's hair coat, and a khaki-colored scarf which I think was the same one he wore during the war. Most of the time he wore no hat; and most of the time he was standing up in that open car, waving first with one hand and then the other. Occasionally he would sit down for a half-mile or so, and then he would see two or three people standing beside the road; he would stand up and wave at them. Once he stood up to wave at a boy and his dog a good two hundred yards off the highway. One of the reporters in the Press bus remarked that once in Minnesota he "flushed" a farmer who was hiding, with a single wave of his arm, across a forty-acre field. I don't know how long it's been since the General did any calisthenics, but today, what with the standing up and the sitting down and arm-waving, he certainly got his exercise for this week. He picked up the keys to two cities, and two bouquets of flowers for Mrs.Eisenhower, who did not accompany him. Whether he picked up any votes will not be known until next Tuesday night.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It's a generally accepted practice in a long political campaign requiring many speeches to rely on ghost writers. At this point in the campaign, many of them doubtless feel the way Mark Twain did when he said: "There ain't nothing more to write about and I'm glad of it. Because if I'd a knowed what a trouble it was, I wouldn't a tackled it. And I ain't a going to no more."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Oct 30, 1952.

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower both said today that they have made no "deals" for election support. Stevenson, campaigning in Pennsylvania, said: "I have made no deals or committments to any individual or political clique or pressure group. And I haven't had to..or even been asked to." Eisenhower, here in New York, says: "I have made no deals. No one has a claim on me. No one has a promise from me..no one has captured me. I am my own man."

The General speaks in Madison Square Garden tonight. He charges that the Democrats have made this "the most scurrilous campaign in our history." He denies that he has "changed" since the campaign began. He says the Democrats have changed: "Because they could not exploit me, they are determined to destroy me; to destroy my life-long friendships, my reputation, my spirit." He says that both the President and the Governor are using "unrestrained slander." But, says Eisenhower, "I have beem through real bombardments and I am unscathed by their fusillade of blanks and blankety-blanks." He says all of these charges are the result of Democratic desperation... that the unification of the Republican party has infuriated his opponents. And Eisenhower says he has unified the party without becoming anyone's captive. Earlier in the day, touring through New York City, the General said: the Democrats say they can't do anything about the Korean war, but just let it drag on and on. But he proposes to go there, do something about it, see what can be done to reduce casualties, train more south Koreans. The General also referred to a letter he has from General Van fleet.. a letter I'd like to discuss in a few minutes.

Governor Stevenson charged again that the Republicans may have delayed an armistice by promising WHAT he CALLS a quick and easy solution of the Korean war. And he says the Republicans have had the "effrontery and the shamless hypocrisy" to suggest that the Administration has been soft toward Communism. Stevenson listed aid to Greece and Turkey.. the Marshal plan..NATO.. mutual aid..and said all have helped stop Communism. He says the Old Guard Republicans fought every one of these measures while the Democrats recognized the threat of Communism and took these steps to meet the threat. Stevenson [redacted] made a plea for an end to what he called "the noisy and unncessary war" between government and business. He said the Democrats have done more for business in the last 20 years than has been done in any similar period.

The President speaks in Detroit tonight. He will say that we are reaching a turning point in the cold war.. the balances are moving in our favor. He charges that Eisenhower has changed his beliefs, adopted the isolationist line. He doesn't think our chances for peace lie in isolationist policies of withdrawal or feeble half-measures of appeasement and surrender. Truman charges that Eisenhower's campaign tactics have injured the unity of the nation. He says the Republicans are running on Senator Mc Carthy's coat-tails. That Eisenhower has put fear in the hearts of people all over the world by his loose talk about Korea. Earlier, as his train moved through Michigan, the President said that Eisenhower and Taft made a "deal" at Morningside heights.. that this could make the difference between war and peace. He says the General calls himself a "no deal" man but actually he made a deal to cut the budget TO 70-billions BY 1954.. a deal to give the states the rights to the oil tidelands which belong to all people.

Editor and Publisher Magazine reports tonight that General Eisenhower now has the support of 67 per cent of the nation's newspapers. They have [redacted] 80 per cent of the total daily paper circulation. Stevenson is supported by 14 per cent of the papers with 11 per cent of the total circulation. Eighteen per cent of the papers polled, say they are undecided about which candidate to support.

In Dallas, Colonel Lawrence Westbrook, who was fired last night as an official of the Democratic National Committee, [redacted] said today that he has never used any influence, to get a tungsten contract with the government. Westbrook and two others, acting for a Portugese Company, had signed a 9-million dollar contract with the government. It has since been cancelled. The New York Herald Tribune, breaking the story, called it "the biggest 5 per cent deal ever exposed." Democratic Chairman Mitchell, who dismissed Westbrook, said there was no indication of improper influence, but he didn't want any committee employe to be engaged in business with the government. Westbrook says he made the arrangement at a time when he had no government or party connection and did not contemplate any connection.

Henry Grunewald today pleaded innocent to contempt of Congress charges that arose from his refusal to answer questions put to him by House tax investigators.

And that committee charges that Internal Revenue Commissioner Dunlap has refused to give it records on a 20-million dollar tax refund case, involving Universal Pictures. The tax Bureau says Dunlap has informed the committee he will be happy to meet with the full group at a later date.

At the United Nations today, British Minister of State Evelyn Lloyd rejected the Russian plan for a new commission for Korea. And he said that to yield to the Communist demand for the return of all prisoners of war would be "a crime against humanity..and dishonor all who took any part in it."

In Korea today, Communist troops DROVE allied infantyrmen from Triangle Hill on the central front. They over-ran one company of U.N. troops. A front dispatch says the attack by two thousand Chinese cost us the biggest loss of territory since the battle began 18 days ago. Allied officers say that today, for the first time in the Korean war, enemy artillery outshot U.N. artillery by a ratio of two and a half to one. The combined barrages are said to have been the greatest of this war.

Edward R. Murrow: October 30, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Last night General Eisenhower quoted from a letter, written by General Van Fleet, Commander of the 8th Army in Korea. Eisenhower quoted the letter to support his contention that South Koreans should take over the front line action, and that American troops be brought back into reserve positions, supplying naval and air support for the South Koreans. Van Fleet's letter said the South Korean Army is now in "apple-pie order". He said his plans included doubling the size of the South Korean Army, (twenty divisions instead of ten.) Van Fleet said he couldn't get ten, so he said: "Give me Six, and I would release two United States divisions. Or, Give me four, and I would release one United States division. It finally got down to a two division increase, but still no approval to this date." General Eisenhower did not give the date upon which that letter was written.

It is unusual for a political candidate to quote a letter from a field commander, not addressed to him, and containing implied but vigorous criticism of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Today in Korea General Van Fleet was asked whether he recalled writing the letter, and whether he had given Eisenhower permission to quote from it. Van Fleet said: "No comment". At last report the Armed Forces Radio and newspapers in Korea, had not reported Eisenhower's use of the letter.

The letter is said to have been written on October 10th to Major-General Mood, Formerly Van Fleet's Chief of Staff. who today described it as confidential and personal." No one had asked him for permission to use it. Eisenhower headquarters said last night that a copy of the letter had reached them from Mrs. Van Fleet.

On October 24th General Van Fleet stated in answer to a written question that South Korea is not capable of producing an army strong enough to safely man the entire front, at the present time with Chinese Communists in the field.

Three weeks ago Defense Secretary Lovett said: "The South Koreans now have ~~XXX~~ fifty percent more men than we have in Korea."

I think it is an historical fact that no field commander ever had all the men and metal he wanted - always keeps asking for more. I know that Van Fleet has been doing that, arguing with the Joint Chiefs and the Pentagon. Now of course if the Joint Chiefs should attempt to clarify a confused situation, they will be liable to the charge of partisan politics, just as General Van Fleet is, if the letter was used with his knowledge and consent.

This involvement of the Military Establishment in politics, must be deplored by anyone who knows either military or political history. # And the Democrats have done as much if not more of it than the Republicans. The other day Senator Wayne Morse, after he had switched to Stevenson, read from a Top Secret document prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff; a document designed to prove that Eisenhower was responsible for recommending that we pull our troops out of Korea. The question has been asked, by Eisenhower among others, how Senator Morse got hold of this secret paper. But the question hasn't been answered. He certainly didn't pick it up in a taxi cab.

President Truman expanded considerably the use of professional military men in civilian and political posts. But there is supposed to be a tradition in this country that professional soldiers are non-political; that promotion and preferment in the armed forces is on the basis of accomplishment and demonstrated ability. If the time ever comes when junior officers believe, or expect that advancement in their profession depends upon their political affiliation, then we need only look to what has happened to armies elsewhere that have become political puppets to appreciate what will happen to the whole structure of our national defense.

There is considerable precedent for believing that we shall survive this election without a national nervous breakdown. We have had rougher ones than this before. But we are dicing with the destiny of the country, when we risk the involvement of the Military Establishment in partisan politics. Both Parties have been guilty of it. If ever we reach the point where command of citizen soldiers is given to men because they are Democrats or Republicans, then both Parties and the nation will have lost.

We were talking of the necessity of keeping the military out of politics. This reminds us of a story Carl Sandburg tells about Lincoln and his two children:"One had a toy the other wanted, and clamored for. At last, when told to let his brother have it in order to keep him quiet, he blurted: No sir, I must have it to quiet myself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Governor Stevenson and General Eisenhower both said today that they have made no "deals" for election support. Stevenson, campaigning in Pennsylvania, said: "I have made no deals or committments to any individual or political clique or pressure group. And I haven't had to...or even been asked to." Eisenhower, here in New York, says: "I have made no deals. No one has a claim on me. No one has a promise from me...no one has captured me. I am my own man."

The General speaks in Madison Square Garden tonight. He charges that the Democrats have made this "the most scurrilous campaign in our history." He denies that he has "changed" since the campaign began. He says the Democrats have changed: "Because they could not exploit me, they are determined to destroy me; to destroy my life-long friendships, my reputation, my spirit." He says that both the President and the Governor are using "unrestrained slander." But, says Eisenhower, "I have been through real bombardments and I am unscathed by their fusillade of blands and blankety-blanks." He says all of these charges are the result of Democratic desperation...that the unification of the Republican party has infuriated his opponents. And Eisenhower says he has unified the party without becoming anyone's captive. Earlier in the day, touring through New York City, the General said: the Democrats say they can't do anything about the Korean war, but just let it drag on and on. But he proposes to go there, do something about it, see what can be done to reduce casualties, train more South Koreans. The General also referred to a letter he has from General Van Fleet...a letter I'd like to discuss in a few minutes.

Governor Stevenson charged again that the Republicans may have delayed an armistice by promising what he calls a quick and easy solution of the Korean War. And he says the Republicans have had the "effrontery and the shameless hypocrisy" to suggest that the Administration has been soft toward Communism. Stevenson listed aid to Greece and Turkey...the Marshal Plan..NATO...mutual aid... and said all have helped stop Communism. He says the Old Guard Republicans fought every one of these measures while the Democrats recognized the threat of Communism and took these steps to meet the threat. Stevenson made a plea for an end to what he called "the noisy and unnecessary war" between government and business. He said the Democrats have done more for business in the last 20 years than has been done in any similar period.

The President speaks in Detroit tonight. He will say that we are reaching a turning point in the cold war...the balances are moving in our favor. He charges that Eisenhower has changed his beliefs, adopted the isolationist line. He doesn't think our chances for peace lie in isolationist policies of withdrawal or feeble half-measures of appeasement and surrender. Truman charges that Eisenhower's campaign tactics have injured the unity of the nation. He says the Republicans are running on Senator McCarthy's coat-tails. That Eisenhower has put fear in the hearts of people all over the world by his loose talk about Korea. Earlier, as his train moved through Michigan, the President said that Eisenhower and Taft made a "deal" at Morningside heights...that this could make the difference between war and peace. He says the General calls himself a "no deal" man but actually he made a deal to cut the budget to 70-billions by 1954...a deal to give the states the rights to the oil tidelands which belong to all people.

Editor and Publisher Magazine reports tonight that General Eisenhower now has the support of 67 per cent of the nation's newspapers. They have 80 percent of the total daily paper circulation. Stevenson is supported by 14 percent of the papers with 11 per cent of the total circulation. Eighteen percent of the papers polled say they are undecided about which candidate to support.

In Dallas, Colonel Lawrence Westbrook, who was last night fired as an official of the Democratic National Committee, said today that he has never used any influence to get a tungsten contract with the government. Westbrook and two others, acting for a Portugese company, had signed a 9-million dollar contract with the government. It has since been cancelled. The New York Herald Tribune, breaking the story, called it "the biggest 5 per cent deal ever exposed." Democratic Chairman Mitchell, who dismissed Westbrook, said there was no indication of improper influence but he didn't want any committee employee to be engaged in business with the government. Westbrook says he made the arrangement at a time when he had no government or party connection and did not contemplate any connection.

Henry Grunewald today pleaded innocent to contempt of Congress charges that arose from his refusal to answer questions put to him by House tax investigators. And that committee charges that Internal Revenue Commissioner Dunlap has refused to give it records on a 200million dollar tax refund case, involving Universal Pictures. The Tax Bureau says Dunlap has informed the committee he will be happy to meet with the full group at a later date.

At the United Nations today, British Minister of State Selwyn Lloyd rejected the Russian plan for a new commission for Korea. And he said that to yield to the Communist demand for the return of all prisoners of war would be "a crime against humanity...and dishonor all who took any part in it."

In Korea today, Communist troops drove allied infantrymen from Triangle Hill on the central front. They over-ran one company of U.N. troops. A front dispatch says the attack by two thousand Chinese cost us the biggest loss of territory since the battle began 18 days ago. Allied officers say that today, for the first time in the Korean war enemy artillery outshot U.N. artillery by a ratio of two and a half to one. The combined barrages are said to have been the greatest of this war.

Last night General Eisenhower quoted from a letter written by General Van Fleet, Commander of the 8th Army in Korea. Eisenhower quoted the letter to support his contention that South Koreans should take over the front line action and that American troops be brought back into reserve positions, supplying naval and air support for the South Koreans. Van Fleet's letter said the South Korean

Army is now in "apple-pie order." He said his plans included doubling the size of the South Korean Army, (twenty divisions instead of ten.) Van Fleet said he couldn't get ten, so he said: "Give me Six and I would release two United States divisions. Or give me four and I would release one United States division. It finally got down to a two division increase, but still no approval to this date." General Eisenhower did not give the date upon which that letter was written.

It is unusual for a political candidate to quote a letter from a field commander, not addressed to him and containing implied but vigorous criticism of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Today in Korea General Van Fleet was asked whether he recalled writing the letter, and whether he had given Eisenhower permission to quote from it. Van Fleet said: "No comment". At last report the Armed Forces Radio and newspapers in Korea had not reported Eisenhower's use of the letter. The letter is said to have been written on October 10th to Major-General Mood, formerly Van Fleet's Chief of Staff, who today described it as confidential and personal." No one had asked him for permission to use it. Eisenhower headquarters said last night that a copy of the letter had reached them from Mrs. Van Fleet.

On October 24th General Van Fleet stated in answer to a written question that South Korea is not capable of producing an army strong enough to safely man the entire front, at the present time with Chinese Communists in the field.

Three weeks ago Defense Secretary Lovett said: "The South Koreans now have fifty percent more men than we have in Korea."

I think it is an historical fact that no field commander ever had all the men and metal he wanted - always keeps asking for more. I know that Van Fleet has been doing that, arguing with the Joint Chiefs and the Pentagon. Now of course if the Joint Chiefs should attempt to clarify a confused situation they will be liable to the charge of partisan politics, just as General Van Fleet is if the letter was used with his knowledge and consent.

This involvement of the Military Establishment in politics must be deplored by anyone who knows either military or political history. And the Democrats have done as much if not more of it than the Republicans. The other day Senator Wayne Morse, after he had switched to Stevenson, read from a Top Secret document prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff; a document designed to prove that Eisenhower was responsible for recommending that we pull our troops out of Korea. The question has been asked, by Eisenhower among others, how Senator Morse got hold of this secret paper. But the question hasn't been answered. He certainly didn't pick it up in a taxi cab.

President Truman expanded considerably the use of professional military men in civilian and political posts. But there is supposed to be a tradition in this country that professional soldiers are non-political; that promotion and preferment in the armed forces is on the basis of accomplishment and demonstrated ability. If the time ever comes when junior officers believe, or expect that advancement in their profession depends upon their political affiliation, then we need only look to what has happened to armies elsewhere that have become political puppets to appreciate what will happen to the whole structure of our national defense.

There is considerable precedent for believing that we shall survive this election without a national nervous breakdown. We have had rougher ones than this before. But we are dicing with the destiny of the country when we risk the involvement of the Military Establishment in partisan politics. Both Parties have been guilty of it. If ever we reach the point where command of citizen soldiers is given to men because they are Democrats or Republicans, then both Parties and the nation will have lost.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the necessity of keeping politics out of the military establishment. This reminds us of a story Carl Sandburg tells about Lincoln and his two children: "One had a toy the other wanted, and clamored for. At last, when told to let his brother have it in order to keep him quiet, he blurted: No sir, I must have it to quiet myself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Oct, 31, 1952

This is the news:

Twelve hundred rioting prisoners at the Ohio State Penitentiary have set fire to all the important buildings in the prison.. (located near downtown Columbus) Warden Alvis says the fires are out of control.. guards and state highway patrolmen, armed with machine guns, are ready to prevent a mass break. They have orders to shoot if necessary. The Warden told reporters: "We have lost control of the inmates".. some of the PRISONERS say "We are going all the way this time". (for a break.) It was in this prison in 1930, that 322 convicts lost their lives in a fire on Easter Monday. Apparently the prisoners right now hold one guard as a hostage. Late reports say one State Highway patrolmen has been shot. There has been some firing. The cell blocks do not appear to be burning.

1A

[redacted] the news:

[redacted] Ohio state penitentiary [redacted] every major building in the pen is [redacted] Twelve hundred convicts, rioting [redacted] over food, started the fires which are [redacted] The penitentiary is in Columbus.. a few [redacted] 's regular police. [redacted] in the area and county [redacted] They are trying to prvent a [redacted] such as the one [redacted] Easter Monday in 1930.. [redacted] took the [redacted].

Within the hour, Governor Stevenson returned to his campaign chores here in New York after settling another disturbance at the Menard state prison in Illinois. The governor flew from Pittsburgh to the prison last night; approved an ultimatum to 339 prisoners who held 7 guards as hostages for four days. After the warning that the STATE POLICE [redacted] would come in shooting, the prisoners quit.. released their hostages..returned to their cells. Then Stevenson flew back to New York as his campaign train moved through Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware with others making the speeches.

[redacted]

IN KOREA,

The enemy now holds the top of TRIANGLE HILL. [redacted]. We withdrew at dusk after 24 hours of the bitterest fighting in the 19-day old battle. We left behind three companies of South Korean soldiers.. an estimated 550 men. They were ordered to withdraw. Their commander decided to stay, and counter-attack . The Chinese attacked in three waves, a total of three thousand men. The 550 South Koreans were wiped out. Major Robert Galer of Montana, assigned to the ROK's, told reporters: "It was the utmost bravery. The Chinese came through. The Koreans stayed. It was a very gallant disobediance of orders."

At the United Nations today four nations, with troops fighting in Korea appealed for a conciliatory spirit in negotiations to end the war. Australia, the Dutch, Belgium and Greece all insisted they will not budge from the decision not to force prisoners to return to the enemy.

The Korean war HAS BEEN THE SUBJECT [redacted] of much of the day's political arguments.

The President will say in Cincinnati tonight that General Eisenhower has used a letter from Korean Commander Van Fleet in what Truman calls a "reckless and cynical attempt to pick up votes." Truman says

Eisenhower wants the people to believe that he can bring the troops home sooner than other good generals could; WANTS PEOPLE TO BELIEVE that our other generals are not interested in saving the lives of our men. Truman charges that Eisenhower is impugning the character and patriotism of the joint chiefs of staff, and our top commanders. Truman says: we have built up the South Korean army.. a proposal for a further build-up by General Mark Clark has been approved. Eisenhower's "go to Korea" plan was dreamed up by a ghost writer. Eisenhower visited Korea in 1946 then, in 1947, approved the withdrawal of our troops. Now he says that decision was wrong. Truman says there is no reason to suppose that when Eisenhower was wrong in 1947, he would be right in 1953. He says Eisenhower used the Van Fleet letter to try to make the people believe that the government is against training South Koreans. Truman says: that is not true. We have built 10 divisions and are building more.

In Chicago tonight, General Eisenhower will say that his mention of Korea has brought "frantic protests" from the Administration. [redacted] He is going to find out what can be done to improve our situation, and bring an end to the war at the earliest moment..compatible with honor. The General says: "I have no magic military wand to bring the war to an end. But I know that on the spot, I can learn something that will be helpful in serving the American people." Eisenhower says the Democrats have distorted his proposal.. but anyone who knows anything about war recognizes that the proposed trip is a practical step in working out a plan to help end the war. Eisenhower also said again that isolationism is dead as a political issue. And the Administration should know that world-leadership will never come from what he calls State Department "pussy-footing."

Mrs. Margaret Van Fleet, wife of General Van Fleet, told reporters in Los Angeles today, that she turned over a letter from her husband to General Eisenhower.. at Eisenhower's request. / The General phoned, asked permission, and said: "I wouldn't want to hurt Van." Mrs. Van Fleet said she gave Eisenhower permission to use the letter.

45

Both the White House and the Defense Department have denied published reports that General Van Fleet will be releived as a result of the letter Eisenhower has used. Republican Senator Carlson says Van Fleet will be fired because he is opposing what the Senator calls "the bancrupt policy that has bled our finest manhood for an indefinite stalemate."

Generals Ridgeway, Clark and Van Fleet and South Korean President Rhee have no comment on any of this.

The State Department says the document Senator Morse used recently in his effort to show that Eisenhower recommended withdrawl of our troops from Korea in 1947 is still a top secret document in the State Department files. Morse said today the document was given to him by "authorities compten to give me permission to quote them."

Edward R. Murrow: October 31, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

We have spent part of today reading campaign speeches - (a not always rewarding activity) - in an effort to "isolate" some of the issues. We find the Democrats saying that "of all the fake campaigns this one is tops, so far as the Republican candidate is concerned. They are attacking the "lobbies of special interests." Their opponents are trying to buy the election, while ignoring the important issues of the day. The election of the Republican candidate will start a headlong dash toward another depression. We have been crudely and widely cheated by the power lobby. Our institutions of free labor, and free enterprise, would be endangered if those who hate labor win the election. Farmers are urged to "get out the vote, for yourselves, your farms, your futures." The Republicans have the propaganda and the money, but the Democrats have the support of the people. Inflation must be curbed, before it leads us to economic disaster. Republicans have stuck a pitchfork in the farmer's back. They are trying to stir up the city consumer against the farmer, by downright dishonesty. And the Republicans want to tear down the whole natural resources development program, in the West."

Our ~~research into~~ Reading of campaign speeches finds the Republicans saying that the President is desperate. The campaign has hit a new low in mud-slinging. Reckless abuse has been scattered from coast to coast. The Democrats are attempting to promote antagonism and prejudice. There can be no isolation for America. The Republicans acknowledge that the Taft-Hartley Law is imperfect, and will consider possible changes. They promise a foreign policy based on the firm belief that we can have peace. The Government must cut spending, abolish waste and retire the Federal Debt. The Democrats have deliberately brought on the inflation from which we are now suffering. The Republican Party wants to make the Federal Government the servant, not the master of the people. The two most important jobs are to lift the shadow of war from our homes, and conquer the fears of a depression. The job of cleaning Communists out of Washington will get underway as fast as a Republican President can be elected. America's future is ahead of us. We must maintain our program of farm price supports - the most important single measure to meet the danger of inflation is to cut down every avoidable dollar of spending by the Government.

That is a brief but accurate summary of the issues as presented by the two Parties. The quotations were taken, not from this campaign but from the campaign of 1948, when the candidates were Truman and Dewey.

Every one of them has been repeated in the same words by official Party spokesmen in this campaign. — an echo of '48

What, then, is the new issue - aside from the personalities of the candidates - that distinguishes this campaign from the one of four years ago. The primary new issue is, of course, Korea. General Eisenhower contends that more South Koreans should be trained to man the front lines; says he will go there in person; and quotes a letter from General Van Fleet, Commander of the 8th Army, saying that more South Koreans should be trained. Governor Stevenson says we have been doing all we can to train the South Koreans, and put them in the battle line. There is no easy way out. He will not make false promises of an easy way out, even if it costs him the election. He says the Republicans have wavered between reckless calls to expand the Korean war, and weak-kneed moves to quit.

Republican headquarters is inclined to think that Eisenhower's promise to go to Korea, plus the letter from Van Fleet, has done the Republican cause more good than anything that has happened ~~in many weeks~~ since the start of the campaign.

This reporter cannot find, that the disagreement between the two Parties on the Korean issue, is as deep or as fundamental as it has been made to appear. Neither candidate has promised an easy or quick solution. Eisenhower has not said that his presence in the theatre of operations would alter the course of the war. And any student of Communist political and military science knows it wouldn't. Eisenhower wants more South Koreans trained and equipped; so does Stevenson.

We would appear to have three alternatives in Korea: to pull out, which neither candidate advocates; to expand the war and attempt to reach a military decision, which neither man argues in favor of; or to stand steady, equip as many South Koreans as possible, urge our allies to make a greater contribution, and continue to negotiate. # Regardless of campaign oratory, charges that Stevenson is a weakling, or that Eisenhower is playing the part of a superman, and regardless of who wins next Tuesday - those will remain the three alternatives in our Korean policy.

These are the closing days of the campaign. And we may as well brace ourselves against the last outbursts of political oratory. But the Korean War is something else again. And in this instance, voters of both parties would agree with Thomas Carlyle & Maxim Gorky who said:"The end of man is action, not thought. But everybody knows that it's much harder to turn word into deed, than deed into word."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Twelve hundred rioting prisoners at the Ohio State Penitentiary have set fire to all the important buildings in the prison...(located near downtown Columbus.) Warden Alvis says the fires are out of control...guards and state highway patrolmen, armed with machine guns, are ready to prevent a mass break. They have orders to shoot if necessary. The Warden told reporters: "We have lost control of the inmates"...some of the prisoners say "We are going all the way this time"..(for a break.) It was in this prison in 1930 that 322 convicts lost their lives in a fire on Easter Monday. Apparently the prisoners right now hold one guard as a hostage. Late reports say one State Highway patrolman has been shot. There has been some firing. The cell blocks do not appear to be burning.

Within the hour, Governor Stevenson returned to his campaign chores here in New York after settling another disturbance at the Menard State Prison in Illinois. The governor flew from Pittsburgh to the prison last night; approved an ultimatum to 339 prisoners who held 7 guards as hostages for four days. After the warning that the State Police would come in shooting, the prisoners quit...released their hostages...returned to their cells. Then Stevenson flew back to New York as his campaign train moved through Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware with others making the speeches.

In Korea, the enemy now holds the top of Triangle Hill. We withdrew at dusk after 24 hours of the bitterest fighting in the 19-day old battle. We left behind three companies of South Korean soldiers...an estimated 550 men. They were ordered to withdraw. Their commander decided to stay, and counterattack. The Chinese attacked in three waves, a total of three thousand men. The 550 South Koreans were wiped out. Major Robert Galer of Montana, assigned to the ROK's, told reporters: "It was the utmost bravery. The Chinese came through. The Koreans stayed. It was a very gallant disobediance of orders."

At the United Nations today four nations with troops fighting in Korea appealed for a conciliatory spirit in negotiations to end the war. Australia, the Dutch, Belgium and Greece all insisted they will not budge from the decision not to force prisoners to return to the enemy.

The Korean was has been the subject of much of the day's political arguments.

The President will say in Cincinnati tonight that General Eisenhower has used a letter from Korean Commander Van Fleet in what Truman calla a "reckless and cynical attempt to pick up votes." Truman says Eisenhower wants the people to believe that he can bring the troops home sooner than other good generals could; wants prople to believe that our other generals are not interested in saving the lives of our men. Truman charges that Eisenhower is impugning the character and patriotism of the joint chiefs of staff, and our top commanders. Truman says: we have built up the South Korean army...a proposal for a further build-up by General Mark Clark has been approved. Eisenhower's "go to Korea" plan was dreamed up by a ghost writer. Eisenhower visited Korea in 1946, then in 1947, approved the withdrawal of our troops. Now he says that decision was wrong. Truman says there is no reason to suppose that when Eisenhower was wrong in 1947 he would be right in 1953. He says Eisenhower used the Van Fleet letter to try to make the prople believe that the government is against training South Koreans. Truman says: that is not true. We have built 10 divisions and are building more.

In Chicago tonight, General Eisenhower will say that his mention of Korea has brought "frantic protests" from the Administration. He is going to find out what can be done to improve our situation, and bring an end to the war at the earliest moment...compatible with honor. The General says: "I have no magic military want to bring the war to an end. But I know that on the spot

I can learn something that will be helpful in serving the American people." Eisenhower says the Democrats have distorted his proposal...but anyone who knows anything about war recognizes that the proposed trip is a practical step in working out a plan to help end the war. Eisenhower also said again that isolationism is dead as a political issue. And the Administration should know that world-leadership will never come from what he calls State Department "pussy-footing."

Mrs. Margaret Van Fleet, wife of General Van Fleet, told reporters in Los Angeles today that she turned over a letter from her husband to General Eisenhower...at Eisenhower's request. The General phoned, asked permission and said: "I wouldn't want to hurt Van." Mrs. Van Fleet said she gave Eisenhower permission to use the letter.

Both the White House and the Defense Department have denied published reports that General Van Fleet will be relieved as a result ~~of the letter~~ Eisenhower has used. Republican Senator Carlson says Van Fleet will be fired because he is opposing what the Senator calls "the bankrupt policy that has bled our finest manhood for an indefinite stalemate."

Generals Ridgeway, Clark and Van Fleet and South Korean President Rhee have no comment on any of this.

The State Department says the document Senator Morse used recently in his effort to show that Eisenhower recommended withdrawl of our troops from Korea in 1947 is still a top secret document in the State Department files. Morse said today the document was given to him by "authorities competent to give me permission to quote them."

We have spent part of today reading campaign speeches (a not always rewarding activity) in an effort to "isolate" some of the issues. We find the Democrats saying that "of all the fake campaigns this one is tops, so far as the Republican candidate is concerned. They are attacking the "lobbies of special interests." Their opponents are trying to buy the election, while ignoring the important issues of the day. The election of the Republican candidate will start a headlong dash toward another depression. We have been crudely and widely cheated by the power lobby. Our institutions of free labor and free enterprise would be endangered if those who hate labor win the election. Farmers are urged to "get out the vote, for yourselves, your farms, your futures." The Republicans have the propaganda and the money, but the Democrats have the support of the people. Inflation must be curbed before it leads us to economic disaster. Republicans have stuck a pitchfork in the farmer's back. They are trying to stir up the city consumer against the farmer by downright dishonesty. And the Republicans want to tear down the whole natural resources development program in the West."

Our reading of campaign speeches finds the Republicans saying that the President is desperate. The campaign has hit a new low in mud-slinging. Reckless abuse has been scattered from coast to coast. The Democrats are attempting to promote antagonism and prejudice. There can be no isolation for America. The Republicans acknowledge that the Taft-Hartley Law is imperfect, and will consider possible changes. They promise a foreign policy based on the firm belief that we can have peace. The Government must cut spending, abolish waste and retire the Federal Debt. The Democrats have deliberately brought on the inflation from which we are now suffering. The Republican Party wants to make the Federal Government the servant, not the master of the people. The two most important jobs are to lift the shadow of war from our homes, and conquer the fears of a depression. The job of cleaning Communists out of Washington will get underway as fast as a Republican President can be elected. America's future is ahead of us. We must maintain our program of farm price supports - the most important single measure to meet the danger of inflation is to cut down every avoidable dollar of spending by the Government.

That is a brief but accurate summary of the issues as presented by the two Parties. The quotations were taken, not from this campaign but from the campaign of 1948, when the candidates were Truman and Dewey. Every one of them has been repeated in the same words by official Party spokesmen in this campaign...an echo of 1948.

What, then, is the new issue - aside from the personalities of the candidates - that distinguishes this campaign from the one of four years ago. The primary new issue is, of course, Korea. General Eisenhower contends that more South Koreans should be trained to man the front lines; says he will go there in person; and quotes a letter from General Van Fleet, Commander of the 8th Army, saying that more South Koreans should be trained. Governor Stevenson says we have been doing all we can to train the South Koreans and put them in the battle line. There is no easy way out. He will not make false promises of an easy way out, even if it costs him the election. He says the Republicans have wavered between reckless calls to expand the Korean war, and weak-kneed moves to quit.

Republican headquarters is inclined to think that Eisenhower's promise to go to Korea, plus the letter from Van Fleet, has done the Republican cause more good than anything that has happened since the start of the campaign.

This reporter cannot find that the disagreement between the two Parties on the Korean issue is as deep or as fundamental as it has been made to appear. Neither candidate has promised an easy or quick solution. Eisenhower has not said that his presence in the theatre of operations would alter the course of the war. And any student of Communist political and military science knows it wouldn't. Eisenhower wants more South Koreans trained and equipped; so does Stevenson.

We would appear to have three alternatives in Korea: to pull out, which neither candidate advocates; to expand the war and attempt to reach a military decision, which neither man argues in favor of; or to stand steady, equip as many South Koreans as possible, urge our allies to make a greater contribution, and continue to negotiate. Regardless of campaign oratory, charges that Stevenson is a weakling or that Eisenhower is playing the part of a superman, and regardless of who wins next Tuesday - those will remain the three alternatives in our Korean policy.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first Here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These are the closing days of the campaign. And we may as well brace ourselves against the last outbursts of political oratory. But the Korean War is something else again. And in this instance, voters of both parties would agree with Thomas Carlyle & Maxim Gorky who said: "The end of man is action, not thought. But everybody knows that it's much harder to turn word into deed than deed into word."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday Nov. 3, 1952

This is the news:

The weatherman predicts generally good weather throughout the country, for tomorrow's election day. The experts predict a vote of 55-million Americans.. the highest since almost 50-million voted in the 1940 Roosevelt-Willkie contest. The chairmen of both major parties predict victory. Democratic Chairman Mitchell, thinks Governor Stevenson will get at least 418 electoral votes-(266 are necessary to elect.) Republican Chairman Summerfield says his reports, show definite indications of a "landslide" for General Eisenhower. Both parties are hard at work tonight. At 10:30 p.m., eastern standard time, [redacted] over many of these stations YOU CAN HEAR Stevenson and Sparkman, Truman and Barkley. A half hour later, at 11 p.m. eastern standard time, Eisenhower and Nixon, will speak over many of these stations.

The General, spending his last campaigning day in Boston, will say, that as President, he would dedicate himself to one supreme cause.. winning world peace. This, he says, is the dearest treasure of free men. He will strive to, "keep war from ever again wounding the bodies, and scarring the spirit, of American youth." The General says he plans to go to Korea, if elected, not to boss, not to settle, the great ideological struggle, but to bring back valuable information. He will say that we must have in this country a social program so effective, that no doctrine of political desperation can ever take root. He adds: "But Communism does not breed in slums alone"; the most notorious communist agents of our day, were not standing in breadlines, when they made their traitorous decision to serve Moscow. Too often they came from places free from the suffering, hardships and injustices of life."

Governor Stevenson arrived in Chicago tonight for his radio speech. He was asked if he feels confident of election. He said he does. He said he spent the day "struggling" with the speech he makes tonight. (its text has not yet been released.) Earlier, the national commander of Amvets released a letter from Stevenson saying: he favors a positive program to control prices, because the protection of the great masses of the people at the bottom of the economic ladder, is, in the last analysis, the protection of the national interest.

The President, in Kansas City, recorded a broadcast, in which he called on all voters to vote tomorrow in what he describes as "one of the most important presidential elections since the Civil war." He says prosperity at home, and peace abroad, will depend on the outcome.

In Washington today the Defense Department called for 48-thousand draftees in January of next year... the largest monthly call since February of this year. The Army will take the entire January quota as it has the 141-thousand men called up in October, November and December.

In Korea today, South Korean troops made four attempts to capture the top of Trinagle Hill. What correspondents call "fantastically accurate" mortar fire stopped the South Koreans each time. The Chinese are firing from caves and dug-in positions. Our artillery pounded them for eight hours...but there were still enough of them left to halt the South Korean attacks.

At the United Nations here in New York, the South Korean foreign minister--Y.T. Pyun-- appealed to the U.N. not to sign an armistice at the present battle line. He pledged that his troops will do everything they can to recover Korean territory as long as an inch of Korea remains in the hands of Communist traitors or Chinese invaders. He called on all United Nations to contribute more to the war.. said many have made only a "token sacrifice" in Korea. And the Foreign minister acknowledged that before the war started his people intended to recover North Korea, by all means, including war, but did not have enough arms and ammunition to start the battle.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito told his country's Communist party congress, that Yugoslovia will support a "joint defense" against Russian aggression. He praised the western powers for their unconditional military aid to his country... blamed Russia for the present world tension.

In Washington, the Army announced today that Mickey Mantle, the star outfielder of the New York Yankees, is physically unfit for military service.... due to a chronic knee defect, resulting from an injury he suffered in the 1951 world series.

In Columbus, Ohio, Warden Ralph Alvis says some of the 16-hundred prisoners who have defied their guards since Friday night, have now indicated a willingness to surrender. One man was killed, three wounded at the prison today.

Edward R. Murrow: November 3, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Pity ~~XXXX~~/all poor pollsters - on a night like this; thousands of words, columns of figures required for them to say: "We don't know what's going to happen, either."

Tomorrow the nation will make up its collective mind, choose the men to lead it for the next four years. We are told that both contending camps are optimistic, confident of the outcome. We thought it might interest you to hear reports from two of our colleagues who have travelled the long campaign trail with the two candidates. First let's go to Boston and ask Bill Downs [redacted].

Bill, what's the reason for the optimism among Eisenhower's advisors ?

Ed Morgan is in Chicago, where the Stevenson spokesmen are also confident. What's the basis for their optimism, Ed?

This [redacted]. If you believe either candidate, some pretty terrible things are going to happen, if the other fellow is elected. And on the other hand, if the right fellow is elected the nation, and its citizens, and its allies will be much advantaged. There is no doubt whatever that the right man will be elected, because occasionally things are taken out of the hands of the politicians, and decided by the people - and that's what will happen tomorrow.

Both sides [illegible] election. Someone is going to be wrong about the election. But it's probably as Frederick Langbridge once said: "Two men look out through the same bars; one sees the mud, and one the stars." Whatever happens, Will Rogers is as right today, as he was on the election eve in 1928:"The promising season ends tomorrow. And at about 8 o'clock the alibi season opens, and lasts for the next 4 years."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Monday, November 3, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... We thought it might interest you to hear reports from two of our colleagues, who have traveled the long campaign trail with the two candicates. First, let's go to Boston, and ask Bill Downs. Bill, what's the reason ~~af~~ for the optimism among Eisenhower's advisers?

DOWNS: Getting any kind of a reaction out of the Eisenhower camp on this final night of one of the most exhausting campaigns in American political history, has been something of a chore, Ed. You might say that the General's traveling headquarters is in a state of numbed optimism. For example, I asked one of Eisenhower's closest advisers why all the confidence here?' He looked at me as if I were a little crazy and replied, "Well, votes of course."

However, by sneaking up on people when they weren't looking, here is the basis for the belief in the Republican headquarters that Gen. Eisenhower will be the next President of the United States. The GOP strategists admit that normally a heavy registration favors the Democrats - but not this year. They point to the intense interest of the women for Eisenhower and his appeal to some 7-million new, young voters. This, they say, is the bulk of the increased registration and this, they say, will go Republican.

In the state of Massachussetts, the GOP leaders maintain that the Republican party is in the best shape it's been in since 1944. The party organization, across the country, has never been so active or better organized in the history of the GOP. They sincerely believe that New York will go to Eisenhower, likewise Illinois. They are not so sure - but do not concede - California.

Last August, the Republican organization began making an independent check of a series of so called 'unbelievable' reports they were getting from all over the country. Reports showing overwhelming Eisenhower support, not only in the rural and small town districts, but in the big cities as well. This check was continued up until last week. The independent Republican survey shows that the general did lose support in the big cities, where the Democratic machines went to work. But the overwhelming backing remains steady in the small towns and in the rural areas.

And the survey shows that even in the big metropolitan areas, Eisenhower is stronger than any recent GOP nominee.

So, that's the picture.Behind the Republican optimism on this election eve, is the general's great personal appeal, especially to the women. His stand on Korea, which appeals to the new and younger voters. His stand on communism, which has appealed to special groups, particularly the Catholics.

But most important of all, Eisenhower stands again in therole of a liberator, a political liberator this time, ready, he says, to free the American people from 20-yrs. of Democratic rule. The question to be settled tomorrow is: Do the people want to be liberated by the Republicans.

MURROW: Ed Morgan is in Chicago, where the Stevenson spokesmen are also confident. What's the basis for their optimism, Ed.

MORGAN: Ed, I think one of the best reasons for this oozing, if not flooding, confidence in the Stevenson camp was neatly summed up by a lady on the campaign train a couple of days ago. She was watching a big, eager whistle-stop crowd jostling for a glimpse of the governor. "You know," she said, "they used to say 'Which one is he?' But now they shout 'Look at him.'"

Stevenson has arrived as a familiar public figure with ~~pahn~~ phenomenal speed. Thus he has cleared sensationally the obstacles of an unknown, standing in a celebrity's shadow. This is very important because he has a strong, penetrating personality of his own that - once recognized - can compete favorably with the warm, human character of the General. And this he is doing.

There are other reasons nourishing Stevensonian optimism like vitamin pills. When Gen. Eisenhower was nominated he attracted not only a wide slice of independent voters, but bales of Democrats as well. These he had to hold to win, the argument runs, because overthe years the Democrats had become definitely the majority party. But for a variety of reasons, ranging from his alleged knuckle-under to Senator Taft, to his indiscriminate embrace of McCarthy, Jenner, Kem, et al, Eisenhower has failed to hold all of this strength. So much of it has slipped back to Stevenson that the pollsters themselves are hedging today with the qualification that if the switch is sustained, the governor is in.

The Democrats have another undeniable advantage in the fact that good times are still opulently here. An irony lies imbedded in this prosperity, however, - it and a generation in office made a lot of Democrats down-right complacent. In state-after-state Republicans, full of beans, simply outwit them. Belatedly, they've become scared and now county chairmen are making up for lost time. Labor unionsare hustling out the votes as perhaps they've never hustled before. Money is coming in; it wasn't a while ago.

Against these political sunbeams, rises the forbidding and possibly decisive issue of Korea. Stevenson maintains the only way to face it is frontally, not by raising false hopes for an easy solution.

The optimism persists anyway. Not just with people like Mr. Mitchell, or campaign manager Wilson Wyatt whose prediction of 400 electoral votes seems outlandishly extravagant, but with others like Georgia's Senator Russell and Chicago's Col. Arvey, who is not one to kid himself.

Taken prematurely, the heady wine of victory can produce an awful morning-after. But these are the ruddy hopes and thereasons for them on the night before.

MURROW: If you believe either candidate, some pretty terrible things are going to happen if the other fellow is elected.

(30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The weatherman predicts generally good weather throughout the country for tomorrow's election day. The experts predict a vote of 55-million Americans...the highest since almost 50-million voted in the 1940 Roosevelt-Wilkie contest. The chairmen of both major parties predict victory. Democratic Chairman Mitchell thinks Governor Stevenson will get at least 418 electoral votes (266 are necessary to elect.) Republican Chairman Summerfield says his reports show definite indications of a "landslide" for General Eisenhower. Both parties are hard at work tonight. At 10:30 p.m., eastern standard time, over many of these stations, you can hear Stevenson and Sparkman, Truman and Barkley. A half hour later, at 11 p.m. eastern standard time, Eisenhower and Nixon will speak over many of these stations.

The General, spending his last campaigning day in Boston, will say that as President he would dedicate himself to one supreme cause...winning world peace. This, he says, is the dearest treasure of free men. He will strive to "keep war from ever again wounding the bodies, and scarring the spirit of American youth." The General says he plans to go to Korea, if elected, not to boss, not to settle the great ideological struggle, but to bring back valuable information. He will say that we must have in this country a social program so effective that no doctrine of political desperation can ever take root. He adds: "But Communism does not breed in slums alone"; the most notorious communist agents of our day were not standing in breadlines when they made their traitorous decision to serve Moscow. Too often they came from places free from the suffering, hardships and injustices of life."

Governor Stevenson arrived in Chicago tonight for his radio speech. He was asked if he feels confident of election. He said he does. He said he spent the day "struggling" with the speech he makes tonight...its text has not yet been released. Earlier, the national commander of Amvets released a letter from Stevenson saying: he favors a positive program to control prices because the protection of the great masses of the people at the bottom of the economic ladder, is, in the last analysis, the protection of the national interest.

The President, in Kansas City, recorded a broadcast, in which he called on all voters to vote tomorrow in what he describes as "one of the most important presidential elections since the Civil war." He says prosperity at home and peace abroad will depend on the outcome.

In Washington today the Defense Department called for 48-thousand draftees in January of next year...the larg st monthly call since February of this year. The Army will take the entire January quota as it has the 141-thousand men called up in October, November and December.

In Korea today, South Korean troops made four attempts to capture the top of Triangle Hill. What correspondents call "fantastically accurate" mortar fire stopped the South Koreans each time. The Chinese are firing from caves and dug-in positions. Our artillery pounded them for eight hours...but there were still enough of them left to halt the South Korean attacks.

At the United Nations here in New York, the South Korean foreign minister...Y.T. Pyun...appealed to the U.N. not to sign an armistice at the present battle line. He pledged that his troops will do everything they can to recover Korean territory as long as an inch of Korea remains in the hands of Communist traitors or Chinese invaders. He called on all United Nations to contribute more to the war...said many have made only a "token sacrifice" in Korea. And the Foreign minister acknowledged that before the war started his people intended to recover North Korea, by all means, including war, but did not have enough arms and ammunition to start the battle.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito told his country's Communist party congress, that Yugoslavis will support a "joint defense" against Russian aggression.

He praised the western powers for their unconditional military aid to his country.. blamed Russia for the present world tension.

In Washington, the Army announced today that Mickey Mantle, the star outfielder of the New York Yankees, is physically unfit for military service..due to a chronic knee defect, resulting from an injury he suffered in the 1951 world series.

In Columbus, Ohio, Warden Ralph Alvis says some of the 16-hundred prisoners who have defied their guards since Friday night, have now indicated a willingness to surrender. One man was killed, three wounded at the prison today.

Pity all poor pollsters - on a night like this; thousands of words, columns of figures required for them to say: "We don't know what's going to happen, either."

Tomorrow the nation will make up its collective mind, choose the men to lead it for the next four years. We are told that both contending camps are optimistic, confident of the outcome. We thought it might interest you to hear reports from two of our colleagues who have travelled the long campaign trail with the two candidates. First let's go to Boston and ask Bill Downs:

Bill, what's the reason for the optimism among Eisenhower's advisors?

DOWNS: Getting any kind of a reaction out of the Eisenhower camp on this final night of one of the most exhausting campaigns in American political history, has been something of a chore, Ed. You might say that the General's traveling headquarters is in a state of numbed optimism. For example, I asked one of Eisenhower's closest advisors why all the confidence here? He looked at me as if I were a little crazy and replied, "Well, votes of course."

However, by sneaking up on people when they weren't looking, here is the basis for the belief in the Republican headquarters that General Eisenhower will be the next President of the United States. The GOP strategists admit that normally a heavy registration favors the Democrats - but not this year. They point to the intense interest of the women for Eisenhower and his appeal to some 7-million new, young voters. This, they say, is the bulk of the increased registration and this, they say, will go Republican.

In the State of Massachusetts, the GOP leaders maintain that the Republican party is in the best shape it's been in since 1944. The party organization, across the country, has never been so active or better organized in the history of the GOP. They sincerely believe that New York will go to Eisenhower, likewise Illinois. They are not so sure, but do not concede - California.

Last August, the Republican organization began making an independent check of a series of so called 'unbelievable' reports they were getting from all over the country. Reports showing overwhelming Eisenhower support, not only in the rural and small town districts, but in the big cities as well. This check was continued up until last week. The independent Republican survey shows that the general did lose support in the big cities, where the Democratic machines went to work. But the overwhelming backing remains steady in the small towns and in the rural areas.

And the survey shows that even in the big metropolitan areas, Eisenhower is stronger than any recent GOP nominee.

So, that's the picture behind the Republican optimism on this election eve, is the general's great personal appeal, especially to the women. His stand on Korea, which appeals to the new and younger voters. His stand on communism, which has appealed to special groups, particularly the Catholics. But most important of all, Eisenhower stands again in the role of a liberator, a political liberator this time, ready, he says, to free the American people from 20 years of Democratic rule. The question to be settled tomorrow is: Do the people want to be liberated by the Republicans.

MURROW: Ed Morgan is in Chicago, where the Stevenson spokesmen are also confident. What's the basis for their optimism, Ed.

MORGAN: Ed, I think one of the best reasons for this oozing, if not flooding, confidence in the Stevenson camp was neatly summed up by a lady on the campaign train a couple of days ago. She was watching a big, eager whistle-stop crowd jostling for a glimpse of the governor. "You know," she said, "they used to say 'Which one is he?' But now they shout 'Look at him.'".

Stevenson has arrived as a familiar public figure with phenomenal speed. Thus he has cleared sensationally the obstacles of an unknown, standing in a celebrity's shadow. This is very important because he has a strong, penetrating personality of his own that - once recognized - can compete favorably with the warm, human character of the General. And this he is doing.

There are other reasons nourishing Stevensonian optimism like vitamin pills. When General Eisenhower was nominated he attracted not only a wide slice of independent voters, but bales of Democrats as well. These he had to hold to win, the argument runs, because over the years the Democrats had become definitely the majority party. But for a variety of reasons, ranging from his alleged knuckle-under to Senator Taft, to his indiscriminate embrace of McCarthy, Jenner, Kem, et al, Eisenhower has failed to hold all of this strength. So much of it has slipped back to Stevenson that the pollsters themselves are hedging today with the qualification that if the switch is sustained, the governor is in.

The Democrats have another undeniable advantage in the fact that good times are still opulently here. An irony lies imbedded in this prosperity, however, - it and a generation in office made a lot of Democrats down-right complacent. In state-after-state Republicans, full of beans, simply outwit them. Belatedly, they've become scared and now county chairmen are making up for lost time. Labor unions are hustling out the votes as perhaps they's never hustled before. Money is coming in; it wasn't a while ago.

Against these political sunbeams, rises the forbidding and possibly decisive issue of Korea. Stevenson maintains the only way to face it is frontally, not by raising false hopes for an easy solution.

The optimism persists anyway. Not just with people like Mr. Mitchell, or campaign manager Wilson Wyatt whose prediction of 400 electoral votes seems outlandishly extravagant, but with others like Georgia's Senator Russell and Chicago's Col. Arvey, who is not one to kid himself.

Taken prematurely, the heady wine of victory can produce an awful morning-after. But these are the ruddy hopes and the reasons for them on the night before.

MURROW: If you believe either candidate, some pretty terrible things are going to happen if the other fellow is elected. And on the other hand, if the right fellow is elected the nation, and its citizens and its allies will be much advantaged. There is no doubt whatever that the right man will be elected, because occasionally things are taken out of the hands of the politicians and decided by the people - and that's what will happen tomorrow.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Someone is going to be wrong about the election, but it's probably as Frederick Langbridge once said: "Two men look out through the same bars; one sees the mud and one the stars." Whatever happens, Will Rogers is as right today as he was on election eve in 1928. "The promising season ends tomorrow. And at about 8 o'clock the alibi season opens and lasts for the next 4 years."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

A

Tuesday Nov. 4 1952

This is the news:

The weather across the nation has been good. The voting has been very heavy. The returns, at the moment, are few..incomplete..and indicate nothing except what a few communities have decided. So far 19 states have finished their balloting. Within the next few minutes another 13 will close their polls. More than half the states in the nation will have voted.

Here are some of the latest returns available at the moment:

The latest United Press figures on the popular vote for President show: Eisenhower 127-thousand. Stevenson: 120-thousand. (That's out of an expected vote of 55-millions)

Returns from 240 of the 96-hundred precincts in Illinois show: Stevenson, 54-thousand. Eisenhower 35-thousand.

B

The first town to report in Connecticut...Norfolk... gives Eisenhower 653 votes. Stevenson: 357. That's 66 more for Eisenhower than Dewey received four years ago.

With 7 of Connecticuts 479 towns reporting the vote is: Eisenhower, 88-hundred. Stevenson: 83-hundred. Both candidates are running ahead of the 1948 figures. The general shows the greater gain, AT THE MOMENT.

C

We have a report from 30 of the 525 polling places in Baltimore. They give Eisenhower, 97-hundred to Stevenson's 94-hundred.

And another report from Connecticut..with half the towns reporting:

Eisenhower: 76-thousand

Stevenson 48-thousand

That's a lead for Eisenhower of 28-thousand votes..with half of the towns reporting.

D

The first precinct to report in Arkansas gives Stevenson ten votes; one for Eisenhower.

The first two precincts reporting in South Carolina show 96 votes for Stevenson; 64 for Eisenhower.

The first six towns reporting in Massachusetts show both candidates running ahead of their party vote of 1948. In the six towns its: Eisenhower 925...Stevenson 277.

[redacted]

One precinct reported from Idaho. Eisenhower 27...no votes for Stevenson.

Fifteen pricincts in Virginia have reported...with more than 17-hundred yet to come. At the moment, its: Eisenhower, 33-hundred.... Stevenson 21-hundred.

Three New Jersey counties say their mail vote from soldiers runs this way: Eisenhower, [redacted] 26-hundred. Stevenson: 13-hundred.

First returns from Louisiville, Kentucky: Eisenhower 24-thousand. Stevenson, 20-thousand.

General Eisenhower voted early this morning here in New York. He will spend the night awaiting returns at a downtown hotel. When reporters asked him about his chances in the election he said:"I haven't any thoughts at all." Later, a visitor, Paul Hoffman, said he found the General feeling very optomistic. Mrs. Eisenhower says the family will go to Augusta, Florida, tomorrow, for a rest.

Governor Stevenson is now at the governor's mansion in Springfield, where he will await returns. He voted early in the day in the little village of Half Day, near Chicago. He said he voted the straight Democratic ticket because "its the best one I've seen."

President Truman voted this morning in Independence, is now on his way back to Washington by train. He told reporters he's sure he "voted for the winner.. no question about it." When his train stopped at Jefferson City he said again he was confident of a Democratic victory, because their are more common people..people of moderate incomes.. than there are rich people in this country. He feels a record vote will help the Democrats more than it will help the Republicans.

The Justice Department says it had no complaints, from anyplace in the country, of election law violations. That report was made a few hours ago. A Spokesman called the situation "rather unusual."

In Europe, the news of our election is the biggest story of the day...getting the big headlines..starting most [redacted] radio news reports. [redacted]. And its the chief topic of conversation.

Queen Eilizabeth the Second opened her first session of Parliament in London today. In the traditional speech from the throne she told the House of Lords that the government will turn the steel and transport industries back to private industry. The queen said she was praying for an early armistice in Korea. She said: "Until this is accomplished, the continued participation of my forces in the conflict will be clear proof of my government's whole-hearted attachment to the ideals of the United Nations."

In Korea today the battlefields on the central and eastern fronts were quiet. Front dispatches say, that not in the past 23 days, has there been so little ground activity, so little artillery dueling. They remind us it can all start over again..at any moment.

Brigadier General Cornelius Ryan, head of the Korean Military Advisory Group, says he hasbeen informed that a "sizeable increase in the South Korean army has been ordered in Washington." General

Ryan says the increase will be "substantial."

Two of our Thunderjets intercepted a Russian propeller-driven plane over Northern Japan. They stayed with it for about five minutes and broke contact when the Soviet plane flew back over the international boundary that divides Russian and Japanese territory in the northern islands. No shots were fired.

In Hawaii, the Coast and Geodetic Survey station says a powerful earthquake in the Kamchatka peninsula of Siberia has sent tidal waves against the Aleutians.. and toward Hawaii. All persons living on exposed island beaches have been evacuated.

In Columbus, Ohio today, 16-hundred prisoners at the Ohio State Penitentiary, decided to end their five day uprising. After Warden Alvis told them they must "surrender or starve", the convicts agreed to call off their mutiny tomrrow morning. The warden says he made no concessions.

Sometime later, about the end of this week or the beginning of next, when our national bloodpressure goes down a bit (when we weary of speculation about the composition of the new cabinet)--there will be an opportunity to look at what's been happening in the rest of the world during these past fourteen weeks. Then, one fact about which both candidates have spoken frequently will be bourne in upon us. Our position as the leader of the free world, and the awesome responsibility that that involves. We may become aware that things have not gone well for us during this period when we have been concentrating all our attention upon domestic political affairs. In Korea we may come to recognize that we have not just a political issue, but a war of increasing intensity which we can't win, and from which we cannot disengage; a war which suits admirably the longerange grand strategy of Communist imperialism.

In Iran events march towards complete collapse and chaos. A solution of the dispute between Britain and Iran, to which we are necessarily a party, appears farther away than it did when our political shouting began.

In Western Europe the whole bold concept of the European army is in uneasy balance. There has occurred a revival of fear in Britain and in France of a Germany, even a Western Germany, that would be too vigorous and too aggressive to handle. The old dispute between France and Germany over the Saar has revived old suspicions and fanned the fires of nationalism again.

French antagonism toward this country has reached a post-war high, as a result of our vote to place Tunis and Morrocco high on the agenda at the United Nations. The military pressure on the French in Indo-China is increasing, and the French government contends with bitterness and eloquence, that we cannot clasp them to our bosom as indispensable allies in Europe, while at the same time jumping up and down on their toes in North Africa.

The British are waiting until after the election to send a mission to this country to talk about their perpetual economic crisis.

But the most significant, though little-noted development, occurred in Moscow while we were concentrating on our political campaign. The Russians spelled out for us, the manner in which they propose to destroy the western alliance. It is a simple plan; they are going to consolidate and increase the productive capacity of that vast area of the world they now hold. They believe that the Germans, the British, the French, the Japanese, and the rest, will become restive under what the Russians call our "economic domination" and will break away; that the Japanese must trade with the mainland of Asia, (as indeed they must if we are not to continue to subsidize them;) that the Germans must trade with eastern Europe, behind the Iron Curtain. The Russian doctrine is that in the long view, war between the capitalistic countries is more likely than war between those countries and the Communist world. To this end, the Communist parties in western Europe have been revamped; the order is no longer civil disobedience and rioting, but rather the creation of popular front movements aimed at employing every device, but primarily the economic one, to split the nations of western Europe from their American alliance. The Russians have three policies going simultaneously; active warfare by their satellites in Korea and Indo-China. Second, continuing threat of massive military might hanging like a shadow over western Europe; and third, the long-range, cautious plan, requiring great patience and unremitting economic sacrifice by the peoples behind the Iron Curtain. This is the plan to produce an apparent lessening of the military tension, coupled with a vast economic and propaganda offensive. The slowly increasing strength of western Europe has apparently caused the Russians to decide not to risk military adventures in that area. They have for the time being, decided to retire inside their own perimiter, but their positions remain strong. They may sally forth at any point, as they did in Korea, or they may be content to play the long-range waiting game. No one knows.

These are but a few of the considerable changes that have occurred abroad, which must be dealt with by the administration that takes office on January twentieth. None of them can be dealt with by quoting from old campaign speeches. They are of sufficient gravity and magnitude to merit the prayers of all citizens for which ever man, at the end of this night's counting, has been chosen to try to solve them.

8

In 1932 Will Rogers wrote:"The election is over at sundown and let everybody pray that it's not a tie. For we couldn't go through with this thing again. When the votes are counted, let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again. For one of the evils of a Democracy is you have to put up with the man you elect whether you want him or not."

Good Nite ~~or~~ Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The weather across the nation has been good. The voting has been very heavy. The returns, at the moment, are few, incomplete...and indicate nothing except what a few communities have decided. So far 19 states have finished their balloting. Within the next few minutes another 13 will close their polls. More than half the states in the nation will have voted.

Here are some of the latest returns available at the moment:

The latest United Press figures on the popular vote for President show: Eisenhower 127-thousand. Stevenson: 120-thousand. (That's out of an expected vote of 55-millions)

Returns from 240 of the 96-hundred precincts in Illinois show: Stevenson, 54-thousand. Eisenhower 35-thousand.

The first town to report in Connecticut...Norfolk...gives Eisenhower 653 votes. Stevnson: 357. That's 66 more for Eisenhower than Dewey received four years ago.

With 7 of Connecticuts 479 towns reporting the vote is: Eisenhower, 88-hundred. Stevenson: 83-hundred. Both candidates are running ahead of the 1948 figures. The general shows the greater gain at the moment.

We have a report from 30 of the 525 polling places in Baltimore. They give Eisenhower, 97-hundred to Stevenson's 94-hundred.

And another report from Connecticut...with half the towns reporting: Eisenhower: 76-thousand; Stevenson: 48-thousand

That's a lead for Eisenhower of 28-thousand votes...with half of the towns reporting.

The first precinct to report in Arkansas gives Stevenson ten votes; one for Eisenhower.

The first two precincts reporting in South Carolina show 96 votes for Stevenson; 64 for Eisenhower.

The first six towns reporting in Massachusetts show both candidates running ahead of their party vote of 1948. In the six towns its: Eisenhower 925...Stevenson 277.

One precinct reported from Idaho. Eisenhower 27...no votes for Stevenson.

Fifteen precincts in Virginia have reported...with more than 17-hundred yet to come. At the moment, its: Eisenhower, 33-hundred...Stevenson 21-hundred.

Three New Jersey counties say their mail vote from soldiers runs this way: Eisenhower, 26-hundred. Stevenson: 13-hundred.

First returns from Louisville, Kentucky: Eisenhower 24-thousand. Stevenson, 20-thousand.

General Eisenhower voted early this morning here in New York. He will spend the night awaiting returns at a downtown hotel. When reporters asked him about his chances in the election he said: "I haven't any thoughts at all." Later, a visitor, Paul Hoffman, said he found the General feeling very optomistic. Mrs. Eisenhower says the family will go to Augusta, Florida, tomorrow, for a rest.

Governor Stevenson is now at the governor's mansion in Springfield where he will await returns. He voted early in the day in the little village of Half Day, near Chicago. He said he voted the straight Democratic ticket because "It's the best one I've seen."

President Truman voted this morning in Independence, is now on his way back to Washington by train. He told reporters he's sure he "voted for the winner...no question about it." When his train stopped at Jefferson City he said again he was confident of a Democratic voctory, because their are more common people...people of moderate incomes...than there are rich people in this country. He feels a record vote will help the Democrats more than it will help the Republicans.

The Justice Department says it had no complaints, from anyplace in the country, of election law violations. That report was made a few hours ago. A Spokesman called the situation "rather unusual."

In Europe, the news of our election is the biggest story of the day... getting the big headlines...starting most radio news reports. And its the chief topic of conversation.

Queen Elizabeth the Second opened her first session of Parliament in London today. In the traditional speech from the throne she told the House of Lords that the government will turn the steel and transport industries back to private industry. The queen said she was praying for an early armistice in Korea. She said: "Until this is accomplished the continued participation of my forces in the conflict will be clear proof of my government's whole-hearted attachment to the ideals of the United Nations."

In Korea today the battlefields on the central and eastern fronts were quiet. Front dispatches say that not in the past 23 days has there been so little ground activity, so little artillery dueling. They remind us it can start over again...at any moment.

Grigadier General Cornelius Ryan, head of the Korean Military Advisory Group, says he has been informed that a "sizeable increase in the South Korean army has been ordered in Washington." General Ryan says the increase will be "substantial."

Two of our Thunderjets intercepted a Russian propeller-driven plane over Northern Japan. They stayed with it for about five minutes and broke contact when the Soviet plane flew back over the international boundary that divides Russian and Japanese territory in the northern islands. No shots were fired.

In Hawaii, the Coast and Geodetic Survey station says a powerful earthquake in the Kamchatka peninsula of Siberia has sent tidal waves against the Aleutians...and toward Hawaii. All persons living on exposed island beaches have been evacuated.

In Columbus, Ohio today, 16-hundred prisoners at the Ohio State Penitentiary, decided to end their five day uprising. After Warden Alvis told them they must "surrender or starve" the convicts agreed to call off their mutiny tomorrow morning. The warden says he made no concessions.

Sometime later, about the end of this week or the beginning of next, when our national bloodpressure goes down a bit (when we weary of speculation about the composition of the new cabinet) there will be an opportunity to look at what's been happening in the rest of the world during these past fourteen weeks. Then, one fact about which both candidates have spoken frequently will be borne in upon us. Our position as the leader of the free world, and the awesome responsibility that that involves. We may become aware that things have not gone well for us during this period when we have been concentrating all our attention upon domestic political affairs. In Korea we may come to recognize that we have not just a political issue, but a war of increasing intensity which we can't win, and from which we cannot disengage; a war which suits admirably the long-range grand strategy of Communist imperialism.

In Iran events march towards complete collapse and chaos. A solution of the dispute between Britain and Iran, to which we are necessarily a party, appears farther away than it did when our political shouting began.

In Western Europe the whole bold concept of the Duropean army is in uneasy balance. There has occurred a revival of fear in Britain and in France of a Germany, even a Western Germany, that would be too vigorous and too aggressive to handle. The old dispute between France and Germany over the Saar has revived old suspicions and fanned the fires of nationalism again.

French antagonism toward this country has reached a post-war high, as a result of our vote to place Tunis and Morrocco high on the agenda at the United Nations. The military pressure on the French and Indo China is increasing, and the French government contends with bitterness and eloquence that we cannot clasp them to our bosom as indispensable allies in Europe, while at the same time jumping up and down on their toes in North Africa.

The British are waiting until after the election to send a mission to this country to talk about their perpetual economic crisis.

But the most significant, though little-noted development, occurred in Moscow while we were concentrating on our political campaign. The Russians spelled out for us the manner in which they propose to destroy the western alliance. It is a simple plan; they are going to consolidate and increase the productive capacity of that vast area of the world they now hold. They believe that the Germans, the British, the French, the Japanese, and the rest, will become restive under what the Russians call our "economic domination" and will break away; that the Japanese must trade with the mainland of Asia (as indeed they must if we are not to continue to subsidize them;) that the Germans must trade with eastern Europe, behind the Iron Curtain. The Russian doctrine is that in the long view, war between the capitalistic countries is more likely than war between those countries and the Communist world. To this end, the Communist parties in western Europe have been revamped; the order is no longer civil disobedience and rioting, but rather the creation of popular front movements aimed at employing every device, but primarily the economic one, to split the nations of western Europe from their American alliance. The Russians have three policies going simultaneously; active warfare by their satellites in Korea and Indo-China. Second, continuing threat of massive military might hanging like a shadow over western Europe; and third, the long-range, cautious plan requiring great patience and unremitting economic sacrifice by the peoples behind the Iron Curtain. This is the plan to produce an apparent lessening of the military tension, coupled with a vast economic and propaganda offensive. The slowly increasing strength of western Europe has apparently caused the Russians to decide not to risk military adventures in that area. They have for the time being, decided to retire inside their own perimiter, but their positions remain strong. They may sally forth at any point as they did in Korea, or they may be content to play the long-range waiting game. No one knows.

These are but a few of the considerable changes that have occurred abroad which must be dealt with by the administration that takes office on January twentieth. None of them can be dealt with by quoting from old campaign speeches. They are of sufficient gravity and magnitude to merit the prayers of all citizens for which every man, at the end of this night's counting, has been chosen to try to solve them.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with The Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In 1932 Will Rogers wrote: "The election is over at sundown and let everybody pray that it's not a tie. For we couldn't go through with this thing again. When the votes are counted, let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again. For one of the evils of a Democracy is you have to put up with the man you elect whether you want him or not."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wed. Nov. 5, 1952

This is the news:

The President and the president-elect exchanged messages today. Harry Truman offered Dwight Eisenhower his congratulations ON an overwhelming victory at the polls yesterday...suggested that Eisenhower send a representative to budget meetings..offered him his plane, the Independence, "If you still desire to go to Korea." Eisenhower, who flew to Augusta, Georgia, for a ten-day vacation, thanked the President for his telegram.. said he would send a man to the budget meetings..added that he preferred to fly to Korea. (before he is inaugurated.) in a military service transport plane.

Then, when the President's train from Missouri reached Washington he read a prepared statement for reporters. We've recorded it for you.

(runs 2;40 ending "as citizens of this great republic.)

There are still some 15-thousand precincts, through the nation, that have not reported on yesterday's vote. But the figures available at the moment, show that at least 56-million people voted. The General received 31-million to Governor Stevenson's 25 million. For Eisenhower, it was the largest popular vote in our history... at least three and a half million more votes than President Roosevelt received in the 1936 Landon campaign

The General won 431 electoral votes to 100 for the Governor. The state of Tennessee, now credited in the Stevenson column, shows him with a lead of only 41 votes, with more than 100 precincts yet to be heard from.

The Republicans definitely will control the next House of Representatives. They are certain of the 218 seats necessary for control... and may pick up another five OR MORE. The Democrats lost 19 House seats; the Republicans picked up 23 seats.

The Republicans will also control the Senate. Present returns give the Republicans contrl by 49 to 47. The Republican's 49, howver, includes Senator Morse of Oregon who refuses to SAY what position he'll take in the new Congress. If Morse should decide to vote with the Democrats, it would give both parties 48 seats..with the Vice President-Elect, Senator Nixon, breaking the tie for his party. Here are some of the later Senate returns: Democrat Moody has been defeated in Michigan, by Republican Representative Potter. Democrat O'Mahoney of Wyoming concedes to Governor Barrett. Democrat Underwood of Kentucky, concedes to former Senator John Sherman Cooper. Majority Leader McFarland has been defeated by Barry Goldwater in Arizona. The other Democrat to lose a seat was Benton of Connecticut...

to be replaced by William Purtell. And here are the Republicans who lost Senate seats: Cain of Washington was beaten by Representative Jackson. Kem of Missouri will be replaced by Stuart Symington. Senator Ecton of Montana lost his race to Representative Mike Mansfield. And Senator Lodge was beaten by DEMOCRATIC Representative Kennedy in Massachusetts. In that same state, Republican Representative Herter beat Governor Dever, the keynoter at the Democratic convention. In one other late report, Democratic Senator Chavez of New Mexico won over Patrick Hurley, but Hurley is asking the courts to impound ballot boxes in four counties.

Both Senator Jenner of Indiana and Mc Carthy of Wisconsin have been re-elected. In Michigan, with 40 precincts yet to report, Democratic Governor Williams is leading his Republican opponent by 4-thousand votes.

Wisconsin's Republican Senator Wiley, who is in line to become chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, today called for a meeting of Truman and Eisenhower, or their representatives, to decide on American policy before the current session of the United Nations Assembly.

~~Senator Morse, who switched to Stevenson, has sent congratulatory telegrams to Stevenson and the President. He says General Eisenhower has fooled the people.~~ congratulates the General on his overwhelming victory.. says he's confident the president-elect will be fair and just to all Americans.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor,

Wilson Wyatt, the Stevenson campaign manager, says he has told the Governor that he feels very strongly that Stevenson should run for the Presidency in 1956. Stevenson had no comment. Wyatt says his candidate was defeated, primarily because the voters accepted the Republican contention that it was time for a change. He praised [redacted] Harry Truman's contribution to the campaign.

General MacArthur, through an aide, says he is delighted at the "sweeping Republican victory..."it will be good, not only for our country but for the world."

In most of the capitals of our allies abroad there [redacted] was an expression of happiness at the General's victory...and hopes for continued American leadership towards a peaceful world.

The Russians took no notice of the election results. They used this day to say, that they will not recognize as legal, an American naval blockade.. a defensive zone..in Korean waters. Moscow calls this "a new aggressive act."

In Korea today, allied leaders ordered the South Koreans to break-off their seventh frontal attack on Triangle Hill.

And the Pentagon reports that we suffered an additional one thousand one hundred and seventy-four casualties in Korea last week.

Edward R. Murrow: November 5, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Our wise friend Carl Sandburg once said: "The people, yes the people have eternally the element of surprise." Yesterday the people surprised the pollsters, the prophets, and many politicians. They demonstrated, as they did in '48, that they are mysterious and their motives are not to be measured by mechanical means. The result contributed something to the demechanization of our society. It restored to the individual, I suspect, some sense of his own sovereignty. Those who believe that we are predictable - who believe that sampling depth, interviewing, allocating the undecided vote, and then reducing the whole thing to a simple graph or chart, have been undone again. (They were as wrong as they were four years ago.) And we are in a measure released from the petty tyranny of those who assert that they can tell us what we think, what we believe, what we will do, what we hope and what we fear, without consulting us - all of us.

In a real sense General Eisenhower's election was an overwhelming personal tribute. It must be credited to the man rather than to any section, group or block of the country. Taft didn't win it for him, neither did Dewey. The victory did not stem from labor, or the farmer, or the south. He did not attract this measure of allegiance from the big cities or the rural areas. It came from the entire country. The voters did not give him a comfortable majority in either House. He ran ahead of his Party in most sections of the country. He will have great freedom and great power, if he chooses to use it, because he is beholden to no single section of the national community. There will now ensue a great struggle to determine who shall be the brother nearest the throne. That always happens, and after twenty years in the wilderness there won't be enough jobs to go round. But no President since Harry Truman in 1948 has come to office with a greater opportunity to maneuver freely and to be his own man, ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ ~~XXXX~~ if he chooses to do so. He can unite and lead, or he can be captured. There will be not only the Opposition but members of his own Party ready to ambush him. Only time will tell whether he can read the political maps of this unfamiliar terrain sufficiently well to avoid them.

The Democrats, led by a man who spoke often in the accents of greatness, were defeated because too many people liked Ike. The three pillars that have supported the Democratic Party for twenty years gave way at the same time - the big city vote, labor and the south; and nobody pulled them down but the people.

The ~~election is over. And~~ the voice of the people has been heard. That's as it ~~should~~ must be in a Democracy. Carl Sandburg once wrote:"The people is everyman, everybody. Everybody is you and me and all others. And what everybody says is what we all say." Lincoln put it another way:"Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people. Is there any better or equal hope in the world ?"

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CLR...

UPWK1B

URGENT

WASHINGTON, NOV. 5.--(UP)--THE TEXT OF PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S STATEMENT TODAY AT THE WHITE HOUSE:

"THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES HAVE ELECTED GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER AS THEIR PRESIDENT. IN OUR DEMOCRACY, THIS IS THE WAY WE DECIDE WHO SHALL GOVERN US. I ACCEPT THE DECISION AS REPRESENTING THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE, AND I SHALL GIVE MY SUPPORT TO THE GOVERNMENT THEY HAVE SELECTED. I ASK ALL MY FELLOW CITIZENS TO DO THE SAME.

"THE NEW ADMINISTRATION AND THE NEW CONGRESS WILL FACE EXTREMELY DIFFICULT PROBLEMS, PARTICULARLY IN THE FIELD OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS. THE PROPER SOLUTION OF THOSE PROBLEMS MAY DETERMINE WHETHER WE SHALL HAVE A THIRD WORLD WAR -- AND, INDEED, WHETHER WE SHALL SURVIVE AS A FREE AND DEMOCRATIC NATION. MOREOVER, THERE IS NO QUICK AND EASY SOLUTION TO THESE PROBLEMS. THEY WILL REQUIRE SACRIFICE AND HARD WORK ON OUR PART FOR YEARS TO COME. WE MUST SUPPORT OUR GOVERNMENT IN THE MEASURES THAT ARE NECESSARY TO PROTECT OUR FREEDOM AND ACHIEVE PEACE IN THE WORLD, EVEN THOUGH THE WAY BE LONG AND HARD.

"I STAND READY TO DO ALL THAT LIES WITHIN MY POWER TO FACILITATE THE ORDERLY TRANSFER OF THE BUSINESS OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT TO THE NEW ADMINISTRATION. I HAVE ALREADY SENT A MESSAGE TO GEN. EISENHOWER SUGGESTING THAT HE HAVE A REPRESENTATIVE MEET WITH THE DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET, SO THAT HE WILL BE FULLY INFORMED AS TO THE ITEMS IN THE BUDGET. IT WILL BE NECESSARY FOR ME TO SEND THE BUDGET TO CONGRESS SINCE, UNDER THE LAW, IT MUST BE TRANSMITTED BY JAN. 18TH. STEPS WILL BE TAKEN TO COOPERATE WITH RESPECT TO OTHER MATTERS RELATING TO THE TRANSITION TO A NEW ADMINISTRATION WHERE GEN. EISENHOWER WISHES THAT TO BE DONE. I AM INVITING THE GENERAL TO MEET WITH ME HERE IN THE WHITE HOUSE AT AN EARLY DATE TO DISCUSS THESE PROBLEMS, IN ORDER THAT IT MAY BE PLAIN TO THE WHOLE WORLD THAT OUR PEOPLE ARE UNITED IN THE STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM AND PEACE.

"I COULD NOT CONCLUDE THIS STATEMENT WITHOUT EXPRESSING MY ADMIRATION AND GRATITUDE TO GOV. STEVENSON FOR THE CAMPAIGN WHICH HE CONDUCTED. HE LIVED UP TO THE FINEST TRADITIONS OF OUR DEMOCRACY. IT IS PLAIN THAT, IN HIM, WE HAVE A GREAT NEW LEADER WHO WILL CONTRIBUTE MUCH TO OUR NATIONAL LIFE IN THE YEARS AHEAD.

"WE SHALL HAVE OTHER ELECTIONS, IN THE FUTURE. THERE WE CAN AGAIN PRESENT OUR VIEWS, AND OUR DIFFERENCES FOR THE DECISION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. IN THE MEANTIME, IT WILL BE IN THE BEST INTEREST OF ALL OF US TO CLOSE RANKS AND WORK TOGETHER FOR OUR MUTUAL WELFARE AS CITIZENS OF THIS GREAT REPUBLIC."

(END TEXT)

P311P..

Example 2 on 2

CRONKITE: ..... Ed Murrow and Eric Sevareid are here with us now for a summing-up also of how this matter has gone and what we can look forward to in the future.

Ed, how does it look to you?

MURROW: Walter, it seems to me that this was the end of an era in American politics, a great exclamation point in our national history, because tonight, after twenty long years, the traditional concessions of defeat came not from Republicans but from Democrats, and for those millions of Americans who have voted and worked and hoped for a change tonight they have got it. They have assured the return to the White House of a Republican President. It was a great moment of triumph for them, of vindication. The tangible proof that now, after two decades, through the use of the ballot box the American people have finally agreed with them that it was time for a change. Millions of people in their homes, in their livingrooms, perhaps livingrooms that they had bought and paid for during a Democratic administration, - you have heard a gallant winner and a gallant loser. It was universally said in Chicago, after the conventions, that both Parties had chosen men who were worthy of the nation. One has been chosen - General Eisenhower.

To me, themost impressive thing about tonight is again the demonstration that the people of this country are sovereign, that they are unpredictable, and that somehow in a fashion that is as mysterious to pollsters as it is to reporters the great normal majority in this country made up its mind as to the man it wanted to lead it and I believe as of now no man can say what produced this result, or, indeed, what consequences may flow from it. We have entrusted our destiny to a Party that has been long out of power and we have done so in an overwhelming fashion. Our friends and our enemies may read the record and conclude that the votes of our people and the concession of the loser have produced a new unity and power in this nation. Unity, as we know, is often temporary, and power may be abused. We will now witness a very considerable struggle to determine who will be the brother nearest the throne. It is always thus in American politics, but the figures indicate that Eisenhower did not win with the indispensable aid of Senator Taft or the farmers or labor or the south. He broke the whole traditional voting pattern of this country. He owes his victory to no man and to no segment of our society. He has often said that his services are at the command of the American people. His victory tonight, by its nature and by its completeness, places him in a position to command his Party and also to command the services of men that he may wish to bring to Washington to serve their country. He will, of course, be a lonesome man, - Presidents always are. He will face considerable struggles with-in his Party and the arrows of the opposition will plague (?) him. It is permissible to hope that the Democratic opposition will be responsible. He will face decisions upon which the whole ~~mx~~ history of the free world may pivot and the magnitude and the completeness of his victory merely serve to increase the awesome responsibility that he will assume when he takes office on January 20.

(30)

Ed.trans.-Adele A. Cardiff

Thursday Nov. 6, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower today suggested to the President, that their proposed meeting be held the week of November 17th.. a week from Monday./ In answer to Mr. Truman's suggestion, that such a meeting be held to "facilitate the orderly transfer of the executive branch of the government," the General also said: he plans to appoint representatives, to be "indoctrinated" in several departments of the government./ he thinks this will make the Eisenhower-Truman conference more profitable./ He says he must postpone the meeting until the week of November 17th because "I OBVIOUSLY require a reasonable time for conversation and conferences, leading up to the designation of important assistants." And the General joined the President in the hope that the two can express to the world, an American unity on basic issues.

That was the General's "business" for the day at Augusta, Georgia. Then, in casual clothes, trailed by secret service men, and proceeded by photographers, he went out to the golf course to pose for pictures.. and take up the game he had not played in months.

The latest vote figures, with all precincts not yet reporting, show that the General received just under 33-million votes to 26 and a half million for Governor Stevenson. The General now appears sure of victory in Tennessee. Stevenson leads in Kentucky's complete unofficial returns by 2-thousand votes. In Michigan, complete unofficial returns show Governor Mennen Williams in the lead by 8-thousand votes.

The House situation is this: The Republicans have 220 seats..two more than are needed for control. The Democrats have 207..with 7 still undecided. The Democrats are leading in six of these seven races.

Democratic Representative Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois died today. He was 86..had served in the House for 45 successive years and had been re-elected on Tuesday. A special election will be held to replace him.

Vice President-elect Nixon returned to Washington today; said he is going to resign from the Senate before January the third..to give the man Governor Warren of California selects as his replacement, seniority over the new batch of senators. Nixon says one of the major jobs of the new Administration will be to clean up corruption.

Republican Chairman Summerfield agrees with Democratic Campaign Manager Wyatt that the major factor in the Eisenhower victory was the demand for a change. Mr. Summerfield feels that Senator Taft or any other bureaucracy.

beauracracy.
bureaucracy

Republican candidate could have won.

Senator Taft says the voters showed their determination to restore a government believing in the American principles of liberty, as opposed to what he calls the growing beurocracy of the so-called Fair Deal. ~~Taft said again that he and the General have agreed to cut billions from the billion dollar budget in the 1954, with another billion reduction the following year.~~

Governor Dewey said today that published reports that he might be in the Eisenhower cabinet are "purely speculative." He "expects and intends" to finish out his term as governor of New York, 1954. He says he has not discussed cabinet appointments or any other jobs with the General.. and he doesn't believe anyone else has.

Here in New York, Democratic State Chairman Fitzpatrick has resigned because of ill health. The General carried New York by 842-thousand votes.

In Washington today, a State Department spokesman says the Russian protests against our Sea Defense Zone in Korean waters, is designed to deceive people....to make them think that legitimate counter-measures to acts of aggression are themselves new acts of aggression.

There was little fighting in Korea today. Some 150 Communists tried to charge up Sniper Ridge but were wiped out by our artillery. And our jet pilots say that in a series of dogfights they destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged 11 others.

At the United Nations, Andrie Gromyko of Russia charged that the President's foreign aid program is a scheme for "exploiting under-developed countries.. to use their raw materials to build an American "war machine." Gromyko says the Point Four program is completely selfish.. an attempt to "subjugate" the economies of less-developed areas. He charges American businessmen are trying to "squeeze out" British and French competitors from these areas.

In Moscow, at the celebration of the 35th anniversary of the Russian revolution, Vice Premier Pervukin warned "American aggressors" that Russia's army is "invincible."...equipped with the "most modern type of weapons.

And two Americans have been awarded the Nobel prize in physics: Dr. Felix Bloch of Stanford and Dr. Archer Martin of Harvard, were honored for developing a new method for measuring magnetic fields in atomic nuclei.

Edward R. Murrow: November 6, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

When a Commanding General or a President-elect turns up in a theatre of military operations he gets most of his information as a result of briefings by officers on the spot. That is what will happen when General Eisenhower goes to Korea. Tonight we are in a position to report within the limits of military security some of the things General Eisenhower will be told by senior officers in Japan and Korea. He will be told that there is no way to force a truce or a military decision unless the United Nations is willing to put tremendous reinforcements into Korea, and is willing to gamble on taking heavy casualties in an effort to destroy the Chinese armies. He will be told that American troops cannot be withdrawn from the front lines in any large numbers, unless there is a truce. And he will be told that it is the opinion of General Mark Clark's headquarters that Chinese Nationalist troops now on Formosa should be used in Korea in as large numbers as Chiang-Kai-Shek will permit.

General Eisenhower will of course be interested in the fighting conditions - sub-zero temperatures are very near. Neither side is expected to mount a large-scale offensive until Spring. American weapons are adequate - heavy artillery shells are tightly rationed, but the rationing has not greatly restricted operations.

General Eisenhower will of course enquire about the morale of the troops, and he will be told that it is not as high as it was a year ago. Most of the veterans have been rotated. New and green troops are getting their first taste of battle. The recent increase in casualties has created a "questioning attitude." He will hear some criticism of General Van Fleet's conduct of the recent operation against Triangle Hill - a matter of misjudging the Chinese reaction and underestimating the enemy's strength. General Eisenhower will be told that it will take at least two years, probably more, to produce, train and equip ten more South Korean divisions; That as long as the Chinese are in Korea the South Koreans should not be given the job of holding the entire line. The South Korean training schedule is following that of the American Army; but there is a shortage of men trained to command tank and artillery units. At the moment every Korean division in the line is supported by some American units. The Korean tankers are still undergoing advance training; there is a shortage of properly trained senior staff officers, and of officers capable of co-ordinating air support for ground troops.

General Eisenhower will be told that increased air attacks might reduce Chinese strength to the point where they would agree to talk peace.

But the weight of the opinions he will hear will probably be against this argument.

The United Nations forces could begin next Spring an all-out offensive in an effort to force a military decision in Korea. This would require substantial reinforcements, involve heavy casualties and no assurance of victory. This course will not be recommended by General Mark Clark's headquarters. There is another alternative, all-out war against China, a naval blockade, air attacks on the Chinese mainland, a diversionary attack by Chiang-Kai-Shek's troops landing in South China coupled with a ground offensive in Korea. This would require an amphibious operation to cut off the Communists and destroy their armies or drive them out of Korea. This strategy will be urged upon the President-elect by commanders in whom he has had confidence in the past.

General Eisenhower will also be briefed by G-2 regarding the condition and capability of the enemy. He will be told that North Korean civilians face the worst winter they have yet endured. Our agents in the North, plus photo reconn pictures indicate that fifty percent of the hydro-electric generating plants in North Korea have been destroyed. There is a desperate shortage of food for civilians. The railways are operating at less than 25 percent of pre-war capacity. There is a shortage of fertilizer and seed; irrigation systems have collapsed because there was no power for the pumps. The price of rice last summer rose 400 percent, but as yet there is no widespread starvation. G-2 will tell Eisenhower that civilian morale in the North is not worrying the Communist commanders; that the morale of the enemy fighting forces is considered good, and the morale of the "hard core" groups is excellent. Rations for North Korean and Chinese troops are better and more diversified than a year ago. And should the food supply drop to the point where military operations are imperilled, food can be shipped in from China and the Soviet Union.

That is a partial but accurate summary of what General Eisenhower will be told. As Commander-in-Chief after January 20th he must choose between grim alternatives. The political and military fates have combined to place Eisenhower in the position, where he must re-assess and decide anew, upon policies once stoutly advocated by his old commander, General MacArthur; - for the alternatives in Korea remain substantially what they were when MacArthur was dismissed.

Temporary of Course.

The campaign is ended; the calm has set in. And I'm reminded of these lines by La Rochefoucauld:"There is an eloquent silence, that serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn. There is a mocking silence and there is a respectful silence." Whatever the case, all would probably agree with Oliver Wendell Holmes:"Silence, like a poultice,comes to heal the blows of sound."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower today suggested to the President that their proposed meeting be held the week of November 17th...a week from Monday. In answer to Mr. Truman's suggestion that such a meeting be held to "facilitate the orderly transfer of the executive branch of the government," the General also said: he plans to appoint representatives to be "indoctrinated" in several departments of the government. He thinks this will make the Eisenhower-Truman conference more profitable. He says he must postpone the meeting until the week of November 17th because "I obviously require a reasonable time for conversation and conferences leading up to the designation of important assistants." And the General joined the President in the hope that the two can express to the world an American unity on basic issues.

That was the General's "business" for the day at Augusta, Georgia. Then, in casual clothes, trailed by secret service men and proceeded by photographers he went out to the golf course to pose for pictures...and take up the game he had not played in months.

The latest vote figures, with all precincts not yet reporting, show that the General received just under 33-million votes to 26 and a half million for Governor Stevenson. The General now appears sure of victory in Tennessee. Stevenson leads in Kentucky's complete unofficial returns by 2-thousand votes. In Michigan, complete unofficial returns show Governor Mennen Williams in the lead by 8-thousand votes.

The House situation is this: The Republicans have 220 seats...two more than are needed for control. The Democrats have 207...with 7 still undecided. The Democrats are leading in six of these seven races.

Democratic Representative Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois died today.

He was 86...had served in the House for 45 successive years and had been re-elected on Tuesday. A special election will be held to replace him.

Vice President-elect Nixon returned to Washington today; said he is going to resign from the Senate before January the third...to give the man Governor Warren of California selects as his replacement, seniority over the new batch of senators. Nixon says one of the major jobs of the new Administration will be to clean up corruption.

Republican chairman Summerfield agrees with Democratic Campaign Manager Wyatt that the major factor in the Eisenhower victory was the demand for a change. Mr. Summerfield feels that Senator Taft or any other Republican candidate could have won.

Senator Taft says the voters showed their determination to restore a government believing in the American principles of liberty as opposed to what he calls the growing bureaucracy of the so-called Fair Deal.

Governor Dewey said today that published reports that he might be in the Eisenhower cabinet are "purely speculative." He "expects and intends" to finish out his term as governor of New York in 1954. He says he has not discussed cabinet appointments or any other jobs with the General...and he doesn't believe anyone else has.

Here in New York, Democratic State Chairman Fitzpatrick has resigned because of ill health. The General carried New York by 842-thousand votes.

In Washington today, a State Department spokesman says the Russian protests against our Sea Defense Zone in Korean waters is designed to deceive people..."to make them think that legitimate counter-measures to acts of aggression are themselves new acts of aggression."

There was little fighting in Korea today. Some 150 Communists tried to charge up Sniper Ridge but were wiped out by our artillery. And our jet pilots say that in a series of dogfights they destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged 11 others.

At the United Nations, Andrie Gromyko of Russia charged that the President's foreign aid program is a scheme for "exploiting under-developed countries"...to use their raw materials to build an American "war machine." Gromyko says the Point Four program is completely selfish...an attempt to "subjugate" the economies of less-developed areas. He charges American businessmen are trying to "squeeze out" British and French competitors from these areas.

In Moscow, at the celebration of thd 35th anniversary of the Russian revolution, Vice Premier Pervukin warned "American aggressors" that Russia's army is "invincible."...equipped with the "most modern type of weapons.

And two Americans have been awarded the Nobel prize in physics: Dr. Felix Bloch of Stanford and Dr. Archer Martin of Harvard, were honored for developing a new method for measuring magnetic fields in atomic nuclei.

When a Commanding General or a President-elect turns up in a theatre of military operations he gets most of his information as a result of briefings by officers on the spot. That is what will happen when General Eisenhower goes to Korea. Tonight we are in a position to report within the limits of military security some of the things General Eisenhower will be told by senior officers in Japan and Korea. He will be told that there is no way to force a truce or a military decision unless the United Nations is willing to put tremendous reinforcements into Korea, and is willing to gamble on taking heavy casualties in an effort to destroy the Chinese armies. He will be told that American troops cannot be withdrawn from the front lines in any large numbers, unless the United Nations is willing to put tremendous reinforcements into Korea, and is willing to gamble on taking heavy casualties in an effort to destroy the Chinese armies. He will be told that American troops cannot be withdrawn from the front lines in any large numbers, unless there is a truce. And he will be told that it is the opinion of General Mark Clark's headquarters that Chinese Nationalist troops now on Formosa should be used in Korea in as large numbers as Chiang-Kai-Shek will permit.

General Eisenhower will of course be interested in the fighting conditions - sub-zero temperatures are very near. Neither side is expected to mount a large-scale offensive until Spring. American weapons are adequate - heavy artillery shells are tightly rationed, but the rationing has not greatly restricted operations.

General Eisenhower will of course inquire about the morale of the troops, and he will be told that it is not as high as it was a year ago. Most of the veterans have been rotated. New and green troops are getting their first taste of battle. The recent increase in casualties has created a "questioning attitude." He will hear some criticism of General Van Fleet's conduct of the recent operation against Triangle Hill - a matter of misjudging the Chinese reaction and underestimating the enemy's strength. General Eisenhower will be told that it will take at least two years, probably more, to produce, train and equip ten more South Korean divisions; that as long as the Chinese are in Korea the South Koreans should not be given the job of holding the entire line. The South Korean training schedule is following that of the American Army; but there is a shortage of men trained to command tank and artillery units. At the moment every Korean division in the line is supported by some American units. The Korean tankers are still undergoing advance training; there is a shortage of properly trained senior staff officers, and of officers capable of co-ordinating air support for ground troops.

General Eisenhower will be told that increased air attacks might reduce Chinese strength to the point where they would agree to talk peace. But the weight of the opinions he will hear will probably be against this argument.

The United Nations forces could begin next Spring an all-out offensive in an effort to force a military decision in Korea. This would require substantial reinforcements, involve heavy casualties and no assurance of victory. This course will not be recommended by General Mark Clark's headquarters. There is another alternative, all-out war against China, a naval blockade, air attacks on the Chinese mainland, a diversionary attack by Chiang-Kai-Shek's troops landing in South China coupled with a ground offensive in Korea. This would require an amphibious operation to cut off the Communists and destroy their armies or drive them out of Korea. This strategy will be urged upon the President-elect by commanders in whom he has had confidence in the past.

General Eisenhower will also be briefed by G-2 regarding the condition and capability of the enemy. He will be told that North Korean civilians face the worst winter they have yet endured. Our agents in the North, plus photo reconn pictures indicate that fifty percent of the hydro-electric generating plants in North Korea have been destroyed. There is a desperate shortage of food for civilians. The railways are operating at less than 25 percent of pre-war capacity. There is a shortage of fertilizer and seed; irrigation systems have collapsed because there was no power for the pumps. The price of rice last summer rose 400 percent, but as yet there is no widespread starvation. G-2 will tell Eisenhower that civilian morale in the North is not worrying the Communist commanders; that the morale of the enemy fighting forces is considered good, and the morale of the "hard core" groups is excellent. Rations for North Korean and Chinese troops are better and more diversified than a year ago. And should the food supply drop to the point where military operations are imperilled, food can be shipped in from China and the Soviet Union.

That is a partial but accurate summary of what General Eisenhower will be told. As Commander-in-Chief after January 20th he must choose between grim alternatives. The political and military fates have combined to place Eisenhower in the position where he must re-assess and decide anew upon policies once stoutly advocated by his old commander, General MacArthur; for the alternatives in Korea remain substantially what they were when MacArthur was dismissed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The campaign is ended; the calm, temporary of course, has set in. And I'm reminded of these lines by La Rochefoucauld: "There is an eloquent silence that serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn. There is a mocking silence and there is a respectful silence." Whatever the case, all would probably agree with Oliver Wendell Holmes: "Silence, like a poultice, comes to heal the blows of sound."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, November 7, 1952

This is the news:

The President and President-elect Eisenhower are "thinking along the same lines" in their effort to make the change of Administrations as smmoth as possible. The President sent an air force colonel..a courier..to the General in Augusta. Some of the material he carried was secret. But from what was made public, another telegram from the President and a statement by General Eisenhower's press secretary, this is the end result: The President will be happy to meet with the General on November 17. He would like Eisenhower to name a man to sit in on budget meetings, in the defense department and in the state department "at the earliest possible moment." The General is expected to name his aides early next week. (He has been conferring, by phone, with his chief advisers.) He will act as promptly as he can. The General spent the morning replying to a thousand congratulatory telegrams received in Augusta.. another 30-thousand are waiting for him here in New York. One was from Pope Pius asking divine blessings for Eisenhower and his Adminiatration. And the British tonight released a telegram Winston Churchill sent the General. Churchill said he "looks forward to the renewal of our comradeship and our work together for the same causes of peace and freedom as in the past." And Eisenhower thanking the Prime Minister said he looks forward to "a renewal of our cooperative work in the interest of a free world." The General played golf today.. shot a 93 for 18 holes... 21 strokes over par. Ed Dudley, the club's pro, says the General was "emphatically not happy" about the score.

In Washington today, the President met with his cabinet for the first time since the election. Attorney General Mc Granery says they discussed ways to make the change of Administration as efficiently as possible.

Later the President saw Senator Benton of Connecticut for a half Hour. Benton--defeated on Tuesday--says the President feels the party "might have been a little better organized" for the presidential contest. But he believes General Eisenhower would have won anyway.

The latest election figures indicate that about 61 per cent of the population voted..the biggest percentage in our history. With some 4-thousand precincts missing, the unofficial vote count is fifty-nine and a half million.. (not counting votes cast for minor party candidates.)

Millard Caldwell has resigned as civil defense administrator, to return to Florida. His deputy, James J. Wadsworth, will be the acting administrator.

The newspaper of the American Federatoon of Labor says Harold Stassen is "slated" to become secretary of labor in the Eisenhower cabinet. Some labor leaders are telling reporters that union members voted for the Democratic candidates but were outvoted by the rest of the electorate.

The Voice of America is telling the world that the Tuesday election was a "100 per cent vote against Stalin." The Voice says: "Both candidates have taken a firm stand against tyranny. General Eisenhower ranged himself forthrightly behind the present Administration's policies of building peace through strength."

In Lebanon, police put down a demonstration marking the 35th anniversary of the Russian revolution. The demonstrators shouted "Down with Eisenhower."

In Moscow, Marshal Timoshenko, in a revolution anniversary speech, said the Soviet armed forces are now "better able than ever before to answer an aggressor with a strong blow."

In Korea, there was a minimum of ground fighting as Allied and Communist big guns carried on a long artillery duel. Our officers estimate they have knocked out half of the enemy's heavy weapons in the Triangle Hill area. The Chinese are believed to have brought up an entire artillery division--for the first time in the war. Some American officers think the enemy guns are being directed by former Chinese Nationalists who received their training at our artillery school at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Colonel J.D. Bell, quartermaster for the 8th army, says: "NO American army, anywhere, ever began a winter better equipped or clothed than the 8th army is now."

Army sources in Tokyo are suggesting that when General Eisenhower makes his flying trip to Korea he may by-pass Tokyo and go from Wake Island or Okinawa direct to Korea. This would make the security problem simpler.. and would make it unnecessary for the General to pay a protocol call on Emperor Hirohito in Tokyo.

Correspondents in Korea say the troops are looking forward to the General's visit in the hope that he may be able to get them home sooner... by revising the point system for rotation, and replacing them with South Koreans.

In Washington today, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says average wholesale prices have dropped for the fourth consecutive week: The drop this time was two-tenths of a point.

Edward R. Murrow: November 7, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

This ~~XXXXXX~~ period of "waiting for history to be made" is tough on reporters. Today we wrote a learned piece on who is going to inherit what's left of the Democratic Party, but somehow it was never possible to end that piece because we didn't know the answer. Then there was an effort to forecast Eisenhower's Cabinet. Same difficulty, same result.

Now this program boasts a research department, ably presided over by one John Aaron. We besought his assistance in finding a few words suitable for the ears of Democrats in their hour of defeat - words not calculated to offend, at least not too deeply, Democrats or Republicans, (the latter of course being almost immune to offense these days.) Mr. Aaron, both learned and resourceful, produced what was required; words from a great fighter for the Democratic Party, but who never fought so stoutly as to lose his sense of humor. So at this point, having cast away several treatises dealing with the future, we abdicate in favor of a few words by Will Rogers, all of them written immediately following the last big shellacking the Democrats took, in 1928.

"Well, all I know is just what I read in the Election returns; and from a Democratic standpoint it was some of the poorest reading material

I ever dug into. It really was not only bad composition, but the English was terrible in it. "Texas Republican;" now that's not according to any English Shakespeare or old Bacon Rind ever wrote. "Virginia with the Yankees:" I bet Jefferson pretty near rolled off that hill. The Everglades of Florida voting the alligators with Wall Street: I tell you the world is cockeyed. What's become of our glorious tradition? Are we leaving the teachings of our forefathers? Where does the fair state of Oklahoma think she can hide her head when she is asked to answer her ancestors?"

Mr. Rogers, in his November message in 1928 on the state of the nation, said: "The nation never looked like it was to face a worse winter. Birds, geese, Democrats and all perishable animals are already huddled up in three or four states down South. We are at peace with the world because the world is waiting to get another gun and get it loaded."

Back in 1928, after the election, Will Rogers ran a "For Sale" notice: "Would like to sell, trade, dispose of or give away to the right parties a franchise of what is humorously known as Democratic Party. Said franchise calls for license to enter in National Elections. Said right, or franchise is supposed to be used every four years, but if intelligent parties had it they would let various elections go by default when understood they had no chance. If in right hands and only used in times when it had an issue, or when Republican Party had split, think it could be made to pay. But present owners have absolutely no business with it. Under present management they have killed off more good men than grade crossings have."

Apparently political speeches haven't changed very much since Will Rogers was describing them in '28. He said: "A speech nowadays is just like bootleg liquor; nobody knows what all the junk is they put in it; but everybody knows that it just don't stand up. It tastes terrible and sounds worse."

And finally Will Rogers, after the 1928 elections, put a lot of the political threats of what would happen by politicians into proper perspective. He said: "There is no other line of business that any of them could get in where they would get one-tenth part of the publicity that they get in public office - and how they love it. Talk about actors basking in the limelight. Say, an old Senator could make an actor look like he is hid under a barrel. You announce tomorrow that you'll either take away a public man's salary or his publicity and position, that he can have the choice of which to give up, and 90 percent will say: 'Take the salary away'. They will find some way of living; in fact, they will live on the strength of somebody calling them 'Judge', or 'Congressman' or even 'Alderman'. Those old babies like it.

"You could transfer the Senate and Congress over to run the Standard Oil or General Motors, and they would have both things bankrupt in two years. No other business in the world could afford to carry such dead wood. But we got 'em, and they're going to live off us some way, so we just as well put long tail coats on 'em and call 'em statesmen."

All that was written by Will Rogers immediately after the 1928 elections. That campaign was probably more bitter and bigotted than the one just ended.

Those Republicans, who have spent the last twenty years cursing the social and economic legislation of the New Deal, will not now attempt to repeal any considerable part of that body of legislation. # Democrats who have met defeat for the first time in twenty years -(and none of them fought harder for the Party than Will Rogers in 1928)- might take from him a lesson in the art of losing gracefully.

A sense of humor is a quality we are apt at times to under-rate. Mark Twain, who certainly could speak with some authority, once remaarked:" Humor is the great thing, the saving thing, after all. The minute it crops up all our hardnesses yield, all our irritations and resentments slip away and a sunny spirit takes their place. Besides, humor is the good-natured side of any truth...it sets the "Thinking Machinery" in motion.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President and President-elect Eisenhower are "thinking along the same lines" in their effort to make the change of Administration as smooth as possible. The President sent an air force colonel...a courier,...to the General in Augusta. Some of the material he carried was secret. But from what was made public, another telegram from the President and a statement by General Eisenhower's press secretary this is the end result: The President will be happy to meet with the General on November 17. He would like Eisenhower to name a man to sit in on budget meetings, in the defense department and in the State Department "at the earliest possible moment." The General is expected to name his aides early next week. (He has been conferring, by phone, with his chief advisers.) He will act as promptly as he can. The General spent the morning replying to a thousand congratulatory telegrams received in August... another 30-thousand are waiting for him here in New York. One was from Pope Pius asking divine blessings for Eisenhower and his Administration. And the British tonight released a telegram Winston Churchill sent the General. Churchill said he "looks forward to the renewal of our comradeship and our work together for the same causes of peace and freedom as in the past." And Eisenhower thanking the Prime Minister said he looks forward to "a renewal of our cooperative work in the interest of a free world." The General played golf today...shot a 93 for 18 holes...21 strokes over par. Ed Dudley, the club's pro, says the General was "emphatically not happy" about the score.

In Washington today, the President met with his cabinet for the first time since the election. Attorney General McGranery says they discussed ways to make the change of Administration as efficiently as possible.

Later the President saw Senator Benton of Connecticut for a half hour. Benton...defeated on Tuesday...says the President feels the party "might have been a little better organized" for the presidential contest. But he believes General Eisenhower would have won anyway.

The latest election figures indicate that about 61 per cent of the population voted...the biggest percentage in our history. With some 4-thousand precincts missing, the unofficial vote count is fifty-nine and a half million... (not counting votes cast for minor party candidates.)

Millard Caldwell has resigned as civil defense administrator to return to Florida. His deputy, James J. Wadsworth, will be the acting administrator.

The newspaper of the American Federation of Labor says Harold Stassen is "slated" to become secretary of labor in the Eisenhower cabinet. Some labor leaders are telling reporters that union members voted for the Democratic candidates but were outvoted by the rest of the electorate.

The Voice of America is telling the world that the Tuesday election was a "100 per cent vote against Stalin." The Voice says: "Both candidates have taken a firm stand against tyranny. General Eisenhower ranged himself forthrightly behind the present Administration's policies of building peace through strength."

In Lebanon, police put down a demonstration marking the 35th anniversary of the Russian revolution. The demonstrators shouted "Down with Eisenhower."

In Moscow, Marshal Timoshenko, in a revolution anniversary speech, said the Soviet armed forces are now "better able than ever before to answer an aggressor with a strong blow."

In Korea, there was a minimum of ground fighting as Allied and Communist big guns carried on a long artillery duel. Our officers estimate they have knocked out half of the enemy's heavy weapons in the Triangle Hill area. The Chinese are believed to have brought up an entire artillery division...

for the first time in the war. Some American officers think the enemy guns are being directed by former Chinese Nationalists who received their training at our artillery school at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Colonel J.D. Bell, quartermaster for the 8th army, says: "No American army, anywhere, ever began a winter better equipped or clothed than the 8th army is now."

Army sources in Tokyo are suggesting that when General Eisenhower makes his flying trip to Korea he may by-pass Tokyo and go from Wake Island or Okinawa direct to Korea. This would make the security problem simpler...and would make it unnecessary for the General to pay a protocol call on Emperor Hirohito in Tokyo.

Correspondents in Korea say the troops are looking forward to the General's visit in the hope that he may be able to get them home sooner...by revising the point system for rotation, and replacing them with South Koreans.

In Washington today, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says average wholesale prices have dropped for the fourth consecutive week: The drop this time was two-tenths of a point.

This period of "waiting for history to be made" is tough on reporters. Today we wrote a learned piece on who is going to inherit what's left of the Democratic Party, bur somehow it was never possible to end that piece because we didn't know the answer. Then there was an effort to forecast Eisenhower's Cabinet. Same difficulty, same result.

Now this program boasts a research department, ably presided over by one John Aaron. We besought his assistance in finding a few words, suitable for the ears of Democrats in their hour of defeat - words not calculated to offend, at least not too deeply, Democrats or Republicans, (the latter of course being almost immune to offense these days.) Mr. Aaron, both learned and resourceful, produced what was required; words from a great fighter for the Democratic Party, but who never fought so stoutly as to lose his sense of humor.

So at this point, having cast away several treatises dealing with the future, we abdicate in favor of a few words by Will Rogers, all of them written immediately following the last big shellacking the Democrats took, in 1928.

"Well, all I know is just what I read in the Election returns; and from a Democratic standpoint it was some of the poorest reading material I ever dug into. It really was not only bad composition, but the English was terrible in it. "Texas Republican;" now that's not according to any English Shakespeare or old Bacon Rind ever wrote. "Virginia with the Yankees:" I bet Jefferson pretty near rolled off that hill. The Everglades of Florida voting the alligators with Wall Street: I tell you the world is cockeyed. What's become of our glorious tradition? Are we leaving the teachings of our forefathers? Where does the fair State of Oklahoma think she can hide her head when she is asked to answer her ancestors?"

Mr. Rogers, in his November message in 1928 on the state of the nation, said: "The nation never looked like it was to face a worse winter. Birds, geese, Democrats and all perishable animals are already huddled up in three or four states down South. We are at peace with the world because the world is waiting to get another gun and get it loaded."

Back in 1928, after the election, Will Rogers ran a "For Sale" notice: "We would like to sell, trade, dispose of or give away to the right parties, a franchise of what is humorously known as Democratic Party. Said franchise calls for license to enter in National Elections. Said right, or franchise is supposed to be used every four years, but if intelligent parties had it they would let various elections go by default when understood they had no chance. If in right hands and only used in times when it had an issue, or when Republican Party had split, think it could be made to pay. But present owners have absolutely no business with it. Under present management they have killed off more good men than grade crossings have.

Apparently political speeches haven't changed very much since Will Rogers was describing them in 1928. He said: "A speech nowadays is just like bootleg liquor; nobody knows what all the junk is they put in it; but everybody knows that it just don't stand up. It tastes terrible and sounds worse."

And finally Will Rogers, after the 1928 elections, put a lot of the political threats of what would happen by politicians into proper perspective. He said: "There is no other line of business that any of them could get in where they would get one-tenth part of the publicity that they get in public office - and how they love it. Talk about actors basking in the limelight. Say, an old Senator could make an actor look like he is hid under a barrel. You announce tomorrow that you'll either take away a public man's salary or his publicity and position, that he can have the choice to which to give up, and 90 percent will say: 'Take the salary away'. They will find some way of living; in fact, they will live on the strength of somebody calling them 'Judge', or 'Congressman' or even 'Alderman'. Those old babies like it.

"You could transfer the Senate and Congress over to run the Standard Oil or General Motors, and they would have both things bankrupt in two years. No other business in the world could afford to carry such dead wood. But we got 'em, and they're going to live off us some way, so we just as well put long tail coats on 'em and call 'em statesmen."

All that was written by Will Rogers immediately after the 1928 elections. That campaign was probably more bitter and bigotted than the one just ended.

Those Republicans who have spent the last twenty years cursing the social and economic legislation of the New Deal will not now attempt to repeal any considerable part of that body of legislation. Democrats who have met defeat for the first time in twenty years - and none of them fought harder for the Party than Will Rogers in 1928 - might take from him a lesson in the art of losing gracefully.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a Moment with the Word for Today, now here is Bob Dixon:

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: A sense of humor is a quality we are apt at times to under-rate. Mark Twain, who certainly could speak with some authority, once remarked: "Humor is the great thing, the saving thing, after all. The minute it crops up all our hardnesses yield, all our irritations and resentments slip away and a sunny spirit takes their place. Besides, humor is the good-natured side of any truth...it sets the "Thinking Machinery" in motion.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday Nov. 10, 1952

This is the news:

Two Hundred Chinese Communists are attacking a new allied hill position on the western front. The attack began during the night, continued at dawn, Korean time. (We have halted another enemy attack on the eastern front.)

South Korea's defense minister, says negotiations are now under way with the United States, to give South Korea "an astoundingly greater" army, within the next year. Lieut. General Shinn says he is certain that President-elect Eisenhower agrees with South Korean officials, on the "futility" of ending the war through negotiations.

Deputy Defense Secretary Foster, who recently returned from Korea, says that when General Eisenhower gets there, our top commanders will tell him they want authority to increase military pressure on the enemy. He says Generals Clark and Van Fleet see no hope of a negotiated armistice in the foreseeable future.

And at the United Nations General Assembly today, Andrei Vishinsky ~~punctuated~~ underlined that belief. He told the Assembly: the Soviet Union will not "budge" from its insistence that all prisoners of war be returned to their homelands..regardless of their wishes. He argues: soldiers have no free will..they must be returned to their armies.. the United States, by insisting on voluntary repatriation, could force the collapse of the armistice talks at Panmunjom...and then the war would drag on. Again Vishinsky charges that American authorities want to drag on the war to help billionaries make more billions. [redacted]

[redacted]

Trygve Lie resigned as secretary general of the U.N. today in the hope of helping bring peace to Korea. Friends of Mr. Lie say he is fed up with attacks made on him by the Russians... attacks made on the U.N., by a Senate security subcommittee.. and difficulties he has been having with the U.N's budget committee. Mr. Lie told the Assembly:"I am stepping aside now, because I hope this may help the United Nations save the peace." He feels there can be an armistice if Russia, the Chinese Communists, and the North Koreans, sincerely want it. And if they do, he feels a new secretary general , could be more helpful than he can be. The job pays 40-thousand dollars a year, net. An applicant must be unanimously approved by the Big Five powers..then get the approval of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

A spokesman for the American delegation at the U.N. says we were surprised by Mr. Lie's announcement today..we consider him a "splendid international public servant."

Prime Minister Churchill told the Lord Mayors banquet in London tonight that Russia is blocking the peace in Korea in an attempt to make the free world scatter its strength..particularly to slow up the defense- build-up of western Europe. Mr. Churchill said he is anxious for peace but not "at the price of dishonor." He would consider it dishonorable to force enemy prisoners to return to the Chinese government which, he says, openly [redacted] boasts that it has already [redacted] rid itself of two million persons.

The Labor party today moved a vote of no confidence against the Churchill government. Deputy Leader Herbert Morrison warned of the uncertainty of continued American aid under the new Republican administration in Washington.

The British government says Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia has accepted Churchill's invitation to visit Great Britain. The date will be fixed later.

Results from the elections yesterday in three of West Germany's provinces indicate, that in general, the moderate coalition parties held their ground. Correspondent Richard C. Hottelet cables that there is nothing that could reasonably be described as a "right wing victory." A former chief of staff of the Storm troopers, and a former panzer general were elected to city council posts in two towns.

In Washington today, the President made it known that he considers "Eminently satisfactory" the two men named by President-elect Eisenhower to consult with Administration officials. They are Joseph M. Dodge who will work on budget matters, and Senator Lodge who will consult on all other matters. The President says he appreciates Eisenhower's promptness. (I'd like to discuss this situation in a minute.)

The General was busy today trying to catch up on the thousands of messages of congratulations, advice, and applications for jobs.

John Foster Dulles, back in New York from a week's vacation in Canada, says that despite reports that he may be the next secretary of state, he has not been offered any cabinet job.. has no appointment with General Eisenhower and has not heard from him.

Senator Taft says, in US news and world report, that if he had been the Republican candidate he would have won and carried more Republican senators to victory. He says The General concentrated on issues that did not help the Senatorial candidates.

A Democrat, Senator Maybank of South Carolina, agrees with Senator Byrd of Virginia, that the General can expect Democratic support on "sound measures" he offers the Congress.

Three other Democratic senators--including Russell of Georgia..have announced their support of Texas' Senator Lyndon Johnson to be Senate democratic leader.

The Supreme Court today upheld, in effect, a ruling that prohibits railroads from requiring Negro passengers to travel in cars seperate from those of white passengers.

Edward R. Murrow: November 10, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

The chances are, not even General Eisenhower knew how many friends, advisors and well-wishers he had, until after his election. His temporary headquarters in Augusta, Georgia, is in receipt of a lot of mail and telegrams, telling the President-elect how he should reorganize the government, many of these communications coming from people willing and eager to help him do it. Journalists are giving him public counsel regarding the composition of his Cabinet. Anonymous spokesmen for allied nations imply that he ought to say or do something, to reduce apprehensions about a change in our foreign policy. President Truman has been crowding the General to name men to represent him in arranging for the orderly transfer of power. In point of fact, there can be no transfer of power until January 20th. And this reporter, for one, fails to see valid reasons for this sense of urgency. Under our system it is not possible for the President-elect to wield power until he has responsibility. For three months during the political campaign our government was stalled on dead center, (most of its leaders out campaigning). Our allies awaited the outcome, suspending, so far as they could, the normal intercourse between nations. It may be that we and they will just have to wait another couple of months before the pattern and personnel of the new government becomes clear.

General Eisenhower's task of selecting a team is complicated by the fact that his Party has been out of office for twenty years. He has plenty of men, experienced and skilled in the legislative branch of the government; but he has very few with top level FEDERAL governmental administrative experience. Even the nature of his victory makes his job of selection more difficult, for he is not beholden to any segment of his own Party or of our society for that victory. Each time he appoints a man he must necessarily disappoint other men and their supporters. Historically the pattern of an Administration is set for the first couple of ~~XXXXX~~ years, at any rate, by these early appointments. It is not easy to displace a man once he has been appointed.

What we are experiencing now, is the traditional American impatience for action. Our allies are a little impatient, too. But we are operating under a time schedule, and if the General were to announce his entire Cabinet tomorrow, they could not exercise power until January 20th, because they would have no responsibilities.

Two months from now the PUBLIC problems will still be there, probably not much more ~~MX~~ acute than they are now. It is unlikely that the Truman Administration will undertake any bold or rash ventures in either the domestic or foreign field during its closing days.

We do not manage the transfer of political power with the ease, and speed, practised by some of our allies, but it's our way of doing it, and the waiting time will probably do no harm, either to them or to us.

General Eisenhower has gone rather farther in establishing effective liaison than Franklin Roosevelt was prepared to go when he was waiting to take over from Mr. Hoover in 1932. Then, in a time of desperate domestic crisis, Mr. Roosevelt took the position that since he had no power, he would accept no responsibility. #

During this interval the essential business of government gets done. For example, as recently as October 26th the Department of the Army issued a memorandum on the subject of "Undignified behavior of military personnel". It takes note of public reports of military personnel engaging in various stunts, as part of a fund-raising campaign, or drive. On one occasion a first sergeant was used as the target in a pie-throwing game. And the Department of the Army, under Paragraph 2, lists examples of what not to do in the interests of charity drives, money-raising programs and other such events. Enlisted personnel should not throw an officer into a swimming pool. Officers, or non-commissioned officers, should not clean or sweep out enlisted barracks. Officers should not serve enlisted men meals in bed; nor should they bathe enlisted personnel. Officers should not be pushing peanuts with their noses down the street for the entertainment of enlisted personnel. This is only a partial list of what not to do, but it also includes Item J: Officers having pies thrown at them. "The participation of officers, or non-commissioned officers in any of the above-mentioned situations, or similar episodes, is in extremely poor taste."

General Eisenhower is, of course, familiar with the proper behavior of military personnel. And unless the pressure for him to make snap decisions eases up a little, someone will soon be asking for him to declare himself - is he for that memorandum or against it?

One consequence of winning an election is subjecting yourself to the onslought of advice from new-found friends. Centuries ago Aristophanes recognized this same problem when he wrote:"Those friends are a nuisance who spring into being whenever fortune smiles." Winston Churchill ~~put it~~ (SUMMED IT UP ANOTHER WAY:) ~~In the [illegible]~~:"The problems of victory are more agreeable than those of defeat, but are no less difficult."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Two Hundred Chinese Communists are attacking a new allied hill position on the western front. The attack began during the night, continued at dawn, Korean time. (We have halted another enemy attack on the eastern front.)

South Korea's defense minister says negotiations are now under way with the United States to give South Korea "an astoundingly greater" army within the next year. Lieut. General Shinn says he is certain that President-elect Eisenhower agrees with South Korean officials on the "futility" of ending the war through negotiations.

Deputy Defense Secretary Foster, who recently returned from Korea, says that when General Eisenhower gets there our top commanders will tell him they want authority to increase military pressure on the enemy. He says Generals Clark and Van Fleet see no hope of a negotiated armistice in the foreseeable future.

And at the United Nations General Assembly today, Andrei Vishinsky underlined that belief. He told the Assembly: the Soviet Union will not "budge" from its insistence that all prisoners of war be returned to their homelands... regardless of their wishes. He argues: soldiers have no free will...they must be returned to their armies...the United States, by insisting on voluntary repatriation, could force the collapse of the armistice talks at Panmunjom...and then the war would drag on. Again Vishinsky charges that American authorities want to drag on the war to help billionaires make more billions.

Trygve Lie resigned as secretary general of the U.N. today in the hope of helping bring peace to Korea. Friends of Mr. Lie say he is fed up with attacks made on him by the Russians...attacks made on the U.N. by a Senate security subcommittee...and difficulties he has been having with the U.N. budget committee. Mr. Lie told the Assembly: "I am stepping aside now, because I hope this may help the United Nations save the peace." He feels there can be an armistice if Russia, the Chinese Communists and the North Koreans sincerely want it. And if they do, he feels a new secretary general, could be more helpful than he can be. The job pays 40-thousand dollars a year net. An applicant must be unanimously approved by the Big Five powers...then get the approval of the Secrutity Council and the General Assembly.

A spokesman for the American delegation at the U.N. says we were surprised by Mr. Lie's announcement today...we consider him a "splendid international public servant."

Prime Minister Churchill told the Lord Mayors banquet in London tonight that Russia is blocking the peace in Korea in an attempt to make the free world scatter its strength...particularly to slow up the defense...build-up of western Europe. Mr. Churchill said he is anxious for peace but not "at the price of dishonor." He would consider it dishonorable to force enemy prisoners to return to the Chinese government which, he says, openly boasts that it has rid itself of two million persons.

The Labor party today moved a vote of no confidence against the Churchill's invitation to visit Great Britain. The date will be fixed later.

Results from the elections yesterday in three of West Germany's provinces indicate that in general, the moderate coalition parties held their ground. Correspondent Richard C. Hottelet cables that there is nothing that could reasonably be described as a "right wing victory." A former chief of staff of the Storm troopers and a former panzer general were elected to city council posts in two towns.

In Washington today, the President made it known that he considers "eminently satisfactory" the two men named by President-elect Eisenhower to consult with Administration officials. They are Joseph M. Dodge who will work on budget matters, and Senator Lodge who will consult on all other matters. The President says he appreciates Eisenhower's promptness. (I'd like to discuss this situation in a minute.)

The General was busy today trying to catch up on the thousands of messages of congratulations, advice, and applications for jobs.

John Foster Dulles, back in New York from a week's vacation in Canada, says that despite reports that he may be the next secretary of state, he has not been offered any cabinet job...has no appointment with General Eisenhower and has not heard from him.

Senator Taft says, in US news and world report, that if he had been the Republican candidate he would have won and carried more Republican senators to victory. He says the General concentrated on issues that did not help the Senatorial candidates.

A Democrat, Senator Maybank of South Carolina, agrees with Senator Byrd of Virginia, that the General can expect Democratic support on "sound measures" he offers the Congress.

Three other Democratic senators...including Russell of Georgia... have announced their support of Texas' Senator Lyndon Johnson to be Senate democratic leader.

The Supreme Court today upheld, in effect, a ruling that prohibits railroads from requiring Negro passengers to travel in cars, separate from those of while passengers.

The chances are, not even General Eisenhower knew how many friends, advisors and well-wishers he had, until after his election. His temporary headquarters in Augusta, Georgia, is in receipt of a lot of mail and telegrams, telling the President-elect how he should reorganize the government, many of these communications coming from people willing and eager to help him do it. Journalists are giving him public council regarding the composition of his Cabinet. Anonymous spokesmen for allied nations imply that he ought to say or to something to reduce apprehensions about a change in our foreign policy. President Truman has been crowding the General to name men to represent him in arranging for the orderly transfer of power. In point of fact there can be no transfer of power until January 20th. And this reporter, for one, fails to see valid reasons for this sense of urgency. Under our system it is not possible for the President-elect to wield power until he has responsibility. For three months during the political campaign our government was stalled on dead center, (most of its leaders out campaigning.) Our allies awaited the outcome-suspending, so far as they could, the normal intercourse between nations. It may be that we and they will just have to wait another couple of months before the pattern and personnel of the new government becomes clear.

General Eisenhower's task of selecting a team is complicated by the fact that his Party has been out of office for twenty years. He has plenty of men, experienced and skilled in the legislative branch of the government; but he has very few with top level federal governmental administrative experience. Even the nature of his victory makes his job of selection more difficult, for he is not beholden to any segment of his own Party, or of our society for that victory. Each time he appoints a man he must necessarily disappoint other men and their supporters. Historically the pattern of an Administration is set for the first couple of years, at any rate, by these early appointments. It is not easy to displace a man once he has been appointed.

What we are experiencing now is the traditional American impatience for action. Our allies are a little impatient, too. But we are operating under a time schedule, and if the General were to announce his entire Cabinet tomorrow they could not exercise power until January 20th, because they would have no responsibilities.

Two months from now the public problems will still be there, probably not much more acute than they are now. It is unlikely that the Truman Administration will undertake any bold or rash ventures in either the domestic or foreign field during its closing days.

We do not manage the transfer of political power with the ease and speed practised by some of our allies, but it's our way of doing it, and the waiting time will probably do no harm either to them or to us.

General Eisenhower has gone rather farther in establishing effective liaison than Franklin Roosevelt was prepared to go when he was waiting to take over from Mr. Hoover in 1932. Then, in a time of desperate domestic crisis, Mr. Roosevelt took the position that since he had no power he would accept no responsibility.

During this interval the essential business of government gets done. For example, as recently as October 26th the Department of the Army issued a memorandum on the subject of "undignified behavior of military personnel." It takes note of public reports of military personnel engaging in various stunts as part of a fund-raising campaign, or drive. On one occasion a first sergeant was used as the target in a pie-throwing game. And the Department of the Army, under Paragraph 2, lists examples of what not to do in the interests of charity drives, money-raising programs and other such events. Enlisted personnel should not throw an officer into a swimming pool. Officers, or non-commissioned officers, should not clean or sweep out enlisted barracks. Officers should not serve enlisted men meals in bed; nor should they bathe enlisted personnel. Officers should not be pushing peanuts with their noses down the street, for the entertainment of enlisted personnel. This is only a partial list of what not to do, but it also includes Item J: Officers having pies thrown at them. "The participation of officers, or non-commissioned officers in any of the above-mentioned situations, or similar episodes, is in extremely poor taste."

General Eisenhower is, of course, familiar with the proper behavior of military personnel. And unless the pressure for him to make snap decisions eases up a little, someone will soon be asking for him to declare himself - is he for that memorandum or against it?

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: One consequence of winning an election is subjecting yourself to the onslought of advice from new-found friends. Centuries ago Aristophanes recognized this same problem when he wrote: "Those friends are a nuisance who spring into being whenever fortune smiles." Winston Churchill summed it up another way: "The problems of victory are more agreeable than those of defeat, but are no less difficult."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

~~File Nov~~

Tues. Nov. 11

This is the news:

Allied troops, on this armistice day, have now lost all the Korean gains they made in their limited offensive, launched in the middle of October. #

Some 15-hundred Chinese Communists, attacking in the dark, after one of the heavier artillery barrages of the war, drove South Korean troops from Pinpoint Hill...for the 13th time in 29 days. But General Van Fleet says that in the October fighting, we have cut in half the combat efficiency of two enemy armies. And the General announces that we are adding 55-thousand South Korean forces to the ROK army.. (two new division, and six regiments.)

Assistant Defense Secretary Anna Rosenberg, after a 5-day tour of Korea, says our troops are the best fed, and best equipped, in the world. She urges a continued build-up of South Korean troops.. and continued rotation home of our own men. Mrs. Rosenberg feels that President-elect Eisenhower will profit by a trip to Korea. And the Chinese radio today called the General a "bloodthirsty warmonger" who can accomplish nothing by a visit to Korea.. unless we first give up our desire not to force the return of enemy prisoners of war.

There were few in Korea..aside from statements by the top commanders..who took any notice of Armistice Day. But in this country,

Air Secretary Finletter, in a speech in Birmingham, said we would immiedtaley meet any Soviet attack on this country with a rain of atomic bombs ON RUSSIA. Here in Washington, Navy Secretary Kimball, laying a presidential wreath on the tomb of the Unkknown soldier, said the signifiance of Armistice Day increases "in direct proportion to the continuing heroic efforts by free men everywhere to resist and put down aggression and imperliasm."

At the United Nations, British Foreign Secretary Eden made another plea to the Russians for peace in Korea..offered another plan to bring this about.. and asked Andrei Vishinsky to take "one crucial step" towards settling the armistice. Mr. Eden also paid tribute to Tryvie Lie, who has announced his resignation as secretary general. Eden says he hopes Lie can be persuaded to reconsider his decision. Other diplomats at the United Nations and in Europe feel that this is a bad time for Mr. Lie to resign.. he has more than a year of his term to serve. & they Believe agreement on a successor--among the Big Five..is not possible. [redacted]. Lie came under attack from the Moscow radio. The Russians says his resignation is " a revealtion of his complete political bancruptcy".. his support of U.N. action in Korea "gave rise to waves of indignation throughout the world." And Democratic Senator Mc Carran, chairman of a subcommittee that has been seeking American Communists on the U.N. payroll, says Lie resigned because of disclosures that have been made and will be made..relating to Communist infiltration of the U.N. staff.

General Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson joined today in endorsing the 1952 Crusade for Freedom..both praised the work of Radio Free Europe and Radio Free Asia. The General says they are fighting the Big Communist Lie with the Big Truth. The General is still in Augusta.. his aides say he is beginning to "get unwound" from the strenuous campaign.. they also indicate that his trip to Korea will be made with no public announcement of his departure.

Vice-President-elect Nixon and his family are vacationing in Miami Beach, Florida. Nixon told reporters he has resigned his Senate seat as of January first. He has not been asked to help General Eisenhower select a cabinet. A reporter asked if the Senator has a "vacation fund" for this trip. Nixon replied:"My vacations are always on my own. I pay for them."

Senator Taft, writes for the Cincinnati Times-Star, that he thinks there should be complete co-operation between Eisenhower and Congress in "developing a program which will have unanimous support from the Republican party." He says the campaign was won on negative issues..that makes it more important to develop affirmative policies.

Supreme Court Justice Jackson told House investigators today that when he was chief prosecutor at the Nuremberg war crime trials he did not receive any information blaming Russia for the Katyn Forest massacre. The committee which has blamed the Russians for murdering Polish officers now is trying to find out why Americans were not told of this conclusion during the war.

Two more newspapers..in Salt Lake City and in Indiana.. today printed stories from sailors who say they witnessed a hydrogen bomb explosion in the South Pacific last week. Similar reports have been printed in Los Angeles and Ohio. The Atomic Energy Commission says it will have no announcements about current experiments until they are completed.

In London today, Prime Minister Churchill's government defeated a Laborite no-confidence motion by a 34-vote margin.

We are talking on this Armistice night from Washington DC. #. Walking about these familiar and agreeably empty streets today, the mind went back twenty years... the last time we had a change of party administration. #. This city is one where only the buildings seem permanent... the people are just "spending some time here.." (except of course the Justices of the Supreme Court who are here for life). #. Twenty Years ago there was depression.. apple sellers.. and "brother could you spare a dime"... The National budget stood at about four and a half billion... now its about eighty billion... there was no draft... cars still had running boards and gear shift levers... we felt ourselves to be pretty safe here on our continental island... we'd lick the depression and the rest of the world wouldnt bother us.. #. and then little things began to happen... a piece of Railway line blown up at a place called Mukden, an ex house painter named Hitler took over in Germany... a little man with a metallic voice and childlike faith in the League of Nations stood up in Geneva and asked help for Ethiopia... The Germans went into the Rhineland... and Austria died without battle.... the allies of Chekoslovakia betrayed that nation... Hitler made a deal with Stalin and war was assured.. /. but we were neutral.. let them fight it out.. /. the German panzers cut tracks thru the rich flat land of Poland... and in the spring swung like a scythe to the channel ports and

Dunkirk entered the English language..and Britain stood alone...was finally saved by the guts of its civilians, and the man who put an engine and wings around eight machine guns, and called it a spitfire...Pearl Harbour on a bright December afternoon, and the waiting time was ended..the long build up.. oil slicks off the Florida coast..in this country it was complete security, minor hardships, vicarious excitement, and an industrial machine that began to pour out the hardware of war..soon we were paying for a geography lesson with blood...from Anzio to the Aleutians, Long Stop Hill to Layte, Oran and Okinawa.. Red beach, and red skies, over burning cities...Boys from Hanibal flying the hump..the battle was all..and finally it was won..and we relaxed, and we brought the boys home...we failed to realise that the conditions of peace are largely determined by whose armies are where, when the fighting stops..The forces of communism didnt stop..and when Prague fell once again to a dictator we woke up..The, Truman doctrine for Greece and Turkey...the Marshall Plan for western Europe...the draft at home...We began to aquire allies for the first time in our whole peacetime history...soon our comittments ran round the world..(an attack upon one would be an attack upon all)..a quiet revolution in our relations with other nations...we argued about it but the nation made up its collective mind..More than two years ago there came naked agression in Korea...and the free world...led by us..as it had to be..decided that this was worth fighting against.(.better a Dunkirk than a Munich)//.It was and is the greatest voluntary alliance of free nations, against what appeared to some as a minor agression...and it endures.//.No man can read the future, and the past twenty years have passed with such speed, that reporters and historian have been left gasping in the wake of events//..No nation in history has done what we have done in the short spece of twenty years...sometimes we have been pushed,sometimes we have lead,we have been woefully short of trained manpower ..we have made mistakes,and will make others, but we have moved, and we have grown,in these twenty years we have lived a life, and not an apology//,Our men are dying in Korea because as a nation we pledged our word, and when that word was called we didnt flinch,and we may have saved whats left of ~~civili~~ western civilisation, in the doing of it..//.No Nation in history has dealt more leniently with defeated enemies,or given more generously,perhaps too generous, to sorely wounded allies..//..They dont always behave as we would like tham to. Some of them dont like us and don't trust us as much as wed like them to.. but leadership is a lonely business, and it is ours.//.We have troops in Germany, an air striking force in Britain,another in North Africa...we nourish the military strength of Turkey,Jugoslavia,Indo China,as well as our allies in Western Europe...Our technical aid missions are in Lebanon and Liberia,in India and Iran...

We build a radar screen..and Atom bombs..fly faster than sound..develop guided missiles of fantastic range and accuracy..we are wastefull and we are impatient and at times hard to get along with..but we still believe there arent many things we cant do if we want to..Our history is short as national histories go..but I think when the historians finally finish weaving the pattern of the last twenty years into our whole national fabric,they will be inclined to say that the opening of the west,the building of the railroads, the taming of a continent,the war between the states,world war one,all of our previous history will be merely background for the bold and revolutionary pattern woven by our actions in the past twenty years.(I have lived thru it as a reporter and can scarecely credit it).. the record is without precedent, and the future is as uncertain as it has always been....

Walking around this capitol that looks so much like a stage set, and which houses so much of the worlds hopes and fears,I remembered that someone..I think it was James Barrie,counseled his fellow countrymen to "greet the unknown with a cheer"....sounds like excellent advice....

We were speaking of the incredible changes in this country... in the past 50 years...

Thomas Carlyle once said..."Today is not yesterday, we ourselves change.".How can our works and thoughts continue always the same.

Change ~~is~~ indeed is painfull yet ever needfull...And if memory have its force and worth, so also has hope.....

good night and good luck...

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied troops, on this armistice day, have now lost all the Korean gains they made in their limited offensive launched in the middle of October. Some 15-hundred Chinese Communists, attacking in the dark, after one of the heavier artillery barrages of the war, drove South Korean troops from Pinpoint Hill...for the 13th time in 29 days. But General Van Fleet says that in the October fighting we have cut in half the combat efficiency of two enemy armies. And the General announces that we are adding 55-thousand South Korean forces to the ROK army...(two new division and six regiments.)

Assistant Defense Secretary Anna Rosenberg, after a 5-day tour of Korea, says our troops are the best fed and best equipped in the world. She urges a continued build-up of South Korean troops...and continued rotation home of our own men. Mrs. Rosenberg feels that President-elect Eisenhower will profit by a trip to Korea. And the Chinese radio today called the General a "bloodthirsty warmonger" who can accomplish nothing by a visit to Korea... unless we first give up our desire not to force the return of enemy prisoners of war.

There were few in Korea...aside from statements by the top commanders... who took any notice of Armistice Day. But in this country, Air Secretary Finletter, in a speech in Birmingham, said we would immediately meet any Soviet attack on this country with a rain of atomic bombs on Russia. Here in Washington, Navy Secretary Kimball, laying a presidential wreath on the tomb of the unknown soldier, said the significance of Armistice Day increases "in direct proportion to the continuing heroic efforts by free men everywhere to resist and put down aggression and imperialism.

At the United Nations, British Foreign Secretary Eden made another plea to the Russians for peace in Korea...offered another plan to bring this about... and asked Andrei Vishinsky to take "one crucial step" towards settling the armistice. Mr. Eden also paid tribute to Trygve Lie, who has announced his resignation as Secretary General. Eden says he hopes Lie can be persuaded to reconsider his decision. Other diplomats at the United Nations and in Europe feel that this is a bad time for Mr. Lie to resign. He has more than a year of his term to serve and they believe agreement on a successor - among the Big Five - is not possible. Lie came under attack from the Moscow radio. The Russians say his resignation is "a revelation of his complete political bankruptcy". His support of U.N. action in Korea "gave rise to waves of indignation throughout the world." And Democratic Senator McCarran, chairman of a subcommittee that has been seeking American Communists on the U.N. payroll, says Lie resigned because of disclosures that have been made and will be made.... relating to Communist infiltration of the U.N. staff.

General Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson joined today in endorsing the 1952 Crusade for Freedom, both praised the work of Radio Free Europe and Radio Free Asia. Ghe General says they are fighting the Big Communist Lie with the Big Truth. The General is still in Augusta. His aides say he is beginning to "get unwound" from the strenuous campaign. They also indicate that his trip to Korea will be made with no public announcement of his departure.

Vice-President-elect Nixon and his family are vacationing in Miami Beach, Florida. Nixon told reporters he has resigned his Senate seat as of January first. He has not been asked to help General Eisenhower select a cabinet. A reporter asked if the Senator has a "vacation fund" for this trip. Nixon replied: "My vacations are always on my own. I pay for them."

Senator Taft, writes for the Cincinnati Times-Star, that he thinks there should be complete co-operation between Eisenhower and Congress in "developing a program which will have unanimous support from the Republican Party." He says the campaign was won on negative issues...that makes it more important for Republicans to develop affirmative policies.

Supreme Court Justice Jackson told House investigators today that when he was chief prosecutor at the Nuremberg war crime trials, he did not receive any information blaming Russia for the Katyn Forest Massacre. The committee which has blamed the Russians for murdering Polish officers now is trying to find out why Americans were not told of this conclusion during the war.

Two more newspapers..in Salt Lake City and in Indiana...today printed stories from sailors who say they witnessed a hydrogen bomb explosion in the South Pacific last week. Similar reports have been printed in Los Angeles and Ohio. The Atomic Energy Commission says it will have no announcements about current experiments until they are completed.

In London today, Prime Minister Churchill's government defeated a Laborite no-confidence motion by a 34-vote margin.

We are talking on this Armistice night from Washington, D.C. Walking about these familiar and agreeably empty streets today, the mind went back twenty years, the last time we had a change of party administration. This city is one where only the buildings seem permanent...the people are just "spending some time here", except of course, the Justices of the Supreme Court who are here for life. Twenty years ago there was depression...apple sellers...and "brother could you spare a dime"..The National budget stood at about four and a half billion, now its about eighty billion. There was no draft. Cars still had running boards and gear shift levers. We felt ourselves to be pretty safe here on our continental island. We'd lick the depression and the rest of the world wouldn't bother us. And then little things began to happen: A piece of railway line blown up at a place called Mukden, an ex house painter named Hitler took over in Germany. A little man with a metallic voice and childlike faith in the League of Nations stood up in Geneva and asked help for Ethiopia. The Germans went into the Rhineland, and Austria died without battle. The allies of Czechoslavakia betrayed that nation. Hitler made a deal with Stalin and war was assured. But we were beutral. Let them fight it out. The German panzers cut tracks through the rich flat land of Poland, and in the spring swung like a scythe to the channel ports and Kunkirk entered the English language; and Britain stood alone...was finally saved by the guts of its civilians and the man who put an engine and wings around eight machine guns and called it a spitfire. Pearl Harbor on a bright December afternoon, and the waiting time was ended. The long build up...oil slicks off the Florida coast...in this country it was complete security, minor hardships, vicarious excitement, and an industrial machine that began to pour out the hardware of war. Soon we were paying for a geography lesson with blood, from Anzio to the Aleutians, Long Stop Hill to Layte Oran and Okinawa, red beach and red skies over burning cities, boys from Hanibal flying the hump...the battle was all..and finally it was won.. and we relaxed and we brought the boys home. We failed to realize that the conditions of peace are largely determined by whose armies are where when the fighting stops. The forces of communism didn't stop, and when Prague fell once again to a dictator we woke up. The Truman Doctrine for Greece and Turkey, and the Marshall Plan for Western Europe...the draft at home. We began to acquire allies for the first time in our whole peacetime history. Soon our committments ran round the world. An attack upon one would be an attack upon all. A quiet revolution in our relations with other nations...we argued about it but the nation made up its collective mind. More than two years ago there came naked agression in Korea, and the free world, led by us, as it had to be, decided that this was worth fighting against (better a Dunkirk than a Munich). It was and is the greatest voluntary alliance of free nations against what appeared to some as a minor agression, and it endures. No man can read the future, and the past twenty years have passed with such speed that reporters and historians have been left gasping in the wake of events. No nation in history has done what we have done in the short space of twenty years..sometimes we have been pushed, sometimes we have led. We have been woefully short of trained manpower; we have made mistakes, and will make others, but we have moved and we have grown;in these twenty years we have lived a life and not an apology. Our men are dying in Korea because as a nation we pledged our word, and when that word was called we didn't flinch; and we may have saved what's left of western divilization in the doing of it. No nation in history has dealt more leniently with defeated enemies, or given more generously, perhaps too generously to sorely wounded allies. They don't always behave as we would like them to; some of them don't like us and don't trust us as much as we'd like them to, but leadership is a lonely business, and it is ours. We have troops in Germany, an air striking force in Britain, another in North Africa. We nourish the military strength of Turkey, Yugoslavia, Indo-China, as well as our allies in Western Eruope. Our technical aid missions are in Lebanon and Liberia, in India and Iran. We build a radar screen, and atom bombs, fly faster than sound, develop guided missiles of fantastic range and accuracy. We are wastefull and we are impatient and at times hard to get along with, but we still believe there aren't many things we can't do if we want to. Our history is short as national histories go, but I think when the historians finally finish weaving the pattern of the last twenty years into our whole national fabric, they will be inclined to say that the opening of the west, the building of the railroads, the taming of a continent, the war between the states, World War One, all of our previous history will be merely background for the bold and revolutionary pattern woven by our actions in the past twenty years. (I have lived through it as a reporter and can scarcely credit it.) The record is without precedent, and the future is as uncertain as it has always been.

Walking around this capitol that looks so much like a stage set, and which houses so much of the worlds hopes and fears, I remembered that someone, I think it was James Barrie, counseled his fellow countrymen to "greet the unknown with a cheer", sounds like excellent advice.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of the incredible changes in this country in the past twenty years. Thomas Carlyle once said, "Today is not yesterday, we ourselves change. How can our works and thoughts continue always the same. Change indeed is painful, yet ever needful, and if memory have its force and worth, so also has hope..."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wed. Nov. 12, 1952

This is the news:

The Pentagon says we suffered 1,318 casualties in Korea last week. That's the highest weekly casualty figure in one year. We have now suffered a total of almost 126-thousand casualties: 22-thousand deaths.. nine thousand three hundred missing..the rest wounded. On the battlefields today, South Korean troops forced Chinese Communists off three peaks..then stopped two enemy night-time counter-attacks.

The Chinese radio says that if the United Nations support the United States policy of not forcing prisoners of war to return to their homelands, it could mean that in some future war captured civilians could be prevented from returning to their homelands by armed force.

And at the U.N., the South Koreans distributed a booklet condemning the whole idea of a truce in Korea. The South Koreans call the negotiations " disheartening and degrading"..they want help in building up a 2-million man ROK army.. they insist that all of their country be united: by force if necessary.

The U.N's steering committee met for two minutes today and then, without discussion, decided to send to the General Assembly the resignation of Tryvie Lie, the secretary-General. Some observers are INTERPRETING [redacted] this move as an acceptance of Mr. Lie's resignation. Lie himself told a Norwegian correspondent, that the main reason for his resignation, is the fact that the Russians have boycotted him; he's also displeased because the other nations did nothing to protect him after the [redacted] boycott began. And he has had "the evil feeling" that this boycott may have [redacted] spoiled the possibility of solving the Korean war.

Senator Mc Carran said today that if the United Nations does not clean its house of "communist and subversive activity" it may be necessary to use "drastic methods" to achieve this end.

South Africa today called on the U.N. to declare itself incompetent to investigate complaints over the treatment of non-whites in South Africa. This is unlikely..because a majority of the nations have voted to place the question on the agenda of the Assembly.

The White House announced today that the President and President-elect Eisenhower will meet here in Washington next Tuesday, AT 2 P.M. This was settled in telephone conversations between Augusta and Washington. The General's staff also announces that he will meet on [redacted] Friday with Governor Dewey, who will stop off for four or five hours on his way to a vacation in Miami. We're told that the two men will discuss the General's proposed trip to Korea and "other policy matters".. not defined./Next week, the General will be in New York for additional conferences with Republican leaders./Today, the general's fiscal adviser, Joseph Dodge, the Detroit banker, came to Washington and conferred with Budget Director Lawson./Mr. Dodge made it clear that he's just looking and listening.. he will not try to influence the size or nature of the budget.. he is not approving or disapproving any part of it. He's just gathering facts to report to General Eisenhower.

The General's campaign manager, Governor Adams, says that the president-elect is going to run a bi-partisan administration. In an interview reported in Newsweek, Governor Adams says Eisenhower wants men of ability and common sense in his administration. These qualities are not restricted to Republicans. If he finds a Democrat that possesses them, the Democrat will be invited to join the government. Adams says Eisenhower does not feel obliged to appoint "only" Republicans. The Governor also takes issues with Senator Taft's statement that Taft could have won the election if he were the nominee. Adams has doubts that any Republican but Eisenhower could have won.

Senator Morse, who switched from Eisenhower to Governor Stevenson in the campaign, writes in the New Republic that the General's campaign promises will boomerranng. He says the voters are bound to realize that they cannot have the promised lower taxes and budget cuts and still have adequate national security. Morse says reactionaries have taken over the Republican party.. and reactionaries in the Democratic party have "shackled" liberals forces there.

Here in Washington today, House investigators produced ducuments showing that the late President Roosevelt tried, and failed, to prevent the Russians from breaking-off diplomatic relations with the Polish government in exile in 1943. The Russians decided to act after the Poles accused them of murdering an estimated 15-thousand Polish officers. Roosevelt sent Stalin a note saying it was a "mistake" for the Poles to ask the International Red Cross for an investigation of what has become known at the Katyn Massacre

Another House committee heard Abe Burrows, broadway and hollywood gag writer, testify that he never belonged to the Communist party, although he associated with Communists.. went to meetings for their fronts and entertained for their causes.

Treasury Secretary Snyder said today that the reorganization of the Internal Revenue Bureau has "helped eliminate the temptations to which some employes have succumbed in the past."

In Pittsburgh, the vice presidents of the C.I.O. decided today to delay their convention for two weeks...from this Monday to Monday, December first. They also agreed to meet in Atlantic City instead of in Los Angeles as planned before the death of Philip Murray, their president.

Two more letters were printed in newspapers today from sailors on duty in the South Pacific who say they witnessed the explosion of a hydrogen bomb on November first. There is still no comment from the Atomic Energy Commission. Senator Bricker, a member of the congressional atomic energy committee , says he is going to investigate the publication of these letters.. to determine if there has been any "breach of security."

In Thailand, police say they have arrested 200 persons who are accused of plotting a Communist revolution. Among those arrested are members of the armed forces..the national assembly and, possibly, a former premier.

Today General of the Army Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, broke a long silence..(.he didnt make any speeches during the campaign)/.Over recent years his judgement of the world situation has been as sound as any other mans..in or out of uniform...We recorded for you certain portions of General Bradleys speech to the Association of land grant colleges and Universities....

RUNS 3 II

RETURN CUE:

"IN THE NEXT FEW YEARS."

folo Braldye

That was a recording of parts of a speech General Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made here in Washington today.

In Germany, former Lieutenant General Von Mantueffel, one of Hitler's tank warfare experts, said today that his election to ~~the~~ a city council ~~[illegible]~~s.. proves that " professional soldiers are no longer regarded as second class citizens in Germany." He says he believes that former officers in the German forces, who have "rebuilt their lives on a civilian basis" deserve the trust of the people. He called on other Nazi professional soldiers not to follow "a hot headed radical" to protect their own interests.

General Bradley said..already we have stopped jumping nervously at every whisper of anger from behind the Iron Curtain..Now if our security programs do not fall victim to the insincere inducements of communist propaganda, Americans and their allies may live in a brighter world...His text might have been taken from the New Testament...Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall...

Good Night and Good Luck...

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, November 12, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Today, General of the Army, Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff, broke a long silence. He didn't make any speeches during the political campaign. Over recent years his judgment of the world situation has been as sound as any other man's, in or out of uniform. We recorded for you certain portions of General Bradley's speech to the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities.

BRADLEY: When the people of this nation elect their President and the members of their Congress, they are, in a sense, entrusting to them the power which could spell peace or war, freedom or tyranny, democracy or dictatorship, for the combined authority of the President and the Congress is almost supreme. With that authority goes the complete responsibility for the future. That is why I believe that the military and our Government must always keep a subordinate role to the civilian authority and must influence that civilian authority only as helpful advisors. And I can say from personal knowledge and forty years of experience that we have nothing to fear from military men themselves. Their role in our national life, even in times of war and international stress, is far from dominant. There is one frontier, the smallest one in the world, that has become the most important one of all. It is a line across Korea, a little over one hundred miles long. It is on this short line that we have finally faced Communist aggression with military power in open conflict. Our ability to contain the advance of Communist frontiers will probably succeed or fail in large measure on this small peninsula.

We had to draw the line against Communist aggression, and we did, in June 1950. It was hailed throughout the free world as a most courageous decision and one that was properly timed. If we had had the necessary military power at that time, and in the right place, Korea may never have occurred and certainly would have been short-lived as a crisis. Our weakness only invited attack. I believe that that decision, as much as it has cost us, saved southeast Asia from being overrun in 1950 and 1951. I also believe that our brave and courageous resistance gave a new breath of life and a new meaning to the authority of the United Nations. I believe that our action in Korea may have prevented, or at least forestalled for some time, the Soviet Union's step-by-step aggression leading to World War 111. Although no man can gaze into the crystal ball and tell us what goes on in the minds of the Kremlin's leaders, it is obvious that our firm stand against aggression and our determined rebuilding of strength in Europe has forced a change in their technique. Now, instead of threatening us, they are talking peace and playing the international innocent in the form of the United Nations. I think our NATO effort has brought this about and I believe their peace talk is the siren song we must suspect until they prove their sincerity, If they hope to disrupt our unity by enticements and soft words when threats and actions of bad faith have failed to shake us. They're trying to play upon our desire for peace to divide us, to disarm us, and then at will, if it behooves their evil designs, to destroy us. In strictly military terms, this is no time to withdraw or to slow down. In my opinion, if allied unity prevails we are within reach of our goal of relative security for the free world in the next few years.

MURROW: That was a recording of parts of a speech General Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff, made here in Washington today.

Ed. trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, November 12, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... Today, General of the Army, Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff, broke a long silence. He didn't make any speeches during the political campaign. Over recent years his judgment of the world situation has been as sound as any other man's, in or out of uniform. We recorded for you certain portions of General Bradley's speech to the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities.

BRADLEY: When the people of this nation elect their President and the members of their Congress, they are, in a sense, entrusting to them the power which could spell peace or war, freedom or tyranny, democracy or dictatorship, for the combined authority of the President and the Congress is almost supreme. With that authority goes the complete responsibility for the future. That is why I believe that the military and our Government must always keep a subordinate role to the civilian authority and must influence that civilian authority only as helpful advisors. And I can say from personal knowledge and forty years of experience that we have nothing to fear from military men themselves. Their role in our national life, even in times of war and international stress, is far from dominant. There is one frontier, the smallest one in the world, that has become the most important one of all. It is a line across Korea, a little over one hundred miles long. It is on this short line that we have finally faced Communist aggression with military power in open conflict. Our ability to contain the advance of Communist frontiers will probably succeed or fail in large measure on this small peninsula.

We had to draw the line against Communist aggression, and we did, in June 1950. It was hailed throughout the free world as a most courageous decision and one that was properly timed. If we had had the necessary military power at that time, and in the right place, Korea may never have occurred and certainly would have been short-lived as a crisis. Our weakness only invited attack. I believe that that decision, as much as it has cost us, saved southeast Asia from being overrun in 1950 and 1951. I also believe that our brave and courageous resistance gave a new breath of life and a new meaning to the authority of the United Nations. I believe that our action in Korea may have prevented, or at least forestalled for some time, the Soviet Union's step-by-step aggression leading to World War 111. Although no man can gaze into the crystal ball and tell us what goes on in the minds of the Kremlin's leaders, it is obvious that our firm stand against aggression and our determined rebuilding of strength in Europe has forced a change in their technique. Now, instead of threatening us, they are talking peace and playing the international innocent in the form of the United Nations. (forum-?) I think our NATO effort has brought this about and I believe their peace talk is the siren song we must suspect until they prove their sincerity, if they hope to disrupt our unity by enticements and soft words when threats and actions of bad faith have failed to shake us. They're trying to play upon our desire for peace to divide us, to disarm us, and then at will, if it behooves their evil designs, to destroy us. In strictly military terms, this is no time to withdraw or to slow down. In my opinion, if allied unity prevails we are within reach of our goal of relative security for the free world in the next few years.

MURROW: That was a recording of parts of a speech General Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff, made here in Washington today.

Ed. trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Pentagon says we suffered 1,318 casualties in Korea last week. That's the highest weekly casualty figure in one year. We have now suffered a total of almost 126-thousand casualties: 22-thousand deaths, nine thousand three hundred missing, the rest wounded. On the battlefields today, South Korean troops forced Chinese Communists off three peaks, then stopped two enemy nighttime counterattacks.

The Chinese radio says that if the United Nations support the United States policy of not forcing prisoners of war to return to their homelands, it could mean that in some future war captured civilians could be prevented from returning to their homelands by armed force.

At the U.N., the South Koreans distributed a booklet condemning the whole idea of a truce in Korea. The South Koreans call the negotiations "disheartening and degrading"; they want help in building up a 2-million man ROK army, they insist that all of their country be united: by force if necessary.

The U.N.'s steering committee met for two minutes today and then, without discussion, decided to send to the General Assembly the resignation of Trygve Lie, the Secretary-General. Some observers are interpreting this move as an acceptance of Mr. Lie's resignation. Lie himself told a Norwegian correspondent that the main reason for his resignation is the fact that the Russians have boycotted him; he's also displeased because the other nations did nothing to protect him after the boycott began. And he has had "the evil feeling" that this boycott may have spoiled the possibility of solving the Korean war.

Senator McCarran said today that if the United Nations does not clean its house of "Communist and subversive activity" it may be necessary to use "drastic methods" to achieve this end.

South Africa today called on the U.N. to declare itself incompetent to investigate complaints over the treatment of non-whites in South Africa. This is unlikely, because a majority of the nations have voted to place the question on the agenda of the Assembly.

The White House announced today that the President and President-elect Eisenhower will meet here in Washington next Tuesday, at 2:00 PM. This was settled in telephone conversations between Augusta and Washington. The General's staff also announces that he will meet on Friday with Governor Dewey, who will stop off for four or five hours on his way to a vacation in Miami. We're told that the two men will discuss the General's proposed trip to Korea and "other policy matters" not defined. Next week, the General will be in New York for additional conferences with Republican leaders. Today, the general's fiscal adviser, Joseph Dodge, the Detroit banker, came to Washington and conferred with Budget Director Lawson. Mr. Dodge made it clear that he's just looking and listening; he will not try to influence the size or nature of the budget. He is not approving or disapproving any part of it. He's just gathering facts to report to General Eisenhower.

The General's campaign manager, Governor Adams, says that the president-elect is going to run a bi-partisan administration. In an interview reported in Newsweek, Governor Adams says Eisenhower wants men of ability and common sense in his administration. These qualities are not restricted to Republicans. If he finds a Democrat that possesses them, the Democrat will be invited to join the government. Adams says Eisenhower does not feel obliged to appoint "only" Republicans. The Governor also takes issues with Senator Taft's statement that Taft could have won the election if he were the nominee. Adams has doubts that any Republican but Eisenhower could have won.

Senator Morse, who switched from Eisenhower to Governor Stevenson in the campaign, writes in the New Republic that the General's campaign promises will boomerrang. He says the voters are bound to realize that they cannot have the promised lower taxes and budget cuts and still have adequate national security. Morse says reactionaries have taken over the Republican party, and reactionaries in the Democratic party have "shackled" liberals forces there.

Here in Washington today, House investigators produced documents showing that the late President Roosevelt tried, and failed, to prevent the Russians from breaking off diplomatic relations with the Polish government in exile in 1943. The Russians decided to act after the Poles accused them of murdering an estimated 15-thousand Polish officers. Roosevelt sent Stalin a note saying it was a "mistake" for the Poles to ask the International Red Cross for an investigation of what has become known as the Katyn Massacre.

Another House committee heard Abe Burrows, broadway and Hollywood gag writer, testify that he never belonged to the Communist party although he associated with Communists, went to meetings for their fronts and entertained for their causes.

Treasury Secretary Snyder said today that the reorganization of the Internal Revenue Bureau has "helped eliminate the temptations to which some employees have succumbed in the past."

In Pittsburgh, the vice presidents of the C.I.O. decided today to delay their convention for two weeks: from this Monday to Monday, December 1st. They also agreed to meet in Atlantic City instead of in Los Angeles as planned before the death of Philip Murray, their president.

Two more letters were printed in newspapers today from sailors on duty in the South Pacific who say they sitnessed the explosion of a hydrogen bomb on November 1st. There is still no comment from the Atomic Energy Commission. Senator Bricker, a member of the Congressional Atomic Energy Committee, says he is going to investigate the publication of these letters to determine if there has been any "breach of security."

In Thailand, police say they have arrested 200 persons who are accused of plotting a Communist revolution. Among those arrested are members of the armed forces, the national assembly and possibly, a former premier.

Today General of the Army Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, broke a long silence (he didn't make any speeches during the campaign.) Over recent years his judgment of the world situation has been as sound as any other man's, in or out of uniform. We recorded for you certain portions of General Bradley's speech to the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities.

BRADLEY: When the people of this nation elect their President and the members of their Congress, they are, in a sense, entrusting to them the power which could spell peace or war, freedom or tyranny, democracy or dictatorship, for the combined authority of the President and the Congress is almost supreme. With that authority goes the complete responsibility for the future. That is why I believe that the military and our Government must always keep a subordinate role to the civilian authority and must influence that civilian authority only as helpful advisors. And I can say from personal knowledge and forty years of experience that we have nothing to fear from military men themselves. Their role in our national life, even in times of war and international stress, is far from dominant. There is one frontier, the smallest one in the world, that has become the most important one of all. It is a line across Korea, a little over one hundred miles long. It is on this short line that we have finally faced Communist aggression with military power in open conflict. Our ability to contain the advance of Communist frontiers will probably succeed or fail in large measure on this small peninsula.

We had to draw the line against Communist aggression, and we did, in June 1950. It was hailed throughout the free world as a most courageous decision and one that was properly timed. If we had had the necessary military power at that time, and in the right place, Korea may never have occurred and certainly would have been short-lived as a crisis. Our weakness only invited attack. I believe that that decision, as much as it has cost us, saved southeast Asia from being overrun in 1950 and 1951. I also believe that our brave and courageous resistance gave a new breath of life and a new meaning to the authority of the United Nations. I believe that our action in Korea may have prevented, or at least forestalled for some time, the Soviet Union's step-by-step aggression leading to World War III. Although no man can gaze into the crystal ball and tell us what goes on in the minds of the Kremlin's leaders, it is obvious that our firm stand against aggression and our determined rebuilding of strength in Europe has forced a change in their technique. Now, instead of threatening us, they are talking peace andplaying the international innocent in the forum of the United Nations. I think our NATO effort has brought this about and I believe their peace talk is the siren song we must suspect until they prove their sincerity, if they hope to disrupt our unity by enticements and soft words when threats and actions of bad faith have failed to shake us. They're trying to play upon our desire for peace to divide us, to disarm us, and then at will, if it behooves their evil designs, to destroy us. In strictly military terms, this is no time to withdraw or to slow down. In my opinion, if allied unity prevails we are within reach of our goal of relative security for the free world in the next few years.

MURROW: That was a recording of parts of a speech General Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs-of-Staff, made here in Washington today.

In Germany, former Lieutenant General Von Mantueffel, one of Hitler's tank warfare experts, said today that his election to a city council proves that "professional soldiers are no longer regarded as second class citizens in Germany." He says he believes that former officers in the German forces, who have "rebuilt their lives on a civilian basis" deserve the trust of the people. He called on other Nazi professional soldiers not to follow "a hot headed radical" to protect their own interests.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

FURROW: General Bradley said, "Already we have stopped jumping nervously at every whisper of anger from behind the Iron Curtain. Now if our security programs do not fall victim to the insincere inducements of communist propaganda, Americans and their allies may live in a brighter world". His text might have been taken from the New Testament: "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed, lest he fall."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday Mar. 13 1952

This is the news:

Abraham Feller, the chief counsel of the United Nations, jumped to his death today from his twelfth story apartment near Central Park. He was 47. Mrs. Feller, who unsuccessfully tried to prevent her husband's action, says he suffered a nervous breakdown two weeks ago... he felt the pressure of his work was enormous. She said the recent resignation of Secretary-General Trygvie Lie, whom Mr. Feller served as legal aide, was a "contributing factor" to his illness. Mr. Lie said of [redacted] HIS aide: [redacted] MR. FELLER worked very hard, under my direction, to uphold due process of law and justice, in investigations by a federal grand jury, and the Mc Carran committee, against indiscriminate smears and exaggerated charges. (The jury, and the committee, are seeking to expose American Communists on the U.N. staff.) Mr. Lie said Mr. Feller has been under a prolonged and serious strain. He says both the jury, and the Senate committee informed him, there was not the slightest intention to question Mr. Feller, about his personal activities.. his appearances before representatives of both groups was strictly consultative.. as Mr. Lie's aide. [redacted] Senator Mc Carran says: "If Feller's conscience was clear, he had no reason to suffer from what he expected of our committee." Mr. Feller, [redacted] is survived by a 17-year-old daughter and Mrs. Feller.

Twenty-one United Nations sponsors of the American plan for a Korean truce delegation decided today to stand pat.. to ask the Communists to accept a truce based on the voluntary return of war prisoners.

Earlier, the Chinese Nationalist foreign minister charged that "Stalin and his stooges" don't really want a truce..unless it will solidify and strengthen the ranks of world communism.

In Korea, South Korean troops reported that the Chinese had used some sort of gas in the battle for Sniper Ridge. American authorities immediately investigated and reported that the fumes actually came from old gunpowder. Early today, the Chinese recaptured the crest of Sniper Ridge.. for the 14th time..but hours later the South Koreans came back to recapture it.

Eighteen members of the U.N. today called for a Commission to look into the racial conflict in South Africa. Pakistan called it a "stinking mess"... charged that South Africa's racial laws were designed to keep native and colored persons "at the lowest level of civilization." South Africa has insisted that this is her own internal affair. Today, the highest legal court in South Africa..the appeals court..ruled that the Parliament acted unconstitutionally, when it voted recently to set itself up as a special court, higher than any other in the land. The Parliement, then sat as a High Court and approved a law that would cut the voting rights of 50-thousand persons of mixed blood, who hold the balance of power in one area..Cape Province./Premier Malan now may either accept the Appeals court decision, or ask his High Court of Parliament to over-rule it.

In Washington, two Republicans..Representative Martin, who may be the next speaker of the House, and Senator Bridges who could be the Republican FLOOR leader.. agreed today that the new Congress will cut taxes./Martin seems to feel it could be done NEXT YEAR, before the budget is balanced; Bridges that it should be done only after the budget is balanced. Martin spoke of a reduction in the sales taxes, and a cut in the excess profits tax./Senator Bridges says if the President sends Congress an 85-billion dollar budget he thinks that could be trimmed by approximately 10-billions.

Representative Martin also suggested that President-elect Eisenhower should seek General MacArthur's advice on Asiatic problems.

InAugusta, James Hagerty, Eisenhower's press secretary, said there is "no comment" on this Martin suggestion. Both the Representative and Senator Taft expect to confer with the General here in New York on Wednesday. The General's present plan is to leave Augusta, Georgia, Tuesday morning..to fly to Washington for his conference with Mr. Truman.

In Washington today, Actress Karen Morley refused to tell House investigators whether she is a Communist.

Another investigating committee heard George H. Earle, former minister to Bulgaria, [redacted] testify that the late President Roosevelt told him in May of 1944 that he expected the Soviet Union to "fly apart into a hundred pieces" after World War Two.

Attorney General Mc Granery has asked the F.B.I. to try to find out how a Justice Department telegram was sent to Chicago without Mc Granery's knowledge. The telegram instructed the United States district attorney to drop proceedings against Gangster Paul (the waiter) Ricca. The government has been trying to get Ricca to complete a 10-year setence on an extortion conviction.

In Pittsburgh, ten thousand persons attended the funeral of Phillip Murray, the president of the C.I.O., who died in San Fransisco on Sunday.

And an examiner for the Federal Communications Commission has approved a proposed merger of the American Broadcasting Company, and United Paramount Theaters. Both groups say the merger would provide enough capital for A.B.C. to compete on better terms with other radio and television networks.

Edward R. Murrow: November 13, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Defense Secretary Lovett today answered some criticism of the Defense Department, that had come from the Senate Preparedness Sub-Committee, headed by Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas. / The Secretary is against the appointment of a "Production Czar" to direct our whole defense build-up; said such a man is "neither required nor recommended;" that such a move would be "inconsistent with our free enterprise system, and unpalatable to industry and labor." / Mr. Lovett defended the Administration's gradual defense build-up, (the policy that is sometimes called guns and butter,) saying that all-out mobilization now might play into Russian hands, by wrecking our economy beyond repair. On the subject of aircraft Mr. Lovett said we could not make a greater military mistake than to "freeze" the designs of aircraft at this time.

Defense Secretary Lovett said that Russia will reach the peak of her military power in 1954. The next two years will be very dangerous, but not necessarily the period of greatest peril. The Defense Department acts on the assumption that the Russians might choose to make war earlier than 1954. (That date is a familiar one.) / It has been used by politicians and by military spokesmen for years. There, they say is the peak danger point.

The period some time after mid 1953, all of 1954 and the first part of '55. That's the general period in which Russia's capabilities, compared to our own, should reach their highest level.

So far as I know, only one man in a responsible position has ever ventured to explain the reasoning behind the choice of that date, 1954. That was done by General of the Army Omar Bradley before the Senate Appropriations Committee on May 5th of this year. The General's testimony was not widely reported at the time, and since Secretary Lovett today repeated that date, 1954, it might be useful to go back and review the reasons that led Bradley, and presumably Lovett to choose that date as the one of greatest danger. General Bradley's estimate last May was a sombre military document. He said: "If we are allowed any time for preparedness after the next two or three years, I think we will be lucky." He reasoned that Russian atomic progress, as a result of what they learned from the Germans and from the British traitor Klaus Fuchs, should be faster than our own progress during our first five-year period. The Russians produced enormous quantities of weapons in 1946 and ~~XXX~~ '47, and then they cut back their military production. If this huge backlog of guns, armor and aircraft is to be used before the weapons become obsolete, the Russians will have to use them in '54 and '55.

According to our best intelligence the Russians have made great progress in rebuilding and increasing their industrial capacity. They have re-located many key industries behind the Urals. They have increased their mobility and fire power, and their production of jet aircraft.

General Bradley, in May, said that by 1954 Russian stockpiles, reserves and industrial capacity will be in a condition where the Russians might risk war under conditions most favorable to themselves. Another reason that Bradley chose the date 1954 as a critical one was his belief that if the plans for the defense of Western Europe are even partially successful, the Russian chance of overrunning Western Europe will begin to decrease after 1954. Also after that date our production of new weapons, the ability of Western Europe to help defend itself, will narrow the gap that now exists between Russian capabilities and those of the free world.

General Bradley's testimony last May was without precedent in our peacetime history. It was based upon what he repeatedly called "our best Intelligence", which meant the sum total of every scrap of information we had been able to collect regarding Russian production, training, intentions and military capabilities. That information was set down opposite our own plans, production and capabilities. The lines crossed at 1954. After that our relative strength increases, while the Russians' decreases.

Today Defense Secretary Lovett again quoted that date, 1954. (So apparently the estimate hasn't changed.)

There is, of course, waste in our Military Establishment. There is shocking duplication in our Intelligence Service. Our aircraft, particularly the fighters, are weighted down with unessential gadgets. The amount of paper work required, the personnel to do it, has reached fantastic figures. # The new men of the Eisenhower Administration will have opportunity to effect economies. But it can be hoped, that before the new Administration, and the new Congress, start doing any major surgery on the appropriation for the Defense Department, they will take another long look at General Bradley's testimony of last May. (Our position does not appear to have improved any since then.)

The prospect for the immediate future can be summed up simply: security involves sacrifice. Unfortunately, there are forces in international diplomacy over which we have little control. So, as the Roman Horace said: "What can not be removed becomes lighter thru patience." Marie Curie put it another way: "Life is not easy for any of us. But what of that ? We must have perseverance, and above all, confidence in ourselves."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Abraham Feller, the chief counsel of the United Nations, jumped to his death today from his twelfth story apartment near Central Park. He was 47. Mrs. Feller, who unsuccessfully tried to prevent her husband's action, says he suffered a nervous breakdown two weeks ago...he felt the pressure of his work was enormous. She said the recent resignation of Secretary-General Trygve Lie, whom Mr. Feller served as legal aide, was a "contributing factor" to his illness. Mr. Lie said of his aide: Mr. Feller worked very hard, under my direction, to uphold due process of law and justice in investigations by a federal grand jury and the McCarran committee against indiscriminate smears and exaggerated charges. The jury and the committee, are seeking to expose American Communists on the U.N. staff. Mr. Lie said Mr. Feller has been under a prolonged and serious strain. He says both the jury and the Senate committee informed him there was not the slightest intention to question Mr. Feller about his personal activities. His appearances before representatives of both groups was strictly consultative as Mr. Lie's aide. Senator McCarran says: "If Fellers conscience was clear he had no reason to suffer from what he expected of our committee." Mr. Feller, is survived by a 17-year-old daughter and Mrs. Feller.

Twenty-one United Nation sponsors of the American plan for a Korean truce delegation decided today to stand pat..to ask the Communists to accept a truce based on the voluntary return of war prisoners.

Earlier, the Chinese Nationalist foreign minister charged that "Stalin and his stooges" don't really want a truce, unless it will solidify and strengthen the ranks of world communism.

In Korea, South Korean troops reported that the Chinese had used some sort of gas in the battle for Sniper Ridge. American authorities immediately investigated and reported that the fumes actually came from old gunpowder. Early today, the Chinese recaptured the crest of Sniper Ridge, for the 14th time, but hours later the South Koreans came back to recapture it.

Eighteen members of the U.N. today called for a commission to look into the racial conflict in South Africa. Pakistan called it a "stinking mess"... charged that South Africa's racial laws were designed to keep native and colored persons "at the lowest level of civilization." South Africa has insisted that this is her own internal affair. Today, the highest legal court in South Africa, the appeals court, ruled that the Parliament acted unconstitutionally when it voted recently to set itself up as a special court higher than any other in the land. The Parliament, then sat as a High Court and approved a law that would cut the voting rights of 50-thousand persons of mixed blood who hold the balance of power in one area, Cape Province. Premier Malan now may either accept the Appeals court decision or ask his High Court of Parliament to over-rule it.

In Washington, Two Republicans, Representative Martin, who may be the next speaker of the House and Senator Bridges who could be the Republican floor leader, agreed today that the new Congress will cut taxes. Martin seems to feel it could be done next year before the budget is balanced; Bridges said it should be done only after the budget is balanced. Martin spoke of a reduction in the sales taxes and a cut in the excess profits tax. Senator Bridges says if the President sends Congress an 85-billion dollar budget he thinks that could be trimmed by approximately 10-billions.

Representative Martin also suggested that President-elect Eisenhower should seek General MacArthur's advice on Asiatic problems.

In Augusta, James Hagerty, Eisenhower's press secretary, said there is "no comment" on this Martin suggestion. Both the Representative and Senator Taft expect to confer with the General here in New York on Wednesday. The General's present plan is to leave Augusta, Georgia, Tuesday morning to fly to Washington for his conference with Mr. Truman.

In Washington today, Actress Karen Morley refused to tell House investigators whether she is a Communist.

Another investigating committee heard George H. Earle, former minister to Bulgaria, testify that the late President Roosevelt told him in May of 1944 that he expected the Soviet Union to "fly apart into a hundred pieces" after World War Two.

Attorney General McGranery has asked the F.B.I. to try to find out how a Justice Department telegram was sent to Chicago without McGranery's knowledge. The telegram instructed the United States district attorney to drop proceedings against Gangster Paul (the waiter) Ricca. The government has been trying to get Ricca to complete a 10-year sentence on an extortion conviction.

In Pittsburgh, ten thousand persons attended the funeral of Phillip Murray, the president of the C.I.O., who died in San Francisco on Sunday.

And an examiner for the Federal Communications Commission has approved a proposed merger of the American Broadcasting Company and United Paramount Theaters. Both groups say the merger would provide enough capital for A.B.C. to compete on better terms with other radio and television networks.

Defense Secretary Lovett today answered some criticism of the Defense Department that had come from the Senate Preparedness Sub-Committee headed by Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas. The Secretary is against the appointment of a "Production Czar" to direct our whole defense build-upl said such a man is "neither required nor recommended;" that such a move would be "inconsistent with our free enterprise system, and unpalatable to industry and labor." Mr. Lovett defended the Administration's gradual defense build-up, the policy that is sometimes called guns and butter, saying that all-out mobilization now might play into Russian hands by wrecking our economy beyond repair. On the subject of aircraft Mr. Lovett said we could not make a greater military mistake than to "freeze" the designs of aircraft at this time.

Defense Secretary Lovett said that Russia will reach the peak of her military power in 1954. The next two years will be very dangerous, but not necessarily the period of greatest peril. The Defense Department acts on the assumption that the Russians might choose to make war earlier than 1954. That date is a familiar one. It has been used by politicians and by military spokesmen for years. There, they say is the peak danger point. The period some time after mid 1953, all of 1954 and the first part of 1955. That's the general period in which Russia's capabilities, compared to our own, should reach their highest level.

So far as I know, only one man in a responsible position has ever ventured to explain the reasoning behind the choice of that date, 1954. That was done by General of the Army Omar Bradley before the Senate Appropriations Committee on May 5th of this year. The General's testimony was not widely reported at the time, and since Secretary Lovett today repeated that date, 1954, it might be useful to go back and review the reasons that led Bradley, and presumably Lovett to choose that date as the one of greatest danger. General Bradley's estimate last May was a sombre military document. He said: "If we are allowed any time for preparedness after the next two or three years, I think we will be lucky." He reasoned that Russian atomic progress, as a result of what they learned from the Germans and from the British traitor Klaus Fuchs, should be faster than our own progress during our first five-year period. The Russians produced enormous quantities of weapons in 1946 and 1947, and then they cut back their military production. If this huge backlog of guns, armor and aircraft is to be used before the weapons become obsolete, the Russians will have to use them in '54 and '55.

According to our best intelligence the Russians have made great progress in rebuilding and increasing their industrial capacity. They have relocated many key industries behind the Urals. They have increased their mobility and fire power, and their production of jet aircraft.

General Bradley, in May, said that by 1954 Russian stockpiles, reserves and industrial capacity will be in a condition where the Russians might risk war under conditions most favorable to themselves. Another reason that Bradley chose the date 1954 as a critical one was his belief that if the plans for the defense of Western Europe are even partially successful, the Russian chance of overrunning Western Europe will begin to decrease after 1954. Also after that date our production of new weapons, the ability of Western Europe to help defend itself, will narrow the gap that now exists between Russian capabilities and those of the free world.

General Bradley's testimony last May was without precedent in our peacetime history. It was based upon what he repeatedly called "our best Intelligence", which meant the sum total of every scrap of information we had been able to collect regarding Russian production, training, intentions and military capabilities. That information was set down opposite our own plans, production and capabilities. The lines crossed at 1954. After that our relative strength increases, while the Russians' decreases.

Today Defense Secretary Lovett again quoted that date, 1954. (So apparently the estimate hasn't changed.)

There is, of course, waste in our Military Establishment. There is shocking duplication in our Intelligence Service, Our aircraft, particularly the fighters, are weighted down with unessential gadgets. The amount of paper work required, the personnel to do it, has reached fantastic figures. The new men of the Eisenhower Administration will have opportunity to effect economies. But it can be hoped that before the new Administration and the new Congress start doing any major surgery on the appropriations for the Defense Department, they will take another long look at General Bradley's testimony of last May. (Our position does not appear to have improved any since then.)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The prospect for the immediate future can be summed up simply: security involves sacrifice. Unfortunately, there are forces in international diplomacy over which we have little control. So, as the Roman Horace said: "What can not be removed becomes lighter through patience." Marie Curie put it another way: "Life is not easy for any of us. But what of that? We must have perseverance, and above all, confidence in ourselves."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday Nov. 14, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower announced today that Governor Dewey has "emphatically re-affirmed" that he is not available for a cabinet seat in the new Republican Administration. In a few minutes I'd like to discuss the statement made by the General after CONFERING with the Governor. When Dewey arrived at Augusta, Georgia. (on his way to a vacation in Miami.) he told reporters that because of the election results "America feels awfully good these days...it is breathing clean, and fresh air again." The Governor predicted that the nation is entering an era of good feeling, like that of the administration of James Monroe, more than a hundred years ago.

While the General and the Governor conferred in Augusta, Senator Lodge was busy in Washington, getting information for the president-elect. Lodge told reporters he has no news..is working with "top secret" information supplied him by government agencies. And he made it clear that his work, AS an agent for the General, is not being confined merely to the State and Defense departments. The General's other official aide in Washington, Banker Joseph Dodge, has been in touch with Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia. They discussed government finances. And Byrd says Dodge is very anxious to cut all government expenses.

The President today ordered all government agencies to grant [redacted] time-off to government employes on Tuesday..when Mr. Eisenhower returns to Washington as the President-elect. The city is preparing a big welcome party. The White House also made known that when the Eisenhower-Truman meeting occurs at 2 p.m. Tuesday afternoon, it will start with a private talk between the president and the president-to-be. When this meeting is over, both men will go to the cabinet room, to meet with their aides. The President will have Secretary of State Acheson, Treasury Secretary Snyder, Defense Secretary Lovett and Mutual Security Administrator Harriman with him. Presumably, Senator Lodge and Mr. Dodge will accompany the General.

The President today received a plaque from some Negro newspaper editors, commending his work on behalf of freedom ~~of~~ And equality for all citizens. He, in turn, promised to work for the adoption of his civil rights program, as long as he lives.

Senator ~~Bridges~~ Bridges said today that he expects General Eisenhower to respond to Republican demands, for the release of secret papers, bearing on the Pearl Harbor disaster and Yalta. Bridges has indicated he is not interested in continuing as the Senate's republican floor leader.

Senator Knowland of California said today that he wants that job..if Bridges definitely turns it down. And the United Press reports that Senator Taft also may claim the post. Taft is said to feel that with Eisenhower in the White House, Taft's old job as head of the Republican policy committee, will not be as important as it has been with Republicans in the minority. Taft is said to feel that the post of floor leader for his party will be very important. He could then advise the President on the attitude of the Senate toward various legislative suggestions, and he could help develop a legislative program.

The Commerce Department's Business Advisory Council agreed today, that prosperity is assured at least until the middle of 1953. The council, composed of some of the nation's leading industrialists, also feels prices will remain stable, or go down somewhat. Robert T. Stevens, chairman of the council, says the members--from every major field of industry and finance--feel that: business will certainly be good through the first half of 1953. "Beyond that some members are not so sure. Competition will be keener. Prices will not be much changed, although some may be lower. Employment should be steady."

The government today authorized increases in the ceiling prices of coal. Soft coal prices may be increased up to 75 cents a ton; hard coal prices may go up as much as $1.35 a ton. This is based on the $1.50 a day increase granted the miners. If Economic Stabilizer Putnam decides that this may be increased by another 40 cents a day..as provided for in the contracts negotiated by industry and union..then the COAL price increases will be higher than those approved today.

At the United Nations today, Pakistan proposed that both sides in Korea agree to an immediate cease fire...with the solution to the prisoner of war problem to be put off until some later date. An American spokesman says we cannot agree to peace in Korea "while our boys are in enemy hands."

In Korea today, South Koreans fought the enemy for eight hours. And the latest word we have is that Pinpoint Hill...on Sniper Ridge.. is again controlled by the South Koreans.

Major General Clayton Bissell told House investigators in Washington that during the war he put a "top secret" stamp on a report on the Katyn Massacre..in order to preserve our relations with Russia. General Bissell was then head of army intelligence. He acknowledged reciving a report from a lieutenant colonel who saw the graves of murdered

Polish officers.. and blamed the Russians for the massacre. Bissell said if this report had leaked out at the time, it would have caused "worldwide political repercussions.." the Russians might not have joined the United Nations...and they might not have fulfilled their pledge to enter the war against Japan.

~~In Pittsburgh, the executive Board of the C.I.O. decided to take no action on filling the presidency left vacant by the death of Philip Murray. The matter will be placed before the C.I.O. convention in December.~~

In New Jersey, Frank Ericson, the big-time bookie, was sentenced to 12 to 14 months in prison, and fined 5-thousand dollars, for running a betting operation in New Jersey and New York. He has already served a jail term in New York state for the same offense.

And the New York State Crime Commission revealed today that a supervisor for the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, has charged that Thomas Luchese... (also known as Three-Finger Brown.)..is the successor to the jailed Frank Costello, as the top boss of organized crime. Luchese, who is 52, and has homes in New York and New Jersey, admitted in secret testimony that he is a friend of many underworld figures as well as some judges and legislators.

Edward R. Murrow: November 14, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

General Eisenhower and Governor Thomas E. Dewey had a four-hour conversation in Augusta, Georgia, today - (part of it on a bench in front of the first tee of the National Golf Club,) the rest in the Club House. # After this conversation, Jim Haggarty, formerly the Governor's Press Secretary, now the General's, read a brief document. It said: "In the course of our conversation today Governor Dewey emphatically reaffirmed his purpose, of continuing his important post as Governor of New York. This purpose, of course, precludes, at least for the present, any thought of requesting him to accept a post in the Federal Government. / This decision on his part he feels to be in the best interest of the people of New York State and of the Republican Party and the nation." / The Eisenhower statement continued: "Nevertheless, in spite of his preoccupation in his current work, he has promised to be available whenever necessary for consultation and advice, and for any future work of an emergency character. / In view of his great ability and unusual experience as a public servant, and because he is one of the Republican Party's outstanding leaders, Governor Dewey's availability is more than gratifying." That's the statement.

Governor Dewey said to reporters that the Eisenhower statement had an "interesting sentence or two in it". That, of course, is an open invitation to speculation. The statement does not say that Eisenhower today, or previously, had offered or attempted to persuade Governor Dewey to take a government job. (I am reliably informed that as of yesterday he had not done so.) On the other hand, Governor Dewey has been telling personal friends for several days that he would not accept a Federal appointment. So on the basis of the record there is no evidence that Dewey wanted a Cabinet post, and no evidence that he was ever offered one. #

Governor Dewey was the first nationally known Republican leader to come out for Eisenhower's nomination. At Chicago it seemed to this reporter that the Governor's political skill and tenacity represented the major personal contribution in getting Eisenhower the nomination. After he got it, and after his so-called reconciliation with Senator Taft, there were stories - none of them confirmed - that one price paid by Eisenhower for Taft's support was an agreement that Governor Dewey would not be a member of the Eisenhower Cabinet. Republican Senator Dirksen was quoted as saying that at the Taft-Eisenhower meeting there were assurances that in the event of a Republican victory "Governor Dewey would not leave New York State." Dirksen offered no details - his statement was not denied by Eisenhower or Taft, but that is no proof that it was accurate.

Still there remains today's interesting suggestion by Governor Dewey that the Eisenhower statement today "had an interesting sentence or two in it. This reporter can find at least an interesting phrase, and that is the phrase "at least for the present." It was used in connection with Governor Dewey's reaffirmation of his purpose of continuing as Governor of New York. And the statement goes on: "This purpose, of course, precludes at least for the present any thought of requesting him to accept a post in the Federal Government." That leaves the door wide open for an appointment two years from now when the Governor will have finished his term of office.

To me another interesting sentence was that the Governor has promised to be available for consultation and advice for any future work of an emergency or temporary character." This coupled with Eisenhower's praise of Dewey as a public servant - one of the Republican Party's outstanding leaders - could be regarded as roughly the equivalent of a key to the back door of the White House. Senator Taft holds the Republican pass key to the Senate; and the distribution of other keys cannot be determined until General Eisenhower has made his choice FROM the two factions of his Party.

This of course involves a series of difficult and delicate decisions in the area of Cabinet appointments, where this program hopes to achieve some small distinction by offering neither prophecy nor advice.

In politics, as in war, the art of camaflouge, is often useful. And today's political communique from Augusta lends itself to a number of interper - tations. Publilius Syrus once remarked:"It is easy for men to say one thing and think another." That is probably still true. I can't help recalling that line from "The Critic" by Richard Sheridan:"Egad, I think the interperter is the hardest to be understood of the two."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower announced today that Governor Dewey has "emphatically reaffirmed" that he is not available for a cabinet seat in the new Republican Administration. In a few minutes I'd like to discuss the statement made by the General after conferring with the Governor. When Dewey arrived at August, Georgia on his way to a vacation in Miami, he told reporters that because of the election results "America feels awfully good these days...it is breathing clean and fresh air again." The Governor predicted that the nation is entering an era of good feeling like that of the administration of James Monroe more than a hundred years ago.

While the General and the Governor conferred in Augusta, Senator Lodge was busy in Washington getting information for the president-elect. Lodge told reporters he has no news..is working with "top secret" information supplied him by government agencies. And he made it clear that his work, as an agent for the General, is not being confined merely to the State and Defense Departments. The General's other official aide in Washington, Banker Joseph Dodge, has been in touch with Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia. They discussed government finances. And Byrd says Dodge is very anxious to cut all government expenses.

The President today ordered all government agencies to grant time-off to government employees on Tuesday when Mr. Eisenhower returns to Washington as the President-elect. The city is preparing a big welcome party. The White House also made known that when the Eisenhower-Truman meeting occurs at 2 p.m. Tuesday afternoon, it will start with a private talk between the President and the President-to-be. When this meeting is over, both men will go to the cabinet room to meet with their aides. The President will have Secretary of State

Acheson, Treasury Secretary Snyder, Defense Secretary Lovett and Mutual Security Administrator Harriman with him. Presumably, Senator Lodge and Mr. Dodge will accompany the General.

The President today received a plaque from some Negro newspaper editors commending his work on behalf of freedom and equality for all citizens. He, in turn, promised to work for the adoption of his civil rights program as long as he lives.

Senator Bridges said today that he expects General Eisenhower to respond to Republican demands for the release of secret papers, bearing on the Pearl Harbor disaster and Yalta. Bridges has indicated he is not interested in continuing as the Senate's Republican floor leader.

Senator Knowland of California said today that he wants that job if Bridges definitely turns it down. And the United Press reports that Senator Taft also may claim the post. Taft is said to feel that with Eisenhower in the White House, Taft's old job as head of the Republican policy committee will not be as important as it has been with Republicans in the minority. Taft is said to feel that the post of floor leader for his party will be very important. He could then advise the President on the attitude of the Senate toward various legislative suggestions and he could help develop a legislative program.

The Commerce Department's Business Advisory Council agreed today that prosperity is assured at least until the middle of 1953. The council, composed of some of the nation's leading industrialists, also feels prices will remain stable or go down somewhat. Robert T. Stevens, chairman of the council, says the members from every major field of industry and finance feel that business will certainly be good through the first half of 1953. "Beyond that some members are not so sure. Competition will be keener. Prices will not be much changed, although some may be lower. Employment should be steady."

The government today authorized increases in the ceiling prices of coal. Soft coal prices may be increased up to 75 cents a ton; hard coal prices may go up as much as $1.35 a ton. This is based on the $1.50 a day increase granted the miners. If Economic Stabilizer Putnam decides that this may be increased by another 40 cents a day as provided for in the contracts negotiated by industry and union, then the coal price increases will be higher than those approved today.

At the United Nations today, Pakistan proposed that both sides in Korea agree to an immediate cease fire, with the solution to the prisoner of war problem to be put off until some later date. An American spokesman says we cannot agree to peace in Korea "while our boys are in enemy hands."

In Korea today, South Koreans fought the enemy for eight hours. And the latest word we have is that Pinpoint Hill on Sniper Ridge is again controlled by the South Koreans.

Major General Clayton Bissell told House investigators in Washington that during the war he put a "top secret" stamp on a report on the Katyn Massacre in order to preserve our relations with Russia. General Bissell was then head of Army intelligence. He acknowledged receiving a report from a lieutenant colonel who saw the graves of murdered Polish officers, and blamed the Russians for the massacre. Bissell said if this report had leaked out at the time, it would have caused "worldwide political repercussions" and the Russians might not have fulfilled their pledge to enter the war against Japan.

In New Jersey, Frank Ericson, the bigtime bookie, was sentenced to 12 to 14 months in prison and fined 5-thousand dollars for running a betting operation in New Jersey and New York. He has already served a jail term in New York state for the same offense.

And the New York State Crime Commission revealed today that a supervisor for the Federal Bureau of Narcotics has charged that Thomas Luchese (also known as Three-Finger Brown) is the successor to the jailed Frank Costello as the top boss of organized crime. Luchese, who is 52 and has homes in New York and New Jersey, admitted in secret testimony that he is a friend of many underworld figures as well as some judges and legislators.

General Eisenhower and Governor Thomas E. Dewey had a four-hour conversation in Augusta, Georgia, today (part of it on a bench in front of the first tee of the National Golf Club) the rest in the Club House. After this conversation, Jim Haggarty, formerly the Governor's Press Secretary, now the General's, read a brief document. It said: "In the course of our conversation today Governor Dewey emphatically reaffirmed his purpose of continuing his important post as Governor of New York. This purpose, of course, precludes at least for the present any thought of requesting him to accept a post in the Federal Government. This decision on his part he feels to be in the best interest of the people of New York State and of the Republican Party and the nation." The Eisenhower statement continued: "Nevertheless, in spite of his preoccupation in his current work, he has promised to be available whenever necessary for consultation and advice, and for any future work of an emergency character. In view of his great ability and unusual experience as a public servant, and because he is one of the Republican Party's outstanding leaders, Governor Dewey's availability is more than gratifying." That's the statement.

Governor Dewey said to reporters that the Eisenhower statement had an "interesting sentence or two in it". That, of course, is an open invitation to speculation. The statement does not say that Eisenhower today, or previously, had offered or attempted to persuade Governor Dewey to take a government job. (I am reliably informed that as of yesterday he had not done so.) On the other hand, Governor Dewey has been telling personal friends for several days that he would not accept a Federal appointment. So on the basis of the record there is no evidence that Dewey wanted a Cabinet post, and no evidence that he was ever offered one. Governor Dewey was the first nationally known Republican leader to come out for Eisenhower's nomination. At Chicago it seemed to this reporter that the Governor's political skill and tenacity represented the major personal contribution in getting Eisenhower the nomination. After he got it, and after his so-called reconciliation with Senator Taft, there were stories -none of them confirmed - that one price paid by Eisenhower for Taft's support was an agreement that Governor Dewey would not be a member of the Eisenhower Cabinet. Republican Senator Dirksen was quoted as saying that at the Taft-Eisenhower meeting there were assurances that in the event of a Republican victory "Governor Dewey would not leave New York State." Dirksen offered no details - his statement was not denied by Eisenhower or Taft, but that is no proof that it was accurate.

Still there remains today's interesting suggestion by Governor Dewey, that the Eisenhower statement today "had an interesting sentence or two in it. This reporter can find at least an interesting phrase, and that is the phrase "at least for the present." It was used in connection with Governor Dewey's reaffirmation of his purpose of continuing as Governor of New York. And the statement goes on: "This purpose, of course, precludes "at least for the present," any thought of requesting him to accept a post in the Federal Government." That leaves the door wide open for an appointment two years from now when the Governor will have finished his term of office.

To me another interesting sentence was that the Governor has promised to be available for "consultation and advice for any future work of an emergency or temporary character." This, coupled with Eisenhower's praise of Dewey as a public servant - "one of the Republican Party's outstanding leaders" - could be regarded as roughly the equivalent of a key to the back door of the White House. Senator Taft holds the Republican pass key to the Senate; and the distribution of other keys cannot be determined until General Eisenhower has made his choice from the two factions of his Party.

This of course, involves a series of difficult and delicate decisions in the area of Cabinet appointments, where this program hopes to achieve some small distinction by offering neither prophecy nor advice.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In politics, as in war, the art of camaflouge, is often useful. And today's political communique from Augusta lends itself to a number of interpretations. Publilius Syrus once remarked: "It is easy for men to say one thing and think another." That is probably still true. I can't help recalling that line from "The Critic" by Richard Sheridan: "Egad, I think the interpreter is the hardest to be understood of the two."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday November 17 1952

This is the news:

India today presented to the United Nations her compromise proposal for peace in Korea. The United States doesn't like it. (I'd like to review this proposal in a few minutes.)

General Mark Clark said in Tokyo today that there is no "foundation in fact" to published reports that he has asked for more American divisions, to start a new offensive in Korea.

~~And~~ An Intelligence survey, made by General Clark's command, says: civilian morale in North Korea has dropped to "catastrophic depths".. the majority of the people there would welcome a United Nations offensive, to end the war. The report says: North Korea would probably collapse without the aid of Russian and Chinese support... Red soldiers have good morale, but they are being fed at the cost of near-starvation among civilians. [redacted]

Today, our Sabrejets claimed to have destroyed five.. and possibly seven.. enemy Migs. There was a lull in the ground fighting but both sides continued their heavy artillery duels.

The Atomic Energy Commission has nothing to add to yesterday's announcement, that it has conducted successful experiments in hydrogen bomb research. The Soviet press has made no mention of this.. but European diplomats believe the Russians will soon announce that they have tested a hydrogen bomb.. althouth there is no indication her scientists are close to solving the problem. European papers headlined news that America has a hydrogen bomb. Dr. Harold Urey, one of our top atomic SCIENTISTS, says the Washington announcement "sounds like official language for a successful H-bomb." But another top scientist, Enrico Fermi, says only that "some sort of large scale explosion took place."

General Eisenhower's press secretary said "no comment"to all questions on the bomb, as the general ended his last vacation day in Augusta. He conferred with his staff in the morning, then played golf in the afternoon. He formally resigned as president of Columbia University as of January 19, next year..the day before he takes office. #

Tomorrow the President-elect meets the President at the White House, The State Department says Senator Lodge..one of the General's aides.. met with Undersecretary of State Bruce on Saturday afternoon..Mr. Bruce is acting as secretary, while Dean Acheson attends the United Nations meetings here in New York. Today, Lodge conferred with Defense Secretary Lovett on details concerning the General's trip to Korea. Mr. Lovett urged the General to name his new defense secretary as soon as possible. And Senator Lodge told reporters he feels both the State and Defense Departments have been dealing with him "in the spirit of frank co-operation."

Senator Taft today started talks with Republican leaders both to prepare for a meeting with General Eisenhower on Wednesday..and to try to avoid any fights for Senate positions. The Senator said it would be a shame to start the new Administration with a fight..particularly over the floor leadership. Taft says he has made some suggesstions on cabinet positions to Eisenhower.

Paul Hoffman, who has been mentioned as a possible cabinet member, said today he has not discussed any such possibility with the General, or anyone else. He has no intention of leaving his present job--as head of the Ford Foundation.

In Washington, John L. Lewis has urged Economic Stabilizer Putnam to grant his miners the full $1.90 a day raise, he negotiated for them with the coal industry. Harry Moses, a soft coal industry leader, joined Lewis in arguing against a 40 cent a day cut, ordered by the Wage Stabilization Board. Lewis suggested that the miners would strike again unless they get the full $1.90 raise. And Mr. Moses spoke of the possible [redacted] "disruption" of American industry due to a lack of coal.

The Supreme Court..for a second time..has refused to grant a hearing to Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. They have been condemned to death for passing-on atomic bomb secrets to Russia. The government may now seek an execution date for the New York couple. They have been in prison for 19 months.

The Justice Department says it is going to start action [redacted] to take citizenship away from Thomas Luchese, also known as Three-Finger Brown. Luchese, who has been described as Frank Costello's successor, as underworld boss, is a naturalized citizen. Attorney General Mc Granery says he failed to list all his previous arrests in his citizenship application in 1943.

This state's Crime Commission heard today from [redacted] Carmen de Sapio, the leader of Tammany Hall. He [redacted] acknowledged that during the last war, when he was 35 years old and a Democratic district leader, he won deferrment from the draft as an essential worker..although he had no job at the time. One party worker said he served as clerk under two Democratic congressmen although he "did nothing."

In Greece, King Paul has asked Field Marshal Alexander Papagos to form a new Greek government. The field marshal's right-wing party won a landslide victory in yesterday's national election. The Communists, who held ten seats in the last parliament, did not win one in the Sunday voting.

In West Germany, seven former prominent Nazis have been arrested in the Ruhr area and are held on suspicion of plotting high treason. German police says the seven men may have been preparing a plot against the West German government.

Edward R. Murrow: November 17, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today the Indian Delegation to the United Nations produced its plan for settling the Prisoner of War issue in Korea. The plan is an attempt to reach a compromise between the Communist position -(which demands that all prisoners be sent back where they came from)- and our position,(which is that we will not use force to send unwilling prisoners back to China or North Korea.) The Indians, who have been talking with both sides, propose a five-member commission to take over all prisoners. This commission would be made up of representatives from Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland, ~~with a fifth to be chosen by those four and the United Nations~~. The Indian plan says that force should not be used against prisoners of war, either to send them home or to prevent them from going home. All prisoners on both sides would be released to this ~~five~~ 4-nation commission. They would be classified, and then they could return to their homeland. Representatives of both sides would be allowed to talk to the prisoners. The Red Cross would lend a hand. And at the end of 90 days after the armistice there would be a political conference to decide what to do about those prisoners that had decided not to go home, and remained in the hands of the International Commission.

The essence of the Indian proposal is that prisoners of war on both sides who wanted to go home could do so as soon as they had been processed. XXXX Three months after the armistice there would be a political conference to decide what to do with those who decided not to go home.

My colleague Larry Lesueur spends most of his time at the United Nations, and I have asked him to comment on the prospects for agreement on the Indian compromise.....

Well Ed

There are a dozen or so proposals, before the United Nations, to end the crucial prisoner of war dispute. But none of them had been so eagerly awaited, as tonite's resolution by India...After all, India, although technically a belligerent in the Korean war, because sho has an ambulance unit there, was the nation who warned that Red China would enter the war if MacArthur threatened the Yalu frontiers. That warning was ignored. And so India has emerged as the one nation whose contacts with Red China might make its proposals acceptable to both sides...Nobody wants to vote against India, on this Korean issue because, politically, it might make them look as though they want to prolong the Korean bloodshed..

But tonite's Indian plan got a cool reception from the American delegation...The main objection to its complicated 17 points, is that it doesn't say what would happen to the prisoners, who don't want to return home..

The Indian proposition, as you said, Ed, calls for a 4 nation commission to take over all the prisoners and place them in a demilitarized zone.. Then there would be a cease-fire, and after 90 days, those who didn't want to go home, would be turned over to the far east political conference, the one already provided for in the draft armistice plan reached at Panmunjom..

Well, the way that looks to the American delegation is, that the only alternative a prisoner would have who didn't want to return to communism, is that of rotting in another POW camp... And we would be Taking pressure off the red armies, without really settling the fate of the war prisoners...

I think This would hardly be acceptable to any UN military commander in Korea, since under an armistice, all patrol activity would cease, but the armies would apparently remain in place and we'd never know what the communists were planning, especially if there never was agreement on the prisoners of war. This divided commission, as you said, would comprise two communist nations, according to the Indian plan, plus Sweden and Switzerland... The Indian proposal calls upon them to agree on a so-called umpire, to settle any disputes they might have over the prisoners...But since both sides have never been able to agree on anything of substance before, except agreements reached by force, the chances are that might never even agree on an umpire.

and so as one american spokesman said tonight, this would be putting us right back where we started..

In other words, so far as the Indian proposal stands right now, it doesn't appear to be workable...It doesn't set any time limit, over new prisoner of war discussions, and it really calls for a cease-fire without settling their fate...

Its pretty plain that this would give the Chinese Communists any opportunity they might desire to reinforce their Korean armies, leave them reddy to start a surprise offensive, if they'd didn't like the way the prisoner talks or the Far East conference, was working out. In other words, the prisoner of war issue might not be the only barrier to a Korean peace...The communists could harden on any political issue later on, like the question of Formosa or Red China's entry into the UN, and start the whole war off again with a bang, and with the priceless benefit of surprise. In the meantime, the prisoners who didn't want to return to communism, would presumably be forcibly detained elsewhere, with no real choice except to go home and face the communist musid...

But nobody knows, of course, what General Esienhower thinks of this Indian proposal...Undoubtedly Secretary of State Acheson will discuss it with him when they meet in the White House on Tuesday... We can only presume, that the President-elect is leaving it up to Administration to take the decisions, until he assumes responsibility..

At any rate, 8 pro-western nations are going to talk it over in the next 24 hours, before India introduces it formally to the UN.. And there's still a possibility that it might be suitably amended. [redacted]..

But as far as I can see tonight, Ed, the UN is still just as deadlocked in NewYork, as it is at Panmunjom... And this Indian compromise doesn't really settle anything at all.

The Austrian Composer Mozart once remarked:"If only the whole world could feel the power of harmony. And yet, it is impossible, for it seems humanity can not endure the paltriness of existence."/Still, there is always the hope that the fighting will come to an end./Those involved in trying to find the solution ~~would well to~~ might remember the Old Testament: "With all thy getting, get understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

India today presented to the United Nations her compromise proposal for peace in Korea. The United States doesn't like it. (I'd like to review this proposal in a few minutes.)

General Mark Clark said in Tokyo today that there is no "foundation in fact" to published reports that he has asked for more American divisions, to start a new offensive in Korea.

An Intelligence survey, made by General Clark's command, says: civilian morale in North Korea has dropped to "catastrophic depths". The majority of the people there would welcome a United Nations offensive to end the war. The report says: North Korea would probably collapse without the aid of Russian and Chinese support. Red soldiers have good morale but they are being fed at the cost of near-starvation among civilians.

Today, our Sabrejets claimed to have destroyed five, and possibly seven, enemy Migs. There was a lull in the ground fighting but both sides continued their heavy artillery duels.

The Atomic Energy Commission has nothing to add to yesterday's announcement that it has conducted successful experiments in hydrogen bomb research. The Soviet press has made no mention of this, but European diplomats believe the Russians will soon announce that they have tested a hydrogen bomb, although there is no indication her scientists are close to solving the problem. European papers headlined news that America has a hydrogen bomb. Dr. Harold Urey, one of our top atomic scientists, says the Washington announcement "sounds like official language for a successful H-bomb." But another top scientist, Enrico Fermi, says only that "some sort of large scale explosion took place."

General Eisenhower's press secretary said "no comment" to all questions on the bomb, as the general ended his last vacation day in Augusta. He conferred with his staff in the morning, then played golf in the afternoon. He formally resigned as president of Columbia University as of January 19, next year, the day before he takes office.

Tomorrow the President-elect meets the President at the White House. The State Department says Senator Lodge, one of the General's aides, met with Undersecretary of State Bruce on Saturday afternoon. Mr. Bruce is acting as secretary while Dean Acheson attends the United Nations meetings here in New York. Today, Lodge conferred with Defense Secretary Lovett on details concerning the General's trip to Korea. Mr. Lovett urged the General to name his new defense secretary as soon as possible. And Senator Lodge told reporters he feels both the State and Defense Departments have been dealing with him "in the spirit of frank cooperation."

Senator Taft today started talks with Republican leaders both to prepare for a meeting with General Eisenhower on Wednesday, and to try to avoid any fights for Senate positions. The Senator said it would be a shame to start the new Administration with a fight, particularly over the floor leadership. Taft says he has made some suggestions on cabinet positions to Eisenhower.

Paul Hoffman, who has been mentioned as a possible cabinet member, said today he has not discussed any such possibility with the General or anyone else. He has no intention of leaving his present job as head of the Ford Foundation.

In Washington, John L. Lewis has urged Economic Stabilizer Putnam to grant his miners the full $1.90 a day raise he negotiated for them with the coal industry. Harry Moses, a soft coal industry leader, joined Lewis in arguing against a 40 cent a day cut ordered by the Wage Stabilization Board. Lewis suggested that the miners would strike again unless they get the full $1.90 raise, and Mr. Moses spoke of the possible "disruption" of American industry due to a lack of coal.

The Supreme Court for a second time has refused to grant a hearing to Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. They have been condemned to death for passing on atomic bomb secrets to Russia. The government may now seek an execution date for the New York couple. They have been in prison for 19 months.

The Justice Department says it is going to start action to take citizenship away from Thomas Luchese, also known as Three-Finger Brown. Luchese, who has been described as Frank Costello's successor, as underworld boss, is a naturalized citizen. Attorney General McGranery says he failed to list all his previous arrests in his citizenship application in 1943.

This state's Crime Commission heard today from Carmen de Sapio, the leader of Tammany Hall. He acknowledged that during the last war, when he was 35 years old and a Democratic district leader, he won deferrment from the draft as an essential worker, although he had no job at the time. One party worker said he served as clerk under two Democratic congressmen although he "did nothing."

In Greece, King Paul has asked Field Marshal Alexander Papagos to form a new Greek government. The field marshal's right-wing party won a landslide victory in yesterday's national election. The Communists, who held ten seats in the last parliament, did not win one in the Sunday voting.

In West Germany, seven former prominent Nazis have been arrested in the Ruhr area and are held on suspicion of plotting high treason. German police says the seven men may have been preparing a plot against the West German government.

Today the Indian Delegation to the United Nations, produced its plan for settling the Prisoner of War issue in Korea. The plan is an attempt to reach a compromise between the Communist position, which demands that all prisoners be sent back where they came from, and our position, which is that we will not use force to send unwilling prisoners back to China or North Korea. The Indians, who have been talking with both sides, propose a five-member commission to take over all prisoners. This commission would be made up of representatives from Czechoslavakia, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland. The Indian plan says that force should not be used against prisoners of war, either to send them home or to prevent them from going home. All prisoners on both sides would be released to this four-nation commission. They would be classified, and then they could return to their homeland. Representatives of both sides would be allowed to talk to the prisoners. The Red Cross would lend a hand. And at the end of 90 days after the armistice there would be a political conference to decide what to do about those prisoners that had decided not to go home, and remained in the hands of the International Commission.

The essence of the Indian proposal is that prisoners of war on both sides who wanted to go home could do so as soon as they had been processed. Three months after the armistice there would be a political conference to decide what to do with those who decided not to go home.

My colleague Larry Lesueur spends most of his time at the United Nations, and I have asked him to comment on the prospects for agreement on the Indian compromise.

LESUEUR: Well Ed, there are a dozen or so proposals before the United Nations to end the crucial prisoner of war dispute. But none of them has been so eagerly awaited as tonight's resolution by India. After all, India, although technically a belligerent in the Korean war, because she has an ambulance unit there, was the nation who warned that Red China would enter the war if MacArthur threated the Yalu frontiers. That warning was ignored, and so India has emerged as the one nation whose contacts with Red China might make its proposals acceptable to both sides, so nobody wants to vote against India on this Korean issue, because politically it might make them look as though they wanted to prolong the Korean bloodshed.

But tonight's Indian plan got a cool reception from the American delegation. The main objection to its complicated 17 points, is that it doesn't say what would heppen to the prisoners who don't want to return home.

The Indian proposition, as you said, Ed, calls for a four--nation commission to take over all the prisoners and place them in a demilitarized zone. Then there would be a cease-fire, and after 90 days, those who didn't want to go home, would be turned over to the far east political conference, the one already provided for in the draft armistice plan reached at Panmunjom.

Well, the way that looks to the American delegation is that the only alternative a prisoner would have who didn't want to return to communism, is that of rotting in another POW camp and we would be taking pressure off the red armies, without really settling the fate of the war prisoners.

I think this would hardly be acceptable to any U.N. military commander in Korea, since under an armistice, all patrol activity would cease, but the armies would apparently remain in place and we'd never know what the communists were planning, especially if there never was agreement on the prisoners of war. This divided commission, as you said, would comprise two communist nations, according to the Indian plan, plus Sweden and Switzerland. The Indian proposal calls upon them to agree on a so-called umpire to settle any disputes they might have over the prisoners. But since both sides have never been able to agree on anything of substance before, except agreements reached by force, the chances are that might never even agree on an umpire, and so as one American spokesman said tonight, this would be putting us right back where we started.

In other words, so far as the Indian proposal stands right now, it doesn't appear to be workable. It doesn't set any time limit, over new prisoner of war discussions, and it really calls for a cease-fire without settling their fate.

Its pretty plain that this would give the Chinese Communists any opportunity they might desire to reinforce their Korean armies, leave them ready to start a surprise offensive, if they didn't like the way the prisoner talks or the Far East conference was working out. In other words, the prisoner of war issue might not be the only barrier to a Korean peace as the Russians now proclaim. The communists could harden on any political issue later on, like the question of Formosa or Red China's entry into the UN and start the whole war off again with a bang and with the priceless benefit of surprise. In the meantime, the prisoners who didn't want to return to communism, would presumably be forcibly detained elsewhere with no real choice except to go home and face the communist music.

Nobody knows, of course, what General Eisenhower thinks of this Indian proposal. Undoubtedly, Secretary of State Acheson will discuss it with him when they meet in the White House on Tuesday. We can only presume that the President-elect is leaving it up to Administration to take the decisions, until he assumes responsibility.

At any rate, 8 pro-western nations are going to talk it over in the next 24 hours, before India introduces it formally to the U.N. There's still a possibility that it might be suitably amended. But as far as I can see tonight, Ed, the UN is still just as deadlocked in New York, as it is at Panmunjom. And this Indian compromise doesn't really settle anything at all.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Austrian Composer Mozart once remarked: "If only the whole world could feel the power of harmony. And yet, it is impossible, for it seems humanity cannot endure the paltriness of existence." Still, there is always the hope that the fighting will come to an end. Those involved in trying to find the solution might remember the Old Testament: "With all thy getting, get understanding."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Nov. 18, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower returned to New York tonight, after a meeting in Washington with the President. The two men said they had agreed on a PLAN [redacted] which will be of value to the stability of the country. (I'd like to review ~~this~~ THEIR communique in a few minutes.) The joint statement issued by the White House made no reference to any specific issues facing the nation, at home or abroad.

At the United Nations, Canada and some other non-Communist countries, made it known today that they differ with us over India's compromise plan for peace in Korea. (And the Indians are said to feel we reacted too quickly.)

In Korea, three of the Navy's Panther Jets have shot down two enemy Migs and damaged a third. The battle took place off the northeast coast of Korea. It was one of the rare occasions when enemy planes have ~~[illegible]~~ approached so close to our warships..Carrier Task Force 77. All of our planes--from the carrier Oriskany--returned safely. On the ground, our artillery has been firing at what appears to be a Chinese Communist buildup for a new major attack.

The French in Indo-China report that their troops have finally drawn an enemy division of possibly 15-thousand men into battle on a field chosen by the French. A French communique says the Vietminh division suffered extremely heavy casualties..was forced to break-off the fight and flee into the jungles after five hours.

In Washington, the President reported that our shipment of arms to western Europe in the first six months of this year slumped considerably behind schedule. But, the President says, we have made real progress in strengthening the free world. He told Congress there will be some delay before the NATO nations can boost their armies to the planned 50 divisions. This goal was to have been reached by the end of the year.

Senator Taft told reporters today that he is holding to his goal for a budget of about 70-billions for fiscal 1954..and about 60-billion for the following year. The Present budget is 79-billions. The Senator also said: he is available for the Senate floor leadership but he's not running for it. [redacted] when he meets with General Eisenhower tomorrow he'll ask the president-elect to decide what he wants Congress to do first. Taft feels the budget... taxes... the government reorganization act and the future of wage, price and rent controls are the most pressing problems.

[redacted] says

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana says he's talked with Taft and feels the Ohioan is available as majority leader. But Republican Senator Welker of Idaho says the "Eisenhower people" want Senator Bridges of Maine to continue in that job.

Republican Representative Taber of New York says he hears "that there are stories going around" that the Administration is burning government files. The White House says this is "not worthy of comment."

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware says the appointment of Internal Revenue Commissioner Dunlap to head the tax bureau's Texas- Oklahoma district is "indefensible." Mr. Dunlap says Williams is perturbed because Dunlap would not turn over to him files which, by law, may be given only to authorized Congressional committees.

Governor Stevenson returned to Chicago today from a Arizona vacation. He said he would like the "privilege" of expressing himself on important issues from time to time.

And in a federal court in Chicago, the government began its suit against the Du Pont [redacted] company. Willis L. Hotckiss (for the government) charged that Du Pont is the nation's biggest chemical firm.. General Motors is the largest manufacturing company in the nation and U.S. Rubber is an industrial giant. The government contends that Du Pont controls G.M. and U.S. Rubber.. charges that they violate the anti-trust act.. and divide several manufacturing fields to eliminate competition. [redacted] Hotckiss says the three companies have combined assets of five billion dollars and combined annual profits of one billion a year.

Here in New York today, the state's crime commission was told by an attorney that a Tammany district leader offered him an 11-thousand-dollar a year judegship for a contribution of between 15 and 25-thousand dollars. The district leader denied it. Other witnesses quoted Tammany leaders as putting a price of 18 to 20-thousand dollars in campaign expenses for municipal judge positions.

In Isreal, Prime Minister Ben Gurion's office announced that Albert Einstein has turned down a possible offer to be president of Isreal. The approach was made by Ambassador Eban after the funeral of the late president Weizmann. Professor Einstein said: he has no talent in the field of human relations..doesn't like to undertake tasks he cannot fulfill to the satisfaction of his conscience..prefers to continue his "contemplation of the world of nature and material without interruption."

In West Germany, the lower house of parliament defeated Chancellor Adenauer's appeal for quick ratification of treaties to re-arm western Germany in alliance with the western nations. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that Adenauer's demand for quick action antagonized some members of his coalition.. others played hookey.. and the Chancellor failed to first assure himself of an absolute majority.

Edward R. Murrow: November 18, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Before leaving Augusta today, General Eisenhower said that his rest there had "not been complete" - (heavy correspondence had been a great burden.) He regarded this as a sign that our people are determined to maintain a keen interest in governmental affairs. He looks forward to "critical and intelligent support" during the next four years, rather than blind support.

IN WASHINGTON, Crowds estimated at half-a-million greeted the General as he drove from the airport to the White House. The General waved first with one hand and then the other, and then clasped both hands over his head, in the victorious prize fighter's salute to the crowd.

The President and President-elect talked privately for about twenty minutes; then for about an hour, the two men talked in the company of their aides. Senator Lodge and Eisenhower's representative for fiscal matters, Joseph M. Dodge of Detroit, were with Eisenhower. Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, Secretary of Defense Lovett and Averill Harriman, the Mutual Security Administrator, were with the President. No record was made of the conversation. When General Eisenhower emerged he was grim and unsmiling. He said the briefing had been "very informative and instructive;" and in answer to questions from reporters he said he "wasn't going to say it twice."

Later the White House issued the following statement regarding the conversations: "We have discussed some of the most important problems affecting our country, in the sphere of international relations. Information with respect to these problems has been made available to General Eisenhower.

"Under our constitution, the President must exercise his functions until he leaves office, and his successor cannot be asked to share or assume the responsibilities of the presidency, until he takes office.

"We have worked out a framework of liaison and exchange of information between the present Administration and the incoming Administration, but we have made no arrangements which are inconsistent with the full spirit of our Constitution. General Eisenhower has not been asked to assume any of the responsibilities of the presidency, until he takes the oath of office.

"We believe, however, that the arrangements we have made for co-operation will be of great value to the stability of our country, and to the favorable progress of international affairs.

"We are confident that this meeting and the arrangements we have made today for liaison and co-operation between the present Administration and the new Administration, furnish additional proof of the ability of the people of this country to manage their affairs with a sense of continuity and with responsibility."

As I read it that statement merely means that General Eisenhower was given certain information; arrangements were made for him to receive more; he accepts no responsibility for anything that is done between now and his Inauguration on January 20th.

After the White House meeting General Eisenhower went to the Pentagon, where he was briefed by Defense Secretary Lovett, General Omar Bradley and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Later the General flew to New York, where he will have a series of conferences tomorrow. In the course of the day General Eisenhower made it known that he is not yet sure when he will make his promised trip to Korea.

It is widely believed, although no one can prove it, that his promise to make that trip, coupled with the belief that somehow he could find an honorable solution to end the fighting, had a great deal to do with winning General Eisenhower the election. Korea will be only the first of a series of fateful decisions the new President will have to make. On that, as on most other matters, he is receiving conflicting advice. No incoming

President has ever faced a greater variety of urgent and awesome decisions. There is no constitutional way in which the General can share the responsibility for decisions taken between now and the time of his Inauguration. That could not be done even though Truman and Eisenhower were both willing and eager for it to be that way, and there is no sign that they are.

Today's meeting at the White House had been billed as one that would in some way demonstrate to the world that our country is united in the "cause of freedom and peace." The statement didn't say anything about that. It could not reasonably have been expected to do so, for the degree of unity inside the Republican Party, and the country, will be largely determined by the men to whom Eisenhower entrusts power, and a clearer definition of the policies they are to execute. The two men arranged for an orderly transfer of government from one Party to another; and that's all that could have been expected. It would not be reasonable to believe that the hard words they spoke about each other during the campaign were uttered in a fit of absentmindedness.

It has been made [redacted] clear that General Eisenhower ~~does~~ will not ~~intend~~ to assume any government responsibilities until taking office. Perhaps, at the White House meeting, President Truman was thinking of this line by Dorothy Sayers:"A trouble shared is a trouble halved."/And possibly the General recalled Kipling's line:"Borrow trouble for yourself, but don't lend it to your neighbors."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower returned to New York tonight after a meeting in Washington with the President. The two men said they had agreed on a plan which will be of value to the stability of the country. I'd like to review their communique in a few minutes. The joint statement issued by the White House made no reference to any specific issues facing the nation at home or abroad.

At the United Nations, Canada and some other non-Communist countries made it known today that they differ with us over India's compromise plan for peace in Korea. The Indians are said to feel we reacted too quickly.

In Korea, three of the Navy's Panther Jets have shot down two enemy Migs and damaged a third. The battle took place off the northeast coast of Korea. It was one of the rare occasions when enemy planes have approached so close to our warships...Carrier Task Force 77. All of our planes, from the carrier Orisikany, returned safely. On the ground, our artillery has been firing at what appears to be a Chinese Communist buildup for a new major attack.

The French in Indo-China report that their troops have finally drawn an enemy division of possibly 15-thousand men into battle on a field chosen by the French. A French communique says the Vietminh division suffered extremely heavy casualties, was forced to break-off the fight and flee into the jungles after five hours.

In Washington, the President reported that our shipment of arms to Western Europe in the first six months of this year slumped considerably behind schedule. But, the President says, we have made "real progress in strengthening the free world." He told Congress there will be some delay before the NATO nations can boost their armies to the planned 50 divisions. This goal was to have been reached by the end of the year.

Senator Taft told reporters today that he is holding to his goal, for a budget of about 70-billions for fiscal 1954, and about 60-billion for the following year. The Present budget is 79-billions. The Senator also said he is available for the Senate floor leadership but he's not running for it. When he meets with General Eisenhower tomorrow he'll ask the president-elect to decide what he wants Congress to do first. Taft feels the budget, taxes, the government reorganization act and the future of wage, price and rent controls are the most pressing problems.

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana says he's talked with Taft and feels the Ohioan is available as majority leader. But Republican Senator of Idaho says the "Eisenhower people" want Senator Bridges of Maine to continue in that job.

Republican Representative Taber of New York says he hears "that there are stories going around" that the Administration is burning government files. The White House says this is "not worthy of comment."

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware says the appointment of Internal Revenue Commissioner Dunlap to head the tax bureau's Texas-Oklahoma district is "indefensible." Mr. Dunlap says Williams is perturbed because Dunlap would not turn over to him files which, by law, may be given only to authorized Congressional committees.

Governor Stevenson returned to Chicago today from an Arizona vacation. He said he would like the "privilege" of expressing himself on important issues from time to time.

And in a federal court in Chicago, the government began its suit against the Du Pont Company. Willis L. Hotckiss for the government, charged that Du Pont is the nation's biggest chemical firm. General Motors is the largest manufacturing company in the nation and U.S. Rubber is an industrial giant. The government contends that Du Pont controls G.M. and U.S. Rubber.. charges that they violate the anti-trust act, and divide several manufacturing fields to eliminate competition. Hotckiss says the three companies have combined assets of five billion dollars and combined annual profits of one billion a year.

Here in New York today, the state's crime commission was told by an attorney that a Tammany district leader offered him an 11-thousand-dollar a yearyear judgeship for a contribution of between 15 and 25-thousand dollars. The district leader denied it. Other witnesses quoted Tammany leaders as putting a price of 18 to 20-thousand dollars in campaign expenses for municipal judge positions.

In Israel, Prime Minister Ben Gurion's office announced that Albert Einstein has turned down a possible offer to be president of Israel. The approach was made by Ambassador Eban after the funeral of the late president Weizmann. Professor Einstein said he has no talent in the field of human relations, doesn't like to undertake tasks he cannot fulfill to the satisfaction of his conscience, prefers to continue his "contemplation of the world of nature and material without interruption."

In West Germany, the lower house of parliament defeated Chancellor Adenauer's appeal for quick ratification of treaties to rearm western Germany in alliance with the western nations. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that Adenauer's demand for quick action antagonized some members of his coalition, others played hookey, and the Chancellor failed to first assure himself of an absolute majority.

Before leaving Augusta today, General Eisenhower said that his rest there had "not been complete" - heavy correspondence had been a great burden. He regarded this as a sign that our people are determined to maintain a keen interest in governmental affairs. He looks forward to "critical and intelligent support" during the next four years, rather than blind support.

In Washington, crowds estimated at half-a-million greeted the General as he drove from the airport to the White House. The General waved first with one hand and then the other, and then clasped both hands over his head in the victorious prize fighter's salute to the crowd.

The President and President-elect talked privately for about twenty minutes; then for about an hour the two men talked in the company of their aides. Senator Lodge and Eisenhower's representative for fiscal matters, Joseph M.Dodge of Detroit, were with Eisenhower. Secretary of State Acheson, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, Secretary of Defense Lovett and Averill Harriman, the Mutual Security Administrator, were with the President. No record was made of the conversation. When General Eisenhower emerged he was grim and unsmiling. He said the briefing had been "very informative and instructive;" and in answer to questions from reporters he said he "wasn't going to say it twice."

Later the White House issued the following statement regarding the conversations: "We have discussed some of the most important problems affecting our country in the sphere of international relations. Information with respect to these problems has been made available to General Eisenhower.

"Under our constitution, the President must exercise his functions until he leaves office, and his successor cannot be asked to share or assume the responsibilities of the presidency until he takes office.

"We have worked out a framework of liaison and exchange of information between the present Administration and the incoming Administration, but we have made no arrangements which are inconsistent with the full spirit of our Constitution. General Eisenhower has not been asked to assume any of the responsibilities of the presidency until he takes the oath of office.

"We believe, however, that the arrangements we have made for cooperation will be of great value to the stability of our country and to the favorable progress of international affairs.

"We are confident that this meeting and the arrangements we have made today for liaison and cooperation between the present Administration and the new Administration furnish additional proof of the ability of the people of this country to manage their affairs with a sense of continuity and with responsibility."

As I read it that statement merely means that General Eisenhower was given certain information; arrangements were made for him to receive more; he accepts no responsibility for anything that is done between now and his Inauguration on January 20th.

After the White House meeting General Eisenhower went to the Pentagon, where he was briefed by Defense Secretary Lovett, General Omar Bradley and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Later the General flew to New York, where he will have a series of conferences tomorrow. In the course of the day General Eisenhower made it known that he is not yet sure when he will make his promised trip to Korea.

It is widely believed, although no one can prove it, that his promise to make that trip, coupled with the belief that somehow he could find an honorable solution to end the fighting, had a great deal to do with winning General Eisenhower the election. Korea will be only the first of a series of fateful decisions the new President will have to make. On that, as on most other matters, he is receiving conflicting advice. No incoming President has ever faced a greater variety of urgent and awesome decisions. There is no constitutional way in which the General can share the responsibility for decisions taken between now and the time of his Inauguration. That could not be done even though Truman and Eisenhower were both willing and eager for it to be that way, and there is no sign that they are.

Today's meeting at the White House had been billed as one that would in some way demonstrate to the world that our country is united in the "cause of freedom and peace." The statement didn't say anything about that. It could not reasonably have been expected to do so, for the degree of unity inside the Republican Party, and the country, will be largely determined by the men to whom Eisenhower entrusts power, and a clearer definition of the policies they are to execute. The two men arranged for an orderly transfer of government from one Party to another; and that's all that could have been expected. It would not be reasonable to believe that the hard words they spoke about each other during the campaign were uttered in a fit of absentmindedness.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It has been made clear that General Eisenhower will not assume any government responsibilities until taking office. Perhaps, at the White House meeting, President Truman was thinking of this line by Dorothy Sayers: "A trouble shared is a trouble halved." And possibly the General recalled Kipling's line: "Borrow trouble for yourself, but don't lend it to your neighbors."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Nov. 19, 1952

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower made it known today, that he fully supports the United Nations position against forcing prisoners of war in Korea to return to their homelands. Senator Wiley, a Republican member of our United Nations delegation, said this is what the general believes. Wiley was one of a number of visitors the General received, in his first day back in New York. Senators Taft and Bridges, and Representative Martin, conferred with him in the morning. Taft called it a "very harmonious meeting." He said he wanted to get an idea of how the General's mind is working, on legislative problems the new Congress will face. Taft said it was "a very satisfactory conference.. just what I wanted." The Ohioan also said: the group decided to extend, for a year, the law that permits the President to send Congress plans to reorganize executive agencies.... (this law expires on April first.) Taft said they discussed a number of other problems. He's recommended two or three persons for cabinet posts... doesn't think the general has made any decisions yet.. Taft himself is more interested in the economists who will be named to the President's economic advisory group.. and a joint congressional committee. Representative Martin is still hopeful that the budget can be balanced next year.

Senator Bridges conferred on inaugural plans with National Chairman Summerfield. The General also saw Mrs. Katherine Howard, secretary of the Republican national committee. She says the General is "very sincere" about wanting women in his administration; and "very possibly" will name one to his cabinet. American Legion Commander Lewis Gough said the General appears interested in his plan to start an all-out offensive against the enemy in Korea if the COMMUNISTS continue to stall the truce talks. Gough's plan includes bombing across the Yalu. Another visitor to Eisenhower headqaurters was Jack Porter, national committeeman from Texas. He thinks there will be changes in handling patronage matters. And the president-elect also conferred with Major General Ramey, director of air force operations.. (presumably on plans for his Korean trip.)

In Korea today, General Vandenbergh, air force chief of staff, said the Air Force is now in a position to "do anything the Administration wants done." He indicated that it might be necessary to call for planes from other theaters if the air operation IN KOREA is to be EXTENDED. Vandbergh also said our new jets, now in operation in Korea, have better performance, better weight carrying capacities, and ARE more manuverable, and can get off the ground quicker than the older type jets. Vandenbergh is accompanied by William Bullitt, our former ambassador to France and Russia.#

Today, the cold weather--8 above zero--kept the ground fighting to a minimum. And our jets hit an enemy headquarters and an oil plant 25 miles from the Manchurian border.

The Defense Department says we suffered another 839 casualties in Korea last week: 182 killed in action...65 missing...592 wounded.

In Singapore, British High Commissioner Sir Gerald Templer said defeinite progress has been made in the battle against Malayan Communists. He feels the war will be "a long one" there.

In Washington, President Truman tonight will tell the Association of Military Surgeons that the Eisenhower administration must do something to meet the nation's health needs..and other social and economic needs...if it is to give the people what they want. He said the attack on his proposed public health program has been led by "sadly mistaken mechanical men."

Price Stabilizer Woods told Congress today: he is suspending price ceilings on soft drinks. expects to lift ceilings on [redacted] all clothing and pork at wholesale.. and may suspend an order limiting the price slaughterers may pay for live cattle. Woods says that price controls should not be abandoned when the law expires at the end of next April. His experts report that if controls are dropped prices would go up immediately on 200 industrial materials and manufactured items.

In Chicago federal court today, John HARLAN, [redacted] attorney for the Du Pont company, charged that the government--in its anti-trust suit-- "seems to feel that the company is just too big." MR. HARLAN SAID: "Bigness is not yet an offense under the laws. --- The [redacted] government's theory that the Du Pont's are conducting "an extaordinary family conspiracy" is "fantastic and absurd."

Here in New York today, the Stock Market advanced to the highest point in 22 years. This was the third straight advance, and the experts say its due to a highly favorable economic showing by the nation as a whole.

A United Nations official says Secretary General Trygvie Lie has been invited by a federal grand jury to explain his charge that American employes of the U.N. have been subjected to "indiscriminate smears." This official says Mr. [redacted] Lie will not appear before the jury..and has asked the United States delegation what to do about the INVITATION. [redacted]

In Paris today, Spain was admitted to Unesco..the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The United States, Britain and France were among the 44 of the 65 members voting to approve Spain. Four nations were opposed..seven abstained. Spain now belongs to six of the U.N's specialized agencies.

Edward R. Murrow: November 19, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Senator Alexander Wiley, Republican of Wisconsin, came out of a conference with General Eisenhower today, saying that the General "expressed complete dedication to the principles of the United Nations," and re-emphasized his agreement with the principle of no forcible repatriation of Communist prisoners.

For about a year, both sides have been saying that this is the real point that has stalled the Korean truce negotiations. We have said we will force no one to go home; and the Communists have said every prisoner of war must go home whether he wants to or not. On Monday of this week the Indian Delegation ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ introduced a resolution at the United Nations, which said in effect, that after a cease-fire had been agreed to, all prisoners who wanted to go home could go. Any who remained in the prison camps ninety days after the cease-fire, would have their future status decided by a high-level Far East political conference. The United States Delegation immediately turned down this proposal, mainly, it appears, on the grounds that it gave the prisoners that we hold only one way out; either to go back to North Korea or China, or to remain indefinitely in the prison camps.

Today the Indian representative tried to make it clear that this would not be the case; that under his plan, prisoners would not be held indefinitely. Sir Percy Spender of Australia gave a qualified endorsement to the Indian proposal. On the face of it that proposal would appear to meet the major United States objection on the subject of prisoners of war. And the Australians want the consideration of that proposal to be given top priority. # The Communists yesterday appeared to soften their stand on this subject, when the Russian Delegation asked to revise the translation of one of its proposals; the change in language would merely direct a new United Nations commission to "extend all possible assistance in the repatriation of all prisoners by both sides", instead of actually requiring or demanding that they must be sent home.

Judged solely by the language of the resolution, the gap between our position and the Communist position is narrowing. Several of our allies, including the British, are inclined to think that we went off half-cocked in opposing the Indian resolution. They reason that the Russians, by their new translation, and the Indians, who have close contact with the Communist regime in ~~Nanking~~ Peiping have opened the door to settlement just a little, and we shouldn't have tried to slam it so abruptly. Our action is regarded, even by some of our friends, as a rigid, legalistic approach to an extremely delicate and difficult problem,- a problem no more likely to be solved by open and public diplomacy as was the Russian blockade of Berlin.

The Russians haven't yet made known their position on the Indian resolution, but if they should accept it they can pretty well isolate us from our allies in the United Nations.

The Russian request for a change in the translation of their own proposal may or may not be significant. The net effect of it is to soften their earlier demand that all prisoners must be sent home.

The language barrier in negotiations of this kind is a very real one. We once argued with the Russians at intervals over four months on the subject of restitution and reparations in connection with Germany - to discover at the end that in the Russian language there is no difference between the two words.

I do not intend to suggest that the Communists seriously desire a cease-fire in Korea, or that if one is achieved it will be anything more than a prelude to the final collision between the two forces that contend for control of this planet. I have not yet heard advanced sound reasons why the forces of Communism should wish, from their point of view, for a truce in Korea. It would seem, rather, that they have us where they want us. If agreement should be reached on the prisoner of war issue they would,

on the basis of their previous record, as they did with the Austrian Peace Treaty, find another reason for delay, another obstacle to agreement. # But this is something of which we cannot be sure. # One of the arts of diplomacy, should be to frustrate the desires of an opponent, without offending or losing ones allies. / The Russians have spelled out for us in great detail their ultimate objective; it is to separate us from our allies. # The hair-trigger action of our delegation at the United Nations in condemning - with unseemly haste - the Indian proposal on the one subject which we have said repeatedly is the one blocking agreement, has neither thwarted our enemy, nor enthused our allies. / If we persist in our policy we may well gain nothing more than a defensive position in the eyes of our friends; and far from damaging our enemy, we will have contributed substantially to his long-range plan of dividing the Western alliance.

It would seem possible that the area of disagreement in negotiating a truce in Korea could be substantially narrowed if everyone concerned fully knew and understood what the other meant. There are those who agree with Voltaire's observation:"If you wish to converse with me, define your terms." There are others who go along with A.J. Gordon's theory that "it is easy for disputants to evade facts by entrenching themselves behind a definition."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower made it known today that he fully supports the United Nations position against forcing prisoners of war in Korea to return to their homelands. Senator Wiley, a Republican member of our United Nations delegation, said this is what the general believes. Wiley was one of a number of visitors the General received in his first day back in New York. Senators Taft and Bridges and Representative Martin conferred with him in the morning. Taft called it a "very harmonious meeting." He said he wanted to get an idea of how the General's mind is working on legislative problems the new Congress will face. Taft said it was "a very satisfactory conference - just what I wanted." The Ohioan also said that the group decided to extend for a year the law that permits the President to send Congress plans to reorganize executive agencies (this law expires on April first. Taft said they discussed a number of other problems. He's recommended two or three persons for cabinet posts, doesn't think the general has made any decisions yet. Taft himself is more interested in the economists who will be named to the President's economic advisory group, and a joint congressional committee. Representative Martin is still hopeful that the budget can be balanced next year.

Senator Bridges conferred on inaugural plans with National Chairman summerfield. The General also saw Mrs. Katherine Howard, secretary of the Republican national committee. She says the General is "very sincere" about wanting women in his administration; and "very possibly" will name one to his cabinet. American Legion Commander Lewis Gough said the General appears interested in his plan to start an all-out offensive against the enemy in Korea if the Communists continue to stall the truce talks. Gough's plan includes bombing across the Yalu. Another visitor to Eisenhower headquarters was Jack Porter, national committeeman from Texas. He thinks there will be changes in handling patronage matters. And the president-elect also conferred with Major General Ramey, director of air force operations (presumably on plans for his Korean trip.

In Korea today, General Vandenbergh, air force chief of staff, said the Air Force is now in a position to "do anything the Administration wants done." He indicated that it might be necessary to call for planes from other theaters if the air operation in Korea is to be extended. Vandenbergh also said our new jets, now in operation in Korea, have better performance, better weight carrying capacities, and are more manuverable and can get off the ground quicker than the older type jets. Vandenbergh is accompanied by William Bullitt, our former ambassador to France and Russia. Today, the cold weather - 8 above zero - kept the ground fighting to a minimum. And our jets hit an enemy headquarters and an oil plant 25 miles from the Manchurian border.

The Defense Department says we suffered another 839 casualties in Korea last week: 182 killed in action - 65 missing - 592 wounded.

In Singapore, British High Commissioner Sir Gerald Templer said definite progress has been made in the battle against Malayan Communists. He feels the war will be "a long one" there.

In Washington, President Truman tonight will tell the Association of Military Surgeons that the Eisenhower administration must do something to meet the nation's health needs, and other social and economic needs, if it is to give the people what they want. He said the attack on his proposed public health program has been led by "sadly mistaken mechanical men."

Price Stabilizer Woods told Congress today: he is suspending price ceilings on soft drinks and expects to lift ceilings on all clothing and pork at wholesale, and may suspend an order limiting the price slaughterers may pay for live cattle. Woods says that price controls should not be abandoned when the law expires at the end of next April. His experts report that if controls are dropped, prices would go up immediately on 200 industrial materials and manufactured items.

In Chicago federal court today, John Harlan, attorney for the Du Pont company, charged that the government in its anti-trust suit "seems to feel that the company is just too big." Mr. Harlan said, "bigness is not yet an offense under the laws." The government's theory that the Du Pont's are conducting "an extraordinary family conspiracy" is "factastic and absurd."

Here in New York today, the Stock Market advanced to the highest point in 22 years. This was the third straight advance and the experts say its due to a highly favorable economic showing by the nation as a whole.

A United Nations official says Secretary General Trygve Lie has been invited by a federal grand jury to explain his charge that American employees of the U.N. have been subjected to "indiscriminate smears." This official says Mr. Lie will not appear before the jury, and has asked the United States delegation what to do about the invitation.

In Paris today, Spain was admitted to UNESCO - the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Curtural Organization. The United States, Britain and France were among the 44 of the 65 members voting to approve Spain. Four nations were opposed, seven abstained. Spain now belongs to six of the U.N.'s specialized agencies.

Senator Alexander Wiley, Republican of Wisconsin, came out of a conference with General Eisenhower today saying that the General "expressed complete dodication to the principles of the United Nations," and re-emphasized his agreement with the principle of no forcible repatriation of Communist prisoners.

For about a year both sides have been saying that this is the real point that has stalled the Korean truce negotiations. We have said we will force no one to go home; and the Communists have said every prisoner of war must go home whether he wants to or not. On Monday of this week the Indian Delegation introduced a resolution at the United Nations, which said in effect that after a cease-fire had been agreed to, all prisoners who wanted to go home could go. Any who remained in the prison camps ninety days after the cease-fire would have their future status decided by a high-level Far East political conference. The United States Delegation immediately turned down this proposal, mainly, it appears, on the grounds that it gave the prisoners that we hold only one way out; either to go back to North Korea or China, or to remain indefinitely in the prison camps.

Today the Indian representative tried to make it clear that this would not be the case; that under his plan, prisoners would not be held indefinitely. Sir Percy Spender of Australia gave a qualified endorsement to the Indian proposal. On the face of it that proposal would appear to meet the major United States objection on the subject of prisoners of war. And the Australians want the consideration of that proposal to be given top priority. The Communists yesterday appeared to soften their stand on this subject, when the Russian Delegation asked to revise the translation of one of its proposals; the change in language would merely direct a new United Nations commission to "extend all possible assistance in the repatriation of all prisoners by both sides", instead of actually requiring or demanding that they must be sent home.

Judged solely by the language of the resolution, the gap between our position and the Communist position is narrowing. Several of our allies, including the British, are inclined to think that we went off half-cocked in opposing the Indian resolution. They reason that the Russians, by their new translation, and the Indians, who have close contact with the Communist regime in Peiping have opened the door to settlement just a little, and we shouldn't have tried to slam it so abruptly. Our action is regarded, even by some of our friends, as a rigid, legalistic approach to an extremely delicate and difficult problem, a problem no more likely to be solved by open and public diplomacy, as was the Russian blockade of Berlin.

The Russians haven't yet made known their position on the Indian resolution, but if they should accept it, they can pretty well isolate us from our allies in the United Nations.

The Russian request for a change in the translation of their own proposal may or may not be significant. The net effect of it, is to soften their earlier demand that all prisoners must be sent home.

The language barrier in negotiations of this kind is a very real one. We once argued with the Russians, at intervals over four months, on the subject of restitution and reparations in connection with Germany - to discover at the end that in the Russian language there is no difference between the two words.

I do not intend to suggest that the Communists seriously desire a cease-fire in Korea, or that if one is achieved it will be anything more than a prelude to the final collision between the two forces that contend for control of this planet. I have not yet heard advanced sound reasons why the forces of Communism should wish, from their point of view, for a truce in Korea. It would seem, rather, that they have us where they want us. If agreement should be reached on the prisoner of war issue they would, on the basis of their previous record, as they did with the Austrian Peace Treaty, find another reason for delay, another obstacle to agreement. But this is something of which we cannot be sure. One of the arts of diplomacy should be to frustrate the desires of an opponent, without offending or losing ones allies. The Russians have spelled out for us in great detail their ultimate objective; it is to separate us from our allies. The hair-trigger action of our delegation at the United Nations in condemning - with unseemly haste - the Indian proposal on the one subject which we have said repeatedly is the one blocking agreement, has neither thwarted our enemy, nor enthused our allies. If we persist in our policy we may well gain nothing more than a defensive position in the eyes of our friends; and far from damaging our enemy, we will have contributed substantially to his long-range plan of dividing the Western alliance.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem possible that the area of disagreement in negotiating a truce in Korea could be substantially narrowed if everyone concerned fully knew and understood what the other meant. There are those who agree with Voltaire's observation: "If you wish to converse with me, define your terms." There are others who go along with A.J. Gordon's theory that "it is easy for disputants to evade facts by entrenching themselves behind a definition."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday November 20, 1952

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower has named John Foster Dulles to be his secretary of state. Mr. Dulles issued a statement saying: "General Eisenhower is a great and purposeful leader. His desire for our nation, is a just and durable peace. I shall gladly serve in that cause, to the best of my ability." The General made two other cabinet appointments..to take office, with Senate confirmation, after January 20th. The new secretary of defense will be Charles E. Wilson..the 62-year-old president of General Motors..and no relation to the Charles E. Wilson who recently served as defense mobilizer. The General named the governor of Oregon..Douglas Mc Kay, who is 59, to be his secretary of Interior. Both Mr. Wilson and Gov. McKay said their appointments were a surprise. In a few minutes I'd like to summarize the background of these three men.

The General also conferred today with [redacted] British Foreign Secretary Eden. Mr. Eden said they talked about the international situation. HAROLD ..Stassen sat in at lunch.

Later Mr. Eden told the United Nations Political committee, that he believes India's proposal for a solution of the Korean war brings the U.N. nearer agreement.. he "prays the committee will agree to accept it." He offered some revisions which American officials called "constructive". But it appears that the Indian delegation may not be able to agree to the Eden proposals: to name a specific agency to care for prisoners who refuse to return home.. and to give the "umpire" on the four man repatriation commission a "regular" seat in its deliberations. There is no comment from the Russians.

Defense Secretary Lovett announced today, some of the plans for General Eisenhower's trip to Korea. [redacted] There will be no announcement of when he leaves..when he gets there..when he leaves Korea. News of his activities should NOT be published until after he starts for home. The Secretary trusts that the American people, the press, radio , television and newsreels will co-operate in this. Eisenhower's press Secretary, James Hagerty, says the General will be accompanied by one newspaper reporter..one photographer..one newsreel camerman. There are no provisions for [redacted] any radio or television reporters. The Radio Correspondents Association and others are protesting this, [redacted]

In Korea today our air force carried out the heaviest air attack and rocket barrage of the 37-day battle on the central front. But the Chinese continued their small attacks on Sniper Ridge. In air battles, we claim to have destroyed five enemy Migs and damaged two others which tried to interfere with a raid on enemy troop concentrations south of the Manchurian border.

President Truman told Washington reporters today that he is happy that General Eisenhower has made it known that he favors the Administration's stand against forcing any KOREAN war prisoners to go home. The President said this and the Iranian problem were among those discussed when the General visited the White House on Tuesday. Mr. Truman also told the reporters: the election is over.. we are trying to get things in shape for an orderly turnover of the government... we want to let the world know that this country is a unified organization in its policy towards the rest of the world. [redacted]

A Senate Labor subcommittee reported today on its study of the economic status of the more than 15 and a half MILLION Negroes in America. Chairman Humphrey of Minnesota, says the report shows that in almost every measureable social and economic characteristic...such as life expectancy, education, employment, income...the Negroes, as a group, are not as well off as the whites. And, he says, in almost every instance, both groups have made improvements in recent years..and the gap between them has narrowed. The Senator believes this shows the need for laws providing equal opportunities for employment, adequate housing, and more education and health facilities for all Americans.

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana--who is scheduled to become chairman of the Banking Committee--said today that the new Congress will approve some form of price, wage and rent controls, whether or not President-elect Eisenhower approves.

The Government steel industry advisory committee suggested today that allocations of steel for civilian production be removed on April first.

Here in New York today, Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, said that the greatest threat to our national security is the refusal of our people to face the fact that the struggle against Communism cannot be won in a few years.. He believes we can triumph over Communism, without an atomic war, before "this century is done", if: we remain militarily and economically strong through a long period of partial mobilization.

In Prague today, the Czehoslovakian government started another purge trial..this one could be the biggest in the History of Communism. All of our information comes from the Prague radio..no western correspondets are there. The top defendent, Rudolf Slansky, former boss of Czech Communists, hurriedly confessed that he is guilty of espionage..murder.. sabotage and treason. He said he never really was a communist..is an enemy of the people.. in the service of Anglo-American imperialists.. part of a Jewish, bourgeoise nationadist conspiracy to overthrow the Czech regime he formerly bossed. Slansky said the other 13 defendents, including former foreign minister Vladimir Clementis, are equally guilty.

It was in Chicago...the night he was nominated...that General Eisenhower solemnly stated:"We go out from here with unbounded trust in the American people. We go out from here to merit their unbounded trust in us." Today, the President-elect named his first three cabinet appointees. It would seem that this is an appropriate time to briefly study what manner of men they are.

Possibly the least known of the three is Douglas Mc Kay...Governor of Oregon since 1949...a former state Senator...and one-time mayor of Salem. Governor Mc Kay, named to be Secretary of the Interior, once worked as a newsboy...later went into the automobile business...is a veteran of both world wars...is a past Commander of the American legion. He's 59.

Charles E. Wilson, who is to become our new Secretary of Defense, is 62. Like his new boss, Wilson once had a childhood ambition to be a locomotive engineer. He wound up an electrical engineer. Mr. Wilson...distinguished by a mass of white hair...a slight stoop...and a quiet, deliberate voice... worked his way through the labirinths of General Motors. In 1941, he became what every enterprising young man hopes to be: President...of GM.

During the war years, Mr. Wilson was a Leader in converting Detroit's massive auto assembly lines to war production. (WAS BOTH COUNSELOR AND AIDE TO SEVERAL CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES) He now assumes direction of the World's Largest Corporation: The Defense Department. He will cut all ties with General Motors, if confirmed. Says Eisenhower is the only man in the world for whom he'd do this.

John Foster Dulles is two years older than Mr. Wilson...but like the proposed Defense Secretary is tall, greying and deliberate of speech. He too is a quiet, restrained man. As Secretary of State, he will attempt to direct...and in some measure initiate...our dealings with the rest of the world. He has a grim and grinding task. Mr. Dulles is a graduate of Princeton...was and is the chief partner in the law firm of Cromwell and Sullivan. He got his first State Department Assignment at the age of 29... was reparations counsel at the Paris Peace Conference following the first World War...later served as a Delegate to the United Nations...as consultant to Secretary of State Acheson...and was architect of the Japanese Peace Treaty.

Early this year, Mr. Dulles resigned from the government...made a flying visit to Eisenhower's NATO Headquarters in Paris...served as mediator between the Taft and Eisenhower factions in writing the Republican Foreign Policy Platform in Chicago.

The nature of his success in trying to bring the two opposing sides together is evident. On June 7th, this year, Eisenhower said he agreed with the views of Mr. Dulles. On June 24th, in Hershey, Pennsylvania, Senator Taft said: "My foreign policy views are substantially the same as those of General Mac Arthur and John Foster Dulles."

On the occadion of that June speech, Eisenhower went farther: he said Dulles was right when he suggested that we can not draw a little geographic line around the world and say:"Here is a chip on my shoulder, don't try and knock it off."

Mr. Dulles. like the Presidident-elect, agrees...by past speeches...that our soldiers in Korea can be replaced effectively by South Koreans. Mr. Dulles, however, is on the record as saying we must not pull out of Korea until the national government there can provide two things: effective civil administration and effective security forces.

Mr. Dulles...late in August, said he wasn't sure that a third World War could be avoided. But if it is to be, he listed ~~this~~ these five requirements: greater patriotism, vision, boldness, strength and dynamism. Mr. Dulles apparently believes that the Russians are trying to use Korea as "a road to victory over the west." He thinks the British should involve themselves in a "closer partnership" in the Pacific. He is also convinced that we should not permit Moscow to fashion our foreign policy. We have to take the initiative; get off the defensive. And toward this end, he contends our foreign policy must be based foremost on military strength.

My colleague, ~~David~~ PAUL Niven, cables from London tonight, that the British are seriously concderned over the fact that Foreign Secretary Eden may not be able to work ~~effectively~~ effectively with Mr. Dulles. David Schoenbrun cables from Paris that the French are fearful that the new administration will build up Germany, instead of France.

There is a saying that "by their deeds ye shall know them." These first appointees will have ample time to set their sights before the opposition starts firing. They might assume office by recalling these lines from General Eisenhower's acceptance speech in Chicago: "We must use our power wisely...for the good of all our people."

Next to the President,Mr Dulles will carry the heaviest load in the new administration...he wrote the foreign policy plank for the Republican convention...he has vast knowledge of international affairs..and knows how the state department works...his task will be to carry out Eisenhowers foreign policy and he is thoroughly familiar with the Generals views..He is acceptable to Taft,to Dewey,and to the president elect...his appointment comes as no surprise...and his forign policy probably wont contain many startling surprises either.

Those who assume responsibility next January will doubtless seek advice. The problem is: who's advice to seek. Edmund Burke once remarked:"You can never plan the future by the past."m On the other hand, Patrick Henry concluded:"I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Whatever the case, the great majority of us would probably go along with Jefferson, who said:"I like the dreams of the future better than the history of the past."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower has named John Foster Dulles to be his secretary of state. Mr. Dulles issued a statement saying: "General Eisenhower is a great and purposeful leader. His desire for our nation is a just and durable peace. I shall gladly serve in that cause to the best of my ability." The General made two other cabinet appointments to take office, with Senate confirmation, after January 20th. The new secretary of defense will be Charles E. Wilson, the 62-year-old president of General Motors, and no relation to the Charles E. Wilson who recently served as defense mobilizer. The General named the governor of Oregon, Douglas McKay, who is 59, to be his secretary of Interior. Both Mr. Wilson and Governor McKay said their appointments were a surprise. In a few minutes I'd like to summarize the background of these three men.

The General also conferred today with British Foreign Secretary Eden. Mr. Eden said they talked about the international situation. Harold Stassen sat in at lunch.

Later Mr. Eden told the United Nations Political committee that he believes India's proposal for a solution of the Korean war brings the U.N. nearer agreement. He "prays the committee will agree to accept it." He offered some revisions which American officials called "constructive". But it appears that the Indian delegation may not be able to agree to the Eden proposals: to name a specific agency to care for prisoners who refuse to return home, and to give the "umpire" on the four-man repatriation commission a "regular" seat in its deliberations. There is no comment from the Russians.

Defense Secretary Lovett announced today some of the plans for General Eisenhower's trip to Korea. There will be no announcement of when he leaves, when he gets there, when he leaves Korea. News of his activities should not be published until after he starts for home. The Secretary trusts that the American people, the press, radio, television and newsreels will cooperate in this. Eisenhower's press Secretary, James Hagerty, says the General will be accompanied by one newspaper reporter, one photographer, one newsreel cameraman. There are no provisions for any radio or television reporters. The Radio Correspondents Association and others are protesting this.

In Korea today our air force carried out the heaviest air attack and rocket barrage of the 37-day battle on the central front. But the Chinese continued their small attacks on Sniper Ridge. In air battles, we claim to have destroyed five enemy Migs and damaged two others which tried to interfere with a raid on enemy troop concentrations south of the Manchurian border.

President Truman told Washington reporters today that he is happy that General Eisenhower has made it known that he favors the Administration's stand against forcing any Korean war prisoners to go home. The President said this and the Iranian problem were among those discussed when the General visited the White House on Tuesday. Mr. Truman also told the reporters: the election is over. We are trying to get things in shape for an orderly turnover of the government. We want to let the world know that this country is a unified organization in its policy towards the rest of the world.

A Senate Labor subcommittee reported today on its study of the economic status of the more than 15 and a half million Negroes in America. Chairman Humphrey of Minnesota, says the report shows that in almost every measurable social and economic characteristic such as life expectancy, education, employment, income, the Negroes, as a group, are not as well off as the whites. And, he says, in almost every instance, both groups have made improvements in recent years, and the gap between them has narrowed. The Senator believes this shows the need for laws providing equal opportunities for employment, adequate housing, and more education and health facilities for all Americans.

Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana, who is scheduled to become chairman of the Banking Committee said today that the new Congress will approve some form of price, wage and rent controls, whether or not President-elect Eisenhower approves.

The Government steel industry advisory committee suggested today that allocations of steel for civilian production be removed on April first.

Here in New York today, Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, said that the greatest threat to our national security is the refusal of our people to face the fact that the struggle against Communism cannot be won in a few years. He believes we can triumph over Communism, without an atomic war, before "this century is done", if: we remain militarily and economically strong through a long period of partial mobilization.

In Prague today, the Czechoslavakian government started another purge trial, this one could be the biggest in the history of Communism. All of our information comes from the Prague radio - no western correspondents are there. The top defendent, Rudolf Slansky, former boss of Czech Communists, hurriedly confessed that he is guilty of espionage, murder, sabotage and treason. He said he never really was a communist - is an enemy of the people - in the service of Anglo-American imperialists - part of a "Jewish, bourgeoise nationalist" conspiracy to overthrow the Czech regime he formerly bossed. Slansky said the other 13 defendents, including former foreign minister Vladimir Clementis, are equally guilty.

It was in Chicago - the night he was nominated - that General Eisenhower solemnly stated: "We go out from here with unbounded trust in the American people. We go out from here to merit their unbounded trust in us." Today, the President-elect named his first three cabinet appointees. It would seem that this is an appropriate time to briefly study what manner of men they are.

Possibly the least known of the three is Douglas McKay, Governor of Oregon since 1949, a former state Senator, and one-time mayor of Salem. Governor

McKay, named to be Secretary of the Interior, once worked as a newsboy, later went into the automobile business, is a veteran of both world wars, is a past Commander of the American legion. He's 59. Charles E. Wilson, who is to become our new Secretary of Defense, is 62. Like his new boss, Wilson once had a childhood ambition to be a locomotive engineer. He wound up an electrical engineer. Mr. Wilson, distinguished by a mass of white hair, a slight stoop and a quiet, deliberate voice, worked his way through the labirinths of General Motors. In 1941, he became what every enterprising young man hopes to be: President of General Motors.

During the war years, Mr. Wilson was a leader in converting Detroit's massive auto assembly lines to war production; was both counselor and aide to several congressional committees. He now assumes direction of the World's Largest Corporation: The Defense Department. He will cut all ties with General Motors, if confirmed. Says Eisenhower is the only man in the world for whom he'd do this.

John Foster Dulles is two years older than Mr. Wilson, but like the proposed Defense Secretary is tall, greying and deliberate of speech. He too is a quiet, restrained man. As Secretary of State, he will attempt to direct, and in some measure initiate, our dealings with the rest of the world. He has a grim and grinding task. Mr. Dulles is a graduate of Princeton, was and is the chief partner in the law firm of Cromwell and Sullivan. He got his first State Department Assignment at the age of 29 - was reparations counsel at the Paris Peace Conference following the first World War - later served as a Delegate to the United Nations, as consultant to Secretary of State Acheson, and was architect of the Japanese Peace Treaty.

Early this year, Mr. Dulles resigned from the government, made a flying visit to Eisenhower's NATO Headquarters in Paris - served as mediator between the Taft and Eisenhower factions in writing the Republican Foreign Policy Platform in Chicago.

The nature of his success in trying to bring the two opposing sides together is evident. On June 7th, this year, Eisenhower said he agreed with the views of Mr. Dulles. On June 24th, in Hershey, Pennsylvania, Senator Taft said: "My foreign policy views are substantially the same as those of General MacArthur and John Foster Dulles."

On the occasion of that June speech, Eisenhower went further: he said Dulles was right when he suggested that we cannot draw a little geographic line around the world and say: "Here is a chip on my shoulder, don't try and knock it off."

Mr. Dulles, like the President-elect, agrees, by past speeches, that our soldiers in Korea can be replaced effectively by South Koreans. Mr. Dulles, however, is on the record as saying we must not pull out of Korea until the national government there can provide two things: effective civil administration and effective security forces.

Mr. Dulles, late in August, said he wasn't sure that a third World War could be avoided. But if it is to be, he listed these five requirements: greater patriotism, vision, boldness, strength and dynamism. Mr. Dulles apparently believes that the Russians are trying to use Korea as "a road to victory over the west." He thinks the British should involve themselves in a "closer partnership" in the Pacific. He is also convinced that we should not permit Moscow to fashion our foreign policy. We have to take the initiative; get off the defensive. And toward this end, he contends our foreign policy must be based foremost on military strength. My colleague, Paul Niven, cables from London tonight that the British are seriously concerned over the fact that Foreign Secretary Eden may not be able to work effectively with Mr. Dulles. David Schoenbrun cables from Paris that the French are fearful that the new administration will build up Germany, instead of France.

Next to the President, Mr. Dulles will carry the heaviest load in the new administration. He wrote the foreign policy plank for the Republican convention. He has vast knowledge of international affairs, and knows how the State Department works. His task will be to carry out Eisenhower's foreign policy, and he is thoroughly familiar with the General's views. He is acceptable to Taft, to Dewey, and to the president-elect. His appointment comes as no surprise, and his foreign policy probably won't contain many startling surprises either.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Those who assume responsibility next January will doubtless seek advice. The problem is: who's advice to seek. Edmund Burke once remarked: "You can never plan the future by the past." On the other hand, Patrick Henry concluded: "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Whatever the case, the great majority of us would probably go along with Jefferson, who said: "I like the dreams of the future better than the history of the past."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday November 21, 1952 11/21/52

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower made three more major appointments today. He named George E. Humphrey of Cleveland, to be secretary of the treasury.. Herbert Brownell, Junior, to be attorney general...and Harold Stassen to be director of the mutual security agency.

Mr. Humphrey, is less well known than Brownell or Stassen. He's 62.. board chairman of the big M.A. Hanna STEEL company.. chairman of Pittsburgh CONSOLIDATION Coal Company (the world's biggest soft coal mines.) He's an executive official of such other corporations as: National Steel....National City Bank of Cleveland...Phelps Dodge.. Industrial Rayon and the Susquehehanna Anthracite Company of Cleveland. Mr. Humphrey says his appointment is a surprise.. He has supported Ohio's Senator Taft every time Taft ran for office. Since Chicago he has supported Eisenhower. ~~But he never~~ had any personal relations with the General, until three days ago when he spent three hours talking with him. Mr. Humphrey says he has no idea whether Senator TAFT supported him for the cabinet post. Reporters asked David Ingalls, Taft's convention campaign manager, whether this appoitnment might be interpretaed as a move to "appease" the Taft forces in the party. Mr. Ingalls replied: "The wording is a little strong but essentially that's what you'd call it I guess."

~~Shortly after Mr. Humphrey's appointment was announced, Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia told reporters that some influential people" had approached him with regard to an appointment in the Eisenhower cabinet.. presumably as secretary of the treasury. The Senator said he felt obligated to the people of Virginia to remain in the Senate. He is enthusiastic in his support of Mr. Humphrey for the job.~~

The second cabinet appointment made by General Eisenhower today.. Herbert Brownell, Junior to be attorney general.. suprised few people. Mr. Brownell has served as a close adviser to the General both in the pre-convention fight for the nomination and throughout the campaign. The 48-year-old lawyer had also served Governor Dewey in a similar way in Dewey's 1944 and 1948 campaigns. Brownell has been a lawyer with a New York firm for 20 years.. he was born in Peru, Nebraska.

The first thing Mr. Brownell did today was to phone J. Edgar Hoover and ask him to REMAIN as head of the F.B.I. He also told reporters that he has HIGH ON HIS AGENDA a review of anti-trust suits now on file in the Justice Department. He pledges to conduct his office with impartiality.. in fairness and justice to all the people of the country.

F.B.I. Chief Hoover Received another message from a designated cabinet member today when John Foster Dulles, named yesterday to be secretary of state, asked Mr. Hoover to conduct a complete investigation of his life and record...and then report it to the General. Mr. Dulles says there must not be a taint of suspicion in the State Department he will run, from top to bottom.

The third appointment made by General Eisenhower today was Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator..the job now held by Averell Harriman. Mr. Stassen, former governor of Minnesota and now president of the University of Pennsylvania, says he is thrilled by the honor of the appointment. He said: "My only regret is that it will mean ending my work at the university of Pennsylvania"..(where he has served for four years.) Mr. Stassen was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican presidential nomination at the [redacted] last three party conventions.

For General Eisenhower these appointments were only part of a very busy day. AMONG OTHERS, he saw Senator Smith of New Jersey, who later told reporters the General will go ONLY to Korea..not to Japan or any other countries. The Senator also says he told the General he [redacted] believes the Korean truce talks are of secondary importance.. the root of the problem lies elswhwere. [redacted]

(Charles E. Wilson..who is to become defense secretary..will accompany General Eisenhower on the Korean trip.)

Eisenhower today also saw: Senator Lodge, who told reporters he doesn't know what he's going to do in the new Administration. [redacted]

Tonight the General is in Washington to attend a reunion of his West Point class of 1915. [redacted]

President Truman said today that when the General visited him on Tuesday the President-elect was "appalled" at the burdens of the [redacted] office he assumes in January. Mr. Truman told the government's top security officers:"I don't think anyone realizes the [redacted] immensity of the problems that face the president of the United States. He makes a decision every day that can affect anywhere from 100-million to one and a half billion people."

William Green, the president of the A.F. Of L. died today. The 82-year-old labor leader died in his Coshocton, Ohio, home of a heart ailment.. just 12 days after Phillip Murray , the head of the C.I.O., died of a heart attack in a San Fransisco hotel. [redacted] President Truman says Mr. Green "was a fine American patriot who dedicated his life to the service of those who worked." And President-elect Eisenhower describes Mr. Green as "a real American and a great national figure."

[redacted]

Attorney General Mc Granery today announced that two officers of the independent Electrical workers union have been indicted on charges of falsely swearing that they are not communists. The indicted officers are: Walter Lohmann and Everest Hupman, both of [redacted] OHIO. Mr. Mc Granery also ordered steps to be taken to take away the citizenship of Vito Genovese, who is described as a New York and New Jersey racketeer. Two years ago Governor Dewey called Genovese the king of the rackets in this country. Federal Judge Kaufman, here in New York, has set the week of January 12th for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, convicted atomic spies.

At the United Nations, the United States and its major allies now appear ready to accept. (with amendments). India's proposal for Korea. Prime Minister Nehru says this is a step which might "well lead to lightening the tremendous burden that is oppressing huamnity." But Russian newspapers indicate their delegates will oppose the Indian plan.

In Korea today, there was little ground fighting. Our planes again attacked an enemy military center near the Manchurian border.

And in Czechoslvakia..according to the Prague radio.. former Foreign Minister Clementis confessed to everything the Communists wanted him to confess to. The Prague broadcasts indicate that the whole trial is developing into an attack on Jews all over the world..(.11 of the 14 defendents are Jewish.)

Edward R. Murrow: November 21, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

On very rare occasions, and when the news permits, we devote a little time to subjects which might not be regarded as news of national interest. Tonight is one of those times. A group of former foreign correspondents here in New York has determined to create what we believe to be a suitable memorial to war correspondents killed in the late war and in Korea. Their casualties were high. Those of us who were more fortunate, or less courageous desire to do them honor in a fashion which we think they would approve. (It may be that some of you will be disposed to participate in this undertaking.) To tell you about this project I have asked my old friend and colleague, Quent Reynolds, to share this microphone tonight.

Back in 1942 when General Eisenhower arrived in London to take command of our troops, he called the American war correspondents together. ~~He~~ And told us quite bluntly that he was going to use us. He said, "I want you men to act as the connecting link between the men at the front and their families at home."

This was the job of the war correspondent then, just as it is the job of the correspondent in Korea today. Men like Ernie Pyle of the Scripps-Howard paper, H. R. Knickerbocker of the Hearst papers, and Ralph Barnes of the Herald Tribune, Raymond Clapper, the ~~Scripps~~ columnist, were among those who did their jobs well. They did form the link between you and your sons.

They aren't around to do the same job for you now; ~~if they were, they'd be in Korea~~. There were ~~fifty-nine~~ among the 64 war correspondents who ~~didn't come back from World War II.~~ did not come back

There is an old axiom in our trade--nothing is deader than yesterday's newspaper. The stories that make page one news today are forgotten tomorrow, but we haven't forgotten the men who wrote the page one stories of the war and who died in the performance of their duty. We, their colleagues of the Overseas Press Club, ~~remember the fifty-nine who died, and we~~ have decided to honor their memory in a way we know they would have liked best. Tonight the Overseas Press Club begins a drive for funds to build a clubhouse in New York which will perpetuate the memory of our dead colleagues. INSERT

A handful of foreign correspondents cannot build this memorial alone ~~(although all are contributing magnificently)~~ -- we are asking the public to share this responsibility with us.

Perhaps Ernie Pyle once touched your heart when ~~he interviewed a G.I. who might have been your son~~; perhaps brilliant Raymond you read his stories;

Clapper once helped explain perplexing questions of foreignpolicy to you, or maybe H. R. Knickerbocker, ~~whom we called Knick~~, made you feel what it was like to be in battle ~~the day our [redacted] Bough~~. If you feel a sense of gratitude toward them and to the others who died, help us build this memorial to these men ~~clubhouse~~. Clare Boothe Luce, Lowell Thomas, John Daly, Bob Considine, Ed Murrow--these are some of the members of the Overseas Press Club who are leading this drive and who ask your support. If you'd like to help, send a check to the ~~Memorial Fund Campaign~~ The Correspondents Fund - TC. ~~I repeat the address, Memorial Fund Campaign~~ Ed Murrow R CBS.

The Government is convinced of the value of an Overseas Press Club building in New York and has become ourpartner inthis venture to the extent that all contributions tothe ~~Memorial Fund Campaign~~ Corresp Fund are tax-exempt.

3:25

New York the site of the UN, one of the real ~~centers~~ centers of world news is one of the few important cities of the world which does not have a press club. There is one in London in Paris in Berlin in Rome - ~~ebn~~ in Belgrade and in Caiorl ~~And here foreign correspondents meet and exchange ideas.~~ Pres A press club is a market place of free thought where out of the clash of opinion, sober valid judgements are formed and are then in turn passed on by the correspondents to their readers or listeners. ~~A press club is as necessary to the development of experienced correspondents~~ the

We are asking you to support a fund drive because those, in whose memory it is being undertaken, can not be here tonight to speak for themselves. It is true, as Shakespeare said in Henry the Fourth:"Can honour set a leg... or an arm...or take away the grief of a wound ? No!" But honor can be remembered. And Swinburne was right when he said:"I shall remember while the light lives yet, and in the night-time I shall not forget."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower made three more major appointments today. He named George E. Humphrey of Cleveland to be secretary of the treasury, Herbert Brownell, Junior, to be attorney general, and Harold Stassen to be director of the mutual security agency.

Mr. Humphrey is less well known than Brownell or Stassesn. He's 62, board chairman of the big M.A. Hanna Steel Company, chairman of Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Company, the world's biggest soft coal mines. He's an executive official of such other corporations as: National Steel, National City Bank of Cleveland, Phelps Dodge, Industrial Rayon and the Susquehanna Anthracite Company of Cleveland. Mr. Humphrey says his appointment is a surprise. He has supported Ohio's Senator Taft every time Taft ran for office. Since Chicago he has supported Eisenhower, but he never had any personal relations with the General until three days ago when he spent three hours talking with him. Mr. Humphrey says he has no idea whether Senator Taft supported him for the cabinet post. Reporters asked David Ingalls, Taft's convention campaign manager whether this appointment might be interpreted as a move to "appease" the Taft forces in the party. Mr. Ingalls replied: "The wording is a little strong, but essentially that's what you'd call it, I guess."

The second cabinet appointment made by General Eisenhower today, Herbert Brownell, Jr., to be attorney general, surprised few people. Mr. Brownell has served as a close adviser to the General, both in the pre-convention fight for the nomination and throughout the campaign. The 48-year-old lawyer had also served Governor Dewey in a similar way in Dewey's 1944 and 1948 campaigns. Brownell has been a lawyer with a New York firm for 20 years, and was born in Peru, Nebraska. The first thing Mr. Brownell did today was to phone J. Edgar Hoover and ask him to remain as head of the F.B.I. He also told reporters that he has high on his agenda, a review of anti-trust suits now on file in the Justice Department. He pledges to conduct his office with impartiality, in fairness and justice to all the people of the country.

F.B.I. Chief Hoover received another message from a designated cabinet member today when John Foster Dulles, named yesterday to be secretary of state, asked Mr. Hoover to conduct a complete investigation of his life and record... and then report it to the General. Mr. Dulles says there must not be a taint of suspicion in the State Department he will run, from top to bottom.

The third appointment made by General Eisenhower today was Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator, the job now held by Averill Harriman. Mr. Stassen, former governor of Minnesota and now president of the University of Pennsylvania, says he is thrilled by the honor of the appointment. He said, "My only regret is that it will mean ending my work at the University of Pennsylvania" (where he has served for four years. Mr. Stassen was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican presidential nomination at the last three party conventions.

For General Eisenhower these appointments were only part of a very busy day. Among others, he saw Senator Smith of New Jersey, who later told reporters the General will go only to Korea, not to Japan or any other countries. The Senator also says he told the General he believes the Korean truce talks are of secondary importance, the root of the problem lies elsewhere.

Charles E. Wilson, who is to become defense secretary, will accompany General Eisenhower on the Korean trip.

Eisenhower today also saw Senator Lodge, who told reporters he doesn't know what he's going to do in the new Administration. Tonight the General is in Washington to attend a reunion of his West Point Class of 1915.

President Truman said today that when the General visited him on Tuesday the President-elect was appalled at the burdens of the office he assumes in January. Mr. Truman told the government's top security officers: "I don't think anyone realizes the immensity of the problems that face the President of the United States. He makes a decision every day that can affect anywhere from 100-million to one and a half billion people."

William Green, the President of the A.F.L. died today. The 82-year-old labor leader died in his Coshocton, Ohio home of a heart ailment, just 12 days after Phillip Murray, the head of the C.I.O., died of a heart attack in a San Francisco Hotel.

President Truman says Mr. Green "was a fin American patriot who dedicated his life to the service of those who worked." And President-elect Eisenhower describes Mr. Green as "a real American and a great national figure."

Attorney General McGranery today announced that two officers of the independent Electrical workers union have been indicted on charges of falsely swearing that they are not communists. The indicted officers are: Walter Lohman and Everest Hupman, both of Ohio. Mr. McGranery also ordered steps to be taken to take away the citizenship of Vito Genovese, who is described as a New York and New Jersey racketeer. Two years ago, Governor Dewey called Genovese the king of the rackets in this country.

Federal Judge Kaufman, here in New York, has set the week of January 12th for the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, convicted atomic spies.

At the United Nations, the United States and its major allies now appear ready to accept, with amendments, India's proposal for Korea. Prime Minister Nehru says this is a step which might "well leap to lightening the tremendous burden that is oppressing humanity." But Russian newspapers indicate their delegates will oppose the Indian plan.

In Korea today, there was little ground fighting. Our planes again attacked an enemy military center near the Manchurian border.

And in Czechoslavakia, according to the Prague radio, former Foreign Minister Clementis confessed to everything the Communists wanted him to confess to.

The Prague broadcasts indicate that the whole trial is developing into an attack on Jews all over the world (11 of the 14 defendents are Jewish.)

On very rare occasions, and when the news permits, we devote a little time to subjects which might not be regarded as news of national interest. Tonight is one of those times. A group of former foreign correspondents here in New York has determined to create what we believe to be a suitable memorial to war correspondents killed in the late war and in Korea. Their casualties were high. Those of us who were more fortunate, or less courageous, desire to do them honor in a fashion which we think they would approve. It may be that some of you will be disposed to participate in this undertaking. To tell you about this project, I have asked my old friend and colleague, Quent Reynolds, to share this microphone tonight.

REYNOLDS: Back in 1942 when General Eisenhower arrived in London to take command of our troops, he called the American war correspondents together, and told us quite bluntly that he was going to use us. He said, "I want you men to act as the connecting link between the men at the front and their families at home."

This was the job of the war correspondent then, just as it is the job of the correspondent in Korea today. Men like Ernie Pyle of the Scripps-Howard paper, H.R. Knickerbocker of the Hearst papers, and Ralph Barnes of the Herald Tribune, Raymond Clapper, the collumnist, were among those who did their jobs well in World War II. They did form the link between you and your sons.

They aren't around to do the same job for you now. They were among the 64 war correspondents who did not come back.

There is an old axiom in our trade, nothing is deader than yeaterday's newspaper. The stories that make page one news today are forgotten tomorrow, but we haven't forgotten the men who wrote the page one stories of the war and who died in the performance of their duty. We, their colleagues of the Overseas Press Club, have decided to honor their memory in a way we know they would have liked best. Tonight the Overseas Press Club begins a drive for funds to build a clubhouse in New York which will perpetuate the memory of our dead colleagues.

A handful of foreign correspondents cannot build this memorial alone - we are asking the public to share this responsibility with us.

Perhaps Ernie Pyle once touched your heart when you read his stories; perhaps brilliant Raymond Clapper once helped explain perplexing questions of foreign policy to you, or maybe H.R. Knickerbocker, made you feel what it was like to be in battle. If you feel a sense of gratitude toward them and to the others who died, help us build this memorial to them. Clare Boothe Luce, Lowell Thomas, John Daly, Bob Considine, Ed Murrow - these are some of the members of the Overseas Press Club who are leading this drive and who ask your support. If you'd like to help, send a check to The Correspondents' Fund, c/o Edward R. Murrow, CBS, New York.

The Government is convinced of the value of an Overseas Press Club building in New York and has become our partner in this venture to the extent that all contributions to the Correspondents' Fund are tax-exempt.

MURROW: New York the site of the UN, one of the real centers of world news is one of the few important cities of the world which does not have a press club. There is one in Washington, in London, in Paris, in Berlin, in Rome, even in Belgrade and in Cairo. A press club is a market place of free thought where out of the clash of opinion, sober valid judgements are formed and are then in turn passed on by the correspondents to their readers or listeners.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are asking you to support a fund drive because those, in whose memory it is being undertaken, cannot be here tonight to speak for themselves. It is true, as Shakespeare said in Henry the Fourth: "Can honour set a leg, or an arm, or take away the grief of a wound? No!" But honour can be remembered. And Swinburn was right when he said: "I shall remember while the light lives yet, and in the nighttime I shall not forget." - - Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday - November 24, 1952.

This is the news:

The Russians today rejected the Indian plan for peace in Korea. Secretary of State Acheson then said we would "heartily support" it , if important changes were made. (I'd like to summarize the two speeches in a few minutes.)

Assistant Defense Secretary Rosenberg..just back from Korea..says General Clark has issued an order to assure the return home , by December 30th, of most of the troops who have spent nine months at the front. This will include all but a few specialists.

The war went into its 30th month today with rain and snow holding air and ground action to a minimum.

In the capital city of Seoul, South Korean security troops and mounted police are already on duty, awaiting the arrival of President-elect Eisenhower. [redacted] And President Rhee says he will propose the arming of two million South Koreans. (if the United Nations provides air and artillery support.)

The General was still at his New York headquarters TODAY. [redacted] He announced two major appointments: Ezra Taft Benson of Utah to be secretary of agriculture..and Governor Sherman Adams, to be the presidential assistant.. the position now held for Mr. Truman by John R. Steelman. Gov. Adams had long been an Eisenhower supporter, served as his convention floor manager and campaign personal manager.

NEW HAMPSHIRE,

Mr. Benson is 53.. lives in Salt Lake City.. is a member of the quorom of twelve apostles of the Mormon Church. He has never been in politics before.. is known as a farm marketing specialist.. served for five years as executive secretary of the National Council of Farm Co-Operatives and prior to that was a state marketing specialist for the University of Idaho extension service. He's a member of the National executive board of the Boy Scouts of America.. had a great-great-grandmother who was a Taft.. Mr. Benson says his appointment came as a great surprise.. he never had talked with General Eisenhower before he met him today. [redacted]

[redacted] Senator TAFT says He joined with the General in the Benson appointment.. the only one of his cabinet recommendations that has been followed. [redacted] Senator Taft says he did not recommend George Humphrey of Ohio to be secretary of the treasury.. but he [redacted] regards all of the cabinet appointments so far as "very fine."

General Eisenhower paid a brief visit to the United Nations headquarters today. While Secretary General Tryvie Lie was showing him around they ran into Dr. Ralph Bunche, the head of the U.N.'s trusteeship division. The General asked: "Who are you working for, the United States or the U. N.?" Dr. Bunche said.. the U.N. The General replied: "How can the United States afford not to have you working for us?" Later, the president-elect made a statement saying: the U.N's work is devoted to a good cause.. we are all working for the freedom and security of the future."

Back at his headquarters: ~~The General assured Brigadier General Sarnoff of full support of a study of the armed force's manpower and material requirements. He saw Thomas J. Watson, chairman of the International Business Machine Corporation, Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the Board of the National Steel Corporation...~~ John Minor Wisdom ~~the Republican committeeman from Louisiana, Kenneth Wm. Wall, president of Freedom Foundation.~~ and the General spent some time with Vice President-elect Nixon. Senator Nixon later told reporters he expects to be given some administrative duties. He said the General indicated he wants Nixon "to take an active role in expediting legislation."

Senator Frank Carlson, Kansas Republican, said today that the General had offered him a responsible position in the new administration..but Carlson prefers to remain in the Senate. Yesterday Paul Hoffman, turned down an appointment, because of what he described as "unusual circumstances."

In Washington, Price Chief Tighe Woods resigned today. He says he decided to quit, rather than to try to administer the price control law as it exists today; he says the law needs a thorough over-hauling; its too weak.

A joint Senate-House committee reported today that price controls were a major factor in stopping "hectic price rises" after the Korean war started. The report shows that inflation is still a serious problem to the consumers.

~~Here in New York, top officials of the C.I.O. met through the day and scheduled another meeting for tonight in an attempt to agree on a successor to the late Phil Murray, as their president. And in Cho~~choc~~ton, Ohio, William Green, president of the A.F. of L. was buried today.~~

Henry Ford, the second, told House investigators that if anyone used funds from the 502-million dollar Ford Foundation, for un-American activities, "we would never give them another dime."

6

The federal Board of Parole announced today that it has voted unanimously to deny Alger Hiss' application for parole. Hiss is now serving a five-year term for perjury. (for denying that he ever gave secret government documents to Communist agents) He became eligible for parole last friday..when he completed one third of his sentence. His parole application may be considered again any time the Parole Board wants to take it up.

At the treason trial of John D. Provoo, a Japanese soldier, now serving a 30 year prison term, testified that he executed an American captain after Provoo complained about the captain.

A Communist newspaper in Vienna says Herman and Noel Field, American brothers, who disappeared behind the Iron curtain three years ago, were arrested as spies.

IN Czechoslovakia..the PRAGUE radio today reported that all but two of the 14 defendents charged with conspiring against the nation have now made the expected "complete confessions." Three Jewish defendents said they had made personal fortunes, and cheated the Czechs and Russia, before they were arrested. The Isreali foreign minister calls these trials "agitation in the spirit of Nazism."

Edward R. Murrow: November 24, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

In the tortured and technical discussion at the United Nations over a cease-fire in Korea, one thing became clear today. Russia and the United States are agreed that they will not accept any proposal now before the United Nations. The stalemate continues.

Last week the Indians produced a compromise: a cease-fire - those prisoners who wanted to go home could go, those who didn't want to return would be dealt with by a five-nation committee. We didn't like this proposal - wanted it more specific; the British were prepared to go along with the Indian proposal. The Russians held their hand. And then today Mr. Vishinsky, in a surprise move, delivered a slashing attack against the Indian proposal. He rejected the whole thing; again accused us of mistreating Communist prisoners; refused to agree that there could be any exception to the rule that prisoners must be sent home whether they want to go or not. Vishinsky said: "The United States intends to continue this barbaric war in line with preparations for a new World War. The Indian proposal offered no practical solution." Vishinsky appeared to suggest that the whole business of truce negotiations be transferred from Panmunjom to the United Nations. Just what he expected to achieve by this is not clear.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, speaking after Vishinsky, seemed to think that the Indian compromise was more attractive today than he had last week. He called it "important and statesmanlike"; regretted that Vishinsky had turned it down out of hand; and thought the Indian proposal would be all right if it could be amended to ensure that those prisoners who did not want to go home would not be held permanently. Mr. Acheson wanted the U.N. to continue to try to find a solution, and said that "no nation, no matter how powerful, can long stand against the moral force of the world."

But as things stand tonight, the prospect of any agreement calculated to stop the fighting in Korea is as remote as it was a month ago or a year ago. In the course of the negotiations in the last week there occurred an open split between the positions taken up by the British and ourselves. Our original reaction to the Indian proposal was rigid, legalistic and taken with unseemly haste. Today, after the Russians had killed the plan, we appeared to think better of it. The Russian move may have been calculated to embarrass our leadership; if so it met with a measure of success. It may also have been designed as a demonstration that India is in no position to speak for Communist China.

We had a chance, through proper handling of the Indian proposal, to place the blame for continued fighting squarely upon the Communists. We didn't do it, and now in the eyes of much of the rest of the world we must share that blame with the Russians. There is no solid reason to think they want a truce anyhow, but on the diplomatic and psychological warfare front they have outmaneuvered us.

This development would appear to place an added burden upon General Eisenhower's Administration, for if we are to regain the initiative he must, in due course, propose either a new kind of negotiation or a new kind of war.

I should like to mention a book, briefly. It is called "This I Believe", and stems from a rather successful radio series presented under the same title. The book has my name on the cover, but I didn't write it - except for the Foreword - and so have no hesitation in talking about it. It is merely a collection of short statements by about a hundred people who have tried to reduce to five hundred words what they believe. The contributors range from Lionel Barrymore to Darryl Zanuck, including General Clay, Justice Douglas, Helen Hayes, Herbert Hoover, Jackie Robinson and about 95 others. They have tried to put into words - (each one of them found it difficult - their basic beliefs)

If you are curious about what a hundred thoughtful men and women in all walks of life believe, and why, you might be interested in the book. It's called "This I Believe", published today by Simon and Schuster. And just for the record, this reporter has no financial interest in its success, or failure.

Walter Lippman once remarked:" Many a time I have wanted to stop talking and find out what I really believed."(That is precisely what the contributors to "This I Believe" have attepted to do.) For as Eric Johnston put it:"The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue - they are somewhere way down below."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Russians today rejected the Indian plan for peace in Korea. Secretary of State Acheson then said we would "heartily support" it, if important changes were made. I'd like to summarize the two speeches in a few minutes.

Assistant Defense Secretary Rosenberg, just back from Korea, says General Clark has issued an order to assure the return home, by December 30th, of most of the troops who have spent nine months at the front. This will include all but a few specialists.

The war went into its 30th month today with rain and snow holding air and ground action to a minimum.

In the capital city of Seoul, South Korean security troops and mounted police are already on duty awaiting the arrival of President-elect Eisenhower. And President Rhee says he will propose the arming of two million South Koreans, if the United Nations provides air and artillery support.

The General was still at his New York headquarters today. He announced two major appointments: Ezra Taft Benson of Utah to be Secretary of Agreculture, and Governor Sherman Adams, of New Hampshire, to be the presidential assistant, the position now held for Mr. Truman by John R. Steelman. Governor Adams had long been an Eisenhower supporter, served as his convention floor manager and campaign personal manager.

Mr. Benson is 53, lives in Salt Lake City, is a member of the quorom of twelve apostles of the Mormon Church. He has never been in politics before, is known as a farm marketing specialist, served for five years as executive secretary of the National Council of Farm Co-operatives and prior to that was a state marketing specialist for the University of Idaho extension service. He's a member of the National executive board of the Boy Scouts of America, had a great-great-grandmother who was a Taft. Mr. Benson says his appointment came as a great surprise, he never had talked with General Eisenhower before he met him today.

Senator Taft says he joined with the General in the Benson appointment, the only one of his cabinet recommendations that has been followed. Senator Taft says he did not recommend George Humphrey of Ohio to be secretary of the treasury, but he regards all of the cabinet appointments so far as "very fine."

General Eisenhower paid a brief visit to the United Nations headquarters today. While Secretary General Trygve Lie was showing him around they ran into Dr. Ralph Bunche, the head of the U.N.'s trusteeship division. The General asked: "Who are you working for, the United States or the U.N.? Dr. Bunche said, "The U.N." The General replied: "How can the United States afford not to have you working for us?" Later, the president-elect made a statement saying, "The U.N.'s work is devoted to a good cause, we are all working for the freedom and security of the future."

Back at his headquarters, the General spent some time with Vice President-elect Nixon. Senator Nixon later told reporters he expects to be given some administrative duties. He said the General indicated he wants Nixon "to take an active role in expediting legislation."

Senator Frank Carlson, Kansas Republican, said today that the General had offered him a responsible position in the new administration, but Carlson prefers to remain in the Senate. Yesterday Paul Hoffman, turned down an appointment because of what he described as "unusual circumstances."

In Washington, Price Chief Tighe Woods resigned today. He says he decided to quit rather than to try to administer the price control law as it exists today; he says the law needs a thorough over-hauling; its too weak.

A joint Senate-House committee reported today that price controls were a major factor in stopping "hectic price rises" after the Korean war started. The report shows that inflation is still a serious problem to the consumers.

Henry Ford, the second, told House investigators that if anyone used funds from the 502-million dollar Ford Foundation for un-American activities, "we would never give them another dime."

The Federal Board of Parole announced today that it has voted unanimously to deny Alger Hiss' application for parole. Hiss is now serving a five-year term for perjury for denying that he ever gave secret government documents to Communist agents. He became eligible for parole last Friday, when he completed one third of his sentence. His parole application may be considered again any time the Parole Board wants to take it up.

At the treason trial of John D. Provoo, a Japanese soldier, now serving a 30-year prison term, testified that he executed an American captain after Provoo complained about the captain.

A Communist newspaper in Vienna says Herman and Noel Field, American brothers who disappeared behind the Iron curtain three years ago, were arrested as spies.

In Czechoslavakia, the Prague radio today reported that all but two of the 14 defendents charged with conspiring against the nation have now made the expected "complete confessions." Three Jewish defendents said they had made personal fortunes and cheated the Czechs and Russia before they were arrested. The Israeli foreign minister calls these trials "agitation in the spirit of Nazism."

In the tortured and technical discussion at the United Nations over a cease-fire in Korea, one thing became clear today. Russia and the United States are agreed that they will not accept any proposal now before the United Nations. The statemate continues.

Last week the Indians produced a compromise: a cease-fire - those prisoners who wanted to go home could go, those who didn't want to return would be dealt with by a five-nation committee. We didn't like this proposal - wanted it more specific; the British were prepared to go along with the Indian proposal.

The Russians held their hand. And then today Mr. Vishinsky, in a surprise move, delivered a slashing attack against the Indian proposal. He rejected the whole thing; again accused us of mistreating Communist prisoners; refused to agree that there could be any exception to the rule that prisoners must be sent home whether they want to go or not. Vishinsky said: "The United States intends to continue this barbaric war in line with preparations for a new World War. The Indian proposal offered no practical solution." Vishinsky appeared to suggest that the whole business of truce negotiations be transferred from Panmunjom to the United Nations. Just what he expected to achieve by this is not clear.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, speaking after Vishinsky, seemed to think that the Indian compromise was more attractive today than he had last week. He called it "important and statesmanlike"; regretted that Vishinsky had turned it down out of hand; and thought the Indian proposal would be all right if it could be amended to insure that those prisoners who did not want to go home would not be held permanently. Mr. Acheson wanted the U.N. to continue to try to find a solution, and said that "no nation, no matter how powerful, can long stand against the moral force of the world."

But as things stand tonight, the prospect of any agreement calculated to stop the fighting in Korea is as remote as it was a month ago or a year ago. In the course of the negotiations in the last week there occured an open split between the positions taken up by the British and ourselves. Our original reaction to the Indian proposal was rigid, legalistic and taken with unseemly haste. Today, after the Russians had killed the plan, we appeared to think better of it. The Russian move may have been calculated to embarrass our leadership; if so, it met with a measure of success. It may also have been designed as a demonstration that India is in no position to speak for Communist China.

We had a chance, through proper handling of the Indian proposal, to place the blame for continued fighting squarely upon the Communists. We didn't do it, and now in the eyes of much of the rest of the world we must share that blame with the Russians. There is no solid reason to think they want a truce anyhow, but on the diplomatic and psychological warfare front they have outmaneuvered us.

This development would appear to place an added burden upon General Eisenhower's Administration, for if we are to regain the initiative he must, in due course, propose either a new kind of negotiation or a new kind of war.

I should like to mention a book, briefly. It is called "This I Believe", and stems from a rather successful radio series presented under the same title. The book has my name on the cover, but I didn't write it - except for the Foreword - and so have no hesitation in talking about it. It is merely a collection of short statements by about a hundred people, who have tried to reduce to five hundred words what they believe. The contributors range from Lionel Barrymore to Darryl Zanuck, including General Clay, Justice Douglas, Helen Hayes, Herbert Hoover, Jackie Robinson and about 95 others. They have tried to put into words - (each one of them found it difficult - their basic beliefs.)

If you are curious about what a hundred thoughtful men and women in all walks of life believe, and why, you might be interested in the book. It's called "This I Believe", published today by Simon and Schuster. And just for the record, this reporter has no financial interest in its success, or failure.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW. Walter Lippman once remarked: "Many a time I have wanted to stop talking, and find out what I really believed." That is precisely what the contributors to "This I Believe" have attempted to do. For as Eric Johnston put it: "The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue - they are somewhere way down below."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, November 25/1952

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower today named Republican National Chairman Arthur Summerfield, to be postmaster general in the new cabinet. Mr. Summerfield, a Michigan auto dealer, will resign his party post. [redacted] The General also named two women to jobs in the new government. Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, 47, mother of two children, Houston, Texas, publisher, and wartime commander of the Womens Army Corps, will replace Oscar Ewing, as Federal security administrator. The General wants Mrs. Hobby to sit in on cabinet meetings because of "the importance of her position." The other woman is Mrs. Ivy Baker Priest of [redacted] Bountiful, Utah. She will replace Georgia Neese Clark as treasurer of the United States. Mrs. [redacted] Priest, 47, [redacted] has three children. She [redacted] served in the recent campaign as assistant national chairman, in charge of the women's division. [redacted] There are still two [redacted] positions open in the new Eisenhower cabinet; the secretaries [redacted] labor, and commerce.

Representative Taber of New York visited the Eisenhower headquarters today and told reporters: he believes the 1954 budget can be balanced, and brought down to 65-billion. The present budget is 79-billion.

Taber feels the reduction can be made by cutting military and mutual security expenditures.

At the United Nations today, the South Koreans said they would refuse to accept any truce settlement that is reached without their consent and participation. And 21 nations..including the United States..decided today to give priority to India's compromise plan for a truce in Korea. British Foreign Secretary Eden, who left for London today, says he believes there's a good chance of agreement by a majority on the Indian resolution.

In Korea, British and Australian raiders drove into enemy lines on the central and western fronts. The Allied air commanders say the enemy is desperately trying to get more supplies to the front. We claim to have knocked out 12-hundred trucks in the past 10 days.

The air force in Tokyo says Staff Sergeant Guisseppe Cascio of Arizona, has been charged with conspiring to sell secret information on our top jet plane to the enemy. Cascio, 34, AND a veteran of nine years in the air force, worked as a photographic laboratory technician. If convicted he could be sentenced to life imprisonment.

In Czechoslovakia today, the last OF 14 defendents confessed their guilt in the government's purge trial. The former chief of the red secret police and the former chief of intelligence both "confessed" that they participated in WHAT THEY CALLED a "Jewish bourgeois nationalist" plot. The former secret police boss testified that Noel Field, an American who disappeared behind the iron curtain in 1949 was an American spy... He indicated Field is now in jail in some Soviet satellite country.

[redacted]

The White House denies reports that the President IS planning to wipe out price and wage controls. Price Stabilizer Woods has removed price ceilings from almost all womens' and misses' clothing. He plans to do the same for mens' and boys' clothing next week. These actions are not expected to affect selling prices..which are generally below ceilings.

A Defense Department official says the President and top department leaders are re-examining our strategic plans in light of the H-bomb tests at Eniwetok; they will have to decide whether to change our basic military strategy..and whether there can be a speed-up of nuclear weapons.

Mobilization Director Fowler says "something under a billion dollars" will be included in the 1954 budget, to stockpile a reserve of machinery and tools..that would be needed in case of a war.

Representative Cox of Georgie says Owen Lattimore received large grants of money from the Rockefeller Foundation...and that the money was used for "subversive purposes." Dean Rusk, president of the foundation, says his organization is prepared to discuss all of its grants fully, when it is called before the committee. Today, Robert M. Hutchins, associate director of the Ford Foundation, told the committee he's certain no major foundation has ever consciously "gone into anything that would weaken the American system."

Edward R. Murrow: November 25, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

General Eisenhower Will Not Look for Problems.

But In addition to the trouble he may expect from other quarters, the General ~~Eisenhower~~ - (with Taft in his corner) - could have expected to have his troubles with American labor. The official spokesman of labor were overwhelmingly against the General's election, but they didn't control an overwhelming vote of the rank and file. Military men are not trained in the art of "collective bargaining," and General Eisenhower is no exception.

If it be true that age confers both wisdom and restraint, then death has further complicated the General's problem in the last two weeks. Two of labor's elder statesmen, ~~XXXX~~ Phil Murray of the C.I.O. and Bill Green of the A.F. of L., died. Both were men of vast experience, (praised in death by many newspapers that condemned them and their works during life.) The leadership of the A.F. of L. and the C.I.O will now pass to younger, less experienced and probably more militant hands. In the C.I.O. it will probably be either Walter Reuther, head of the Auto Workers, or Allan Haywood, the executive Vice President. For the A.F. of L. it will be George ~~Meaney~~ Meany, a 58-year-old former plumber, who was elected unanimously. He looks ten years younger than he is, and is a veteran of thirty years in the labor movement. His right hand man will be 46-year-old Bill

Schnitzler, President of the A.F. of L. Bakers' Union. One of Mr. Meeney's first acts was to bid for a merger between his union's eight million members and the C.I.O. He said: "They are trade unionists and so are we. We must find some way to get together." Mr. Meeney also said that he had advised General Eisenhower to pick his Secretary of Labor from the ranks of labor. Meeney would support the President-elect but added: "We are prepared to defend ourselves from any effort to push labor back." We recorded for you part of what Mr. Meeney, the new President of A.F. of L., had to say in Washington today:

TAPE: (2.45): END CUE: ".....without which it would be impossible to have a decent standard of life here or anywhere else."

It seems probable that we face a period of renewed and militant labor union activity. Mr. Meeney's statement today was conciliatory, both toward the C.I.O. and the incoming Republican Administration. It was keyed to the theme of unity, unity within labor and within the country. But it also contained a clear warning that labor will continue to press for improved living standards; will protect its past gains; and that if effort is made to restrict or withdraw those gains, General Eisenhower's Secretary of Labor will be a very busy man indeed.

I had planned tonight to cast myself briefly in the role of a movie critic, but not belonging to the Critics' Union, and having no qualifications whatsoever for the task, I confine myself to a brief report - without the use of such words as "Colossal", "Sensational", "Astounding", and so forth. Mr. Samuel Goldwyn has made a movie called "Hans Christian Andersen". Danny Kaye plays the part of the Danish cobbler. I think it's a fantasy - maybe it's Hollywood's answer to television. Maybe it's an advance Christmas present which all grandchildren should take their grandparents to see. # To me it is a delicate and sensitive thing of great beauty ~~XXXXXXXXXXX~~ cushioned and carried by Frank Lesser's music. # After seeing it I understand the story of the Ugly Duckling. Thus endeth my first, and probably last movie review; excellence in any art form should be recognized even though it cannot adequately be described.

There will doubtless be occasions during the next four years when the new administration and the leaders of labor will meet head-on. (There's nothing new in that.) But, taking a lesson from the past, all parties concerned ~~would do well to~~ might remember this bit of advice from William McFee: "Responsibility's like a string we can only see the middle of. Both ends are out of sight."

Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

E. R. Murrow
17 pg

Tuesday, November 25, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... We recorded for you part of what Mr. Meaney, the new president of the A.F. of L., had to say in Washington today.

MEANEY: I think we should bear in mind that while the basic objective of a trade union is the improvement of the conditions of life under which its members must work and must live, that the times - strenuous times - in which we live, have brought upon workingmen's organizations an even greater challenge than the challenge involved in constantly striving to improve the standards of life of the great mass of the American people .

Today we're facing a world situation which is almost without precedent. We're facing the menace of a godless ideology that seems determined to overrun the world. So, actually, I would say that today the prime concern of the American Federation of Labor is to make its contribution to the welfare of our country, so that we can keep America free, so that we can produce the things that we must produce in order to supply our friends and our allies with the materials necessary to defend freedom throughout the world. And at the same time see to it that the enemies of freedom find nothing to comfort them in the conditions which prevail in our country; to try to see that the standard of life is kept at its highest possible level; to see to it that we practice the principles of human decency and freedom within the confines of our own country. To see to it that insofar as it's humanly possible to do so we eliminate any bigotry, racial discrimination or hate from our own ranks.

So it's that sort of situation that labor faces today. And I'm confident that the American Federation of Labor will give a good account of itself, as it has in the past, in making its contribution not only to the standard of life, which makes America a great nation, but also in the defense of the great human freedoms without which it would be impossible to have a decent standard of life here or anywhere else.

MURROW: It would seem probable that we face a period of renewed and more militant labor union activity.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President-elect Eisenhower today named Republican National Chairman Arthur Summerfield, to be Postmaster General in the new cabinet. Mr. Summerfield, a Michigan auto dealer, will resign his party his party post. The General also named two women to jobs in the new government. Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, 47, mother of two children, Houston, Texas, publisher, and wartime commander of the Womens Army Corps, will replace Oscar Ewing, as Federal Security Administrator. The General wants Mrs. Hobby to sit in on cabinet meetings because of "the importance of her position." The other woman is Mrs. Ivy Baker, Priest of Bountiful, Utah. She will replace Georgia Neese Clark as treasurer of the United States. Mrs. Priest, 47, has three children. She served in the recent campaign as assistant national chairman in charge of the women's division. There are still two positions open in the new Eisenhower cabinet; the secretaries of labor and commerce.

Representative Taber of New York visited the Eisenhower headquarters today and told reporters: he believes the 1954 budget can be balanced and brought down to 65-billion. The present budget is 79-billion. Taber feels the reduction can be made by cutting military and mutual security expenditures.

At the United Nations today, the South Koreans said they would refuse to accept any truce settlement that is reached without their "consent and participation." And 21 nations, including the United States, decided today to give priority to India's compromise plan for a truce in Korea. British Foreign Secretary Eden, who left for London today, says he believes there's a good chance of agreement by a majority on the Indian resolution.

In Korea, British and Australian raiders drove into enemy lines on the central and western fronts. The Allied air commanders say the enemy is desperately trying to get more supplies to the front. We claim to have knocked out 12-hundred trucks in the past 10 days.

The air force in Tokyo says Staff Sergeant Guisseppi Cascio of Arizona, has been charged with conspiring to seel secret information on our top jet plane to the enemy. Cascio 34, and a veteran of nine years in the air force, worked as a photographic laboratory technician. If convicted he could be sentenced to life imprisonment.

In Czechoslovakia today, the last of 14 defendents confessed their guilt in the government's purge trial. The former chief of the red secret police and the former chief of intelligence both "confessed" that they participated in what they called "Jewish bourgeois nationalist" plot. The former secret police boss testified that Noel Field, an American who disappeared behind the iron curtain in 1949 was an American spy. He indicated Field is now in jail in some Soviet satellite country.

The White House denies reports that the President is planning to wipe out price and wage controls. Price Stabilizer Woods has removed price ceilings from almost all womens' and misses' clothing. He plans to do the same for mens' and boys' clothing next week. These actions are not expected to affect selling prices, which are generally below ceilings.

A Defense Department official says the President and top department leaders are re-examining our strategic plans in light of the H-bomb tests at Eniwetok; they will have to decide whether to change our basic military strategy, and whether there can be a speed-up of nuclear weapons.

Mobilization Director Fowler says "something under a billion dollars" will be included in the 1954 budget to stockpile a reserve of machinery and tools, that would be needed in case of a war.

Representative Cox of Georgia says Owen Lattimore received large grants of money from the Rockefeller Foundation, and that the money was used for "subversive purposes." Dean Rusk, president of the foundation, says his organization is prepared to discuss all of its grants fully when it is called before the committee. Today, Robert M. Hutchins, associate director of the Ford Foundation, told the committee he's certain no major foundation has ever consciously "gone into anything that would weaken the American system."

General Eisenhower will not lack for problems, but in addition to the trouble he may expect from other quarters, the General (with Taft in his corner) could have expected to have his troubles with American labor. The official spokesman of labor were overwhelmingly against the General's election, but they didn't control an overwhelming vote of the rank and file. Military men are not trained in the art of "collective bargaining," and General Eisenhower is no exception.

If it be true that age confers both wisdom and restraint, then death has further complicated the General's problem in the last two weeks. Two of labor's elder statesmen, Phil Murray of the C.I.O. and Bill Green of the A.F.L., died. Both were men of vast experience, (praised in death by many newspapers that condemned them and their works during life.) The leadership of the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. will not pass to younger, less experienced and probably more militant hands. In the C.I.O. it will probably be either Walter Reuther, head of the Auto Workers, or Allan Haywood, the executive Vice President. For the A.F.L. it will be George Meany, a 58-year-old former plumber who was elected unanimously. He looks ten years younger than he is, and is a veteran of thirty years in the labor movement. His right hand man will be 46-year-old Bill Schnitzler, President of the A.F.L. Bakers' Union. One of Mr. Meeney's first acts was to bid for a merger between his union's eight million members and the C.I.O. He said: "They are trade unionists, and so are we. We must find some way to get together." Mr. Meeney also said that he had advised General Eisenhower to pick his Secretary of Labor from the ranks of labor. Meeney would support the President-elect but added: "We are prepared to defend ourselves from any effort to push labor back." We recorded for you part of what Mr. Meeney, the new President of A.F.L. had to say in Washington today:

MEANEY: I think we should bear in mind that while the basic objective of a trade union is the improvement of the conditions of life under which its members must work and must live, that the times - strenuous times - in which we live, have brought upon workingmen's organizations an even greater challenge than the challenge involved in constantly striving to improve the standards of life of the great mass of the American people.

Today we're facing a world situation which is almost without precedent. We're facing the manace of a godless ideology that seems determined to overrun the world. So, actually, I would say that today the prime concern of the American Federation of Labor is to make its contribution to the welfare of our country, so that we can keep America free, so that we can produce the things that we must produce in order to supply our friends and our allies with the materials necessary to defend freedom throughout the world. And at the same time see to it that the enemies of freedom find nothing to comfort them in the conditions which prevail in our country; to try to see that the standard of life is kept at its highest possible level; to see to it that we practice the principles of human decency and freedom within the confines of our own country. To see to it that insofar as it's humanly possible to do so we eliminate any bigotry, racial discrimination or hate from our own ranks.

So it's that sort of situation that labor faces today. And I'm confident that the American Federation of Labor will give a good account of itself, as it has in the past, in making its contribution not only to the standard of life, which makes America a great nation, but also in the defense of the great human freedoms without which it would be impossible to have a decent standard of life here or anywhere else.

MURROW: It would seem probable that we face a period of renewed and more militant labor union activity.

Mr. Meeney's statement today was conciliatory, both toward the C.I.O., and the incoming Republican Administration. It was keyed to the theme of unity, unity within labor and within the country. But it also contained a clear warning that labor will continue to press for improved living standards; will protect its past gains; and that if effort is made to restrict or withdraw those gains, General Eisenhower's Secretary of Labor will be a very busy man indeed.

I had planned tonight to cast myself briefly in the role of a movie critic, but not belonging to the Critics' Union, and having no qualifications whatsoever for the task, I confine myself to a brief report - without the use of such words as "Colossal", "Sensational", "Astounding", and so forth. Mr. Samuel Goldwyn has made a movie called "Hans Christian Andersen". Danny Kaye plays the part of the Danish cobbler. I think it's a fantasy - maybe its Hollywood's answer to television. Maybe it's an advance Christmas present which all grandchildren should take their grandparents to see. To me it is a delicate and sensitive thing of great beauty cushioned and carried by Frank Lesser's music. After seeing it I understand the story of the Ugly Duckling. Thus endeth my first, and probably last movie review; excellence in any art form should be recognized even though it cannot adequately be described.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first here is Bob Dixon;

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There will doubtless be occasions during the next four years when the new administration and the leaders of labor will meet head-on. (There's nothing new in that.) But, taking a lesson from the past, all parties concerned might remember this bit of advice from William McFee: "Responsibility's like a string we can only see the middle of. Both ends are out of sight."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Nov 26, 1952

This is the news:

General Van Fleet, in a Thanksgiving Day message to his troops in Korea, said today: "It is Communism we are fighting.. not the innocent North Koreans or the Chinese people. Godless Communism wants no peace until the free peoples of the world have been ENSLAVED." The General asked his men to thank God "that we have allies to fight with us, and that we have a united team in Korea." It was very cold in Korea today.. and as the holiday came, there was a lull in the fighting. Wherever possible the men were served a warm holiday meal... even at the front where it arrived in insulated containers.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered 271 casualties last week.. the smallest loss for a week, since early last June.

And the city of Seoul went under the tightest security measures it has ever known.. (waiting for the arrival of General Eisenhower) Jails were packed with men arrested as "security risks." And along the main streets of the battered city you could find at least one guard in every twenty yards.

The United Nations Political committee voted today to give top priority to the Indian proposal for a truce in Korea. The vote was 49 to five. But Andrei Vishinsky told the committee that Communist China has already turned down the Indian plan..notified the Indians of this two days ago. An Indian source at the U.N. says:" You can call it a rejection. We call it objections. The more objections we receive, the more we push our efforts." Today, the Indians made a change in their plan to meet American objections: it now provides that the United Nations itself will make the final determination of what happens to those prisoners who do not want to return to their homes. The American delegation has made it known that if the Indian proposal gets through the General Assembly.. as seems likely..and then is turned down by Communist China and North Korea, the whole matter will be left for further action by General Eisenhower.

The General's secretary, here in New York, announced today that Mr. Eisenhower will dine with his family tomorrow, and then keep a number of appointments through Sunday. We're also told that a pool radio reporter has been added to those who will accompany the General to Korea. Five other news men will go: a representative of each news service, a pool still cameraman, and a movie camera man for the newsreels and television.

The General today named Arthur Vandenbergh, Junior, of Michigan, to be a White House secretary..handling appointments and other undefined matters. And after consultation with Herbert Brownell, who is to be attorney general, Mr. Eisenhower named William P. Rodgers of Bethesda, Maryland, to be deputy attorney general. Rogers, who worked for Governor Dewey when he was district attorney in Manhattan, has served as counsel to many investigating committees that produced evidence of "influence peddling, corruption and disloyalty" in government.

Governor McKeldin of Maryland visited the General today. Later in a Town Hall speech he said: under Eisenhower, Korea will not be secondary to Europe's defense plans.. Korea will become our foremost defense problem.. and Europe will realize that this will be more beneficial in the long run than the present defense plans. Another republican..Senator Tobey..said in Paris today that he believes Eisenhower, as president, will give Stalin 60 days to agree to an armistice in Korea "or else"; he did not say what the "or else" might mean. Senator Tobey says the General is the one man in the world who can tell Stalin where to get off. He believes the General will do just that.

The White House announced today that the President has accepted the resignation of Stanley Woodward, our ambassador to Canada, effective January 15. Mr. Woodward, the former protocol chief of the State Department, has served for 25 years in the department and the foreign service. The President says he is grateful for the outstanding contribution Mr. Woodward has made in Canada.

Mr. Truman also has accepted the resignation of William O'Dwyer as ambassador to Mexico..effective a week from Saturday. Mr. O'dwyer said he is deeply and sincerely grateful for Mr. Truman's confidence and support. The President's letter says the ambassador has been one of the most effective representatives we ever had in Mexico. Mr. O'dweyer did not announce his future plans.

Micheal Di Salle, who used to be price administrator, is returning to Washington for two weeks to advise on what to do on price policies and control methods. Economic Stabilizer Putnam has told price officials: "We still have a job to do and a law to administer. We still need controls in many places."

Veterans Administrator Gray today announced a partial reogrnaization of the V.A. which, he says, will save millions of dollars a year. Representative Rogers of Massachusetts, who may be head of the veterans committee in the New House, says its "unfair and unwise" to put the new plan in operation before the new congress meets.

Here in New York today, more than a thousand members of the A.F. of L. Longshoremen's union went on strike ~~today~~. They protested the fact that some of their leaders had been supbened by the state's Crime Commission. Joseph Ryan, the international union president, says they may return tomorrow. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: November 26, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today the Chief Prosecutor for the Czechoslovakian Communist Government demanded death by hanging for the fourteen former Communist leaders of that country who have been on exhibition in the court room for the past week. They have produced a whole series of fantastic confessions of crimes against Communism and against the Soviet Union. All but three of the defendants are Jewish. There have been blatant tones of anti-semitism throughout the whole so-called trial.

No Western reporters have been present at these proceedings, so our information comes from the Prague Radio and from certain clues picked up in Vienna. This has been the most sweeping "catch-all" trial in the long history of Communist purges. They lumped them all together, these men who until recently ran the government of Czechoslovakia. The defendants can be put in at least four separate categories: the so-called Titoists, who wanted a little more independence for Czechoslovakia; second, the militant Communist stalwarts who were more eager for revolution XXX than Moscow and must now be "ELIMINATED" ~~got rid of~~; the third category is composed of those who are accused of being pro-Westerners, who believe that Czechoslovakia had to remain in the Western economic system in order to survive; in the fourth category, which cuts across the other three, is anti-semitism.

This is the first time that so many different types of "deviationists" have been lumped together. A year ago, these men were regarded as loyal Communists - they were running the country. Slansky, for example, had more power than Gottwald, the Prime Minister.

This whole legal farce cannot reflect anything but direct orders from Moscow, for it is part of Communist satellite history, that the prosecutors of today, may be the accused of tomorrow. Part of this process must be designed to instil fear in the hearts of those who now rule. These men, who will probably be hanged, had as good a record of orthodox, unquestioning support of Communism, as do the men who will hang them. If they hang one, Josef Franck, it couldn't happen to a nicer fellow. The Nazis had him for six years in Buchenwald concentration camp, where he was able to mark for liquidation the leading democratic Czech and French prisoners, by singling them out for the death transports.

One purpose of this trial may have been an effort to divert some people in Czechoslovakia from the country's continuing economic crisis, which has reached the point of real hunger in some areas. The strong anti-semitic tone may reflect a revival of Hitler's desire for a scapegoat. A spokesman of the Israeli Foreign Office said tonight that XXXX

It would seem that the Russians are for the time being determined to consolidate their satellite empire, squeeze every man-hour and ounce of production they can out of it, while saying to the rest of Europe: "You need have no fear of us". In order to do this they need more willing and more fearful servants to run their show in the satellite countries. It is impossible for anyone who knows their record to have much sympathy for the men who will probably be sentenced to death in Prague tomorrow. Sympathy should go, rather, to the tough, liberty-loving people of Czechoslovakia. They are paying the price for being a small nation, too near to Russia. I can still hear Jan Masaryk saying, as he did so often: "In a world where there is no security for little nations, there is no security for big ones."

What is happening at the Czech trials is nothing new. 250 years ago, Daniel Defoe wrote:"Justice, with change of interest, learns to bow, and what was merit once is murder now." Some fifty years earlier, Sir John Denham made this pertinent observation:"Fear and guilt are not the same things. And when our actions are not, our fears are crimes."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Van Fleet, in a Thanksgiving Day message to his troops in Korea, said today: "It is Communism we are fighting, not the innocent North Koreans or the Chinese people. Godless Communism wants no peace until the free peoples of the world have been enslaved." The General asked his men to thank God "that we have allies to fight with us and that we have a united team in Korea." It was very cold in Korea today, and as the holiday came, there was a lull in the fighting. Wherever possible the men were served a warm holiday meal, even at the front where it arrived in insulated containers.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered 271 casualties last week, the smallest loss for a week since early last June.

And the city of Seoul went under the tightest security measures it has ever known, waiting for the arrival of General Eisenhower. Jails were packed with men arrested as "security risks." And along the main streets of the battered city you could find at least one guard in every twenty yards.

The United Nations Political committee voted today to give top priority to the Indian proposal for a truce in Korea. The vote was 49 to five. But Andrei Vishinsky told the committee that Communist China has already turned down the Indian plan, notified the Indians of this two days ago. An Indian source at the U.N. says: "You can call it a rejection. We call it objections. The more objections we receive, the more we push our efforts." Today, the Indians made a change in their plan to meet American objections: it now provides that the United Nations itself will make the final determination of what heppens to those prisoners who do not want to return to their homes. The American delegation has made it known that if the Indian proposal gets through the General Assembly, as seems likely, and then is turned down by Communist China and North Korea, the whole matter will be left for further action by General Eisenhower.

The General's secretary, here in New York, announced today that Mr. Eisenhower will dine with his family tomorriw and then keep a number of appointments through Sunday. We're also told that a pool radio reporter has been added to those who will accompany the General to Korea. Five other newsmen will go: a representative of each news service, a pool still cameraman and a movie camera man for the newsreels and television.

The General today named Arthur Vandenbergh, Jr., of Michigan, to be a White House secretary, handling appointments and other undefined matters. And after consultation with Herbert Brownell, who is to be attorney general, Mr. Eisenhower named William P. Rodgers of Bethesade, Maryland, to be deputy attorney general. Rogers, who worked for Governor Dewey when he was district attorney in Manhattan, has served as counsel to many investigating committees that produced evidence of "influence peddling, corruption and disloyalty" in government.

Governor McKeldin of Maryland visited the General today. Later in a Town Hall speech he said: under Eisenhower, Korea will not be secondary to Europe's defense plans, Korea will become our foremost defense problem, and Europe will realize that this will be more beneficial in the long run than the present defense plans. Another republican, Senator Tobey, said in Paris today that he believes Eisenhower, as president, will give Stalin 60 days to agree to an armistice in Korea "or else;" he did not say what the "or else" might mean. Senator Tobey says the General is the one man in the world who can tell Stalin where to get off. He believes the General will do just that.

The White House announced today that the President has accepted the resignation of Stanley Woodward, our ambassador to Canada, effective January 15. Mr. Woodward, the former protocol chief of the State Department, has served for 25 years in the department and the foreign service. The President says he is grateful for the outstanding contribution Mr. Woodward has made in Canada.

Mr. Truman also has ac epted the resignation of William O'Dwyer as ambassador to Mexico, effective a week from Saturday. Mr. O'Dwyer said he is deeply and sincerely grateful for Mr. Truman's confidence and support. The President's letter says the ambassador has been one of the "most effective representatives" we ever had in Mexico. Mr. O'Dwyer did not announce his future plans.

Michael DiSalle, who used to be price administrator, is returning to Washington for two weeks to advise on what to do on price policies, and control methods. Economic Stabilizer Putnam has told price officials: "We still have a job to do and a law to administer. We still need controls in many places."

Veterans Administrator Gray today announced a partial reorganization of the V.A. which, he says, will save millions of dollars a year. Representative Rogers of Massachusetts, who may be head of the veterans committee in the New House, says its "unfair and unwise" to put the new plan in operation before the new Congress meets.

Here in New York today, more than a thousand members of the A.F. of L. Longshoremen's union went on strike. They protested the fact that some of their leaders had been subpoenaed by the state's Crime Commission. Joseph Ryan, the international union president, says they may return tomorrow.

Today the Chief Prosecutor for the Czechoslovakian Communist Government demanded death by hanging for the fourteen former Communist leaders of that country who have been on exhibition in the court room for the past week. They have produced a whole series of fantastic confessions of crimes against Communism and against the Soviet Union. All but three of the defendants are Jewish. There have been blatant tones of anti-semitism throughout the whole so-called trial.

No Western reporters have been present at these proceedings, so our information comes from the Prague Radio and from certain clues picked up in Vienna. This has been the most sweeping "catch-all" trial, in the long history of Communist purges. They lumped them all together, these men who until recently ran the government of Czechoslovakia. The defendants can be put in at least four separate categories: the so-called Titoists, who wanted a little more independence for Czechoslovakia; second, the militant Communist stalwarts, who were more eager for revolution than Moscow, and must now be "eliminated"; the third category is composed of those who are accused of being pro-Westerners, who believe that Czechoslovakia had to remain in the Western economic system in order to survive; in the fourth category, which cuts across the other three, is anti-semitism.

This is the first time that so many different types of "deviationists" have been lumped together. A year ago, these men were regarded as loyal Communists - they were running the country. Slansky, for example, had more power than Gottwald, the Prime Minister.

This whole legal farce cannot reflect anything but direct orders from Moscow, for it is part of Communist satellite history that the prosecutors of today may be the accused of tomorrow. Part of this process must be designed to instill fear in the hearts of those who now rule. These man, who will probably be hanged, had as good a record of orthodox, unquestioning support of Communism as do the men who will hang the . If they hang one Josef Franck, it couldn't happen to a nicer fellow. The Nazis had him for six years in Buchenwald concentration camp, where he was able to mark for liquidation the leading democratic Czech and French prisoners by singling them out for the death transports.

One purpose of this trial may have been an effort to divert some people in Czechoslovakia from the country's continuing economic crisis, which has reached the point of real hunger in some areas. The strong anti-semitic tone may reflect a revival of Hitler's desire for a scapegoat. A spokesman of the Israeli Foreign Office said tonight that several Jews in Czechoslovakia had committed suicide in recent days. There are reliable reports that the old Nazi-like anti-Jewish signs are appearing on walls in Bratislava.

This trial might have happened in Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary or in East Germany; similar ones have, only not so big. There will probably be more to come in the other satellite nations. And the whole process cannot be explained as a mere outburst of anti-semitism. The satellite rulers control their own people through fear. The Kremlin must, necessarily, control the rulers of those satellite countries; they are experts in dealing in fear; and hanging a dozen of the men who but yesterday ran the country, may seem a good way of instilling both fear and discipline in their successors. And I would guess - one can only guess about this mystery - that there is another reason. The Russians made it clear at their last Party Congress that they're going to try to ease the tension in Europe; build up the productive capacity of their own empire; and try through soft words and an economic offensive to split us from our allies. The red hot "lets-have-a-revolution-now" Communists in both France and Italy have been ousted, replaced by men who will play the old Popular Front game.

It would seem that the Russians are for the time being determined to consolidate their satellite empire, squeeze every man-hour and ounce of production they can out of it, while saying to the rest of Europe: "You need have no fear of us." In order to do this they need more willing and more fearful servants to run their show in the satellite countries. It is impossible for anyone who knows their record to have much sympathy for the men who will probably be sentenced to death in Prague tomorrow. Sympathy should go, rather, to the tough, liberty-loving people of Czechoslovakia. They are paying the price for being a small nation, too near to Russia. I can still hear Jan Masaryk saying, as he did so often: "In a world where there is no security for little nations, there is no security for big ones."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What is happening at the Czech trials is nothing new. 250 years ago, Daniel Defoe wrote: "Justice, with change of interest, learns to bow, and what was merit once is murder now." Some fifty years earlier, Sir John Denham made this pertinent observation: "Fear and guilt are not the same things. And when our actions are not, our fears are crimes." Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday Nov. 27, 1952.

This is the news:

It rained in Korea today and the Chinese Communists did what they could to spoil the Thanksgiving holiday for troops on the central front. The enemy launched a small surprise attack on Sniper Ridge. Our artillerymen were ready..the attack was stopped. Along other sectors of the front there was time for the big meal.. and chaplains knelt in wet ground to lead the men in prayer. General Van Fleet chose to have his holiday dinner with men of the Fifth Regimental Combat Team.. a unit he commanded twenty years ago. A soldier asked him: "When do we hit the Communists?" And the General replied:"I guess that's what a lot of people are going to ask General Eisenhower." Despite the holiday and the rain our patrols and raiders were out again: looking for prisoners and information.

At the United Nations today the Political Committee met as usual. And the United States announced that it is now fully in support of the Indian proposal for a compromise truce in Korea.

Foreign Secretary Eden, back in London after his visit here, told the House of Commons: the hope of ending the Korean war is a "slender one". But he feels the Indian proposal should be submitted to the Communist Chinese and North Koreans despite Soviet objections.

----------(more)

In Washington today, the President and his family attended services at St. Thomas Episcopal Church. They are having their holiday dinner tonight.

Here in New York, President-elect Eisenhower confined himself to his home on Morningside Heights. His headquarters announced two more appoitnments for the new administration: Major General Wilton B. Persons of Montgomery Alabama will be a special assistant. And James C. Hagerty will be the General's press secretary. General Persons ..who is retired.. if 56 years old.. a long-time friend of Eisenhower's. He was a member of the General's staff at Shape in France.. has had experience in liason and congressional work as an army respresentative and a civilian consultant to the defense department. Mr. Hagerty, a former New York Times reporter, has served Governor Dewey since 1943. The Genera;'s headquarters announced today that tomorrow he will meet with Madame Pandit, the leader of the Indian delegation to the U.N. and with agroup of C.I.O. labor leaders.

The Inaugural Ball Committee in Washington says [redacted] invitations will be sold at twelve dollars apiece on a state-quota basis. [redacted]

Governor Stevenson revealed tonight that he has received 70-thousand letters and telegrams since he lost the election to General Eisenhower. The Governor thanked those persons who have been raising funds to pay for television and radio speeches. But, he said, campaign headquarters in Springfield and the Democratic National Committee have "substantial debts." He says this is his first concern..the debts should be paid off before any additional fund raising is undertaken on his behalf. The Governor says he has not yet decided what to do about his future.

A special House committee has invited representatives of both major political parties..the radio..television and press to testify on what to do about our election laws. The Committee calls them "antiquated." Chairman Boggs estimates the cost of the recent campaign from 50 to 100 million dollars.

(more)

Senator Taft..at home in Cincinnati--says "no general agreement has been reached" on who is to become the Republican's majority leader in the Senate....Republican Senator Welker of Idaho says Congress can save ten billion dollars by cutting five billions from Depefense appropriations and cutting in half the six billion dollar foreign aid bill of this year....Democratic Senetor Humphrey of Minnesota says he ~~hmmmmmmmmm~~ will urge other Democrats to invite Senator Morse of Oregon to join Democratic caucuses. Morse, elected as a Republican, says he is now an independent.

In Czechoslovakia today, a Prague court decided the fate of the 14 former leaders of the nation's Communist party: three minor defendents were sentenced to life in prison; the other elevn must be hanged. These include Rudolf Slansky, the party's former boss, and Vladimir Clementis, the former foreign minister of Czechoslovakia. It was Clementis who, in 1949, was warned that he would be arrested if he returned home from his United Nations Assignment. At the time he was reported to have been assured that no such thing would ever happen.. an assurance from Czech President Gottwald. *

CUES FOR ASHLEY FROM BOSTON

SPOT RUNS 5 MINS COMES AT APPROX:

MURROW:

"Charlie, what do you have to report from Plymouth tonight ?"

RETURN CUE:

"...and that's the story of Plymouth then and now."

These lines,by Samuel Eliot Morison, would seem appropriate as another Thanksgiving comes to an end:"One small candle lighted near Plymouth Rock on a dull December day in 1620 has burned with a steady flame that no misfortune could quench. Let us have confidence that divine providence who kept alight that one small candle from which a thousand have been lit, has some great purpose for the million-candle power nation to perform."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

The UNITED PRESS REPORTS FROM WASHINGTON TONIGHT THAT

~~FOR [redacted]~~

~~BY [redacted]~~

~~UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT~~

~~WASHINGTON, NOV. 27. (UP)~~--VLADIMIR CLEMENTIS, FORMER CZECHOSLOVAKIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONDEMNED TO DEATH FOR TREASON TODAY IN PRAGUE, ONCE TOOK ACTIVE STEPS TO GAIN SANCTUARY IN THE UNITED STATES.

CLEMENTIS WAVERED IN AN AGONY OF DESPAIR, KNOWING HIS LIFE MIGHT HANG IN THE BALANCE, THEN DECIDED TO RETURN TO COMMUNIST CZECHOSLOVAKIA TO FACE THE DOOM HE WAS SURE AWAITED HIM.

HE WAS IN NEW YORK DURING HIS DAYS OF INDECISION--NOVEMBER, 1949--REPRESENTING HIS COUNTRY AT THE UNITED NATIONS. HE LEARNED THAT HE HAD FALLEN FROM FAVOR WITH HIS HOME GOVERNMENT AND HAD BEEN ACCUSED ~~$~~ OF "DEVIATIONISM" -- THE WORST CRIME WITH WHICH A COMMUNIST CAN BE CHARGED.

[redacted]

2

~~UPWHIS~~

~~NBC CLEARED WASHINGTON XX CHARGED.~~

THE STORY OF HIS INDECISION AND THE PRELIMINARY STEPS HE TOOK TO SEEK THE PROTECTION OF THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT HAVE BEEN HELD IN THE TIGHTEST SECRECY. WHILE HE HAD A CHANCE TO SAVE HIS LIFE THE STORY COULD NOT BE TOLD.

EVEN TODAY THE NAMES OF THOSE WHO ATTEMPTED TO GET SANCTUARY FOR THE CZECH LEADER IN THIS COUNTRY CANNOT BE REVEALED. SOME ARE NOW BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN.

ONE OF THE MEN SEEKING CLEMENTIS' SAFETY GOT DOWN ON HIS HANDS AND KNEES THREE YEARS AGO AND BEGGED THAT THEIR NAMES NEVER BE MADE PUBLIC.

"ANYTHING YOU SAY MIGHT KILL SOMEBODY," HE SAID.

THE COMMUNIST PURGE COURT'S CONDEMNATION OF CLEMENTIS APPARENTLY ENDS HIS LAST HOPE. HE WAS SENTENCED TO DEATH BY HANGING ON CHARGES OF TREASON, ESPIONAGE AND PLOTTING TO OVERTHROW THE COMMUNIST REGIME HE HELPED ERECT IN 1948. The United Press says:

DETAILS OF THE INTRICATE MANEUVERS BY WHICH HIS FRIENDS TRIED TO SAVE HIM ARE KNOWN ONLY TO A HANDFUL OF AMERICAN OFFICIALS AND THREE NEWSPAPERMEN. WHEN CLEMENTIS VETOED THESE EFFORTS, IT WAS AGREED THE STORY SHOULD NOT BE TOLD WHILE HE HAD A CHANCE TO LIVE.

SHORTLY AFTER CLEMENTIS LEARNED IN NOVEMBER, 1949, THAT HE HAD BEEN CHARGED WITH DEVIATING FROM ORTHODOX RUSSIAN COMMUNISM, A CLOSE FRIEND OF HIS CONTACTED A LEADER OF THE CZECH ANTI-COMMUNIST UNDERGROUND IN NEW YORK CITY. THE FRIEND ASKED IF THERE WAS A WAY TO GET THE CZECH FOREIGN MINISTER AN AMERICAN SANCTUARY. HE SAID CLEMENTIS WISHED TO STAY IN THE UNITED STATES.

~~WASHINGTON~~

[redacted]

[redacted].

THE UNDERGROUND LEADER CONTACTED A FORMER DIPLOMATIC OFFICIAL. THIS MAN CONTACTED AN EDITOR OF A PROMINENT NEW YORK NEWSPAPER.

CLEMENTIS' FRIEND AND THE UNDERGROUND LEADER BOTH WERE UNDER SURVEILLANCE BY COMMUNIST AGENTS. AS A RESULT THE AMERICAN OFFICIAL AND EDITOR ALSO WERE SHADOWED DURING THE "NEGOTIATIONS."

MEETINGS WERE HELD BY THE CZECH UNDERGROUND LEADER, THE FORMER AMERICAN OFFICIAL AND THE EDITOR. THE EDITOR WAS ASKED TO USE THE PRESTIGE OF HIS NEWSPAPER TO INTERCEDE FOR CLEMENTIS WITH THE U.S. GOVERNMENT.

THE UNDERGROUND LEADER ASKED IF THE EDITOR COULD GIVE CLEMENTIS "ASSURANCES" OF SAFETY. THE EDITOR GAVE THOSE ASSURANCES. THEY WERE CONVEYED TO CLEMENTIS THROUGH HIS FRIEND.

THE NEWSPAPER WAS TO PRINT THE STORY OF CLEMENTIS' "LEAP TO FREEDOM" AND TO PROVIDE THE CZECH FOREIGN MINISTER WITH A HIDEOUT.

SEVERAL DAYS PASSED WHILE CLEMENTIS DEBATED WHAT COURSE TO TAKE. HE COULD CHOOSE SAFETY OR HE COULD RETURN TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

A FIRM BELIEVER IN COMMUNISM, CLEMENTIS WAS APPARENTLY TORTURED AT THE THOUGHT OF "BETRAYING" THE CAUSE HE BELIEVED IN. HIS "OFFENSE" WAS THAT HE BELIEVED COMMUNISM IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA SHOULD FOLLOW DIFFERENT LINES THAN THOSE DICTATED BY THE RUSSIAN POLITBURO.

HE HESITATED FOR DAYS. THEN HE DECIDED:

HE WOULD GO HOME.

FOR SEVERAL MONTHS CLEMENTIS CONTINUED TO HOLD HIS RANK AS CZECH FOREIGN MINISTER. THEN HE VANISHED. IT WAS BELIEVED HERE HE HAD BEEN "PURGED."

HE WAS "RESURRECTED" TO FACE THE PURGE TRIAL COMPLETED TODAY.

HE HAD CHOSEN DEATH.

[redacted] END

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, Nov. 27, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... When we think of Thanksgiving, we think of Plymouth - the rock, the Pilgrims and their great pride. I asked my colleague Charles Ashley to go back to Plymouth, 331 years later, and take another look. Charlie, what do you have to report from Plymouth tonite?

ASHLEY: In the town of Plymouth, Mass., Ed, another Thanksgiving Day has come and, to all intents and purposes, has gone. It's the three hundred and thirty-first since Governor William Bradford ordered that a day in November be set aside that the Pilgrims and the Indian friends who helped see them thru that harrowing first winter should give thanks to Almighty God for their survival and for that first bountiful harvest. According to the written word of Governor Bradford, the Pilgrims and the Indians, led by Massasoit, gathered around hand-hewn tables and ate heartily of such things as venison, wild turkey, duck and goose.

Well, every school child knows most of the stories and legends about the Pilgrims, but delving thru dusty tomes in Plymouth's archives does reveal such interesting facts that the first winter killed one-half of the original 104 Pilgrims, not because it was a severe New England winter but because it was very mild and the settlers got their feet wet and came down with the flu'. One learns from the old writings that the Pilgrims were extreme individualists, who came here not because they'd been persecuted; rather because they wanted to avoid contamination. They did not establish a place where a man could worship God as he pleased; rather a place where they could worship God as they pleased. It was that rugged individualism that led them to stay at Plymouth, on a narrow shelf of arid soil, and allow the later settlers to occupy the rich lands in the Connecticut Valley. They came here of their own free will, on a ship about as big as a present day tugboat, and when the "Mayflower" set sail for England, not a single Pilgrim chose to return. It was rough here then. Fish, clams, lobsters and eels were plentiful, but the Pilgrims didn't like fish. Bradford wrote that they risked even the drinking of water, altho water was not as wholesome as the good beer and wine of London.

The Pilgrims lived and worked under a forced common arrangement. They developed the town-meeting form of government, but they kept their rugged individuality. There never has been any proof that John Alden actually proposed to Priscilla Mullens for Captain Miles Standish, but there never has been any proof that he didn't; so Plymouth people never liked to spoil a story by Longfellow. But one myth that might well be exploded is that history has the Pilgrims always dressed in somber clothes, outlandish hats. But aforementioned archives say Elder Brewster owned a violet-colored coat and red stockings. Mistress Anne Atwood wore a mohair petticoat and had a red silk nightie. Well, they sold beer and hard cider, but that was strictly rationed. The Pilgrims, in a word, were passionately intolerant, but they were generous, just and kindly to other men.

Well, today as we watched the descendants of John Carver, the Brewsters, the Bradfords and John Alden reenact the famed pageant of "Pilgrim's Progress", we noted that much of the early colonism is still in the place they call Plymouth Plantations. This morning some fifty Plymouth folk, dressed in the garb of old, depicted the famed procession of the Pilgrims up from the Rock at water's edge to the old burial ground. In line were Pilgrim Fathers and men dressed as Massasoit, Squanto, and Samoset. Children played the roles of Love Brewster and Wrestling Brewster, sons of Elder Brewster. Remember Allerton walked with Oceanis Hopkins, and there was Humility Cooper, Resolved and Peregrine White. It was a serious piece of business to them; no Chamber of Commerce stunt. They followed the drummer and they were flanked by arms-bearers to the churchyard, where they sang the old Pilgrim hymns. And then they opened their houses to all. Open House it was today in Pilgrimtown - not for a price, but because the people descended from the hardy pioneers are proud of their heritage and they want to share it.

The Plymouth of today is a friendly place when you get to know the people. It's a town of 13,000, a semi-textile town; mainstay industry is the Plymouth Cordage Co., with its mammoth ropewalk. There are two large textile mills; they're not running full blast, but business is better than it has been. Today in the town of 13,000 there are just under 1,000 unemployed; 600 women, 400 men out of work. But one Plymouth industry is booming. Fishermen are doing well, making a good living, even considering the hazards of the sea. Plymouth fishermen as a rule don't sail far north to the Grand Banks, off Newfoundland, as do the fishermen of Boston and Gloucester, but they go out each morning at 4:00, 5:00 o'clock, fish until 3:00 or 4:00 in the afternoon. The boats have radio-telephones, and the fish, usually whiting, cod, mackerel, are sold even before they're landed. Big trucks whisk the fish the same day to the Fulton Fisher (sic) Market in New York or to Philadelphia. And another business in Plymouth brings in a good three million dollars every summer: one-half million visitors stop by for a look at Plymouth Rock and the one hundred and one other remnants of history.

Side by side now with the Brewsters, the Aldens and the Bradfords of today live the Murphys, the Olsens, and the Bocoigalupos, and they call their community Hometown, U.S.A.

That's the story of Plymouth then and now.

MURROW: That was Charlie Ashley reporting from Plymouth.

-30-

Ediphone trans./T. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

It rained in Korea today and the Chinese Communists did what they could to spoil the Thanksgiving holiday for troops on the central front. The enemy launched a small surprise attack on Sniper Ridge. Our artillerymen were ready, and the attack was stopped. Along other sectors of the front there was time for the big meal, and chaplains knelt in wet ground to lead the men in prayer. General Van Fleet chose to have his holiday dinner with men of the Fifth Regimental Combat Team, a unit he commanded twenty years ago. A soldier asked him: "When do we hit the Communists?" And the General replied: "I guess that's what a lot of people are going to ask General Eisenhower." Despite the holiday and the rain our patrols and raiders were out again: looking for prisoners and information.

At the United Nations today the Political Committee met as usual. And the United States announced that it is now fully in support of the Indian proposal for a compromise truce in Korea.

Foreign Secretary Eden, back in London after his visit here, told the House of Commons: the hope of ending the Korean war is a "slender one". But he feels the Indian proposal should be submitted to the Communist Chinese and North Koreans despite Soviet objections.

In Washington today, the President and his family attended services at St. Thomas Episcopal Church. They are having their holiday dinner tonight.

Here in New York, President-elect Eisenhower confined himself to his home on Morningside Heights. His headquarters announced two more appointments for the new administration: Major General Wilton B. Persons of Montgomery, Alabama will be a special assistant. And James C. Hagerty will be the General's press secretary. General Persons, who is retired, is 56 years old, a long-time friend of Eisenhower's. He was a member of the General's staff at SHAPE in France, has had experience in liason and congressional work as an army representative and a civilian consultant to the defense department. Mr. Hagerty, a former New York Times reporter, has served Governor Dewey since 1943. The General's headquarters announced today that tomorrow he will meet with Madame Pandit, the leader of the Indian delegation to the U.N. and with a group of C.I.O. labor leaders.

The Inaugural Ball Committee in Washington says invitations will be sold at twelve dollars apiece on a state-quota basis. Governor Stevenson revealed tonight that he has received 70-thousand letters and telegrams since he lost the election to General Eisenhower. The Governor thanked those persons who have been raising funds to pay for television and radio speeches. But, he said, campaign headquarters in Springfield and the Democratic National Committee have "substantial debts." He says this is his first concern, the debts should be paid off before any additional fund raising is undertaken on his behalf. The Governor says he has not yet decided what to do about his future.

A special House Committee has invited representatives of both major political parties, the radio, television and press to testify on what to do about our election laws. The Committee calls them "antiquated." Chairman Boggs estimates the cost of the recent campaign from 50 to 100 million dollars.

Senator Taft, at home in Cincinnati, says "no general agreement has been reached" on who is to become the Republican's majority leader in the Senate. Republican Senator Welker of Idaho says Con ress can save ten billion dollars by cutting five billions from Defense appropriations and cutting in half the six billion dollar foreign aid bill of this year. Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota says he will urge other Democrats to invite Senator Morse of Oregon to join Democratic caucuses. Morse, elected as a Republican, says he is now an independent.

In Czechoslovakia today, a Prague court decided the fate of the 14 former leaders of the nation's Communist party: three minor defendents were sentenced to life in prison; the other eleven must be hanged. These include Rudolf Slansky, the party's former boss, and Vladimir Clementis, the former foreign minister of Czechoslovakia. It was Clementis who, in 1949, was warned that he would be arrested if he returned home from his United Nations assignment. At the time he was reported to have been assured that no such thing would ever happen..an assurance from Czech President Gottwald.

This minor planet of ours, is confronted with many difficulties. Increasingly we find ourselves thinking in terms of higher taxes and hydrogen bombs; of jet propulsion and production lines. It occurred to us that on this Thanksgiving day we might turn back to the tradition, faith and cooperation that has been this country's greatest strength.

When we think of Thanksgiving, we think of Plymouth - the rock, the Pilgrims and their great pride. I asked my colleague Charles Ashley to go back to Plymouth, 331 years later, and take another look. Charlie, what do you have to report from Plymouth tonite?

ASHLEY: In the town of Plymouth, Mass., Ed, another Thanksgiving Day has come and, to all intents and purposes, has gone. It's the three hundred and thirty-first since Governor William Bradford ordered that a day in November be set aside that the Pilgrims and the Indian friends who helped see them through that harrowing first winter should give thanks to Almight God for their survival and for that first bountiful harvest. According to the written word of Governor Bradford, the Pilgrims and the Indians, led by Massasoit, gathered around hand-hewn tables and ate heartily of such things as venison, wild turkey, duck and goose.

Well, every school child knows most of the stories and legends about the Pilgrims, but delving through dusty tomes in Plymouth's archives does reveal such interesting facts that the first winter killed one-half of the original

104 Pilgrims, not because it was a severe New England winter but because it was very mild and the settlers got their feet wet and came down with the flu'. One learns from the old writings that the Pilgrims were extreme individualists, who came here not because they'd been persecuted; rather because they wanted to avoid contamination. They did not establish a place where a man could worship God as he pleased; rather a place where they could worship God as they pleased. It was that rugged individualism that led them to stay at Plymouth, on a narrow shelf of arid soil, and allow the later settlers to occupy the rich lands in the Connecticut Valley. They came here of their own free will, on a ship about as big as a present day tugboat, and when the "Mayflower" set said for England, not a single Pilgrim chose to return. It was rough here then. Fish, clams, lobsters and eels were plentiful, but the Pilgrims didn't like fish. Bradford wrote that they risked even the drinking of water, although water was not as wholesome as the good beer and wine of London.

The Pilgrims lived and worked under a forced common arrangement. They developed the town-meeting form of government, but they kept their rugged individuality. There never has been any proof that John Alden actually proposed to Pricilla Mullens for Captain Miles Standish, but there never has been any proof that he didn't; so Plymouth people never liked to spoil a story by Longfellow. But one myth that might well be exploded is that history has the Pilgrims always dressed in somber clothes, outlandish hats. But aforementioned archives say Elder Brewster owned a violet-colored coat and red stockings. Mistress Anne Atwood wore a mohair petticoat and had a red silk nightie. Well, they sold beer and hard cider, but that was strictly rationed. The Pilgrims, in a word, were passionately intolerant, but they were generous, just and kindly to other men.

Well, today as we watched the descendants of John Carver, the Brewsters, the Bradfords and John Alden reenact the famed pageant of "Pilgrim's Progress," we noted that much of the early colonism is still in the place they call Plymouth

Plantations. This morning some fifty Plymouth folk, dressed in the garb of old, depicted the famed procession of the Pilgrims up from the Rock at water's edge to the old burial ground. In line were Pilgrim Fathers and men dressed as Massasoit, Squanto, and Samoset. Children played the roles of Love Brewster and Wrestling Brewster, sons of Elder Brewster. Remember Allerton walked with Oceanis Hopkins, and there was Humility Cooper, Resolved and Peregrine White. It was a serious piece of business to them; no Chamber of Commerce stunt. They followed the drummer and they were flanked by arms-bearers to the churchyard, where they sang the old Pilgrim hymns. And then they opened their houses to all. Open House it was today in Pilgrimtown - not for a price, but because the people descended from the hardy pioneers are proud of their heritage and they want to share it.

The Plymouth of today is a friendly place when you get to know the people. It's a town of 13,000, a semi-textile town; mainstay industry is the Plymouth Cordage Co., with its mammoth ropewalk. There are two large textile mills; they're not running full blast, but business is better than it has been. Today in the town of 13,000 there are just under 1,000 unemployed; 600 women, 400 men out of work. But one Plymouth industry is booming. Fishermen are doing well, making a good living, even considering the hazards of the sea. Plymouth fishermen as a rule don't said far north to the Grand Banks, off Newfoundland, as do the fishermen of Boston and Gloucester, but they go out each morning at 4:00, 5:00 o'clock, fish until 3:00 or 4:00 in the afternoon. The boats have radio-telephones, and the fish, usually whiting, cod, mackerel, are sold even before they're landed. Big trucks whisk the fish the same day to the Fulton Fisher Market in New York or to Philadelphia. And another business in Plymouth brings in a good three million dollars every summer: one-half million visitors stop by for a look at Plymouth Rock and the one hundred and one other remnants of history.

Side by side now with the Brewsters, the Aldens and the Bradfords of today live the Murphys, the Olsens, and the Coccigalupos, and they call their community Hometown, U.S.A.

That's the story of Plymouth then and now.

MURROW: That was Charles Ashley reporting from Plymouth. This is a day when reporters and others are inclined to draw up and publish a list of things for which they are grateful. I am no exception. The list was too long and too personal for publication. So permit me to hope that your reasons for gratitude and Thanksgiving are likewise; too many to be stated in a short space and perhaps too personal to interest many people. There is seldom much news on holidays. Most of the men who make it and those who report it are taking it easy. Still a hard-working reporter can always learn something. This reporter, having spent the morning sawing wood and spent part of the afternoon with a shotgun has learned that as usual, I am a fine wing shot with a saw.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These lines, by Samuel Eliot Morison, would seem appropriate as another Thanksgiving comes to an end: "One small candle lighted near Plymouth Rock on a dull December day in 1620 has burned with a steady flame that no misfortune could quench. Let us have confidence that divine providence that divine providence who kept alight that one small candle from which a thousand have been lit, has some great purpose for the million-candle power nation to perform."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, Nov. 28, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

The Chinese Communists today rejected any Korean truce plan that does not call for the forced return of all prisoners-of-war. In a broadcast over the Peiping radio, Chou En-lai, the Communist Premier, rejected the American proposal for a truce and the Indian compromise. He insisted that only the Russians have offered a reasonable plan. That's the repatriation of all prisoners by force if necessary thru an eleven-member United Nations commission. The Chinese Premier also took occasion to explain how fair and reasonable and patient the Chinese and North Koreans have been during the sixteen months of truce negotiations. And he said, "the United States must bear full responsibility for the grave international tension caused by failure to achieve peace." Despite this broadcast from Peiping, the United Nations is slowly moving towards approval of the Indian compromise plan. A vote was delayed today, at least until Monday, when the Indian delegate said he must await final instructions from his government.

On the battlefields things were quiet today, strangely quiet. One American division reports that its patrols could not find any Communist soldiers. This sort of report, comparatively rare, baffled the division commanders. They had no explanation for it.

Our Thunderjet fighter bombers hit a big enemy troop and supply center south of Pyongyang. They started at least four large fires and one big explosion.

The city of Seoul celebrated again today, awaiting the arrival of President-elect Eisenhower. My colleague Bob Pierpoint sent us a report on Seoul's excitement and expectations, and we'll hear from him in a few minutes.

At Eisenhower headquarters in New York, Governor Adams, who is to be assistant to the President, announced two new appointments. Thomas E. Stevens, a New York attorney, will become special counsel to the President. Mr. Stevens, former Secretary to the New York State Republican Committee, served as the General's appointment secretary during the recent campaign. Governor Adams also said that Dr. Gabriel Hauge will be an administrative assistant to the President, in charge of economic affairs. He is an editor of Business Week Magazine and he was Research Director of the Eisenhower campaign.

Today a group of CIO leaders called on the General. They said they congratulated him on his election and, as Americans, pledged their support to the President of the United States. They also told him, "We will react vigorously to any effort to cut living standards or to attack labor."

Another group of visitors, from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, discussed the filibuster. ~~xxxxx~~ Executive Secretary Walter White later told reporters that the General pledged that he would use every power within his official position to abolish discrimination, segregation and injustice. Eisenhower is also said to have pledged to let the Senate know that he wants an end to filibustering, so that Senate rules would not be used to defeat legislation.

The Agriculture Department reports that farm commodity prices dropped two per cent in the month ending November 15. This is the third month in a row that farm prices have dropped.

Here in New York, Thomas Luchese, also known as Three Finger Brown, permitted government agents to serve him with papers for Federal action to take away his citizenship. Luchese, who is said to be Frank Costello's replacement as rackets boss, says he was ready to accept the papers ten days ago. The government denies this. Today's brief meeting took place in his lawyer's office.

In Paris, a spokesman for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization says it will not be possible for NATO to set its 1953 military targets until after a spring meeting of the Council of Ministers.

In the city of Seoul, Korea, today there was a parade, the fourth parade in as many days. Seoul can hardly wait for the arrival of General Eisenhower. In a long war, in which there has been little to get excited about, the General's anticipated arrival has served as a tonic of sorts for very tired people. We asked our correspondent Bob Pierpoint to record the story of Seoul for you. Here it is:

PIERPOINT: The city of Seoul, ignoring the gaping wounds of two years of war, is today as bright and festive as its decumbent citizens can make it. The impending visit of President-elect Dwight Eisenhower is giving the war-exhausted Koreans a fine chance to have fun - and they're making the most of it. Official preparations got under way last week end, when the Seoul City Fathers started planning the poster and sign campaign. At first there was some confusion. The Mayor thought that the use of the nickname Ike was not in keeping with Oriental dignity. Consequently, some of the larger, street-wide signs were ordered changed to read: Welcome, Eisenhower. The biggest poster of all, the one which covers about half of the facade of the burnt-out capitol building, originally carried the slogan, "We Oppose the Withdrawal of U.N. Forces from Korea", but in view of certain phases of the recent U.S. political campaign, this was evidently considered a bit undiplomatic. So it was changed to read instead: "Strengthen Korean Forces", a less controversial slogan.

The capitol building itself, gutted by the Communists during the fighting in Seoul, was made the archway construction and sign painting center. Almost any hour of the day or nite at the beginning of this week, we could watch Korean artists and workmen busily sawing, hammering and painting. U.S. magazine pictures were used as the models for most of the many huge paintings of Eisenhower. Since most Koreans have understandable difficulty with the English language, it was feared that some strange spelling combinations might appear. This little problem was neatly and cleverly licked by furnishing each sign painter with a carefully numbered stencil. All he had to do was get the numbers in order. And the result has been an amazing accuracy with the difficult name Eisenhower.

School children have also been mobilized to paint flags and posters. The number of stars in the American flag has varied with individual taste. At least one young student, apparently a history major, appeared waving a flag with thirteen stars in a perfect circle.

Every building in this city seems to have at least two flags, the South Korean and the American. Many also are flying the U.N.'s official blue-and-white banner, with an occasional Nationalist Chinese emblem spotted here and there, presumably located on Chinese homes. Crumbling, shell-pocked walls are covered with "welcome" posters of all sorts and varieties, over ten thousand of them, according to city officials. It's a rather bizarre feeling to walk along an Oriental alleyway, perhaps ten feet wide and filled with the sights, sounds, and smells which only this part of the world can produce, suddenly to come face-to-face with a huge picture of that famous friendly grin and the words in red, white and blue letters, "Welcome, President-elect Eisenhower." But it gives you the feeling that the Koreans really are excited and pleased with this historic visit. Of course, there's the other side, too - security. Seoul today is literally one huge fortress, guarded inside and out by thousands of armed troops. The local police have rounded up an estimated 000 troublemakers, including everyone from known radical sympathizers to professional pickpockets. The Mayor of Seoul, who is a former head of the National Police, says no one needs to fear for the safety of Eisenhower. "I've studied the Russian police system," adds Mayor Kim Tai-sun (?), "and I know ~~xx~~ we are better than they are." In addition to the large-scale roundups, Mayor Kim has his plans laid out for a big parade thru the center of the city. Armed guards have been standing practice watches, with one man posted every hundred feet along the proposed line of march. But today the practice was called, because of rain.

On one subject there is no doubt here in Seoul. Eisenhower will meet with President Syngman Rhee and his Cabinet. The major points the Koreans wish to impress on the President-elect are already plastered on posters all over the town. One American GI, who counted no less than seventy huge posters on his way into Seoul from the front, was truly amazed. "Ike doesn't even have to confer with anybody here," said the surprised soldier. "All he has to do is read the signs on his way into town and he knows what they want." The Koreans are emphasizing over and over again these five points: "Unification of North and South Korea; drive out the Chinese Reds from all of Korea; disband the North Korean puppet army; strengthen South Korean forces; and we oppose the withdrawal of U.N. troops." What Eisenhower will hear from the U.N. troops themselves is more simple. The majority of them seem to want to ask their new leader just one question: When do we go home? And perhaps that isn't as facetious as it may sound. We all hope that this is the problem which the President-elect's visit may help solve.

Incidentally, the influx of correspondents has brought on a number of small military crises here in Seoul. Among other things, a sudden uniform shortage has caused one correspondent to don a two-year-old pair of pants stamped with the label: CBS - Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Not such startling information - recorded by Bob Pierpoint in Korea. As I recall it, I left those GI trousers on a hook in the Correspondents' Press Club in Tokyo when I left Korea at the end of August in 1950. Then the city of Seoul was in enemy hands. It has changed hands many times since then. Now its bedraggled citizens and the people of all Korea are awaiting the arrival of Dwight D. Eisenhower with new hope. During the last couple of years, when General Eisenhower was commanding SHAPE, Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe, he was wont to tell visitors that only a small part of his job was military; it was a combination of political, diplomatic, financial and public relations. Something of the same task will confront him in Korea, as you have just heard in Bob Pierpoint's report.

So it appears now that once again General Eisenhower will have to deal with the demands of any ally as well as with the designs of an enemy. And it is perhaps fortunate for all of us that he has wide experience in both areas.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: (C O M M E R C I A L)

That's my word for today, and here's Mr. Murrow with his Word for Today.

MURROW: The South Koreans apparently have great hope that General Eisenhower's visit will somehow resolve their difficulties. It is ~~xxxxx~~ probably as Sophocles once said: "It is hope that maintains most of mankind." Samuel Johnson put it another way: "It is necessary to hope, the hope should always be deluded, for hope itself is happiness and its frustrations, however frequent, are yet less dreadful than its extinction."

Good Night and Good luck!

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

This is the CBS RADIO NETWORK.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists today rejected any Korean truce plan that does not call for the forced return of all prisoners-of-war. In a broadcast over the Peiping radio, Chou En-lai, the Communist Premier, rejected the American proposal for a truce and the Indian compromise. He insisted that only the Russians have offered a reasonable plan. That's the repatriation of all prisoners by force if necessary through an eleven-member United Nations commission. The Chinese Premier also took occasion to explain how fair and reasonable and patient the Chinese and North Koreans have been during the sixteen months of truce negotiations. And he said, "the United States must bear full responsibility for the grave international tension caused by failure to achieve peace." Despite this broadcast from Peiping, the United Nations is slowly moving towards approval of the Indian compromise plan. A vote was delayed today, at least until Monday, when the Indian delegate said he must await final instructions from his government.

On the battlefields things were quiet today, strangely quiet. One American division reports that its patrols could not find any Communist soldiers. This sort of report, comparatively rare, baffled the division commanders. They had no explanation for it.

Our Thunderjet fighter bombers hit a big enemy troop and supply center south of Pyongyang. They started at least four large fires and one big explosion.

The city of Seoul celebrated again today, awaiting the arrival of President-elect Eisenhower. My colleague Bob Pierpoint sent us a report on Seoul's excitement and expectations, and we'll hear from him in a few minutes.

At Eisenhower headquarters in New York, Governor Adams, who is to be assistant to the president, announced two new appointments. Thomas E. Stevens, a New York attorney, will become special counsel to the President. Mr. Stevens, former Secretary to the New York State Republican Committee, served as the General's appointment secretary during the recent campaign. Governor Adams also said that Dr. Gabriel Hauge will be an administrative assistant to the President, in charge of economic affairs, He is an editor of Business Week Magazine and he was Research Director of the Eisenhower campaign.

Today a group of C.I.O. leaders called on the General. They said they congratulated him on his election and, as Americans, pledged their support to the President of the United States. They also told him, "we will react vigorously to any effort to cut living standards or to attack labor."

Another group of visitors, from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, discussed the filibuster, Executive Secretary Walter White later told reporters that the General pledged that he would use every power within his official position to abolish discrimination, segregation and injustice. Eisenhower is also said to have pledged to let the Senate know that he wants an end to filibustering, so that Senate rules would not be used to defeat legislation.

The Agriculture Department reports that farm commodity prices dropped two per cent in the month ending November 15. This is the third month in a row that farm prices have dropped.

Here in New York, Thomas Luchese, also known as Three Finger Brown, permitted government agents to serve him with papers for Federal action to take away his citizenship. Luchese, who is said to be Frank Costello's replacement as rackets boss, says he was ready to accept the papers ten days ago. The government denies this. Today's brief meeting took place in his lawyer's office.

In Paris, a spokesman for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization says it will not be possible for NATO to set its 1953 military targets until after a spring meeting of the Council of Ministers.

In the city of Seoul, Korea, today there was a parade, the fourth parade in as many days. Seoul can hardly wait for the arrival of General Eisenhower.

In a long war, in which there has been little to get excited about, the General's anticipated arrival has served as a tonic of sorts for very tired people. We asked our correspondent Bob Pierpoint to record the story of Seoul for you. Here it is.

PIERPOINT: The city of Seoul, ignoring the gaping wounds of two years of war, is today as bright and festive as its decumbent citizens can make it. The impending visit of President-elect Dwight Eisenhower is giving the war-exhausted Koreans a fine chance to have fun - and they're making the most of it. Official preparations got under way last week end, when the Seoul City Fathers started planning the poster and sign campaign. At first there was some confusion. The Mayor thought that the use of the nickname Ike was not in keeping with Oriental dignity. Consequently, some of the larger, street-wide signs were ordered changed to read; Welcome, Eisenhower. The biggest poster of all, the one which covers about half of the facade of the burnt-out capitol building, originally carried the slogan, "We oppose the Withdrawal of U.N. Forces from Korea", but in view of certain phases of the recent U.S. political campaign, this was evidently considered a bit undiplomatic. So it was changed to read instead: "Strengthen Korean Forces", a less controversial slogan.

The capitol building itself, gutted by the Communists during the fighting in Seoul, was made the archway construction and sign painting center. Almost any hour of the day or night at the beginning of this week, we could watch Korean artists and workmen busily sawing, hammering and painting. U.S. magazine pictures were used as the models for most of the many huge paintings of Eisenhower. Since most Koreans have understandable difficulty with the English language, it was feared that some strange spelling combinations might appear. This little problem was neatly and cleverly licked by furnishing each sign painter with a carefully numbered stencil. All he had to do was get the numbers in order. And the result has been an amazing accuracy with the difficult name Eisenhower.

School children have also been mobilized to paint flags and posters. The number of stars in the American flag has varied with individual taste. At least one young student, apparently a history major, appeared waving a flag with thirteen stars in a perfect circle.

Every building in this city seems to have at least two flags, the South Korean and the American. Many also are flying the U.N.'s official blue-and-white banner, with an occasional Nationalist Chinese emblem spotted here and there, presumably located on Chinese homes. Crumbling, shell-pocked walls are covered with "welcome" posters of all sorts and varieties, over ten thousand of them, according to city officials. It's a rather bizarre feeling to walk along an Oriental alleyway, perhaps ten feet wide and filled with the sights, sounds, and smells which only this part of the world can produce, suddenly to come face-to-face with a huge picture of that famous friendly grin and the words in red, white and blue letters, "Welcome, President-elect Eisenhower." But it gives you the feeling that the Koreans really are excited and pleased with this historic visit. Of course, there's the other side, too - security. Seoul today is literally one huge fortress, guarded inside and out by thousands of armed troops. The local police have rounded up an estimated 600 troublemakers, including everyone from known radical sympathizers to professional pickpockets. The Mayor of Seoul, who is a former head of the National Police, says no one needs to fear for the safety of Eisenhower. "I've studied the Russian police system," adds Mayor Kim Ti-Sun, "And I know we are better than they are." In addition to the large-scale roundups, Mayor Kim has his plans laid out for a big parade through the center of the city. Armed guards have been standing practice watches, with one man posted every hundred feet along the proposed line of march. But today the practice was called, because of rain.

On one subject there is no doubt here in Seoul. Eisenhower will meet with President Syngman Rhee and his Cabinet. The major points the Koreans wish to impress on the President-elect are already plastered on posters all over the town. One American GI, who counted no less than seventy huge posters on his way into Seoul from the front, was truly amazed. "Ike doesn't even have to confer with anybody here," said the surprised soldier. "All he has to do is read the signs on his way into town and he knows what they want." The Koreans are emphasizing over and over again these five points: "Unification of North and South Korea; drive out the Chinese Reds from all of Korea; disband the North Korean puppet army; strengthen South Korean forces; and we oppose the withdrawal of U.N. troops." What Eisenhower will hear from the U.N. troops themselves is more simple. The majority of them seem to want to ask their new leader just one question: When do we go home? And perhaps that isn't as facetious as it may sound. We all hope that this is the problem which the President-elect's visit may help solve.

Incidentally, the influx of correspondents has brought on a number of small military crises here in Seoul. Among other things, a sudden uniform shortage has caused one correspondent to don a two-year-old pair of pants stamped with the label: CBS - Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Not such startling information - recorded by Bob Pierpoint in Korea. As I recall it, I left those GI trousers on a hook in the Correspondents' Press Club in Tokyo when I left Korea at the end of August in 1950. Then the city of Seoul was in enemy hands. It has changed hands many times since then. Now it's bedraggled citizens and the people of all Korea are awaiting the arrival of Dwight D. Eisenhower with new hope. During the last couple of years, when General Eisenhower was commanding SHAPE, Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe, he was wont to tell visitors that only a small part of his job was military; it was a combination of political, diplomatic, financial and public relations. Something of the same task will confront him in Korea, as you have just heard in Bob Pierpoint's report.

So it appears now that once again General Eisenhower will have to deal with the demands of any ally as well as with the designs of an enemy. And it is perhaps fortunate for all of us that he has wide experience in both areas.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The South Koreans apparently have great hope that General Eisenhower's visit will somehow resolve their difficulties. It is probably as Sophocles once said: "It is hope that maintains most of mankind." Samuel Johnson put it another way: "It is necessary to hope, the hope should always be deluded, for hope itself is happiness and its frustrations, however, frequent, are yet less dreadful than its extinction."

Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS S

NOV 28

ROC

Florence

MURROW NY URGENT URGENT

FM PIERPOINT....."THE CITY OF SEOUL BELYING THE GAPING WOUNDS OF TWO YEARS OF WAR TODAY IS AS BRIGHT AND FESTIVE AS ITS COMMON CITIZENS CAN MAKE IT. THE IMPENDING VISIT OF PRESIDENT ELECT EISENHOWER IS GIVING THE WAR EXHAUSTED KOREANS A FINE CHANCE TO HAVE FUN, AND THEY,RE MAKING THE MOST OF IT

OFFICIAL PREPARATIONS GOT UNDER WAY LAST WEEKEND, WHEN THE SEOUL CITY FATHERS STARTED PLANNING THE POSTER AND SIGN CAMPIGN. AT FIRST HERE WAS SOME CONFUSION. THEY MAYOR FELT THAT THE USE OF THE NICKNAME ABOVE WORD IS THERE

IKE WAS NOT IN KEEPING WITH ORIENTAL DIGNITY. CONSEQUENTLY SOME OF THE LARGER STATEWIDE SIGNS WERE ORDERED CHANGED TO READ WELCOME EISENHOWER. THE BIGGEST POSTER OF ALL, THE ONE WHICH COVERS ABOUT HALF THE FACADE OF THE BURNED OUT CAPITOL BUILDING, ORIGINALLY CARRIED THE SLOGAN...
WE OPPOSE THE WITHDRAWAL OF U N FORCES FROM KOREA.....

BUT IN VIEW OF CERTAIN PHASES OF THE RECENT U S POLITICAL CAMPAIGN, THIS WAS EVIDENTALY CONSIDERED A BIT UNDIPLOMATIC. SO IT WAS CHANGED TO READ INSTEAD..... STRENGTHEN KOREAN FORCES.... /A LESS CONTROVERSIAL SLOGAN.

THE CAPITOL BUILDING ITSELF, GUTTED BY THE COMMUNISTS DURING THE FIGHTING IN SEOUL, WAS MADE THE ARCHWAY CONSTRUCTION AND SIGN PAINTING CENTER. ALMOST ANY HOUR OF THE DAY OR NIGHT, AT THE BEGINNING OF THIS WEEK, WE COULD WATCH KOREAN ARTISTS AND WORKMEN BUSILY SAWING, HAMMERING AND PAINTING, U S MAGAZINE PICTURES WERE USED AS A MODEL FOR MOST OF THE MANY HUGE PAINTINGS OF EISENHOWER. SINCE MOSTR KOREANS HAVE UNDERSTANDABLE DIFFICULTY WITH THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, IT WAS FEARED THAT SOME STRANGE SPELLING COMBINATIONS MIGHT APPEAR. THIS LITTLE PRO LEM WAS NEATLY AND CLEVERLY LICKED BY FURNISHING EACH SIGN PAINTER WITH A CAREFULLY NUMBERED STENCIL. ALL HE HAD TO DO WAS GET THE NUMBERS IN ORDER. AND THE RESULT HAS BEEN AN AMAZING ACCURACY WITH THE DIFFICULT NAME EISENHOWER.

SCHOOL CHILDREN ALSO HAVE BEEN MOBILIZED TO PAINT FLAGS AND POSTERS. THE NUMBER OF STARS IN THE AMERICAN FLAG IS VARIED WITH INDIFICUAL TASTE. AT LEAST ONE YOUNG STUDENT, APPARENTLY A HISTORY MAJOR, APPEARED WAVING A FLAG WITH THIRTEEN STARS IN A PERFECT CIRCLE.

EVERY BUILDING IN THIS CITY SEEMS TO HAVE AT LEAST TWO FLAGS,A SOUTH KOREAN AND AN AMERICAN. MANY ALSO ARE FLYING THE U N,S OFFICIAL BLUE AND WHITE BANNER, WITH AN OCCASIONAL NATIONALIST CHINESE EMBLEM SPOTTED HERE AND THERE, PRESUMABLY LOCATED ON CHINESE HOMES. CRUMBLING SHELL-POCKED WALLS ARE COVERED WITH WELCOME POSTERS OF ALL SORTS AND VARIETIES..... OVER TEN THOUSAND OF THEM, ACCORDING TO CITY OFFICIALS. IT,S A RATHER BIZARRE FEELING TO WALK ALONG AN ORIENTAL ALLEYWAY, PERHAPS TEN FEEL WIDE, AND FILLED WITH THE SIGHTS, SOUNDS, AND SMELLS THAT ONLY THIS PART OF THE WORLD CAN PRODUCE..... SUDDENLY TO COME FACE TO FACE WITH A HUGE PICTURE OF THAT FAMOUS,FRIENDLY GRIN..... AND THE WORDS IN RED, WHITE AND BLUE LETTERS....."WELCOME PRESIDENT ELECT EISENHOWER".

BUT IT GIVES YOU THE FEELING THAT THE KOREANS REALLY ARE EXCITED AND PLEASED WITH THIS HISTORIC VISIT.

OF COURSE, THERE,S THE OTHER SIDE TOOO..... SECURITY. SEOUL TODAY IS LITERALLY ONE HUGE FORTRESS, GUARDED INSIDE AND OUT BY THOUSANDS OF ARMED TROOPS. THE LOCAL POLICE HAVE ROUNDED UP AN ESTIMATED 600 TROUBLE-MAKERS, INCLUDING EVERYONE FROM KNOWN RADICAL SYMPATHIZERS TO PROFESSIONAL PICK POCKETS.

THE MAYOR OF SEOUL, WHO IS A FORMER HEAD OF THE NATIONAL POLICE, SAYS NO ONE NEEDS TO FEAR FOR THE SAFETY OF EISENHOWER. "I,VE STUDIED THE RUSSIAN POLICE SYSTEM" ADDS MAYOR KIM-TI SUN "AND I KNOW WE ARE BETTER THAN THEY ARE".

IN ADDITION TO THE LARGE-SCALE ROUNDUP, MAYOR KIM HAS HIS PLANS LAID

IN ADDITION TO THE LARGE-SCALE ROUNDUP, MAYOR KIM HAS HIS PLANS LAID OUT FOR A BIG PARADE THRU THE CENTER OF THE CITY, ARMED GUARDS HAVE BEEN STANDING PRACTICE WATCHES, WITH ONE MAN POSTED EVERY ONE HUNDRED FEET ALONG THE PROPOSED LINE OF MARCH. BUT TODAY THE PRACTICE WAS CALLED, BECAUSE OF RAIN.

A THOROUGH NEWS BLACKOUT HAS ALSO BEEN CLAMPED ON SEOUL. OF COURSE, WE UNITED NATIONS CORRESPONDNETS HAVE ALWAYS BEEN SUBJECT TO STRICT ARMY CENSORSHIP ON ANYTHING WE SEND OUT. BUT SPECULATION HAS RUN WILD THRU THE PAGES OF THE LOCAL KOREAN NEWSPAPERS EVEN AFTER THE GOVERNMENT "REQUESTED" NO SPECULATIVE STORIES ON THE EISENHOWER VISIT. FINALLY, THE KOREAN GOVERNMENT HAS NO ISSUED /MAKE THAT READ NOW/ ORDERS THAT EVERY NEWSPAPER PRINTED IN SEOUL WILL HAVE TO BE PROOF READ BY KOREAN CENSORS BEFORE PUBLICATION. THIS WILL GO ON, DESPITE BITTER KOREAN OBJECTIONS, UNTIL AFTER THE PRESIDENT ELECT HAS LEFT.

INCIDENTALLY, THE NEAT GIMMICK FOR U N NEWSMEN OF ARGUING WITH THE CENSORS, THAT THEY ARE MERELY QUOTING ALREADY PUBLISHED REPORTS FROM KOREAN SOUCES.

ON ONE SUBJECT THERE IS NO DOUBT HERE IN SEOUL... EISENHOWER WILL MEET THE PRESIDENT SYNGMAN RHEE AND HIS CABINET. THE MAJOR POINTS THE KOREANS WISH TO IMPRESS ON THE PRESIDENT-ELECT ARE ALREADY PLASTERED ON POSTERS ALL OVER THE TOWN.

ONE AMERICAN G I WHO COUNTED NO LESS THAN SEVENTY HUGE POSTERS ON HIS WAY INTO SEOUL FROM THE FRONT, WAS TRULY AMAZED..."IKE DOESN,T EVEN HAVE TO CONFER WITH ANYBODY HERE", SAID THE SURPRISED SOLDIER, "ALL HE HAS TO DO IS READ THE SIGNS ON HIS WAY INTO TOWN, AND HE KNOWN WHAT THEY WANT".

THE KOREANS ARE EMPHASIZING OVER AND OVER AGAIN THESE FIVE POINTS,,, UNIFICATION OF NORTH AND SOUTH KOREA. DRIVE OUT EH CHINESE REDS
FROM ALL OF KOREA. DISBAND THE NORTH KOREAN PUPPET ARMY.
XXXX

Monday December 1, 1952

This is the news:

The United Nations political committee has approved the Indian plan for a truce in Korea. The vote was 53 to five...the Soviet bloc voting against it. (Nationalist China did not vote). The Indian proposal now goes to the full Assembly. Just before the vote, the Indian delegate [redacted] appealed to all nations for support. In reply [redacted] Mr. Vishinsky of Russia said the Indian appeal was pathetic..ludicrous. He said there is no ground for thinking an armistice can be worked out in a short time. He said neither the Chinese ~~or~~ NoR North Koreans Communists have given any indication that they might approve the Indian proposal. Yet in face of this, 53 nations voted to get such information direct..from the Chinese and the North Koreans.

Korea was quiet today. A cold rain, followed by a driving snow [redacted] brought the war almost to a halt...except for a few Chinese 12-MAN squads [redacted] that kept feeling out South Korean positions.

American marines, with fixed bayonets and armoed cars, are now patrolling the streets of Seoul... and guarding key headquarters...in readiness for the visit of General Eisenhower.

The General today completed his cabinet. His secretary, Arthur Vandenbergh, Junior, told newsmen: Martin P. Durkin of Chicago will be the new secretary of labor. Sinclair Weeks of Boston will be secretary of commerce. And Walter Williams of Seattle..will become undersecretary of commerce (not a cabinet post.) Mr. Durkin says he was surprised by his appointment.. he's a registered Democrat..voted for Governor Stevenson for President. He's 58..the president of the A.F. of L. plumbers union.. served under both Democratic and Republican governors of Illinois as state director of labor. He is vice president of the Catholic conference on Industrial problems. Mr. Durkin says he is happy to serve General Eisenhower.. believes the General will give "full and complete consideration to the problems of labor and management." He believes the Taft-Hartley law can be amended to the satisfaction of labor. [redacted]

Mr. Weeks, who becomes commerce secretary, is 59. His father, John W. Weeks, served as war secretary in the Harding and Coolidge cabinets. Mr. Weeks has been chairman of the Republican national finance committee since 1949... national committeeman from Massachusetts since 1940.

He's chairman of the board of Reed and Barton, silversmiths.. a member of the Board of Overseers of Harvard.. and a director of: Gilette Safety Razor...Pacific Mills..the Pullman Company... Atlas Plywood, and the First National Bank of Boston.

Mr. Williams, who will become [redacted] undersecretary of commerce, is an investment and insurance executive. He's been chairman of the Washington state Republican committee; chairman of the National Citizens for Eisenhower in the election. He's a director of the international Y.M.C.A. and is a member of the board of the American Association for the United Nations.

Senator Lodge..designated to replace Warren Austin as our top man at the United Nations..said today that the General "believes very firmly in doing everything we can to help the U.N. become a vital institution for the preservation of peace." He says the transition of the government, from one party to the other, is working very smoothly.

Today, Mrs. Eisenhower paid a 90-minute call on Mrs. Truman at the White House. Both described it as a very pleasant visit.

Republican Representative Reed of New York.. who will head the House ways and means committee in the new congress.. said tonight that he will introduce a bill calling for a five per cent tax reduction effective June 30th of next year. Reed also favors letting the excess profits tax on corporations die on the same date. [redacted]

Micheal di Salle was sworn in today as a special consultant on PRICE [redacted] controls. He says he personally is against dismantling the controls program now.

The government has lifted price controls on men's clothing. And the C.I.O. convention, in Atlantic City, today adopted a resolution calling for an end to wage controls...but the C.I.O. would retain rent and price controls.

Labor Secretary Tobin spoke to the convention today and advised a quick merger with the A.F. of L. to put up a solid labor front to the new Republican administration.

A House committee investigating election costs was told today (by leaders of both major parties) that the recent presidential campaign may have cost as much as 100-million dollars.

Another committee charged that it has found "filth, perversion and degenerecy" in some pocket-sized books.. sex magazines, and some comic books. Ralph Daigh, editorial director of Fawcett Publications, told the committee some of the books it calls "filthy" merely "reflect the taste and spirit of the reading public."

Here in New York, Frank Coe, secretary of the International Monetary Fund, refused to tell Senate investigators whether he has ever been a Communist. Senator O'Conor of Maryland demanded that he be "dismissed summarily". Coe does not work for the United Nations.. the Monetary Fund is a U.N. affiliate.

Great Britain tonight accused Russia of nearly doubling the size of a modern armed force in East Germany. The British say that more than 100-thousand East Germans are now under arms.. they are equipped with Soviet tanks, howitzers and anti-aircraft artillery.

In Italy, Vittorio Orlando, the last of World War One's

Big Four, died today. He was 92. Orlando, together with Woodrow Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemencaeu, drafted the peace treaty at Versailles.

In Poland, the Communists say they have arrested five high-ranking priests.. as "spies." And the Bucharest radio, says a big trial of subversives is now in preparation in Romania.

Edward R. Murrow: December 1, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

It seems to this reporter that much of our policy and the policy of our European allies has been controlled from Moscow for the last four or five years. Whenever the Communist empire makes a move - as when it took over Czechoslovakia, or moved into South Korea - the free world reacts and we have a period of increased unity and a decisive response from the ~~free world~~ Western Powers. When the Russians relax their pressure, the unity of their enemies begins to show cracks. Right now in Europe the Russians have relaxed the pressure; no alarms or threatening gestures - an effort to create the impression that the two worlds can live, if not in harmony then at least in peace. This comes at a time when the representatives of six European countries - France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg - are launching a truly revolutionary undertaking. It is no longer a plan, it is an agreement to pool the coal and steel resources of those six countries. Early next year there will be a free single market for coal, and by the middle of April a free single market for steel. Customs barriers and restrictions will be lifted between those six nations for these two basic materials of industrial life. This can provide a single market of two hundred million consumers; a market for mass production at lower prices. This new authority, called "The European Community", will levy a flat tax of one percent per ton on coal and steel. For the first time in the history of Europe, coal from Germany, steel from France and Luxembourg will move freely without tariff or duty of any kind from Rotterdam to Naples. This will not involve the nationalization of coal mines and steel mills now privately owned. Instead of six nations operating in anarchy and enmity behind artificial trade barriers, there will be a free flow of the essential ingredients of modern mass production.

It is both a revolutionary and exciting prospect. When it becomes operational it will be "the end of the beginning" of the economic federation of Western Europe. In terms of American politics it is something that was as strongly urged by the Truman Administration as it was by Eisenhower, Dulles and Lodge.

But everything that happens in Western Europe occurs in the shadow of the Soviet Union. Right now the Russians are talking peace an easement of the tension. They have scheduled a so-called "People's Peace Congress" in Vienna two weeks from now - expect about three thousand delegates from all over the world. But we have had enough experience to know that what the Russians say and what they do are seldom the same. Tonight we have received from Alex Kendrick in Vienna thoroughly reliable information regarding what they Russians are doing as contrasted to what they are saying. New military materiel and equipment from the Soviet Union is now pouring into the satellite countries at an unprecedented rate. The satellite armies from Poland to Rumania are now under direct Soviet command, the commanders being disguised as "liaison and training officers." The Russian General Golikov has become Commander of the Rumanian Army of more than two hundred thousand men. (He commanded Russian divisions at Stalingrad during the late war.)

The Russians are now giving their satellite armies the heavy hardware of war. # The Hungarian, Rumanian and Bulgarian armies have now all been ~~XXXXX~~ furnished with Soviet T-34 and Stalin tanks - (the same types we face in Korea.) # (The Hungarians have received some later models) The Rumanians and Bulgarians have new type mortars out of Russia. Most of the satellite artillery units now have new and improved Russian anti-aircraft guns, howitzers and machine guns. # The newly-constructed military airports in the satellite countries now house the latest model Russian fighters, including the MIG 15 - the same fighter in action over Korea.

The nations on the fringe of Russia are getting large quantities of electronic instruments, infantry weapons, engineering and transport equipment. Even Albania has received tanks, planes and naval equipment from the Soviet Union. The Czechs and Hungarians are manufacturing their own tanks under Soviet license.

Russian commanders, called instructors, have been assigned to all Hungarian and Rumanian units, from Division up; while in Bulgaria and Albania, Russians command down to the regimental level.

The idea of having our allies do most of the fighting in Asia is not new. The Russians, while talking peace, are already doing it in Asia - are arranging it so that their allies in Europe will do the same thing, if war comes there.

It has become increasingly evident that the Russians pursue a policy of saying one thing and doing another. I'm reminded of the Roman Plo-tus who once said:"Your tongues and words are soaked in honey; your hearts and deeds are soaked in gall and bitter vinegar." More than 200 years ago, John Locke set up a pretty good rule to follow:"the actions of men are the best interperters of their thoughts."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, Dec. 2, 1952

This is the news:

Senator Taft said today that General Eisenhower's choice of Martin P. Durkin to be secretary of labor in the new government is "incredible." I should like to discuss the Senator's statement in a few minutes.

Here in New York today, a federal grand jury, after nine months of investigation, charged that an "overwhelmingly large group" of disloyal Americans have infiltrated the United Nations. The jury mentioned no names but it told this story: almost without exception the disloyal Americans who now work for the U.N. formerly worked for the federal government. They managed to get transferred, with State Department approval, in a manner that the jury believes was not coincidental but part of a definite, planned pattern. In some flagrant and obvious cases the State Department approved the transfers. This was the result of connivance by certain highly placed--but not identified--persons in Washington and at the U.N. In some cases the Department made reports against prospective employes; the U.N. accepted them anyhow. The Jury says the State Department has not co-operated in an attempt to find out how all this happened.. who is responsible. The Jury says for the most part the disloyal Americans now hold policy-making jobs with the U.N.

IN one of the U.N.'s most powerful specialized agencies, the jury has evidence to believe that two top-ranking officials are members of a Soviet spy ring. At the United Nations it found one American convicted of a morals charge..two, in policy-making positions, with arrest records as the result of Communist-sponsored demonstrations.

The Senate Internal Security committee today asked Irving P. Schiller, the archivist of the U.N. european headquarters in Geneva, whether he is or was a Communist. Schiller refused to talk about the past; said he is not a Communist today. He formerly worked for the National Archives in Washington.

Attorney General Mc Granery says a federal grand jury in Washington will start an investigation of Owen Lattimore. Lattimore has no comment.

The President today accepted the resignation, as of the day before the Eisenhower inauguration, of Dr. Phillip Jessup as ambassador at large. The President told Dr. Jessup "your fellow Americans owe you a debt of gratitude for your willingness to interrupt your academic life for public service." Senator Mc Carthy has accused Dr. Jessup of having an unusual affinity for Communist causes. Dr. Jessup has denied the charge. HE PLANS TO RETURN TO COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY.

A special federal jury in Brooklyn today indicted former Internal Revenue Collector Nunan on charges of evading 91-thousand dollars in income taxes during a five-year period. The same jury recently indicted Daniel Bolich...Number 2 man in the tax bureau.. on a similar charge.

Sinclair Weeks of Boston..named to be commerce secretary in the Eisenhower cabinet..told reporters today: he believes the present level of business can be sustained; even if the rearmament program is slowed up drastically he thinks business can take up the slack. He wants to restore the word "opportunity" to a more prominent place in our vocabulary. He cannot answer "yes" or "no" to a question of his support for the Point Four program.

Another apointee to the cabinet, George Humphrey, who becomes secretary of the treasury, says he believes in the sound views of the "Eisenhower administration" and the men around the General.

In Washington, Harold Stassen, who becomes mutual security administrator, [redacted]pt

[redacted] met with Mutual Security Chief Harriman. Mr. Stassen [redacted] says General Eisenhower will continue present military, economic and technical aid programs to free nations. Mr. Stassen says he will put the aid programs on a "more business-like basis."

~~Defense Secretary Lovett says the new defense budget will call for a third of a thousand [illegible] planes.~~

A House committee investigating election laws heard Republican Representative Hoffman of Michigan propose that Congress put a limit on the amount of "editorial space" a newspaper may devote to a candidate in an election campaign.

It was ten years ago today that the first controlled atomic chain was released in Chicago. Today, Dr. Arthur H. Compton, who directed the fateful experiment, [redacted] said the great significance of nuclear energey is not the bomb... but its usefulness as a source of [redacted] useful power..

General Vandenbergh, the air force chief of staff, says the Communists in the Far East outnumber us at least three to one [redacted] in the number of planes on hand for combat.

President Rhee of South Korea told reporters he wants an immediate all-out offensive to drive the Chinese Communists out of North Korea.

There was little activity on the Korean fronts today.

And at the United Nations, the Political Committee defeated the Russian demand for an immediate cease-fire..with negotiations to come later/.

Edward R. Murrow: December 2, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Senator Robert A. Taft is an exceedingly unhappy, and still very powerful politician. Today he expressed his unhappiness in typically direct and forthright fashion. He ended the uneasy truce between himself and General Eisenhower, agreed to on September 12th at Columbia University. The Senator today destroyed the outward signs of harmony and agreement, in a statement issued from his home in Cincinnatti. The immediate cause of the explosion was the appointment by General Eisenhower of Martin Dirkin, a Labor Union official, a Democrat, and a Stevenson supporter, to be Secretary of Labor. Senator Taft termed this appointment "incredible; an affront to millions of union members and officials, who had the courage to defy the edict of union leaders, like Dirkin, who wanted them to vote for Stevenson. The appointment of Dirkin leaves without representation in the Cabinet millions of Democrats, north and south, who left their Party to support Eisenhower." Senator Taft made it clear that he intended no reflection on the character or ability of Mr. Dirkin. But he also made it clear that he had made several recommendations for Cabinet positions; none of them had been accepted, although he did join in approving the appointment of Ezra Taft Benson as Secretary of Agriculture. Taft had had several conversations (ON CABINET RECOMMENDATIONS) with Herbert Brownell, whom he described accurately as "key man in the making of Cabinet appointments." [But the hard fact is that Taft men are conspicuous by their absence in the new Cabinet.]

After the Senator issued his communique, General Eisenhower's headquarters had no comment for the moment. Mr. Brownell is out of town on vacation. Leaders of the A.F. of L. and the C.I.O. have pledged wholehearted co-operation with Mr. Dirkin, when he takes over as Secretary of Labor.

Senator Taft's wrath is clearly not directed against Mr. Dirkin, as an individual. But he finds it intolerable, that a New Dealing pro-Stevenson Democrat, should be appointed to administer and recommend revisions, for the labor law that bears the Senator's name. | There is a bit of recent history that has bearing upon this situation. # In the statement issued after the so-called Eisenhower-Taft truce meeting, on September 12th here in New York, there appeared this sentence: "General Eisenhower stated, without qualification, that XXX in the making of appointments there will be no discrimination against anyone because he or she has supported me (that is Senator Taft), and that he will take counsel with all factions and points of view." The General may have taken counsel, but the h[redacted] fact is, that there are no Taft men in the new Cabinet, (with the possible exception of Benson.) Also after that September meeting Senator Taft said: "I certainly wouldn't guarantee that we may not have many differences on different subjects." The differences have started, and in no uncertain fashion, even before the General and his Cabinet take office. # It is interesting to note that several Republican Senators have refused to comment upon Senator Taft's condemnation of the leadership of his Party. The Senator remains the most powerful man in the Senate; without his aid the Eisenhower legislative program, whatever it may be, can't get off the ground.

Senator Taft didn't say that he would fight Senate confirmation of Dirkin; but he did say, by implication at least, that the followers of Thomas E. Dewey of New York are going to dominate the new Administration. He said that Herbert Brownell, Dewey's campaign manager in 1948, named as Attorney-General in the Eisenhower Cabinet, has been the key man on Cabinet appointments. I am assured by sources thoroughly familiar with the workings of Eisenhower's headquarters, that this is true. And it is a fact that Dewey men, or former Dewey men, dominate the new Cabinet.

Senator Taft and his supporters felt ~~XXXX~~ at Chicago, and many of them still ~~XXXXX~~ feel, that the Party was captured by "two-time losers," on behalf of a candidate who had never done anything for the Party; and that Senator Taft, after long years of faithful service, was "robbed" of the nomination and the presidency. To many Taft supporters the men appointed by Eisenhower look like a Dewey "shadow Cabinet."

Senator Taft hasn't declared war on the Eisenhower Administration, but he has served notice that mutiny in the ranks is a definite possibility. Eisenhower believed he had to make peace with him last September, in order to win the election. It seems likely that as President he'll have to do it again, to avoid legislative paralysis. Taft has been beaten twice, for the nomination, and for influence in the Cabinet, but he now retires to a well-prepared position in the Senate; and it is one from which he can probably, if he chooses, block the major moves of the Eisenhower Administration. (Loyal Democrats may regard this as the best news since Stevenson's nomination.) But those who had hoped for an effective, coherent new policy, both national and international, may find this breaking of the truce rather less encouraging.

It is apparent that Senator Taft and General Eisenhower concluded - at x best - an uneasy truce. William Borah, wise in the ways of politics, once said:"We confine our love of peace to paper. We profess friendship but practice vengeance." If this is the case, then Senator Taft is probably mindful of these words by Owen Feltham:"Promises may get friends, but it is performance that nurses and keeps them."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senator Taft said today that General Eisenhower's choice of Martin P. Durkin to be secretary of labor in the new government is "incredible." I should like to discuss the Senator's statement in a few minutes.

Here in New York today, a federal grand jury, after nine months of investigation, charged that an "overwhelmingly large group" of disloyal Americans have infiltrated the United Nations. The jury mentioned no names, but it told this story: almost without exception the disloyal Americans who now work for the U.N. formerly worked for the federal government. They managed to get transferred, with State Department approval, in a manner that the jury believes was not coincidental but part of a definite, planned pattern. In some flagrant and obvious cases, the State Department approved the transfers. This was the result of connivance by certain highly placed, but not identified, persons in Washington and at the U.N. In some cases the Department made reports against prospective employees; the U.N. accepted them anyhow. The Jury says the State Department has not co-operated in an attempt to find out how all this happened, who is responsible. The Jury says for the most part the disloyal Americans now hold policy-making jobs with the U.N. in one of the U.N.'s most powerful specialized agencies, the jury has evidence to believe that two top-ranking officials are members of a Soviet spy ring. At the United Nations it found one American convicted of a morals charge, two in policy-making positions, with arrest records, as the result of Communist-sponsored demonstrations.

The Senate Internal Security committee today asked Irving P. Schiller, the archivist of the U.N. European headquarters in Geneva, whether he is or was a Communist. Schiller refused to talk about the past; said he is not a Communist "today." He formerly worked for the National Archives in Washington.

Attorney General McGranery says a federal grand jury in Washington will start an investigation of Owen Lattimore. Lattimore has no comment.

The President today accepted the resignation, as of the day before the Eisenhower inauguration, of Dr. Phillip Jessup as ambassador at large. The President told Dr. Jessup "your fellow Americans owe you a debt of gratitude for your willingness to interrupt your academic life for public service." Senator McCarthy has accused Dr. Jessup of having an ususual affinity for Communist causes. Dr. Jessup has denied the charge. He plans to return to Columbia University.

A special federal jury in Brooklyn today indicted former Internal Revenue Collector Nunan on charges of evading 91-thousand dollars in income taxes during a five-year period. The same jury recently indicted Daniel Bolich, number 2 man in the tax bureau, on a similar charge.

Sinclair Weeks of Boston, named to be commerce secretary in the Eisenhower cabinet, told reporters today: he believes the present level of business can be sustained; even if the rearmament program is slowed up drastically he thinks business can take up the slack. He wants to restore the word "opportunity" to a more prominent place in our vocabulary. He cannot answer "yes" or "no" to a question of his support for the Point Four program.

Another appointee to the cabinet, George Humphrey, who becomes secretary of the treasury, says he believes in the sound views of the "Eisenhower administration" and the men around the General.

In Washington, Harold Stassen, who becomes mutual security administrator met with Murual Security Chief Harriman. Mr. Stassen says General Eisenhower will continue present military, economic and technical aid programs to free nations. Mr. Stassen says he will put the aid programs on a "more business-like basis."

A House committee investigating election laws heard Republican Representative Hoffman of Michigan propose that Congress put a limit on the amount of "editorial space" a newspaper may devote to a candidate in an election campaign.

It was ten years ago today that the first controlled atomic chain was released in Chicago. Today, Dr. Arthur H. Compton, who directed the fateful experiment, said the great significance of nuclear energy is not the bomb, but its usefulness as a source of useful power.

General Vandenbergh, the air force chief of staff, says the Communists in the Far East outnumber us at least three to one, in the number of planes on hand for combat.

President Rhee of South Korea told reporters he wants an immediate all-out offensive to drive the Chinese Communists out of North Korea.

There was little activity on the Korean fronts today.

And at the United Nations, the Political Committee defeated the Russian demand for an immediate cease-fire, with negotiations to come later.

Senator Robert A. Taft is an exceedingly unhappy, and still very powerful politician. Today, he expressed his unhappiness in typically direct and forthright fashion. He ended the uneasy truce between himself and General Eisenhower, agreed to on September 12th at Columbia University. The Senator today destroyed the outward signs of harmony and agreement in a statement issued from his home in Cincinnatti. The immediate cause of the explosion was the appointment by General Eisenhower of Martin Dirkin, a Labor Union official, a Democrat, and a Stevenson supporter, to be Secretary of Labor. Senator Taft termed this appointment "incredible; an affront to millions of union leaders and officials who had the courage to defy the edict of union leaders like Dirkin who wanted them to vote for Stevenson. The appointment of Dirkin leaves without representation in the Cabinet millions of Democrats, north and south, who left their Party to support Eisenhower." Senator Taft made it clear that he intended no reflection on the character or ability of Mr. Dirkin. But he also made it clear that he had made several recommendations for Cabinet positions; none of them had been accepted, although he did join in approving the appointment of Ezra Taft Benson as Secretary of Agriculture. Taft had had several conversations on cabinet recommendations with Herbert Btownell, whom he described accurately as "key man in the making of Cabinet appointments." But the hard fact is that Taft men are conspicuous by their absence in the new Cabinet.

After the Senator issued his communique, General Eisenhower's headquarters had no comment for the moment. Mr. Brownell is out of town on vacation. Leaders of the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. have pledged wholehearted cooperation with Mr. Dirkin when he takes over as Secretary of Labor.

Senator Taft's wrath is clearly not directed against Mr. Dirkin, as an individual. But he finds it intolerable that a New Dealing pro-Stevenson Democrat should be appointed to administer and recommend revisions for the labor law that bears the Senator's name. There is a bit of recent history that has bearing upon this situation. In the statement issued after the so-called Eisenhower-Taft truce meeting on September 12th here in New York, there appeared this sentence: "General Eisenhower stated without qualification that in the making of appointments there will be no discrimination against anyone because he or she has supported me (that is Senator Taft), and that he will take counsel with all factions and points of view." The General may have taken counsel, but the fact is, that there are no Taft men in the new Cabinet, (with the possible exception of Benson.) Also after that September meeting Senator Taft said: "I certainly wouldn't guarantee that we may not have many differences on different subjects." The differences have started, and in no uncertain fashion, even before the General and his Cabinet take office. It is interesting to note that several Republican Senators have refused to comment upon Senator Taft's condemnation of the leadership of his Party. The Senator remains the most powerful man in the Senate; without his aid the Eisenhower legislative program, whatever it may be, can't get off the ground.

Senator Taft didn't say that he would fight Senate confirmation of Dirkin; but he did say, by implication at least, that the followers of Thomas E. Dewey of New York are going to dominate the new Administration. He said that

Herbert Brownell, Dewey's campaign manager in 1948, named as Attorney-General in the Eisenhower Cabinet, has been the key man on Cabinet appointments. I am assured by sources thoroughly familiar with the workings of Eisenhower's headquarters, that this is true. And it is a fact that Dewey men, or former Dewey men, dominate the new Cabinet.

Senator Taft and his supporters felt at Chicago, and many of them still feel, that the Party was captured by "two-time losers," on behalf of a candidate who had never done anything for the Party; and that Senator Taft, after long years of faithful service, was "robbed" of the nomination and the Presidency. To many Taft supporters the men appointed by Eisenhower look like a Dewey "shadow cabinet."

Senator Taft hasn't declared war on the Eisenhower Administration, but he has served notice that mutiny in the ranks is a definite possibility. Eisenhower believed he had to make peace with him last September, in order to win the election. It seems likely that as President he'll have to do it again to avoid legislative paralysis. Taft has been beaten twice, for the nomination and for influence in the Cabinet, but he now retires to a well-prepared position in the Senate; and it is one from which he can probably, if he chooses, block the major moves of the Eisenhower Administration. Loyal Democrats may regard this as the best news since Stevenson's nomination. But those who had hoped for an effective, coherent new policy, both national and international may find this breaking of the truce rather less encouraging.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is apparent that Senator Taft and General Eisenhower concluded, at best, an uneasy truce. William Borah, wise in the ways of politics, once said: "We confine our love of peace to paper. We profess friendship but practice vengeance." If this is the case, then Senator Taft is probably mindful of these words by Owen Feltham: "Promises may get friends, but it is performance that nurses and keeps them." Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday December 3, 1952

This is the news:

The President today over-ruled the Wage Stabilization Board, and ordered a full $1.90 a day increase for the nation's soft coal miners. [The miners and the industry had agreed on this.] The W.S.B. cut it by 40 cents a day, saying the full amount would cause irreperable damage to the stabilization program. But the President, in a letter to Economic Stabilizer Putnam says: the issues go beyond stabilization. ~~The miners [illegible] benefits in the so called fringes, like vacations and holiday pay. The President will continue to maintain a strong stabilization program.~~ He realizes he is rejecting the advice of his top economic advisers. But he approves the full $1.90 a day raise, because to do otherwise would mean a nation-wide coal strike at the time his successor takes over the Administration. The President says he does not want to create a crisis for General Eisenhower.

~~Mr. Putnam told reporters: "This is not a division I would have made, not a decision I would have recommended." He says he is certain three of the four public members of the W.S.B. will not resign.~~

The President also made it clear in his letter to Mr. Putnam that he firmly intends to keep price, wage, salary and rent controls as long as he is in office. "If the new Administration wants to kill these controls it will be free to do so on its own responsibility."

Senator Taft said today that he took great care in writing his statement attacking the appointment of Martin P. Durkin to be labor secretary. [The Senator called it "incredible."] He said today the statement was no hasty action..he had never heard of Mr. Durkin until the news of the appointment came to him on a radio broadcast. He insists the statement speaks for itself.

There was no comment on it today from General Eisenhower's headquarters.

The General's selection as secretary of state--John Foster Dulles--met with Secretary Acheson today. Mr. Dulles then issued a statement saying: there will be an investigation of the Department but "loyal servants of our government have nothing to fear." The foreign service will be protected by the Eisenhower Administration "insofar as it is sound and free of corruption." Mr. Dulles added:"Of course there are many angles that need to be looked into very thoroughly."

Here in New York today, Republican Senator Bennett of Utah told the annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers that the big job of the new administration will be to avoid another depression.

And Governor Stevenson, speaking to the C.I.O. convention in Atlantic City, told the union leaders not to regard the Republican victory last month as any sort of disaster or necessarily a misfortune. He said Labor has won its battle for recognition and now is entering a new period of established acceptance in America. Labor must exercise is vast responsibility properly..not just to the working man but to the country.

A House committee investigating political campaigns was told today that politicians talked too much on the radio and television..or ELSE they didn't talk well enough. Ralph W. Hardy, an official of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters said during the campign "people in droves were found to be turning off what we charitably call campaign oratory."

Another committee investigating magazines heard Novelist Margaret Culkin Banning testify that about two billion "girlie" magazines are sold at newstands each year. She called them "vicious and provocative."

~~Attorney General Mc Granery says he has ordered a grand jury to look into the multi-million dollar deals in surplus American clothes after World War II.~~

Another ~~A~~ House committee says ATT. GEN. ~~Mr.~~ Mc Granery has promised to help it investigate charges that the Justice and State Departments "interfered" with a New York grand jury's investigation of suspected Communists in the United Nations. The State Department says it had nothing to do with any such attempts at interference.

Frank Coe, who refused to tell a Senate committee whether he was ever a communist or a Soviet spy, today resigned as secretary of the International Monetary Fund. [The manager of the fund had requested his resignation from the 15-thousand dollar a year job.]

The United Nations General Assembly has approved the Indian resolution for a truce in Korea. Only the Soviet bloc objected.. Nationalist China abstained from voting. The next step is to send the resolution to the Chhinese and North Korean communists.

In Korea today, South Korean troops recaptured Pinpoint Hill from enemy troops who had captured it eight hours earlier. Our Sabre Jet pilots report that they destroyed two enemy Migs.

The Defense Department says we suffered another 386 casualties in Korea last week. The total dead now is 127, 383.

In Czechoslovakia, the eleven former government officials found guilty of conspiriing against the government, were hanged today.

And in West Germany, Chaneellor Adenauer told his parliament that if it rejects West Germany's peace contract and a European army pact it would be voting for Stalin.

Here in New York, shipping company officials told the State Crime Commission they paid thousands of dollars a year to top officials of the A. F. of L. Longshoremen to keep peace on the waterfront.

Edward R. Murrow: December 3, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

When a Commanding General or a Commander-in-Chief visits a front or a theatre of operations with which he XXX has had no first-hand experience he generally asks first to look at the maps. Then he asks a series of questions which in simplified form go something like this: What's the enemy like? What's he doing? And what is he capable of doing? When these questions are answered he then studies the situation of his own forces, their equipment and capabilities. # And finally the fateful decision has to be made. # This is the sort of process that President-elect Eisenhower will experience when he arrives in Korea. He is, of course, aware - more aware than most men - that military decisions are not reached as a result of a blinding flash of intuition, or of some hitherto unthought of master stroke of strategy. # Most of his information regarding the enemy will have to come from summaries of painstaking interrogation of prisoners; from the reports that come in from agents scattered behind the enemy lines; from photo-recon pictures taken from the air, and from the evaluation of front line reports. The result is a complex, confusing mixture of pictures and color but one which still has great meaning for the experienced eye.

Private cables from Tokyo and Korea indicate that General Eisenhower will be told that the morale of the enemy front line troops is excellent. This is particularly true amongst the Chinese; they are well-fed, well dug in, and well clothed. Their tennis-shoe type footgear is excellent for noiseless maneuver on steep mountain trails. (But casualties from frostbite are high.)

The hard core of the reliable Chinese divisions is composed entirely of veterans of China's civil war. Hard-bitten professionals who have been subjected to years of Communist indoctrination. They obey two masters, their superior officers and the political commissars. The Chinese troops get almost as much political as military training. This means that their replacements are definitely inferior soldiers, since their basic training consists largely of marching, physical exercise and political propaganda. Most of them get their first weapons training in the combat area. # The political training has paid off in terms of good relations with the North Korean civilians. The Chinese bring in their own food and pay for, or at least give receipts for what they requisition. # Chinese troops in the rear areas have helped civilians harvest crops and raise vegetables. The North Korean soldiery mistreat their own people rather more than do the Chinese.

The North Koreans are more fanatical in battle than are the Chinese. # The Chinese are stubborn and methodical, but respond quickly to changing battle conditions. They are well entrenched in a labyrinth of caves, trenches and bunkers that may extend as much as twenty miles behind the present fighting front. # The Chinese have about 525 thousand combat troops holding eighty percent of the line. The North Koreans about 220 thousand mainly in the mountains at the eastern end of the front. There are well over a hundred thousand enemy troops tied down behind the front protecting the coast from possible amphibious landings.

The Communists now have about twice the amount of artillery in forward positions that they had last January. Many of their gun positions are in caves, to protect them from air attack and counter battery fire, the guns being hauled out to fire a few rounds and then pulled back to safety. The enemy handles his artillery well, and his rate of fire has increased. We are now throwing about four shells to his one; last January the ratio was about sixty to one.

The Communists have immense striking power, well forward, but they have sufficient supplies to support only about fifteen days of heavy offensive fighting. Their principal weakness is transport, of which the Air Force has taken a heavy toll. Any Communist offensive would quickly outrun their supply lines.

Recently the Russian-built twin jet bomber, called the I.L. 28, has been seen on Manchurian fields. It's fast, carries a heavy bomb-load, and according to General Vandenberg, has a range several times that of the MIG 15. But this light bomber has not yet been in action.

It appears that the Communists have dug in for a long stay, while at the same time being definitely alerted to the possibilities of an amphibious operation behind their lines, on either coast. # It is clear that any effort, by either side, to achieve a military decision would result in casualties that military experts describe only as "enormous". There appears to be little or no hope of agreement at the United Nations - the military prospect on the ground in Korea is not promising. # It is not likely that any Commander-in-Chief in our history, has been required to take a more fateful decision, than the one General Eisenhower will have to make sometime after January 20th.

General Eisenhower is confronted with serious decisions in Korea. Jan Struther once wrote:"There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. Then, all we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But when we have the power to act, we must strike quickly, hard and above all, in the right place. With patience and strength we can endure all things and achieve many."

Good Nite and Good Luck

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today over-ruled the Wage Stabilization Board, and ordered a full $1.90 a day increase for the nation's soft coal miners. The miners and the industry had agreed on this. The W.S.B. cut it by 40 cents a day, saying the full amount would cause "irreperable damage" to the stabilization program. But the President, in a letter to Economic Stabilizer Putnam says: the issues go beyond stabilization. He realizes he is rejecting the advice of his top economic advisors. But he approves the full $1.90 a day raise because to do otherwise would mean a nation-wide coal strike at the time his successor takes over the Administration. The President says he does not want to create a crisis for General Eisenhower.

The President also made it clear in his letter to Mr. Putnam that he firmly intends to keep price, wage, salary and rent controls, as long as he is in office." If the new Administration wants to kill these controls, it will be free to do so on its own responsibility."

Senator Taft said today that he took great care in writing his statement attacking the appointment of Martin P. Durkin to be labor secretary. The Senator called it "incredible." He said today the statement was no hasty action; he had never heard of Mr. Durkin until the news of the appointment came to him on a radio broadcast. He insists the statement speaks for itself.

There was no comment on it today from General Eisenhower's headquarters.

The General's selection as Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, met with Secretary Acheson today. Mr. Dulles then issued a statement saying: there will be an investigation of the Department but "loyal servants of our government have nothing to fear." The foreign service will be protected by the Eisenhower Administration, "insofar as it is sound, and free of corruption." Mr. Dulles added: "Of course there are many angles that need to be looked into very thoroughly."

Here in New York today, Republican Senator Bennett of Utah told the annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers that the big job of the new administration will be to avoid another depression.

And Governor Stevenson, speaking to the C.I.O. convention in Atlantic City, told the union leaders not to regard the Republican victory last month as any sort of disaster or necessarily a misfortune. He said Labor has won its battle for recognition and now is entering a new period of established acceptance in America. Labor must exercise is vast responsibility properly, not just to the working man, but to the country.

A House committee investigating political campaigns was told today that politicians talked too much on the radio and television, or else they didn't talk well enough. Ralph W. Hardy, an official of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters said during the campaign "people in droves were found to be turning off what we charitably call campaign oratory."

Another committee investigating magazines heard Novelist Margaret Culkin Banning testify that about two billion "girlie" magazines are sold at newstands each year. She called them "vicious and provocative."

Another House committee says Attorney General McGranery has promised to help it investigate charges that the Justice and State Departments "interferred" with a New York grand jury's investigation of suspected Communists in the United Nations. The State Department says it had nothing to do with any such attempts at interference.

Frank Coe, who refused to tell a Senate committee whether he was ever a communist or a Soviet spy, today resigned as secretary of the International Monetary Fund. The manager of the fund had requested his resignation from the 15-thousand dollar a year job.

The United Nations General Assembly has approved the Indian resolution for a truce in Korea. Only the Soviet bloc objected. Nationalist China abstained from voting. The next step is to send the resolution to the Chinese and North Korean communists.

In Korea today, South Korean troops recaptured Pinpoint Hill from enemy troops who had captured it eight hours earlier. Our Sabre Jet pilots report that they destroyed two enemy Migs.

The Defense Department says we suffered another 386 casualties in Korea last week. The total now is 127,383.

In Czechoslovakia, the eleven former government officials found guilty of conspiring against the government, were hanged today.

And in West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer told his parliament that if it rejects West Germany's peace contract, and a European army pact, it would be voting for Stalin.

Here in New York, shipping company officials told the State Crime Commission they paid thousands of dollars a year to top officials of the A.F.L. Longshoremen to keep peace on the waterfront.

When a Commanding General or a Commander-in-Chief visits a front, or a theatre of operations with which he has had no first-hand experience he generally asks first to look at the maps. Then he asks a series of questions which in simplified form go something like this: What's the enemy like? What's he doing? And what is he capable of doing? When these questions are answered he then studies the situation of his own forces, their equipment and capabilities. And finally the fateful decision has to be made. This is the sort of process that President-elect Eisenhower will experience when he arrives in Korea. He is, of course, aware - more aware than most men - that military decisions are not reached as a result of a blinding flash of strategy. Most of his information regarding the enemy will have to come from summaries of painstaking interrogation of prisoners; from the reports that come in from agents scattered behind the enemy lines, from photo-recon pictures taken from the air, and from the evaluation of front line reports. The result is a complex, confusing mixture of pictures and color but one which still has great meaning for the experienced eye.

Private cables from Tokyo and Korea indicate that General Eisenhower will be told that the morale of the enemy front line troops is excellent. This is particularly true amongst the Chinese; they are well-fed, well dug in, and well clothed. Their tennis-shoe type footgear is excellent for noiseless maneuver on steep mountain trails. But casualties from frostbite are high.

The hard core of the reliable Chinese divisions is composed entirely of veterans of China's civil war. Hard-bitten professionals who have been subjected to years of Communist indoctrination. They obey two masters, their superior officers and the political commissars. The Chinese troops get almost as much political as military training. This means that their replacements are definitely inferior soldiers, since their basic training consists largely of marching, physical exercise and political propaganda. Most of them get their first weapons training in the combat area. The political training has paid off in terms of good relations with the North Korean civilians. The Chinese bring in their own food and pay for, or at least give receipts for what they requisition. Chinese troops in the rear areas have helped civilians harvest crops and raise vegetables. The North Korean soldiery mistreat their own people rather more than do the Chinese. The North Koreans are more fanatical in battle than are the Chinese. The Chinese are stubborn and methodical, but respond quickly to changing battle conditions. They are well entrenched in a labyrinth of caves, trenches, and bunders that may extend as much as twenty miles behind the present fighting front. The Chinese have about 525 thousand combat troops holding eighty percent of the line. The North Koreans about 220 thousand, mainly in the mountains at the eastern end of the front. There are well over a hundred thousand enemy troops tied down behind the front protecting the coast from possible amphibious landings.

The Communists now have about twice the amount of artillery in forward positions that they had last January. Many of their gun positions are in caves, to protect them from air attack and counter battery fire, the guns being hauled out to fire a few rounds and then pulled back to safety. The enemy handles his artillery well, and his rate of fire has increased. We are now throwing about four shells to his one; last January the ratio was about sixty to one.

The Communists have immense striking power, well forward, but they have sufficient supplies to support only about fifteen days of heavy offensive fighting. Their principal weakness is transport, of which the Air Force has taken a heavy toll. Any Communist offensive would quickly outrun their supply lines.

Recently the Russian-built twin jet bomber, called the I.L. 28, has been seen on Manchurian fields. It's fast, carries a heavy bomb-load, and according to General Vandenberg has a range several times that of the MIG 15. But this light bomber has not yet been in action.

It appears that the Communists have dug in for a long stay, while at the same time being definitely alerted to the possibilities of an amphibious operation behind their lines on either coast. It is clear that any effort by either side to achieve a military decision would result in casualties that military experts describe only as "enormous". There appears to be little or no hope of agreement at the United Nations - the military prospect on the ground in Korea is not promising. It is not likely that any Commander-in-Chief in our history has been required to take a more fateful decision than the one General Eisenhower will have to make sometime after January 20th.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: General Eisenhower is confronted with serious decisions in Korea. Jan Struther once wrote: "There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. Then, all we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But when we have the power to act, we must strike quickly, hard and above all, in the right place. With patience and strength we can endure all things and achieve many."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

This is the news - Thursday Dec. 4, 1952

IN ATLANTIC CITY

Walter Reuther today was elected president of the C.I.O., succeeding the late Philip Murray. Mr. Reuther received 3million votes, to two point six million cast for Allan Haywood. Mr. Haywood then was unanimously re-elected executive vice president of the union. And James Carey of the electrical workers was re-elected sectretary treasurer. After the convention had chosen its officers, and agreed to renew merger negotiations with the A.F of L., Mr. Reuther, the 45-year-old president of the C.I.O. auto workers..(a job he will keep).told the convention: "The fat men sitting on the plush cushions in the Union Leage clubs across the country, will be fooled if they think the C.I.O. will split apart." He said that whenever "reactionary managements" fail to give workers a "fair share of the fruits of their work", the C.I.O. will march down the picket lines of America together. Reuther said the only way to elevate the political morality in Washington is to elevate the political morality of the people back home.

In Washington today, the President and Governor Stevenson agreed that they will subordinate the interests of their Democratic party to the interests of the country and the public welfare. Here's what the two men had to say in seperate news conferences. The Governor says they WILL not try to influence Democratic congressmen to obstruct, delay, or in any way imperil the national welfare and the new Administration's program..."insofar as it is compatible with the views of our own party." Governor Stevenson says his party faces two major problems: paying off a deficit of more than a half million dollars, and serving the public interest.

The President later told reporters the Governor had accurately summed up their views. Mr. Truman wants to give the new Administration every chance to show what it can do. He says he'll be as happy as anybody else if the Republicans operate all right. But, he says, we'll certainly spotlight any mistakes they make. The President sees no purpose at all in commenting on the cabinet selected by General Eisenhower. But he did describe the secretary-of-labor-to-be..Martin P. Durkin.. as a fine gentleman.

Senator Taft, who has called the Durkin appointment "incredible", is quoted as saying he thinks he can work with the whole Eisenhower cabinet, "perhaps including Mr. Durkin." The Senator told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the General has not yet conciliated the members of the Taft faction of the party. [redacted]

~~amendments but he insists on retaining the ban against the closed shop, the 80 day cooling off period and the injunction.~~

Mr. Durkin--in New York today--says he feels the nation's labor laws need a "basic overhauling." He feels Eisenhower's relations with organized labor will be "very fine: labor wants to see him make good, and will give him every assistance." Mr. Durkin says he has no idea who recommended him for the job he'll occupy in the new Administration.

A New York management-consultant firm revealed today that more than six months ago..before the conventions.. it was hired to make a report on the qualifications a person should have for the top jobs in Washington. The survey, now being used by General Eisenhower, was ordered by Herbert Brownell, who is to be the new attorney general, General Clay, a friend of Eisenhower's, and Harold Talbot, a Republican leader.

Economic Stabilizer Putnam today approved a wage increase of $1.90 cents an hour for hard coal miners. Yesterday the President approved a similar increase for soft coal miners. As a result of the President's decision, Archibald Cox, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, has resigned. ~~and [illegible] to return to his job as a Harvard law school professor.~~

The House committee investigating the usefullness of our election laws was told today that Congress should exempt radio stations from damages for libelous political speeches. Radio stations are not permitted to censor such speeches. Paul Walker, chairman of the Federal [redacted] Communications Commission, says the effect of the present law is to make radio and television stations liable for statements over which they have no control.

~~Another House committee today accused some government attorneys of fee splitting, bribe taking and double dealing. The committee recommends that laws covering bribery, gratuities and kick backs be tightened.~~

In New York, the state crime commission was told today by an official of the United States Lines that officials of the A.F. of L. longshoremen's union picked gangsters as stevedores. A company official said he had to hire these men or do without dock hands.

At the United Nations, France boycotted the openeing of a debate on demands for independence for Tunisia. And South Korea's foreign minister announced that his country cannot accept the Indian proposal for a truce in Korea.

On the battlefields, strong attacks by our fighter-bombers on enemy positions on Sniper Ridge kept the Communist troops underground and limited their attacks on South Koreans.

In London today, Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons that Britain is forced to cancel or reduce some of her military orders.. because of her shaky economic position. Mr. Churchill said airplane production will be particularly affected. But he promised that Britain is as determined as ever to carry her full share in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Conservative government then beat down a Laborite motion of censure after Mr. Churchill said the Laborites should "shake and shiver in their shoes with shame" for proposing it.

[redacted].

In Germany, West German Chancellor Adenauer switched his strategy on the west German peace treaty and the European army pact. Originally he had insisted that both measures be approved this week. Today he decided to put off final approval by parliament until the middle of January. The decision was made after it became apparent that a number of his supporters were planning to vote with the Socialists who wanted to postpone ratification.

There are times when a reporter is overcome by the appetite to protest. ~~in a non partisan fashion...This urge to protest seems to be particularly strong on days when the news is lighter...it is today~~....Maybe this is just another way of saying that its easier to be critical than correct...or that failing to command constructive solutions for pressing problems, the reporter seeks a certain refuge in protest and complaint...Perhaps its a sign of age, or resistance to change...I dont know...Whatever the case, my complaint is against complexity and useless gadgetts #. Example one...a story in this weeks Time magazine...labeled "the gadget of the week"...called a "student reaction meter"... invented by a couple of professors...very simple...the student who doesnt underatand what the professor is saying, merely pushes a button, this moves a meter on the professors desk...the more buttons pressed, the more the needle quivers #. What happens if they all push the button...does a small bomb blow the professor out of his chair? should he give up teaching and learn hypnotysm..or should he flunk the whole class #. The teacher or the student, who requires electronic aids to register understanding (or lack of it) shouldnt be trusted to play with matches #. Example two...from todays New York times... having to do with a meeting of the American Society of Mechanicl engiheers...the question...how many four thousand word essays could be written, by using all the words, written and unwritten, in English literature...It seems that this number of four thousand word essays is limited by ten...followed by eight thousand zeroes...The Times informs us with true objectivity that " fortunately or unfortunately this is an incredibly large number...It would take about two full columns of the times just to print those Zeroes...I should like to see that...would probably stimulate the writing of essays. Full of useful information...stand by for a great revival of the literary essay,especially when we get down near the bottom of that second column of zeros.

Engineers cause enough complications when they stick to their own field. ...consider for example the modern automobile..it is a thing of great beauty... a necessity...the result of years of research..its absolutely essential to our social and economic life...you can get colour and upholstery to match your favourite necktie...the automobile..its price power and performance..all are remarkable....and it still burns gasoline and travels on tires...but what have they done to the automobile....what we used to call the dashboard has come to resemble the instrument panel on a B 36..apparently it has been concluded that we no longer have the strength to wind up a window..or even to turn the steering wheel..the automobile appears to have become ashamed of travelling about on wheels,they cover them up with skirts...and have you tried to change tires on one recently...or put on a set of chains.....22 Everything has become so automatic that you need a nerve specialist,a surgeon, and maybe a psychiatrist to put it right..... when something goes wrong.....

It used to be that the man equipped with a set of pliers,a socket wrench, a jack,a role of tape,a couple of spare plugs, and maybe a length of bailing wire could venture forth on the rutted road with confidence.//.but have you looked under the hood of one of these modern marvels?...I used to be able to tear a motor down,put it together and make it run,now Id be afraid to put a stethescope on one...whats happened to the old skill of double clutching...and the time, when if you marcelled a fender, you just put on another one, and didnt have to rebuild the body.//The progress made by automotive engineers is I am sure astounding...it astounds me....and the man who can rewire a new one,or repair an automatic transmission, fills me with awe and the beginnings of an inferiority complex...

Im not sure that its good for us to be driving around in vehicles that so few of us understand...maybe the younger generation knows all about how they work..but most of them seem just to take the whole thing for granted.//.A lot of learned people are busy trying to tell us why we behave as we do, when most of us probably dont know why an automobile behaves as it does.(..There must be a moral in all this...but it escapes me at the moment...).

We were speaking of progress, and complexity...the Russian Chekov once said... "we fret ourselves to reform life, in order that posterity will say.(as usual).. in the past it used to be better,the present is worse than the past...Or it may be that Thomas Huxley was right when he said....Science is always wrong... it never solves a problem without creating ten more....Or if you prefer... Havelock Ellis.."What we call "progress" is the exchange of one nuisance for another.....

good night and good luck...

Friday, Dec. 5, 1952.

This is the news:

General Eisenhower has completed his visit to Korea...AND has arrived at Guam on a plane flight towards home. NOW, HE has switched from his plane to the cruiser Helena for a six-day sea voyage to Hawaii. The General is expected to be joined by some members of his staff at island points along the way to Hawaii. He's expected to spend a great deal of time aboard the cruiser working on the information he gathered during his three days in Korea.

The first news of the president-elect's Korean trip was made public at 7 this morning..New York time.

C16
5290

2

~~This is the news:~~

~~General Eisenhower is on his way home from Korea tonight. Neither~~ his ~~New York Headquarters nor officials in Washington would speculate~~ will on ~~his arrival time. But it was made known that this information will be released while the plane is in flight.~~

~~Security regulations were lifted at seven o'clock this morning, New York time.~~ And it was not until then that Mrs. Eisenhower, along with the rest of the nation, heard first details of the trip by radio. The only contact the President-Elect's wife had with her husband were periodic coded messages which read:"Fine boy arrived at (dash) today. All well." Mrs. Eisenhower told newsmen:"I'm glad everything's all right and he's coming home."

The security surrounding Eisenhower's visit to Korea was apparently without fault. Nearly a half million words of copy, passed by censors, was effectively held up at Tokyo until the designated hour for release.

Secretary of Defense Lovett said the public should be made aware of the self-restraint and cooperation given by radio, the press and TV.

The President-elect and his party left Mitchell Field, New York at 5:30 Saturday morning. In the Eisenhower plane were: General Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Charles Wilson, designated as our new Secretary of Defense; Major General Wilton Persons, who is to become a White House Assistant; Herbert Brownell, the prospective Attorney General; a secret service agent, and an acting secretary.

A second plane carried newsmen, a radio man, and photographers, along with Eisenhower's Press Secretary, James Hagerty.

Both planes had double crews as a precuationary measure. They stopped for re-fueling at San Francisco, Hawaii, Midway and Iwo Jima. As a precuationary measure, the planes flew with false identification and markings. The party stayed over-nite at Iwo Jima, sleeping in Quonset Huts only a few yards from the beaches once stormed by American troops.

On Tuesday nite, the General and his group reached Suoel. It was ten above zero when they landed. The General stepped out of the plane wearing a camel's hair coat. No official party met him -- FOR security reasons. He went immediately to 8th Army Headquarters. He had dinner and retired.

The next morning he was briefed by General Clark and Van Fleet.

After lunch, he went in a "puddle jumper" to visit the battlefront. It was then that he saw his son --MAJOR JOHN EISENHOWER-- for the first time since July. He returned to Souel for a conference with South Korean President Sygnam Rhee.

The Next day - Thursday - yesterday New York Time - Eisenhower returned to visit the troops...including the ROKS and the 15th Regiment which he commanded 12 years ago as a Lt. Colonel. He had more conferences that day and on Friday again met with President Sygman Rhee. He held a news conference and then headed for home.

At his meeting with newsmen, the General said that due to the large number assembled...there were 125 there...and because of the limited time...he would be unable to answer questions. But he did make a statement, and these are the highlights we recorded:

TAPE RUNS 4:42 RETURN CUE:"...COMMON PURPOSES THAT WE HAVE SO FAR DISPLAYED & WE ARE GOING TO GO FORWARD WITH THAT."

Newsmen attending the conference were somewhat disappointed that the General couldn't find time to answer questions. But otherwise reaction to the trip was generally favorable. A spokesman for President Rhee.. following three Eisenhower-Rhee meetings, said President Rhee was more certain than ever of victory. He said Eisenhower promised to make the Korean army bigger and better. IN WASHINGTON, Republicans SAY they FEEL the trip WILL give Eisenhower a basis for recommending some kind of solution to the Korean war. Democrats, generally, said they felt if nothing else, the trip was a morale booster for our troops. Overseas, the reaction seemed to center on a cautious note. Foreign observers were more interested in things the General said he couldn't do, than what he could do. They referred particularly to his reference to "no panaceas" and "many limitations" in Korea."

5

In Korea today , the weather was below zero. That kept fighting to a minimum. And for a third day our fighter-bombers hit enemy positions on the central front.

Here in New York tonight, General MacArthur will tell the National Association of Manufacturers Convention, that he has "a clear and definite solution" to the Korean war. The General, now chairman of the Board of Remington Rand, said his own views have not been sought in any way. But he has a plan.. based on the changing conditions in the past 20 months, since he was relieved of command in the Far East. He said it would not be proper to make the details public. But he is sure his plan could solve the Korean war, without unduly increasing casualties, or furthering the risk of world war."

A number of Republicans in Congress tonight expressed the hope that President-elect Eisenhower will consult General MacArthur.

~~In Korea today the weather was below zero. But [illegible] a minimum. And our fighter bombers hit enemy positions on the [illegible] front for a third day.~~

The State Department says that Edwin A. Locke, Junior, our roving ambassador in the Middle East, has been called home by Secretary Acheson. Ambassador Locke criticized our Middle Eastern aid programs in a speech in Lebanon today. Mr. Acheson feels they must discuss his ~~"obvious~~ "OBVIOUSLY different viewpoint."

The President announced today the resignation of Walter J. Donnelly, our high commissioner in Germany. Mr. Truman praised Mr. Donelly's 30-years of government service..said he has had an outstanding career in the foreign ~~office.~~ service.

The White House today announced the death of Mrs. David Wallace, the 90-year-old mother of Mrs. Truman. The President and his wife will leave for Independence tomorrow..for the funeral on Monday.

When he returns to Washington, the President will meet with Walter Reuther, the new president of the C.I.O. Reuther said today that he favors scrapping wage controls because, he says, Congress has wrecked the price control program.

At the United Nations, Secretary General Trygvie Lie today dismissed nine American employes of the U.N. They had refused to tell a Senate committee whether or not they are Communists. That brings to 18 the number of Americans fired this year. The U.N. Staff Association, speaking for the employes of the world organization, said these firings will endanger the U.N. because they were made without sufficient cause.

Here in New York today, George White, the federal narcotics supervisor for New England, was threatened with a jail sentence when he refused to answer questions to a grand jury about Thomas Luchese, also known as 3-Finger Brown. Later, White promised to talk on Monday.

It would seem that General Eisenhower's visit to Korea has bouyed the spirits of the South Koreans. They, doubtless along with many others, are convinced that Lord Tweedsmuir was right when he said:"There are many isms to perplex us - nazism,communism, fascism and so forth. But most of them will cancel each other out. There is only one ism which kills the soul and that is pessisim."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower has completed his visit to Korea and has arrived at Guam on a plane flight towards home. Now, he has switched from his plane to the cruiser Helena for a six-day sea voyage to Hawaii. The General is expected to be joined by some members of his staff at island points along the way to Hawaii. He's expected to spend a great deal of time aboard the cruiser, working on the information he gathered during his three days in Korea.

The first news of the president-elect's Korean trip was made public at 7 this morning, New York time. And it was not until then that Mrs. Eisenhower, along with the rest of the nation, heard first details of the trip by radio. The only contact the President-Elect's wife had with her husband were periodic coded messages which read: "Fine boy arrived at (dash) today. All well." Mrs. Eisenhower told newsmen: "I'm glad everything's all right and he's coming home."

The security surrounding Eisenhower's visit to Korea was apparently without fault. Nearly a half million words of copy, passed by censors, was effectively held up at Tokyo until the designated hour for release. Secretary of Defense Lovett said the public should be made aware of the self-restraint and cooperation given by radio, the press and TV.

The President-elect and his party left Mitchell Field, New York at 5:30 Saturday morning. In the Eisenhower plane were: General Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Charles Wilson, designated as our new Secretary of Defense; Major General Wilton Persons, who is to become a White House Assistant; Herbert Brownell, the prospective Attorney General; a secret service agent and an acting secretary. A second plane carried newsmen, a radio man and photographers, along with Eisenhower's Press Secretary, James Hagerty.

Both planes had double crews as a precautionary measure. They stopped for re-fueling at San Francisco, Hawaii, Midway and Iwo Jima. As a precautionary measure, the planes flew with false identification and markings. The party stayed over-nite at Iwo Jima, sleeping in Quonset Huts only a few yards from the beaches once stormed by American troops. On Tuesday nite, the General and his group reached Seoul. It was ten above zero when they landed. The General stepped out of the plane wearing a camel's hair coat. No official party met him for security reasons. He went immediately to 8th Army Headquarters. He had dinner and retired.

The next morning he was briefed by Generals Clark and Van Fleet. After lunch, he went in a "puddle jumper" to visit the battlefront. It was then that he saw his son Major John Eisenhower, for the first time since July. He returned to Seoul for a conference with South Korean President Syngman Rhee.

The Next day, Thursday, yesterday New York Time, Eisenhower returned to visit the troops, including the ROKS and the 15th Regiment which he commanded 12 years ago as a Lt. Colonel. He had more conferences that day and on Friday again met with President Rhee. He held a news conference and then headed for home.

At his meeting with newsmen, the General said that due to the large number assembled, there were 125 there, and because of the limited time, he would be unable to answer questions. But he did make a statement, and these are the highlights we recorded:

EISENHOWER: I think we had better confine the conversation this morning to this Korean trip, what I've been learning, what I've been trying to learn and the experiences of my party and myself as we go around the region. In other words, this is strictly no politics.

Now as I stated publicly long before we came over here, we come over to learn. We have no panaceas, no trick ways of settling any problems. We came over here to get a grasp of the feeling in this part of the world. A look at the situation, and a better understanding of many factors that will be important to my associates and myself and to everybody here during the months to come.

Now as we've gone up and down the portion of the battle line we have been privileged to visit, always in the background, always a sort of setting for the whole scene is the realization of what these Korean people have been through.

With war pushing up and down the land, destroying homes and resources, bringing hardships and suffering to these people, it was most remarkable that you could find among their soldiers everywhere such a spirit and elan that was displayed. And that, I find, is merely a reflection of the spirit and the elan that you find among their people.

Mr. Rhee, who I have been privileged to talk to, exhibits it and shows every qualification of a great leader - and all of the others that I have been privileged to talk to in civil or in private life - I mean in civil government or in private life and the soldiers. You find it everywhere.

Now with respect to the economic situation, as you go around it looks almost marvelous that these people can keep up their determination and keep up theirhealth; it means of course that help is going to have to come from the outside for a long time.

I'm not going to talk in detail about the military situation. You people are briefed from time to time by the various air and ground and naval commanders and you know exactly what that situation is.

How difficult it seems to be in a war of this kind to work out a plan that would bring a positive and definite victory without possibly running the grave risk of enlarging the war.

There is many a limitation on a war of this kind, but this much is certain - here we are realizing that freedom is an indivisible thing. We're all engaged in a common enterprise and that common enterprise, even if we have not yet been able to state its objective in definite, concrete terms and if there may be some misunderstandings or differences of opinion with respect to that, still we're all here to see it through. Much can be done, in my opinion, to improve our position - much will be done.

I think that I'm going to end this little talk with paying again a different kind of a tribute to the Korean nation. It is in terms of confidence in what I believe they can do with intelligent help given, not only for their preservation but in the realization again, as I say, of that principle that freedom is an indivisible thing.

I am far from a defeatist on this business because I personally believe that freedom represents a course of life that men prefer to communism and slavery.

Therefore, I believe that on this particular corner - this particular phase of this great struggle between these two idèologies - freedom is bound to be successful. All this takes is a continuation of the dedication of honest purposes that we have so far displayed. And we are going to go forward with that.

MURROW: Newsmen attending the conference were somewhat disappointed that the General couldn't find time to answer questions. But otherwise reaction to the trip was generally favorable. A spokesman for President Rhee, following three Eisenhower-Rhee meetings, said President Rhee was more certain than ever of victory. He said Eisenhower promised to make the Korean army bigger and better. In Washington, Republicans say they feel the trip will give Eisenhower a basis for recommending some kind of solution to the Korean war. Democrats, generally, said they felt if nothing else, the trip was a morale booster for our troops. Overseas, the reaction seemed to center on a cautious note. Foreign observers were more interested in things the General said he couldn't do, than what he could do. They referred particularly to his reference to "no panaceas" and "many limitations" in Korea."

In Korea today, the weather was below zero. That kept fighting to a minimum. And for a third day our fighter-bombers hit enemy positions on the central front.

Here in New York tonight, General MacArthur will tell the National Association of Manufacturers Convention, that he has "a clear and definite solution" to the Korean war. The General, now chairman of the Board of Remington Rand, said his own views have not been sought in any way. But he has a plan; based on the changing conditions in the past 20 months, since he was relieved of command in the Far East. He said it would not be proper to make the details public. But he is sure his plan could solve the Korean war without unduly increasing casualties or furthering the risk of world war.

A number of Republicans in Congress tonight expressed the hope that President-elect Eisenhower will consult General MacArthur.

The State Department says that Edwin A. Locke, Junior, our roving ambassador in the Middle East, has been called home by Secretary Acheson. Ambassador Locke criticized our Middle Eastern aid programs in a speech in Lebanon today. Mr. Acheson feels they must discuss his "obviously different viewpoint."

The President announced today the resignation of Walter J. Donnelly, our high commissioner in Germany. Mr. Truman praised Mr. Donnelly's 30-years of government service, said he has had an outstanding career in the foreign service.

The White House today announced the death of Mrs. David Wallace, the 90-year old mother of Mrs. Truman. The President and his wife will leave for Independence tomorrow, for the funeral on Monday.

When he returns to Washington, the President will meet with Walter Reuther, the new president of the C.I.O. Reuther said today that he favors scrapping wage controls because, he says, Congress has wrecked the price control program.

At the United Nations, Secretary General Trygve Lie today dismissed nine American employees of the U.N. They had refused to tell a Senate committee whether or not they are Communists. That brings to 18 the number of Americans fired this year. The U.N. Staff Association, speaking for the employees of the world organization, said these firings will endanger the U.N. because they were made without sufficient cause.

Here in New York today, George White, the federal narcotics supervisor for New England, was threatened with a jail sentence, when he refused to answer questions to a grand jury about Thomas Luchese, also known as 3-Finger Brown. Later, White promised to talk on Monday.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that General Eisenhower's visit to Korea has bouyed the spirits of the South Koreans. They, doubtless along with many others, are convinced that Lord Tweedsmuir was right when he said: "There are many isms to perplex us - Nazism, Communism, Fascism and so forth. But most of them will cancel each other out. There is only one ism which kills the soul, and that is pessimism."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, December 5, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The next day, Thursday, yesterday New York Time, Eisenhower returned to visit the troops. Including the South Koreans, and the 15th Regiment, which he commanded 12-yrs. ago as a lieutenant colonel.

He had more conferences that day. And on Friday again met with President Syngman Rhee. He held a news conference and then headed for home. At his meeting with newsmen, the General said that due to the large number assembled, there were about 125 there, and because of the limited time, he would be unable to answer questions. But he did make a statement, and these are the highlights we recorded.

EISENHOWER: I think we had better confine the conversation this morning to the ... this Korean trip ... what I've been learning, what I've been trying to learn and the experiences of my party and myself as we go around the region. In other words, this is strictly no politics.

Now as I stated publicly long before we came over here, we come over to learn. We have no panaceas, no trick ways of settling any problems. We came over here to get a grasp of the feeling in this part of the world. A look at the situation, and a better understanding of many factors that will be important to my associates and myself andtoeverybody here during the months to come.

Now as we've gone up and down the portion of the battle line we have been privileged to visit, always in the background, always a sort of setting for the whole scene is the realization of what these Korean people have been through.

With war pushing up and down the land, destroying homes and resources, bringing hardships and suffering to these people, it was most remarkable that you could find among their soldiers everywhere such a spirit and elan that was displayed. And that, I find, is merely a reflection of the spirit and the elan that you find among their people.

Mr. Rhee, who I have been privileged to talk to, exhibits it and shows every qualification of a great leader - and all ofthe others that I have been privileged to talk to in civil or in private life - I mean in civil government or in private life and the soldiers. You find it everywhere.

Now with respect to the economic situation, as you go around it looks almost marvelous that these people can keep up their determination and keep up their health; it means of course that help is going to have to come fromthe outside for a long time.

I'm not going to talk in detail about the military situation You people are briefed from time to time by the various air and ground and naval commanders and you know exactly what that situation is.

How difficult it seems to be in a war of this kind to work out a plan that would bring a positive and definite victory without possibly running the grave risk of enlarging the war.

There is many limitations on a war of this kind, but this much is certain - here we are realizing that freedom is an indivisible thing. We're all engaged in a common enterprise and that common enterprise, even if we have not yet been able to state its objective in definite, concrete terms and if there may be some misunderstandings or differences of opinion with respect to that, still we're all here to see it through. Much can be done, in my opinion, to improve our position - much will be done.

I think that I'm going to end this little talk with paying again a different kind of a tribute to the Korean nation. It is in terms of confidence in what I believe they can do with intelligent help given, not only for their preservation but in the realization again, as I say, of that principle that freedom is an indivisible thing.

I am far from a defeatist on this business because I personally believe that freedom represents a course of life that men prefer to communism and slavery.

Therefore, I believe thaton this particular corner - this particular phase of this great struggle between these two ideologies - freedom is bound to be successful. All this takes is a continuation of the dedication of honest? purposes that we have so far displayed. And we are going to go forward with that.

(30)

Ed. trans.P. O.

Monday Dec 8 1952

This is the news:

Economic Stabilizer Putnam said tonight: "We are determined to keep the stabilization program operating, and we will do so." In a statement issued for himself, and Mobilization Director Fowler, Mr. Putnam said they have "very excellent" prospects of getting new industry members for the Wage Stabilization Board. Seven industry members of the board resigned over the week-end, in protest against the President's decision to grant the nation's coal miners the full pay raise they had negotiated with the industry. The board had felt this would ruin the stabilization program.

Secretary of State Acheson has told Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin, that American secrets cannot fall into the hands of Communists employed by the United Nations, because we do not give the U.N. our secrets. Mr. Acheson also told the Senator in a letter last October, THAT he warned U.N. officials that the employment of American communists, was not in the best interests of our country, or of the U.N. The Secretary also said the State Department had sent the U.N. "such information as is at our disposal" on Americans employed by the U.N. Maryland's Senator O'Conor calls the Acheson letter a "shockingly weak protest" against the appointment of Communists at the U.N.... "a disappointing letter", in light of the Department's lack of action to uncover subversive infiltration into the U.N.

In Washington today the State Department revealed that Foy D. Kohler, a member of the Secretary's "planning board," violated security regulations over the week-end when he carried secret documents to a drinking party in Virginia. [redacted] Mr. Kohler used to be head of the Voice of America. He and his wife were in an auto accident early Saturday. Mrs. Kohler was charged with drunken driving. Mr. Kohler paid a fine for "public intoxication." [redacted] The State Department says that Mr. Kohler.. a career diplomat of 21 years, with an excellent performance and security record..did not permit anyone else to see [redacted] The secret documents. But, under department regulations, he is supposed to guard such papers "in a manner commesnurate with their classification."

John Foster Dulles--who is to be secretary of state in General Eisenhower's cabinet.. conferred with the General today, aboard the cruiser Helena.. enroute to Hawaii. Mr. Dulles was but one of [redacted] three cabinet-members-to-be, who were ferreied from Wake Island to the Helena by helicopter: the others were: Governor McKay, interior AND George Humphrey, treasury [redacted] In all there are now 24 members of the Eisenhower party aboard the Helena. They arrive in Hawaii early Thursday, and will stay there for a brief rest..and probably more conferences. The General's secretary says there will be "no statements on Korea".

In Korea today, there was very little FIGHTING, because of the cold. But patrol actions continued, as always. Our jet pilots destroyed another Mig..the 8th in two days.

The North Korean radio says General Eisenhower's Korean trip was an excuse to get the American people interested in expanding the war.

The London Times says the General made clear that he will not risk extending the war. And a British government source says Britain would approve a limited allied offensive, if it stops at the Korean neck, below the 40th parallel...about 150 miles north of the 38th paralell. This source says such an offensive would need more men: Britain could contibute another division only by pulling one out of Germany.

Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that Britain will take legal action against any American oil companies that try to buy or sell Iranian oil. The British feel this oil is the property of the Anglo-Iranian oil company.

From Yugoslavia today came a radio report of another purge of top officials in Czechoslovakia. But the Yugoslav news agency does not say where it received its word that five of these so-called leaders have been arrested.

The Isreali Parliament today chose the second president, of Isreal. He is Yit-zak Ben Tsvee, a 68-year-old leader of the Labor party. He will be sworn in on Wednesday for a five year term succeeding the late Dr. Weizmann.

In Washington today the Supreme Court ruled that under the present Pure Food and Drug Law, a manufacturer may refuse to admit federal inspectors to his plant. It was an 8 to 1 decision. Officials of the Pure Food and Drig Administration say this decision cuts the heart out of its inspection program; it discovers about 80 per cent of the law's offenders by inspecting plants.

Vice President-elect Nixon returned to Washington today from Mexico City. He told reporters Senator Taft is a "team player".. and will work smoothly with the new Eisenhower Administration. Nixon says he approves the appointment of Martin P. Durkin to be secretary of labor.. an appointment Taft called "incredible." [redacted]

The President was in Indpendence today for the funeral services for Mrs. David W. Wallace, the 90-year-old mother of Mrs. Truman.

Here in New York, a former Sing Sing prisoner told the State Crime Commission that the prison served as a sort of hiring hall for waterfront workers. The ex-convict said not only were such jobs available for former prisoners, but he thinks prisoners were preferred.. "the worse record you had the easier it was to get a job." He said he was recruited for work while still in prison; when he got out he went to work immediately..but did nothing, most of the time, but play cards and "look to steal something."

Edward R. Murrow: December 8, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

More violence in Morocco today; at least 50 Moroccans, and seven Europeans killed, when Arab Nationalists fought troops and police. The rioting occurred in Casablanca. (Some of the bodies were badly mutilated.) Police have started moving French and other European residents from certain danger zones. Low flying planes have been dropping tear gas to disperse the Arab mobs. The French Army commander has established a curfew from eight in the evening till six in the morning; gatherings of more than ten persons have been forbidden; two daily newspapers and two weeklies, all supporting the Moroccan independence movement, have been banned.

Last Friday a Tunisian Nationalist and labor leader was assassinated outside Tunis. His followers called a three-day general strike, and the Moroccan General Labor Confederation called a two-day strike. The violence in Morocco resulted, and the end of it is not in sight.

Today at the United Nations this country reversed its stand on Tunisia and Morocco. Back in October we voted that the U.N. should discuss a motion put forward by the Arab-Asian bloc, claiming that French action in those two areas represented a threat to the peace. The French were very bitter about our action at that time. Today our delegation at the U.N. announced that it would support a Latin-American proposal, under which the United Nations would have nothing to do with the quarrel between the French and the Tunisians, except to hope "that the two parties would continue to negotiate." The British have also said that the United Nations should not attempt to interfere in the quarrel. The French have insisted all along that the U.N. has no authority to intervene or to make recommendations.

In October we agreed that Morocco and Tunisia were second only in importance to Korea. Today we said the U.N. shouldn't have anything to do with the French-Tunisian argument; (and presumably we'll say the same thing when the Moroccan case comes up.) American delegate Philip Jessup said: "We place our trust in the peoples and governments of France and Tunisia. It is they who must work out their destiny.

As a nation our stake in Morocco is rather greater than in Tunisia. We have three big air bases already operational in Morocco, built at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. In the North African area we have spent, in aid of one kind or another, almost a billion dollars. The French have promised eventual self-government to Moroccans and Tunisians alike, but their nationalists are in a hurry. French repressive measures produced, as they always do, increased agitation and violence. They do not believe in the "inevitability of gradualness," and they are of course encouraged by Communist agitators.

The reversal of our stand at the United Nations today is another illustration of what might be called the split personality of our foreign policy. Traditionally and emotionally we are in favor of freedom, self-government and independence for any people subjected to foreign rule or exploitation. That feeling stems from our own history and tradition. But at the same time we have allies; we have vital military and economic interests in North Africa. The French are responsible for maintaining law and order, and the security of our military bases. They resent any suggestion that we, or the United Nations should attempt to interfere in their negotiations with the Nationalists in Morocco and Tunisia. The result is that we are faced with a choice, a conflict between our traditional anti-colonialism - our belief that nobody should be subjected to foreign rule - on the one hand, and our immediate military interests on the other; plus the necessity of maintaining a coherent and workable alliance.

The French position is that they have done an intelligent and enlightened job of administration in both areas; that great progress has been made; and that if we need France so badly as an ally in Europe, then we shouldn't go causing trouble in her back yard in North Africa. And the French say that goes for the United Nations, too.

Our decision at the United Nations today means that we have agreed with the British and the French that the U.N. should keep "hands off" and that the French Government should decide the speed at which the peoples of Tunisia, and presumably Morocco, shall proceed toward independence and self-government.

Our position with regard to Morocco and Tunisia is complicated by our immediate sentiments on the one hand and future fears on the other. What we are saying, in effect, is what Wilson said 37 years ago:"No nation is fit to sit in judgement upon any other nation." But we are thinking along the lines of E.S. Gardner:"There are two horns to my dilemma. If I don't get hooked on one, I might on the other."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Economic Stabilizer Putnam said tonight: "We are determined to keep the stabilization program operating, and we will do so." In a statement issued for himself, and Mobilization Director Fowler, Mr. Putnam said they have "very excellent" prospects of getting new industry members for the Wage Stabilization Board. Seven industry members of the Board resigned over the week end in protest against the President's decision to grant the nation's coal miners the full pay they had negotiated with the industry. The Board had felt this would ruin the stabilization program.

Secretary of State Acheson has told Republican Senator Wiley of Wisconsin that American secrets cannot fall into the hands of Communists employed by the United Nations because we do not give the U.N. our secrets. Mr. Acheson also told the Senator in a letter last October that he warned U.N. officials that the employment of American communists was not in the best interests of our country or of the U.N. The Secretary also said the State Department had sent the U.N. "such information as is at our disposal" on Americans employed by the U.N. Maryland's Senator O'Conor calls the Acheson letter a "shockingly weak protest" against the appointment of Communists at the U.N. "a disappointing letter," in light of the Department's lack of action to uncover subversive infiltration into the U.N.

In Washington today the State Department revealed that Foy D. Kohler, a member of the Secretary's "planning board," violated security regulations over the week end when he carried secret documents to a drinking party in Virginia. Mr. Kohler used to be head of the Voice of America. He and his wife were in an auto accident early Saturday. Mrs. Kohler was charged with drunken driving. Mr. Kohler paid a fine for "public intoxication." The State Department says that Mr. Kohler, a career diplomat of 21 years with an excellent performance and security record did not permit anyone else to see the secret documents. But, under department regulations, he is supposed to guard such papers "in a manner commensurate with their classification."

John Foster Dulles - who is to be secretary of state in General Eisenhower's cabinet, conferred with the General today, aboard the cruiser Helena, enroute to Hawaii. Mr. Dulles was but one of three cabinet-members-to-be who were ferreied from Wake Island to the Helena by helicopter. The others were Governor McKay, interior and George Humphrey, treasury. In all there are now 24 members of the Eisenhower party aboard the Helena. They arrive in Hawaii early Thursday and will stay there for a brief rest, and probably more conferences. The General's secretary says there will be "no statements on Korea."

In Korea today, there was very little fighting because of the cold. But patrol actions continued as always. Our jet pilots destroyed another Mig, the 8th in two days.

The North Korean radio says General Eisenhower's Korean trip was an excuse to get the American people interested in expanding the war.

The London Times says the General made clear that he will not risk extending the war. And a British government source says Britain would approve a limited allied offensive if it stops at the Korean neck, below the 40th parallel, about 150 miles north of the 38th parallel. This source says such an offensive would need more men: Britain could contribute another division only by pulling one out of Germany.

Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that Britain will take legal action against any American oil companies that try to buy or sell Iranian oil. The British feel this oil is the property of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company.

From Yugoslavia today came a radio report of another purge of top officials in Czechoslovakia. But the Yugoslav news agency does not say where it received its word that five of these so-called leaders have been arrested.

The Israeli Parliament today chose the second president of Israel. He is Itzhak Ben Zvi , a 68-year-old leader of the Labor Party. He will be sworn in on Wednesday for a five year term succeeding the late Dr. Weizmann.

In Washington today the Supreme Court ruled that under the present Pure Food and Drug Law, a manufacturer may refuse to admit federal inspectors to his plant. It was an 8 to 1 decision. Officials of the Pure Food and Drug Administration say this decision cuts the heart out of its inspection program; it discovers about 80 per cent of the law's offenders by inspecting plants.

Vice President-elect Nixon returned to Washington today from Mexico City. He told reporters Senator Taft is a "team player" and will work smoothly with the new Eisenhower Administration. Nixon says he approves the appointment of Martin P. Durkin to be secretary of labor, an appointment Taft called "incredible."

The President was in Independence today for the funeral services for Mrs. David W. Wallace, the 90-year-old mother of Mrs. Truman.

Here in New York, a former Sing Sing prisoner told the State Crime Commission that the prison served as a sort of hiring hall for waterfront workers. The ex-convict said not only were such jobs available for former prisoners, but he thinks prisoners were preferred. "The worse record you had the easier it was to get a job." He said he was recruited for work while still in prison; when he got out he went to work immediately, but did nothing, most of the time, but play cards and "look to steal something."

More violence in Morocco today; at least 50 Moroccans and seven Europeans killed when Arab Nationalists fought troops and police. The rioting occurred in Casablanca. Some of the bodies were badly mutilated. Police have started moving French and other European residents from certain danger zones. Low flying planes have been dropping tear gas to disperse the Arab mobs. The French Army commander has established a curfew from eight in the evening till six in the morning; gatherings of more than ten persons have been forbidden; two daily newspapers and two weeklies, all supporting the Moroccan independence movement have been banned.

Last Friday a Tunisian Nationalist and labor leader was assassinated outside Tunis. His followers called a three-day general strike, and the Moroccan General Labor Confederation called a two-day strike. The violence in Morrocco resulted, and the end of it is not in sight.

Today at the United Nations this country reversed its stand on Tunisia and Morocco. Back in October we voted that the U.N. should discuss a motion put forward by the Arab-Asian bloc claiming that French action in those two areas represented a threat to the peace. The French were very bitter about our action at that time. Today our delegation at the U.N. announced that it would support a Latin-American proposal under which the United Nations would have nothing to do with the quarrel between the French and the Tunisians, except to hope "that the two parties would continue to negotiate." The British have also said that the United Nations should not attempt to interfere in the quarrel. The French have insisted all along that the U.N. has no authority to intervene or to make recommendations.

In October we agreed that Morocco and Tunisia were second only in importance to Korea. Today we said the U.N. shouldn't have anything to do with the French-Tunisian argument; (and presumably we'll say the same thing when the Moroccan case comes up.) American delegate Philip Jessup said: "We place our trust in the peoples and governments of France and Tunisia. It is they who must work out their destiny.

As a nation our stake in Morocco is rather greater than in Tunisia. We have three big air bases already operational in Morocco, built at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. In the North African area we have spent in aid of one kind or another almost a billion dollars. The French have promised eventual self-government to Moroccans and Tunisians alike, but their nationalists are in a hurry. French repressive measures produced, as they always do, increased agitation and violence. They do not believe in the "inevitability of gradualness," and they are of course encouraged by Communist agitators.

The reversal of our stand at the United Nations today is another illustration of what might be called the split personality of our foreign policy. Traditionally and emotionally we are in favor of freedom, self-government and independence for any people subjected to foreign rule or exploitation. That feeling stems from our own history and tradition. But at the same time we have allies; we have vital military and economic interests in North Africa. The French are responsible for maintaining law and order, and the security of our military bases. They resent any suggestion that we, or the United Nations should attempt to interfere in their negotiations with the Nationalists in Morocco and Tunisia. The result is that we are faced with a choice, a conflict between our traditional anti-colonialism - our belief that nobody should be subjected to foreign rule - on the one hand, and our immediate military interests on the other; plus the necessity of maintaining a coherent and workable alliance.

The French position is that they have done an intelligent and enlightened job of administration in both areas; that great progress has been made; and that if we need France so badly as an ally in Europe, then we shouldn't go causing trouble in her back yard in North Africa. And the French say that goes for the United Nations, too.

Our decision at the United Nations today means that we have agreed with the British and the French that the U.N. should keep "hands off" and that the French Government should decide the speed at which the peoples of Tunisia, and presumably Morocco, shall proceed toward independence and self-government.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Our position with regard to Morocco and Tunisia is complicated by our immediate sentiments on the one hand and future fears on the other. What we are saying, in effect, is what Wilson said 37 years ago: "No nation is fit to sit in judgement upon any other nation." But we are thinking along the lines of E.S. Gardner: "There are two horns to my delemma. If I don't get hooked on one, I might on the other."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday, Dec. 9, 1952.

This is the news:

General Eisenhower has asked General MacArthur for his plan to win the war in Korea. Last Friday, as Eisenhower left Korea for his return home, General MacArthur, in a speech here in New York, said that he had a "clear and definite solution for the war"..one that would not involve "undue casualties." He suggested he would present the plan to President-elect Eisenhower, if asked for it. Today, on the cruiser Helena, the Eisenhower press secretary, James Hagerty, told reporters: Eisenhower is very much interested..has asked MacArthur for the plan... he wants MacArthur's views and thinking on the war..the two have exchanged cables. MacArthur has not submitted the plan. (presumably that will await Eisenhower's return to New York.)

The announcement from the Helena came after a half dozen Senators..Republicans, Mc Carthy....Butler...Dworshak...Welker.. Schoepel, and Democrat Stennis..had suggested that the two generals get together, on what to do about Korea. And a high official of the Defense Department told reporters: MacArthur is still an employe of the army.. if he has any plan to end the Korean fighting he should tell the Army about it...this would be his duty "as a good soldier." The official explained that it would not be dignified for the army to go to one of its "employes" and ask for his ideas. The official said:"It is incumbent on MacArthur to send the plan in without further ado..and without making a speech about it."

Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said today that he doesn't think our allies are doing as much as they can, to help the battle in Korea. He singled out Canada, Australia and New Zealand as nations which COULD DO MORE. Senator Russell said the British are already over-extended. He criticized the French for not calling up draftees... even for Indo-China, where they are using professional volunteers. Senator Russell also wants a naval blockade of Communist China; and he approves the limited use of Chinese Nationalist troops in Korea.

There was little fighting in Korea today.. rounding out a full week, in which there has been no major activity. A British pilot, in one of our Sabrejets, shot down an enemy Mig.

Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky left New York for Moscow today. He told reporters:"Although the work of the United Nations general assembly is not finished yet, it shows that the Assembly does not fulfill its duty for peace." Then, in reference to the Indian proposal for a truce in Korea, Vishinsky said: "The fact that the Assembly adopted a resolution, which is not promoting peace, shows that its work as an instrument of peace is not satisfactory."

In French Morocco today, two Moroccans were killed and eight wounded, in a fight with troops, some 100 miles south of Casabalanca.

In Paris, the chiefs of staff of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were told, that because of economy moves, NATO will have only 63 divisions by the end of 1953 instead of the planned 75. that was the tentative target set in Lisbon last February.

In Egypt, Premier Mohammed Naguib has abolished his nation's Constiututin... as a preliminary to converting the country from a Kingdom INTO A REPUBLIC.

In Washington today, the United States Chamber of Commerce urged all businessmen to boycott the Wage Stabilization Board. Laurence F. Lee, president of the chamber, says the present wage-price program is a "sham." He hopes no businessman will help reconstitute the Board, from which seven industry members resigned in protest against the President's decision to give the coal miners a full $1.90 a day wage increase.

At almost the same time Lee was urging businessmen to stay away,

Economic Stabilizer Putnam was telling reporters that he hoped to have the W. S. B. back in operation by the end of the week. He said more than a dozen businessmen had applied for the vanacies.

Martin P. Durkin, who is to be secretary of labor in the Eisenhower cabinet, told reporters today he is confident union leaders can get together with Senator Taft on revisions for the Taft-Hartley law. He is certain Taft will co-operate on amendments to the law AND that he will be reasonable and fair-minded about it.

The President is on his way back to Washington tonight from Independence where he attended the funeral of his mother in law. Today, Mr. Truman worked at his office in Kansas City.

Attorney General Mc Granery feels that many persons now regret the "nasty things" they once said about the Justice Department. He told veteran employes of the Department that he hears confessions on all sides from people who are sorry because of what they said.

Today the government filed a suit in Newark, New Jersey, to take citizenship away from Albert ~~Anastasia~~ Anastasia, a New York waterfront racketeer. The government says he failed to reveal his criminal record in applying for his papers.

The New York State Crime Commission presented more evidence today indicating that longshoremen racketeers control the hiring and firing on this city's piers. (with the approval of the A. F. of L. Longshoremen's union.)

A House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations was told today that the Rockefeller Foundation has given nearly two million dollars to the Institute of Pacific Relations. Dean Rusk, an official of the foundation, says none of this money was provided to "promote communism." The Institute of Pacific Relations has been under study by a number of congressional committees, searching for subversive activity.

At Edwards Air Force Base in California, officials of Republic Aviation disclosed that the air force now has this country's first supersonic, rocket-powered combat fighter plane. We're told that Republic's XF-91 is "combat ready...not a purely research plane." It is classified in the "over 700 miles an hour class."

Edward R. Murrow: December 9, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Today the Supreme Court started hearing argument in a case that may well be one of great historic significance. The issue is old and explosive - the matter of segregation in the schools - separate schools for white and colored children. Cases are pending before the Court from Delaware, Kansas, Virginia and the District of Columbia. Today, lawyers opposing segregation contended that colored children have been deprived by segregation of equal protection of the law, and of equal educational opportunities. It relegates them to an inferior caste; interferes with their learning processes and retards their development. Segregation is "a badge of slavery" that puts road blocks in the minds of negro children, and [redacted] damages their chances for an education.

Defending segregation was John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for the presidency in 1924. Mr. Davis said that if a state cannot classify pupils on the basis of race, it cannot classify them on the basis of age, sex or mental capacity either. The basic question in these cases is not whether negro children are offered educational opportunities equal to those afforded to white children. The question is whether segregation itself is unconstitutional.

This controversy goes back some 56 years to the so-called separate but equal" doctrine, first announced in 1896. This ruling of the Court said, in effect, that segregation was all right, but negro children had to have equal educational opportunities. Now what is being contended in these cases is not that the facilities for negros and whites are not equal; but rather that the mere fact of segregation or separation, is unconstitutional. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court have steadily narrowed the interpretation of "equal". There was a decision in 1948 that so-called "restrictive covenants" in real estate deals, could not be enforced through the courts. These restrictive covenants were private agreements not to sell to members of a particular group.

Segregation in higher education is breaking down. There were two Supreme Court decisions in this area in 1950, holding that negroes must be admitted to state universities, if equal facilities are not available in negro institutions. The Court also held that once a negro was admitted, he must not be segregated in his use of campus facilities. In the last two years more than a thousand negroes have enrolled at formerly all-white universities in the South. # There are many signs that segregation is breaking down. In the last ten years there have been vast movements of population; and in the big cities many all-white neighborhoods have become mixed - white and colored children attend the same schools in a fashion unheard of a few years ago. The typical negro family now has three-and-a-half times its 1940 income. This means that there has been a movement of negroes away from the slum areas into closer contact with the whites. There are a million more negroes employed in industry today than ten years ago. It is now easier for negroes to join labor unions than it was a few years ago. And the number of negro students going to college has increased something like 60 percent in the last ten years.

~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ There has also been a notable decrease in segregation in the armed forces.

Most of the easement of the practise of segregation has been achieved without violence or great public outcry. The improvement of the position of the negro in education, labor unions, housing, and in administrative positions has been substantial in both the north and the south during the last ten years.

There has been some difference of opinion amongst negro leaders as to whether the constitutional issue of segregation should be brought squarely before the Supreme Court. Some advised that the time wasn't yet ripe; that gradual progress ~~XXX~~ through a series of court actions was preferable to a frontal attack. These leaders felt that the Supreme Court might uphold segregation, and this would involve the loss of past gains and the reversal of a trend. Other negro leaders have felt that the Court would hand down a favorable decision if the constitutional issue were squarely presented. That issue is now being presented to the Court. The decision will probably not be made until sometime in the Spring.

We were speaking of the law. The Roman historian Livy once remarked: "No law perfectly suits the convenience of every member of the community; the only consideration is whether, upon the whole, it be profitable to the greater part." But perhaps Tolstoy was closer to the mark when he said: "Where is there any book of the law so clear to each man as that written in his heart."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower has asked General MacArthur for his plan to win the war in Korea. Last Friday, as Eisenhower left Korea for his return home, General MacArthur, in a speech here in New York, said that he had a "clear and definite solution for the war"..one that would not involve "undue casualties." He suggested he would present the plan to President-elect Eisenhower if asked for it. Today, on the cruiser Helena, the Eisenhower press secretary, James Hagerty, told reporters: Eisenhower is very much interested, has asked MacArthur for the plan. He wants MacArthur's views and thinking on the war, the two have exchanged cables. MacArthur has not submitted the plan, (presumably that will await Eisenhower's return to New York.)

The announcement from the Helena came after a half dozen Senators, Republicans McCarthy, Butler, Dworshak, Welker, Schoepel and Democrat Stennis, had suggested that the two generals get together on what to do about Korea. And a high official of the Defense Department told reporters: MacArthur is still an employee of the army, if he has any plan to end the Korean fighting he should tell the Army about it. This would be his duty "as a good soldier." The official explained that it would not be dignified for the army to go to one of its "employees" and ask for his ideas. The official said: "It is incumbent on MacArthur to send the plan in without further ado, and without making a speech about it."

Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said today that he doesn't think our allies are doing as much as they can to help the battle in Korea. He singled out Canada, Australia and New Zealand as nations which could do more. Senator Russell said the British are already over-extended. He criticized the French for not calling up draftees, even for Indo-China, where they are using professional volunteers. Senator Russell also wants a naval blockade of Communist China; and he approves the limited use of Chinese Nationalist troops in Korea.

There was little fighting in Korea today, rounding out a full week, in which there has been no major activity. A British pilot, in one of our Sabre-jets, shot down an enemy Mig.

Soviet Foreign Minister Vishinsky left New York for Moscow today. He told reporters: "Although the work of the United Nations general assembly is not finished yet, it shows that the Assembly does not fulfill its duty for peace." Then, in reference to the Indian proposal for a truce in Korea, Vishinsky said: "The fact that the Assembly adopted a resolution which is not promoting peace shows that its work as an instrument of peace is not satisfactory."

In French Morocco today, two Moroccans were killed and eight wounded in a fight with troops some 100 miles south of Casablanca.

In Paris, the chiefs of staff of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were told that because of economy moves, NATO will have only 63 divisions by the end of 1953 instead of the planned 75. That was the tentative target set in Lisbon last February.

In Egypt, Premier Mohammed Naguib has abolished his nation's Constitution as a preliminary to converting the country from a Kingdom into a Republic.

In Washington today, the United States Chamber of Commerce urged all businessmen to boycott the Wage Stabilization Board. Laurence F. Lee, president of the chamber, says the present wage-price program is a "sham." He hopes no businessman will help reconstitute the Board from which seven industry members resigned in protest against the President's decision to give the coal miners a full $1.90 a day wage increase.

At almost the same time Lee was urging businessmen to stay away, Economic Stabilizer Putnam was telling reporters that he hoped to have the W.S.B. back in operation by the end of the week. He said more than a dozen businessmen had applied for the vacancies.

Martin P. Durkin, who is to be secretary of labor in the Eisenhower cabinet, told reporters today he is confident union leaders can get together with Senator Taft on revisions for the Taft-Hartley law. He is certain Taft will cooperate on amendments to the law and that he will be reasonable and fair-minded about it.

The President is on his way back to Washington tonight from Independence where he attended the funeral of his mother in law. Today, Mr. Truman worked at his office in Kansas City.

Attorney General McGranery feels that many persons now regret the "nasty things" they once said about the Justice Department. He told veteran employees of the Department that he hears confessions on all sides from people who are sorry because of what they said.

Today the government filed a suit in Newark, New Jersey, to take citizenship away from Albert Anastasia, a New York waterfront racketeer. The government says he failed to reveal his criminal record in applying for his papers.

The New York State Crime Commission presented more evidence today indicating that longshoremen racketeers control the hiring and firing on this city's piers (with the approval of the A.F.L. Longshoremen's union.)

A House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations was told today that the Rockefeller Foundation has given nearly two million dollars to the Institute of Pacific Relations. Dean Rusk, an official of the foundation, says none of this money was provided to "promote communism." The Institute of Pacific Relations has been under study by a number of congressional committees searching for subversive activity.

At Edwards Air Force Base in California, officials of Republic Aviation disclosed that the air force now has this country's first supersonic, rocket-powered combat fighter plane. We're told that Republic's XF-91 is "combat ready, not a purely research plane." It is classified in the "over 700 miles an hour class."

Today the Supreme Court started hearing argument in a case that may well be one of great historic significance. The issue is old and explosive - the matter of segregation in the schools (separate schools for white and colored children.) Cases are pending before the Court from Delaware, Kansas, Virginia and the District of Columbia. Today, lawyers opposing segregation contended that colored children have been deprived by segregation of equal protection of the law, and of equal educational opportunities. It relegates them to an inferior caste; interferes with their learning processes and retards their development. Segregation is "a badge of slavery" that puts road blocks in the minds of negro children, and damages their chances for an education.

Defending segregation was John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for the presidency in 1924. Mr. Davis said that if a state cannot classify pupils on the basis of race, it cannot classify them on the basis of age, sex or mental capacity either. The basic question in these cases is not whether negro children are offer d educational opportunities equal to those afforded to white children. The question is whether segregation itself is unconstitutional.

This controversy goes back some 56 years to the so-called "separate but equal" doctrine first announced in 1896. This ruling of the Court said, in effect, that segregation was all right but negro children had to have equal educational opportunities. Now what is being contended in these cases is not that the facilities for negroes and whites are not equal; but rather that the mere fact of segregation is unconstitutional. Recent decisions of the Supreme Court have steadily narrowed the interpretation of "equal". There was a decision in 1948 that so-called "restrictive covenants" in real estate deals could not be enforced through the courts. These restrictive covenants were private agreements not to sell to members of a particular group.

Segregation in higher education is breaking down. There were two supreme Court decisions in this area in 1950, holding that negroes must be admitted to state universities if equal facilities are not available in negro institutions.

The Court also held that once a negro was admitted he must not be segregated in his use of campus facilities. In the last two years more than a thousand negroes have enrolled at formerly all-white universities in the South. There are many signs that segregation is breaking down. In the last ten years there have been vast movements of population; and in the big cities many all-white neighborhoods have become mixed - white and colored children attend the same schools in a fashion unheard of a few years ago. The typical negro family now has three-and-a-half times its 1940 income. This means that there has been a movement of negroes away from the slum areas into closer contact with the whites. There are a million more negroes employed in industry today than ten years ago. It is not easier for negroes to join labor unions than it was a few years ago. And the number of negro students going to college has increased something like 60 percent in the last ten years.

There has also been a notable decrease in segregation in the armed forces.

Most of the easement of the practice of segregation has been achieved without violence or great public outcry. The improvement of the position of the negro in education, labor unions, housing, and in administrative positions has been substantial in both the north and the south during the last ten years.

There has been some difference of opinion amongst negro leaders as to whether the constitutional issue of segregation should be brought squarely before the Supreme Court. Some advised that the time wasn't yet ripe; that gradual progress through a serious of court actions was preferable to a frontal attack. These leaders felt that the Supreme Court might uphold segregation, and this would involve the loss of past gains and the reversal of a trend. Other negro leaders have felt that the Court would hand down a favorable decision if the constitutional issue were squarely presented. That issue is now being presented to the Court. This decision will probably not be made until sometime in the Spring.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of the law. The Roman historian Livyus once remarked: "No law perfectly suits the convenience of every member of the community; the only consideration is whether, upon the whole, it be profitable to the greater part." But perhaps Tolstoy was closer to the mark when he said: "Where is there any book of the law so clear to each man as that written in his heart."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday, Dec. 10, 1952

This is the news:

The President today called on General MacArthur to inform the White House "at once" of HIS plan for peace in Korea. Mr. Truman issued this statement. (which I'd like to review in a few minutes)..from the train bringing him back to Washington.

In Korea today, carrier based fighter-bombers made their biggest strike of the war..hitting four enemy railroad centers close to the Manchurian border. There was little ground fighting. And the Pentagon reports that we suffered another 275 casualties last week. The total now is 127, 658 which includes 22,409 men killed and 94-hundred missing.

At the United Nations today, this country cast the decisive vote, in rejecting a resolution inviting the Bey of Tunis to send a representative to the Political committee..(which is debating Tunisia's dispute with France.)

And the Senate committee that has been investigating Americans on the U.N. payroll, was told today that the State Department had labelled 40 Americans as bad security risks. Assistant Secretary of State Hickerson says 28 of these Americans have been dropped by the U.N....12 are still on the job.

The State Department today demanded that Russia and Hungary return one of air force planes that was forced down in Hungary a year ago. We either want the plane back or 100-thousand dollars for it. We also want the plane's cargo and documents taken from the four airmen who were in the plane at the time. Those were the men we had to ransom for 123-thousand dollars.

Secretary of State Acheson said today that the recent Communist trials in Czechoslovakia were designed by the Russians to terrorize the satellite countries.. and compel their bosses to work harder. He said we can expect more such trials wherever the Russians feel it necessary to teach the "lessons of utter, unquestioning dependence upon the Kremlin and unswerving and successful compliance with its purposes."

John Foster Dulles..who replaces Mr. Acheson in the new Eisenhower cabinet..said today on the cruiser Helena that after he takes office he plans to make a world tour of Europe, the middle East and Far East. Mr. Dulles told reporters on the warship today that the conferences

General Eisenhower has been holding with cabinet members and other top aides "will pay dividends to the American people for years to come." He added:"There won't be any immediate grand-scale pay-off. But it will be a gradual thing, reaching into every part of the government's operations at home and abroad." He said the framework of the new administration's policy has been formed and "we know the direction we are going and the goals wer are aiming for."

Senator Lodge.. who is to become our ambassador to the United Nations...said in Denver today that we must base our foreign policy on moral ideas and not on dollars or buklets. He said we must defeat the Soviet idea with a better idea of our own. We have it.. AND we should live up to it. He defined it as "the Christian idea of the dignity of man". The Senator suggested that our discriminations are in conflict with this... and are a danger to our foreign policy.

The House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations was told today that John Foster Dulles was the first to suggest Alger Hiss for president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. The testimony came from John W. Davis, the chairman of the committee which actually recommended Hiss for the job. Mr. Davis said he did not intend to place any responsibility for the Hiss selection on Mr. Dulles.

Later, Mr. Davis, prominent attorney, continued his argument on the segregation case before the Supreme Court. He said only Congress and the states have the power to authorize or abolish racial segregation in the public schools. He said in South Carolina..the state he is representing.. mixing whites and Negroes in the schools would result in "a situation that one cannot contemplate with equanimity." But Thurgood Marshal, a leading Negro attorney, says he believes the people of the south will support any decision the court makes. He insists that the Court must uphold the 14th amendment to the constiution which says the states shall not deny the equal protection of the laws to any of its citizens.

The National Association of Manufacturers today refused to recommend any new industry members for the Wage Stabilization Board. And the N.A.M. called for the "prompt elimination" of all wage and price controls.

The government today authorized the automobile industry to step up its production during April, May and June of next year to turn out one and a half million cars...that's a quarter of a million more than the ceiling for the first three months of the new year. The government also eased restrictions on the building of homes, schools hospitals and recreational centers..effective the first of the year.

The Defense Department says that beginning next July it is cutting back its production of medium tanks...45 per cent below the original goal set for the spring of 1954. There will also be a 22 per cent cut in the production of light tanks... an easing of production of two and a half ton trucks. This will mean the closing of some plants. The general idea is to stretch out production time..without changing the original equipment goals. The Department feels we now have the production lines established, and in the absence of any new emergency, these lines should work at a slower speed.

Labor Secretary Tobin today proposed a new one dollar an hour minimum wage, for all work done under government contract by the cotton, silk and synthetic textile industry. Most of the 75-thousand workers who would be directly affected by this are employed in southern mills. Southern manufacturers are expected to protest this increase, from the present 87 cents an hour wage.

Edward R. Murrow: December 10, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

If we were to judge by published reports, a lot of people are working on a solution for the Korean war. Last Friday General MacArthur, stripped of his command, for what could properly be termed insubordination - thwarted in his political ambitions - sulking in his Waldorf tent - announced that he had the solution, a clear and definite one - one that wouldn't involve unduly increased casualties, or furthering the risk of a world war. An unnamed spokesman at the Pentagon said, in effect, that MacArthur was still on the payroll, and if he had any solutions, he ought to present them to the proper authorities forthwith, instead of making speeches about them. When news of the speech reached General Eisenhower aboard the Helena, the President-elect sent a signal to MacArthur, saying that he was working on a future program, and he and his associates would be glad to sit down and talk with General MacArthur.

MacArthur's reply was slugged "For Ike". He said it was the first time since his return that any official, had shown any interest, in his counsel. MacArthur's message ended: "My best to you, Ike, as always."

Today President Truman said, that General MacArthur should at once present to him, any reasonable plan for ending the Korean fighting in an honorable way, in a way that will not lead directly into a great war; that plan should be presented at once to the President. "If we can cut this fighting in Korea short by one day we should do so."

It is permitted to wonder whether General MacArthur's solution - one that would involve low casualties, and little danger of a world war - came to him as a sort of inspiration; or whether he has sources of information better than those available to Truman, Eisenhower and the Joint Chiefs.

It may be that subsequent meetings between Eisenhower and MacArthur may do something to restore friendly relations between the two men; but their dislike for one another is deep and ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ well-rooted.

It seems to me that Eisenhower's action in saying he would be willing to listen to what MacArthur has to say was altogether typical. He has said repeatedly that he will listen to anyone; that he doesn't have all the answers; (and he's a good listener.)

General MacArthur was obviously pleased, to be noticed, after many months of being ignored.

Even the next Speaker of the House, Joe Martin, has a solution for the Korean war. We must arm the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa, and start threatening the Reds on the Chinese mainland. We ought to arm more South Koreans; and the Japanese ought to have weapons to defend their homeland.

Presumably General Eisenhower will in due course listen to Representative Martin's solution too. It is Eisenhower's method to listen to a lot of people before he makes up his mind.

A late dispatch from the Helena indicates that the meeting between Eisenhower and MacArthur will occur here in New York after the President-elect's return. A late report from General MacArthur's headquarters says "a source very close to the General" was "amazed" at President Truman's statement saying that if the General had a plan he ought to submit it. This source said MacArthur's views had been available for a long time, and if the President had any interest in the General's counsel it was available to him at all times. This would seem to indicate to this reporter that either General MacArthur or this "source" still do not fully comprehend the identity of the Commander-in-Chief of our Armed Forces.

All this talk about a solution or a victory in Korea, particularly one with small casualties and no danger of a world war, seems to me to ignore one fairly important consideration, which is that the Russians are directing this whole global conflict, including Korea. Anyone who doubts it need only look at the records of the U.N. for the last three weeks. It may be that at the appropriate time, when we and our allies have the power, that this world conflict of which Korea is only one element, can be settled in Moscow. But it cannot be resolved, either with guns or with talk, in Korea. If the world conflict is to be settled by guns, then it will take a lot more of them, and bombs and troops than we now have. If it is to be settled, or eased by talk and negotiation, then that must be done with the Russians, and not with the Chinese or Koreans.

No amount of words ~~are going to~~ will bring the war to an end. And there is always a tendency in times such as these, to let our hopes run high. Maxim Gorky once observed:"It is much harder to turn word into deed, than deed into word." With this in mind, Carl Sandburg cautioned:"Look out how you use proud words. When you let proud words go, it is not easy to call them back."

Good Nite and Good Luck.!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today called on General MacArthur to inform the White House "at once" of his plan for peace in Korea. Mr. Truman issued this statement (which I'd like to review in a few minutes) from the train bringing him back to Washington.

In Korea today, carrier based fighter-bombers made their biggest strike of the war hitting four enemy railroad centers close to the Manchurian border. There was little ground fighting. And the Pentagon reports that we suffered another 275 casualties last week. The total now is 127,658 which includes 22,409 men killed and 94-hundred missing.

At the United Nations today, this country cast the decisive vote, in rejecting a resolution inviting the Bey of Tunis to send a representative to the Political committee (which is debating Tunisia's dispute with France.)

And the Senate committee that has been investigating Americans on the U.N. payroll, was told today that the State Department had labelled 40 Americans as bad security risks. Assistant Secretary of State Hickerson says 28 of these Americans have been dropped by the U.N., 12 are still on the job.

The State Department today demanded that Russia and Hungary return one of air force planes that was forced down in Hungary a year ago. We either want the plane back or 100-thousand dollars for it. We also want the plane's cargo and documents taken from the four airmen who were in the plane at the time. Those were the men we had to ransom for 123-thousand dollars.

Secretary of State Acheson said today that the recent Communist trials in Czechoslovakia were designed by the Russians to terrorize the satellite countries and compel their bosses to work harder. He said we can expect more such trials wherever the Russians feel it necessary to teach the "lessons of utter, unquestioning dependence upon the Kremlin and unswerving and successful compliance with its purposes."

John Foster Dulles, who replaces Mr. Acheson in the new Eisenhower cabinet, said today on the cruiser Helena that after he takes office he plans to make a world tour of Europe, the middle East and Far East. Mr. Dulles told reporters on the warship today that the conferences General Eisenhower has been holding with cabinet members and other top aides "will pay dividends to the American people for years to come." He added: "There won't be any immediate grand-scale pay-off. But it will be a gradual thing, reaching into every part of the government's operations at home and abroad." He said the framework of the new administration's policy has been formed and "we know the direction we are going and the goals we are aiming for."

Senator Lodge, who is to become our ambassador to the United Nations, said in Denver today that we must base our foreign policy on moral ideas, and not on dollars or bullets. He said we must defeat the Soviet idea with a better idea of our own. We have it and we should live up to it. He defined it as "the Christian idea of the dignity of man". The Senator suggested that our discriminations are in conflict with this, and are a danger to our foreign policy.

The House committee investigating tax-exempt foundations was told today that John Foster Dulles was the first to suggest Alger Hiss for president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. The testimony came from John W. Davis, the chairman of the committee which actually recommended Hiss for the job. Mr. Davis said he did not intend to place any responsibility for the Hill selection on Mr. Dulles.

Later, Mr. Davis, prominent attorney, continued his argument on the segregation case before the Supreme Court. He said only Congress and the states have the power to authorize or abolish racial segregation in the public schools. He said in South Carolina, the state he is representing, mixing whites and Negroes in the schools would result in "a situation that one cannot contemplate with equanimity." But Thurgood Marshal, a leading Negro attorney, says he believes the people of the south will support any decision the court makes. He insists that the Court must uphold the 14th amendment to the constitution which says the states shall not deny the equal protection of the laws to any of its citizens.

The National Association of Manufacturers today refused to recommend any new industry members for the Wage Stabilization Board. And the N.A.M. called for the "prompt elimination" of all wage and price controls.

The government today authorized the automobile industry to step up its production during April, May and June of next year to turn out one and a half million cars, that's a quarter of a million more than the ceiling for the first three months of the new year. The government also eased restrictions on the building of homes, schools, hospitals and recreational centers, effective the first of the year.

The Defense Department says that beginning next July it is cutting back its production of medium tanks, 45 per cent below the original goal set for the spring of 1954. There will also be a 22 per cent cut in the production of light tanks, an easing of production of two and a half ton trucks. This will mean the closing of some plants. The general idea is to stretch out production time, without changing the original equipment goals. The Department feels we now have the production lines established, and in the absence of any new emergency these lines should work at a slower speed.

Labor Secretary Tobin today proposed a new one dollar an hour minimum wage for all work done under government contract by the cotton, silk and synthetic textile industry. Most of the 75-thousand workers who would be directly affected by this are employed in southern mills. Southern manufacturers are expected to protest this increase from the present 87 cents an hour wage.

If we were to judge by published reports, a lot of people are working on a solution for the Korean war. Last Friday General MacArthur, stripped of his command for what could properly be termed insubordination-thwarted in his political ambitions - sulking in his Waldorf tent - announced that he had the solution, a clear and definite one - one that wouldn't involve unduly increased casualties or furthering the risk of a world war. An unnamed spokesman at the Pentagon said, in effect, that MacArthur was still on the payroll, and if he had any solutions he ought to present them to the proper authorities forthwith, instead of making speeches about them. When news of the speech reached General Eisenhower aboard the Helena, the President-elect sent a signal to MacArthur, saying that he was working on a future program, and he and his associates would be glad to sit down and talk with General MacArthur.

MacArthur's reply was slugged "For Ike". He said it was the first time since his return that any official had shown any interest in his counsel. MacArthur's message ended: "My best to you, Ike, as always."

Today President Truman said that General MacArthur should at once present to him any reasonable plan for ending the Korean fighting in an honorable way, in a way that will not lead directly into a great war; that plan should be presented at once to the President. "If we can cut this fighting in Korea short by one day we should do so."

It is permitted to wonder whether General MacArthur's solution - one that would involve low casualties and little danger of a world war - came to him as a sort of inspiration; or whether he has sources of information better than those available to Truman, Eisenhower and the Joint Chiefs.

It may be that subsequent meetings between Eisenhower and MacArthur may do something to restore friendly relations between the two men; but their dislike for one another is deep and well-rooted.

It seems to me that Eisenhower's action in saying he would be willing to listen to what MacArthur has to say was altogether typical. He has said repeatedly that he will listen to anyone; that he doesn't have all the answers ; and he's a good listener.

General MacArthur was obviously pleased to be noticed after many months of being ignored.

Even the next Speaker of the House, Joe Martin, has a solution for the Korean war. We must arm the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa, and start threatening the Reds on the Chinese mainland. We ought to arm more South Koreans; and the Japanese ought to have weapons to defend their homeland.

Presumably General Eisenhower will in due course listen to Representative Martin's solution too. It is Eisenhower's method to listen to a lot of people before he makes up his mind.

A late dispatch from the Helena indicates that the meeting between Eisenhower and MacArthur will occur here in New York after the President-elect's return. A late report from General MacArthur's headquarters says "a source very close to the General was amazed" at President Truman's statement saying that if the General had a plan he ought to submit it. This source said MacArthur's views had been available for a long time, and if the President had any interest in the General's counsel it was available to him at all times. This would seem to indicate to this reporter that either General MacArthur or this "source," still do not fully comprehend the identity of the Commander-in-Chief of our Armed Forces.

All this talk about a solution or a victory in Korea, particularly one with small casualties and no danger of a world war, seems to me to ignore one fairly important consideration, which is that the Russians are directing this whole global conflict, including Korea. Anyone who doubts it need only look at the records of the U.N. for the last three weeks. It may be that at the appropriate time, when we and our allies have the power, that this world conflict of which Korea is only one element, can be settled in Moscow. But it cannot be resolved, either with guns or with talk, in Korea. If the world conflict is to be settled by guns, then it will take a lot more of them, and bombs and troops than we now have. If it is to be settled, or eased by talk and negotiation, then that must be done with the Russians, and not with the Chinese or Koreans.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No amount of words will bring the war to an end. And there is always a tendency in times such as these to let our hopes run high. Maxim Gorky once observed: "It is much harder to turn word into deed than deed into word." With this in mind, Carl Sandburg cautioned: "Look out how you use proud words. When you let proud words go, it is not easy to call them back."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, Dec. 11, 1952.

This is the news:

The President believes General Eisenhower was guilty of "pure demagoguery" in making his promise to go to Korea. And he believes that General MacArthur does not have a workable plan for ending the Korean war. (The President took on the two generals at a news conference.)

He said that during the campaign it had been suggested to him, that he announced that he was going to Korea...that he promise we would find a way to end the war. The President said he refused, because this would have been demaoguery. Then he TOLD reporters that General Eisenhower's recent statement--that he had no panacea, no trick solution for ending the war.. was a quotation from a campaign speech that the President himself had made. Mr. Truman said he didn't think Eisenhower intentionally quoted him. His secretary suggested that perhaps some good may come out of the General's trip. Mr. Truman repeated this to the reporters and said THAT so, he would be the happiest man in the world.

Then he flatly turned down a Republican Senator's suggestion that he meet with Generals Eisenhower and MacArthur to discuss Korea. Mr. Truman made it clear he will do no such thing. He said he doesn't believe General MacArthur has a plan for ending the war..if he has, it should be reported to the Pentagon at once. [redacted] He thinks the Joint Chiefs of Staff know what MacArthur has on his mind.. if the MacArthur plan were to be followed it would only enlarge the war. He has no intention of inviting MacArthur to the White House. But if the General wants to see the President, the President will see him, receive his plan. Mr. Truman went on to say that in 1950 he flew 14-thousand miles to meet General MacArthur at Wake Island and all he got from the General was misinformation. [redacted] from Korea to go to Germany. [redacted] dismissed MacArthur in April of 1951, MacArthur did not [redacted] men would have done this. Eisenhower did when he ended his [redacted] have [redacted] and [redacted] to make a headline by not [redacted] House.

~~The Presidential remarks on the two generals drew a number of reactions from available congressmen. Democratic Senator Hunt of Wyoming says if MacArthur knows how to end the war "it is nothing short of criminal that he has not made the plan known." Republicans, in general, said the President was wrong. Senator Welker, Idaho Republican, said his words were the words of a "pretty sick, pretty frustrated man. they seem slanderous." Other Republicans spoke of "sour grapes", or a "[illegible]."~~

There is no comment from either of the Generals. Eisenhower, who plans to confer with MacArthur in New York next week, arrived in Honolulu today...left the cruiser Helena.. and said he would do some work, and play some golf, before he takes off for New York by plane Saturday afternoon. An estimated 100-thousand persons greeted him in Hawaii.

In Korea today, some 3-thousand Chinese launched their biggest attack in a month. It was directed against two hills that guard an approach to Seoul from the north.

In Paris, General Ridgeway said again today that his Supreme Allied Command in western Europe is "far short of the rock bottom minimum military requirements to defend itself."

The Military committee of Nato agreed today on the use of atomic weapons in a revised strategic plan for the defense of Europe.

The British Commonwealth ministers..concluding a 14-day conference in London..say they will ask the United States for help in plans to expand world trade...to restore "trade, not aid" to the world economy.

At the United Nations, the Political committee recommended that Isreal and her Arab neighbors negotiate a Palestine peace treaty. An Arab spokesman says "no"...not until Isreal accepts past U.N. decisions on Palestine.

Secretary General Trygvie Lie has asked the United States for concrete evidence, to support charges that American Communists have infiltrated the U.N.

And Senator Wiley of Wisconsin says the system used by the State Department and the U.N. to run down subversives is "hopelessly inadequate." The Senator says that while Mr. Lie is authorized to receive confidential information from the State Department, the Department has failed to supply such information, to back up charges against some individuals.

The President said today he's confident he'll find industry representatives for the Wage Stabilization Board..and he's confident economic controls will be extended beyond April 30..when they're due to expire.

The C.I.O. today honored Supreme Court Justice Douglas as "one of the most steadfast guardians of our individual liberties." He received the annual one-thousand-dollar Sidney Hillman award.

And George Meany, the new president of the A.F. of L., said in Washington, he does not expect any "crackdown" on labor from the new Administration.

The government charges that three soap companies... Proctor and Gamble....Colgate-Palmolive Peet, and Lever Brothers...have cornered at least 75 percent of the household soap market, and about 90 per cent of the detergent soap business. The government says if competition is to be restored to the industry, the [redacted] power these companies hold over the market must be eliminated. Neil McElroy, president of Proctor and Gamble, says he is "astonished" at what he calls "the unfairness of this action. [redacted] President Jarvis J. Babb of Lever Brothers says he's confident the courts will decide there has been no violation of anti-trust laws.

Edward R. Murrow: December 11, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Mr. John Foster Dulles, (who is to be our next Secretary of State,) is making a recorded broadcast tonight. He thinks "something has gone wrong with the American environment." He wants a "rekindled faith in freedom." He thinks we can still follow the good American tradition of "openness, simplicity and morality in foreign policy." Mr. Dulles makes mention of the policy of liberation for satellite nations, which played a part in the last political campaign. He says some people were frightened by this idea, feeling that it meant war. That concept never has been frightening until today. According to Mr. Dulles, that fear illustrates the degree to which even free people have come to think in governmental and military terms. And he adds: "Of course military policy is and must be only a defensive policy. Dynamism can find proper expression only in moral and spiritual terms."

All of this sounds a little vague; but it seems to me that Mr. Dulles makes himself a very substantial point when he says: "Our people are not imbued with the righteous and dynamic faith which gives them a sense of mission and purpose. The essential need is to recreate that." In recent years, says Mr. Dulles, "it has been the Fascists, Nazis and Communists who have talked loudest about mission and destiny. And this demonstrates the appeal that some avowed purpose has." Mr. Dulles says: "Today there are some here at home, and many more abroad, who assume that the best fruit our freedom can produce, is such mechanical wonders that our people can loaf in material comfort and physical security. That is not good enough for ourselves, and it is not good enough to attract others."

Speaking of our aid to foreign countries, Mr. Dulles thinks government grants are never a substitute for private charity. Foreign peoples are inclined to be suspicious of government grants. And that, he says, "is one reason why all the forty billion dollars our government has granted as post-war aid, has not won more good will."

This is the first major speech Mr. Dulles has made since being named Secretary of State in the new Administration. He is saying, as I read it, that we have grown soft; that freedom and tough XXXX decisions can become a dull, drab and unexciting business, compared to the dedication and fanaticism, the sense of purpose and conviction, instilled by the totalitarian state. He believes that our military policy should be strictly defensive, but that we should engage in what might be called a moral and psychological offensive. Such offensives are seldom successful unless the nation employing them is prepared to back them up with military force.

Mr. Dulles, as I read his speech, is disappointed if not distressed that the forty billion dollars we have granted in aid to foreign countries have not won us more good will. It seems to me that we as a nation are obsessed with a desire to be loved. We have expended huge sums, not always wisely, in an effort to prevent great sections of the world from economic collapse, chaos and Communism. Presumably this was done, not in an effort to purchase affection but because we believed it to be in our own self-interest. We are too big, too powerful, too comfortable to expect the love and affection of those we have helped so substantially. The rich uncle may enjoy or earn the respect of the poor relations; he may command the obedience of some of them; but generally he must be old, wise and tolerant if he is to be the recipient of their affection or good will.

Mr. Dulles says "Freedom is a satisfying, contagious concept only when put to good use; and that the fiery and purposeful zeal of Communists and Fascists sometimes makes our freedom appear a life of boredom from which men seek relief at any price." This could be read either as a political platitude, or as an appeal that the free nations - particularly this one - should live more dangerously, and cast off what Mr. Dulles obviously deems to be the defensive mentality that we have acquired. In the light of earlier speeches by the next Secretary of State, I would guess that this passage was a serious reflection of his intention to try to lead a more dynamic, ~~and~~ if at the same time more dangerous, foreign policy. He appears to feel that we have been too long on the defensive, and that the time has come for us to export our ideas more vigorously, to take the offensive, except in the military sense - to try to surround the cause of freedom with some of the excitement, enthusiasm, dedication and, if you like, fanaticism, which characterizes the ideological warfare constantly being waged by the Communists.

Mr. Dulles doesn't explain how the enslaved nations are to be liberated through what he calls "a dynamism which can find proper expression only in moral and spiritual terms." But there is in this speech a new, thrusting quality in regard to our foreign affairs. (It rather looks as though those who wanted a "change" are going to get it.) But just what it will be remains to be seen. Foreign policy is not made by speeches, but through action; but it would appear from this first major speech by Mr. Dulles that he takes seriously the business of a "crusade by the forces of freedom" ~~seriously~~.

It would seem that Mr. Dulles believes that morality is not an unimportant factor in international diplomacy. He, like Vincent Lean, apparently agrees that "that which is morally wrong can never be politically right." But [redacted] as George Moore pointed out more than 50 years ago:"There is always a right and a wrong way and the wrong way always seems the more reasonable."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday Dec. 12, 1952

This is the news:

General Eisenhower is "shocked and puzzled" by the President's attack on his Korean trip. Mr. Truman said yesterday the General made it, because of a demagogic promise during the campaign. The General feels Mr. Truman's statement..and the Truman remarks on General McArthur...were uncalled for, unidgnified, and should be ignored. The correspondents who accompanied the General to Korea and back, report from Hawaii tonight, that they have these views of the Eisenhower attitude from "sources of the highest reliability"... from a "spokesman." They say: Eisenhower is determined not to get into any public wrangle with the President. He feels the world is in too tough a situation to waste time, by getting involved in small things. He heard that General MacArthur had a plan to end the Korean war. He respects MacArthur's knowledge and experience in the Far East. He asked for the MacArthur plan. MacArthur agreed to tell him about it. Eisenhower is hurt by the President's charge that his trip is political..he says the proof, that it is not political, is the fact that he had other cabinet members with him in Korea to share his impressions..get a feel for the problems. The reporters were also told that the General is determined to avoid personal bickering..to keep the "big picture" in mind. As for Korea..he sees no easy solution..doesn't think an easy solution can be found. He believes we all must realize that there must be sacrifices. He believes we can take it if we believe that these sacrifices are "intelligent sacrifices."

This summary by a spokesman for the General.."from sources of the highest reliability" came as Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee refused to call a committee meeting to hear General MacArthur's plan for Korea. Senator Russell feels such a meeting would hurt more than it would help efforts to end the war. The demand for the Senate committee meeting came from Democratic Senator Hunt of Wyoming who said General MacArthur has no justification for withholding his peace plan from the military and the people.

The President today named Joseph H. Freehill of New York as director of price stabilization. He's been the acting director since Tighe Woods resigned.

Walter Reuther, the new president of the C.I.O. called on the President, and told reporters: Mr. Truman assured him there would be quick action on 12-thousand cases pending before the Wage Stabilization Board.

Senator Bridges said today that since Senator Taft criticized the Eisenhower appointment of Martin Durkin to be labor secretary, there has been growing pressure on Bridges to continue as Senate Republican leader. He is willing to take the job; but he insists on becoming chairman of the Senate appropriations committee.

Undersecretary of the air force Roswell Gilpatric, said today that the air force accepted delivery of 666 airplanes last month. That's the biggest figure for any month since World War Two. He expects to raise that to 750 airplanes accepted a month.. and then "level off" near that figure in the middle of 1954.

The collier trophy, one of the highest awards in aviation, has been awarded to John Stack and his associates at the Langley Aernautical Laboratory at Langley Field, Virginia. They are credited with gaining this country a two-year lead over Russia in designing faster-than-sound airplanes.

[redacted]

Senator Mc Carthy vacationing in Porto Rico told reporters today: he plans to start investigating the new Republican administration within six months or a year..for possible communist infiltration. He is convinced that Communists will try to infiltrate the new administration.

In Denver, the Reverand William C. Martin of Dallas was elected president of the National Council of Churches of Christ in America.

At the United Nations today the political committee defeated a move by the Asian-Arab bloc to have a U.N. COMMISSION intervene in the French-Tunisian dispute. The United States and Britain led the opposition. Then the committee called on France and Tunisia to negotiate on an "urgent basis" with a view towards bringing self-government to Tunisia.

In Tunis today. a group of nationalists..demonstrating against the French.. beat up several Europeans and damaged severel French shops.

Secretary of State Acheson left Washington today to fly to Paris and his final international conference: a meeting of the North Atlantic treaty powers. The Secretary said it would produce no major decisions but would demonstrate the unity of the free world.

In Paris today, Premier Pinay asked the National Assembly for two votes of cinfidence to halt what he called Communist and Socialist efforts to tear his new budget to pieces.

[redacted] AND the 16-nation organization for European economic co-operation called on the United States to abolish high tariffs..promote free trade.. and encourage a billion and a half dollar private investment by Americans to Europeans. Ambassador Draper said the Marshal plan is now over..it should be suplanated by a policy based on "trade instead of aid."

Walter J. Donnelly..who recently resigned as high commissioner for Germany, returned home today and said the West Germans are enjoying a high degree of prosperity.. he feels this will prevent a [redacted] revival of Nazism.

In Tokyo, [redacted] Premier Yoshida told his parliament, that if Japan is attacked, the United States is obligated to defend her. He said Japan has received a "full assurance" from the United States.

In Korea, some 4-thousand Chinese communists have seized the peaks of two mountains on the western front. And they held them through a night of heavy artillery duels along one of the main invasion routes north of Seoul. Our planes were out in force today hitting enemy positions along the western front.

(Not much of it)

That's the news. On Monday this reporter leaves for Korea, to try to do a little first hand reporting. During that time this program will be handled by an old friend, our chief Washington correspondent, Eric Sevareid.

From time to time, as opportunity affords, I shall attempt to contribute a few words at this time, from Korea and points in between. During the next couple of weeks two old friends and partners from an earlier war, will be sharing this time. (Larry Lesueur and Bill Downs are going with me.) Some of you will recall their reporting from Normandy, Belgium, Holland and Germany. Both went ashore on the Normandy beaches on D-Day; both have served their time as reporters in Moscow. They were in London during the Blitz. Downs was in Korea in the early months of the war. I remember arriving in Tokyo en route to Korea, when the war was a few weeks old, to be met at the airport by a bearded and dusty Downs who had just flown back from Korea; his rushing toward the aircraft, waving both arms, shouting: "Go back, go back you silly fool; this is no place for us." (It was the best piece of advice I ever ignored.) Bill Downs became a broadcaster in a curious fashion. He was working for a press association in London; I asked him to make a record, to see how he would sound. He did; it was terrible. I knew him to be one of the ablest correspondents one of the best writers in London, and suggested that he try again; do a piece describing what he saw at Piccadilly Circus. He did - described two G.I.'s ~~holding up~~ leaning against a building, holding it up, observing the passing females, and he ended the piece by quoting one soldier who saw an American Red Cross girl walking down the street, as saying to his friend: "Look, Willie, ankles!" That's how Downs became a broadcaster; and later he became one of the finest war correspondents that radio produced.

There is some mystery as to how Larry Lesueur became a broadcaster. I hired him but I can't remember why, and neither can he. He was with me in London during the Blitz; was always a rather carefree individual who seemed to know where the bombs wouldn't drop; waded ashore on D-Day with General Van Fleet who was then commanding a regiment. Lesueur now covers the United Nations for us, (and associates with diplomats.) There was a time in London when I suggested that he go to Manchester to find out how damaging the previous night's raid had been. In the afternoon he telephoned me to say that something was wrong, there hadn't been any raid; I asked him where he was; he replied, "Bristol". I suggested that he should be in Manchester. He agreed, but suggested in turn that in the blackout he must have taken the wrong train.

During the worst days of the bombing in London Larry and I were accustomed to dine at a little restaurant in Soho. Generally we were the only customers; we always dined well -- this was before RATIONING -- and would then put on our tin hats and go out into the blackout to go to work. Most nights the bombers were overhead and hot iron was falling in the streets. I always picked up the sizeable check. After about two weeks of this we walked out into the blackness one night, and I heard Lesueur's voice saying in a rather musing fashion: "You know, Ed, times like these you never know but what each meal will be your last; a man doesn't care how much he pays for a meal, does he?" (This philosophical approach toward both meals and expense accounts is useful to any correspondent.)

None of the three of us approach this voluntary assignment in any lighthearted fashion. Most of what we will see we have seen before, in North Africa, and Italy and the Battle of the Bulge, and in the early days in Korea. We had hoped never to see it again. Nevertheless, in the next two weeks the three of us will do what we can, with the aid of younger and probably tougher correspondents permanently assigned to Korea, to report to you from out there. The world news, except for Korea, will be handled on this program by Eric Sevareid from Washington.

For my own part I should doubt that any reporter ever left his normal assignment in better hands, or ever went abroad in the company of more agreeable and able colleagues.

We were talking of the friendships that develop over the years. No one put it better than Robert Louis Stevenson when he wrote:" We are all travelers in the wilderness of this world. And the best that we can find in our travels is an honest friend. He is a fortunate voyager who finds many. For they are the end and the reward of life - they keep us worthy of ourselves."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower is "shocked and puzzled" by the President's attack on his Korean trip. Mr. Truman said yesterday the General made it because of a demogogic promise during the campaign. The General feels Mr. Truman's statement, and the Truman remarks on General MacArthur, were uncalled for, undignified and should be ignored. The correspondents who accompanied the General to Korea and back report from Hawaii tonight that they have these views of the Eisenhower attitude from "sources of the highest reliability" from a "spokesman." They say: Eisenhower is determined not to get into any public wrangle with the President. He feels the world is in too tough a situation to waste time by getting involved in small things. He heard that General MacArthur had a plan to end the Korean war. He respects MacArthur's knowledge and experience in the Far East. He asked for the MacArthur plan. MacArthur agreed to tell him about it. Eisenhower is hurt by the President's charge that his trip is political. He says the proof that it is not political, is the fact that he had other cabinet members with him in Korea to share his impressions, get a feel for the problems. The reporters were also told that the General is determined to avoid personal bickering, to keep the "big picture" in mind. As for Korea, he sees no easy solution; doesn't think an easy solution can be found. He believes we all must realize that there must be sacrifices. He believes we can take it if we believe that these sacrifices are "intelligent sacrifices."

This summary by a spokesman for the General "from sources of the highest reliability" came as Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee refused to call a committee meeting to hear General MacArthur's plan for Korea. Senator Russell feels such a meeting would hurt more than it would help efforts to end the war. The demand for the Senate committee meeting came from Democratic Senator Hunt of Wyoming who said General MacArthur has no justification for withholding his peace plan from the military and the people.

The President today named Joseph H. Freehill of New York as director of price stabilization. He's been the acting director since Tighe Woods resigned.

Walter Reuther, the new president of the C.I.O. called on the President, and told reporters: Mr. Truman assured him there would be quick action on 12-thousand cases pending before the Wage Stabilization Board.

Senator Bridges said today that since Senator Taft criticized the Eisenhower appointment of Martin Durkin to be labor secretary, there has been growing pressure on Bridges to continue as Senate Republican leader. He is willing to take the job; but he insists on becoming chairman of the Senate appropriations committee.

Undersecretary of the air force Roswell Gilpatric, said today that the air force accepted delivery of 666 airplanes last month. That's the biggest figure for any month since World War Two. He expects to raise that to 750 airplanes accepted a month, and then "level off" near that figure in the middle of 1954.

The collier trophy, one of the highest awards in aviation, has been awarded to John Stack and his associates at the Langley Auernautical Laboratory Laboratory at Langley Field, Virginia. They are credited with gaining this country a two year lead over Russia in designing faster-than-sound airplanes.

Seantor McCarthy vacationing in Porto Rico told reporters today: he plans to start investigating the new Republican administration within six months or a year, for possible communist infiltration. He is convinced that Communists will try to infiltrate the new administration.

In Denver, the Reverend William C. Martin of Dallas was elected president of the National Council of Churches of Christ of America.

At the United Nations today the political committee defeated a move by the Asian-Arab bloc to have a U.N. commission intervene in the French-Tunisian dispute. The United States and Britain led the opposition. Then the committee called on France and Tunisia to negotiate on an "urgent basis" with a view towards bringing self-government to Tunisia.

In Tunis today, a group of nationalists, demonstrating against the French, beat up several Europeans and damaged several French shops.

Secretary of State Acheson left Washington today to fly to Paris, and his final international conference: a meeting of the North Atlantic treaty powers. The Secretary said it would produce no major decisions but would demonstrate the unity of the free world.

In Paris today, Premier Pinay asked the National Assembly for two votes of confidence to halt what he called Communist and Socialist efforts to tear his new budget to pieces.

The 16-nation organization for European economic co-operation, called on the United States to abolish high tariffs, promote free trade, and encourage a billion and a half dollar private investment by Americans to Europeans. Ambassador Draper said the Marshal plan is now over; it should be suplanted by a policy based on "trade instead of aid."

Walter J. Donnelly, who recently resigned as high commissioner for Germany, returned home today and said the West Germans are enjoying a high degree of prosperity, he feels this will prevent a revival of Nazism.

In Tokyo, Premier Yoshida told his parliament that if Japan is attacked, the United States is obligated to defend her. He said Japan has received a "full assurance" from the United States.

In Korea, some 4-thousand Chinese Communists have seized the peaks of two mountains on the western front. And they held them through a night of heavy artillery duels along one of the main invasion routes north of Seoul. Our planes were out in force today hitting enemy positions along the western front.

That's the news, not much of it. On Monday this reporter leaves for Korea to try to do a little first-hand reporting. During that time this program will be handled by an old friend, our chief Washington correspondent, Eric Sevareid.

From time to time, as opportunity affords, I shall attempt to contribute a few words at this time from Korea and points in between. During the next couple of weeks two old friends and partners from an earlier war will be sharing this time. Larry Lesueur and Bill Downs are going with me. Some of you will recall their reporting from Normandy, Belgium, Holland and Germany. Both went ashore on the Normandy beaches on D-Day; both have served their time as reporters in Moscow. They were in London during the Blitz. Downs was in Korea in the early months of the war. I remember arriving in Tokyo en route to Korea when the war was a few weeks old, to be met at the airport by a bearded and dusty Bill Downs who had just flown back from Korea; his rushing toward the aircraft waving both arms, shouting: "Go back, go back you silly fool; this is no place for us." It was the best piece of advice I ever ignored. Bill Downs became a broadcaster in a curious fashion. He was working for a press association in London; I asked him to make a record to see how he would sound. He did; it was terrible. I knew him to be one of the ablest correspondents and one of the best writers in London, and suggested that he try again; do a piece describing what he saw at Piccadilly Circus. He did - described two G.I.'s leaning against a building - holding it up - observing the passing females, and he ended the piece by quoting one soldier who saw an American Red Cross girl walking down the street, as saying to his friend: "Look, Willie, ankles!" That's how Downs became a broadcaster; and later he became one of the finest war correspondents that radio produced.

There is some mystery as to how Larry Lesueur became a broadcaster. I hired him but I can't remember why, and neither can he. He was with me in London during the Blitz; was always a rather carefree individual who seemed to know where the bombs wouldn't drop; waded ashore on D-Day with General Van Fleet who was then commanding a regiment. Lesueur now covers the United Nations for us, and associates with diplomats. There was a time in London when I suggested that he go to Manchester to find out how damaging the previous night's raid had been. In the afternoon he telephoned me to say that something was wrong, there hadn't been any raid; I asked him where he was; he replied, "Bristol". I suggested that he should be in Manchester. He agreed, but suggested in turn that in the blackout he must have taken the wrong train.

During the worst days of the bombing in London Larry and I were accustomed to dine at a little restaurant in Soho. Generally we were the only customers; we always dined well - this was before rationing - and would then put on our tin hats and go out into the blackout to go to work. Most nights the bombers were overhead and hot iron was falling in the streets. I always picked up the sizeable check. After about two weeks of this we walked out into the blackness one night, and I heard Lesueru's voice saying in a rather musing fashion: "You know, Ed, times like these you never know but what each meal will be your last; a man doesn't care how much he pays for a meal, does he?" This philosophical approach toward both meals and expense accounts is useful to any correspondent.

None of the three of us approach this voluntary assignment in any lighthearted fashion. Most of what we will see we have seen before in North Africa, and Italy and the Battle of the Bulge, and in the early days in Korea. We had hoped never to see it again. Nevertheless, in the next two weeks the three of us will do what we can, with the aid of younger, and probably tougher correspondents permanently assigned to Korea, to report to you from out there. The world news, except for Korea, will be handled on this program by Eric Sevareid from Washington.

For my own part I should doubt that any reporter ever left his normal assignment in better hands, or ever went abroad in the company of more agreeable and able colleagues.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of the friendships that develop over the years. No one put it better than Robert Louis Stevenson when he wrote: "We are all travelers in the wilderness of this world. And the best that we can find in our travels is an honest friend. He is a fortunate voyager who finds many. For they are the end and the reward of life - they keep us worthy of ourselves."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Mon. Dec. 15, 1952

~~urgent~~

~~Emb[illegible]reid~~

~~WTOP~~

[redacted]

Good evening:

Today

The Supreme Court today declared Oklahoma's loyalty oath unconstitutional. It was an eight to nothing decision. ~~Justice Jackson did not participate.~~ The Oklahoma law requires all state officers and employes to swear that they are not affiliated with ~~any~~ the Communist party or any subversive organization that advocates the overthrow of the government by violence. The court ruled that inasmuch as there is no provision in the law reuiring proof that the state employes knew the background of such organizations... the law is not valied. The court says that as written the Oklahomalaw penalizes persons who may have joined subversive organizations innocently. Justice Clark, in the opinion for the court, pointed out that many persons have quit organizations to which they belonged as soon as they found out the character of the group. And Justice Black, in one of the concurring opinions said in part: test oaths are notorious tools of tyranny. When used to shackle the mind they are, or at least they should be, unspeakably odious to a free people."

The President TR addressed himself to somewhat the same subject when he formally dedicated a new shrine today for the Constiution, the Declaration if Ondependence and the Bill of Rights. Hereafter they will all be housed in the National Archives Building. Mr. Truman said that freedom today is menaced both by Commun sts and those who hate Communism "yet want government to regulate matters of mind and spirit." He said it would be a "moral disaster worse than a physical catastrophe" for us to embrace the methods and morals of Communism in order to defeat Communist aggression. The President said that anyone who is not alarmed by the challenge of Communism simply does not understand it..or he is crazy. But alarm is one thing and hysteria is another. Mr. Truman said:"Hysteria impels people to destroy the very thing they are struggling to preserve."

There was yet another expression for freedom here in Washington today when a special House committee investigating morals in radio and television programs decided that "self-regulation is making substantial progress and so long as the public interest is served, is preferable to government imposed regulations." The committee found some programs that are bad.. particularly those that overemphasize crime...and it also found some advertising on radio and television to be in poor tase. But it commended the industry's voluntary code of ethics and efforts to make it work.

Representative Martin, who is expected to be the speaker in the new House of Representatives, says he thinks the new congress should place more emphasis on legislation rather than investigation. He does believe that Congress should investigate things that need investigating but concentrate on a constructive legislative program.

In the 48 states today the members of the electroal college went about their appointed tasks...to cast 442 votes for Dwight D. Eisenhower for president.. and 89 for Adlai E. Stevenson. But the vote does not become official until Congress counts the ballots next January sixth.

In New York today, General Eisenhower put aside the problems of Korea for the moment to talk about European problems with John Foster Dulles, who is to become secretary of state, and John J. Mc Cloy, the former high commissioner for Germany. ~~Mr. Mc Cloy told reporters that all three men have been engaged in the problems of European unity for years... that's what they talked about today.~~

~~[illegible]~~

And this government took another step in the direction of unity with our west European allies when it ordered 90-million dollars worth of British tanks, spare parts and ammunition. These tanks will eventually go to the Dutch and to Denmark as part of the North Atlantic defense plan.

The NATO ministers met in Paris today and heard General Ridgeway ask for quick approval of a 428-million dollar defense construction program. Aides described the speech, made in private, as a "strong one." But Lord Ismay, the secretary general of NATO, says its quite possible that the Ridgeway program will not be approved at this session.

~~In a side meeting, Secretary of State Acheson is said to have told British Foreign Minister Eden that unless the British find a way to solve their oil dispute with Iran, the United States might be forced to take some action on its own.~~

Off Leghorn, Italy, tonight, American and Italian navy men are trying to rescue 37 Americans stranded on a navaly supply ship. Three of the men have been rescued from the vessel which split in two on the rocks....with its load of ~~[illegible]~~ Christmas turkeys for G.I's in Europe.

The G.I. in Korea had a comparatively quiet day today with the enemy concentrating small assaults on South Korean outposts on the central front. But off Koje island.. on the small island of Pongam...two Americans and two South Koreans were wounded in putting down a civilian prisoner of war riot. Before the demonstration was over allied troops had killed 82 prisoners and wounded 120 others. It was the bloodiest prisoner riot of the war.

Ed Murrow left for Korea this afternoon. But before taking off, he had this to say:

pickup tapes

[redacted]

[redacted]

Mon, Dec. 15

Munson

When you use this recording Eric...if you do...Bill Downs and Larry Leseuer ought to be putting down at Anchorage Alaska,and I should be somewhere west of Minneopolis...Before the boys took off I asked them to record how they felt about going back to report a war. Leseur Downs ...Our feelings on this subject are probably less important than those of any other three people leaving for Korea. we werent drafted. we will travel in comfort...wont be out there very long. We shall try to say what we see. (which isnt always easy)... All of us have seen too much of war...and go back to this one with light luggage and heavy hearts ...I suppose that part of the long flight from Anchorage to Tokio will be spent reminiscing...a habit of middle aged war correspondents...we'll be remembering Ernie Pile,Bob Post,Ben Robertson,Red Knickerbocker and all the others who didnt quite manage to finish the late war...bomber pilots we flew with, who have flown their last mission,..how hot it was in North Africa, how cold during the Bulge..those wicked German eighty eights on the hills above Anzio...the dead men floating in the Naktong River, when we were driven behind it in Korea two years ago... The trouble with middle aged war correspondents is, that they know too much about what they are going into.. But there is a terrible fascination about danger...even that part of it which tells your stomach and your knees that they are not so steady as they once were...And there is something about trying to report a war that humbles a man...and at the same time makes him proud ~~xxx~~ proud to try to translate into words things that no man has ever put into words and no man ever will...It is an impossible assignment...but there is a ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ selfish apeal to it...No civilian ever spent time with troops in combat without having just a little bit of their friendliness,respect for each other their stradiness,yes and even their fear,rub off on him.//.A reporter can even share in a limited way their frustration and loneliness.// I have seen good reporters beat a typwriter in anguish and frustration because they couldnt put into words what they had seen... words were their weapons and their weapons werent adequate.//.that will happen to all three of us.. as it has before.....

good night and good luck

Bill Downs CBS - NY Murrow show (recording hold for release)

~~(REPORTER WILL HAVE TO DO AN ORIENTATION INTRO ON THIS)~~

There is a saying in the Far East that a sane person does not winter in Korea....or spend the summer in Singapore.....but, the saying goes, if you have lived out a full year in Kansas City, you can travel to either of these places at any time with impunity.

My colleague, Edward R..Murrow -- who organized this Christmas trip to Korea -- knows that I was born in Kansas City and spent some 23 full years there.....but Murrow has no excuse, He's never been in Wyandotte or Jackson counties for more than 24 hours at a stretch.

Both Larry Lesueur, who also is going on this junket, like myself....have wintered in Moscow. Murrow knows nothing of Siberian winters. Thus it's a risky undertaking...//.especially for Murrow, who still has to answer to my wife for ruining the family holiday.

Note The very nature of being in the business of news necessitates working on all the best days, the most impossible hours and sometimes under the most unpleasant circumstances imaginable. Consequently, in this particular craft, there is a great tendency to feel sorry for ones self.....~~when the assignment is to extract~~ particularly around Xmas time when an assignment comes up.

It is a selfish reaction that tends to make you forget that there are about a quarter of a million guys in Korea who have a lot more reason to be feeling sorry for themselves that you do.....and you suddenly remember that in a war, there is not time for self-pity.... but for self-preservation.

~~SUB~~

All of us making this trip are re-treads....thicker in the belly.....and some say also in the head.....than we were when wars were fought and reported by our generation.

But we suspect that the shells sound the same....and the gripes.....and there must be that same feeling in the pit of the stomach at the front.

These things your men live through every day.....we hope we can bring something of them to you during this 1952 holiday season in the hope that in 1953 or shortly thereafter there truly will be peace on earth.

[redacted] 1952

Le Sueur

The other day I was attending a luncheon here in New York, for the distiguished leader of a powerful nation's delegation to the UN... I can't tell you his name or that of his country, because under the rules of our correspondent's association everything he had to say was what they call: "off the record."

But this celebrated man did say something, which I think expressed the inner feelings of most of the reporters around the table... He was asked, as a starter, one of theose questions which are really more a statement of fact, than a question... The reporter said: Sir, you are certainly no stranger to the United Natims...Last year, in Paris, you discussed the question of disarmament...a subject which seems condemned to futility...This year, you led your delegation in the discussion of the Korean Peace plan, an issue which also seems condemned to futility... Can you tell us therefore, how you feel about the vital activities of the United Nations?"

And the distinguished diplomat hesitated a few moments, then replied; "What you are asking me, is to confess what I have often felt about my entire life..."

Well, there comes a time in every reporters life, when he longs to get away from the plush, air-conditioned palaces of wordy debate, and hair-splitting compromises, and to see for himself whether all these recommendations, with their "where-ases, wherefors, and consequentialalies" actually have any effect on the remote places of the world, or whether they too are condemned to futility, like so much of men's labor..

I am looking forward to getting the smoke of the conventions, the elections and the United Nations Assembly out of my lungs, even if this means sitting in a crowded dug-out with my old friend Ed Murrow, whom I have never seen without a cigaret in his hand.. and with Bill Downs, who never has a cigaret of his own..

Seriously, the like every other American, I am looking forward to associating with American troops in action again, an experience which always deepens one's love of one's country and one's neighbor, and also, to be able to witness, the first collective action in history against aggression, and to see the final results of those paper resolutions, I've so long reported from the UN.

But I must confess that nothing pleases me more, than the prospect of sharing these experiences with my pals from another war, Bill Downs and Ed Murrow..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, December 15, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SEVAREID: ... Ed Murrowleft for Korea this afternoon. But before taking off, he had this to say:

MURROW: When you use this recording, Eric, if you do, Bill Downs and Larry Lesueur ought to be putting down at Anchorage, Alaska, and I should be somehwere west of Minneapolis.

Before the boys took off, I asked them to record howthey felt about going back to report a war. First, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: The other day I was attending a luncheon here in New York forthe distinguished leader of a powerful nation's delegation to the UN. I can't tell you his name orthat of his country, because on the rules of ourcorrespondents' association everything he had to say was what they call 'off the record.'

But this delebrated man did say something, which, I think, expressed the inner feelings of most of the reporters around the table. He was asked for a starter, one ofthose questions which are really a statement of fact than a question.

The reporter said, "Sir, you are certainly no strangerto the UnitedNations. Last year in Paris you discussed the question of disarmament, a subject which seems condemned to utter futility. This year, you led your delegation in a discussion of the Korean peace plan, an issue which also seems condemned to futility. Can you tell us, therefore, how you feel about the vital activities of the United Nations?" And the distinguished diplomat hesitated a few moments then replied, "What you're asking me is to confess what I have often felt about my entire life." Well, there comes a time in every reporters life when he longs to get away from the plush, air conditioned palaces of wordy debate and hair splitting compromises and to see for himself whether all these recommendations with there 'whereases, wherefores and consequentiallies' actually have any effect on the remote places of the world. Or whether they, too, are condemned to futility like so much of man's labor.

I am looking forward to getting the smoke ofthe conventions, the elections, and the United Nations Assembly out of my lungs, even if this means sitting in a crowded dugout with my old friend, Ed Murrow, whom I've never seen without a cigarette in his hand, and with Bill Downs, who never has a cigarette of his own. Seriously though - like every other American, I am looking forward to associating with American troops in action again; an experience which always deepens one's love of one's country and one's neighbor; and also to be able to witness the first collective action in history against aggression and to see the final results of some of those paper resolutions I've so long reported from the UN.

But I must confess that nothing pleases me more than the prospect of sharing these experiences with my pals from another war, Bill Downs and Ed Murrow.

MURROW: And this is how Bill Downs felt about going back to Korea.

DOWNS: There's a saying in the Far East that a sane person does not winter in Korea, or spend the summer in Singapore. But, thesaying goes, if you've lived out a full year in Kansas City, you can travel to either of these places, at any time, with impunity.

Well, my colleague, Edward R. Murrow, who organized this Christmas trip to Korea, knows that I was born in Kansas City and some 23 full years there, but Murrow has no excuse; he's never been in Wyandotte or Jackson Counties for morethan 24-hrs. at a stretch.

Larry Lesueur, who also is going on this junket like myself, have wintered in Moscow. Murrow knows nothing of Siberian winters. Thus, it's a risky undertaking, especially for Murrow, who still has to answer to my wife for ~~ruining~~ ruining the family holiday.

Well, the very nature of being in the business of news necessitates working on all these 'best' days, the most impossible hours, and sometimes, under the most unpleasant circumstances imaginable.

Consequently, in this particular craft, there's a great tendency to feel sorry for one's self. Particularly around Christmas-time when an assignment comes up. It's a selfish reaction that tends to make you forget that there are about aquarter of a million guys, in Korea, who have a lot more reason to be feeling sorry for themselves than you do, and you suddenly remember that in ~~xxxx~~ a war there is not time for self pity but only for self preservation.

All of us makingthis trip are retreads; thicker in the belly and some say also thicker in the head than we were when wars were fought and reported by our generation.

But we suspect that the shellssounds the same and the gripes, and there must be the same feeling in the pit of the stomach at the front.

Well, these things your men live through every day. We hope we can bring something of them to you during this 1952 holiday season in the hope that in 1953, or shortly thereafter, there truly will be peace on earth.

MURROW: Our feelings on this subject are probably less important than those of any other 3 people leaving for Korea. We weren't drafted. We'll travel in comfort. Won't be out there very long. We shall try to say what we see, which isn't always easy.

All of us have seen too much of war; and go back to this one with light luggage and heavy hearts. I suppose that part ofthe long flight - from Anchorage to Tokyo - will be spent reminiscing, a habit of middle-aged war correspondents.

We'll be remembering Ernie Pyle, Bob Post, Ben Robertson, Red Knickerbocker and all the others who didn't quite manage to finish the late war; bomber pilots we flew with, who have flown their last mission; how hot it was in North Africa; how cold during the Bulge. Those wicked German 88s, on the hills above Anzio. The dead men floating in the Naktong River, when we were driven behind it in Korea, 2-yrs. ago.

The trouble with middle-aged correspondents is that they know too much about what they're going into. But there is a terrible fascination about danger; even that part of it which tells your stomach and your knees that they're not so steady as they once were. And there's something about trying to report a war that humbles a man, and at the same time makes him proud; proud to try to translate into words the thingsthat no man has ever put into words and no man ever will. It's an impossible assignment.

But there is a selfish appeal to it. No civilian ever spent time with troops in combat without having just a little bit oftheir friendliness, respect for each other, their steadiness; yes, and even their fears rub off on him.

A reporter can even share - in a limited way - their frustration and loneliness. I have seen good reporters beat a typewriter in anguish and frustration becausethey couldn't put into words what they had seen. Words were their weapons, andtheir weapons weren't adequate. That will happen to all 3 of us in Korea, as it has before. Good Night and Good Luck!

SEVAREID: That was Ed. Murrow. Tomorrow ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Ed Murrow left for Korea this afternoon. But before taking off, he had this to say:

MURROW: When you use this recording, Eric, if you do, Bill Downs and Larry Lesueur ought to be putting down at Anchorage, Alaska, and I should be somewhere west of Minneapolis.

Before the boys took off, I asked them to record how they felt about going back to report a war. First, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: The other day I was attending a luncheon here in New York for the distringuished leader of a powerful nation's delegation to the UN. I can't tell you his name or that of his country, because on the rules of our correspondents' association everything he had to say was what they call 'off the record.'

But this delebrated man did say something, which, I think, expressed the inner feelings of most of the reporters around the table. He was asked for a starter, one of those questions which are really a statement of fact than a question.

The reporter said, "Sir, you are certainly no stranger to the United Nations. Last year in Paris you discussed the question of disarmament, a subject which seems condemned to utter futility. This year, you led your delegation in a discussion of the Korean peace plan, an issue which also seems condemned to futility. Can you, therefore, tell us how you feel about the vital activities of the United Nations?" And the distinguished diplomat hesitated a few moments, then replied, "What you're asking me is to confess what I have often felt about my entire life." Well, there comes a time in every reporters life when he longs to get away from the plush, air conditioned palaces of wordy debate and hair splitting compromises and to see for himself whether all these recommendations with their 'whereases, wherefores and consequentiallies' actually have any effect on the remote places of the world. Or whether they, too, are condemned to futility like so much of man's labor.

I am looking forward to getting the smoke of the conventions, the elections, and the United Nations Assembly out of my lungs, even if this means sitting in a crowded dugout with my old friend, Ed Murrow, whom I've never seen without a cigarette in his hand, and with Bill Downs, who never has a cigarette of his own. Seriously though - like every other American, I am looking forward to associating with American troops in action again; an experience which always deepens one's love of one's country and one's neighbor; and also to be able to witness the first collective action in history against aggression and to see the final results of some of those paper resolutions I've so long reported from the UN.

But I must confess that nothing pleases me more than the prospect of sharing these experiences with my pals from another war, Bill Downs and Ed Murrow.

MURROW: And this is how Bill Downs felt about going back to Korea.

DOWN: There's a saying in the Far East that a sane person does not winter in Korea, or spend the summer in Singapore. But, the saying goes, if you've lived out a full year in Kansas City, you can travel to either of these places, at any time, with impunity.

Well, my colleague, Edward R. Murrow, who organized this Christmas trip to Korea, knows that I was born in Kansas City and some 23 full years there, but Murrow has no excuse; he's never been in Wyandotte or Jackson Counties for more than 24-hours at a stretch.

Larry Lesueur, who also is going on this junket like myself, have wintered in Moscow. Murrow knows nothing of Siberian winters. Thus, it's a risky undertaking, especially for Murrow, who still has to answer to my wife for ruining the family holiday.

Well, the very nature of being in the business of news necessitates working on all these 'best' days, the most impossible hours, and sometimes, under the most unpleasant circumstances imaginable.

Consequently, in this particular craft, there's a great tendency to feel sorry for one's self. Particularly around Christmas-time when an assignment comes up. It's a selfish reaction that tends to make you forget that there are about a quarter of a million guys, in Korea, who have a lot more reason to be feeling sorry for themselves than you do, and you suddenly remember that in a war there is not time for self pity but only for self preservation.

All of us making this trip are retreads; thicker in the belly and some say also thicker in the head than we were when wars were fought and reported by our generation.

But we suspect that the shells sound the same and the gripes, and there must be the same feeling in the pit of the stomach at the front.

Well, these things your men live through every day. We hope we can bring something of them to you during this 1952 holiday season in the hope that in 1953, or shortly thereafter, there truly will be peace on earth.

MURROW: Our feelings on this subject are probably less important than those of any other 3 people leaving for Korea. We weren't drafted. We'll travel in comfort. Won't be out there very long. We shall try to say what we see, which isn't always easy.

All of us have seen too much of war; and go back to this one with light luggage and heavy hearts. I suppose that part of the long flight from Anchorage to Tokyo - will be spent reminiscing, a habit of middle-aged war correspondents.

We'll be remembering Ernie Pyle, Bob Post, Ben Robertson, Red Knickerbocker and all the others who didn't quite manage to finish the late war; bomber pilots we flew with, who have flown their last mission; how hot it was in North Africa; how cold during the Bulge. Those wicked German 88s, on the hills above Anzio. The dead men floating in the Naktong River, when we were driven behind it in Korea, 2 years ago.

The trouble with middle-aged correspondents is that they know too much about what they're going into. But there is a terrible fascination about danger. even that part of it which tells your stomach and your knees that they're not so steady as they once were. And there's something about trying to report a war that humbles a man, and at the same time makes him proud; proud to try to translate into words the things that no man has ever put into words and no man ever will. It's an impossible assignment.

But there is a selfish appeal to it. No civilian ever spent time with troops in combat without having just a little bit of their friendliness, respect for each other, their steadiness; yes, and even their fears rub off on him.

A reporter can even share - in a limited way - their frustration and loneliness. I have seen good reporters beat a typewriter in anguish and frustration because they couldn't put into words what they had seen. Words were their weapons, and their weapons weren't adequate. That will happen to all 3 of us in Korea, as it has before.

Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, Dec. 16, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

SEVAREID: .... Ed Murrow is on the second lap of his trip to Korea, and this is another of his recorded reports, made between stops.

MURROW: These are notes made while flying across this country, from New York to Seattle. For this reporter there will always be something remarkable about flying in safety and comfort at nite. There is no tension, the food is good, the passengers doze. The crew up on the flight deck do all the work. The red exhaust flames lick back along the leading edge of the wing. That's Scranton, Penna., down there, all lit up. No one calls "fighters" from the tail-gun position; there are no searchlights reaching for us, no flak that bursts red and white and rocks the big ship. There is none of the old talk of a big bomber on a nite mission. All the intercom says is, "that's Pittsburgh just below us." The blast furnaces look as tho a leading flight had put down a nice cluster of incendiaries. And the stewardess asks if you would like another cup of coffee or perhaps a pillow. The man sitting alongside you calls for a Scotch and soda. You fasten seat belts, and let down for Detroit. You wonder if the lake is frozen over.

Airborne again, you overfly Chicago but the flaps come down again and you're on the snow-covered field at Minneapolis. No time to visit your favorite Scandinavian restaurant. Gasoline for the steady motors. Heading west again, you know that you're over the country once held by the Sioux and the Chippewa. If you could see thru twenty thousand feet of darkness, you might find the faint scars left by the covered wagons. Now it's rolling country, and the wheat fields of North Dakota. The Red River is down there somewhere and the Badlands. Now it's Montana. One out of every twenty-five square miles in this country is in that state. Somewhere down there is the Yellowstone, and Billings and Butte and the Little Big Horn, where an officer named Custer lost his whole command. Down there is copper and silver and country where a man must look at the sky. And the rocks of the Rockies are punching up thru the clouds below. The inland empire. There will be great rolling oceans of snow-covered land down there, wheat country, and soon we should be over Grand Coulee, then Mt. Ranier. And we start letting down for Seattle. Is that salt water or clams that you smell? You know that there will be no snow and there will be that warm, wet wind that blows from the west.

Flying across this generous and capacious land, even at nite, gives a reporter a little time to think, to think of the courage and determination of the men and women who made it, in wagons, of the disgraceful fashion in which we treat the remaining Indians, from whom we took the land by force of arms. Time to think of the boys who have gone forth from those small towns and isolated farms to fight two wars and those who are now fighting another one in Korea. From the air, this continent of ours is a big, straggling island off the coast of Kamchatka, but it is the pivot of freedom's power.

While we were flying across it last nite, our diplomatic and military men were talking with the other free nations in Europe, trying to forge a united shield for Western Europe. Other Americans, very young ones, were scanning frozen rice paddies and dark brown ridges in Korea, looking for enemy movement. Other Americans were unloading tanks and planes in Indo-China. At the same time, bulldozers and carryalls were hacking out a new airfield in North Africa; a ship sailed, carrying replacements for Korea; an American officer was training Jugoslav troops to use American communications gear; in India an American was training Indians how to control disease and how to increase the productivity of the land; in London representatives of this country of ours were talking with Britain's statesmen about how to solve their perpetual dollar crisis.

During this flight it is fairly sure that some boy who had just learned to skate at the time of Pearl Harbor was killed on a shell-scarred hill in Korea. At the same time, men who speak for all of us were talking to the Germans about their part in a European army; other men were in conversation with the Japanese about their defense forces; other Americans were studying Russian propaganda, trying to answer it. There was an American in Bangkok writing a report on Asian affairs, which will probably never be read by anyone with authority in theState Department. An American pilot will be calling the tower for permission to land at Berlin, Abadan, Wake, Karachi, Leghorn, and LaGuardia. Americans will be trying to learn to speak Korean, Russian, Hindustani, and every language thru which men communicate.

But on a nite flight across this country there is time to wonder about more than the major revolution that has catapulted us into a position of world leadership from which we cannot escape except by international suicide. There is time to wonder whether those of us who accept so casually our luxury, our waste, our security and our new-found responsibility recognize that, whether we like it or not, we have inherited the defense of the traditions and the titles of those who came to this country in fragile ships, who crossed it in covered wagons, who have twice sent the youth of the New World to rescue the civilization of the Old and who now stand, with little experience, as the defenders of freedom in a contracting and threatening world.

Flying across this country at nite could be just another comfortable, sleepless session in the air, but last nite it seemed to me that we flew, in darkness, over that part of the world that will in the end of the day determine whether the darkness of barbarism will descend upon that part of the world where men may still walk in the daylight, unafraid.

I have flown a few combat missions over countries that threaten the world. It was pleasant last nite to fly in quiet skies over a country that so far has not flinched and which is the custodian of what's left of the free world.

They're calling the Northwest flight for Anchorage, Alaska, now. I shall hope to be talking from there tomorrow nite.

This is Ed Murrow, recording from Seattle.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

625
15
#35
11:65

urgent
severeid
wtop

operator note: please double space..repeat double space.. and await wtop conifrmation.

Good evening:

A federal grand jury here in Washington today indicted Owen Lattimore on seven counts of perjury. Professore Lattimore said immiediately that he is innocent. He added:"That innocence should have to be so long defended against such vengeful harrassment as I have been subjected to for three years, is something that can be commented on by others than by myself." The perjury indictments are based on Lattimore's testimony before the Senate Internal Security Committee. Lattimore is charged with lying when he denied he had ever promoted Communism and Communist interests.. denying that Communist authorities helped arrange a trip he made to Communist China in 1937 and five other counts.

In Tangier, John Carter Vincent, the United States minister, today refused to comment on his suspension by the State Department as a result of an unfavorable loyalty board investigation. Mr. Vincent issued a statement saying he has nothing to say at present.

In Washington, the President said today that talk about the nation's inability to continue a defense program the size of the one we are now engaged in, is very dangerous talk. Because, said Mr. Truman, it could conceivably lead us to a decision to cut back the defense program to a point below the minimum needs of our national security. ~~In a speech at the Armed Forces Industrial College, the President said the present defense program does not even approach the limit of what we could do it if we had to.~~ He said it would be false economy to cut this program in order to reduce taxes.

Mr. Truman announced today that he has appointed Mike Di Salle, the former price stabilizer, to be the economic stabilization administrator. He succeeds Roger L. Putnam. Henry H. Fowler has agreed to stay on as director of defense mobilization. Again the President took occassion to say he wants to maintain a strong stabilization program to be turned over to the Eisenhower administration.

The General met in New York today with Senator Carlson of Kansas, a campaign advisor. And the Senator told reporters that the General will take no part in the selection of a Senate floor leader. Carlson said that he personally will be for Senator Taft..if Taft wants the job. Feneral

Eisenhower also met with Martin P. Durkin, the Democrat he's named to be his secretary of labor. It was their first meeting since the appointment was announced. ~~Mr. Durkin said later that they discussed the part his department will play in the government and the duties it has in promoting the welfare of wage earners.~~

John Foster Dulles, who is to be secretary of state in the new administration, denies published reports that he is in any way supporting or backing a proposed settlement of the British-Iranian oil dispute. Dispatches from Paris have indicated that Secretary of State Acheson has proposed a plan to British Foreign Minister Eden--with the support of Dulles. But Dulles says this is not true..he has not been conculted..knows nothing about it.

In Paris today, the North Atlantic allies named British Admiral Mountbatten to be commander in chief of the allied Mediterranean sea lanes between Gilbraltar and Suez. Mountbatten will not have control of the powerful American Sixth Fleet which continues to operate under American Admiral Carney. And both admirals..Mountbatten and Carney..will report directly to General Ridgeway, the supreme allied commander. Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons he considers it very remarkable that the allies should ~~gm~~ agree to the Mountbatten command which he described as "the Mediterranean command."

Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia charged today that the Vatican's appointment of Archbishop Stepinac to be a Cardinal is "a hostile gesture toward Yugoslavia."

Off Leghorn, Italy, ~~today~~ navy helicopters rescued the last of 39 crewmen from one of our naval ships that broke in two yesterday.

INSERT

~~And off St. Johns, Newfoundland, another navy ship, the U.S.S. Vela, a cargo ship, has radioed that he and her crewof 45 men are in trouble. The Vela's engines have failed and a 90-mile an hour winds are driving her toward the rocky coast of St. Johns.~~

Here In Washington ~~today~~ Army Secretary Pace made it known that he has "admonished" Lieut. General Pick, chief of army engineers, and two colonels, for their part in the consurtcution of North African air bases. ~~Whenever~~ Congressmen have criticized the project for the waste in the operation. We're told that ~~m~~ to be "admonished" ~~tmm~~ is to receive an "administrative reprimand".. but not in your personnel files.

In New York today that state's crime commission was told that the election of Jersey City's Mayor Kenny was the signal for mobsters, racketeers and theives to take over the Jersey city waterfront

445
6:25
11:00

In Korea, the death toll in the prison riot on Pongam island is now 84 Communists killed. North Korean General Nam Il says it was a "fanatical slaughter" by allied troops.

And the International Red Cross Committee says that our firing on rioting prisoners on Koje island island last spring "appears" to have violated the Geneva convention on war prisoners.. particularly that article that says prisoners shall be given appropriate warnings before they are fired upon.

~~Today in Korea, our jets destroyed at least four enemy Migs. The ground fighting was the lightest in several days.~~

Ed Murrow is now on the second lap of his trip to Korea. This is another of his recorded reports made between stops:

(Murrow runs: 6;25 ending on cue good night and good luck)

In Korea today ground fighting was the lightest in several days. And our jet pilotsin 13 battles with enemy Migs destroyed at least four of the enemy planes.

This is Eric Sevareid. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. (pause) But first Bob Dixon.

(end) zousmer

Eve - 6
ED - 5/11 -

News 5 50
Ed 5
Tge - :25
11: 15

urgent

severeid
wtop

operator: please double space and wait for confirmation from wtop operator.

Good evening:

General Eisenhower met for more than two hours today with General Mac Arthur. ~~The meeting was held in~~ the New York home of John Foster Dulles who was the only other person present. After it was over General Eisenhower issued this statement: I have just met with two old friends of mine for a very enjoyable luncheon. Our general topic of conversation was peace. We discussed the possibility of peace in Korea with particular reference to the world situation in which, of course, such a Korean peace would have to be determined." ~~The General made similar remarks to press reporters~~ outside the Dulles home but refused to speak into radio, ~~television and newsreel~~ microphones. General MacArthur ~~[illegible]~~ ~~[illegible]~~ told reporters he hopes the meeting bears fruit. Recently, McArthur suggested that he had a plan for a clear and definite solution to the Korean war. But neither general spoke of this plan today. MacArthur made it clear he was glad to resume a 35-year friendship with Eisenhower. And the President-elect said he hopes it won't take another six years before they meet again.

Before meeting with MacArthur, General Eisenhower announced that he is starting a series of meetings with Republican Congressmen and Senators to discuss the best methods of getting co-operation between the executive and legislative ~~mm~~ branches of the government.

~~In Yugoslavia today,~~ Today, Marshal Tito broke off Yugoslavia's relations with the Vatican. He asked the papal charge d'affaires to get out of Yugoslavia as soon as possible. And he made it quite clear that he believes the Vatican has interfered in his country's internal affairs. Tito's note to the Vatican charges the Vatican with responsibility for the breal. It leaves no doubt that he regards the recent appointment of Archbishop Stepinac to be a cardinal as the main source of the break. Tito says this decision will not affect his country's constiution guaranteeing freedom of religion and freedom of worship. Unofficial sources in Vatican City says all this comes as no surprise., but the breach is to be regretted because "relations, however strained or limited are better than none at all."

~~In London today, the United Press reports that Prime Minister~~ Churchill ~~will come to the United States in March for talks with President~~ Eisenhower.

And British and American officials in Paris says the talks between the two countries on how to settle the Anglo-Iranian oil dispute are deadlocked..."without any sort of solution in sight."

The North Atlantic ministers in Paris today decided to cut to 210-millions the 428-million dollar budget General Ridgeway has requested for air bases, ground defenses..radar screens..communications and naval port facilities. A spokesman says the miniters decided that "the the risk of aggression has ro be balanced against the danger of internal economic collapse." The ministers also approved a resolution agreeing with the French that their battle in Indo-China is as important to the west as is the Korean war..that resistance to aggression in any part of the world is an essential contribution to the common security of the free world.

In Czechoslovakia, Communist Premier Zapotocky had made it known that the Czech people are "discontent and rebellious." In an article published in the official Communist newspaper, the premier says its all due to food and coal shortages. Not along ago Presidemt Gottwald admitted that the production of milk, eggs and farm goods had fallen below the levels reached before the Communists seized power.

NO "the"

United States has demanded that Russia take "proper notice" of our note calling for an accounting of the ransom of four American flyers who were forced down in Hungary a year ago.

And in Egypt, the government announced that a group of Arab and Asian countries will meet in Cairo before the year is out to take what they call "strong counter-measures against French aggression in North Africa."

At United Nations, the Political committee has called on France to negotiate with Morocco on an urgent basis to bring about self-government for that French protectorate in North Africa.

And the same committee heard Andrie Gromyko of Russia announce that Russia will boycott any discussion of a treay of independence for Austraia. Gromyko says the U.N. is not competent to deal with the matter.

Secretary of Commerce Sawyer recently returned froma study of 10 countries in Europe, told the President today that there is confusion and wasted effort among American agencies in Europe. He says "too many people are doing too many things in western Europe." Sawyer feels the time has come to take the emphasis of foreign economic aid and put it on trade.

A House committee was told today by Alfred Kohlberg, a New York importer, that on two different occassions he warned John Foster Dulles that Alger Hiss had a pro-Communist background. Dulles at the time recommended Hiss to be head of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Mr. Kohlberg said that in person and by mail he told Mr. Dulles of the story he had heard from Whittaker Chambers. He said Dulles said he had recommended Hiss for the job although he had been told Hiss was "a sort of fellow traveler." Kohlberg said his only criticism of Dulles is that like most Americans he was unwilling to take the trouble to go into the Hiss background.

The same committee--investigating tax-exempt foundations--heard a former Russian colonel testify that he helped carry out a plot in the 1930's to infiltrate tax-exempt instiutions and the government and win over "the brains of western intellectuals." The former colonel, Igor Bogolepov, who ledt Russia to join the Nazis in the last war, said Communists who managed to get into such foundations now refuse to help anti-Communists Russian get into this country. And he has been unable to get a grant from any foundation.

The President's Commission on Health needs of the nation today suggested a health plan: the federal government and the states would contribute one and a half billion dollars a year to bolster voluntary hospital and medical care insurance plans. It would cover all people who lack the full ability to pay for such services. The states would administer the program , matching federal funds dollar for dollar.

~~The New York Crime Commission~~

The Defense Department says we suffered 809 casualties in Korea last week..the lowest weekly increase since early last June. Today, there was little ground action in Korea. Our flyers shot down one enemy Mig and damaged four others.

Ed Murrow has an opportunity to stop off at Anchorage on his was to Korea. And this is the story he recordéd.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Ed Murrow has had an opportunity to stop off at Anchorage on his way to Korea - and this is the story he recorded:

MURROW: This is Alaska - twice as large as Texas. There's a glacier up here that's larger than the whole state of Rhode Island. Fishing is the country's largest industry. One-fourth of the population work at it. Almost the entire divilian population of Alaska, 129,000, could be seated in Chicago's Soldier's Field. This is good country to fly over, but no good for walking. The Alaskan shoreline is longer than that of the continental United States. This country is a strange mixture of the old and the new - dogsleds and airplanes - a country compounded of truth and fable, a hard, rough country of great beauty, where there are no snakes. It's a growing country. Anchorage, from which we are talking, is an example. In 1940 the population was 3,000; in '48, it was about 20,000; and now the Anchorage area has close to 50,000 people. There's a car for every two persons, more private airplanes per capita than in any city in America. New Apartment buildings are going up and rents are high and so are prices. Almost everything is shipped in from Seattle. Bread is forty cents a loaf, milk fifty cents a quart, a haircut $2.50. The bars are still here. Someone started to count them the other day and got to about eighty in a four-block street and then gave up. There's an old saying that if you put a roof over the main street of Anchorage you'd have the longest bar in the world.

This is the Wall Street of the last frontier, a boom town with a future. Wages are high, about $3.50 an hour for skilled workers. This could become a sort of aerial Chicago, hub for the air transport in this whole area. We bought this whole country from the Russians for little more than seven million dollars, and there was a great row in Congress about that. The price came to about two cents an acre, and for some of these acres that was too much. But up to 1940, we had taken out about two and a half billion dollars in natural resources. This year and next, the armed forces will spend 158 million for military construction, twenty-three times the original purchase price. The fur export alone is equal to the purchase price each year. But it's the military that matters up here right now. They've been here a long time, making maps, setting up observation stations, charting waterways and maintaining communications. But it was in 1940 that we realized the strategic importance of Alaska, and we've come to appreciate it more and more as the range of planes and the power of bombs increased. This is our outer bastion. From here our aircraft can scan the North Pacific and the Bering Sea; the great circle routes connecting Asia and the United States pass pretty well through the middle of Alaska. There are places where we can look across the ice to Russian-held territory. There was a time when it was estimated that the Russians could take Alaska with a couple of airborne divisions, but that's no longer true. It's from up here that we would defend Seattle and Minneapolis and Detroit and Chicago from attacks over the top. Our last frontier has become our first line of defense.

Here at Elmendorf Air Force base, at Adak, at Ladd Field near Fairbanks, jet planes stand on the ready line twenty-four hours a day. The anti-aircraft guns are always manned; radar scans the sky. This Alaska Command is no picnic. Much of the trouble comes from the weather. There is a very poor rail and road net. The troops operate at the end of a long supply line. It's not easy to move mechanized equipment through the snows of winter and the foggy surfaces of the summer. Naval operations are handicapped by frozen ports in the north and the lack of good harbors and docking facilities. The Air Force must always fight the weather. The whole process of keeping men and machines operational in sub-zero weather is the subject of constant experimentation and study, and the problems are being whipped. The nerve center of our defense is here near Anchorage.

It is, of course, a military fact that Alaska could be attacked, but so could Siberia. It is also a fact that Seattle, Minneapolis, Chicago and our other great cities can be bombed, but bombers can fly both ways. In this best of all possible worlds, anything is possible. But when we come down to the probable, the importance of Alaska becomes obvious. It would be an ideal base from which the Russians could launched their air attacks against this country. For that reason alone, it must be secured and retained. Alaska is the western anchor of our air defense against any attacks that may come at us across the North Pole area, and it provides us with a base for counter-attack and a fighting outpost and observation point from which we can patrol our frontier. Everytime the Russians look at a map of Alaska, they must regret that deal, when they sold it for a little more than seven million dollars.

We are leaving in a few minutes for the dreary, windy little island of Shemya, eight hours' flying time, down to the tip of the Aleutian Islands.

Good Night and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Ed Murrow has had an opportunity to stop off at Anchorage on his way to Korea - and this is the story he recorded:

MURROW: This is Alaska - twice as large as Texas. There's a glacier up here that's larger than the whole state of Rhode Island. Fishing is the country's largest industry. One-fourth of the population work at it. Almost the entire divilian population of Alaska, 129,000, could be seated in Chicago's Soldier's Field. This is good country to fly over, but no good for walking. The Alaskan shoreline is longer than that of the continental United States. This country is a strange mixture of the old and the new - dogsleds and airplanes - a country compounded of truth and fable, a hard, rough country of great beauty, where there are no snakes. It's a growing country. Anchorage, from which we are talking, is an example. In 1940 the population was 3,000; in '48, it was about 20,000; and now the Anchorage area has close to 50,000 people. There's a car for every two persons, more private airplanes per capita than in any city in America. New Apartment buildings are going up and rents are high and so are prices. Almost everything is shipped in from Seattle. Bread is forty cents a loaf, milk fifty cents a quart, a haircut $2.50. The bars are still here. Someone started to count them the other day and got to about eighty in a four-block street and then gave up. There's an old saying that if you put a roof over the main street of Anchorage you'd have the longest bar in the world.

This is the Wall Street of the last frontier, a boom town with a future. Wages are high, about $3.50 an hour for skilled workers. This could become a sort of aerial Chicago, hub for the air transport in this whole area. We bought this whole country from the Russians for little more than seven million dollars, and there was a great row in Congress about that. The price came to about two cents an acre, and for some of these acres that was too much. But up to 1940, we had taken out about two and a half billion dollars in natural resources. This year and next, the armed forces will spend 158 million for military construction, twenty-three times the original purchase price. The fur export alone is equal to the purchase price each year. But it's the military that matters up here right now. They've been here a long time, making maps, setting up observation stations, charting waterways and maintaining communications. But it was in 1940 that we realized the strategic importance of Alaska, and we've come to appreciate it more and more as the range of planes and the power of bombs increased. This is our outer bastion. From here our aircraft can scan the North Pacific and the Bering Sea; the great circle routes connecting Asia and the United States pass pretty well through the middle of Alaska. There are places where we can look across the ice to Russian-held territory. There was a time when it was estimated that the Russians could take Alaska with a couple of airborne divisions, but that's no longer true. It's from up here that we would defend Seattle and Minneapolis and Detroit and Chicago from attacks over the top. Our last frontier has become our first line of defense.

Here at Elmendorf Air Force base, at Adak, at Ladd Field near Fairbanks, jet planes stand on the ready line twenty-four hours a day. The anti-aircraft guns are always manned; radar scans the sky. This Alaska Command is no picnic. Much of the trouble comes from the weather. There is a very poor rail and road net. The troops operate at the end of a long supply line. It's not easy to move mechanized equipment through the snows of winter and the foggy surfaces of the summer. Naval operations are handicapped by frozen ports in the north and the lack of good harbors and docking facilities. The Air Force must always fight the weather. The whole process of keeping men and machines operational in sub-zero weather is the subject of constant experimentation and study, and the problems are being whipped. The nerve center of our defense is here near Anchorage,

It is, of course, a military fact that Alaska could be attacked, but so could Siberia. It is also a fact that Seattle, Minneapolis, Chicago and our other great cities can be bombed, but bombers can fly both ways. In this best of all possible worlds, anything is possible. But when we come down to the probable, the importance of Alaska becomes obvious. It would be an ideal base from which the Russians could launched their air attacks against this country. For that reason alone, it must be secured and retained. Alaska is the western anchor of our air defense against any attacks that may come at us across the North Pole area, and it provides us with a base for counter-attack and a fighting outpost and observation point from which we can patrol our frontier. Everytime the Russians look at a map of Alaska, they must regret that deal, when they sold it for a little more than seven million dollars.

We are leaving in a few minutes for the dreary, windy little island of Shemya, eight hours' flying time, down to the tip of the Aleutian Islands.

Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

SEVAREID: ... Ed Murrow has had an opportunity to stop off at Anchorage on his way to Korea - and this is the story he recorded:

MURROW: This is Alaska - twice as large as Texas. There's a glacier up here that's larger than the whole state of Rhode Island. Fishing is the country's largest industry. One-fourth of the population work at it. Almost the entire civilian population of Alaska, 129,000, could be seated in Chicago's Soldier's Field. This is good country to fly over, but no good for walking. The Alaskan shoreline is longer than that of the continental United States. This country is a strange mixture of the old and the new - dogsleds and airplanes - a country compounded of truth and fable, a hard, rough country of great beauty, where there are no snakes. It's a growing country. Anchorage, from which we are talking, is an example. In 1940 the population was 3,000; in '48, it was about 20,000; and now the Anchorage area has close to 50,000 people. There's a car for every two persons, more private airplanes per capita than in any city in America. New apartment buildings are going up and rents are high and so are prices. Almost everything is shipped in from Seattle. Bread is forty cents a loaf, milk fifty cents a quart, a haircut $2.50. The bars are still here. Someone started to count them the other day and got to about eighty in a four-block street and then gave up. There's an old saying that if you put a roof over the main street of Anchorage you'd have the longest bar in the world.

This is the Wall Street of the last frontier, a boom town with a future. Wages are high, about $3.50 an hour for skilled workers. This could become a sort of aerial Chicago, hub for the air transport in this whole area. We bought this whole country from the Russians for little more than seven million dollars, and there was a great row in Congress about that. The price came to about two cents an acre, and for some of these acres that was too much.

But up to 1940, we had taken out about two and a half billion dollars in natural resources. This year and next, the armed forces will spend 158 million for military construction, twenty-three times the original purchase price. The fur export alone is equal to the purchase price each year. But it's the military that matters up here right now. They've been here a long time, making maps, setting up observation stations, charting waterways and maintaining communications. But it was in 1940 that we realized the strategic importance of Alaska, and we've come to appreciate it more and more as the range of planes and the power of bombs increased. This is our outer bastion. From here our aircraft can scan the North Pacific and the Bering Sea; the great circle routes connecting Asia and the United States pass pretty well thru the middle of Alaska. There are places where we can look across the ice to Russian-held territory. There was a time when it was estimated that the Russians could take Alaska with a couple of airborne divisions, but that's no longer true. It's from up here that we would defend Seattle and Minneapolis and Detroit and Chicago from attacks over the top. Our last frontier has become our first line of defense.

Here at Elmendorf Air Force base, at Adak, at Ladd Field near Fairbanks, jet planes stand on the ready line twenty-four hours a day. The anti-aircraft guns are always manned; radar scans the sky. This Alaska Command is no picnic. Much of the trouble comes from the weather. There is a very poor rail and road net. The troops operate at the end of a long supply line. It's not easy to move mechanized equipment thru the snows of winter and the foggy surfaces of the summer. Naval operations are handicapped by frozen ports in the north and the lack of good harbors and docking facilities. The Air Force must always fight the weather. The whole process of keeping men and machines operational in sub-zero weather is the subject of constant experimentation and study, and the problems are being whipped. The nerve center of our defense is here near Anchorage.

It is, of course, a military fact that Alaska could be attacked, but so could Siberia. It is also a fact that Seattle, Minneapolis, Chicago and our other great cities can be bombed, but bombers can fly both ways. In this best of all possible worlds, anything is possible. But when we come down to the probable, the importance of Alaska becomes obvious. It would be an ideal base from which the Russians could launch their air attacks against this country. For that reason alone, it must be secured and retained. Alaska is the western anchor of our air defense against any attacks that may come at us across the North Pole area, and it provides us with a base for counter-attack and a fighting outpost and observation point from which we can patrol our frontier. Everytime the Russians look at a map of Alaska, they must regret that deal, when they sold it for a little more than seven million dollars.

We are leaving in a few minutes for the dreary, windy little island of Shemya, eight hours' flying time, down to the tip of the Aleutian Islands.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

urgent

severeid
wtop

operator: please double space

Dec 18

Binder

Good evening:

The North Atlantic Treaty ministers adjourned their Paris meeting today with an order to their military commanders to stress quality rather than quantity in the next year. The ministers instructed the military men to concentrate on the effectiveness of the forces under their command, rather than reinforcements. In other words, the diplomatic and political leaders want a stress on improved efficiency and equipment before expanding. As one observer summed it up: this is a weak compromise between eceonomy-minded western Europe and defense-minded America. Before adjourning the ministers approved a cut of almost 50 per cent in the funds General Ridgeway requested for a building program. It now stands at 225-millions with Washington paying 40 per cent of the bill.

Secretary of State Acheson, attending his last international conference, urged our allies to have full confidence in the new Eisenhower administration. He said the General's administration will continue to support the defense of Europe against aggression. Mr. Acheson said the the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has been an inspiring force in the western world; he called NATO a great instiution, out of which is coming future strength and future happiness of the people of the Atlantic world.

In Yugoslavia today the foreign minister Kardelj charged that Italy has been using the Vatican as a "tool of Italian expansion" against Yugoslavia. The ministers says the Vatican has helped Italy in an international-anti-Yugoslav campaign.

The French today sent a secret note to the Bey of Tunis and announced that they demanded an immediate reply..or else. Which probably means the Bey would be ousted from his throne. And in Morocco the French announced they have arrested 38 more persons in their crackdown on Moroccan nationalists and "other agitators."

Isreal today assured the Christian and Mohamedan worls that there is no danger to the holy places in Jerusalem just because Isreal opposes international control of the city.

In New York today, General Eisenhower held the first of his planned meetings with Congressional leaders. After it was over, Representative Martin, who is expected to be the new House leader, told reporters Eisenhower may follow his inugural with a speech to Congress outlining his legislative program. Mr. Martin said the main emphasis will be on reducing federal spending although he is not "precluding" any tax reduction. Representative Halleck of Indiana, who also attended the conference, charged that the Administration has just about destroyed the whole stabilization program.

Eisenhower also was visited by a group of state civil defense leaders. They told him that President Truman has given only "lip service" to the civil defense program; that if war were to come tomorrow the country would not be ready to meet its civil defense needs.

But Millard Caldwell, the former civil defense administrator, said in Washington that the President went "all out" in his support of civil defense. He said the program had "magnificent support" from Mr. Truman.

And the President himself, questioned about this at a news conference, told reporters to check on what the Administration asked for civil defense and what the Congress approves. The figures show he asked for a 400-million-dollar appropriation and received 30-millions.

The President said today that he has nothing to add and nothing to take back from his statement of last week..the statement that Eisenhower's Korean trip was an outgrowth of campaign demagogguery and that General McArthur has nothing new to offer for ending the war. The President says he has received a complete report on the Eisenhower trip from General Bradley, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

(more)

5. to severeid wtop

The president of the American Medical Association--Drl. Louis Bauer of Hempstead, New York-- said today that one of the recommendations on the President's commission on the health needs of the nation adds up to "national compulsory health insurance." Dr. Bauer [redacted] said he referred to the provision for the federal government, through payroll deductions, to [redacted] pay directly for the medical care of a large segment of the population.

Here in Washington today: the wage stabilization committee approved a five per cent pay increase for 200-thousand [redacted] employes of General electric... Attorney General Mc Granery issued an order which bars Justice Department offic rs and employes from engaging i in the private practise of law...Harold Stassen who is to be mutual security administrator in the Eisenhower administration called on Senator Taft to discuss his new job...Senator Dirksen of Illinois says he is "quite certain" that Taft would like to be majority leader of the Senate.

(more)

In Chicago, one of the two baby twins... seperated after an operation of almost 13 hours...is said to be doing badly. The father of the babies, 35-year-old Roy Brodie said he and his wife are "waiting and praying." (Note: eric above on Church's recommendation)

In India, Prime Minister Nehru says Stalin's September speech offering support to Communist parties in other countries is "a clear case of interference in internal affirs." But Nehro says he feels no useful purpose would be served by protesting the matter.

In Korea, our fighter bombers attacked a big enemy troop massing area near Pyongyang. They say they destroyed 70 buildings in the area. In battles with enemy Migs our pilots report they destroyed one and damaged another. The Chinese are sending propaganda messages across the front by loudspeakers boasting that they will be in Seoul by Christmas.

Ed Murrow is now in Tokyo. And shortly after he arrived he recorded this report for you:

(return cue: good night and good luck)

Soon after he recorded that report for you, Ed Murrow left Tokyo for Korea. And tomorrow, if all goes well, we should have his report from Seoul or the front.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Ed Murrow has reached Tokyo. Shortly after he arrived, he recorded this report for you.

MURROW: This is Tokyo!

There is an old habit amongst correspondents that when you arrive in a foreign capital, you go 'round and talk to your colleagues and, after a few hours of discussion with them, you sit down and write a definitive piece on what is happening in the country that you happen to be visiting. Well, I will rather reverse the process here today and talk with two of my old colleagues, fact-to-face, across this microphone: Pepper Martin, who has been in Japan, I think, since 1937. Isn't that right, Pepper?

MARTIN: Except for the war years.

MURROW: Right! Well now, tell me, Pepper, what is the most interesting thing that's happening in Japan right now?

MARTIN: You probably didn't notice it when you came in, Ed, but you certainly would quickly - and that is the great debate over whether Japan is going to be rearmed or not rearmed.

MURROW: And while Japan is, in fact, rearming.

MARTIN: Well, yes; they have a National Police Reserve which has been turned into a security force; they have a small navy; and they're even starting to talk about an air force.

MURROW: Would you make a guess about the outcome of this discussion on rearmament?

MARTIN: Why, yes. I think that they're going to be rearmed, that the United States is going to spend anywhere from 250 to 300 million dollars a year to help them rearm.

MURROW: Pepper, what about the relationship between the American troops and civilians and the Japanese population?

MARTIN: Well, considering the fact that the United States was the primary occupation force in Japan from 1945 until 1952, I would say relationships are very, very good. You have a few editorial reactions; there've been some incidents between troops and the Japanese, but by and large I would say that the Japanese and Americans get along very well. There've been no overt acts to speak of, outside of an occasional incident between soldiers and Japanese civilians.

MURROW: Well now, Pepper, what about the general economy of Japan? What would happen if these large American expenditures were suddenly to cease?

MURROW: Well now, Pepper, what about the general economy of Japan? What would happen if these large American expenditures were suddenly to cease?

MARTIN: Well, that would be very difficult for the Japanese. Right now, American forces in Japan spend about twenty-five million dollars a month; that's just spending money for the troops. In addition to that, since the Korean war started, we've spent about 790 to 800 million dollars, and that's the primary support of Japan's economy at present.

MURROW: Now, another old colleague is sitting across the table here. George Herman, our Far Eastern news chief, who is just back from Korea. George, I'd like to put to you first the question: What about the morale of American troops in Korea?

HERMAN: The morale of the American troops is very good, Ed, I think, largely because of the fact that they're not under very much pressure at the time and also because of the fact that from the very moment they arrive in Korea the end is in sight; it's not a for-the-duration thing; it's for a certain length of time and a certain number of points and the end is in sight from the moment they get there.

MURROW: Well now, I know, George, that you've spent some time with the South Koreans and, as you know, General Eisenhower and others have said that it is of the utmost urgency that we arm and train more South Koreans. What about the morale of the South Koreans, first of all the army and then the civilian population?

HERMAN: Well, the morale of the army, I think, is quite good, surprisingly good, and has been growing steadily. The individual Korean soldier has always been extremely brave and very proud. But now they have something new. They have an esprit de corps, they have a pride in their new army, and they have a strength from that that is something I think new in the Korean war.

MURROW: They've also got the hardware with which to fight now, haven't they?

HERMAN: Well, that's extremely important. It's all very well to be proud of yourself and to be valiant troops, but to be the valiant little troops struggling up the hill is kind of silly. They now have artillery units attached and they have American tanks, Sherman tanks, which they are manning with great skill.

MURROW: George, you were telling me a little earlier today about the need for blood in Korea.

HERMAN: Well, the main problem about blood, as I think probably everybody knows but doesn't really fully feel, is the fact that human blood, when it gets out here, can only last about two and a half weeks. And while the expenditure or the need for blood at any one particular time is not great, the main problem is to get a steady supply, rather than a sporadic burst of enthusiasm. And the thing we've been trying to do out here is to get some kind of rotational donation program in the States, where one city gives one week and another gives another week, so that we are assured of the steady supply that we vitally need.

MURROW: I'd like to put this question to both Pepper Martin and George Herman. What sort of discussion do you hear, here in Tokyo and in Korea, about: Is there any solution to the stalemate out there? Pepper?

MARTIN: Is there any solution to the stalemate in Korea?

MURROW: Yes.

MARTIN: I think most people out here had a feeling during the campaign that maybe General Eisenhower would have a plan for ending the Korean war. And then, after he got out here and nothing specific was said on what should be done and what could be done, they had a great feeling of let-down. A surprising number of army officers that I've talked to who came over from Korea all say the same thing, that Eisenhower probably didn't learn very much over there that he didn't already know, and that they still don't see any solution to the Korean thing.

MURROW: What sort of conversation do you hear in Korea on this subject, George?

HERMAN: Well, it follows pretty much along the same lines. It's kind of a fact of human psychology that even at a time when you know there isn't much hope, you know all the factors, when something comes along like the campaign and somebody says there is hope, you're sort of lifted above your better judgment for a while; and then, when Eisenhower came and went and made his very sensible and sober statement about no panaceas and so forth, then they reverted to their realization of the fact that there is no settlement without force and without giving something up; that you cannot get anything out of the Korean war without giving up something.

MURROW: Well, I've been sitting here for the last few minutes talking with two old friends of mine, Pepper Martin, who is an old hand in Japan, and the chief of our Asian news operations, George Herman, who is back in Tokyo from Korea.

This is Ed Murrow in Tokyo. Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, Dec. 18, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

SEVAREID: ... Ed Murrow has reached Tokyo. Shortly after he arrived, he recorded this report for you.

MURROW: This is Tokyo!

There is an old habit amongst correspondents that when you arrive in a foreign capital, you go 'round and talk to your colleagues and, after a few hours of discussion with them, you sit down and write a definitive piece on what is happening in the country that you happen to be visiting. Well, I will rather reverse the process here today and talk with two of my old colleagues, face-to-face, across this microphone: Pepper Martin, who has been in Japan, I think, since 1937. Isn't that right, Pepper?

MARTIN: Except for the war years.

MURROW: Right! Well now, tell me, Pepper, what is the most interesting thing that's happening in Japan right now?

MARTIN: You probably didn't notice it when you came in, Ed, but you certainly would quickly - and that is the great debate over whether Japan is going to be rearmed or not rearmed.

MURROW: And while Japan is, in fact, rearming.

MARTIN: Well, yes; they have a National Police Reserve which has been turned into a security force; they have a small navy; and they're even starting to talk about an air force.

MURROW: Would you make a guess about the outcome of this discussion on rearmament?

MARTIN: Why, yes. I think that they're going to be rearmed, that the United States is going to spend anywhere from 250 to 300 million dollars a year to help them rearm.

MURROW: Pepper, what about the relationship between the American troops and civilians and the Japanese population?

MARTIN: Well, considering the fact that the United States ~~is~~ was the primary occupation force in Japan from 1945 until 1952, I would say relationships are very, very good. You have a few editorial reactions; there've been some incidents between troops and the Japanese, but by and large I would say that the Japanese and Americans get along very well. There've been no overt acts to speak of, outside of an occasional .....? incident between soldiers and Japanese civilians.

MURROW: Well now, Pepper, what about the general economy of Japan? What would happen if these large American expenditures were suddenly to cease?

MARTIN: Well, that would be very difficult for the Japanese. Right now, American forces in Japan spend about twenty-five million dollars a month; that's just spending money for the troops. In addition to that, since the Korean war started, we've spent about 790 to 800 million dollars, and that's the primary support of Japan's economy at present.

MURROW: Now, another old colleague~~s~~ is sitting across the table here. George Herman, our Far Eastern news chief, who is just back from Korea. George, I'd like to put to you first the question: What about the morale of American troops in Korea?

HERMAN: The morale of the American troops is very good, Ed, I think, largely because of the fact that they're not under very much pressure at the time and also because of the fact that from the very moment they arrive in Korea the end is in sight; it's not a for-the-duration thing; it's for a certain length of time and a certain number of points and the end is in sight from the moment they get there.

MURROW: Well now, I know, George, that you've spent some time with the South Koreans and, as you know, General Eisenhower and others have said that it is of the utmost urgency that we arm and train more South Koreans. What about the morale of the South Koreans, first of all the army and then the civilian population?

HERMAN: Well, the morale of the army, I think, is quite good, surprisingly good, and has been growing steadily. The individual Korean soldier has always been extremely brave and very proud. But now they have something new. They have an esprit de corps, they have a pride in their new army, and they have a strength from that that is something I think new in the Korean war.

MURROW: They've also got the hardware with which to fight now, haven't they?

HERMAN: Well, that's extremely important. It's all very well to be proud of yourself and to be valiant troops, but to be the valiant little troops struggling up the hill is kind of silly. They now have artillery units attached and they have American tanks, Sherman tanks, which they are manning with great skill.

MURROW: George, you were telling me a little earlier today about the need for blood in Korea.

HERMAN: Well, the main problem about blood, as I think probably everybody knows but doesn't really fully feel, is the fact that human blood, when it gets out here, can only last about two and a half weeks. And while the expenditure or the need for blood at any one particular time is not great, the main problem is to get a steady supply, rather than a sporadic burst of enthusiasm. And the thing we've been trying to do out here is to get some kind of rotational donation program in the States, where one city gives one week and another gives another week, so that we are assured of the steady supply that we vitally need.

MURROW: I'd like to put this question to both Pepper Martin and George Herman. What sort of discussion do you hear, here in Tokyo and in Korea, about: Is there any solution to the stalemate out there? Pepper?

MARTIN: Is there any solution to the stalemate in Korea?

MURROW: Yes.

MARTIN: I think most people out here had a feeling during the campaign that maybe General Eisenhower would have a plan for ending the Korean war. And then, after he got out here and nothing specific was said on what should be done and what could be done, they had a great feeling of let-down. A surprising number of army officers that I've talked to who came over from Korea all say the same thing, that Eisenhower probably didn't learn very much over there that he didn't already know, and that they still don't see any solution to the Korean thing.

MURROW: What sort of conversation do you hear in Korea on this subject, George?

HERMAN: Well, it follows pretty much along the same lines. It's kind of a fact of human psychology that even at a time when you know there isn't much hope, you know all the factors, when something comes along like the campaign and somebody says there is hope, you're sort of lifted above your better judgment for a while; and then, when Eisenhower came and went and made his very sensible and sober statement about no panaceas and so forth, then they reverted to their realization of the fact that there is no settlement without force and without giving something up; that you cannot get anything out of the Korean war without giving up something.

MURROW: Well, I've been sitting here for the last few minutes talking with two old friends of mine, Pepper Martin, who is an old hand in Japan, and the chief of our Asian news operations, George Herman, who is back in Tokyo from Korea.

This is Ed Murrow in Tokyo. Good Night and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

MURROW: Less than twenty-four hours in Korea leaves a reporter who hasn't seen the place for more than two years with merely a few first impressions: The first is the permanence of this war, the settled, established character of it. The road signs up forward, right up to the company C.P., signs marked "Slow", "Sharp Curve", "Railroad Crossing" and all the rest. And then, the army living where they may be shelled at any moment and their quarters are overheated - all of it done with oil. Today I've seen soldiers in front of a battalion command post sticking little evergreen branches in the frozen ground in front of their tents. There was even a Christmas tree, a revolving one with lights on it and all the trimmings. I asked where the decorations came from, and a sergeant said, "Our Padre, he wrote letters stateside, and folks sent them. He's a great scrounger, our Padre. Makes a pretty good prayer, too." And then there is a gust. I think maybe it's worse than it was in the heat of the summer of '50. It tastes the same and it feels the same, but it's too cold and it cuts like sandpaper. There isn't very much snow, and what there is, is sort of timid, hiding in the tight curves of the road or in sheltered sections of the rice paddies.

I also spent some time with the First Marines - for sentimental reasons, since they nearly made a casualty out of me in the first months of the fighting out here. Their food is magnificent. And the first impression is that they're ready to go, either on another end-run, or straight ahead, or home. These are proud boys, willing to show off a little, but hard and tough and steady. They all said the Christmas packages were pretty well here. A few admitted that they had opened some of them already. One boy said, "I got one that looks from the outside like a bottle, and the sergeant says I can't open it till Christmas." And he won't. The Marines have that kind of discipline. There is also a happy mess sergeant in the Marines. He says all the boys have so much fruitcake and cookies and stuff that there won't be any beefing for a while. Only he didn't call them "boys" and he didn't say "beefing". I so far forgot myself as to ask one Marine at a company command post how long he's been in the Army. And what he said, I wouldn't say - at least, not on the radio.

There are a few things to report. A Marine lieutenant, Mr. Deane II, is rather anxious to see Mr. Deane III. He arrived while his dad was over here. Also, John King, age 20, from Knoxville, Tenn., wheeled me around those mountain roads today in a six-by-six. He said the clutch on his vehicle wasn't worth mentioning - and he mentioned it anyway. And I'll ride with him anywhere, any time. Maybe somebody would call his folks.

A few other items from Korea that seem somehow important tonite: Howard Edwards from Providence, Mass., is just fine. Tom Gaddert from Mount Pleasant Texas, has hot his roration time figures out almost to the hour. And John Larkin, from Jersey City, reckons it would be fine to be in Times Square Christmas Eve, but he says he has a previous date with the Marine Corps. Sam Oppenheimer from Miami, Florida has received his presents, and he figures this Christmas deal in Korea isn't too bad; it's his first white Christmas. Never seen any snow before. He hasn't seen any enemy yet either. So far as I could tell, everyone in the Eleventh Marine Regiment, right up to Baker Battery of the First Battalion, is fine. Out there this afternoon we had two ex-coal miners, two students, a carpenter, a couple of farmers and an account, all in a small group - and they serve their gun and their country well. But they were all too young for this business, or I was too old. But they asked me to come back again before long, which was flattering. And as I looked at those youngsters, I thought: This ought to lift your heart. You don't meet people like this walking down Madison Avenue or State Street or the ferry from Oakland. And then I realized that you do meet just these people. The ones out here were once there. Now they wear different clothes; their language is often rough and brutal. But these boys are going about freedom's business, and you have but to spend a single day with them to understand that most important fact.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, Dec. 19, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Less than twenty-four hours in Korea leaves a reporter who hasn't seen the place for more than two years with merely a few first impressions: The first is the permanence of this war, the settled, established character of it. The road signs up forward, right up to the company C.P., signs marked "Slow", "Sharp Curve", "Railroad Crossing" and all the rest. And then, the army living (? ?) where they may be shelled at any moment and their quarters are overheated - all of it done with oil. Today I've seen soldiers in front of a battalion command post sticking little evergreen branches in the frozen ground in front of their tents. There was even a Christmas tree, a revolving one with lights on it and all the trimmings. I asked where the decorations came from, and a sergeant said, "Our Padre, he wrote letters stateside, and folks sent them. He's a great sercunger, our Padre. Makes a pretty good prayer, too." And then there is a gust. I think maybe it's worse than it was in the heat of the summer of '50. It tastes the same and it feels the same, but it's too cold and it cuts like sandpaper. There isn't very much snow, and what there is is sort of timid, hiding in the tight curves of the road or in sheltered sections of the rice paddies.

I also spent some time with the First Marines - for sentimental reasons, since they nearly made a casualty out of me in the first months of the fighting out here. Their food is magnificent. And the first impression is that they're ready to go, either on another end-run, or straight ahead, or home. These are proud boys, willing to show off a little, but hard and tough and steady. They all said the Christmas packages were pretty well here. A few admitted that they had opened some of them already. One boy said, "I got one that looks from the outside like a bottle, and the sergeant says I can't open it till Christmas." And he won't. The Marines have that kind of discipline. There is also a happy mess sergeant in the Marines. He says all the boys have so much fruitcake and cookies and stuff that there won't be any beefing for a while. Only he didn't call them "boys" and he didn't say "beefing". I so far forgot myself as to ask one Marine at a company command post how long he'd been in the Army. And what he said, I wouldn't say - at least, not on the radio.

There are a few things to report. A Marine lieutenant, Mr. Deane II, is rather anxious to see Mr. Deane III. He arrived while his dad was over here. Also, John King, age 20, from Knoxville, Tenn., wheeled me around those mountain roads today in a six-by-six. He said the clutch on his vehicle wasn't worth mentioning - and he mentioned it anyway. And I'll ride with him anywhere, any time. Maybe somebody would call his folks.

A few other items from Korea that seem somehow important tonite: Howard Edwards from Providence, Mass., is just fine. Tom Gaddert from Mount Pleasant, Texas, has got his rotation time figured out almost to the hour. And John Larkin, from Jersey City, reckons it would be fine to be in Times Square Christmas Eve, but he says he has a previous date with the Marine Corps. Sam Oppenheimer from Miami, Fla., has received his presents, and he figures this Christmas deal in Korea isn't too bad; it's his first white Christmas. Never seen any snow before. He hasn't seen any enemy yet either. So far as I could tell, everyone in the Eleventh Marine Regiment, right up to Baker Battery of the First Battalion, is fine. Out there this afternoon we had two ex-coal miners, two students, a carpenter, a coupld of farmers and an account, all in a small group - and they serve their gun and their country well. But they were all too young for this business, or I was too old. But they asked me to come back again before long, which was flattering. And as I looked as these youngsters, I thought: This ought to lift your heart. You don't meet people like this walking down Madison Avenue or State Street or the ferry from Oakland. And then I realized that you do meet just these people. The ones out here were once there. Now they wear different clothes; their language is often rough and brutal. But these boys are going about freedom's business, and you have but to spend a single day with them to understand that most important fact.

Today my middle-aged partners from another war have been looking at other aspects of this scene in Korea. First, Bill Downs.

Ediphone trans./F. Scheiner

MURROW: This is Korea! PFC Walton (?) Bowle stopped us at the bridge. He's from Dannemora, New York, an MP at (?) Bridge, across the Imjin River. It was cold, but he was courteous. He wanted us to tell his folks that everything was No. 1 with him. Upstream, an amtrack ... that's an armored vehicle that can travel on land or water ... was smashing the ice, pressing down on the bridge. It was like breaking frosted white glass in a pool of bluegreen ink. When the ice broke the water boiled up. As the amtrack plowed under the bridge we shouted down to the driver - where are you from? And he shouted back: "I'm Kenneth Tuttleton, of Dallas, Texas. I'm happy as a duck." And he said: "Say 'Merry Christmas' to everyone in Texas," and we said we would. About an hour after we crossed the bridge there occurred a sight I shall never forget. An American jeep drew up beside the dusty road. Its exhaust was blue against the snow. Two MPs got out. They hoisted two orange-colored mail sacks to their shoulders and walked twenty paces to a small tent. The sacks were heavy. The sharp corners of small packages pressed against the canvas. You wondered what was inside those mail bags -- thirty-six hundred pieces of mail, and you wondered how many letters said "your son was born last week," or "your old collie died," or perhaps "We're going to Grandma's for Christmas." How much fear and hope and how many prayers can you put into two orange-colored mail bags? The MPs walked erect and proud. They put the two bags in the tent and walked away. Nothing happened for twenty minutes, then a North Korean lieutenant came out of a mud hut across the way. He was wearing a blue tunic and khaki trousers, blackjack boots. He strode to the tents that held the two mail sacks. An American Captain went in after him. A paper was signed, no word was spoken. Two North Korean soldiers came and picked up the mail bags and walked off with them. That's all there was to it. They went back across the road. Two minutes later they returned with the empty bags. An American MP held out his hand, but not very far. The Korean put the mail bag in the American's hand and a so-called mail exchange had been completed. That mail was going up north, up behind those black hills to the north, to American prisoners-of-war. Maybe it would reach them; maybe it wouldn't.

Page 2 - mail to prisoners

I asked an MP standing beside me: "What do you think happens to that mail?" And he spat on the ground and said "Who knows?" I said: "When do we get mail down from the north, from our boys up there?" And he said: "Not very often and we never know when it's coming and when it does there isn't much of it." This happened yesterday at Panmunjom, in a circle a thousand yards across. It's called the neutral zone, where the truce negotiations were held. It's three thousand yards inside the enemy line. There are three modern straw huts on one side of the road, one building and four camps on the other; Americans, North Koreans and Chinese carrying weapons move freely about in this circle. You can pick up a pair of glasses and look at enemy trenches and observation posts seven hundred yards away. There are three barrage balloons hanging in the sky to mark this circle and a searchlight pointing straight up at night. Here, both sides can watch the war within spitting distance of each other and hear artillery fire that makes their tents rock. Their buddies are up on those dirty brown hills, killing and being killed, and then they walk up the road in the morning and meet Chinese and North Koreans whose buddies are also up on those hills, killing and being killed.

Down in that circle, a thousand yards across, the Americans and the enemy are carrying weapons, but they don't shoot. The sound of smallarms fire comes clear and sharp through the cold air while the enemy is less than a baynette distance from our boys down in the circle, but down there it's peace while war is on three sides of them. Occasionally at night the enemy inside the circle will put a bayonet against the belt buckle of an American boy or they will step out of the dark shadows of a building, apparently hoping to "frighten" an incident, and you ask Captain Arthur Trenham (?), who commands our MPs in the area, why one of his boys hasn't pulled a trigger or at least bent a gun barrel over the head of a North Korean and he replies because they're well trained and we manufacture no incidents. You ask the boys about the truce negotiations and what's going to happen to the war and they tell you they don't know; they don't talk very much about it.

This Korea is a silent country. The dogs don't bark, the cattle make very little sound. Even the children play quietly and when it comes to talking about the future course of this war ... well, our boys seem to have caught the silence of Korea. Goodnight and good luck!

****

MURROW: This is a second standby piece from Korea.

This is Korea! There are many things about fighter pilots that no earth-bound man can understand. Their testing time comes when no other man is there to see or hear. They walk a little apart because lonely men worry only about themselves and, therefore, they don't worry very much. I spent today with the 4th Interceptor Group, Sabrejet outfit. Major Jack Gibbons, from Dayton, Ohio, offered me a cigar as soon as I arrived. He had just had word that he had a son. I said: "Maybe I can make a short message to your wife. What should it be?" And he thought and replied: "I can't think of the words. You see, I'm a public relations officer and I always have to think of things for other people to say and when it comes to me I can't think." The cigar was very good! Then, there was Lieutenant John Lake (?), from Lancaster, Ohio. He would like Charlotte and Cynthia to keep their noses clean. Lieutenant Tim Callahan, from East St. Louis, is sure that Anne will know that he would like to be with her at their favorite table at Beverley's. And Don Miller, from New York City, received three pipes and he likes them all. [~~There is also a young lieutenant who flies a Sabrejet and he opened a single present. He's told his best friend [illegible] Christmas [illegible] have the later~~] There is another pilot who says that he has what he calls a complete (unintelligible) outfit, white clothes and black hat, like the Koreans wear, and he also has a pair of Korean-type skates and if he gets shot down he's just going to skate back to our lines. He's figuredout all the river lines.

Lieutenant James Porter, from Fort Worth, Texas, allows that it's just as cold in Texas but somehow it's better than here. Captain Bill Louis (?), from Manchester, New Hampshire, hopes to hack down some more MIGs and he would also like to see his two-year-old ~~when that Christmas tree is~~

~~first Jump. I have the impression~~ that he'd rather see that than to have a MIG in his sights. The boys of the 4th Group ~~are going to have a christmas~~ party. There won't be much, - just for some Korean orphans.

They flew amission today up near the Yalu. The boys who weren't flying sat around as they always do and made rude comments about take-offs and landings. Some MIGs were seen but they ran for the Yalu. Others were lost on the sun. Four Group didn't lose anybody today. It was a nice day. It was thawing about noon and the boys know how to watch for the MIGs that may try to sit up there in the sun and their eyes were more than a little tired when they came back in the late afternoon. They have a sign outside Base Operations that reads "Fourth, but best. ~~Also they have found some colored paper and are wrapping it around the pillars in the officers club~~ Fighter pilots always look you straight in the eye. When they take off you want to go with them, but today I pushed a microphone in front of Major Robinson Wisner, (?) just before he took off. He's an ace, six MIGs to his credit, and all he could think to say was -- Merry Christmas! 30

My colleague, Bill Downs, has been traveling by the roads of Korea today and here is his report. Fix cue

DOWNS: If a GI truck driver ever meets Genghis Khan sometime in the great eternity they will have one common topic of conversation -- the impossible roads of Korea. The roads today are still as hard, dusty, cold, and bumpy as they were when the Mongol invaders traversed them centuries ago and we bet the same frozen rice paddies were there then as now. We spent the day traveling over about a hundred and fifty miles of these roads, - main supply routes they're now called, and they bear numbers such as three-thirty-three, two-Y, and so forth, but a stranger riding over them has the feeling that he's bumping along somewhere between the past and the present. Over the next hill, all of the six-by-six trucks, the weapons carriers, the bull dozers, and the tank transports will disappear and ancient Korea will again deep-freeze in its own tradition. You travel out of the ruins of Seoul where enterprising merchants advertise "No. 1 watch-fix," "Smart laundry," and "Kim's Place, Souvenirs," and these signs all are temporary, of course, because to get out of town your driver plays a kind of tag with the pedestrians from six to seventy years of age. The magic touch he has with his hornblowing thumb is a wonder to behold. You join a convoy heading northward and X in the country the drivers and the people seem to have reached a truce. The pedestrians walk along the outer four inches of the road. By keeping to this line they escape injury or possible death by something like an inch-and-a-half. Everyone seems happy about the arrangement.

The only crisis that developes, and it developes often, is when a Korean man or woman attempts to walk this tight line with an "A" frame loaded three times the heighth and breadth of the carrier. The convoys swerve around these people. But always there's the feeling that you've stepped out of your particular age into the past and among a people impervious to the irritations that worry you. It isn't so much the way the Koreans dress, ancient or modern, it's, rather, their outward attitude toward such modern American and western wonders as the internal combustion engine, the airplane, and the jeep. We bundle up in swaddlings of Army woolens to keep warm, only to see Korean women walking along the highway most of the time without a coat. Children push themselves over the frozen rice paddies, bareheaded, while our ears freeze under two layers of fur. Men ancient enough to be our great-grandfather walk with dignity, clad in wrappings of white cotton without a shiver. Well, most of the reason for this, of course, is abject poverty, but, if there can be dignity and poverty the Korean people have it.

MURROW: That was Bill Downs adding a piece to this show.

This is Ed Murrow recording in Korea. Goodnight and good luck!

(And, San Francisco pass a message to Jesse Zousmer saying now you've got two in the bank, which is more than we have)

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

6 22/

1284

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

MURROW: This is Korea! PFC Walton Bowle stopped us at the bridge. He's from Dannemora, New York, an MP across the Imjin River. It was cold, but he was courteous. He wanted us to tell his folks that everything was No. 1 with him. Upstream, an amtrack, that's an armored vehicle that can travel on land or water, was smashing the ice, pressing down on the bridge. It was like breaking frosted white glass in a pool of bluegreen ink. When the ice broke the water boiled up. As the amtrack plowed under the bridge we shouted down to the driver - where are you from? And he shouted back: "I'm Kenneth Tuttleton, of Dallas, Texas. I'm happy as a duck!" And he said: "Say 'Merry Christmas' to everyone in Texas," and we said we would. About an hour after we crossed the bridge there occurred a sight I shall never forget. An American jeep drew up beside the dusty road. Its exhaust was blue against the snow. Two MPs got out. They hoisted two orange-colored mail sacks to their shoulders and walked twenty paces to a small tent. The sacks were heavy. The sharp corners of small packages pressed against the canvas. You wondered what was inside those mail bags - thirty-six hundred pieces of mail, and you wondered how many letters said "your son was born last week," or "your old collie died," or perhaps "We're going to Grandma's for Christmas." How much fear and hope and how many prayers can you put into two orange-colored mail sacks? The MPs walked erect and proud. They put the two bags in the tent and walked away. Nothing happened for twenty minutes, then a North Korean lieutenant came out of a mud hut across the way. He was wearing a blue tunic and khaki trousers, blackjack boots. He strode to the tents that held the two mail sacks. An American Captain went in after him. A paper was signed, no word was spoken. Two North Korean soldiers came and picked up the mail bags and walked off with them. That's all there was to it. They went back across the road. Two minutes later they returned with the empty bags. An American MP held out his hand, but not very far. The Korean put the mail bag in the American's hand and a so-called mail exchange had been completed. That mail was going up north, up behind those black hills to the north, to American prisoners-of-war. Maybe it would reach them; maybe it wouldn't.

I asked an MP standing beside me: "What do you think happens to that mail?" And he spat on the ground and said "Who knows?" I said: "When do we get mail down from the north, from our boys up there?" And he said: "Not very often and we never know when it's coming and when it does there isn't much of it." This happened yesterday at Panmunjom, in a circle a thousand yards across. It's called the neutral zone, where the truce negotiations were held. It's three thousand yards inside the enemy line. There are three modern straw huts on one side of the road, one building and four camps on the other; Americans, North Koreans and Chinese carrying weapons move freely about in this circle. You can pick up a pair of glasses and look at enemy trenches and observation posts seven hundred yards away. There are three barrage balloons hanging in the sky to mark this circle and a searchlight pointing straight up at night. Here, both sides can watch the war within spitting distance of each other and hear artillery fire that makes their tents rock. Their buddies are up on those dirty brown hills, killing and being killed, and then they walk up the road in the morning and meet Chinese and North Koreans whose buddies are also up on those hills, killing and being killed.

Down in that circle, a thousand yards across, the Americans and the enemy are carrying weapons, but they don't shoot. The sound of smallarms fire comes clear and sharp through the cold air while the enemy is less than a bayonette distance from our boys down in the circle, but down there it's peace while war is on three sides of them. Occasionally at night the enemy inside will put a bayonet against the belt buckle of an American boy or they will step out of the dark shadows of a building, apparently hoping to "frighten" an incident, and you ask Captain Arthur Trenham, who commands our MP's in the area, why one of his

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: In Korea today Ed Murrow spent some time looking over South Korean troops and talking with their American advisors. And here is his special report for you.

MURROW: This is Korea.

This is not an easy war to report. Soldiers, sailors, and airmen are doing what they have done in earlier wars. They talk about the same things. There is very little griping out here. The food is the best I ever encountered in a theatre of military operations. Lots of men have put on weight since coming out here. The winter clothing is excellent. Tents are well heated by squat little oil stoves. You even encounter a fair number of jeeps with heaters in them. The men up forward are dug in and wired in to the point where artillery or mortar fire must score a direct hit to cause casualties. Our communications net is very good. It's a strange sensation to pick up a telephone at company and get through to regiment or division with little or no delay. One division has strung about six thousand miles of wire. The roads are as well marked with "slow" and "curve" signs as they are back home. You get the impression that the whole thing has been here a long time and it's going to go on like this. You hear a lot of talk about the ROKs, the South Korean troops. No one calls them "gooks" anymore. And you hear some fantastic stories about them. They're not bothered by disaffection or desertions to the enemy. High-ranking officers tell you that they're amazed at the speed with which the ROKs learned to handle tanks and heavy weapons and all the complex machinery of modern war. As students, they have tenacious, single-track minds. Once they learn a thing right, they'll do it that way every time. Their discipline is strictly Oriental.

Here are a couple of examples: An ROK officer sent a detachment out to clear a minefield. When the tanks went through, one was disabled by a mine. The officer called in the leader of the mine-lifting detail and said: "One thing we do not do is lose tanks except to direct enemy action." And then he shot the soldier whose detachment had missed the mine.

An American sergeant and two of his ROK pals broke the rules, went for a joyride and damaged some equipment. Our sergeant lost his stripes; the two ROKs were shot. They know how to take care of themselves in these cold mountains. There is a ROK division in the line that hasn't suffered a single case of frost-bite. Their attachment to their weapons is personal and almost fanatical. They take good care of them, and will spend men to save equipment. Our high command out here is convinced that whatever we give them they will use and use well, and the officers and men who fought alongside them agree.

There is another impression from these past few days. The policy of non-segregation is really working. The relationship between white and colored troops would amaze anyone who was in the late war or in the beginning of this one, for that matter. There is no strain, and the men seem to regard their officers on their merit, without any regard to color.

Several correspondents with considerable experience in reporting war, newly arrived in this theatre, have said to each other: "I can't get the feel of this war. There's something about it that impresses you on every hand. But this sense of strangeness probably comes more from what might be called lack of a sense of mission, a definite objective. Before, there was a prospect of victory, an end to the fighting and relaxation. But that prospect does not exist or excite out here. There is no feeling that there is a climax or decision over the horizon or over the next hill. Perhaps this feeling of strangeness has to do with the relative luxury in which the correspondent lives, compared to conditions in the late war, and maybe part of it comes from the fact that this isn't our kind of war. Americans and Germans are the exponents of the fast-moving, heavy-fire-power war of movement. There isn't much movement here, except by patrols. And then, traditionally, American troops are better in attack than in the dogged kind of defense in which the British excel - and this is mainly a defensive war. The sense of having no mission is shared by officers and men, but it does no damage or it appears to do no damage to what is generally called morale. This is a tough, well-trained army, maybe as good as any we ever had. You don't hear much complaint, except from the professional officers who would like to do some more fighting. The present high morale is due to one word: Rotation. No one can see the end of the war, but he can see the end of his personal part in it - and that prospect pleases. Morale is also good because of a phrase you hear over and over again from the old hands: We never had it so good.

This is Ed Murrow recording in Korea.

Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, December 24, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

SEVAREID: ..... And, now, for a special recording made in Seoul, Korea, on Christmas Eve, here is Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Korea! ... Christmas Eve! ... and I should like to make this brief report for Casey, our seven-year-old son. This may be an abuse of privilege, but I hope not. There are a lot of fathers out here and when you talk to them about this time of year, ask them what they would like to be doing at Christmas, they say they'd like to see their sons or daughters around the Christmas tree and, of course, their wives. The other day one of those fathers was showing me pictures of his son...they all carry pictures and will show them to you without any urging ... and he said: "Why don't you do a broadcast for Casey and for other little boys whose fathers are out here? Tell 'em what it's like." I said I'd try but probably wouldn't do it very well because I haven't been out here very long, certainly not as long as the other Dads, and I'd be going home pretty soon and maybe I'd get it all wrong, never tried anything like it before, but here goes, and, if you're listening, Case, don't go to sleep in the middle of this one the way you usually do.

I'm talking from a place called Seoul. When the war started the North Koreans captured it because they surprised the South Koreans and they had more soldiers and more tanks. The city was bombed and shelled and most of the houses were knocked down. Finally, our soldiers and the soldiers of the other nations thathad decided they would fight rather than have the Communists capture this country, we took the city. They landed from boats at a place called Inchon, not far from here, and the people of Seoul were glad to see them because the Communists ran away and they were free again. A lot of our soldiers were killed, fighting their way back up here, because Korea is mostly mountains and the Communists would sit up on the high hills and shoot at our boys with rifles and cannons and our boys had to climb up the hills, but they were brave and the Air Force helped a lot, dropping bombs on the enemy, and the Navy helped by firing big guns from the warships and putting soldiers and Marines ashore behind the enemy lines. They used landing barges, just like that toy one you have, Case, only much bigger, of course. But the Communists were brave, too, and they fought very well, but our boys were helped by the South Koreans and also by soldiers from England and Turkey and France and all the countries that had agreed to fight alongside us, and now our General Van Fleet has his headquarters here in Seoul and the soldiers have put up a big Merry Christmas sign with cardboard reindeer on it, also a Christmas tree with colored lights. Today, Santa Claus arrived there in a helicopter and the General gave out presents.

The Korean children are very quiet and well-behaved. Their eyes are black, their skin a sort of golden brown, and when it's cold their cheeks shine like the red side of a well-polished apple, and a lot of them have no mother or father to give them presents at Christmas time because their parents were killed during the fighting, so the American soldiers give them presents and parties. The Korean kids remind them of their own kids back home and, if you could see the big smile on a little Korean boy's face when he gets just one little toy costing maybe ten cents, you would realize what a lucky fellow you are. The Korean children don't have much warm clothing, but then they canstand the cold better than we can (they're used to it) and they don't skate the way we do, standing up. They squat down and push themselves along with two little sticks. They raise a lot of rice in Korea and they work very hard and the people are terribly poor, but they're proud and friendly and they love their country as much as we do ours. They work way up on the side of mountains, building little terraces for the rice and right now there's a little snow in the bottom of the furrows, but the brown edges are bare. Looks like someone had scattered flour in the furrows or traced with white chalk on a brown blackboard. The Koreans don't have many automobiles and they carry huge loads on their backs. A Korean half my size can carry twice what I could. Their legs arestrong from climbing those mountains. These people are fighting for their country just like we once did. Ask Mom to show you that picture of Valley Forge again and you'll get the idea. It's pretty cold out here, Casey boy, but not much colder than when we were putting those lights on the outdoor tree last Christmas. Our soldiers have lots of warm clothing and all the food they can eat. The presents from home have been pouring in. There must be more fruit cake in Korea than you could put in the Empire State Building. Our soldiers are up there in the mountains north of Seoul. Mostly they live in tents or holes dug in the ground and lined with logs. They keep warm by burning oil in little round stoves. There isn't any electricity up there and they use candles or lanterns and right at the front they daren't show any kind of light or the Communists will shoot at them and right now some boy's Dad, lots of them, in fact, will be looking, straining his eyes, to see if the Communists are trying to sneak up the hill and kill him. The war doesn't stop for Christmas, you know, and, then, when that father can get back to his tent, he'll have some hot coffee and relax and there will be a picture, maybe on the wall of his tent, probably in his pocketbook, and he'll take that picture out and look at it, picture of his wife and a little guy about your size, -- who forgot to comb his hair! -- and that soldier will be so lonesome that he won't want to talk to anyone, just sit there and think of home. He remembers the first time he took his boy fishing, just as I remember that two-pound heavy bass you caught, and maybe he'll smoke that new pipe his son sent him. Maybe he'll decide to write his son a letter, but it probably won't be a very good letter, just as this isn't a very good report to you, because loneliness on Christmas Eve must be felt, not written about, and that Dad up near the front won't be waked early tomorrow morning by the shouts of his son who found that new train under the tree. He will be waked by a Sergeant or he may be waked by a Communist artillery shell exploding, but if it's a quiet night with no fighting he may dream that he's home and when he wakes there will be that second when he thinks maybe he is home and then he will have to go back to the fighting. He will probably pick up his gun, put on his helmet, tap the pocket that holds the pictures, and go out to his tank or his gun and he will still be lonely. I can't quite figure out how to tell you how lonely that father will be, Casey boy. I suppose it's as though you went away, thousands of miles away, to a strange school and you wouldn't see Mom or Dad for maybe a couple of years and the boys in the next school were always trying to kill you. You'd be mighty lonely on Christmas Eve. Maybe you'd have trouble, keeping from crying just a little when you talked with the other fellows about home. Well, there are a lot of Dads out here in Korea who feel sort of that way tonight and I think it would be all right with them if I said, for them, to all the little boys and girls who have Dads out here ... God bless you, Merry Christmas, do what Mom tells you or I'll wallop you when I get home.

Good night and good luck!

Ed.trans.A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Late today we received from Korea a report that Ed Murrow recorded the other day after visiting the base of one of our toughest jet fighter groups in Korea and here it is.

MURROW: This is Korea! There are many things about fighter pilots that no earth-bound man can understand. Their testing time comes when no other man is there to see or hear. They walk a little apart because lonely men worry only about themselves and, therefore, they don't worry very much. I spent today with the 4th Interceptor Group, a Sabrejet outfit. Major Jack Gibbons, from Dayton, Ohio, offered me a cigar as soon as I arrived. He had just had word that he had a son. I said: "Maybe I can make a short message to your wife. What should it be?" And he thought and replied: "I can't think of the words. You see, I'm a public relations officer and I always have to think of things for other people to say and when it comes to me I can't think." The cigar was very good! Then, there was Lieutenant John Lake, from Lancaster, Ohio. He would like Charlotte and Cynthia to keep their noses clean. Lieutenant Tim Callahan, from East St. Louis, is sure that Anne will know that he would like to be with her at their favorite table at Beverley's. And Don Miller, from New York City, received three pipes and he likes them all. There is another pilot who says he has what he calls a complete Papa-Son outfit, white clothes and black hat, like the Koreans wear, and he also has a pair of Korean-type skates and if he gets shot down he's just going to skate back to our lines. He's figures out all the river lines.

Lieutenant James Porter, from Fort Worth, Texas, allows that it's just as cold in Texas but somehow it's better than here. Captain Bill Louis, from Manchester, New Hampshire, hopes to hack down some more MIGs and he would also like to see his two-year-old.

They flew a mission today up near the Yalu. The boys who weren't flying sat around as they always do and made rude comments about take-offs and landings. Some MIGs were seen, but they ran for the Yalu. Others were lost in the sun. Four Group didn't lose anybody today. It was a nice day. It was thawing about noon and the boys know how to watch for the MIGs that may try to sit up there in the sun and their eyes were more than a little tired when they came back in the late afternoon. They have a sign outside Base Operations that reads "Fourth but Best." Fighter pilots always look you straight in the eye. When they take off you want to go with them, but today I pushed a micro-phone in front of Major Robinson Wisner, just before he took off. He's an ace, six MIGs to his credit, and all he could think to say was - Merry Christmas!

My colleague, Bill Downs, has been traveling by the roads of Korea today and here is his report.

DOWNS: If a GI truck driver ever meets Genghis Khan sometime in the great eternity they will have one common topic of conversation - the impossible roads of Korea. The roads today are still as hard, dusty, cold, and bumpy as they were when the Mongol invaders traversed them centuries ago and we bet the same frozen rice paddies were there then as now. We spent the day traveling over about a hundred and fifty miles of these roads, - main supply routes they're now called, and they bear numbers such as three-thirty-three, two-Y, and so forth, but a stranger riding over them has the feeling that he's bumping along somewhere between the past and the present. Over the next hill, all of the six-by-six trucks, the weapons carriers, the bulldozers, and the tank transports will disappear and ancient Korea will again deep-freeze in its own tradition. You travel out of the ruins of Seoul where enterprising merchants advertise "No. 1 watch-fix," "Smart Laundry," and "Kim's Place, Souvenirs," and these signs all are temporary, of course, because to get out of town your driver plays a kind of tag with the pedestrians from six to seventy years of age. The magic touch hehas with his horn-blowing thumb is a wonder to behold. You join a convoy heading northward and in the country the drivers and the people seem to have reached a truce. The pedestrians walk along the outer four inches of the road. By keeping to this line they escape injury or possible death by something like an inch-and-a-half. Everyone seems happy about the arrangement.

The only crisis that developes, and it developes often, is when a Korean man or woman attempts to walk this tight line with an "A" frame loaded three times the height and breadth of the carrier. The convoys swerve around these people. But always there's the feeling that you've stepped out of your particular age into the past and among a people impervious to the irritations that worry you. It isn't so much the way the Koreans dress, ancient or modern, - it's, rather, their outward attitude toward such modern American and western wonders as the internal combustion engine, the airplane, and the jeep. We bundle up in swaddlings of Army woolens to keep warm only to see Korean women walking along the highway most of the time without a coat. Children push themselves over the frozen rice paddies, bareheaded, while our ears freeze under two layers of fur. Man ancient enough to be our great-grand-father walk with dignity, clad in wrappings of white cotton without a shiver. Well, most of the reason for this, of course, is abject poverty, but, if there can be dignity and poverty the Korean people have it.

MURROW: That was Bill Downs who has seen more of roads and people in war than most war correspondents.

This is Ed Murrow recording in Korea. Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, December 25, 1952
7:45-8:00 p.m.

SEVAREID: ..... Late today we received from Korea a report that Ed Murrow recorded the other day after visiting the base of one of our toughest jet fighter groups in Korea and here it is.

MURROW: This is Korea! There are many things about fighter pilots that no earth-bound man can understand. Their testing time comes when no other man is there to see or hear. They walk a little apart because lonely men worry only about themselves and, therefore, they don't worry very much. I spent today with the 4th Interceptor Group, a Sabrejet outfit. Major Jack Gibbons, from Dayton, Ohio, offered me a cigar as soon as I arrived. He had just had word that he had a son. I said: "Maybe I can make a short message to your wife. What should it be?" And he thought and replied: "I can't think of the words. You see, I'm a public relations officer and I always have to think of things for other people to say and when it comes to me I can't think." The cigar was very good! Then, there was Lieutenant John Lake (?), from Lancaster, Ohio. He would like Charlotte and Cynthia to keep their noses clean. Lieutenant Tim Callahan, from East St. Louis, is sure that Anne will know that he would like to be with her at their favorite table at Beverley's. And Don Miller, from New York City, received three pipes and he likes them all. There is another pilot who says he has what he calls a complete Papa-Son (?) outfit, white clothes and black hat, like the Koreans wear, andhe also has a pair of Korean-type skates and if he gets shot down he's just going to sakte back to our lines. He's figured out all the river lines.

Lieutenant James Porter, from Fort Worth, Texas, allows that it's just as cold in Texas but somehow it's better than here. Captain Bill Louis (?), from Manchester, New Hampshire, hopes to hack down some more MIGs and he would also like to see his two-year-old.

They flew a mission today up near the Yalu. The boys who weren't flying sat around as they always do and made rude comments about take-offs and landings. Some MIGs were seen, but they ran for the Yalu. Others werelost in the sun. Four Group didn't lose anybody today. It was a nice day. It was thawing about noon and the boys know how to watch for the MIGs that may try to sit up there in the sun and their eyeswere more than a little tired when they came back in the late afternoon. They have a sign outside Base Operations that reads "Fourth but Best." Fighter pilots always look you straight in the eye. When they take off you want to go with them, but today I pushed a microphone in front of Major Robinson Wisner (?), just before he took off. He's an ace, six MIGs to his credit, and all he could think to say was -- Merry Christmas!

My colleague, Bill Downs, has been traveling by the roads of Korea today and here is his report.

DOWNS: If a GI truck driver ever meets Genghis Khan sometime in the great eternity they will have one common topic of conversation -- the impossible roads of Korea. The roads today are still as hard,dusty, cold, and bumpy as they were when the Mongol invaders traversed them centuries ago and we bet the same frozen rice paddies were there then as now. We spent the day traveling over about a hundred and fifty miles of these roads, - main supply routes they're now called, and they bear numbers such as three-thirty-three, two-Y, and so forth, but a stranger riding over them has the feeling that he's bumping along somewhere between the past and the present. Over the next hill, all of the six-by-six trucks, the weapons carriers, the bulldozers, and the tank transports will disappear and ancient Korea will again deep-freeze in its own tradition. You travel out of the ruins of Seoul where enterprising merchants advertise "No. 1 watch-fix," "Smart Laundry," and "Kim's Place, Souvenirs," and these signs all are temporary, of course, because to get out of town your driver plays a kind of tag with the pedestrians from six to seventy years of age.. The magic touch hehas with his horn-blowing thumb is a wonder to behold. You join a convoy heading northward and in the country the drivers and the people seem to have reached a truce. The pedestrians walk along the outer four inches of the road. By keeping to this line they escape injury or possible death by something like an inch-and-a-half. Everyone seems happy about the arrangement.

The only crisis that developes, and it developes often, is when a Korean man or woman attempts to walk this tight line with an "A" frame loaded three times the heighth and breadth of the carrier. The convoys swerve around these people. But always there's the feeling that you've stepped out of your particular age into the past and among a people impervious to the irritations that worry you. It isn't so much the way the Koreans dress, ancient or modern, - it's, rather, their outward attitude toward such modern American and western wonders as the internal combustion engine, the airplane, and thejeep. We bundle up in swaddlings of Army woolens to keep warm only to see Korean women walking along the highway most of the time without a coat. Children push themselves over the frozen ride paddies, bareheaded, while our ears freeze under two layers of fur. Men ancient enough to be our great-grandfather walk with dignity, clad in wrappings of white cotton without a shiver. Well, most of the reason for this, of course, is abject poverty, but, if there can be dignity and poverty the Korean people have it.

MURROW: Thatwas Bill Downs who has seen more of roads and people in war than most war correspondents.

This is Ed Murrow recording in Korea. Goodnight and good luck.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

(HARD NEWS DONE FROM WASHINGTON BY ERIC SEVAREID - TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

SEVAREID: Ed Murrow has now completed his visit to Korea. And back in Tokyo tonite, with the aid of correspondents Bill Downs and Larry Lesouer, he recorded some impressions of his trip.

MURROW: This is Tokyo.

The brief visitor to Korea brings away the impression that he has been for a few days on another planet. It isn't just that there is a war going on. It's the sense of isolation, of being cut off. There is none of the tension or drama, the uncertainty of the first few months of the war. This has become an established, business-like war, where generals make decisions that would normally be made by battalion commanders, because the generals don't have anything else to do. The job done by the engineers is the most impressive I have ever seen. They must have hacked through the equivalent of half a dozen Ledo Roads, and you now ride in relative comfort and fair security right up to the main line of resistance. Division commanders don't do much travelling in jeeps; they use helicopters or light aircraft. From the military point of view, the change in the South Korean army is the most impressive, and from one end of the line to the other the American officers and troops sing their praise.

The weather for the past ten days was something of a surprise. Only a little snow on the northern slopes; some days a little thawing around noontime. It seems to me that the positions held by us and by the enemy make it almost impossible for one to destroy the other in position. If we're to reach or attempt to reach a military decision, we must get the enemy up out of his holes and caves and out in the open in a war of movement. And in order to do that we shall have to take enormous casualties. The enemy artillery is good. Much of it is excellent - and it's improving. He hasn't used his air strength. And if he should, some of our commanders in the field will have to remember the lessons of the last war about dispersal, camouflage and digging in - and the remembering could be expensive.

I was impressed with the youth of our troops, but that's probably because I am older. There is more of everything out here - food, transport, communications, even the Stars and Stripes is a bigger and better paper than it used to be.

Now, here are the impressions of another retread war correspondent, Bill Downs.

DOWNS: It was just an ordinary patrol that had been out in front of the lines. The fourteen men came back after about a four-and-a-half-hour probing the wide valley in front of them. Tension still lined their faces, wrinkling under the camouflage soot that patrolling soldiers wear as thick as the "pancake" of television actors. The outfit was American, bearing the name of one of the most famous regiments in the line. We waited until after the debriefing and while someone produced some coffee. The men lolled wearily in the warming bunker, a timbered, sandbagged space dug into the side of a Korean mountain, about the size of a large livingroom. Water was heating on the stove. And one by one the men soaked off the black from their faces and hands. The towels revealed that two of those soldiers were Negroes, seven were white, two of the men were brown, one being from Puerto Rico, the other from Guam, and the remaining two were yellow, South Koreans. There was no consciousness in that bunker that one man was a different color from the other. It wasn't the camouflage soot that made them the same either. It was something deeper, stemming from the fact that a patrol depends upon the cooperation of each individual member of it for its survival.

The debriefing report was simple. No contact with the enemy, signs of digging here and there, a warning about a particular draw that would make good ambush for the enemy. During the cleanup period and the post-operative relaxation that followed there was no nonsense about drinking cups and face towels or even language, as far as that was concerned. The fact of the patrol's survival lingered like the soot in the ears. As a matter of fact, the soot, which comes from the pipe of an outdoor stove, seemed to be a symbol of that particular segment of the Korean war. Every member of the patrol puts it on, whether he is black, white, yellow or borwn. A man tends to sweat profusely, even in the most bitterly cold weather, when he walks in no-man's-land, and sweat reflects light.

It struck me that the cauldron that is the war in Korea also is a melting pot, just as, diplomatically, the United Nations is a melting pot, and before the U.N., the United States was and is a melting pot. And it struck me then that perhaps the greatest good that will emerge from this Far Eastern crisis is an awareness that freedom-loving men of all races and nations will have proved that they can and must work and fight together if their freedom is to survive. The lesson of the soot, the lampblack from a frontline stove, is too obvious to belabor, but too important to forget.

MURROW: And here are some of the things that impressed Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: There's not a great deal of humor in Korea, not very much to laugh about. It gives you a sheepishly sentimental feeling when you see that our boys still take their job of fighting very seriously, but not themselves. The mountains of Korea are no pleasure resort, but you might think so from the grimly ironic signs you see all the way from the isolated outposts, over the hills, to army headquarters. Korea has its Sun Valleys, its Glacier National Parks, its Jackson Heights, and its Ozone Parks - all nicely lettered with that neat sense of G.I. humor. It also has its Aspirin Alleys, its Times Square and its Hollywood and Vine - all places that the Chinese have zeroed in with their remarkably accurate mortars and artillery. A sign in a mess hall informs you the burning time of this building is eighteen minutes. A water field location unit proudly boasts, "the drinks are on us." A more humble engineering platoon that built a bridge under fire and lost a lot of men doing it just says: "It's not much - but we built it."

There's not very much to do up at the front except to improve your dugout and make your bed more comfortable, but back of the lines the boys improve their shooting eye and their army rations with a little pheasant shooting. These treeless hills are full of native Mongolian ringneck pheasants. But our fly boys, they have a new stunt: deer hunting by helicopter. They hop over the hills with their choppers, a pilot and a shooter. When they see a few of the little fang-toothed deer, about the size of a greyhound, they land and nail them with a shot-gun. There are too many troops around to use rifles and, besides, our airmen say it's unsafe to hunt on foot because too many mines have been planted.

Well, you hay have heard a lot about how our men treated the Korean kids on Christmas, carved toys for them, saved a month's ration of candy bars and parachuted them down on an isolated Korean island. But what I like best to remember is what the Koreans kids did for us. There are a lot of orphan asylums in Korea, because there are more orphans here than any other place at the moment and there are more being made every day - but they're talented. I watched a batch of orphans from three years old to twelve hold a group of airmen enchanted with an enactment of the Nativity. And how they learned to sing our Christmas carols in so short a time, I'll never know, or to dance on their toes with something like the precision of a ballet company. I'll never forget the rapt look of wonder on American faces when a four-year-old orphan played our national anthem on a piano.

MURROW: You have been listening to three middle-aged war correspondents who have been privileged to spend a little time with the troops at the front.

This is Ed Murrow.

Good Night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, Dec. 26, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

SEVAREID: ... Ed Murrow has now completed his visit to Korea. And back in Tokyo tonite, with the aid of correspondents Bill Downs and Larry Lesueur, he recorded some impressions of his trip.

MURROW: This is Tokyo.

The brief visitor to Korea brings away the impression that he has has been for a few days on another planet. It isn't just that there is a war going on. It's the sense of isolation, of being cut off. There is none of the tension or drama, the uncertainty of the first few months of the war. This has become an established, business-like war, where generals make decisions that would normally be made by battalion commanders, because the generals don't have anything else to do. The job done by the engineers is the most impressive I have ever seen. They must have hacked thru the equivalent of half a dozen Ledo Roads, and you now ride in relative comfort and fair security right up to the main line of resistance. Division commanders don't do much travelling in jeeps; they use helicopters or light aircraft. From the military point of view, the change in the South Korean army is the most impressive, and from one end of the line to the other the American officers and troops sing their praise.

The weather ~~fmmm~~ for the past ten days was something of a surprise. Only a little snow on the northern slopes; some days a little thawing around noontime. It seems to me that the positions held by us and by the enemy make it almost impossible for one to destroy the other in position. If we're to reach or attempt to reach a military decision, we must get the enemy up out of his holes and daves and out in the open in a war of movement. And in order to do that we shall have to take enormous casualties. The enemy artillery is good. Much of it is excellent - and it's improving. He hasn't used his air strength. And if he should, some of our commanders in the field will have to remember the lessons of the last war about dispersal, camouflage and digging in - and the remembering could be expensive.

I was impressed with the youth of our troops, but that's probably because I am older. There is more of everything out here - food, transport, communications, even the Stars and Stripes is a bigger and better paper than it used to be.

Now, here are the impressions of another retread war correspondent ... Bill Downs.

DOWNS: It was just an ordinary patrol that had been out in front of the lines. The fourteen men came back after about a four-and-a-half-hour probing the wide valley in front of them. Tension still lined their faces, wrinkling under the camouflage soot that patrolling soldiers wear as thick as the "pancake" of television actors. The outfit was American, bearing the name of one of the most famous regiments in the line. We waited until after the debriefing and while someone produced some coffee. The men lolled wearily in the warming bunker, a timbered, sandbagged space dug into the side of a Korean mountain, about the size of a large livingroom. Water was heating on the stove. And one by one the men soaked off the black from their faces and hands. The towels revealed that two of those soldiers were Negroes, seven were white, two of the men were brown, one being from Puerto Rico, the other from Guam, and the remaining two were yellow, South Koreans. There was no consciousness in that bunker that one man was a different color from the other. It wasn't the camouflage soot that made them the same either. It was something deeper, stemming from the fact that a patrol depends upon the cooperation of each individual member of it for its survival.

The debriefing report was simple. No contact with the enemy, signs of digging here and there, a warning about a particular draw that would make good ambush for the enemy. During the cleanup period and the post-operative relaxation that followed there was no nonsense about drinking cups and face towels or even language, as far as that was concerned. The fact of the patrol's survival lingered like the soot in the ears. As a matter of fact, the soot, which came from the pipe of an outdoor stove, seemed to be a symbol of that particular segment of the Korean war. Every member of the patrol puts it on, whether he is black, white, yellow or brown. A man tends to sweat profusely, even in the most bitterly cold weather, when he walks in no-man's-land, and sweat reflects light.

It struck me that the cauldron that is the war in Korea also is a melting pot, just as, diplomatically, the United Nations is a melting pot, and before the U.N., the United States was and is a melting pot. And it struck me then that perhaps the greatest good that will emerge from this Far Eastern crisis is an awareness that freedom-loving men of all races and nations will have proved that they can and must work and fight together if their freedom is to survive. The lesson of the soot, the lampblack from a frontoline stove, is too obvious to belabor but too important to forget.

MURROW: And here are some of the things that impressed Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: There's not a great deal of humor in Korea, not very much to laugh about. It gives you a sheepishly sentimental feeling when you see that our boys still take their job of fighting very seriously, but not themselves. The mountains of Korea are no pleasure resort, but you might think so from the grimly ironic signs you see all the way from the isolated outposts, over the hills, to army headquarters. Korea has its Sun Valleys, its Glacier National Parks, its Jackson Heights, and its Ozone Parks - all nicely lettered with that neat sense of G.I. humor. It also has its Aspirin Alleys, its Times Square and its Hollywood and Vine - all places that the Chinese have zeroed in with their remarkably accurate mortars and artillery. A sign in a mess hall informs you the burning time of this building is eighteen minutes. A water field location unit proudly boasts, "the drinks are on us." A more humble engineering platoon that built a bridge under fire and lost a lot of men doing it just says: "It's not much - but we built it."

There's not very much to do up at the front except to improve your dugout and make your bed more comfortable, but back of the lines the boys improve their shooting eye and their army rations with a little pheasant shooting. These treeless hills are full of native Mongolian ringneck pheasants. But our fly boys, they have a new stunt: deer hunting by helicopter. They hop over the hills with their choppers, a pilot and a shooter. When they see a few of the little fang-toothed deer, about the size of a greyhound, they land and nail them with a shotgun. There are too many troops around to use rifles and, besides, our airmen say it's unsafe to hunt on foot because too many mines have been planted.

Well, you may have heard a lot about how our men treated the Korean kids on Christmas, carved toys for them, saved a month's ration of candy bars and parachuted them down on an isolated Korean island. But what I like best to remember is what the Korean kids did for us. There are a lot of ~~xxxx~~ orphan asylums in Korea, because there are more orphans here than any other place at the moment and there are more being made every day - but they're talented. I watched a batch of orphans from three years old to twelve hold a group of airmen enchanted with an enactment of the Nativity. And how they learned to sing our Christmas carols in so short a time, I'll never know, or to dance on their toes with something like the precision of a ....? Ballet company. I'll never forget the rapt look of wonder on American faces when a four-year-old orphan played our national anthem on a piano.

MURROW: You have been listening to three middle-aged war correspondents who have been privileged to spend a little time with the troops at the front.

This is Ed Murrow.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

Charles Collingwood
29 December 7:45 PM

monday -

MURROW NEWS

This is Charles Collingwood. Mr. Murrow has been delayed on his return from Korea. He has a cold and he's awfully tired and they made him get a good night's rest. Nevertheless, we'll hear a report from him in a few minutes.

Now, here's the news: General Hoyt Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, said today that Soviet Russia has produced five times as many planes as the United States during the last five years. General Vandenburg warned that any further cutback in U.S. plane production would be catastrophic.

The Marine Corps today presented Senator Joseph McCarthy with six medals. The awards, including the Distinguished Flying Cross, were made to Senator McCarthy for his service as a Marine air combat intelligence officer during World War II nine years ago. Senator McCarthy referred to his current and future activities in an interview in the magazine U.S. News and World Report. He said one of his first activities will be an investigation of subversive influences in the nations colleges. "It will be an awfully unpleasant task," he said but indicated he would go ahead nonetheless.

Four members of the grand jury which looked into communism among American employees of the United Nations testified today that they had the impression that the State Department and the Justice department sought to stifle their report. Government officials named promptly denied the charge, but Senator Herbert O'Conor, Democrat of Maryland, immediately demanded that Secretary of State Acheson act at once to ensure a complete cleanout of disloyal Americans working for the U.N.

President-elect Eisenhower named Robert Cutler, a Boston Banker, to be one of his administrative assistants in the White House. Mr. Cutler, who is President of the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston, will be responsible for coordinating the work of the top level National Security Council.

Abroad, Gerhart Eisler, once the top Communist agent in the United States who jumped bail and escaped to East Germany on the Polish ship Batory, has been fired from his job as propaganda chief of the Communist part of Germany. Eisler's fall from grace has led to speculation that he may figure in a purge trial like that just concluded in Czechoslovakia.

France is still in the throes of a cabinet crisis. Former Premier Georges Bidault has agreed to try to form a government. Observers don't give him much chance to become France's 18th premier in the last 8 years.

Those who compile the grim statistics of holiday accidents have counted 740 deaths over the Christmas weekend. 552 died in traffic. With a similar New Years weekend coming up, safety counsellors are urging caution on all drivers.

In the radio news business there's an expression called "putting one in the bank." ... an extra piece you do just in case something happens. Before Mr. Murrow left for home, he recorded one for the bank...

TAPE - RUNS 7:52
RETURN CUE: "GOODNITE AND GOOD LUCK"

The biggest noise on the Korean front today came from Communist propaganda loudspeakers. As the fighting died down, they urged U.N. troops to surrender and enjoy a big New Year's celebration... Last week they were boasting that they would be in Seaul by Christmas.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD. I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS..... FIRST, BOB DIXON

FOOTNOTE

They say you can tell a man by the friends he keeps. A prominent physician says you can also tell by the food he eats. Candy and hot dogs are "reward food"...eaten by people who feel sorry for themselves. Milk is a"security" food...appreciated most by those under emotional stress. And if you eat baked beans, says the learned doctor, you're looking for a pleasurable association - like you beloved Aunt Clarissa.

This is Charles Collingwood in New York.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, Dec. 29, 1952
7:45-8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In the radio news business there's an expression called "putting One in the Bank", an extra piece you do, just in case something happens. Before Mr. Murrow left for home, he recorded "one for the bank".

MURROW: This is Tokyo.

I doubt that any reporter could leave Korea without a certain sense of regret, a sense akin to shame. So many old friends and new ones left behind, so much loneliness, so much friendship freely given. There is a simplicity about Korea. You try to keep warm, keep an eye on the rotation points, don't worry about the big picture, and try to stay alive. Already, here in Tokyo names begin to fade, but not the faces or manners of our troops, the real dignity and restraint of the MPs at Panmunjom who deal directly with the enemy; the youngsters who climbed a hill from rifle-pits out in front of the main line of resistance back to a company C.P., and when you asked them if they'd like to send a message home, they were shy and sort of embarrassed and said, "aw, well, you know how it is. I ... I can't think of anything;" and the farther forward you got, the more gratitude there was that someone from home bothered to come and ask how they were making out. There is nothing good about war except the men who fight it - and they are better than other men. And when you're with them you are often frightened and always you feel a little ashamed when you leave them to return to the comforts and complexities of civilian life.

I do not believe that this worldwide struggle can be settled here in Korea with guns, and I have met no one out here who thinks it can. But there is a cemetery near Pusan, with the flags of twenty-one nations brave in the winter sun. Those nations agreed to fight rather than see another free nation go down under the tide of Communism. This may be only the opening gambit that will lead to ultimate collision and chaos, but it was here that the free world chose to stand and fight, and aggression was stopped - and a new nation is being born. And here is Larry Lesueur to tell you something about it.

LESUEUR: Much has been said and written of the fighting, but little of the people and of the rocks and the bleakness of that upheaved sea of granite called Korea. Yet to this reporter it seems that it is here that the struggle for Asiatic leadership is being waged. There are certainly better places to fight a war than on that chain of volcanic ridges which criss-cross without any visible pattern, a peninsula about twice as big as Long Island. But altho this may not be the ground of our own choosing, this is where the battle for Asiatic leadership is being waged, where we may win it or lose it. It's plain to this reporter that Korea is not a battle for real estate, where there are no strategic objectives. This is a fight for prestige or, as many a GI will now remind you, a battle for what the Orientals call fate. When it's all over, if it ever is, it will have proved which side in Asia, the free men or the Communists, have the most powerful protector - America or Russia. It's Korea's misfortune that it happens to be a place where two world collide. The backwardness of Korea's civilization makes it difficult to estimate its losses in money. Its wealth lies underground in the natural resources, the unworked ores thrown up by a volcanic bath. The toll of Korean life is even more difficult to estimate, because many people just fade away and die in the isolated mountain villages, uncounted and unsung.

But there's another side to the war in Korea, as many a GI will be quick to tell you. Enough of them have been here long enough to witness and to sense a dramatic change. South Korea is going thru a rebirth, out of the agony of war. War is hell, as everyone who has seen it knows. But the very nature of its urgencies achieved accomplishments impossible under any other circumstances. Korea is being pushed before the very eyes of our soldiers from a primitive civilization thru the machine age and into the age of .....? and linked planets. The Gooks of last year who were always "bugging out", they are the ROK army of today, the best infantrymen in Korea. And it's not just a change in appearances, from the rags and tatters of an Oriental army into darkskinned soldiers and full American war equipment; it's a change in morale for the Koreans, a sort of pride in mission, and the interchange that comes when a woodchopper and a paddy-field worker learns to fly an airplane, operate a tank and twirl the dials of an ultra-high-frequency radio, learned with an intensity in the schools behind the lines, born of knowing that his life and the life of his family and nation depend upon it. Life has never been easy in Korea, I guess, from the days of the Manchus thru the long years of Japanese occupation. But mass education of its young men by a 1952 America, under the compulsion of survival, seems to be breeding a nation out here in the Far East, a nation with a miserable past, an unhappy present, but perhaps a future worth fighting for. I don't think they'll let it slide back into the past.

MURROW: Amongst the troops in Korea there is one subject of conversation - and that is rotation. Here now is Bill Downs.

DOWNS: The Korean war has become so bogged down in fruitless negotiation and in a static battle line that it almost takes a historian to define its aims and origins. The confusion is particularly evident among the American soldiers, who, like many of us back home, have forgotten the reasons for being in Korea at all. Ask an American soldier why he's in Korea, and he looks a little puzzled, as if the question is foolish. He'll probably say that he's in Korea because a draft board called him up, found him fit, and that's that. If you're asking the same man what he's fighting for, ~~and~~ likely as not, he'll say "points". Points are the ingenious rotation system the armed services have set up in an attempt to make the burden of Korean service as fair as possible to all. And, considering the complexity of the system, the point rotation plan does seem to be working. Roughly, the system goes something like this: A soldier, let us say, needs thirty-six points to qualify for rotation out of Korea. If he serves in a rear line area, then he gets two points a month; if he serves in the front lines, where he's in danger of becoming a casualty, then he gets three points a month. Consequently, the soldier doing the dangerous job qualifies for rotation from Korea in two-thirds the time the rear area soldier does. Well, the result is that there is a constant stream of applications by soldiers in the rear for front-line assignments, because, literally, the living at the stabilized front as it is today is sometimes even better than living at a port like Pusan.

But the thing that is most striking about the Americans fighting this war is that they have adopted a fatalistic, almost professional military attitude toward the whole situation. They know that they are not there to win a victory, at least not the kind of victory which marked the ends of the European and Japanese conflicts; they have heard that they are supposed to be stopping Communist aggresion - but this is a negative thing. Stopping aggression means being fired at by concealed enemy guns and daily risking one's life without advancing a step. Thus, the growing fatalism. A man who is killed on patrol or gets wounded by an enemy mortar is not shedding his blood necessarily for the cause of freedom and the United Nations, at least no one says so out loud; this man has just plain been unlucky. The attitude is that it's too bad, but maybe my luck will hold until the points pile up and I can go home. The attitude is not as cold-blooded as it seems, nor is morale bad. The ordinary GI regards the Korean war as a nasty bit of duty, something like diplomatic kitchen police, that someone has to do. He and everyone else wants to get it over with.

MURROW: You've been listening to Larry Lesueur and Bill Downs comparing impressions of the Korean war. This is Ed Murrow. Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Edichone trans./E. Scheiner

urgent

collingwood
wtop

Tuesday December 30
1952 operator: please double space

Good ~~w~~ evening:

The President today refused to tell a House committee the names of ~~the~~ the State Department officials who screened American applicants for United Nations Jobs. Secretary of State Acheson so informed the committee. And the group in turn invited the secretary to testify on Wednesday. Today, the department's legal adviser, Adrian Fisher, says the President will soon order an F.B.I. check of all Americans who work for the U.N. And Roy Cohen, a special assistant to attorney general Mc Granery, said that a number of Americans known to have been involved in spying and other communist activities are still employed by the United Nations. ~~Mr. Cohen said the State Department gave a clean bill of health to some "very bad subversives." Although Mr. Fisher said the Department has not given a clean bill of health to any U.N. employes.~~

Senator Taft and three other senators met with General Eisenhower in New York today. Adter the meeting, Taft said: they agreed on "adequate consultation" of senators before additional federal appoi tments are made by the General. The Senator still thinks the appointment of Martin P. Durkin, a Democrat, to be secretary of labor was "incredible." He also believes General Ei enhower will co-operate with Congress..there will be no difficulty working out a new legislative program..and it will be a "harmonious one." The General today received a visit from F.B.I. chief J. Edgar Hoover and he sent General Ridgeway, the NATO commander, a new years message saying he hopes next year will see more economic, political and military unity in Western Europe.

Senator Lehman of New York says a fight will be made on the opening day of the Congress ..that's on Saturday.. to tighten the Senate's anti-filibuster rule..so that civil rights legislation has a better chance to pass.

And Tukegee Institute reports that in the year of 1952..for the first time since 1882...the United States did not have a single death from mob violence...the first lynch-less year we've ever recorded.

The President today approved continued military and economic aid to Great Britain, France and Italy even though they have shipped about two and a half million follars worth of strategic materials behind the iron curtain. Mr. Truman says all the shipments were contracted for before Congress passed a law saying we should cut off aid to any countries shipping strategic goods to Russia or her satellites.

A House armed services committee said today that the Administration failed to make a maximum use of South Kore's manpower.. and did not deliver promised military aid to Chiang Kai Shek's Chinese Nationalists. The committee feels that the South Koreans can supply most of the men needed to fight in Korea.. although its opposed to any "precipitate withdrawal of American troops." The committee also recommends that we use Chinese troops from Formosa in Korea.

Ed Murrow, who is just back from Korea, is feeling much better and plans to fly to New York from the West Coast later tonight. One of the reporters who made the trip to Korea with Ed is in New York tonight ready to tell you some of his impressions. Go ahead, Joe.

--Joe Wershba--

4 minutes

(Charlie: Wershba runs and return cue is: "by raising arms skyward like the ruined walls of Seoul and asking: Lord, Lord why hast thou forsaken us)

That was Joe Wershba, just back from Korea where the temperature ranged from six to 13 above zero today..with snow, rain and sleet falling over most of the front. Allied troops recaptured an outpost they lost on the western front.

And General Clark's headquarters today raised to 40 points the nu,ber a behind the lines soldier needs for rotation home after the first of the year. It used to be 38 points. But Clark's headquarters says the additional points will be necessary because of a lack of replacements from home.

Prime Minister Churchill left Great Britain tonight..for the United States..after a secret meeting with his senior cabinet ministers.

And Dr. Alan Nunn May, Britain's atomic spy, released from prison yesterday after serving six years and eight months, issued a statement saying he still believes he "acted rightly" in giving allied secrets to Russia. He says he had no "treasonable intentions"..was wholeheartedly cpncerned with victory over Germany and Japan and the furtherance of development of the peaceful use of atomic energy.

In France, F rnoer Premier Bidault says he has given up all efforts to try to form a new French government.

Well, that's the news:

(Then Collingwood expounds)

love

zousmer

Actually, this is the report of a tourist in Korea. ~~This was my first~~ And first impressions remain strongest. We landed near Seoul late at night. The blackout was on, but there was enough moon to see bombed-out buildings. They were the first I had ever seen with my own eyes. As we passed by one after another, a word kept repeating. The word was sacrilege. Sacrilege had been committed and remained stamped on the face of these bombed out buildings. It was like a barbarian tearing the pages from a holy book and throwing the emptied covers into the face of a devout believer. Unnecessary, cruel, inhuman, a vile offense against the spirit. And here now, these gutted buildings in Seoul, the rubble still left in some, and their broken walls reaching up to the sky like the tortured arms of a man in prayer, intoning the ancient words: 'Lord, Lord, why hast Thou forsaken us.' This, they have done to our side. And this, we have done to them. Women and children were once shetltered here. On both sides.// There is much sacrilege in Korea.

Another impression remains with the tourist in Korea. The night there was no moon, and you crossed the mile or two near the bridge in blackout. We could see nothing. But your jeep driver said he had travelled the bridge in blackout so often, he could do it blindfold. He didnt need the blind. He travelled by memory, by the feel of the roadbed under him. He crossed the bridge in comfort and safety. Less fortunate drivers have rammed into the bridge railing. And a few luckless ones have gone through the railing and into the icy river below. Our ride left quite an impression: men born with eyes to see, adjusting to a world of their own making--a world of darkness and blindness. And as you travel the bumpy darkness, you wonder how much more of the world will be darkened and blinded before the light comes through.

Some other impressions of the tourist in Korea....All Korean ceilings and doorways are built too low--FOR US. Ed Murrow kept score on how many times I smashed my head into low doorways--I think it was 32....Many Koreans speak enough English to get by. Few Americans know any Korean. If there's supposed to be any backwardness in the Orient, we better get our backwardnesses straightened out--right now.....You remember the soldiers and fliers with records of great bravery in combat who say they would prefer not to come under fire again. They teach you that courage and bravery mean carrying out responsibilities--not looking for unnesessary risk....The French and Dutch troops in their G.I. uniforms look more like Americans than the G.I.s themselves....The Australians still carry the greatest appeal for you--their delicious accent and the way they go into combat wearing cowboy-style slouch hats....You're told the war is quiet and in stalemate...and each day near Seoul the big plane evacuates the wounded.

No one knows how or when the war will end. No one on our side believes the world will be better off if the United Nations withdraw. The British captain bids you farewell and says: 'Do come and visit with us again next year.' It's a joke...a joke with all the troops except they're beginning to wonder where the joke ends, and where the fact begins.

The tourist in Korea finds men performing new miracles of labor, ~~there.~~ Mountains are being moved to make roads. Enough food is sent in for troops, to raise the living standards of entire undeveloped countries. Enough medicines for soldiers in Korea to raise the life-span of whole populations. Enough metal, gun-powder, tires, shell-casings, clothing, oil, gasoline to build great new cities--where men would use their eyes to see and not to blind in blackout drives across strtegic bridges. And so the final impression of Korea is one that is thousands of years old--Man has not yet learned how to channel his magnificent human energies into human activities. The brotherhood of man is still a wild dream. And they'll be crossing the bridge at Seoul in blackout tonight. ~~Perhaps one can find solace--and comfort for the spldier in the front line bunker of Korea as the new year approaches--by raising [redacted] arms skyward like the [redacted] ruined walls of Seoul, and asking: Lord, Lord why has thou forsaken us.~~

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

COLLINGWOOD: Good Evening:

The President today refused to tell a House committee the names of the State Department officials who screened American applicants for United Nations jobs. Secretary of State Acheson so informed the committee. And the group in turn invited the secretary to testify on Wednesday. Today, the department's legal adviser, Adrian Fisher, says the President will soon order an F.B.I. check of all Americans who work for the U.N. and Roy Cohen, a special assistant to attorney general McGranery, said that a number of Americans known to have been involved in spying and other communist activities are still employed by the United Nations.

Senator Taft and three other senators met with General Eisenhower in New York today. After the meeting, Taft said they agreed on "adequate consultation" of senators before additional federal appointments are made by the General. The Senator still thinks the appointment of Martin P. Durkin, a Democrat, to be secretary of labor was "incredible." He also believes General Eisenhower will cooperate with Congress; there will be no difficulty working out a new legislative program, and it will be a "harmonious one."

Senator Lehman of New York says a fight will be made on the opening day of the Congress, that's on Saturday, to tighten the Senate's anti-filibuster rule, so that civil rights legislation has a better chance to pass.

And Tukegee Institute reports that in the year of 1952, for the first time since 1882, the United States did not have a single death from mob violence, the first lynch-less year we've ever recorded.

The President today approved continued military and economic aid to Great Britain, France and Italy even though they have shipped about two and a half million dollars worth of strategic materials behind the iron curtain. Mr. Truman says all the shipments were contracted for before Congress passed a law saying we should cut off aid to any countries shipping strategic goods to Russia or her satellites.

A House armed services committee said today that the Administration failed to make a maximum use of South Korea's manpower, and did not deliver promised military aid to Chiang Kai Shek's Chinese Nationalists. The committee feels that the South Koreans can supply most of the men needed to fight in Korea, although its opposed to any "precipitate withdrawal of American troops." The committee also recommends that we use Chinese troops from Formosa in Korea.

Ed Murrow, who is just back from Korea, is feeling much better and plans to fly to New York from the West Coast later tonight. One of the reporters who made the trip to Korea with Ed is Joe Wershba in New York tonight ready to tell you some of his impressions. Go ahead, Joe.

WERSHBA: Actually, this is the report of a tourist in Korea. And first impressions remain strongest. We landed near Seoul late at night. The blackout was on, but there was enough moon to see bombed-out buildings. They were the first I had ever seen with my own eyes. As we passed by one after another, a word kept repeating. The word was sacrilege. Sacrilege had been committed and remained stamped on the face of these bombed out buildings. It was like a barbarian tearing the pages from a holy book and throwing the emptied covers into the face of a devout believer. Unnecessary, cruel, inhuman, a vile offense against the spirit. And here now, these gutted buildings in Seoul, the rubble still left in some, and their broken walls reaching up to the sky like the tortured arms of a man in prayer, intoning the ancient words: 'Lord, Lord, why hast Thou forsaken us.' This, they have done to our side. And this, we have done to them. Women and children were once sheltered here. On both sides. There is much sacrilege in Korea.

Another impression remains with the tourist in Korea. The night there was no moon, and you crossed the mile or two near the bridge in blackout. We could see nothing. But your jeep driver said he had travelled the bridge in blackout so often, he could do it blindfold. He didn't need the blind. He travelled by memory, by the feel of the roadbed under him. He crossed the bridge railing. And a few luckless ones have gone through the railing and into the icy river below. Our ride left quite an impression: men born with eyes to see, adjusting to a world of their own making - a world of darkness and blindness. And as you travel the bumpy darkness, you wonder how much more of the world will be darkened and blinded before the light comes through.

Some other impressions of the tourist in Korea: All Korean ceilings and doorways are built too low for us. Ed Murrow kept score on how many times I smashed my head into low doorways - I think it was 32. Many Koreans speak enough English to get by. Few Americans know any Korean. If there's supposed to be any backwardness in the Orient, we better get our backwardnesses straightened out right now. You remember the soldiers and fliers with records of great bravery in combat who say they would prefer not to come under fire again. They teach you that courage and bravery mean carrying out responsibilities - not looking for unnecessary risk. The French and Dutch troops in their G.I. uniforms look more like Americans than the G.I.'s themselves. The Australians still carry the greatest appeal for you - their delicious accent and the way they go into combat wearing cowboy-style slouch hats. You're told the war is quiet and in stalemate, and each day near Seoul the big plane evacuates the wounded.

No one knows how or when the war will end. No one on our side believes the world will be better off if the United Nations withdraw. The British captain bids you farewell and says: 'Do come and visit with us again next year.' It's a joke - a joke with all the troops except they're beginning to wonder where the joke ends, and where the fact begins.

The tourist in Korea finds men performing new miracles of labor. Mountains are being moved to make roads. Enough food is sent in for troops, to raise the living standards of entire undeveloped countries. Enough medicines for soldiers in Korea to raise the life-span of whole populations. Enough metal, gun-powder, tires, shell-casings, clothing, oil, gasoline to build great new cities - where men would use their eyes to see and not to blind in blackout drives across strategic bridges. And so the final impression of Korea is one that is thousands of years old - Man has not yet learned how to channel his magnificent human energies into human activities. The brotherhood of man is still a wild dream. And they'll be crossing the bridge at Seoul in blackout tonight.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Joe Wershba, just back from Korea where the temperature ranged from six to 13 above zero today, with snow, rain and sleet falling over most of the front. Allied troops recaptured an outpost they lost on the western front.

And General Clark's headquarters today raised to 40 points the number a behind-the-lines soldier needs for rotation home after the first of the year. It used to be 38 points. But Clark's headquarters says the additional points will be necessary because of a lack of replacements from home.

Prime Minister Churchill left Great Britain tonight, for the United States, after a secret meeting with his senior cabinet ministers.

And Dr. Alan Nunn May, Britain's atomic spy, released from prison yesterday after serving six years and eight months, issued a statement saying he still believes he "acted rightly" in giving allied secrets to Russia. He says he had no "treasonable intentions" - was wholeheartedly concerned with victory over Germany and Japan and the furtherance of development of the peaceful use of atomic energy.

In France, Premier Bidault says he has given up all efforts to try to form a new French government.

Well, that's the news:

(REMAINDER OF COLLINGWOOD TEXT NOT AVAILABLE)

Wed.
Dec. 31, 1952.

This is the news:

Allied heavy artillery in Korea TODAY roared across the whole line, to mark the New Year. That was ten hours ago, Korean time. The Communists guns replied to our fire. Then there was quiet. A gentle snow fell across the whole battle line. Small patrols went out. And to the men at the front, as on Christmas Day, it was "just another day."

The Pentagon says we suffered another 175 casualties last week: 35 men killed in action..10 missing... 130 wounded.

The President said today that he feels the outlook for world peace is better than it was a year ago. At his last news conference of the year, Mr. Truman told reporters: he bases this statement on his knowledge of all the facts available to him.

General Eisenhower, here in New York, wished a happy New Year to the world, and said he hopes that next year will "bring back to us the assurance that peace is again coming to the world."

~~In their New Years statements: Tito said he is confident that another world war can be prevented "by those people who are responsible for the preservation of peace and peaceful co-operation." India's~~

2

In Washington today, Secretary of State Acheson told House Investigators that drastic measures are necessary and drastic measures are being taken to keep subversive Americans off the United Nations payroll. The Secretary said such people are not a danger to our national security, because they do not handle matters dealing with our national defense. But, he said, they do hurt our national interest and give our reputation "a bad name and a black eye." The Secretary said a great deal of progress had been made on security matters at the State Department. He said present regulations have forced him to stop taking important papers home after working hours; this puts him further behind in his work.

The House investigators also heard United States Attorney Myles J. Lane say that he'll start a new grand jury investigation next week of cases involving Alleged American communists employed by the U.N. A previous jury charged that the Justice and State Departments had tried to suppress its report.

AND ON THE PROBLEM OF COMMUNISTS WORKING FOR THE UN...THAT'S THE LATEST WORD.

(two second pause)

A Senate elections subcommittee reported today that the Democratic and Republican national candidates spent six million dollars in the November election...for political broadcasts. The Republicans spent just under three and a half millions...to 2.6 million for the Democrats. A little more than half of the six million went to radio stations...the rest to television.

31

Two members of the House committee that investigated pornographic books today disagreed with the majority report. Democratic Representatives Walter of Pennsylvani and Celler of New York said they have no quarrel with the committee's literary opinions; but they feel it is "not the province of any congressional committee to determine what is good, bad or indifferent literature. Because this carries with it echoes of thought control."

The Census Bureau reports that the population of this country grew more in 1952 than in any previous year: Its estimated that we now have almost 158 and a half million Americans. That's a gain of more than two and a half million for the year.

(two sec pause)

S

Here in New York we are faced with the biggest bus strike in our history at midnight. The C.I.O. Transport workers are demanding a 40-hour-week from eight private bus lines. The Board of Estimate has demanded that the union arbitrate its dispute. The union had turned down arbitration a few hours earlier. The threatened bus lines carry three and a half million fares a day in three boroughs: Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens.

In Washington, a federal jury has indicted the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on charges of filing false statements with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Colonel White, president of the B. and O says no statements were filed which misled anyone. He wants to see the charges before making additional comment.

6?

From Korea tonight we received a special recorded report, summing up the present relationship between the Chinese Communists and the Russians. Here's Robert P. Martin, from Tokyo.

(runs 4;10 return: "benefits russia rather than China)

An old colleague, Howard K. Smith is in New York tonight. Smith and six other CBS Radio news correspondents will join me tomorrow on a special radio report..."Years of Crisis" to be heard over most of these stations from 4;30 to 5;30 p.m. eastern standard time. Tonight I asked Howard K. Smith to record a report for you on the progress the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has made in Europe this year. Here it is:

(3;50 returns "its has been very dark indeed.")

It is good to be home again..(.my thanks to Sevareid and Collingwood for sitting in for me.).I had hoped...during eighty hours (continent + Pacific) of flying... some time watching the Korean fighting..and a couple of days wrestling with a flu bug, to..think of a new and appropriate New Years quotation.. but must revert to the old favourite from Heine....

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year."

Good night and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

E. R. MURROW

Wednesday, December 31, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... From Korea, tonight, we received a special recorded report, summing up the present relationship between the Chinese communists and the Russians. Here's Robert P. Martin from Tokyo.

MARTIN: Wach winter, when the icy winds come racing down from Siberia, the Chinese in Manchuria shiver inside their long cotton-padded gowns and talk disparagingly of 'long nose' weather. The Chinese, all except the die-hard communists, refer to the Russians as 'long noses.'

In bleak and winter-desolate Harbin, this last day of 1952, the Chinese are officially celebrating the end of 'long nose' control over the sprawling Chinese Changchun railway. Peking's propagandists are turning out thousands of words praising the Russians for their magnanimity. In theory, this should be the best winter the Chinese, in Manchuria, enjoyed since 1945, when long trains - groaning under the weight of industrial equipment the Russian army was stripping from every Manchurian factory - crossed the border into Siberia.

On paper, the Russians have done well by their Chinese comrades. Their treaty with Chiang-Kai-shek's China in 1945 gave them partnership in the railway network as well as Port Arthur as a naval base, and special economic privileges in Dairen.

In February, 1950, during Mao-Tse-tung's trip to Moscow, Stalin agreed to give up the railway by the end of 1952. Stalin has lived up to his agreement - on the last possible day. Actually, Stalin gave up very little. His troops are still in Port Arthur by special agreement with Peking. They have the right to guard every military train bringing supplies from Russia, across Manchuria, to Port Arthur. Russian goods have free transit rights across Manchuria to both Dairen and Port Arthur.

Most important of all - the Russians are partners of the Chinese in the joint operation of a large number of industrial companies, including the development of mines and raw material resources in Manchuria.

Thousands of Russian technicians and engineers dominate this development program.

Finally, although Manchuria is part of China, it is governed as a separate entity. It has its own regional regime headed by 47-yr. old Gol Gaung?, a Moscow-trained long-time communist. It has its own currency and its own trade agreements with Russia. Its police state system is separate from Peking and the Chinese cannot travelfreely into or out of Manchuria.

Russian influence, if not control, is a positive thing, and very easy to enforce in these circumstances.

Return ofthe 7,000-mi. long railway network, almost as large as the entire system in the rest of China, provides Peking with a powerful propaganda weapon. Since 1948, the Reds have been trying to convince the Chinese people that they are free of Kremlin control, and that Peking is independent.

They insist that the Russians are not imperialistic. Their propaganda claims that Soviet investment in China is constructive rather than exploitive. They claim that the Russians and Chinese have equal status in management of the joint enterprises; and that the Russians show full respect for Chinese sovereignty.

Thus, say Peking propagandists, the Russians should not be compared in any way with former Western imperialism.

The fact that Peking has had to continue this propaganda through the months of 1952, is ample evidence that many Chinese simply don't believe that the Russians are altruistic. If Chinese war spirits are lagging a bit, as many accounts from the mainland indicate, restoration of their control over the Changchun railway may be a shot in the arm. In the hands of propagandists today's ceremony can be used as proof that Peking is free of Kremlin control. That might leaven? Chinese suspicion that continuation of the Korean war benefits Russia rather than China.

(30)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Mr. E. R. Murrow

ED. R. MURROW

Wednesday, December 31, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Tonight, I asked Howard K. Smith to record a report for you on the progress of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and what it has done in Europe this year. Here it is.

SMITH: The biggest, most expensive single effort the western world has ever undertaken in time of peace is the building of a common defense force under the aegis of the North Atlantic pact. A question that naturally arises this New Year's week is: How successful has that effort, which has been costing all of us unprecedentedly high taxes, been in 1952? Unfortunately, it's not easy to answer for towards the end of this year a very serious difference of opinion has arisen between Europe andthe United States over what constitutes success. The difference came into the open at the North Atlantic Conference that was held in Paris 2-wks. ago. Prime Minister Churchill arrives here in New York next week for an informal talk with President-elect Eisenhower, and no doubt one of the most urgent topics beforethem will be this same difference of opinion.

The view of Churchill and Europe is that the year's defense effort has been very successful. It has induced Stalin to change his party line and has made him relax aggressive pressures in Europe. So Churchill believes, and this he told the House of Commons early this month, that the prospect of world war has diminished. As aconsequence, Churchill told the House he decided to make a rather sizable reduction, or slow down, in Britain's projected arms effort and take the strain off her economy. Next year thus Britain will devote around 35% less to defense than was originally planned.

The view expressed by American officials at the North Atlantic Conference and by Mr. John Foster Dulles to a reporter here, is just the opposite. In our official assessment the prospect of hot war has not receded. Building a large common defense force, sticking to the high targets set a year ago, is just as urgent as ever. And on that viewthe North Atlantic year has not been outstandingly successful.

By way of illustration, the original plan was for the Atlantic partners to have put 50-divisions of fighting men on foot by today, the end of 1952. Well, the Europeans are very pleased for they point out that we have in a common effort put 48 divisions, nearly the requisite number on foot. However, at the Paris talks General Ridgway said this was entirely wrong. In fact, he said, there were 48 divisions in form only; their training and equipment were so inadequate, he said, that they amounted to only 35-divisions. Or in other words - the partners were 15 divisions short of their target and if war is a possibility this constitutes a very grave failure indeed.

Likewise the plans for next year. The Churchill view that war has receded, that defense is less urgent, carried the Paris conference, and over America's objections the delegates decided to spend on defense in 1953 less than half of what had been originally planned.

At the end ofthe talks, a communique spoke of the affable atmosphere of agreement that had prevailed. But a day later General Ridgway said otherwise, in public. He accused the governments of Europe of 'wishful thinking' in believing that war was less likely, and of unimaginative thought in cutting back their defense plans.

In general, it was the sharpest language a military man has applied to his civilian bosses since the conflict between Pres. Truman and General MacArthur. There were even rumors in Europe, never confirmed, that he intended to resign his command in disgust.

Thus the question whether Western defense has had a good year is something like religion. It's become a matter for every man to decide for himself. If you're an optimist about the future, well it's been a very good year. But if you're a pessimist, it has been very dark indeed.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1952
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Allied heavy artillery in Korea today roared across the whole line to mark the New Year. That was ten hours ago, Korean time. The Communists guns replied to our fire. Then there was quiet. A gentle snow fell across the whole battle line. Small patrols went out. And to the men at the front, as on Christmas Day, it was "just another day."

The Pentagon says we suffered another 175 casualties last week: 35 men killed in action, 10 missing, 130 wounded.

The President said today that he feels the outlook for world peace is better than it was a year ago. At his last news conference of the year, Mr. Truman told reporters: he bases this statement on his knowledge of all the facts available to him.

General Eisenhower, here in New York, wished a happy New Year to the world and said he hopes that next year will "bring back to us the assurance that peace is again coming to the world."

In Washington today, Secretary of State Acheson told House Investigators that "drastic measures are necessary and drastic measures are being taken" to keep subversive Americans off the United Nations payroll. The Secretary said such people are not a danger to our national security, because they do not handle matters dealing with our national defense. But, he said, they do hurt our national interest and give our reputation "a bad name and a black eye." The Secretary said a great deal of progress had been made on security matters at the State Department. He said present regulations have forced him to stop taking important papers home after working hours; this puts him further behind in his work.

The House investigators also heard United States Attorney Myles J. Lane say that he'll start a new grand jury investigation next week of cases involving Alleged American communists employed by the U.N. A previous jury charged that the Justice and State Departments had tried to suppress its report.

AND ON THE PROBLEM OF COMMUNISTS WORKING FOR THE U.N., THAT'S THE LATEST WORK.

A Senate elections subcommittee reported today that the Democratic and Republican national candidates spent six million dollars in the November election, for political broadcasts. The Republicans spent just under three and a half millions, to 2.6 million for the Democrats. A little more than half of the six million went to radio stations, the rest to television.

Two members of the House committee that investigated pornographic books today disagreed with the majority report. Democratic Representatives Walter of Pennsylvania and Celler of New York said they have no quarrel with the committee's literary opinions; but they feel it is "not the province of any congressional committee to determine what is good, bad or indifferent literature. Because this carries with it echoes of thought control."

The Census Brueau reports that the population of this country grew more in 1952 than in any previous year: Its estimated that we now have almost 158 and a half million Americans. That's a gain of more than two and a half million for the year.

Here in New York we are faced with the biggest bus strike in our history at midnight. The C.I.O. Transport workers are demanding a 40-hour-week from eight private bus lines. The Board of Estimate has demanded that the union arbitrate its dispute. The union had turned down arbitration a few hours earlier. The threatened bus lines carry three and a half million fares a day in three boroughs: Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens.

In Washington, a federal jury has indicted the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on charges of filing false statements with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Colonel White, president of the B. and O. says no statements were filed which misled anyone. He wants to see the charges before making additional comment.

From Korea tonight we received a special recorded report, summing up the present relationship between the Chinese Communists and the Russians. Here's Robert P. Martin, from Tokyo.

MARTIN: Each winter, when the icy winds come racing down from Siberia, the Chinese in Manchuria shiver inside their long cotton-padded gowns and talk disparingingly of 'long nose' weather. The Chinese, all except the die-hard communists, refer to the Russians as 'long noses.'

In bleak and winter-desolate Harbin, this last day of 1952, the Chinese are officially celebrating the end of 'long nose' control over the sprawling Chinese Changchun railway. Peking's propagandists are turning out thousands of words praising the Russians for their magnanimity. In theory, this should be the best winter the Chinese, in Manchuria, enjoyed since 1945, when long trains - groaning under the weight of industrial equipment the Russian army was stripping from every Manchurian factory - crossed the border into Siberia.

On paper, the Russians have done well by their Chinese comrades. Their treaty with Chiang-Kai-Shek's China in 1945 gave them partnership in the railway network as well as Port Arthur as a naval base, and special economic privileges in Dairen.

In February, 1950, during Mao-Tse-Tung's trip to Moscow, Stalin agreed to give up the railway by the end of 1952. Stalin has lived up to his agreement - on the last possible day. Actually, Stalin gave up very little. His troops are still in Port Arthur by special agreement with Peking. They have the right to guard every military train bringing supplies from Russia, across Manchuria, to Port Arthur. Russian goods have free transit rights across Manchuria to both Dairen and Port Arthur.

Most important of all - the Russians are partners of the Chinese in the joint operation of a large number of industrial companies, including the development of mines and raw material resources in Manchuria.

Thousands of Russian technicians and engineers dominate this development program.

Finally, although Manchuria is part of China, it is governed as a separate entity. It has its own regional regime headed by 47-year, old Gol Gaung, a Moscow-trained long-time communist. It has its own currency and its own trade agreements with Russia. Its police state system is separate from Peking and the Chinese cannot travel freely into or out of Manchuria.

Russian influence, if not control, is a positive thing, and very easy to enforce in these circumstances.

Return of the 7,000-mile long railway network, almost as large as the entire system in the rest of China, provides Peking with a powerful propaganda weapon. Since 1948, the Reds have been trying to convince the Chinese people that they are free of Kremlin control, and that Peking is independent.

They insist that the Russians are not imperialistic. Their propaganda claims that Soviet investment in China is constructive rather than exploitive. They claim that the Russians and Chinese have equal status in management of the joint enterprises; and that the Russians show full respect for Chinese sovereignty.

Thus, say Peking propagandists, the Russians should not be compared in any way with former Western imperialism.

The fact that Peking has had to continue this propaganda through the months of 1952, is ample evidence that many Chinese simply don't believe that the Russians are altruistic. If Chinese war spirits are lagging a bit, as many accounts from the mainland indicate, restoration of their control over the Changchun railway may be a shot in the arm. In the hands of propagandists today's ceremony can be used as proof that Peking is free of Kremlin control. That might leaven Chinese suspicion that continuation of the Korean war benefits Russia rather than China.

An old colleague, Howard K. Smith is in New York tonight. Smith and six other CBS Radio news correspondents will join me tomorrow on a special radio report - "Years of Crisis" to be heard over most of these stations from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. eastern standard time. Tonight I asked Howard K. Smith to record a report for you on the progress the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has made in Europe this year. Here it is:

SMITH: The biggest, most expensive single effort the western world has ever undertaken in time of peace is the building of a common defense force under the aegis of the North Atlantic pact. A question that naturally arises this New Year's week is: How successful has that effort, which has been costing all of us unprecedentedly high taxes, been in 1952? Unfortunately, it's not easy to answer for towards the end of this year a very serious difference of opinion has arisen between Europe and the United States over what constitutes success. The difference came into the open at the North Atlantic Conference that was held in Paris two weeks ago. Prime Minister Churchill arrives here in New York next week for an informal talk with President-elect Eisenhower, and no doubt one of the most urgent topics before them will be this same difference of opinion.

The view of Churchill and Europe is that the year's defense effort has been very successful. It has induced Stalin to change his party line and has made him relax aggressive pressures in Europe. So Churchill believes, and this he told the House of Commons early this month, that the prospect of world war has diminished. As a consequence, Churchill told the House he decided to make a rather sizable reduction, or slow down, in Britain's projected arms effort and take the strain off her economy. Next year thus Britain will devote around 35% less to defense than was originally planned.

The view expressed by American officials at the North Atlantic Conference and by Mr. John Foster Dulles to a reporter here, is just the opposite. In our official assessment the prospect of hot war has not receded. Building a large common defense force, sticking to the high targets set a year ago, is just as urgent as ever. And on that view the North Atlantic year has not been outstandingly successful.

By way of illustration, the original plan was for the Atlantic partners to have put 50 divisions of fighting men on foot by today, the end of 1952. Well, the Europeans are very pleased for they point out that we have in a common effort put 48 divisions, nearly the requisite number on foot. However, at the Paris talks General Ridgeway said this was entirely wrong. In fact, he said, there were 48 divisions in form only. Their training and equipment were so inadequate, he said, that they amounted to only 35 divisions. Or in other words - the partners were 15 divisions short of their target and if war is a possibility this constitutes a very grave failure indeed.

Likewise the plans for next year. The Churchill vies that war has receded, that defense is less urgent, carried the Paris conference, and over America's objections the delegates decided to spend on defense in 1953 less than half of what had been originally planned.

At the end of the talks, a communique spoke of the affable atmosphere of agreement that had prevailed. But a day later General Ridgeway said otherwise, in public. He accused the governments of Europe of 'wishful thinking' in believing that war was less likely, and of unimaginative thought in cutting back their defense plans.

In general, it was the sharpest language a military man has applied to his civilian bosses since the conflict between President Truman and General MacArthur. There were even rumors in Europe, never confirmed, that he intended to resign his command in disgust.

Thus the question whether Western defense has had a good year is something like religion. It's become a matter for every man to decide for himself. If you're an optimist about the future, well it's been a very good year. But if you're a pessimist, it has been very dark indeed.

MURROW: It is good to be home again - my thanks to Sevareid and Collingwood for sitting in for me - I had hoped during eighty hours of flying, some time watching the Korean fighting, and a couple of days wrestling with a flu bug to think of a new and appropriate New Year's quotation, but must revert to the old favorite from Heine: "The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thurs. Jan 1, 1953

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Lovett says American production lines are now ready to handle all-out war mobilization. In a report to the President, and the Congress, Mr. Lovett said: our armed forces are so powerful that "even the most reckless aggressor should hesitate to attack." We are now better prepared than ever before to enforce world peace. But we are in the middle of the job; not the end of it. Secretary Lovett says: "There is still no easy, quick, cheap or magic way, to fight or win a war..or prevent one." He also says: we face a long period of world tension and heavy defense costs...we must continue the draft at a high level for an indefinite period.

The President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization today urged a complete re-writing of the McCarran Immigration law. The commission says the law; flouts American traditions and ideals... shows a lack of faith in our future...damages our prestige and position among other nations, and ignores the lessons of the American way of life.

But Senator Mc Carran says the Commission's recommendations would "emasculate our security procedures, and open the gates to a virtually unrestricted flood of aliens."

2

The House Small Business committee today called for an end to price, wage and materials controls to provide "a smooth transition back to free competition. The committee of six Democrats and five Republicans, says that prices are "unlikely to rise" if ceilings are removed.

[redacted]

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee today made public 38 names of past and present American employes of the United Nations. The State Department has listed each person as one "believed to be a communist or under communist discipline." Eleven are still on the U.N. payroll; two others were scheduled to leave their jobs yesterday. In a memorandum to the committee, the State Department said it could have been wrong in identifying these 38 persons..because there were no hearings..no appeals [redacted] and no sworn testimony.

[redacted]

The National Labor Relations Board says it has ordered 12 union leaders to re-affirm their Taft-Hartley non-Communist oaths. And all 12 have been asked to say whether they have supported any Communist organization in the past four years. (since they took the Taft-Hartley oath.) The 12 men are among the officials of the office workers union... the United Electrical , Radio and Machine Workers of America... the American Communications Association and the [redacted] Fur and Leather Workers Union. All 12 of the men refused to tell a New York grand jury whether the non-Communist oaths they filed with the Labor Board were true.

Senator Taft says he is not in favor of a ban on industry-wide bargaining. In an interview with Fortune Magazine he says it would be almost impossible to enforce such a ban. Although he feels it might be necessary unless we find some way to solve national strikes.

The Fifth Air Force in Korea reports that during December our sabre jets destroyed 27 Communist Migs and probably destroyed eight others. We lost two jets in air battles.. seven other planes of various types were lost to ground fire. There was very little air or ground action on the Korean front today. And General Van Fleet says allied casualties yesterday were the lowest for the whole month of December.

Communist China today called on its people to "carry on and reinforce the 'resist American aggression and aid Korea' fight."

And in Indo-China the French command says its troops have broken a 12-day attack by Communist-led Viet-Minh forces...35 miles south of Hanoi.

From West Germany come reports that 90-thousand East Germans have managed to escape to the west and freedom in the last six months of 1952. Over 88-thousand others fled to West Berlin.

AND [redacted] FROM BONN...THAT'S THE LATEST WORD.

(2 second pause)

[redacted]

[redacted] IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

[redacted] PRESIDENT Gottwald complained today that industrial production is lagging in his country..and food is scarce. Three weeks ago the Czech premier publicly admitted food and coal shortages had led to what he called a "state of discontent and rebellion."

A spokesman for the Italian foreign office said today that Italy will refuse to admit any more Italian-born racketeers who have lost their American citizenship. The spokesman said: "We not going to accept any Lucky Luciano again. He lived here only a short time, spent most of his life in the United States..now we have to pay for him." Luciano was deported to Italy in 1946.

Here in New York, some 35-hundred privately-owned buses were kept in their garages today after a strike by C.I.O. Transport workers. They want a 40-hour week with no pay cut. Normally, the buses handle three and a half million passengers a day. But because of the holiday and the fact that some business places will remain closed tomorrow and Saturday, the full effect of the strike will not be felt until Monday.

PAUSE

Whatever happens in Europe during the next year will be largely determined by relations between France and Germany...without that partnership,there can be neither economic unity nor military security.. one is the lock the other the key...Tonight two old friends...Dick Hottelet and Dave Schonbrun are in town... Hottelet from Germany and Schonbrun from France....There are no two american correspondents who know those countries better than these two men...I have asked them to argue a little...not from personal conviction..but rather to reflect as accurately and bluntly as they can,the attitude of the nation in which they work....Schonbrun,why dont you start..////

Why no sense of urgency?

Neither of you French or Germanx..as American correspondents what do you reckon the chances of agreement to be....

~~This is the start of a New Year. And the~~ This thought, expressed in these simple words by St. Francis...written 700 years ago...would still seem appropriate tonite:"Lord, make me an instrument of thy peace. Where there is hatred, let me sow love. Where there is injury, pardon. Where there is doubt, faith. Where there is despair, hope. Where there is darkness, light. Grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood, as to understand."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, January 1, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Tonite, two old friends, Dick Hottelet and Dave Schoenbrun, are in town - Hottelet from Germany and Schoenbrun from France. There are no two American correspondents who know those countries better than these two men. I've asked them to argue a little, not from personal conviction but rather to reflect as accurately and bluntly as they can the attitude of the nation in which they work.

Schoenbrun, why don't you start?

SCHOENBRUN: All right! To be blunt, who can trust a German? That's the thing you hear in Paris all the time. The French have been clobbered by the Germans three times in the last eighty years, and twice in the last twenty-five years they've been betrayed by the Germans. There was Rapallo, when the Germans made a deal with the Russians, and there was 1939, when the Germans again made a deal with the Russians. The French see no reason to believe why now the Germans are going to suddenly adopt a new personality. They think there's always the danger that the Germans might get along with the Russians once again and, even if they don't, the French are worried that the Germans will go exactly to the other scale, that they're going to try and get back their Polish territorities and get the French into a war.

HOTTELET: Yeah, well, Dave, I think this animus rests not so much on what is happening now as what has happened in the past. And a national policy for the French or any other country has got to rest on a really logical appreciation of history; and history consists not only of the past but of the present and the future. And if there is anything that one can say in Europe, for Europe, it's that the war we went thru has changed things, brought enormous change. The Germany that exists today is not the Germany that went to war under Hitler and went to war under the Kaiser and did clobber France, as you perfectly rightly say; it's a Germany that's had millions of dead and wounded and missing, a Germany which is still trying to rebuild six million houses that were destroyed in the bombing; it's a Germany that has learned the hard way that war doesn't pay. And just one other thing - it's a Germany which, in its utterances and in its policies, reflects the conclusion that the Germans have reached -- and there is no reason why they shouldn't, because we have reached the same conclusion -- that Germany is not big enough to operate as an independent power factor and pursue a national, you know, policy of wild ambition against the East and West.

SCHOENBRUN: I'd agree with that, Richard. But let me very quickly point out, when you say the past is the past, that the past actually lives on with us in the present. Just a few weeks ago in Paris, I went to a soccer game on a Sunday, and the French band was unable to play their national anthem because it would have meant playing the German national anthem, and the Germans have once again adopted the anthem, "Deutschland Ueber Alles" - and no Frenchman is going to stand up and bare his head to Germany Over All. That part of the past is still with us.

HOTTELET: Yes, but, I mean, if I can maintain it, that is an emotional reaction to the past. How much more important than the adoption of this national anthem, which in itself is not sinister -- it's just that the Nazis exploited it and the nationalist crackpots today do the same thing -- how much more important than the adoption of that national anthem is the fact that when the Russians blockaded Berlin in 1948, we were able to maintain our position in Berlin and our prestige only because the Berliners, the Germans, actively participated with us in holding the fortress?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think the French would agree that the Germans have stood up against the Russians very beautifully. The Germans stand up against everybody very beautifully and fight everybody. That doesn't make the French any happier.

HOTTELET: Yes, but I should think that it's up to us, the French and all the rest of us, to make sure that when the Germans next stand up, they stand up on our side.

SCHOENBRUN: Oh, I'll buy that. But it's just that we can't have any guarantee. And when you mentioned before "utterances of the past", why, Germany's loud demands for the return of the Saar territory this year sounded very much like the past being put into the present.

HOTTELET: Yeah, but before we get to the Saar, which is a fine point, you say you don't have any guarantee, which is perfectly true. Speaking of mistrust, you know mistrust operates the other way, too. The Germans keep hearing that the French are engaged in devious manipulations and little exploratory talks with the Russians and hear that the Russians keep trying to tempt the French with a treaty neutralizing Germany, a truncated, rump Germany, and thereby, you know, come to some agreement with the West at Germany's expense.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think we can agree that there's considerable mutual suspicion, Dick. However, before we continue forever on the question of suspicion, I've noted, myself, this year particularly that there are also areas of agreement. I wonder if you have in Germany, too. For example, over in Paris, Foreign Minister Schuman believes that Chancellor Adenauer of Germany is a very great European. And a peculiar thing that I've noticed is that the French Government is far less fearful of the Germans today than they are of their opposition in their own backyard. Schuman is more afraid of deGaulle than he is of Adenauer.

HOTTELET: Well, I think he probably has every reason to be - and that all the more. I mean, there are these elements and areas of agreement, and it is up to farsighted statesmen like Schuman, who enjoys enormous respect in Germany, it's up to men like that to see that these areas of agreement are enlarged and that the elements are strengthened. But areas of agreement are all well and good, Dave. The blueprints that have been drawn up, theSchuman Plan, the program for the establishment of a European defense community and a common market, they're all very well, but they are still blueprints. What we need and need badly and need as quickly as we can are the results.

SCHOENBRUN: What do you mean, Dick? The Schuman Plan, you know, isn't a a blueprint. I think you must be referring to the European Army.

HOTTELET: Well, the Schuman Plan is still a blueprint. They have just set up a fine organization, but they have yet to do their first job. We hope it'll happen on February 10th, that the single market will be established in Europe for coal, that the barriers on movement of coal across national frontiers will be lifted. But as far as the European Defense Community goes, it is a very long way off in the future.

SCHOENBRUN: It sure is. The French are not getting ready yet to give a gun to the Germans. They won't do it, even the it was their own idea. I'll give you that.

HOTTELET: Well, why don't they? I mean, either the Russians are a clear and present danger or we're all crazy. Why do the French held back?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, one main reason is that the French don't have much of an army on the Continent of Europe themselves today. The best professional French army is out in Indo-China, and they have a lot of troops in Africa. With these commitments on two continents, the French are simply afraid to stay alone in Europe and to give their new German friends guns. They just don't trust them with those weapons right now.

HOTTELET: Yeah, but since the E.D.C. is a French invention and since it is guaranteed against destruction by either the Germans or the Russians, with all the emphasis that Britain and the United States can put on it, why do the French wait? You'd think they'd want the Germans, German divisions, to share the burdens, given certain very positive guarnatees.

SCHOENBRUN: Ah, that's it.

HOTTELET: And you'd think, for instance, that they'd want the Germans to share the burden of defense production. But, as of this moment, they will not allow the Germans to build as much as a 22-calibre rifle.

SCHOENBRUN: That's right. They've got this psychosis about it, and altho the European army was a French invention, it was x done with a gun pointed at the head of the French by us, by us Americans. (speak simultaneously)

Ed, you know the E.D.C. never would have been proposed by the French if Acheson had not laid the law down right here in New York City at the conference.

MURROW: Well, I think that's right. But his, after all, was not the final determining voice.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, he had a lot to say about it, because if the French hadn't gone along with him, we'd have pulled the rug out under them on our loan program and everything else. We talked pretty loud to the French at that time.

HOTTELET: But I think the Europeans have got to get together themselves. I mean, the French and Germans cannot expect the United States to come in and make a United States of Europe on the American pattern.

MURROW: Well, it seems to me that you fellows have had yourselves a fine argument. Thank you very much!

We have been listening to Dick Hottelet and Dave Schoenbrun, and this is Ed Murrow - and there is time enough left to say Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Lovett says American production lines are now ready to handle all-out war mobilization. In a report to the President, and the Congress, Mr. Lovett said: our armed forces are so powerful that "even the most reckless aggressor should hesitate to attack." We are now better prepared than ever before to enforce world peace. But we are in the middle of the job; not the end of it. Secretary Lovett says: "There is still no easy, quick, cheap or magic way to fight or win a war, or prevent one." He also says: we face a long period of world tension and heavy defense costs, we must continue the draft at a high level for an indefinite period.

The President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization today urged a complete re-writing of the McCarran Immigration law. The commission says the law flouts American traditions and ideals, shows a lack of faith in our future, damages our prestige and position among other nations and ignores the lessons of the American way of life; but Senator McCarran says the Commissions recommendations would "emasculate our security procedures and open the gates to a virtually unrestricted flood of aliens."

The House Small Business Committee today called for an end to price, wage and materials controls to provide "a smooth transition back to free competition." The committee of six Democrats and five Republicans, says that prices are "unlikely to rise" if ceilings are removed.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee today made public 38 names of past and present American employees of the United Nations. The State Department has listed each person as one "believed to be a communist or under communist discipline." Eleven are still on the U.N. payroll; two others were scheduled to leave their jobs yesterday. In a memorandum to the committee, the State Department said it could have been wrong in identifying these 38 persons, because there were no hearings, no appeals and no sworn testimony.

The National Labor Relations Board says it has ordered 12 union leaders to reaffirm their Taft-Hartley non-Communist oaths. And all 12 have been asked to say whether they have supported any Communist organization in the past four years since they took the Taft-Hartley oath. The 12 men are among the officials of the office workers union, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Wrokers of America, the American Communications Association and the Fur and Leather Workers Union. All 12 of the men refused to tell a New York grand jury whether the non-Communist oaths they filed with the Labor Board were true.

Senator Taft says he is not in favor of a ban on industry-wide bargaining. In an interview with Fortune Magazine he says it would be almost impossible to enforce such a ban. Although he feels it might be necessary unless we find some way to solve national strikes.

The Fifth Air Force in Korea reports that during December our sabre jets destroyed 27 Communist Migs and probably destroyed eight others. We lost two jets in air battles, seven other planes of various types were lost to ground fire. There was very little air or ground action on the Korean front today. And General Van Fleet says allied casualties yesterday were the lowest for the whole month of December.

Communist China today called on its people to "carry on and reinforce the 'resist American aggression and aid Korea' fight."

And in Indo-China the French command says its troops have broken a 12-day attack by Communist-led Viet-Minh forces 35 miles south of Hanoi.

From West Germany come reports that 90-thousand East Germans have managed to escape to the west and freedom in the last six months of 1952. Over 88-thousand others fled to West Berlin.

AND FROM BONN THAT'S THE LATEST WORD.

In Czechoslovakia, President Gottwald complained today that industrial production is lagging in his country and that food is scarce. Three weeks ago the Czech premier publicly admitted food and coal shortages had led to what he called a "state of discontent and rebellion."

A spokesman for the Italian foreign office said today that Italy will refuse to admit any more Italian-born racketeers who have lost their American citizenship. The spokesman said: "We are not going to accept any Lucky Luciano again. He lived here only a short time, spent most of his life in the United States, now we have to pay for him." Luciano was deported to Italy in 1946.

Here in New York, some 35-hundred privately-owned buses were kept in their garages today after a strike by C.I.O. Transport workers. They want a 40-hour week with no pay cut. Normally, the buses handle three and a half million passengers a day. But because of the holiday and the fact that some business places will remain closed tomorrow and Saturday, the full effect of the strike will not be felt until Monday.

Whatever happens in Europe during the next year will be largely determined by relations between France and Germany; without that partnership, there can be neither economic unity nor military security. One is the lock,the other the key. Tonight two old friends, Dick Hottelet and Dave Schoenbrun are in town. Hottelet from Germany and Schoenbrun from France. There are no two American correspondents who know those countries better than these two men. I have asked them to argue a little, not from personal conviction, but rather to reflect as accurately and bluntly as they can, the attitude of the nation in which they work. Schoenbrun, why don't you start.

SCHOENBRUN: All right. To be blunt, who can trust a German? That's the thing you hear in Paris all the time. The French have been clobbered by the Germans three times in the last eighty years, and twice in the last twenty-five years they've been betrayed by the Germans. There was Rapallo, when the Germans made a deal with the Russians. The French see no reason to believe why now the Germans are going to suddenly adopt a new personality. They think there's always the danger that the Germans might get along with the Russians once again and, even if they don't, the French are worried that the Germans will go exactly to the other scale, that they're going to try and get back their Polish territorities and get the French into a war.

HOTTELET: Yeah, well, Dave, I think this animus rests not so much on what is happening now as what has happened in the past. And a national policy for the French or any other country has got to rest on a really logical appreciation of history; and history consists not only of the past but of the present and the future. And if there is anything that one can say in Europe, for Europe, it's that the war we went through has changed things, brought enormous change. The Germany that exists today is not the Germany that went to war under Hitler and went to war under the Kaiser and did clobber France, as you perfectly rightly say; it's a Germany that's had millions of dead and wounded and missing, a Germany which is still trying to rebuild six million houses that were destroyed in the bombing; it's a Germany that has learned the hard way that war doesn't pay. And just one other thing - it's a Germany which, in its utterances and in its policies, reflects the conclusion that the Germans have reached - and there is no reason why they shouldn't, because we have reached the same conclusion - that Germany is not big enough to operate as an independent power factor and pursue a national, you know, policy of wild ambition against the East and West.

SCHOENBRUN: I'd agree with that, Richard. But let me very quickly point out, when you say the past is the past, that the past actually lives on with us in the present. Just a few weeks ago in Paris, I went to a soccer game on a Sunday, and the French band was unable to play their national anthem because it would have meant playing the German national anthem, and the Germans have once again adopted the anthem, "Deutschland Ueber Alles" - and no Frenchman is going to stand up and bare his head to Germany Over All. That part of the past is still with us.

HOTTELET: Yes, but, I mean, if I can maintain it, that is an emotional reaction to the past. How much more important than the adoption of this national anthem, is the fact that when the Russians blockaded Berlin in 1948, we were able to maintain our position in Berlin and our prestige only because the Berliners, the Germans, actively participated with us in holding the fortress?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think the French would agree that the Germans have stood up against the Russians very beautifully. The Germans stand up against everybody very beautifully and fight everybody. That doesn't make the French any happier.

HOTTELET: Yes, but I should think that it's up to us, the French and all the rest of us, to make sure that when the Germans next stand up, they stand up on our side.

SCHOENBRUN: Oh, I'll buy that. But it's just that we can't have any guarantee. And when you mentioned before "utterances of the past", why, Germany's loud demands for the return of the Saar territory this year sounded very much like the past being put into the present.

HOTTELET: Yeah, but before we get to the Saar, which is a fine point, you say you don't have any guarantee, which is perfectly true. Speaking of mistrust, you know mistrust operates the other way, too. The Germans keep hearing that the French are engaged in devious manipulations and little exploratory talks with the Russians and hear that the Russians keep trying to tempt the French with a treaty neutralizing Germany, a truncated, rump Germany, and thereby, you know, come to some agreement with the West at Germany's expense.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, I think we can agree that there's considerable mutual suspicion, Dick. However, before we continue forever on the question of suspicion, I've noted, myself, this year particularly that there are also areas of agreement. I wonder if you have in Germany, too. For example, over in Paris, Foreign Minister Schuman believes that Chancellor Adenauer of Germany is a very great European. And a peculiar thing that I've noticed is that the French Government is far less fearful of the Germans today than they are of their opposition in their own backyard. Schuman is more afraid of DeGaulle than he is of Adenauer.

HOTTELET: Well, I think he probably has every reason to be - and that all the more.

I mean, there are these elements and areas of agreement, and it is up to far-sighted statesmen like Schuman, who enjoys enormous respect in Germany, it's up to men like that to see that these areas of agreement are enlarged and that the elements are strengthened. But areas of agreement are all well and good, Dave. The blueprints that have been drawn up, the Schuman Plan, the program for the establishment of a European defense community and a common market, they're all very well, but they are still blueprints. What we need and need badly and need as quickly as we can are the results.

SCHOENBRUN: What do you mean, Dick? The Schuman Plan, you know, isn't a blueprint. They have just set up a fine organization, but they have yet to do their first job. We hope it'll happen on February 10th, that the single market will be established in Europe for coal, that the barriers on movement of coal across national frontiers will be liften. But as far as the European Defense Community goes, it is a very long way off in the future.

SCHOENBRUN: It sure is. The French are not getting ready yet to give a gun to the Germans. They won't do it, even though it was their own idea. I'll give you that.

HOTTELET: Well, why don't they? I mean, either the Russians are a clear and present danger or we're all crazy. Why do the French hold back?

SCHOENBRUN: Well, one main reason is that the French don't have much of an army on the Continent of Europe themselves today. The best professional French army is out in Indo-China, and they have a lot of troops in Africa. With these commitments on two continents, the French are simply afraid to stay along in Europe and to give their new German friends guns. They just don't trust them with those weapons right now.

HOTTELET: Yeah, but since the E.D.C. is a French invention and since it is guaranteed against destruction by either the Germans or the Russians, with all the emphasis that Britain and the United States can put on it, why do the French wait? You'd think they'd want the Germans, German divisions, to share the burdens, given certain very positive guarantees.

SCHOENBRUN: Ah, that's it.

HOTTELET: And you'd think, for instance, that they'd want the Germans to share the burden of defense production. But, as of this mpment, they will not allow the Germans to build as much as a 22-calibre rifle.

SCHOENBRUN: That's right. They've got this psychosis about it, and although the European army was a French invention, it was done with a gun pointed at the head of the French by us, by us Americans.

Ed, you know the E.D.C. never would have been proposed by the French if Acheson had not laid the law down right here in New York City at the conference.

MURROW: Well, I think that's right. But his, after all, was not the final determining voice.

SCHOENBRUN: Well, he had a lot to say about it, because if the French hadn't gone along with him, we'd have pulled the rug out under them on our loan program and everything else. We talked pretty loud to the French at that time.

HOTTELET: But I think the Europeans have got to get together themselves. I mean, the French and Germans cannot expect the United States to come in and make a United States of Europe on the American pattern.

MURROW: Well, it seems to me that you fellows have had yourselves a fine argument. Thank you very much!

We have been listening to Dick Hottelet and Dave Schoenbrun, and this is Ed Murrow - and there is time enough left to say Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday Jan 2, 1953.

This is the news:

Senate Republicans decided today that they will oppose any move to revise the Senate's rules, to make it easier to pass civil rights legislation. In a meeting of the Republicans..in advance of the opening of Congress tomorrow..Senator Taft argued that the Senate is a continuing body..that the old rules must continue. At present it requires a two-thirds majority vote to end a filibuster. Some Democratic Senators, and a few Republicans, want to change that: to make it possible for a majority to end a filibuster.

The Republicans today also decided on their leaders in the new Congress: Senator Taft will be the floor leader..responsible for leading the Eisenhower legislative program through the Senate. Knowland of California will be the head of the policy committee, and Millikan of Colorado remains as chairman of the conference of all Republican Senators. In the House, Joe Martin will again be speaker and Halleck of Indiana will be the Republican floor leader. The Democrats chose two Texans to lead them in the Senate and House: Senator Johnson and former Speaker Rayburn.

General Eisenhower worked in New York today. He conferred with a government commission on universal military training. And later, Dr. Carl T. Compton, a spokesman for the group, said there is no conflict between the commission's demand for U.M.T. and Eisenhower's views.

Senator Bridges says the General recently told him and other Senators not to worry about the coming visit of Winston Churchill. Eisenhower says he will make no commitments to Mr. Churchill or any other foreign leaders.

A Senate elections sub-committee today issued a 400-page report on Senator Benton's charge that Senator Mc Carthy is unfit to serve in the Senate and should be ousted. The committee makes no recommendations but suggests that the case is an issue for the entire Senate. The report does point out that six times Mc Carthy refused an invitation to testify and accused the committee of being dishonest and doing the work of Communists. The report says "this might appear" to reflect on the entire Senate. The report also says Senator Mc Carthy cannot justify acceptance of a 10-thousand dollar fee for a book on housing. This was for the Lustron company which, at the time, was financed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation Funds. The committee says that in effect the Senator was paid from public funds. Senator Mc Carthy calls the report "a new low in dishonesty and smear" and challenges the Democrats to try to bar him from the Senate.

House investigators concluded today that some Communists have infiltrated educational foundations..but have failed to win control of them in a 20-year campaign. The committee says the record of these tax-free foundations in resisting Communist influence has generally been good. The Committee recommends that these foundations be required to make more detailed and public reports on their finances.

Attorney General Mc Granery today ordered a new grand jury investigation into charges that some disloyal Americans have managed to get jobs with the United Nations. And the U.N. itself challenges the disloyalty charges made by the State Department against two of the U.N.'s American employes. [redacted]

Here in New York today, Federal Judge Irving R. Kaufman said [redacted] he still feels that Julius and Ethel Rosenberg committed a crime worse than murder...by their participation in a [redacted] atomic spy ring.

It was Judge Kaufman, who, 21 months ago, sentenced them to death. Today, in turning down an appeal for clemency, he said: the ROSENBERGS [redacted] were not minor espionage agents. They were on the top rung of a Soviet conspiracy. The Rosenbergs may make a final appeal [redacted]--to the White House.

In Korea today, there were some small infantry fights. And again our fighter-bombers attacked enemy troop and supply lines.

The Pentagon says the Communists have suffered ten times as many casualties as we have in Korea: enemy [redacted] casualties are listed at one million 300 thousand to our 127-thousand: killed, wounded, missing and captured. The best estimate of total casualties for all United Nations forces is 364-thousand.

~~Allied officials in Germany are speculating that the Russians may be making a major policy change within the next few months. Our officials in West Germany report that Soviet officials there have made it clear that they cannot make any decisions on policy in Germany for a few months.~~

In London, a British white paper says that Western Europe must cut its rearmament goals to prevent Soviet efforts to "disrupt the Atlantic alliance from within." The paper says the West[redacted] European nations cannot spare the money needed to build up 75-divisions and the 7-thousand plane air force that had been planned for this year. It adds:"An excessive strain on the economies of western Europe would be the surest way" of disrupting the Atlantic alliance from within.

Here in New York, the city's public and paraochial schools have decided to delay the opening of their classes on Monday...because of a bus strike. Students who must use a bus to get to school, in the affected areas, will report at 10 a.m. There was no progress today toward settling the strike of 8-thousand C.I.O. bus drivers. They want a 40-hour week from eight private bus companies.

And the National Broadcasting Company has elected Frank White to be its president. Mr. White, who is 53, is a former vice president of C.B.S. and former president of the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Another member of our European staff is in the newsroom tonight: Alexander Kendrick, who works in Vienna, keeps an eye on the Iron Curtain countries, and has been the source of many reports we've relayed to you through the years. / Alex, I guess your last big story was the Prague purge trial. And now we're told there are going to be more of them. Is that right?

MURROW: ~~Are there going to be any more such trials~~?

KENDRICK: Yes, Ed, they're on the assembly line, in Romania, Poland and possibly Hungary. And you haven't seen anything yet. This last trial in Prague -- which was really the first of the new series - introduced a brand new concept of law, if you want to call it law. It's an extension of the Communist theory of preventive arrest.

MURROW: By preventive arrest you mean arresting a man, to persuade him not to commit some crime in the future?

KENDRICK: Exactly, and whether he is actually ever going to commit a crime or not. Now this principle is carried a step further. In the Prague trial several of the accused -- since hanged -- confessed to a lot of crimes that haven't been committed yet. They took responsibility for everything that will go wrong in Czechoslovakia for an indefinite period to come, even though nobody knows yet just when or how it will go wrong.

MURROW: It's to be expected that things will continue to go wrong.

KENDRICK: It's a safe bet. The Communist leaders -- the surviving ones -- admit it themselves. But now, when food continues to be short, and rationing has to become stricter, and there's no hot water for days at a time, or if coal production drops, or the department stores are empty -- as they are -- the Communist government doesn't even have to find new scapegoats. Everything's been confessed to by people who have already been hanged. They've said their past actions were so nefarious, that with their dead hands they will continue sabotage and wrecking for a long time to come.

MURROW: That seems very convenient for the Communist government.

KENDRICK: It's a passing convenience. The present members of the government never know when they, too, will be confessing to a lot of futurw and uncommitted crimes.

MURROW: Where did this new-style Communist justice come from?

KENDRICK: Well, it didn't ~~xxxx~~ originate in Czechoslovakia, which had an advanced legal code. Perhaps it's only coincidence, but just within the past few months a new book has been published in all the satellite countries. It's called "Soviet Law," and it's by Andrei Vishinsky.

MURROW: Our friend of the U.N.

KENDRICK: Yes, except that Vishinsky ~~xxx~~ isn't really a diplomat. Perhaps that's self-evident by now. He's a lawyer, a prosecuting atterney essentially, and he prosecuted the,original purge ~~xxxx~~ trials in Moscow 16 years ago. Now he fancies himself as a Soviet Blackstone, and it's on his legal theories he wants to be judged by posterity. I'm sure he will be.

MURROW: What are some of his theories?

KENDRICK: Well, they're more than legal theory now. They're standard Communist practice. I suppose the basic one is the doctrine that a Communist court trial is not a legal proceeding, and justice or lack of justice are in no way involved. A trial, says Vishinsky, is merely a form of public education, designed to make a propaganda point. That means trials are held only if they serve an ulterior purpose. Slansky and Clementis were tried, but hundreds of other purged Communists accused of the same things will never be tried, and are sentenced to imprisonment or death by what's called administrative procedure.

KENDRICK (Cont'd): Afterbthey interrogate you for a year or so, they give you a slip of paper telling you your sentence, and you sign it. You never face a judge or jury. All you face is a rubber stamp.

MURROW: Don't the Russians say their law is based on the Napoleonoc code?

KENDRICK: Well, under our Western code, a man is presumed innocent until he's proved guilty. Under the Napoleonic code, a man is presumed guilty until he's proved innocent. Under the Soviet code, a man is presumed guilty -- period.

MURROW: What about those coming trials you spoke of?

KENDRICK: Well, since the Prague trial has already served its particular educational purpose in all the satellite countries, where it was widely publicized, I think these other trials will have a different pitch, designed to teach a different lesson. Instead of Zionism, it will probably be something else that turns out to be treasonable. Whatever it is, I'm sure they've got a lot of confessions already, to those new future crimes.

MURROW; Alex, Vienna is still the port of first call for people who manage to escape from behind the Iron Curtain -- and incidentally, this new concept of crime and punishment.

KENDRICK; Yes, it is, but for too many people it remains only the port of arrival, and never the port of departure. It's a sad thing for an American to witness this jump from the fire into the frying-pan, because frankly I don't think we're honoring our implicit promises to them.

MURROW: What promises do we make?

KENDRICK: Well, no promises, really. I said implicit. But we encourage them to escape in every line of every radio broadcast that is made to them, in all languages. We may not mean to. But we try to keep alive for them the vision of the free world, we tell them what's happening on our side of the curtain, and we send them perspnal messages from friends and relatives who got away before they did. I don't think there's any doubt about the lure in all this. Then, when they do get out --

MURROW: Yes, what happens then?

KENDRICK: Well, usually nothing. We interrogate them very rigidly, and get lots of information about the country they've just left. Sometimes I think our whole purpose is only to get information. They manage to escape, at the risk of their lives, and discover that they're in a strange paper world of visas, affidavits, consuls, quotas, work permits, bonds of guarantee, and all the rest of it. I know people in Vienna who have been there since the Prague coup of 1948, when they escaped. That's nearly five years now. Being an escapee is no longer just a tempobary phase of a man's life. It can be his whole life span. I think we have to do better than that.

Alex Kendrick's report on "justice in Czechoslavakia" would seem to bear out this observation by the Frenchman, Chamfort:"'Tis easier to make certain things legal than to make them legitimate." There was another French writer named Joseph Joubert. But the sataletite countries apparently do not go along with his contention that in the end "justice is simply truth in action."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Senate Republicans decided today that they will oppose any move to revise the Senate's rules to make it easier to pass civil rights legislation. In a meeting of the Republicans in advance of the opening of Congress tomorrow, Senator Taft argued that the Senate is a continuing body, that the old rules must continue. At present it requires a two-thirds majority vote to end a filibuster. Some Democratic Senators, and a few Republicans, want to change that: to make it possible for a majority to end a filibuster.

The Republicans today also decided on their leaders in the new Congress: Senator Taft will be the floor leader, responsible for leading the Eisenhower legislative program through the Senate. Knowland of California will be the head of the policy committee and Millikan of Colorado remains as Chairman of the conference of all Republican Senators. In the House, Joe Martin again will be speaker and Halleck of Indiana will be the Republican floor leader. The Democrats chose two Texans to lead them in the Senate and House: Senator Johnson and former Speaker Rayburn.

General Eisenhower worked in New York today. He conferred with a government commission on universal military training. And later, Dr. Carl T. Compton, a spokesman for the group, said there is "no conflict" between the commission's demand for U.N.T. and Eisenhower's views.

Senator Bridges says the General recently told him and other Senators, not to worry about the coming visit of Winston Churchill. Eisenhower says he will make no commitments to Mr. Churchill or any other foreign leaders.

A Senate elections sub-committee today issued a 400-page report on Senator Benton's charge that Senator McCarthy is unfit to serve in the Senate and should be ousted. The committee makes no recommendations, but suggests that the case is an issue for the entire Senate. The report does point out that six times McCarthy refused an invitation to testify and accused the committee of being dishonest and doing the work of Communists. The report says "this might appear" to reflect on the entire Senate. The report also says Senator McCarthy cannot justify acceptance of a 10-thousand dollar fee for a book on housing. This was for the Lustron company which, at the time, was financed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation Funds. The committee says that in effect the Senator was paid from public funds. Senator McCarthy calls the report "a new low in dishonesty and smear" and challenges the Democrats to try to bar him from the Senate.

House investigators concluded today that some Communists have infiltrated educational foundations, but have failed to win control of them in a 20-year campaign. The committee says the record of these tax-free foundations in resisting Communist influence has generally been good. The Committee recommends that these foundations be required to make more detailed and public reports on their finances.

Attorney General McGranery today ordered a new grand jury investigation into charges that some disloyal Americans have managed to get jobs with the United Nations. And the U.N. itself challenges the disloyalty charges made by the State Department against two of the U.N.'s American employees.

Here in New York today, Federal Judge Irving R. Kaufman said he still feels that Julius and Ethel Rosenberg committed a crime worse than murder by their participation in an atomic spy ring. It was Judge Kaufman, who 21 months ago, sentenced them to death. Today, in turning down an appeal for clemency, he said the Rosenbergs were not minor espionage agents. They were on the top rung of a Soviet conspiracy." The Rosenbergs may make a final appeal to the White House.

In Korea today, there were some small infantry fights. And again our fighter-bombers attacked enemy troop and supply lines.

The Pentagon says the Communists have suffered ten times as many casualties as we have in Korea: enemy casualties are listed at one million 300 thousand to our 127-thousand: killed, wounded, missing and captured. The best estimate of total casualties for all United Nations forces is 364-thousand.

In London, a British white paper says that Western Europe must cut its rearmament goals to prevent Soviet efforts to "disrupt the Atlantic alliance from within." The paper says the West European nations cannot spare the money needed to build up 75-divisions and the 7-thousand plane air force that had been planned for this year. It adds: "An excessive strain on the economies of western Europe would be the surest way" of disrupting the Atlantic alliance from within.

Here in New York, the city's public and paraochial schools have decided to delay the opening of their classes on Monday, because of a bus strike. Students who must use a bus to get to school, in the affected areas, will report at 10 a.m. There was no progress today toward settling the strike of 8-thousand C.I.O. bus drivers. They want a 40-hour week from eight private bus companies.

And the National Broadcasting Company has elected Frank White to be its president. Mr. White, who is 53, is a former vice president of C.B.S. and former president of the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Another member of our European staff is in the newsroom tonight: Alexander Kendrick, who works in Vienna, keeps an eye on the Iron Curtain countries, and has been the source of many reports we've relayed to you through the years. Alex, I guess your last big story was the Prague purge trial. And now we're told there are going to be more of them. Is that right?

KENDRICK: Yes, Ed, they're on the assembly line in Romania, Poland and possibly Hungary. And you haven't seen anything yet. This last trial in Prague - which was really the first of the new series - introduced a brand new concept of law, if you want to call it law. It's an extension of the Communist theory of preventive arrest.

MURROW: By preventive arrest, you mean arresting a man, to persuade him not to commit some crime in the future?

KENDRICK: Exactly, and whether he is actually ever going to commit a crime or not. Now this principle is carried a step further. In the Prague trial several of the accused - since hanged - confessed to a lot of crimes that haven't been committed yet. They took responsiblity for everything that will go wrong in Czechoslovakia for an indefinite period to come, even though nobody knows yet just when or how it will go wrong.

MURROW: It's to be expected that things will continue to go wrong?

KENDRICK: It's a safe bet. The Communist leaders - the surviving ones - admit it themselves. But now, when food continues to be short, and rationing has to become stricter, and there's no hot water for days at a time, or if coal production drops, or the department stores are empty - as they are - the Communist government doesn't even have to find new scapegoats. Everything's been confessed to by people who have already been hanged. They've said their past actions were so nefarious, that with their dead hands they will continue sabotage and wrecking for a long time to come.

MURROW: That seems very convenient for the Communist government.

KENDRICK: It's a passing convenience. The present members of the government never know when they, too, will be confessing to a lot of future and uncommitted crimes.

MURROW: Where did this new-style Communist justice come from?

KENDRICK: Well, it didn't originate in Czechoslovakia, which had an advanced legal code. Perhaps it's only coincidence, but just within the past few months a new book has been published in all the satellite countries. It's called "Soviet Law," and it's by Andrei Vishinsky.

MURROW: Our friend of the U.N.

KENDRICK: Yes, except that Vishinsky isn't really a diplomat. Perhaps that's self-evident by now. He's a lawyer, a prosecuting attorney essentially, and he prosecuted the original purge trials in Moscow 16 years ago. Now he fancies himself as a Soviet Blackstone, and it's on his legal theories he wants to be judged by posterity. I'm sure he will be.

MURROW: What are some of his theories?

KENDRICK: Well, they're more than legal theory now. They're standard Communist practice. I suppose the basic one is the doctrine that a Communist court trial is not a legal proceeding, and justice or lack of justice are in no way involved. A trial, says Vishinsky, is merely a form of public education, designed to make a propaganda point. That means trials are held only if they serve an ulterior purpose. Slansky and Clementis were tried, but hundreds of other purged Communists accused of the same things will never be tried, and are sentenced to imprisonment or death by what's called administrative procedure. After they interrogate you for a year or so, they give you a slip of paper telling you your sentence, and you sign it. You never face a judge or jury. All you face is a rubber stamp.

MURROW: Don't the Russians say their law is based on the Napoleonic code?

DENDRICK: Well, under our Western code, a man is presumed innocent until he's proved guilty. Under the Napoleonic Code, a man is presumed guilty until he's proved innocent. Under the Soviet code, a man is presumed guilty - period.

MURROW: What about those coming trials you spoke of?

KENDRICK: Well, since the Prague trial has already served its particular educational purpose in all the satellite countries, where it was widely publicized, I think these other trials will have a different pitch, designed to teach a different lesson. Instead of Zionism, it will probably be something else that turns out to be treasonable. Whatever it is, I'm sure they've got a lot of confessions already, to those new future crimes.

MURROW: Alex, Vienna is still the port of first call for people who manage to escape from behind the Iron Curtain - and incidentally, this new concept of crime and punishment.

KENDRICK: Yes, it is, but for too many people it remains only the port of arrival, and never the port of departure. It's a sad thing for an American to witness this jump from the fire into the frying-pan, because frankly I don't think we're honoring our implicit promises to them.

MURROW: What promises do we make?

KENDRICK: Well, no promises, really. I said implicit. But we encourage them to escape in every line of every radio broadcast that is made to them, in all languages. We may not mean to. But we try to keep alive for them the vision of the free world, we tell them what's happening on our side of the curtain, we send them personal messages from friends and relatives who got away before they did. I don't think there's any doubt about the lure in all this. Then, when they do get out - -

MURROW: Yes, what happens then?

KENDRICK: Well, usually nothing. We interrogate them very rigidly, and get lots of information about the country they've just left. Sometimes I think our whole purpose is only to get information. They manage to escape, at the risk of their lives, and discover that they're in a strange paper world of visas, affidavits, consuls, quotas, work permits, bonds of guarantee, and all the rest of it. I know people in Vienna who have been there since the Prague coup of 1948, when they escaped. That's nearly five years now. Being an escapee is no longer just a temporary phase of a man's life. It can be his whole life span. I think we have to do better than that.

MURROW: Alex Kendrick's report on "Justice in Czechoslavakia" would seem to bear out this observation by the Frenchman, Chamfort: "Tis easier to make certain things legal than to make them legitimate." There was another French writer named Joseph Joubert. But the sattelite countries apparently do not go along with his contention that in the end "justice is simply truth in action."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday, January 4, 1953

This is the news:

The President reports to the nation tonight on what his Administration has accomplished and what it hopes to do in the future. His talk will be heard over many of these stations at 9;30 p.m. eastern time. Today Mr. Eisenhower and his cabinet went over the speech and his State of the Union message with Republican congressional leaders. House Speaker Martin says the President will offer the country "a progressive, dynamic program." And Republican Senate Leader Knowland says the President will present a "constructive program." Another White House guest was Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee. He told reporters: "I wish the American people a prosperous New Year and congratulate them on prospective tax relief."

A White House source says today's visiting congressmen did not discuss the question of military aid to Pakistan. But one congressional source says the President has decided to ignore India's protests and grant aid to Pakistan. And in India, Prime Minister Nehru said a military alliance between the United States and Pakistan would be "a step toward world war--a step that would bring war right to our doors."

In Korea, United Nations troops are building two new camps to receive the 22-thousand anti-Communist war prisoners who we expect to be released towards the end of this month. General Hull, the United Nations commander, has told the neutral Indians--who now have the prisoners under their control--that we will free the Chinese and North Koreans on January 23rd, (in accordance with the armistice agreement.) Indian General Thimaya says "we will have to decide what to do" with the prisoners. And at the United Nations today we have started a move to block any effort to bring the Korean issue to the floor of the General Assembly before the day the prisoners are to be released.

In Indo China, French fighters and bombers have been attacking supply lines to the Communist-led Viet Minh forces in the northwest. The French flew by moonlight in an attempt to disrupt the coolie convoys that generally move at night.

The French government says that in the seven years of war in Indo-China 15, 700 men have been killed or are missing.. an average of 2-thousand Frenchmen a year.

In Washington today the State Department said the Russians are now studying our suggestions on how to begin secret talks on President Eisenhower's proposal for a peace-time pool of atomic energy. Ambassador Bohlen discussed the proposal with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow on Saturday.

The Navy says when its new atomic submarine, the Nautilus, is launched it will be used for research on underwater speed and pressure problems... with some tests submerged for two months or more at a time.

The Bureau of Printing and Engraving today made public what could turn out to be the biggest theft on the bureau's history. Sometime during the Christmas holiday someone apparently stole 160-thousand dollars in new twenty dollar bills.. and replaced them with two dummy packages of blank paper..cut to the size of regular bills. The Bureau is making a thorough search of its building to see if the money may have been hidden there. The serial numbers of the missing 8-thousand twnety dollar bills are known to the Bureau.

Here in New York today, Governor Dewey called for the elimination of traitors without injuring the reputations of the innocent and without "untrammeled exploration of intellectual and scientific inquiry and teaching." Opening the 200-th anniversary celebration of Columbia University, Governor Dewey said the free world is battling three major threats:"The first is the communist totalitarian ideology which would place all men on a procrustean bed. The second threat comes from the impoverished of mind and spirit who distrust all learning and fear to trust the future." And the third threat--said Governor Dewey-- "comes from the small but vocal group who would sacrifice liberty in order to defeat its enemies." Governor Dewey called for punishment of all subversives. But, he said, this should be accomplished without "injury to the reputation of good people."

Edward R. Murrow: January 4, 1954. 7.45 p.m.

Frequently on this report we have relayed to you information sent by an old friend and fine reporter, Alex Kendrick. He makes his headquarters in Vienna, and frequently travels through part of the Balkans and the Middle East. He is here with me tonight. Alex, a little more than a year ago the Russians gave us a blueprint of their future plans. They said in substance that the Western Alliance would come unstuck; that our allies would come to resent more and more our economic domination; and that the Russians would use trade as an instrument to break up the Western Alliance. They said that there were now two world markets instead of one. Have you seen any evidences of this Communist trade offensive?

Murrow talks about All-Party Congress and economic aims set forth there. Stalin's statement that there are now two world markets instead of one.

KENDRICK; What the Russians meant at that time, what Stalin meant, was that they were giving priority to the building up of their own economic bloc, and that trade within that bloc had arrived at a point where it could be considered a separate market. But that was 15 months ago, and Stalin has died, and now I think the Russians are beyond that and are competing with their market against ours -- and not doing badly.

MURROW: Anything to support that?

KENDRICK: Well, there's no doubt that the Russians are exporting gold -- which incidentally has no value whatsoever inside the Soviet Union. They mine it in large quantities, at practically no expense since it's forced labor, and when they send gold to other countries in exchange for butter and other consumer goods they get those goods for practically nothing -- by their values. There are also many parts of the world where the Communists don't have to buy goods with gold, but sell their own goods in impressive quantities.

MURROW: I suppose Vienna is one of those places?

KENDRICK: A thriving market place between East and West. At the Vienna Fair a few months ago the Russians and all the satellites were well represented. They put on sale -- and they sold, too -- everything from automobiles and hydraulic presses to radio sets and pianos and fur coats. Even Russian wrist watches. The satellites sold everything from Bulgarian tobacco and attar of roses to Czech glassware and Polish rubber tires.

MURROW: So the satellites are in business, too?

KENDRICK: Ed, on the basis of visible evidence -- which means I don't know what goes on in the free ports of Europe or the banks of Switzerland -- I would say that the satellites are doing more selling than the Russians. Especially in the Middle East?

MURROW: You were there recently, weren't you?

KENDRICK: Yes, and I can say that if the man in front of me on every plane and at every hotel desk was a German or Japanese businessman, the two men behind me were Czechs, or Poles, or East Germans. I say two men because Communist trade delegations travel in groups. They don't represent one factory, or one industry, but whole sections of the national economy. In Cairo recently the Czechs held an industrial exposition with great success, and in Lebanon the East Germans arrived right on the heels of the West Germans.

MURROW: Any reason for this outburst of trade by the satellites?

KENDRICK: I would say it's because they seem to have been released from some of their previous obligations to the Soviet economic system. Not so long ago they were producing primarily for the Russians, and even their own needs came after that, let alone any outside trade. But now I think some of the economic ties with Moscow have been loosened. The satellites are more on their own, making the best bargains they can wherever they can.

MURROW: Are they making any fast bucks?

KENDRICK: Well, they're not so much interested in dollars as they used tobe. Any other currency will do, and some of it is quite good these days. The Egyptian pound is worth more than the British pound, and the Austrian schilling, believe it or not, costs more dollars than the official rate.

MURROW: Alex, do you think this economic penetration by the Communists is a serious thing?

KENDRICK: It would be more serious, of course, if there were a depression in this part of the world. I don't know if it's serious, but it's certainly important, and one of the important things is that we can't do anything about it. I don't know whether anything can be done.

MURROW: Neither do I. Alex, what are things like in Trieste these days? That's part of your beat, isn't it?

KENDRICK: I get there whenever I can, and I think we'll have a Trieste settlement sooner or later. We didn't help the chances with the recent Trieste crisis, which made everybody mad and caused the Yugoslavs to wonder about our good intentions. But the heat has gone out of the situation, and there can be an agreement.

MURROW: What kind of agreement?

KENDRICK: I think the Yugoslavs will finally concede that Trieste city should go to the Italians, and the Italians will concede a few border changes, Slovene villages in Zone A going to Yugoslavia in return for Italian villages in Zone B. That, plus a Yugoslav free port in Trieste, like the Yugoslav free port in Salonika, in Greece.

MURROW: Any good stories in your part of the world lately?

KENDRICK: There was this man in the bottle...

The problems of international trade are no less involved now than in the past. And recall something that Ray Lyman Wilbur once said:"The world population finds itself where it must work harder, if it is to get out of the hole that it is in. If we do not use opportunity wisely, we will get pushed aside, by other forces. For the weeds stand ever ready to replace the plants."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 4, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President reports to the nation tonight on what his Administration has accomplished and what it hopes to do in the future. His talk will be heard over many of these stations at 9:30 p.m. eastern time. Today Mr. Eisenhower and his cabinet went over the speech and his State of the Union message with Republican congressional leaders. House Speaker Martin says the President will offer the country "a progressive, dynamic program." And Republican Senate Leader Knowland says the President will present a "constructive program." Another White House guest was Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee. He told reporters: "I wish the American people a prosperous New Year and congratulate them on prospective tax relief."

A White House source says today's visiting congressmen did not discuss the question of military aid to Pakistan. But one congressional source says the President has decided to ignore India's protests and grant aid to Pakistan. And in India, Prime Minister Nehru said a military alliance between the United States and Pakistan would be "a step toward world war - a step that would bring war right to our doors."

In Korea, United Nations troops are building two new camps to receive the 22-thousand anti-Communist war prisoners who we expect to be released towards the end of this month. General Hull, the United Nations commander, has told the neutral Indians - who now have the prisoners under their control that we will free the Chinese and North Koreans on January 23rd, in accordance with the armistice agreement. Indian General Thimaya says "we will have to decide what to do" with the prisoners. And at the United Nations today we have started a move to block any effort to bring the Korean issue to the floor of the General Assembly before the day the prisoners are to be released.

In Indo China, French fighters and bombers have been attacking supply lines to the Communist-led Viet Minh forces in the northwest. The French flew by moonlight in an attempt to disrupt the coolie convoys that generally move at night.

The French government says that in the seven years of war in Indo-China 15,700 men have been killed or are missing - an average of 2-thousand Frenchmen a year.

In Washington today the State Department said the Russians are now studying our suggestions on how to begin secret talks on President Eisenhower's proposal for a peacetime pool of atomic energy. Ambassador Bohlen discussed the proposal with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow on Saturday.

The Navy says when its new atomic submarine, the Nautilus, is launched it will be used for research on underwater speed and pressure problems - with some tests submerged for two months or more at a time.

The Bureau of Printing and Engraving today made public what could turn out to be the biggest theft on the bureau's history. Sometime during the Christmas holiday someone apparently stole 160-thousand dollars in new twenty dollar bills and replaced them with two dummy packages of blank paper cut to the size of regular bills. The Bureau is making a thorough search of its building to see if the money may have been hidden there. The serial numbers of the missing 8-thousand twenty dollar bills are known to the Bureau.

Here in New York today, Governor Dewey called for the elimination of traitors without injuring the reputations of the innocent and without "untrammeled exploration of intellectual and scientific inquiry and teaching." Opening the 200th anniversary celebration of Columbia University, Governor Dewey said the free world is battling three major threats: "The first is the communist totalitarian idealogy which would place all men on a procrustean bed. The second threat comes from the impoverished of mind and spirit who distrust all learning and fear to trust the future." And the third threat, said Governor Dewey, "comes from the small but vocal group who would sacrifice liberty in order to defeat its enemies." Governor Dewey called for punishment of all subversives. But, he said, this should be accomplshed without "injury to the reputation of good people."

Frequently on this report we have relayed to you information sent by an old friend and fine reporter, Alex Kendrick. He makes his headquarters in Vienna, and frequently travels through part of the Balkans and the Middle East. He is here with me tonight. Alex, a little more than a year ago the Russians gave us a blueprint of their future plans. They said in substance that the Western Alliance would come unstuck; that our allies would come to resent more and more our economic domination; and that the Russians would use trade as an instrument to break up the Western Alliance. They said that there were now two world markets instead of one. Have you seen any evidences of this Communist trade offensive?

KENRICK: What the Russians meant at the time, what Stalin meant, was that they were giving priority to the building up of their own economic bloc, and that trade within that bloc had arrived at a point where it could be considered a separate market. But that was 15 months ago, and Stalin has died, and now I think the Russians are beyond that, are competing with their market against ours and not doing badly.

MURROW: Anything to support that?

KENDRICK: Well, there's no doubt that the Russians are exporting gold - which incidentally has no value whatsoever inside the Soviet Union. They mine it in large quantities, at practically no expense since it's forced labor, and when they send gold to other countries in exchange for butter and other consumer goods they get those goods for practically nothing by their values. There are also many parts of the world where the Communists don't have to buy goods with gold, but sell their own goods in impressive quantities.

MURROW: I suppose Vienna is one of those places?

KENDRICK: a thriving market place between East and West. At the Vienna Fair a few months ago the Russians and all the satellites were well represented. They put on sale - and they sold, too - everything from automobiles and hydraulic presses to radio sets and pianos and fur coats. Even Russian wrist watches. The satellites sold everything from Bulgarian tobacco and attar of roses to Czech glassware and Polish rubber tires.

MURROW: So the satellites are in business, too?

KENDRICK: Ed, on the basis of visible evidence - which means I don't know what goes on in the free ports of Europe or the banks of Switzerland - I would say that the satellites are doing more selling than the Russians. Especially in the Middle East.

MURROW: You were there recently, weren't you?

KENDRICK: Yes, and I can say that if the man in front of me on every plan and at every hotel desk was a German or Japanese businessman, the two men behind me were Czechs, or Poles, or East Germans. I say two men because Communist trade delegations travel in groups. They don't represent one factory, or one industry, but whole sections of the national economy. In Cairo recently the Czechs held an industrial exposition with great success, and in Lebanon the East Germans arrived right on the heels of the West Germans.

MURROW: Any reason for this outburst of trade by the satellites?

KENDRICK: I would say it's because they seem to have been released from some of their previous obligations to the Soviet economic system. Not so long ago they were producing primarily for the Russians, and even their own needs came after that, let alone any outside trade. But now I think some of the economic ties with Moscow have been loosened. The satellites are more on their own, making the best bargains they can wherever they can.

MURROW: Are they making any fast bucks?

KENDRICK: Well, they're not so much interested in dollars as they used to be. Any other currency will do, and some of it is quite good these days. The Egyptian pound is worth more than the British pound, and the Austrian schilling, believe it or not, costs more dollars than the official rate.

MURROW: Alex, od you think this economic penetration by the Communists is a serious thing?

KENDRICK: It would be more serious, of course, if there were a depression in this part of the world. I don't know if it's serious, but it's certainly important, and one of the important things is that we can't do anything about it. I don't know whether anything can be done.

MURROW: Neither do I, Alex; what are things like in Trieste these days? That's part of your beat, isn't it?

KENDRICK: I get there whenever I can, and I think we'll have a Trieste settlement sooner or later. We didn't help the chances with the recent Trieste Crisis, which made everybody mad and caused the Yugoslavs to wonder about our good intentions. But the heat has gone out of the situation, and there can be an agreement.

MURROW: What kind of agreement?

KENDRICK: I think the Yugoslavs will finally concede that Trieste city should go to the Italians, and the Italians will concede a few border changes. Slovene villages in Zone A going to Yugoslavia in return for Italian villages in Zone B. That, plus a Yugoslav free port in Trieste, like the Yugoslav free port in Salonika, in Greece.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problems of international trade are no less involved now than in the past. And recall something that Ray Lyman Wilbur once said: "The world population finds itself where it must work harder if it is to get out of the hole that it is in. If we do not use opportunity wisely, we will get pushed aside by other forces. For the weeds stand ever ready to replace the plants."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Monday Jan. 5, 1953

This is the news:

General Eisenhower and Winston Churchill are meeting tonight at the home of Bernard Baruch, here in New York. The British Prime Minister arrived earlier in the day...told reporters that the allied action in Korea has given the world "a hopeful future for peace"..and then went to the Baruch home, (where he plans to stay for three or four days.) General Eisenhower called on him this afternoon, and goes back for dinner, and more conversation tonight. I'd like to review some of Mr. Churchill's views--in a few minutes.

Before the Prime Minister arrived, General Eisenhower conferred with four Republican Senators. Later, Senator Knowland, chairman of the Republican policy committee, said he expects this congress to approve a law, making Hawaii the 49th state. [He said Alaska was not discussed at the meeting.]

President Truman today made public, figures that he says confirm his claim, that the people in this country are better off today than ever before in our history. A letter from Census Director Roy V. Peel offers figures to show that during the Truman Administration the country made

"unparrallled gains.".. in incomes.. standard of living.. education.. housing and MANY other ways.

The President also issued a statement attacking critics of the commission he set up to study the McCarran-Walter Immigration act. (This commission recommends complete revision of the act.) Senator McCarran says opponents of the law include "out and out reds... pinks and demagogues." Today, the President said such attacks are "unwarranted and politically motivated".. he called IT "personal vituperation and SLANDER" of the commission members.

Representative Rayburn of Texas, the dean of all Democrats in Congress, says he feels his party will be more united now than it has been in the past 20 years. He believes the coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans is going to end. He says that in the past, Southern Democrats split from the party because of the civil rights proposals of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. Now, he looks for Eisenhower to propose some sort of civil rights program.. and become the target of "hate" by southern Democrats.

Both houses of Congress meet together tomorrow to formally count the electroal college vote and officially pronounce General Eisenhower the winner of the election.

In a federal court in Washington today, Charles E. Shaver, former general counsel of the Senate small business committee, admitted that he accepted 15-hundred dollars from firms seeking [redacted] Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans. Leonard H. Cooper, a Miami businessman, pleaded guilty to a charge of giving money to Shaver and trying to influence the R.F.C. to make a loan.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman told counsel for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg that if he applies for Presidential clemency for his clients by Saturday--four days before the Rosenbergs are scheduled to be electrocuted--Judge Kaufman will [redacted] order the death sentence postponed. Across the street from the White House today more than 800 pickets MARCHED-- [redacted] demanding clemency for the Rosenbergs who were convicted of conspiring to turn our atomic bomb secrets over to the Russians. Representatives of this group are seeking a meeting with Mr. Truman.

In many sections of the world , Communists and others are protesting the scheduled execution..demanding mercy for the Rosenbergs. The State Department is distributing a summary of the trial in 41 countries. Because the charge is being made that the trial and death sentence were "anti-semetic" the State Department account points out that both the prosecutor and the sentencing judge are Jewish.

~~The Reverend Daniel A. Poling has issued a statement on behalf of six representatives of three religious groups, charging that the case is being exploited by Communist trickery to destroy faith in our American institutions.~~

In was cold in Korea today and again the ground action was confined to several small clashes. The weather kept most planes on the ground but our sabrjets registered their first "kill" of a Mig for the New Year.

In Paris today, General Ridgeway again made it clear that he is not satisfied with the progress of the North Atlantic forces. He told reporters: the progress of the past year has been encouraging."But," he said,"I do not regard it as satisfactory in the light of the mission assigned to me and in the light of enemy capabilities." The General thinks that if the Russians attack within a year to a year and a half his forces would suffer "grievous blows". He added:"I do not mean they would be defeated."

Newspapers in Iran report today that Premier Mossadegh has warned American ambassador Henderson that we must send aid to Iran immediately to prevent the Communists from taking over the country.

In Springfield, Illinois, Governor Stevenson told his final news conference as governor, that he plans a three-month trip around the world..leaving by March first.

Here in New York, Dr. Grayson Kirk was named President of Columbia university..suceeding General Eisenhower.

And C.I.O. transport workers who are striking against eight private bus lines say they expect our subway system to be slowed down because of over-crowding. But city officials report that subway traffic was only slightly above normal during both the morning and evening rush hours.

Edward R. Murrow: January 5, 1952. 7.45 p.m.

Mr. Winston Churchill, at the not inconsiderable age of 78, full of years of honors, arrived in New York this morning. At a news conference aboard the Queen Mary, the British Prime Minister demonstrated again his ability to be both consistent and informative. He is against any extension of the Korean war, but he believes that United Nations action under American leadership in Korea has been the greatest event in the past five years; it has done more to improve the chances of world peace than anything else. He admitted that nobody likes a prolonged stalemate. He thinks we must hold our present positions in Korea - there may be an improvement in the situation. And he thinks it would be a great pity if "the United Nations armies or the United States armies wandered about all over China or made any definite extension of the war." Mr. Churchill believes that the "center of gravity" in this world conflict lies along the frontiers of the Iron Curtain in Europe. And he strongly implies that he would like us to remember that.

Mr. Churchill would also like us to understand that Britain doesn't want to live off us; would prefer trade to aid; but unless we're willing ro reduce our tariff barriers and buy the things that Britain makes, he doesn't see how this can be done.

On the subject of exchange of information about atomic energy, Mr. Churchill said the British atom bomb was a success, but that we hadn't lived up to the promise made by President Roosevelt, to share with Britain complete information about atomic bombs.

On the subject of a meeting with Premier Stalin, Mr. Churchill had nothing to say, for the time being. Mr. Churchill is going to Washington to see President Truman, and he thinks the President has "headed a memorable period in American history; he has taken great and valiant decisions that have made us all feel better."

Mr. Churchill was asked if the danger of a third world war had subsided in the last year. For the benefit of reporters, and the dictionary, he said: "If receded should be substituted for subsided" then he would agree that that's what's happened. He declined to answer questions as to whether Britain would support a blockade of communist China.

On the ~~XXXXXX~~ subject of his meeting with General Eisenhower -(they had cocktails together this afternoon and are now dining at the home of Mr. Bernard Baruch)- Mr. Churchill said there was nothing extraordinary about the meeting; they have met a hundred times before, and he didn't see any reason why anything should go wrong this time.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt -(who once said Mr. Churchill hadn't changed his mind about anything in sixty years) - stopped by Mr. Baruch's and had lunch with the British Prime Minister.# On some subjects Mr. Churchill is indeed inflexible, as his record and his remarks today indicate. When he said that the stopping of aggression in Korea was the major event of the last five years, he must have been thinking of Abyssinia and Munich and the miserable record of appeasement that led to the late world war. When he opposed an extension of the war in Asia, he was speaking not only as a European, who naturally puts Europe first, but also as a military strategist, who understand that war should be fought, if it must be, on ground of our own choosing, and with weapons with which we excel.

In discussing the exchange of atomic information and the Anglo-American alliance, Mr. Churchill said: "We want to be a useful partner; we don't want to ask anything that would not be of common benefit." That sentence must have cost him something in the way of restraint, for his memory and his service go back to the days when Britain ruled not only the seas, but much of the world. More recently - only about ten years ago - he headed the government that fought alone against the forces of Fascism - fought long enough and well enough so that in his own phrase, "those who were half asleep could become half prepared." That was us.

Today Mr. Churchill cast himself in the role of a junior partner, in a voice that has lost some of its rolling resonance. There was no complaint about Britain's continuing austerity. He said: "We haven't had a bad year. The general state of health on the other side of the ocean is at least as good as last year." As the leader of a proud people he asked for trade instead of charity. He suggested that partners in the grim business of surviving, ought to be willing to exchange information.

The relationship between Churchill and Eisenhower has been from the outset close and cordial. The President-elect may stay up rather later than usual tonight. There will probably be a toast or two, to the past as well as the future, for those two men are in a position to fashion much of the future.

Mr. Churchill's visit reminds me of the time...back in 1944...~~that~~ when he told the House of Commons:"I do not hesitate to travel from court to court like a wandering minstrel. But always with the same song or set of songs." The lyrics were expounded 11 years ago when he said:" When great causes are on the move in the world, we learn that we are spirits, not animals;that something is going on in space and time and beyond - which, whether we like it or not, spells duty."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 5, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower and Winston Churchill are meeting tonight at the home of Bernard Baruch, here in New York. The British Prime Minister arrived earlier in the day, told reporters that the allied action in Korea has given the world "a hopeful future for peace" and then went to the Baruch home, (where he plans to stay for three or four days.) General Eisenhower called him this afternoon and goes back for dinner and more conversation tonight. I'd like to review some of Mr. Churchill's views - in a few minutes.

Before the Prime Minister arrived, General Eisenhower conferred with four Republican Senators. Later, Senator Knowland, chairman of the Republican policy committee, said he expects this congress to approve a law making Hawaii the 49th state. He said Alaska was not discusses at the meeting.

President Truman today made public figures that he says confirm his claim that the people in this country are better off today than ever before in our history. A letter from Census Director Roy V. Peel offers figures to show that during the Truman Administration the country made "unparalled gains" in incomes standard of living, education, housing and many other ways.

The President also issued a statement attacking critics of the commission he set up to study the McCarran-Walter Immigration act. This commission recommends complete revision of the act. Senator McCarran says opponents of the law include "out and out reds, pinks and demagogues." Today, the President said such attacks are "unwarranted and politically motivated" he called it "personal vituperation and slander" of the commission members.

Representative Rayburn of Texas, the dean of all Democrats in Congress, says he feels his party will be more united now than it has been in the past 20 years. He believes the coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans is going to end. He says that in the past, Southern Democrats split from the party because of the civil rights proposals of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. Now, he looks for Eisenhower to propose some sort of civil rights program, and become the target of "hate" by southern Democrats.

Both houses of Congress meet together tomorrow to formally count the electoral college vote and officially pronounce General Eisenhower the winner of the election.

In a federal court in Washington today, Charles E. Shaver, former general counsel of the Senate small business committee, admitted that he accepted 15-hundred dollars from firms seeking Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans. Leonard H. Cooper, a Miami businessman, pleaded guilty to a charge of giving money to Shaver and trying to influence the R.F.C. to make a loan.

Here in New York, Federal Judge Kaufman told counsel for Julius and Ethel Rosenberg that if he applies for Presidential clemency for his clients by Saturday - four days before the Rosenbergs are scheduled to be electrocuted - Judge Kaufman will order the death sentence postponed. Across the street from the White House today more than 800 pickets marched demanding clemency for the Rosenbergs, who were convicted to conspiring to turn our atomic bomb secrets over to the Russians. Representatives of this group are seeking a meeting with Mr. Truman.

In many sections of the world, Communists and others are protesting the scheduled execution - demanding mercy for the Rosenbergs. The State Department is distributing a summary of the trial in 41 countries. Because the charge is being made that the trial and death sentence were "anti-semetic" the State Department account points out that both the prosecutor and the sentencing judge are Jewish.

It was cold in Korea today and again the ground action was confined to several small clashes. The weather kept most planes on the ground, but our sabre-jets registered their first "kill" of a Mig for the New Year.

In Paris today, General Ridgeway again made it clear that he is not satisfied with the progress of the North Atlantic forces. He told reporters: the progress of the past year has been encouraging, "but," he said, "I do not regard it as satisfactory in the light of the mission assigned to me and in the light of enemy capabilities." The General thinks that if the Russians attack within a year to a year and a half his forces would suffer "grievous blows". He added: "I do not mean they would be defeated."

Newspapers in Iran report today that Premier Mossadegh has warned American ambassador Henderson that we must send aid to Iran immediately to prevent the Communists from taking over the country.

In Springfield, Illinois, Governor Stevenson told his final news conference as governor, that he plans a three month trip around the world, leaving by Marsh first.

Here in New York, Dr. Grayson Kirk was named President of Columbia University, - succeeding General Eisenhower.

And C.I.O. transport workers, who are striking against eight private bus lines, say they expect our subway system to be slowed down, because of overcrowding. But city officials report that subway traffic was only slightly above normal during both the morning and evening rush hours.

Mr. Winston Churchill, at the not inconsiderable age of 78, full of years of honors, arrived in New York this morning. At a news conference aboard the Queen Mary, the British Prime Minister demonstrated again his ability to be both consistent and informative. He is against any extension of the Korean war, but he believes that United Nations action, under American leadership in Korea has been the greatest event in the past five years; it has done more to improve the chances of world peace than anything else. He admitted that nobody likes a prolonged stalemate. He thinks we must hold our present positions in Korea - there may be an improvement in the situation. And he thinks it would be a great pity if "the United Nations armies or the United States armies wandered about all over China or made any definite extension of the war." Mr. Churchill believes that the "center of gravity" in this world conflict lies along the frontiers of the Iron Curtain in Europe. And he strongly implies that he would like us to remember that.

Mr. Churchill would also like us to understand that Britain doesn't want to live off us; would prefer trade to aid; but unless we're willing to reduce our tariff barriers and buy the things that Britain makes, he doesn't see how this can be done.

On the subject of exchange of information about atomic energy, Mr. Churchill said the British atom bomb was a success, but that we hadn't lived up to the promise made by President Roosevelt to share with Britain complete information about atomic bombs.

On the subject of a meeting with Premier Stalin, Mr. Churchill had nothing to say for the time being. Mr. Churchill is going to Washington to see President Truman, and he thinks the President has "headed a memorable period in American history; he has taken great and valiant decisions that have made us all feel better."

Mr. Churchill was asked if the danger of a third world war had subsided in the last year. For the benefit of reporters and the dictionary he said: "If receded should be substituted for subsided" then he would agree that that's what's happened. He declined to answer questions as to whether Britain would support a blockade of Communist China.

On the subject of his meeting with General Eisenhower (they had cocktails together this afternoon and are now dining at the home of Mr. Bernard Baruch) Mr. Churchill said there was nothing extraordinary about the meeting; they have met a hundred times before, and he didn't see any reason why anything should go wrong this time.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who once said Mr. Churchill hadn't changed his mind about anything in sixty years) stopped by Mr. Baruch's and had lunch with the British Prime Minister. On some subjects Mr. Churchill is indeed inflexible, as his record and his remarks today indicate. When he said that the stopping of agression in Korea was the major event of the last five years, he must have been thinking of Abyssinia and Munich and the miserable record of appeasement that led to the late world war. When he opposed an extension of the war in Asia, he was speaking not only as a European who naturally puts Europe first, but also as a military stratesist who understand that war should be fought if it must be on ground of our own choosing, and with weapons with which we excel.

In discussing the exchange of atomic information and the Anglo-American alliance, Mr. Churchill said: "We want to be a useful partner; we don't want to ask anything that would not be of common benefit." That sentence must have cost him something in the way of restraint, for his memory and his service go back to the days when Britain ruled not only the seas, but much of the world. More recently - only about ten years ago - he headed the government that fought alone against the forces of Fascism - fought long enough and well enough so that in his own phrase, "those who were half asleep could become half prepared." That was us.

Today Mr. Churchill cast himself in the role of a junior partner, in a voice that has lost some of its rolling resonance. There was no complaint about Britain's continuing austerity. He said: "We haven't had a bad year. The general state of health on the other side of the ocean is at least as good as last year." As the leader of a proud people he asked for trade instead of charity. He suggested that partners in the grim business of surviving ought to be willing to exchange information.

The relationship between Churchill and Eisenhower has been from the outset close and cordial. The President-elect may stay up rather later than usual tonight. There will probably be a toast or two, to the past as well as the future, for those two men are in a position to fashion much of the future.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, now here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Churchill's visit reminds me of the time back in 1944 when he told the House of Commons: "I do not hesitate to travel from court to court like a wandering minstrel. But always with the same song or set of songs." The lyrics were expounded 11 years ago when he said: "When great causes are on the move in the world, we learn that we are spirits, not animals; that something is going on in space and time and beyond - which, whether we like it or not, spells duty."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Jan. 6, 1953

This is the news:

The Congress today formally elected Dwight Eisenhower, president, and Richard Nixon, vice president. In 38 minutes, and to no one's surprise, Congress confirmed the electoral count: 442 electoral votes for Eisenhower; 89 for Stevenson.

The General, here in New York, called the first meeting of all the TOP officials he has appointed so-far, for his new Administration. Some 21 cabinet members, agency heads AND personnel of the White House staff, will meet here in New York NEXT MONDAY + TUESDAY for "a general discussion of domestic and foreign problems confronting the new Administration." One of these appointees, Joseph Dodge, who is to be director of the budget, starts talks tomorrow with cabinet members to be, on how to balance the budget. [redacted] Mr. Dodge, [redacted] ..[redacted] says the Eisenhower [redacted] he warns against expecting "miracles." He says recommendations for budget cuts will be sent to Congress one by one; not in any one big substitute budget.

The General TODAY announced two new State Department appointments. [redacted] Donald B. Lourie of Illinois, president of the Quaker Oats Company, will become undersecretary of state in charge of Administration. He'll WORK [redacted] ON organizing and re-organizing the department. And Carl W. McCardle, a veteran newspaperman, who is now Washington Bureau chief of the Philadelphia Bulletin, will be an assistant secretary of state in the new administration. He'll be in charge of public affairs..particularly our information services overseas, and the Voice of America programs.

Hugh Bailiie, the president of the United Press, called on the General today, and later told reporters: Eisenhower will hold press conferences when he gets to the White House. Mr. Baillie was not in a position to say whether the new President will continue the practise of questions and answers--as in the past--or adopt some new technique.

General Eisenhower had nothing to say today on [redacted] YESTERDAYS two meetings [redacted] with Prime Minister Churchill. But we're told there will be another Eisenhower-Churchill meeting tomorrow afternoon. Right now, John Foster Dulles and Winthrop Aldrich are dining with Mr. Churchill at the home of Bernard Baruch. Mr. Dulles is to be the secretary of state, and Mr. Aldrich becomes ambassador to Britain, after they are confirmed by the [redacted]

Senate. Tomorrow night Governor Dewey will dine with the Prime Minister.

Britain's acting prime minister--Anthony Eden--told his people in a radio broadcast tonight that Stalin was insincere when he SAID recently that he wanted to help end the war in Korea. Mr. Eden said Stalin could have proved his sincereity by accepting the Indian compromise proposal approved by a majority of the United Nations. Eden says there is now "grim tension and disarray" behind the Iron Curtain. In all the satellites, some Communist leaders, formerly hailed as heroes of the people, have fallen into discgrace and are being butchered. ~~Eden suggests that in addition to economic failures such as in Czechoslovakia, some of these Communists in the satellite countries may have started to show signs of putting their own countries first.~~

In Washington today, Senator Wiley, who is to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called on this country and its allies to tighten their laws against treason, espionage and subversion in high places. He says "the punishment" should not be a slap on the wrist but a real deterrent." ~~Wiley says, as well as the British, Canadian, French and other countries, to make sure that such crimes are punished~~

[redacted]

At the United Nations, David Weinttraub, head of the division of economic stability and development, resigned his job. He was the subject of 43 adverse reports by the F.B.I. Weintraub has denied under oath that he has ever been a communist, fellow traveler, or a spy. He told Secretary General Lie he was resigning to spare the U.N. [redacted] embarrassment. Mr. Lie accepted the resignation with regret.

In the Senate today, Majority Leader Taft promised, that later in this session, he will try to get the Senate rules changed to make it easier to shut off filibusters. Taft is opposed to a current move to change the rules. They now call for a vote of two-thirds of all 96 Senators, to shut off debate. Senator Taft says he thinks the rule should be changed--at a later date--to permit a vote to end debate by two-thirds of all Senators present and voting.

~~Taft also announced that he and Representative McConnell of Pennsylvania, chairman of the House Labor Committee, have agreed on "wide open hearings" on proposals to amend the Taft-Hartley act. They expect to start about the first of February.~~

The Senate Elections SubCommittee today started turning over to the Justice Department its files on a six months investigation of Senator Mc Carthy. Chairman Hennings of Missouri says the material has also been called to the attention of the Internal Revenue Bureau and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.. for possible violations of tax or banking regulations.

Mc Carthy today made public photographic copies of letters he said were sent to Henry Grunewald, so-called mystery man, by President Truman and Senator Monroney, Oklahoma Democrat. Grunewald is now under indictment for contempt..refusing to answer questions of a House group investigating the tax bureau. The President wrote him "thanks" for a "generous" help in the 1948 campaign. Monroney acknowledged a primary campaign contribution. But the Senator says he doesn't know Grunewald..just sent him a form letter. The White House says the Truman letter must be a "routine acknowledgment" of a campaign contribution.

General Vandenbergh, the air force chief of staff, told a House committee today, that there was no sabotage in the nine recent air force disasters, in which 284 persons were killed. The General said: the predominant factor in the accidents was pilot error...there was no "pattern".. bad weather was a contributing factor.

The Army reported today that 46-thousand men have deserted since the Korean war began. Eleven thousand were still at large by the end of October. The others have been picked up by military police or surrendered themselves. ~~The army does not consider the current desertion rate to be "bad". The current rate of men absent without leave, that is for less than 30 days, is nearly 20-thousand a month.~~

~~Ammaman~~

In Kansas City today a federal jury indicted the Kansas City Star its president and advertising director, on two charges of violating the anti-trust act. The jury charges that the company, which runs morning and afternoon papers, has attempted to monopolize advertising. Roy Roberts, president of the company, says as soon as it knows just what the specific charges are, the Star will insist on an early trial, "confident of complete vindication."

Here in New York, there was no progress in settling the bus strike today. And in Baltimore 80-thousand children were kept out of school because of a strike by janitors and firemen.

In Korea, more than 100 of our fighter-bombers attacked an enemy troop and supply concentration. A bright sun sent temperatures up to 47 [redacted] but there was no major ground action.

Edward R. Murrow: January 6, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

A couple of dozen words in a despatch from Korea reminded this reporter of an oversight in reporting from out there. It was merely the story of Corporal Lee Yong Suk, the fourth man to lose both arms and both legs in the Korean war. He was attached to Charlie Company of the 27th Wolfhound Regiment - that's General Bradley's old outfit. Shortly after the Corporal was hit the men of his company started dropping five and ten-dollar bills in a collection box - the final total came to more than five thousand dollars. Corporal Lee Yong Suk is "doing all right" in a hospital in Pusan. He is referred to in the despatch as a "Katusa;" that means he was a member of the Korean Augmentation of the United States Army. The South Koreans wear the American uniform, and there are no better soldiers in Korea. Our boys call them "Korea Joe", or "Smiley", or "Little Pete"; and when you visit a line company and watch patrols go out and come back you notice that there are always one or two South Koreans, Katusas, with them. Our boys communicate with their South Korean allies with about twenty words and lots of gestures, but they understand each other. A couple of weeks ago an American sergeant said to me: "I would take a patrol from here to the Yalu and back if I had a Katusa in front of me and another one behind me."

American company and battalion commanders will tell you that there are no better soldiers in their outfits than these South Koreans. There is a ~~XXXXXXXX~~ mutual respect and affection between the American and South Korean troops, although their communication is limited to a few dozen words of pidgin Korean and English.

You listen to a brief exchange between an American and a South Korean, accompanied with gestures, and you say to the American: "What did you ask him to do?" The American says: "I asked him to go down and bring up a can of water, and six hand grenades." You express doubt that communication can be achieved in such fashion, and he says: "You wait a minute." The Katusa comes back, with a can of water and six hand grenades, and that's all there is to it. There is no condescension on the part of the Americans, no feeling of superiority. The Katusa is as much part of the outfit as the boy from Albuquerque or Fresno. As one American boy put it: "If a guy is maybe going to carry you back behind the wire, before the night is over, you don't care what color he is, or whether you speak so good to each other; the thing that's important is that he'll carry back what's left of you, or he won't come back himself." And he added: "That's the kind of guys our Katusa are."

The Katusa don't ask questions, they don't have any rotation to look forward to; many of them don't know what's happened to their families; but when there is work or fighting to be done they are there. They treasure their weapons and take better care of them than do our boys. The little brown Katusa is no burden to the white man in Korea - quite the contrary.

The other day, about dusk, there was a small fire fight on one of those interminable ridges near the center of the front - just small arms fire. Suddenly an American fifty-calibre machine gun joined in, beating out a rhythmic pattern like a drummer with a jazz band. The American boys in the bunker looked at each other and grinned. One of them said: "Listen to it, that's our Katusa, and boy is he having fun."

The most striking change in Korea in the last year, and particularly since the battle of White Horse Mountain, has been the new stature, ~~XXXXXXX~~ confidence and capability of the South Koreans. It is they who have taken the heavy casualties. American units now rest easy if they have Roks on their flanks. As one senior American officer said: "If we want to give weapons to people who have the guts to fight, who learn with amazing speed how to handle those weapons and care for them, here's the place to do it." If willingness and ability to fight are required to qualify for American aid, the South Koreans are qualified - beyond all doubt.

The South Korean soldier is confronted by many problems - not the least of which is the language barrier. But a wise Chinese philosopher once remarked: "The purpose of language is an idea to be expressed. When the idea is expressed, the language may be ignored." The courage of the ROKs can best be described in these words by La Rochefoucauld: "The accent of one's country dwells in the mind and the heart as well as on the tongue."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Congress today formally elected Dwight Eisenhower, president and Richard Nixon, vice president. In 38 minutes, and to no one's surprise, Congress confirmed the electoral count: 442 electoral votes for Eisenhower; 89 for Stevenson.

The General, here in New York, called the first meeting of all the top officials he has appointed so-far for his new Administration. Some 21 cabinet members, agency heads and personnel of the White House staff, will meet here in New York next Monday and Tuesday for "a general discussion of domestic and foreign problems confronting the new Administration." One of these appointees, Joseph Dodge, who is to be director of the budget, starts talks tomorrow with cabinet-members-to-be, on how to balance the budget. He warns against expecting "miracles." He says recommendations for budget cuts will be sent to Congress one by one; not in any one big substitute budget.

The General today announced two new State Department appointment, Donald B. Lourie of Illinois, president of the Quaker Oats Company, will become undersecretary of state in charge of Administration. He'll work on organizing and re-organizing the department. And Carl W. McCardle, a veteran newspaperman who is now Washington Bureau chief of the Philadelphia Bulletin, will be an assistant secretary of state in the new administration. He'll be in charge of public affairs, particularly our information services overseas and the Voice of America programs.

Hugh Bailiie, the president of the United Press called on the General today and later told reporters: Eisenhower will hold press conferences when he gets to the White House. Mr. Baillie was not in a position to say whether the new President will continue the practice of questions and answers as in the past, or adopt some new technique.

General Eisenhower had nothing to say today on yesterdays two meetings with Prime Minister Churchill. But we're told there will be another Eisenhower-Churchill meetint tomorrow afternoon. Right now, John Foster Dulles and Winthrop Aldrich are dining with Mr. Churchill at the home of Bernard Baruch. Mr. Dulles is to be the secretary of state and Mr. Aldrich becomes ambassador to Britain after they are confirmed by the Senate. Tomorrow night Governor Dewey will dine with the Prime Minister.

Britain's acting prime minister - Anthony Eden - told his people in a radio broadcast tonight that Stalin was insincere when he said recently that he wanted to help end the war in Korea. Mr. Eden said Stalin could have proved his sincererity by accepting the Indian compromise proposal approved by a majority of the United Nations. Eden says there is now "grim tension and disarray" behind the Iron Curtain. In all the satellites some Communist leaders, formerly hailed as heroes of the people, have fallen into disgrace and are being butchered.

In Washington today, Senator Wiley, who is to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called on his country and its allies to tighten their laws against treason, espionage and subversion in high places. He says "the punishment" should not be a slap on the wrist but a real deterrent."

At the United Nations, David Weintraub, head of the division of economic stability and development, resigned his job. He was the subject of 43 adverse reports by the F.B.I. Weintraub has denied under oath that he has ever been a communist, fellow traveler or a spy. He told Secretary General Lie he was resigning to spare the U.N. embarrassment. Mr. Lie accepted the resignation with "regret."

In the Senate today, Majority Leader Taft promised that later in this session he will try to get the Senate rules changed to make it easier to shut off filibusters. Taft is opposed to a current mo e to change the rules. They now call for a vote of two-thirds of all 96 Senators to shut off debate. Senator Taft says he thinks the rule should be changed - at a later date - to permit a vote to end debate by two-thirds of all Senators present and voting.

The Senate Elections SubCommittee today started turning over to the Justice Department its files on a six months investigation of Senator McCarthy. Chairman Hennings of Missouri says the material has also been called to the attention of the Internal Revenue Bureau and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, for possible violations of tax or banking regulations.

McCarthy today made public photographic copies of letters he said were sent to Henry Grunewald, so-called mystery man, by President Truman and Senator Monroney, Oklahoma Democrat. Grunewald is now under indictment for contempt, refusing to answer questions of a House group investigating the tax bureau. The President wrote his "thanks" for "generous" help in the 1948 campaign. Monroney acknowledged a primary campaign contribution. But the Senator says he doesn't know Grunewald, just sent him a form letter. The White House says the Truman letter must be a "routine acknowledgment" of a campaign contribution.

General Vandenbergh, the air force chief of staff, told a House committee today, that there was no sabotage in the nine recent air force disasters, in which 284 persons were killed. The General said: the predominant factor in the accidents was pilot error, there was no "pattern"; bad weather was a contributing factor.

The Army reported today that 46-thousand men have deserted since the Korean war began. Eleven thousand were still at large by the end of October. The others have been picked up by military police or surrendered themselves.

In Kansas City today a federal jury indicted the Kansas City Star, its president, and advertising director, on two charges of violating the anti-trust act. The jury charges that the company, which runs morning and afternoon papers, has attempted to monopolize advertising. Roy Roberts, president of the company, says as soon as it knows just what the specific charges are, the Star will insist on an early trial, "confident of complete vindication."

Here in New York, there was no progress in settling the bus strike today. And in Baltimore 80-thousand children were kept out of school because of a strike by janitors and firemen.

In Korea, more than 100 of our fighter-bombers attacked an enemy troop and supply concentration. A bright sun sent temperatures up to 47, but there was no major ground action.

A couple of dozen words in a despatch from Korea reminded this reporter of an oversight in reporting from out there. It was merely the story of Corporal Lee Yong Suk, the fourth man to lose both arms and both legs in the Korean war. He was attached to Charlie Company of the 27th Wolfhound Regiment - (that's General Bradley's old outfit.) Shortly after the Corporal was hit the men of his company started dropping five and ten-dollar bills in a collection box - the final total came to more than five thousand dollars. Corporal Lee Yong Suk is "doing all right" in a hospital in Pusan. He is referred to in the despatch as a "Katusa;" that means he was a member of the Korean Augmentation of the United States Army. The South Koreans wear the American uniform, and there are no better soldiers in Korea. Our boys call them "Korea Joe", or Smiley", or

"Little Pete"; and when you visit a line company and watch patrols go out and come back you notice that there are always one or two South Koreans, Katusas, with them. Our boys communicate with their South Korean allies with about twenty words and lots of gestures, but they understand each other. A couple of weeks ago an American sergeant said to me: "I would take a patrol from here to the Yalu and back if I had a Katusa in front of me and another one behind me."

American company and battalion commanders will tell you that there are no better soldiers in their outfits than these South Koreans. There is a mutual respect and affection between the American and South Korean troops, although their communication is limited to a few dozen words of pidgin Korean and English.

You listen to a brief exchange between an American and a South Korean, accompanied with gestures, and you say to the American: "What did you ask him to do?" The American says: "I asked him to go down and bring up a can of water, and six hand grenades." You express doubt that communication can be achieved in such fashion, and he says: "You wait a minute." The Katusa comes back with a can of water and six hand grenades, and that's all there is to it. There is no condescension on the part of the Americans, no feeling of superiority. The Katusa is as much part of the outfit as the boy from Albuquerque or Fresno. As one American boy put it: "If a guy is maybe going to carry you back behind the wire before the night is over, you don't care what color he is, or whether you speak so good to each other; the thing that's important is that he'll carry back what's left of you or he won't come back himself." And he added: "That's the kind of guys our Katusas are."

The Katusa don't ask questions, they don't have any rotation to look forward to; many of them don't know what's happened to their families; but when there is work or fighting to be done they are there. They treasure their weapons and take better care of them than do our boys. The little brown Katusa is no burden to the white man in Korea - quite the contrary.

The other day, about dusk, there was a small fire fight on one of those interminable ridges near the center of the front - just small arms fire. Suddenly an American fifty-calibre machine joined in, beating out a rhythmic pattern like a drummer with a jazz band. The American boys in the bunker looked at each other and grinned. One of them said: "Listen to it, that's our Katusa, and boy is he having fun."

The most striking change in Korea in the last year, and particularly since the battle of White Horse Mountain, has been the new stature, confidence and capability of the South Koreans. It is they who have taken the heavy casualties. American units now rest easy if they have Roks on their flanks. As one senior American officer said: "If we want to give weapons to people who have the guts to fight, who learn with amazing speed how to handle those weapons and care for them, here's the place to do it." If willingness and ability to fight are required to qualify for American aid, the South Koreans are qualified - behond all doubt.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The South Korean soldier is confronted by many problems - not the least of which is the language barrier. But a wise Chinese philosopher once remarked: "The purpose of language is an idea to be expressed. When the idea is expressed, the language may be ignored." The courage of the ROKs can best be described in these words by La Rochefoucauld: "The accent of one's country dwells in the mind and the heart as well as on the tongue."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Jan. 7, 1953

This is the news:

The President told the Congress today that he finds the state of the union to be good.. and he is hopeful for the nation's prospects in the future, even "under the shadow of the atomic bomb." In a few minutes I'd like to summarize the President's [redacted] message.

The Senate today turned down an effort to amend its rules to make it easier to shut-off filibusters. The vote was 70 to 21 to "table" a move to change the rules. Voting in favor of this were 41 Republicans and 29 democrats --most of them from the south. Independent Senator Morse, 15 Democrats and five Republicans wanted to change the rules.

~~The Republ[redacted]ators decided today to increase the size of all major committees by two members. This would give Republicans control and try to avoid the possibility of Senator Morse [redacted] holding the balance of power in any committees on which he sits. Morse is the former Republican who now regards himself as an independent.~~

The Republican senators [redacted] decided TODAY to ask the Civil Service Commission for a complete list of all jobs available for political appointment. (The Democrats did this when the Roosevelt administration first won control of Congress 20 years ago.)

AND The Republican Senators were told that there was no "complete agreement" on federal appointments at the recent Eisenhower-Taft meeting in New York.

The General today appointed John A. Hannah, the president of Michigan State College, to be assistant secretary of defense in charge of manpower and personnel. He WILL [redacted] replace Mrs. Anna Rosenberg.

The General conferred [redacted] with former Senator Lodge..who is to be the new ambassador to the United Nations. Mr. Lodge predicts that there will be "a very smooth transition" from the present regime to the new administration. And he says:"General Eisenhower is on top of his new job in every way. He has a full grasp of the problems he is going to have to face."

The General called on Winston Churchill again today..the third time [redacted] that he's visited the home of Bernard Baruch where Mr. Churchill is staying. The General arrived in time to join a tea party at which the Duke and Duchess OF WINDSOR were among Prime Minister Churchill's guests. Earlier in the day Mr. Churchill went to brooklyn to inspect the house in which his mother was born...102 years ago. Tomorrow he [redacted] flys to Washington.

Its doubtful that he'll be [redacted] asked to address a joint session of Congress..as he has on many previous visits. Republican [redacted] Senator Bridges says many Americans "are disturbed" over Mr. Churchill's statements on the Korean war...presumably a reference to his news conference remarks that the British oppose any "[redacted] extension" of the war.

Bridges today called for an immediate investigation of reports that many soldiers are deserting from the armed forces, to avoid duty in Korea.

Today, a plane carrying 37 soldiers who arrived from Korea and Japan yesterday, was reported missing over South Idaho. Army [redacted] authorities say it was one of many planes [redacted] chartered to speed rotated soldiers toward their homes in the states.

The Army surgeon general's office says all troops at ports of embarkation for Europe and the Far East..as well as all United Nations troops in Korea..will be immediately vaccinated against influenza. There have been some outbreaks of the flu in rear areas in Korea. As a result we are sending additional supplies of vaccine by air to Korea as a precautionary measure. The Army emphasizes that there is no epidemic of influenza there. [redacted]

The Pentagon says we suffered another 292 casualties in Korea last week; 62 killed....25 missing...205 wounded. Today, there was comparatively little ground action in Korea. And while our fighter-bombers again attacked North Korean railrods and blew up 80 trucks, our jets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged two others.

In France, ~~today,~~ Rene Mayer received the largest vote of confidence given to any of his country's 18 post-war premiers. Mayer is a radical socialist..(that means a moderate, or conservative) And to get the support he needed he promised the De Gaullists that he would re-write parts of the European army plan agreement: The agreement whereby six west european nations would form one army. The De Gaullists believe the present treaty does not respect the honor and unity of the French army; they want to be able to withdraw French troops, for service elsewhere, at any time, without seeking the approval of the other partners. This could DELAY the American plan to bring a half million west Germans into the western defense plan.

In West Berlin, Jewish sources report that a full scale purge is now underway against 27-hundred Jews living in communist-ruled East Germany.

~~The United States has allotted 20-millions dollars to Yugoslavia for the purchase of wheat and other grains in this country to help combat a severe drought in Yugoslavia.~~

At the United Nations, David Zablodowsky, a director of documents and publications, has resigned his job to relieve the "pressure and embrassment" resulting from inquiries into subversion among American employes of the U.N. Whittaker Chambers has charged that Zablodowsky was a member of the Soviet underground. But the U.N. official says he knows himself to be "unequivocally loyal." He's the second high American official to resign in 24 hours.

Here in New York, negotiations in the 7-day-old bus strike are IN A "hopeless deadlock". The striking C.I.O. transport workers say it appears the three and a half million affected bus riders are in for "a very long strike."

Edward R. Murrow: January 7, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

Today President Truman sent his last State of the Union message to Congress. It was long - about ten thousand words - it was well-written; it was read to inattentive legislators; it was in a sense both a summation and a defense of more than seven years of Truman Democratic administration. The document was grave in tone, contained no legislative recommendations; Democrats thought it statesmanlike; many Republicans thought it left out those elements of the Truman Program repudiated by the electorate in November.

Mr. Truman asserted that his Administration has averted total war up to this hour - the supreme test came when the United Nations under our leadership moved into South Korea - made it plain that free nations will fight side by side, and will not succumb to aggression or intimidation one by one. At the heart of the free world's defense is the military strength of the United States. From now on man moves into a new era of destructive power capable of creating explosions of a new order of magnitude, dwarfing the mushroom clouds of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The war of the future would be one in which man could extinguish millions of lives at one blow, destroy the very structure of a civilization that has been slowly and painfully built up through hundreds of generations. Mr. Truman says the hydrogen bomb tests were not the last stage in the development of atomic energy. We are being hurried forward toward yet unforeseeable peaks of destructive power. He warned the Russians that war would bring XXXXX "ruin for your regime and your homeland." And he implied that it would probably bring a lot of ruin to our homeland too. "We must realize that no advance we make is unattainable by others; that no advantage in this race can be more than temporary."

Mr. Truman reports that free enterprise has flourished as never before; living standards are considerably higher than seven years ago. We have demonstrated that democracy has not forgotten how to use the powers of government to promote the people's welfare and security.

He reminds us that fifteen years ago most Americans rejected the counsel that "aggressors should be quarantined." We now think they should be fought. And the President concludes: "There has never been a more spectacular example than this great change in America's XXXXXX outlook on the world."

The President is confident of the future. The ultimate advantage lies with us, not with the Communists. We must stick to our guns and carry out our policies. As the free world grows stronger, there will come a time of change in the Communist world. He doesn't know whether it will come by decision, revolution, defection or some unforeseen combination. # But the President believes that fear could defeat us, fear of the job we face, fear that breeds more fear, sapping our faith, corroding our liberties, turning citizen against citizen, ally against ally. Already danger signals have gone up. Every diminution of our tolerance, each new act of enforced conformity, each idle accusation, each demonstration of hysteria, each new restrictive law, is one more sign that we can lose the battle against fear. We must renew our confidence in one another, our tolerance. We must take our stand on the Bill of Rights; the Inquisition, the Star Chamber have no place in our society.

The President wished Godspeed to General Eisenhower, who is about to take up the greatest burdens, the most compelling responsibilities given to any man. The burden is unique, as hard and complex as any in our history. The new President must lead the whole free world in overcoming the Communist menace. And all this under the shadow of the atomic bomb.

Mr. Truman sees one thing as certain in our future, and that is that more sacrifice still lies ahead.

Any State of the Union message must of necessity be a political document. Emphasis is placed upon achievement rather than failure. XXX

Senator Taft commented: "Mr. Truman's policy has been so full of error that the Eisenhower Administration is left with the most dangerous foreign policy our country has ever faced."

No one can deny either the danger or the possibility of error, (although the historians will have a surer judgment of this.) # Mr. Truman's report reflects an unparalleled and unprecedented revolution in the attitude of this country toward the rest of the world; and he says truly: "Ultimately no President can master his responsibilities save as his fellow citizens, indeed the whole people comprehend the challenge of our times, and move with him to meet it." We have moved at a furious pace, sometimes in several directions at once. No great nation has ever moved so fast. The indications seem to be that when the new crew takes over there will be no drastic alteration in course so far as foreign policy is concerned. Whatever you think of the flying and navigating so far, both the old crew and the relief crew appear to agree that this is no time to unfasten the seat belts.

Mr. Truman has reported on the state of the union for the last time as President. When he took office, back in April 1945, he had a message for Congress which still holds true. The President said:"Today the entire world is looking to America for enlightened leadership to peace and progress. Such leadership requires vision,courage and tolerance. It can be provided only by a united nation, deeply devoted to the highest ideals."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President told the Congress today that he finds the state of the union to be good, and he is hopeful for the nation's prospects in the future, even "under the shadow of the atomic bomb." In a few minutes I'd like to summarize the President's message.

The Senate today turned down an effort to amend its rules to make it easier to shut-off filibusters. The vote was 70 to 21 to "table" a move to change the rules. Voting in favor of this were 41 Republicans and 29 Democrats, most of them from the South. Independent Senator Morse, 15 Democrats and five Republicans wanted to change the rules.

The Republican senators decided today to ask the Civil Service Commission for a complete list of all jobs available for political appointment. (The Democrats did this when the Roosevelt administration first won control of Congress 20 years ago.)

And the Republican Senators were told that there was no "complete" agreement" on federal appointments at the recent Eisenhower-Taft meeting in New York.

The General today appointed John A. Hannah, the president of Michigan State College, to be assistant secretary of defense in charge of manpower and personnel. He will replace Mrs. Anna Rosenberg.

The General conferred with former Senator Lodge, who is to be the new ambassador to the United Nations. Mr. Lodge predicts that there will be "a very smooth transition", form the present regime to the new administration. And he says: "General Eisenhower is on top of his new job in every way. He has a full grasp of the problems he is going to have to face."

The General called on Winston Churchill again today, the third time that he's visited the home of Bernard Baruch where Mr. Churchill is staying. The General arrived in time to join a tea party at which the Duke and Duchess of Windsor were among Prime Minister Churchill's guests. Earlier in the day Mr. Churchill went to Brooklyn to inspect the house in which his mother was born, 102 years ago. Tomorrow he flys to Washington.

Its doubtful that he'll be asked to address a joint session of Congress, as he has on many previous visits. Republican Senator Bridges says many Americans "are disturbed" over Mr. Churchill's statements on the Korean war, presumably a reference to his news conference remarks that the British oppose any "extension" of the war.

Bridges today called for an immediate investigation of reports that many soldiers are deserting from the armed forces to avoid duty in Korea.

Today, a plane carrying 37 soldiers who arrived from Korea and Japan yesterday was reported missing over South Idaho. Army authorities say it was one of many planes chartered to speed rotated soldiers toward their homes in the states.

The Army surgeon general's office says all troops at ports of embarkation for Europe and the Far East, as well as all United Nations troops in Korea, will be immediately vaccinated against influenza. There have been some outbreaks of the flu in rear areas in Korea. As a result we are sending additional supplies of vaccine by air to Korea as a precautionary measure. The Army emphasizes that there is no epidemic of influenza there.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 292 casualties in Korea last week; 62 killed, 25 missing, 205 wounded. Today, there was comparatively little ground action in Korea. And while our fighter-bombers again attacked North Korean railroads and blew up 80 trucks, our jets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged two others.

In France, Rene Mayer received the largest vote of confidence given to any of his country's 18 post-war premiers. Mayer is a radical socialist (that means a moderate, or conservative.) And to get the support he needed he he promised the De Gaullists that he would re-write parts of the European army plan agreement. The agreement whereby six west European nations would form one army. The De Gaullists believe the present treaty does not respect the honor and unity of the French army; they want to be able to withdraw French troops, for service elsewhere, at any time, without seeking the approval of the other partners. This could delay the American plan to bring a half million west Germans into the western defense plan.

In West Berlin, Jewish sources report that a full scale purge is now underway against 27-hundred Jews living in communist-ruled East Germany.

At the United Nations, David Zablodowsky, a director of documents and publications, has resigned his job to relieve the "presure and embarrassment" resulting from inquiries into subversion among American employees of the U.N. Whittaker Chambers has charged that Zablodowsky was a member of the Soviet underground. But the U.N. official says he knows himself to be "unequivocally loyal." He's the second high American official to resign in 24 hours.

Here in New York, negotiations in the 7-day-old bus strike are in a "hopeless deadlock". The striking C.I.O. transport workers say it appears the three and a half million affected bus riders are in for "a very long strike."

Today President Truman sent his last State of the Union message to Congress. It was long - about ten thousand words - it was well-written; it was read to inattentive legislators; it was in a sense both a summation and a defense of more than seven years of Truman Democratic administration. The document was grave in tone, contained no legislative recommendations; Democrats thought it statesmanlike; many Republicans thought it left out those elements of the Truman Program repudiated by the electorate in November.

Mr. Truman asserted that his Administration has averted total war up to this hour - the supreme test came when the United Nations under our leadership moved into South Korea - made it plain that free nations will fight side by side, and will not succumb to aggression or intimidation one by one. At the heart of the free world's defense is the military strength of the United States. From now on man moves into a new era of destructive power capable of creating explosions of a new order of magnitude, dwarding the mushroom clouds of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The war of the future would be one in which man could extenguish millions of lives at one blow, destroy the very structure of a civilization that has been slowly and painfully built up through hundreds of generations. Mr. Truman says the hydrogen bomb tests were not the last stage in the development of atomic energy. We are being hurried forward toward yet unforseeable peaks of destructive power. He warned the Russians that war would bring "ruin for your regime and your homeland." And he implied that it would probably bring a lot of ruin to our homeland too. "We must realize that no advance we make is unattainable by other; that no advantage in this race can be more than temporary."

Mr. Truman reports that free enterprise has flourished as never before; living standards are considerably higher than seven years ago. We have demonstrated that democracy has not forgotten how to use the powers of government to promote the people's welfare and security.

He reminds us that fifteen years ago most Americans rejected the counsel that "aggressors should be quarantined." We now think they should be fought. And the Presidnet concludes: "There has never been a more spectacular example than this great change in America's outlook on the world."

The President is confident of the future. The ultimate advantage lies with us, not with the Communists. We must stick to our guns and carry out our policies. As the free world grows stronger there will come a time of change in the Communist world. He doesn't know whether it will come by decision, revolution, defection or some unforeseen combination. But the President believes that fear could defeat us, fear of the job we face, fear that breeds more fear, sapping our faith, corroding our liberties, turning citizen against citizen, ally against ally. Already danger signals have gone up. Every diminution of our tolerance, each new act of enforced conformity, each idle accusation, each demonstration of hysteria each new restrictive law is one more sign that we can lose the battle against fear. We must renew our confidence in one another, our tolerance. We must take our stand on the Bill of Rights; the Inquisition, the Star Chamber have no place in our society.

The President wished Godspeed to General Eisenhower, who is about to take up the greatest burdens, the most compelling responsibilities given to any man. The burden is unique, as hard and complex as any in our history. The new President must lead the whole free world in overcoming the Communist menace. And all this under the shadow of the atomic bomb.

Mr. Truman sees one thing as certain in our future, and that is that more sacrifice still lies ahead.

Any State of the Union message must of necessity be a political document. Emphasis is placed upon achievement rather than failure.

Senator Taft commented: "Mr. Truman's policy has been so full of error that the Eisenhower Administration is left with the most dangerous foreign policy our country has ever faced."

No one can deny either the danger or the possibility of error, (although the historians will have a surer judgment of this.) Mr. Truman's report reflects an unparalleled and unprecidented revolution in the attitude of this country toward the rest of the world; and he says truly: "Ultimately no President can master his responsibilities save as his fellow citizens, indeed the whole people comprehend the challenge of our times, and move with him to meet it." We have moved at a furious pace, sometimes in several directions at once. No great nation has ever moved so fast. The indications seem to be that when the new crew takes over there will be no drastic alteration in course so far as foreign policy is concerned. Whatever you think of the flying and navigating so far, both the old crew and the relief crew appear to agree that this is no time to unfasten the seat belts.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mr. Truman has reported on the state of the union for the last time as President. When he took office, back in April 1945, he had a message for Congress which still holds true. The President said: "Today the entire world is looking to America for enlightened leadership to peace and progress. Such leadership requires vision, courage and tolerance. It can be provided only by a united nation, deeply devoted to the highest ideals."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday - Jan. 8, 1953

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Lovett told a House committee today, that the world situation still remains tense..he is disturbed at the tendency on the part of some countries to relax...he feels the prompt establishment of Universal Military Training is the only satisfactory way to maintain the strength of our armed forces. In a number of recommendations made public, and a summary of his testimony by Chairman Short of the Armed Services Committee, Mr Lovett also suggested that we need new laws to protect the country against "traitors, spies and blabber-mouths." He called this of "cardinal importance." As for Korea, Mr. Lovett had no solution to recommend. He is said to feel that we cannot budge an inch...that he is doubtful whether its worth while using all-out force to try to drive the enemy out of his caves and dugouts.

In Korea today, where the thermometer went as low as three degrees on the western front, an allied raiding force made a 55-minute attack on Chinese positions..then withdrew. And again our fighter-bombers hit enemy supply concentrations.

In Pakistan. seven or eight persons were killed and at least 50 injured in riots inspired by students in Karachi: They were protesting a sharp increase in their tuition fees.

A British freighter has now rescued 19 seamen from the Swedish oil tanker Avanti that cracked in two in a storm last night, in the North Philippine sea. Twenty-one other crewmen are [redacted] (BELIEVED) to be hanging to one broken section of the ship, or adrift in a lifeboat.

In Washington, John Foster Dulles called at the White House to thank the President for the support he gave Dulles as a State Department official in the last few years. And Mr. Dulles, who becomes the Eisenhower secretary of state, told reporters he agrees with the President's warning to Stalin on the horror of a new war. Mr. Dulles said: "I think it's important to remind Stalin of the facts of life--and death..from time to time."

Winston Churchill, who flew to Washington from New York today, also called on Mr. Truman. They spent 80 minutes together. The White House describes it as a "friendly social visit."

Democratic Senator George of Georgia today predicted that the American people "will accept no excuse" if the new Administration fails to cut down on govermment expenditures and permit the reduction of some taxes. And Jack Kroll, head of the C.I.O. political action committee says Labor expects General Eisenhower to carry out his campaign pledges. Kroll says Labor expects Eisenhower to end the war in Korea..end high prices..reduce taxes.

Republican Representative Walcott, who will be chairman of the Banking Committee, says the new Administration will move quickly to end wage and price controls.

Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire says the Republicans will ask Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia to continue as head of an economy committee. Byrd says he will, if asked.

Ezra Taft Benson, who is to be secretary of agriculture in the new cabinet, says the Administration will limit government farm aid programs to needs that cannot be met best by private action.

The Mutual Security Administration says it has now completely allocated a 62 and a half million dollar loan to Spain. (authorized by Congress in 1951) The money will be used to buy wheat, cotton, coal and other commodities in this country; to build up (SPAIN'S) railraod and power industries...for agricultural development and for expanding a steel mill.

Secretary of State Acheson is revealed to have told a group of career diplomats that they must stand fast in the face of what he called "wicked criticism and witchhunts." At a luncheon meeting yesterday of the Foreign Service Association... an organization of State Department career officers--Mr. Acheson is said to have forecast no let-up in this criticism during the Eisenhower Administration. The Secretary is reported to have said that someday "the people will rise up and say 'we've had enough of this.'" He feels that once "something really evil is let loose in the world it cannot be eradicated overnight without patience and effort."

In Iran today, Premier Mossadegh asked his parliament to extend for a full year his extraordinary power to govern by decree...the Parliament has given Mossadegh such powers. But they end next month.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito met today with seven top-ranking Yugoslav Catholic priests..but not including Archbishop Stepinac. It was the elevation of Stepinac to the rank of cardinal that led to a break in diplomatic relations between Yugoslavia and the Vatican. Today's meeting is described as deveoted to discussing a possible church-state agreement.

Here in New York the striking bus drivers asked members of the city's Board of Estimate to call a public meeting tomorrow--at which the union could present its case in the eight-day-old strike. But the board refused.

Edward R. Murrow: January 8, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

During the recent political campaign both Eisenhower and Stevenson said that the way ahead would not be easy. They were both right. In the past 24 hours our whole policy in western Europe - a policy to which both Eisenhower and the Truman Administration are committed - has sustained a serious, if not mortal blow. The French have a new government. It is headed by Rene Mayer; he is in office by virtue of the support of the followers of General de Gaulle. Robert Schumann, the French Foreign Minister who produced the plan for pooling west Europe's coal and steel, and who was one of the driving powers behind the European Army Plan, is out of office. He is replaced by Georges Bidault, the professional politician, who has been Foreign Minister before - a man who in the past has displayed great ability in avoiding rather than facing issues. The complicated convulutions by which Mayer came to power involve considerations that affect our whole European policy. This means that there will be prolonged delay, and perhaps the complete abandonment of the six-nation European Army. It means that there will be delay, perhaps indefinite postponement in any agreement to raise and equip German divisions for that army. It means that there will be drastic cuts in French spending for defense during the coming year. It is reliably reported that the new French Premier feels that the question of the Saar, over which France and Germany have argued and fought for so long, must be settled before France can agree to German re-armament. That agreement could well take years, and it may never be reached.

The new French Government will want more aid from us for Indo-China, and will probably want the right to pull its troops out of the European Army for service in overseas areas such as North Africa.

On top of this West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer, who has been pressing for immediate approval of the European Army plan, said in a radio speech last night that he now thinks "new talks will be necessary;" says many things have taken place since the pact for a European Army was signed last May. So for the time being we have the French and the Germans agreeing to do nothing about their mutual defense. Their fear of Russia does not outbalance their fear and distrust, the centuries-long suspicion of each other.

General Eisenhower and his staff at Shape came reluctantly to the conclusion that a European Army was workable, could form the shield against Russia. Once they thought it could be done they drove hard under the General's leadership to promote it. Now the French and the Germans between them have declined to get the plan off the ground.

Most military men have agreed for the past several years that there could be no effective defense of western Europe without German manpower and German production. Now the French and Germans have combined to see to it that for some time to come there won't be German manpower or German production available. This question answers itself. It adds up to no effective defense of western Europe. Our whole grand strategy for the defense of that area is in danger of becoming unhinged. Old fears and suspicions are for the time being more powerful than the bright new hopes for the future. The French fear the enemy they know, namely the Germans, more than the Russians, (who haven't occupied them recently.)

The new Administration will face at the outset the major problem of re-establishing the cohesion and effectiveness of the West European alliance, which General Eisenhower did so much to create in the first place.

The present sad state of the West European Alliance does not reflect either a French or a German disposition toward suicide; nor is it the result of any single substantial error by this country. Our major effort in the area of European policy is in danger, not because the French are unpredictable or the Germans stubborn, but rather because the Russians have eased up on the pressure. They have made no threatening gesture toward Europe for many months. They have told their Communist agents in Germany and France and elsewhere to take it easy. // The Russian forces behind the Iron Curtain have engaged in no threatening maneuver. // The result is, that this reduction in internal and external pressure, has given full opportunity for old suspicions and animosities to reassert themselves. # So much of what has been done - the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization - has been done as a result of imminent and direct Russian threat. When they appear to remove or to ease that threat, the whole structure begins to quiver. The Russians told us three months ago, openly and publicly, that this was to be their policy.

The Communists have not increased their strength in either France or Germany. But by an easement of pressure, they have delayed and damaged, though not yet destroyed, the grand design of our policy in Western Europe. The despatches of the last 24 hours from both Paris and Germany will make better reading in Moscow than in Washington; and they serve to emphasize the magnitude of the task that will be taken over by the new Administration.

Without regard to the times or the issues the French, recalling the past, simply don't trust the Germans. Samuel Johnson once remarked that " to be prejudiced is always to be weak." Yet, as the Frenchman Shar-ko concluded nearly a hundred years ago:"In the last analysis, we see only what we are ready to see, what we have been taught to see. We eliminate and ignore everything that is not a part of our prejudices."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 8, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Defense Secretary Lovett told a House committee today that the world situation still remains tense; he is disturbed at the tendency on the part of some countries to relax. He feels the prompt establishment of Universal Military Training is the only satisfactory way to maintain the strength of our armed forces. In a number of recommendations made public, and a summary of his testimony by Chairman Short of the Armed Services Committee, Mr. Lovett also suggested that we need new laws to protect the country against "traitors, spies and blabber-mouths." He called this of "cardinal importance." As for Korea, Mr. Lovett had no solution to recommend. He is said to feel that we cannot budge an inch, that he is doubtful whether its worth while using all-out force to try to drive the enemy out of his caves and dugouts.

In Korea today, where the thermometer went as low as three degrees on the western front, an allied raiding force made a 55-minute attack on Chinese positions, then withdrew. And again our fighter-bombers hit enemy supply concentrations.

In Pakistan, seven or eight persons were killed and at least 50 injured in riots inspired by students in Karachi: They were protesting a sharp increase in their tuition fees.

A British freighter has now rescued 19 seamen from the Swedish oil tanker Avanti that cracked in two in a storm last night in the North Philippine sea. Twenty-one other crewmen are believed to be hanging to one broken section of the ship or adrift in a lifeboat.

In Washington, John Foster Dulles called at the White House to thank the President for the support he gave Dulles as a State Department official in the last few years. And Mr. Dulles, who becomes the Eisenhower secretary of state, told reporters he agrees with the President's warning to Stalin on the horror of a new war. Mr. Dulles said: "I think it's important to remind Stalin of the facts of life - and death - from time to time."

Winston Churchill, who flew to Washington from New York today, also called on Mr. Truman. They spent 80 minutes together. The White House describes it as a "friendly social visit."

Democratic Senator George of Georgia today preducted that the American people "will accept no excuse" if the new Administration fails to cut down on government expenditures and permit the reduction of some taxes. And Jack Kroll, head of the C.I.O. political action committee says Labor expects General Eisenhower to carry out his campaign pledges. Kroll says Labor expects Eisenhower to end the war in Korea, end high prices, and reduce taxes.

Republican Representative Walcott, who will be chairman of the Banking Committee, says the new Administration will move quickly to end wage and price controls.

Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire says the Republicans will ask Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia to continue as head of an economy committee; Byrd says he will, if asked.

Ezra Taft Benson, who is to be secretary of agriculture in the new cabinet, says the Administration will limit government farm aid programs, to needs that cannot be met best by private action.

The Mutual Security Administration says it has now completely allocated a 62 and a half million dollar loan to Spain, authorized by Congress in 1951. The money will be used to buy wheat, cotton, coal and other commodities in this country; to build up Spain's railroad and power industries, for agricultural development and for expanding a steel mill.

Secretary of State Acheson is revealed to have told a group of career diplomats that they must stand fast in the face of what he called "wicked criticism and witchhunts." At a luncheon meeting yesterday of the Foreign Service Association, an organization of State Department career officers, Mr. Acheson is said to have forecast no let-up in his criticism during the Eisenhower Administration. The Secretary is reported to have said that someday "the people will rise up and say 'we've had enough of this.'" He feels that once "something really evil is let loose in the world it cannot be eradicated overnight without patience and effort."

In Iran today, Premier Mossadegh asked his parliament to extend for a full year his extraordinary power to govern by decree - the Parliament has given Mossadegh such powers. But they end next month.

In Yugoslavia, Marshal Tito met today with seven top-randing Yugoslav Catholic Priests, but not including Archbishop Stepinac. It was the elevation of Stepinac to the rank of cardinal that led to a break in diplomatic relations between Yugoslavia and the Vatican. Today's meeting is described as devoted to discussing a possible church-state agreement.

Here in New York the striking bus drivers asked members of the city's Board of Estimate to call a public meeting tomorrow - at which the union could present its case in the eight-day-old strike. But the board refused.

During the recent political campaign both Eisenhower and Stevenson said that the way ahead would not be easy. They were both right. In the past 24 hours our whole policy in western Europe - a policy to which both Eisenhower and the Truman Administration are committed - has sustained a serious, if not mortal blow. The French have a new government. It is headed by Rene Mayer; he is in office by virtue of the support of the followers of General de Gaulle. Robert Schumann, the French Foreign Minister who produced the plan for pooling west Europe's coal and steel, and who was one of the driving powers behind the European Army Plan, is out of office. He is replaced by Georges Bidault, the professional politician who has been Foreign Minister before - a man who in the past has displayed great ability in avoiding rather than facing issues. The complicated convulutions by which Mayere came to power involve considerations that affect our whole European policy. This means that there will be prolonged delay, and perhaps the complete abandonment of the six-nation European Army. It means that there will be delay, perhaps indefinite postponement in any agreement to raise and equip German divisions for that army. It means that there will be drastic cuts in French spending for defense during the coming year. It is reliably reported that the new French Premier feels that the question of the Saar, over which France and Germany have argued and fought for so long, must be settled before France can agree to German re-armament. That agreement could well take years, and it may never be reached.

The new French Government will want more aid from us for Indo-China, and will probably want the right to pull its troops out of the European Army for service in overseas areas such as North Africa.

On top of this West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer, who has been pressing for immediate approval of the European Army plan, said in a radio speech last night that he now thinks "new talks will be necessary;" says many things have taken place since the pact for a European Army was signed last May. So for the time being, we have the French and the Germans agreeing to do nothing about their mutual defense. Their fear of Russia does not outbalance their fear and distrust, the centuries-long suspicion of each other.

General Eisenhower and his staff at SHAPE came reluctantly to the conclusion that a European Army was workable, could form the shield against Russia. Once they thought it could be done they drove hard under the General's leadership to promote it. Now the French and the Germans between them have declined to get the plan off the ground.

Most military men have agreed for the past several years that there could be no effective defense of western Europe without German manpower and German production. Now the French and Germans have combined to see to it, that for some time to come there won't be German manpower or German production available. This question answers itself. It adds up to no effective defense of western Europe. Our whole grand strategy for the defense of that area is in danger of becoming unhinged. Old fears and suspicions are for the time being more powerful than the bright new hopes for the future. The French fear the enemy they know, namely the Germans, more than the Russians, (who haven't occupied them recently.)

The new Administration will face at the outset the major problem of re-establishing the cohesion and effectiveness of the West European alliance, which General Eisenhower did so much to create in the first place.

The present sad state of the West European Alliance does not reflect either a French or a German disposition toward suicide; nor is it the result of any single substantial error by this country. Our major effort in the area of European policy is in danger, not because the French are unpredictable or the Germans stubborn, but rather because the Russians have eased up on the pressure. They have made no threatening gesture toward Europe for many months. They have told their Communist agents in Germany and France and elsewhere to take it easy. The Russian forces behind the Iron Curtain have engaged in no threatening maneuver. The result is that this reduction in internal and external pressure has given full opportunity for old suspicions and animosities to reassert themselves. So much of what has been done - the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization - has been done as a result of imminent and direct Russian threat. When they appear to remove or to ease that threat the whole structure begins to quiver. The Russians told us three months ago, openly and publicly, that this was to be their policy.

The Communists have not increased their strength in either France or Germany. But by an easement of pressure they have delayed and damaged, though not yet destroyed the grand design of our policy in Western Europe. The dispatches of the last 24 hours from Paris and Germany will make better reading in Moscow than in Washington; and they serve to emphasize the magnitude of the task that will be taken over by the new Administration.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Without regard to the times or the issues the French, recalling the past, simply don't trust the Germans. Samual Johnson once remarked that "to be prejudiced is always to be weak." Yet, as the Frenchman Shar-ko concluded nearly a hundred years ago: "In the last analysis, we see only what we are ready to see, what we have been taught to see. We eliminate and ignore everything that is not a part of our prejudices."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Friday, Jan 9, 53

This is the news:

The President today sent Congress a 79-billion-dollar budget that would put the government another 10-billions in the red. Republicans are talking ~~[illegible]~~ of balancing the budget after the Eisenhower Administration takes office. I'd like to summarize the Truman budget in a few minutes.

The President also asked Congress today to set up a health program for the nation. But instead of the health insurance plan he's advocated in the past he now suggests a series of grants to the states.

Mr. Truman also signed an order directing the Civil Service Commission...and if necessary the F.B.I.--to investigate all Americans employed by the United Nations or considered for employment by the U.N. State Department officials estimate there may be as many as 2-thousand Americans working for the U.N. with another thousand hired by special U.N. agencies. Senator Mc Carthy says the Truman order "came extremely late in his political life..is obviously window dressing."

Senator Wiley, who is to be chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says General Eisenhower has chosen General Bedell Smith to be undersecretary of state. Smith is now head of the Central Intelligence Agency. He served as Eisenhower's chief of staff in World War Two.

Republican senators are still "unhappy" over the problem of federal appointments and other patronages. So Senators Taft, Knowland and Millikan plan to confer with General Eisenhower on Monday.

Today, the General spent an hour with Jacob Blaustein, the President of the American-Jewish committee. Mr. Blaustein says they discussed economic aid to the Near East and the problems of military shipments to that area of the world.

The official paper of the American Federation of Labor predicts "sudden death" for all wage and price controls after Eisenhower enters the White House.

Republican Senator Carlson of Kansas today accused Mr. Truman of being "vindictive and punitive" in ordering the investigation which led to anti-trust charges against the Kansas City Star. The Senator says the newspaper is being harrassed because it took steps to "keep our government free from graft, corruption and crooked politics."

Here in New York two federal grand juries accused former Democratic Representative T. Vincent Quinn of illegally accepting 35-thousand dollars in tax fees while he was still in Congress. Mr. Quinn is now district attorney of Queens County, New York. He says he has done no wrong.. that he is the target of "an attempted assassination" by "an outgoing attorney general in the waning hours of his administration."

General Bradley, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told a House committee today that he has no solution for settling the Korean war and hasn't met anyone who has a solution. Chairman Short says Bradley also said: he thinks one reason for Europe's lag in building up its defense forces is the "dangerous hope that you can win a war with the atomic bomb alone."

Draft Director Hershey says the nation is going to have to "toughen up" on draft deferments, particularly on college students. He says our manpower is shrinking.

In Korea today, air force and army investigators are trying to find out just who bombed and strafed American soldiers behind the western front. We are told only this: that we suffered "several" casualties...

that ten[redacted] were riddled or burned..as was a pre-fabricated building. So far no official has fixed any responsibility for the raid. One soldier says he saw [redacted] an American-type Sabrejet[redacted] in the air. Others say it all happened so fast they [redacted] could not identify the attackers. Army officers are under orders not to reveal any figures until the investigation has been completed.

In France today, Jean Monnet, the head man in the Schuman plan authority, says he has a plan to boost West Europe's steel and coal production [redacted] by millions of tons over the next five years. American money may be needed to finance the plan.

The new premier of France--Rene Mayer--is said to be making arrangements for a quick trip to this country to consult with President-elect Eisenhower.

Prime Minister Churchill left Washington today for Jamaica. He arrived safely in the President's plane, the Independence.

New England today is suffering its worst snow storm of the [redacted] season. And Boston, hit by its worst storm in seven years, has a foot of snow with no sign of any letup for another 24 hours. Throughout

New England and in upper New York state hundreds of schools have been closed.

Florida today had freak storms of hurricane force. The resort TOWNS of Sarasota and Key West were hit the hardest.

(pickup end piece)

(1)

(end piece follows)

A Washington reporter tells us tonight that the President's budget is "little more than a conversational piece on Capital Hill tonight." That could be. Most Republicans and many Democrats are calling it fantastic..unrealistic...shocking..and so on. As Mr. Truman points out in his 20-thousand word message General Eisenhower, after the 20th of January, is free to propose changes. But the President believes it is a tight, honest budget. He doubts the Republicans can cut it very much. He personally would favor raising taxes to balance it. But as far as the Republican statements that the budget will be balanced together with a tax cut, Mr. Truman's attitude is: "That's what they promised. Its not my problem."

In summary here's what the budget is all about: The President expects that the federal government will take in 69 billion dollars in the fiscal year beginning July first of 1954. He expects that we will spend roughly 79 billions. That will mean another deficit--of ten billions. And it will bring the total national debt to 274-billions..just one billion under the legal limit of debt permitted by Congress. [redacted]

This last Truman budget is (almost 7.) billions less than the one he submitted to Congress a year ago. It is 12 and a half billion more than the estimated spending for the fiscal year that ended last June 30.

The biggest increase in the new budget is in foreign aid: mostly for military help for our European allies. Even though many Congressmen and Senators of both parties have made it clear that they favor a cut in foreign spending, the President has asked for an increase of more than one billion for this purpose. He wants a total of seven point six billion for foreign aid. Another interesting feature of this new budget--aside from its impressive figures--is the fact that the President proposed no other new spending TO SUPPORT NEW LEGISLATION. He suggests no new legislation to the new Republican Congress. And therefore the budget carries no figures which can automatically be wiped out by a Congress that refuses to accept new legislative proposals from the outgoing President. This, of course, will be one handicap in cutting the proposed budget.

The economists figure out that the Truman budget , if its cost could be apportioned among every man, woman and child in the country, would cost each of us $489.15.

Every dollar that the government spends, under this Truman budget, would go this way: 59 cents for military services...10 cents for foreign aid and foreign relations...six cents for benefits and services for veterans....eight cents for interest on the national debt... and all other government costs would kill the dollar...with 17 cents.

And here's the way each dollar of government income is accumulated: 41 cents of it comes from the individual income tax....29 cents from the corporation tax....we get 12 cents from the excise tax...5 cents from customs and other miscellaneous taxes..and we borrow 13 cents of each dollar we spend.

The biggest single item in the President's budget is for the military. It comes to 46 point three billions. And its the biggest military budget the President has requested since the end of World War Two. It would provide the army with 20 divisions.. the air force with another 55-hundred planes... The Navy would have 904 combat vessels including a third supercarrier.

All of this....the 79-billions that the President calls essential for the "safety and well-being of the nation"...is challenged by prominent Republicans in the new Congress. Senator Taft makes it clear that he and General Eisenhower have agreed on a 70-billion dollar budget and "that's still our goal." Representative Coudert of New York who saw the General today says the president-elect favors "balanced budgets and is against deficit spending." But he could relay no definite committments from the General.

Representative Taber of New York, chairman of the appropriations committee, says the size of the President's budget is an invitation to cut it. He feels a ten billion dollar cut is not too much to expect.

Representative Reed of the New York, head of the ways and means committee, told reporters:"There's going to be a tax cut and we are going to balance the budget. It is fantastic."

And Speaker Martin calls it a "phantom budget"..says no one should be alarmed by it. Martin says that at the proper time the new Administration will submit a balanced budget.

This too, was the word we had earlier in the week from the man who will be most directly concerned with the Republican Administration's budget. Joseph Dodge, the new budget director, says the Administration is determined to balance the budget. But he has warned us: don't expect any miracles.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moement with the word for today (pause) But first, Bobx Dixon.

(after Dixon)

The price of peace...(LIKE WAR)...comes high. [redacted] All but 17 cents out of every dollar the government spends [redacted] involves the military in one form or another. But as Franklin Roosevelt said back in 1940:"We build and defend not for our generation alone. We defend the foundations laid by our fathers. We build a life for generations yet unborn. We are defending and building a way of life not for America alone, but for all mankind."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 9, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President today sent Congress a 79-billion dollar budget that would put the government another 10-billions in the red. Republicans are talking of balancing the budget after the Eisenhower Administration takes office. I'd like to summarize the Truman budget in a few minutes.

The President also asked Congress today to set up a health program for the nation. But instead of the health insurance plan he's advocated in the past he now suggests a series of grants to the states.

Mr. Truman also signed an order directing the Civil Service Commission, and if necessary the F.B.I. - to investigate all Americans employed by the United Nations or considered for employment by the U.N. State Department officials estimate there may be as many as 2-thousand Americans working for the U.N. with another thousand hired by special U.N. agencies. Senator McCarthy says the Truman order "came extremely late in his political life, is obviously window dressing."

Senator Wiley, who is to be the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says General Eisenhower has chosen General Bedell Smith to be undersecretary of state. Smith is now head of the Central Intelligence Agency. He served as Eisenhower's chief of staff in World War Two.

Republican senators are still "unhappy" over the problem of federal appointments and other patronages. So Senators Taft, Knowland and Millikan plan to confer with General Eisenhower on Monday.

Today, the General spent an hour with Jacob Blaustein, the President of the American-Jewish committee. Mr. Blaustein says they discussed economic aid to the Near East and the problems of military shipments to that area of the world.

The official paper of the American Federation of Labor preducts

"sudden death" for all wage and price controls after Eisenhower enters the White House.

Republican Senator Carlson of Kansas today accused Mr. Truman of being "vindictive and punitive" in ordering the investigation which led to anti-trust charges against the Kansas City Star. The Senator says the newspaper is being harrassed because it took steps to "keep our government free from graft, corruption and crooked politics."

Here in New York two federal grand juries accused former Democratic Representative T. Vincent Quinn of illegally accepting 35-thousand dollars in tax fees while he was still in Con ress. Mr. Quinn is now district attorney of Queens County, New York. He says he has done no wrong; that he is the target of "an attempted assassination" by "an outgoing attorney general in the waning hours of his administration."

General Bradley, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told a House committee today that he has no solution for settling the Korean war and hasn't met anyone who has a solution. Chairman Short says Bradley also said: he thinks one reason for Europe's lag in building up its defense forces is the "dangerous hope that you can win a war with the atomic bomb alone."

Draft Director Hershey says the nation is going to have to "toughen up" on draft deferments, particularly on college students. He says our manpower is shrinking.

In Korea today, air force and army investigators are trying to find out just who bombed and strafed American soldiers behind the western front. We are told only this: that we suffered "several" casualties; that tents were riddled or burned, as was a pre-fabricated building. So far no official has fixed any responsibility for the raid. One soldier says he saw an American-type Sabrejet jet in the air. Others say it all happened so fast they could not identify the attackers. Army officers are under orders not to reveal any figures until the investigation has been completed.

In France today, Jean Monnet, the head man in the Schuman plan authority, says he has a plan to boost West Europe's steel and coal production by millions of tons over the next five years. American money may be needed to finance the plan.

The new premier of France - Rene Mayer - is said to be making arrangements for a quick trip to this country to consult with President-elect Eisenhower.

Prime Minister Churchill left Washington today for Jamaica. He arrived safely in the President's plane, the Independence.

New England today is suffering its worst snow storm of the season. And Boston, hit by its worst storm in seven years, has a foot of snow with no sign of any letup for another 24 hours. Throughout New England and in upper New York state hundreds of schools have been closed.

Florida today had freak storms of hurricane force. The resort towns of Sarosota and Key West were hit the hardest.

A Washington reporter tells us tonight that the President's budget is "little more than a conversational piece on Capitol Hill tonight." That could be. Most Republicans and many Democrats are calling it fantastic, unrealistic, shocking, and so on. As Mr. Truman points out in his 20-thousand work message General Eisenhower, after the 20th of January, is free to propose changes. But the President believes it is a tight, honest budget. He doubts the Republicans can cut it very much. He personally would favor raising taxes to balance it. But as far as the Republican statements that the budget will be balanced together with a tax cut, Mr. Truman's attitude is: "That's what they promised. It's not my problem."

In summary here's what the budget is all about: The President expects that the Federal Government will take in 69 billion dollars in the fiscal year beginning July first of 1954. He expects that we will spend roughly 79 billions. That will mean another deficit - of ten billions. And it will bring the total national debt to 274 billions - just one billion under the legal limit of debt permitted by Congress. This last Truman budget is almost seven billions less than the one he submitted to Congress a year ago. It is 12 and a half billion more than the estimated spending for the fiscal year that ended last June 30.

The biggest increase in the new budget is in foreign aid: mostly for military help for our European allies. Even though many Congressmen and Senators of both parties have made it clear that they favor a cut in foreign spending, the President has asked for an increase of more than one billion for this purpose. He wants a total of seven point six billion for foreign aid. Another interesting feature of this new budget - aside from its impressive figures - is the fact that the President proposes no other new spending to support new legislation. He suggests no new legislation to the new Republican Congress. And therefore the budget carries no figures which can automatically be wiped out by a Congress that refuses to accept new legislative proposals from the outgoing President. This, of course, will be one handicap in cutting the proposed budget.

The economists figure out that the Truman budget, if its cost could be apportioned among every man, woman and child in the country, would cost each of us $489.15.

Every dollar that the government spends, under this Truman budget, would go this way: 59 cents for military services - 10 cents for foreign aid and foreign relations - six cents for benefits and services for veterans - eight cents for interest on the national debt - and all other government costs would kill the dollar, with 17 cents.

And here's the way each dollar of government income is accumulated: 41 cents of it comes from the individual income tax - 29 cents from the corporation tax. We get 12 cents from the excise tax, 5 cents from customs and other miscellaneous taxes, and we borrow 13 cents of each dollar we spend.

The biggest single item in the President's budget is for the military.

It comes to 46 point three billions. And its the biggest military budget the President has requested since the end of World War Two. It would provide the army with 20 divisions; the air force with another 55-hundred planes. The Navy would have 904 combat vessels including a third supercarrier.

All of this, the 79-billions that the President calls essential for the "safety and well-being of the nation" is challenged by prominent Republicans in the new Congress. Senator Taft makes it clear that he and General Eisenhower have agreed on a 70-billion dollar budget and "that's still our goal." Representative Coudret of New York who saw the General today says the president-elect favors "balanced budgets and is against deficit spending." But he could relay no "definite committments" from the General.

Representative Taber of New York, chairman of the appropriations committee, says the size of the President's budget is an invitation to cut it. He feels a ten billion dollar cut is not too much to expect.

Representative Reed of the New York, head of the ways and means committee, told reporters: "There's going to be a tax cut and we are going to balance the budget. It is fantastic."

And Speaker Martin calls it a "phantom budget" says no one should be alarmed by it. Martin says that at the proper time the new Administration will submit a balanced budget.

This too, was the word we had earlier in the week from the man who will be most directly concerned with the Republican Administration's budget. Joseph Dodge, the new budget director, says the Administration is determined to balance the budget. But he has warned us: don't expect any miracles.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The price of peace (like war) comes high. All but 17 cents out of every dollar the government spends involves the military in one form or another. But as Franklin Roosevelt said back in 1940: "We build and defend not for our generation alone. We defend the foundations laid by our fathers. We build a life for generations yet unborn. We are defending and building a way of life not for America alone, but for all mankind."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thursday, January 15, 1953

This is the news:

General Eisenhower met for four and a half hours today with the men who will be his cabinet officers and key administrators in the new Administration. We're told they discussed "the future duties of the Administration..foreign and domestic." Vice President-elect Nixon says it was a productive discussion..that inaugurat ion plans also were reviewed. The meeting continues tomorrow.

While the Eisenhower cabinet and agency heads were posing for their first group pic tures, in ILLINOIS, Governor Stevenson. took part in the inauguration of his successor, Republican Governor Stratton, and then immediately left Springfield by train for Chicago. He told several hundred persons who saw him off that if he "fulfilled the confidence " of the people who had elected him governor then He Felt "richly rewarded."

In New York earlier in the day, General Eisenhower talked over patronage problems with the three top Senate Republicans: Taft, Millikan and Knowland. After 90 minutes, Senator Knowland said they had reached a complete meeting of minds on the procedure to be followed in appointing Republicans to office. Whenever possible such appointments will be cleared with Republicans in Congress. The Senator said of this second meeting devoted to the patronage problem: "There is no conflict and never has been." [redacted]

General Eisenhower also announced that Dr. James B[redacted] Conant, the president of Harvard since 1933, will be the new U.S. high Commissioner to Germany. He succeeds Walter J. Donnelly who resigned. The West German Government says Dr. Conant is "a fortunate choice" [redacted] " a man of impressive character and reputation..an oustanding expert on European conditions."

Republican Senator Wiley says the Eisenhower cabinet appointees will be questioned by Senate committees on "everything from soup to nuts". And Republican Representative Judd of Minnesota says he's sure the new administration will (BE) "sympathetic" to a Pacific organization comparable to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. [redacted]

Mutual Security Administrator Harriman said at his last newsconference today that any cuts in the President's 7 point six billion dollar foreign aid request would be "risky"..and A large cut would be "hazardous."

The President proposed today that Attorney General Mc Granery drop criminal proceedings against five major American oil companies... if the companies produce subpenead records for a civil suit. The five companies are: (STANDARD) Oil of New Jersey...Standard Oil of California.. the Texas Company...Socony-Vacuum and Gulf Oil. The President says he would prefer to drop the criminal proceedings... (charging a plan to divide the world's markets)..."in the interest of national security" and because of "certain factors which have emerged." These are not defined. The charges grew out of a report by the Federal Trade Commission which says that these five companies and foreign oil companies have arranged to divide the world markets. (THE COMPANIES DENY THIS) Stephen J. Spingarn, one of the commissioners, said today that the President's decision makes it appear THAT the oil companies have "performed one of the greatest whitewashes in history." But the companies indicate they don't like the "IF" in the President's proposal..they don't want to produce the subpened records. This afternoon, after Attorney General

Mc Granery explained the proposal to oil company lawyers, most of them seemed to agree with Arthur H. Dean, counsel for Standard of New Jersey, who called it: "outrageous..unfair and insulting blackmail." Mr. Dean said if it were not for national security his company would be willing to face a civil or criminal suit. But, he said, the government is demanding that documents be made public, of the sort that "the Russians would give their eye teeth to get." Some government officials who have been opposed to the suit, point out that a criminal indictment against the ~~American~~ oil companies might hamper the investment of American capital in foreign lands. ~~and might lead some foreign nations to break their contracts with the American companies. The five big companies must give their answer to Mr. McGranery tomorrow.~~

A Senate committee today urged further investigation, of what it calls, the Communist influence in the nation's colleges, high schools and elementary schools. The committee says there are "many hundreds of teachers who are Communists. #And the Supreme Court held today, that the admission by an alien that he was a Communist party member, 21 years ago, may be made a ground for his deportation.

In Korea today, a new South Korean division..the 12th..is credited with stopping the heaviest enemy attack of the year. The Rok's stopped the COMMUNISTS, [redacted], killed at least 200 of THEM, [redacted], and drove THEM [redacted] back, in hand to hand fighting.

The Marine Corps says it is starting its own investigation of an attack by American planes [redacted] on American troops, that cost 14 lives. The Air Force indicates it might have been the result of an accident by Marine Panthers.

The United States, Britain and France have made yet another appeal to Russia, for a four-power treaty of independence for Austria.

And the Big Three in West Germany have decided to continue their restrictions on West Germany's industry, until both the German and French cabinets vote on the treaty of alliance. The Allies indicate they will be liberal in granting [redacted] exceptions.

In Vatican City, Pope Pius today formally created 24 new cardinal princes of the Roman Catholic church..bringing the college of cardinals to full strength for the first time in almost 250 years. James Francis McIntyre, archbishop of Los Angeles, was among those elevated. The Pope took notice of the absence of two new Cardinals from Communist Europe: Stepinac of Yugoslavia and STEFAN WISHINSKY of Poland.

In Utah, the Air Force says it has found the wreckage of the C-46 transport missing since Wednesday with a crew of three and 37 soldiers on their way home from Korea. There were no survivors.

Edward R. Murrow: Jan. 12, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

These are days when it is fashionable to draw up lists of the urgent problems that the Eisenhower administration will inherit next Tuesday. Such a list could be as long as a sled track in the snow - all the way from the Korean war to the European coalition, to what to do about patronage, and the duty on briar pipes. But this concentration upon our own difficulties is likely to cause us to overlook or ignore the fact that the Russian Communist empire has its own difficulties, though less well publicized. As Mr. Truman indicated the other day, the men in the Kremlin must live and make their decisions in the knowledge of our atomic superiority, with more terrible weapons to come. They must attempt to hold together by force and terror a whole group of satellite nations that once knew freedom.

We are probably too much inclined to regard the Soviet empire as a unified, cohesive bloc, stretching from the Black Sea to the coast of China. We are worried by delays and dangers in the formation of the West European coalition; but we do not know the tensions and traditional frictions that divide the Chinese and the Russians, or the factors that cause the Poles and the Czechs to want to reach out to the West. For example, the Premier of Czechoslovakia has made most revealing broadcasts on two successive week ends. They amount to an admission of the increasing failures of the Czech economic system under Communism. The broadcast from Prague on last Saturday amounted to a confession of chaos and virtual famine inside Czechoslovakia. The food rationing system has broken down. Hereafter only so-called "productive elements" among the population will get ration cards. This means that the Czechoslovakian government cannot furnish adequate supplies to the rationed portion of the economy. So they are decreasing that rationed portion. (The same thing has happened in Poland.) Czech and Polish workers have been unable to buy rationed goods at low prices, because the goods were not there to buy. This new move, makes it all the more certain that they won't be able to buy unrationed goods at high prices, either. The Czech Premier spoke of exporting more goods and of stabilizing the Czech economy. At the recent Prague trials several of the defendants were accused of exporting goods to the West. They pleaded guilty to both earning dollars, and spending dollars; to building too much light industry and to building too much heavy industry. They were guilty of importing food and exporting food. All these things were crimes, and the fact that they were the opposite of each other didn't cancel them out.

The situation in Czechoslovakia and in Poland grows steadily worse, and there is a growing body of discontent.

The Eisenhower Administration is committed not to rest upon the lines as now drawn, and one of its major problems will be to measure this discontent and make use of it, while remembering that anything in the nature of a premature revolt or uprising could doom not only our friends, but all hope for the future.

One of the real problems confronting the new Administration was illustrated in Strasbourg today. The Council of Europe was arguing about the European Army. In the course of heated debate the Italian delegate jumped to his feet and shouted: "My dear friends, I implore you not to fall into this trap of disagreement. What counts today is to leap over all obstacles, while keeping our eyes fixed constantly on the goal ahead." The French delegate shouted back: "And that, my friend, is the best way to break our necks." # The debate ended in laughter, and the delegates retired to the lounge to discuss the proposition: Is it better to keep your eyes on the stars, or your feet on the ground? The new Administration is going to have to try to do both. And in vast areas of Western Europe Mr. Dulles and his colleagues will have to deal with what used to be called neutralism. This is the attitude of the individual who doesn't want to be caught between a couple of atomic millstones, an attitude that is summed up in a story now making the rounds of European capitals. It isn't very original, reverent or profound, but it illustrates the viewpoint of the neutralists. Four soldiers confront St. Peter. He asks each in turn what brought him there. The Russian says: "I died for World Socialism". The American replies: "I died for freedom and the dignity of man." The German asserts that he died for the Fatherland and lebensraum. The French soldier remains silent. He is urged to say frankly what brought him there, and finally he points at the other three soldiers and says: "They did." It is the attitude of the fourth soldier, and what he represents, that will have to be one of the major concerns of our policy in Western Europe.

We are not the only nation confronted by troubles and crisises. There may be some small satisfaction in that. ~~Many~~ Centuries ago, the Greek historian Herodotus, recognized the situation when he remarked: "If all men should carry their own private troubles to market for barter with their neighbors, not one but when he had looked into the troubles of other men, would be right glad to carry home again what he had brought."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 12, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower met for four and a half hours today with the men who will be his cabinet officers and key administrators in the new Administration. We're told they discussed "the future duties of the Administration - foreign and domestic." Vice President-elect Nixon says it was a productive discussion - that inauguration plans also were reviewed. The meeting continues tomorrow.

While the Eisenhower cabinet and agency heads were posing for their first group pictures in Illinois, Governor Stevenson took part in the inauguration of his successor, Republican Governor Stratton, and then immediately left Springfield by train for Chicago. He told several hundred persons who saw him off that if he "fulfilled the confidence" of the people who had elected him governor then he felt "richly rewarded."

In New York earlier in the day, General Eisenhower talked over patronage problems with the three top Senate Republicans: Taft, Millikan and Knowland. After 90 minutes, Senator Knowland said they had reached a complete meeting of minds on the procedure to be followed in appointing Republicans to office. Whenever possible such appointments will be cleared with Republicans in Congress. The Senator said of this second meeting devoted to the patronage problem: "There is no conflict and never has been."

General Eisenhower also announced that Dr. James Conant, the president of Harvard since 1933, will be the new U.S. high Commissioner to Germany. He succeeds Walter J. Donnelly who resigned. The West German Government says Dr. Conant is "a fortunate choice" a man of impressive character and reputation - an outstanding expert on European conditions."

Republican Senator Wiley says the Eisenhower cabinet appointees will be questioned by Senate committees on "everything from soup to nuts." And Republican Representative Judd of Minnesota says he's sure the new administration will be "sympathetic" to a Pacific organization comparable to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Mutual Security Administrator Harriman said at his last news conference today that any cuts in the President's 7 point six billion dollar foreign aid request would be "risky" and a large cut would be "hazardous."

The President proposed today that Attorney General McGranery drop criminal proceedings against five major American oil companies if the companies produce subpenaed records for a civil suit. The five companies are: Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, the Texas Company, Socony-Vaccuum and Gulf Oil. The President says he would prefer to drop the criminal proceedings (charging a plan to divide the world's markets.) "in the interest of national security" and because of "certain factors which have emerged." These are not defined. The charges grew out of a report by the Federal Trade Commission which says that these five companies and foreign oil companies have arranged to divide the world markets. The Companies deny this. Stephen J. Spingarn, one of the commissioners, said today that the President's decision makes it appear that the oil companies have "performed one of the greatest whitewashes in history." But the companies indicate they don't like the "if" in the President's proposal; they don't want to produce the subpenaed records. This afternoon, after Attorney General McGranery explained the proposal to oil company lawyers, most of them seemed to agree with Arthur H. Dean, counsel for Standard of New Jersey, who called it: "outrageous, unfair and insulting blackmail." Mr. Dean said if it were not for national security his company would be willing to face a civil or criminal suit. But, he said, the government is demanding that documents be made public of the sort that "the Russians would give their eye teeth to get." Some government officials who have been opposed to the suit point out that a criminal indictment against the oil companies might hamper the investment of American capital in foreign lands.

A Senate committee today urged further investigation of what it calls the Communist influence in the nation's colleges, high schools and elementary schools. The committee says there are "many hundreds of teachers who are Communists." And the Supreme Court held today that the admission by an alien that he was a Communist party member 21 years ago, may be made a ground for his deportation.

In Korea today, a new South Korean division, the 12th, is credited with stopping the heaviest enemy attack of the year. The ROK's stopped the Communists, killed at least 200 of them, and drove them back in hand to hand fighting.

The Marine Corps says it is starting its own investigation of an attack by American planes on American troops that cost 14 lives. The Air Force indicates it might have been the result of an accident by Marine Panthers.

The United States, Britain and France have made yet another appeal to Russia for a four-power treaty of independence for Austria.

And the Big Three in West Germany have decided to continue their restrictions on West Germany's industry until both the German and French cabinets vote on the treaty of alliance. The Allies indicate they will be liberal in granting exceptions.

In Vatican City, Pope Pius today formally created 24 new cardinal princes of the Roman Catholic Church, bringing the college of cardinals to full strength for the first time in almost 250 years. James Francis MacIntyre, archbishop of Los Angeles, was among those elevated. The Pope took notice of the absence of two new Cardinals from Communist Europe: Stepinac of Yugoslavia and Stefan Vishinky of Poland.

In Utah, the Air Force says it has found the wreckage of the C-46 transport missing since Wednesday with a crew of three and 37 soldiers on their way home from Korea. There were no survivors.

There are days when it is fashionable to draw up lists of the urgent problems that the Eisenhower administration will inherit next Tuesday. Such a list could be as long as a sled track in the snow - all the way from the Korean war to the European coalition, to what to do about patronage, and the duty on briar pipes. But this concentration upon our own difficulties is likely to cause us to overlook or ignore the fact that the Russian Communist empire has its own difficulties, though less well publicized. As Mr. Truman indicated the other day, the men in the Kremlin must live and make their decisions in the knowledge of our atomic superiority, with more terrible weapons to come. They must attempt to hold together by force and terror a whole group of satellite nations that once know freedom.

We are probably too much inclined to regard the Soviet empire as a unified, cohesive bloc, stretching from the Black Sea to the coast of China. We are worried by delays and dangers in the formation of the West European coalition; but we do not know the tensions and traditional frictions that divide the Chinese and the Russians, or the factors that cause the Poles and the Czechs to want to reach out to the West. For example, the Premier of Czechoslovakia has made most revealing broadcasts on two successive week ends. They amount to an admission of the increasing failures of the Czech economic system under Communism. The broadcast from Prague on last Saturday amounted to a confession of chaos and virtual famine inside Czechoslovakia. The food rationing system has broken down. Hereafter only so-called "productive elements" among the population will get ration cards. This means that the Czechoslovakian government cannot furnish adequate supplies to the rationed portion of the economy. So they are decreasing that rationed portion. The same thing has happened in Poland. Czech and Polish workers have been unable to buy rationed goods at low prices, because the goods were not there to buy. This new move makes it all the more certain that they won't be able to buy unrationed goods at high prices, either. The Czech Premier spoke of exporting more goods and of stabilizing the Czech economy. At the recent Prague trials several of the defendants were accused of exporting goods to the West. They pleaded guilty to both earning dollars and spending dollars; to building too much light industry and to building too much heavy industry. They were guilty of importing food and exporting food. All these things were crimes, and the fact that they were the opposite of each other didn't cancel them out.

The situation in Czechoslovakia and in Poland grows steadily worse, and there is a growing body of discontent.

The Eisenhower Administration is committed not to rest upon the lines as now drawn, and one of its major problems will be to measure this discontent and make use of it, while remembering that anything in the nature of a premature revolt or uprising could doom not only our friends but all hope for the future.

One of the real problems confronting the new Administration was illustrated in Strasbourg today. The Council of Europe was arguing about the European Army. In the course of heated debate the Italian delegate jumped to his feet and shouted: "My dear friends, I implore you not to fall into this trap of disagreement. What counts today is to leap over all obstacles while keeping our eyes fixed constantly on the goal ahead." The French delegate shouted back: "And that, my friend, is the best way to break our necks." The debate ended in laughter, and the delegates retired to the lounge to discuss the proposition: Is it better to keep your eyes on the stars or your feet on the ground? The new Administration is going to have to try to do both. And in vast areas of Western Europe Mr. Dulles and his colleagues will have to deal with what used to be called neutralism. This is the attitude of the individual who doesn't want to be caught between a couple of atomic millstones, an attitude that is summed up in a story now making the rounds of European capitals. It isn't very original, reverent or profound, but it illustrates the viewpoint of the neutralists. Four soldiers confront St. Peter. He asks each in turn what brought him there. The Russian says: "I died for freedom and the dignity of man." The German asserts that he died for the Fatherland and lebensraum. The French soldier remains silent. He is urged to say frankly what brought him there, and finally he points at the other three soldiers and says: "They did." It is the attitude of the fourth soldier, and what he represents, that will have to be one of the major concerns of our policy in Western Europe.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We are not the only nation confronted by troubles and crisises. There may be some small satisfaction in that. Centuries ago, the Greek historian Herodotus, recognized the situation when he remarked: "If all men should carry their own private troubles to market for barter with their neighbors, not one but when he had looked into the troubles of other men, would be right glad to carry home again what he had brought."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tuesday Jan. 13, 1953.

This is the news:

The Soviet government today accused nine of its top doctors of intentionally killing two important Soviet leaders. (by faulty diagnosis, and the wrong treatment of their ailments.) Three of the doctors are accused of being British spies. The other six, all Jewish, are accused of working as American intelligence agents, through the American Jewish Joint Distribution committee. All nine doctors, presumed to be in the top echelon of Soviet physicians, are said to have confessed. Their two victims are described as: Andrei Zhdanov, a once powerful member of the Politburo, who died four years ago... and Alexander Sherbakov, who died seven years ago. At the time he was head of the Red army's political administration. [redacted] The Soviets [redacted] also says that five other important Russian leaders--3 marshals, a general of the army and an admiral..were marked for death by the same doctors. We are told the plot was uncovered some time ago. We are told an investigation is still going on. AND THAT [redacted] the Russian security organizations did a poor job in failing to uncover all of this sooner. [redacted]

Edward M. M. Warburg, head of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, says all of the Russian charges are fantastic. His organization, which has poured millions of dollars into Europe since the end of World War 2 is a humanitarian organization. It has never engaged in politics.

The State Department says the whole story, which the Russians are obviously eager to have spread throughout the world, is additional proof of "the extraordinary and growing sense of internal (INSECURITY) [redacted] in the Soviet union."

I should like to exmaine some of the ramifications of this case in a few minutes.

The United States today announced strong support of Japan's warning to Russia to keep its planes away from Japanese territory or face the prospect of having them shot down. General Clark, in Tokyo, has told our military chiefs to prevent further violations of Japan's security..and acts which endanger American forces. Washington officials says this is proper..Clark has such authority. Under the American-Japanese peace treaty, our forces are charged with defending Japan. [redacted] A Japanese statement says Russian planes have made 20 or 30 flights over the northernmost Japanese island: Hokkaido. Future flights will be shot down "if necessary."

In Korea today, some 400 allied planes made an around-the-clock attack on the enemy's Sinanju trasnport area. The Communists syphon their supplies to the south through Sinanju. Our pilots say the enemy's anti-aircraft fire WAS [redacted] intense. There is no announcement of any losses we may have suffered. On the ground, things were comparatively quiet. Eighth army officers say the Chinese have moved two fresh armies to the western front.

Here in New York today, General Eisenhower and the men who will be the top officials in the new government [redacted] reviewed the General's inugural speech and the state of the union message he intends to send the Congress. The General has requested his secretary of state, John Foster

Dulles, and his Mutual Security Administrator, Harold Stassen, to go to Europe at the end of this month to gather information on political trends in relation to our participation in the North Atlantic Treaty organization and economic assistance to the European countries.

The General also announced that: his internal revenue commissioner will be an independent Democrat from Virginia--T. Coleman Andrews. [redacted] Arthur Vandenbergh, Jr., will be unable to serve as appointment secretary because of illness.

The Senate today voted overwhelmingly to drop Senator Morse of Oregon from two important Senate committees: labor and armed services. Only seven senators--five democrats, Republican Tobey and Morse..voted in support of the Senator who now calls himself an independent. He supported Governor Stevenson in the campaign. Morse says the Republicans used a "terroristic device" in an effort to "compel compliance and insure subordination."

Senator Taft's office today made public letters he has written citizens who aksed about his remark that the appintment of Martin Durkin to be secretary of labor, was "incredible." Taft says he had to speak out because in this case General Eisenhower adopted a policy contrary to the principles of his party and contrary to the promises he made voters. [redacted]

The President today asked Congress to overhaul the controversial Mc Carran-Walter Immigration Act. Representative Walter, Pennsylvania Democrat, charged on the House floor that "a lot of "professional" Jews are shedding [redacted] crocodile tears" over the law. [redacted] Republican Representative Javits of New York said "Protestants and Catholics as well as Jews have taken strong stands against the act."

[redacted]

And in California, a B-29 bomber has crashed and burned in a rice field near Gridley.

The local sheriff's office reports: no survivors.

Edward R. Murrow: January 13, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

A reporter can only guess at the real meaning of today's anti-semitic frenzy in Moscow. After checking with our European correspondents, most of whom have spent time in Russia, I suggest certain indications that may give us a clue regarding Russian policy in Europe. They wanted the story to get out; it's getting a big play in the Russian press and radio. This was not necessary; they have the machinery to liquidate nine, or ninety doctors, without the outside world knowing anything about it. # Part of the reason may be the overweening fear of assassination shared by Stalin and Malinkov. This is not really a new story in Russia. In the purge trials in '36 it was claimed that a physician caused the death of the famed writer Maxim Gorki. The death of Zhadanov in 1948 has never been explained; nor that of Dimitrov the Bulgarian Communist leader. Maurice Taurez of France is still taking a cure in Moscow, after two years. (This could be an advance explanation of his demise.) But these explanations are too simple. It appears more likely that the Jewish pogroms for which Czarist Russia was notorious, before the first World War, have been re-adapted and refined by Stalin, for exactly the same purpose - to blame the Jews for all sorts of things that may go wrong. This may be part of a massive anti-Zionist move, calculated to win friends and influence the Arab world. It could also be an appeal to the not so latent forces of anti-XXXXXXXX semitism in Germany.

One of the most remarkable aspects of this story is the admission that the Russian Secret Police failed to detect the alleged criminals. Beria, who heads that outfit, could well be heading for the high jump or a bullet in the neck. / He has been regarded as a possible successor to Stalin, and it may be that XXXXXX Malinkov, another candidate for the job, has decided that this is a good time to fix Beria's wagon. / But this move is too important to reflect merely the maneuvering of the Palace guard. // These forces could not have been set in motion without Stalin's knowledge and consent, and for a supremely important reason. Poisoning and assassination, violent death for top personalities, is XXXXXX generally taboo in an oriental despotic society like the Soviet Union. (It might put ideas into people's heads.) / But the Soviet regime has chosen to publicly proclaim that a Jewish plot has reached the very vitals of its government. It is the first open, official Soviet sanction of anti-semitism on the highest level. It must be the purpose of the Soviet regime to harness this force for a larger purpose. It would be well to remember that during the late war, when Russia was in direst peril, Stalin revived all the old national patriotic symbols - Peter the Great, ~~XXXXX~~ & the rest Suvorov - in an effort to inspire the population to greater exertion. He may again be trying to tap elemental and emotional forces in Russia and the satellite peoples. The whole theme of Russian internal propaganda for six months has been consolidation and mobilization of all reserves, in both Russia and the satellite countries. This latest plot suggests that Stalin may now be calling on his emotional reserves. It may be that he and his regime feel insecure to a hitherto unsuspected degree; and he wants to use this pretext to purge the State and Party apparatus while diverting his people with a Pogrom, just as the Czars did in the past.

On the other hand he may be simply making assurance doubly sure, picking off enemies and competitors and possible weak spirits, without intending to go much farther. He could also be clearing the decks and sounding general quarters, for the emergency he feels may be approaching. Another alternative is that Stalin may now be deliberately steering for a showdown, throwing overboard the doubters, mobilizing all his forces to free his hand completely for a victorious outcome, with or without war.

In the light of past Soviet policy this cannot be regarded as any casual adventure into the field of anti-semitism. It follows the line of anti-Zionism, an appeal to the world so clearly displayed at the Prague purge. It may well be designed to awaken ~~XXXXXXXX~~ echoes of Dr. Goebbels in German ears. And it appears to be part and parcel of the tightening up process all through the Soviet and satellite world - a method of providing easy scapegoats, so that security measures can be increased and greater demands made upon the people. # Whatever the reasons, the Russian leaders have chosen to unleash and encourage a fanatical hatred against the Jews, which could reach down to remote villages, cause scores of thousands of deaths, or mass deportations, or possibly get out of hand on a local scale. There are in excess of two million Jews in the Soviet Union. They have been made the symbol of opposition to Communism as they were to Nazi-ism. No one can tell what will now happen to those in Russia and the satellite countries. But the prospect ought to cause some of our home-grown anti-Semites to keep silent at least long enough to count up to two million.

What has happened in Russia reminds me of Winston Churchill's remark when told that Rudolf Hess had parachuted into Scotland. He told Commons:"This is one of those cases in which the imagination is baffled by the facts." Two years earlier...in 1939...Mr. Churchill made a statement which would seem appropriate tonite:" I can not forecast to you the action of Russia. It is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Soviet government today accused nine of its top doctors of intentionally killing two important Soviet leaders by faulty diagnosis and the wrong treatment of their ailments. Three of the doctors are accused of being British spies. The other six, all Jewish, are accused of working as American intelligence agents through the American Jewish Joint Distribution committee. All nine doctors, presumed to be in the top echelon of Soviet physicians, are said to have confessed. Their two victims are described as: Andrei Zhdanov, a once powerful member of the Politburo, who died four years ago, and Alexander Sherbakov, who died seven years ago. At the time he was head of the Red Army's political administration. The Soviets also say that five other important Russian leaders - 3 marshals, a general of the army and an admiral, were marked for death by the same doctors. We are told the plot was uncovered some time ago. We are told an investigation is still going on and that the Russian security organizations did a poor job in failing to uncover all of this sooner.

Edward M. Warburg, head of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, says all of the Russian charges are fantastic. His organization, which has poured millions of dollars into Europe since the end of World War II is a humanitarian organization. It has never engaged in politics.

The State Department says the whole story, which the Russians are obviously eager to have spread throughout the world, is additional proof of "the extraordinary and growing sense of internal insecurity in the Soviet union."

I should like to examine some of the ramifications of this case in a few minutes.

The United States today announced strong support of Japan's warning to Russia to keep its planes away from Japanese territory or face the prospect of having them shot down. General Clark, in Tokyo, has told our military chiefs to prevent further violations of Japan's security and acts which endanger American forces. Washington officials say this is proper, Clark has such authority. Under the American-Japanese peace treaty, our forces are charged with defending Japan. A Japanese statement says Russian planes have made 20 or 30 flights over the northernmost Japanese island: Hokkaido. Future flights will be shot down "if necessary."

In Korea today, some 400 allied planes made an around-the-clock attack on the enemy's Sinanju transport area. The Communists syphon their supplies to the south through Sinanju. Our pilots say the enemy's anti-aircraft fire was intense. There is no announcement of any losses we may have suffered. On the ground, things were comparatively quiet. Eighth army officers say the Chinese have moved two fresh armies to the western front.

Here in New York today, General Eisenhower and the men who will be the top officials in the new government reviewed the General's inaugural speech and the state of the union message he intends to send the Congress. The General has requested his secretary of state, John Foster Dulles, and his Mutual Security Administrator, Harold Stassen, to go to Europe at the end of this month to gather information on political trends in relation to our participation in the North Atlantic Treaty organization and economic assistance to the European countries.

The General also announced that: his internal revenue commissioner will be an independent Democrat from Virginia - T. Coleman Andrews. Arthur Vandenbergh, Jr., will be unable to serve as appointment secretary because of illness.

The Senate today voted overwhelmingly to drop Senator Morse of Oregon from two important Senate committees: labor and armed services. Only seven senators - five democrats, Republican Tobey and Morse, voted in support of the Senator who now calls himself an independent. He supported Governor Stevenson in the campaign. Morse says the Republicans used a "terroristic device" in an effort to "compel compliance and insure subordination."

Senator Taft's office today made public letters he has written citizens who asked about his remark that the appointment of Martin Durkin to be secretary of labor, was "incredible." Taft says he had to speak out because in this case General Eisenhower adopted a policy contrary to the principles of his party and contrary to the promises he made voters.

The President today asked Congress to overhaul the controversial McCarran-Walter Immigration Act. Representative Walter, Pennsylvania Democrat, charged on the House floor that "a lot of "professional" Jews are shedding crocodile tears" over the law. Republican Representative Javits of New York said "Protestants and Catholics as well as Jews have taken strong stands against the act."

And in California, a B-29 bomber has crashed and burned in a rice field near Gridley. The local sheriff's office reports: no survivors.

A reporter can only guess at the real meaning of today's anti-semitic frenzy in Moscow. After checking with our European correspondents, most of whom have spent time in Russia, I suggest certain indications that may give us a clue regarding Russian policy in Europe. They wanted the story to get out; it's getting a big play in the Russian press and radio. This was not necessary; they have the machinery to liquidate nine or ninety doctors without the outside world knowing anything about it. Part of the reason may be the overweaning fear of assassination shared by Stalin and Malinkov. This is not really a new story in Russia. In the purge trials in '36 it was claimed that a physician caused the death of the famed writer Maxim Gorki. The death of Zhadanov in 1948 has never been explained; nor that of Dimitrov the Bulgarian Communist leader. Maurice Taure of France is still taking a cure in Moscow, after two years. This could be an advance explanation of his demise. But these explanations are too simple. It appears more likely that the Jewish pograms for which Czarist Russia was notorious before the first World War, have been re-adapted and refined by Stalin for exactly the same purpose - to blame the Jews for all sorts of things that may go wrong.

This may be part of a massive anti-Zionist move, calculated to win friends and influence the Arab world. It could also be an appeal to the not so latent forces of anti-semitism in Germany.

One of the most remarkable aspects of this story is the admission that the Russian Secret Police failed to detect the alleged criminals. Beria, who heads that outfit, could well be heading for the high jump or a bullet in the neck. He has been regarded as a possible successor to Stalin, and it may be that Malinkov, another candidate for the job, has decided that this is a good time to fix Beria's wagon. But this move is too important to reflect merely the maneuvering of the Palace guard. These forces could not have been set in motion without Stalin's knowledge and consent, and for a supremely important reason. Poisoning and assassination, violent death for top personalities, is generally taboo in an oriental despotic society like the Soviet Union. It might put ideas into people's heads. But the Soviet regime has chosen to publicly proclaim that a Jewish plot has reached the very vitals of its government. It is the first open, official Soviet sanction of anti-semitism on the highest level. It must be the purpose of the Soviet regime to harness this force for a larger purpose. It would be well to remember that during the late war, when Russia was in direst peril, Stalin revived all the old national patriotic symbols - Peter the Great, Suvorov and the rest, in an effort to inspire the population to greater exertion. He may again be trying to tap elemental and emotional forces in Russia and the satellite peoples. The whole theme of Russian internal propaganda for six months has been consolidation and mobilization of all reserves, in both Russia and the satellite countries. This latest plot suggests that Stalin may now be calling on his emotional reserves. It may be that he and his regime feel insecure to a hitherto unsuspected degree; and he wants to use this pretext to purge the State and Party apparatus while diverting his people with a Pogrom, just as the Czars did in the past.

On the other hand he may be simply making assurance doubly sure, picking off enemies and competitors and possible weak spirits without intending to go much farther. He could also be clearing the decks and sounding general quarters for the emergency he feels may be approaching. Another alternative is that Stalin may now be deliberately steering for a showdown, throwing overboard the doubters, mobilizing all his forces to free his hand completely for a victorious outcome, with or without war.

In the light of past Soviet policy this cannot be regarded as any casual adventure into the field of anti-semitism. It follows the line of anti-Zionism, an appeal to the world so clearly displayed at the Prague purge. It may well be designed to awaken echoes of Dr. Goebbels in German ears. And it appears to be part and parcel of the tightening up process all through the Soviet and satellite world - a method of providing easy scapegoats, so that security measures can be increased and greater demands made upon the people. Whatever the reasons, the Russian leaders have chosen to unleash and encourage a fanatical hatred against the Jews, which could reach down to remote villages, cause scores of thousands of deaths, or mass deportations, or possibly get out of hand on a local scale. There are in excess of two million Jews in the Soviet Union. They have been made the symbol of opposition to Communism as they were to Nazi-ism. No one can tell what will now happen to those in Russia and the satellite countries. But the prospect ought to cause some of our home-grown anti-Simites to keep silent at least long enough to count up to two million.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What has happened in Russia reminds me of Winston Churchill's remark when told that Rudolf Hess had parachuted into Scotland. He told Commons: "This is one of those cases in which the imagination is baffled by the facts." Two years earlier, in 1939, Mr. Churchill made a statement which would seem appropriate tonight: "I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia. It is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday Jan 14, 1953

This is the news:

The President predicted today that this nation faces continued unparralleled prosperity through 1953. But--he said in his annual economic report to the Congress--when we can safely reduce defense spending we may face a serious test of our ability to avoid a depression. The President agrees with two of his three economic advisers that a continued drop in farm prices and reduced defense spending could mean "trouble" unless business and government take preventive steps. The third of the president's economic advisers disagrees.. says if business slows down the policies adopted during the past 20 years should bring about better business without new action by the government. The President says that since 1929 we have experienced a remarkable improvement in our living conditions: the average income after taxes in 1929 was 1-thousand dollars a year..now its 15-hundred. Then, there were 48 million people at work; now there are 61 millions, In 1929 the average work week was 48 hours; now its 40 hours. In 1929 there were 23-million automobiles in use; now there are 44-million. We had radios in 40 per cent of our homes then; now we have them in 96 per cent of all homes. Ten per cent of the farms had electricity in 1929; now 90 per cent are electrified.

Mr. Truman says 40 per cent of our people had less than three thousand dollars in spendable income in 1951. He feels that within ten years every family should have an income of 4-thousand a year. (or at least that should be our "minimum target.")

The Defense Department today asked the new Congress to give members of the armed forces an average eight per cent, base pay increase... to cover higher living costs and also to stimulate enlistments.

General Eisenhower met here in New York today with his top foreign policy advisers. They discussed "global problems" for three and a half hours. The President's staff announced, that at the Tuesday inaugural ceremony, he will wear a black homburg hat instead of the TRADITIONAL SILK top hat..

The Senate Post Office committee has unanimously approved Arthur E. Summerfield to be postmaster general in the new administration. And the Senate's foreign relations committee has decided to request a full F.B.I. field investigation, of all persons nominated for key positions in the state department.

Senator Mc Carthy said today that because just about every college in the country has accepted federal funds... all are subject to possible investigation by his Senate investigating subcommittee.

Secretary of State Acheson held his final news conference today... we recorded a portion of it to play for you in a few minutes. Among other things the Secretary said: [redacted] He feels the movements towards western unity are the "real vital force in the mid-20th century"... The European defense forces today are very sizeable; they hardly existed five years ago. Mr. Acheson also [redacted] said that Russia's arrest of nine doctors--six of them Jewish--may be the signal for new anti-semetic attacks by the Communists.

In [redacted] Britain, Herbert Morrison, the deputy leader of the labor party, says the current anti-Jewish purges in the Soviet realm are "a digrace to humanity." [redacted] Morrison says the people of the western nations must never forget that "Communism is the openly proclaimed enemy of human freedom." #

The Russians today strangely muzzled their big story of yesterday. After spending a great deal of newspaper space whipping up anti-American, and anti-Jewish feelings yesterday, there was hardly a line on the story in the Soviet press today.

A Swedish newspaper reports that Andrei Zhdanov, the [redacted] politbureau member whose death was blamed on the arrested doctors, actually suffered from incurable cancer. A Swedish expert who was summoned to Moscow made the diagnosis a few months before Zhdanov died.

~~[redacted]~~

Yugoslavia today adopted a new constitution..named Tito its first president. There was just one hitch in the parliament. The vote was a mere 568 to one. And when the chair asked if there were additional nominations, the members of parliament..laughed.

In France, Premier Rene Mayer told reporters: he hopes Britain can be brought into the European army treaty...he hopes to submit this treaty, and the German peace contract to the Assembly for ratification "very soon." And he plans to visit the United States to give a personal pledge to President-elect Eisenhower of his government's support for the European army plan.

In Korea today, our Sabre Jet pilots had their biggest day in four months: they destroyed eight enemy Migs and shot up possibly 11 more. And for the ninth time in six days, our fighter-bombers attacked bridges and railroad yards in the Sinanju area..through which the enemy funnels down his supplies from Manchuria to the battlelines.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 191 casualties last week: 48 killed...5 missing...148 wounded.

In this country: the city of Philadelphia today was hit by a city-wide transit strike: buses, trolleys, elevated and subway trains did not run. Members of the C.I.O. Transport Workers quit work, after rejecting a new contract recommended by their union officers. The union men charge that they were sold out by Mike Quill, president of their international union. Quill says the strike is "a crime against the membership and the riding public."

Exhibit
Mr. Hughes
Mr. Hall
Co

IN WASHINGTON

Secretary of State Acheson's last meeting with Washington newsmen began and ended on a hopeful note. Here is a recorded portion of Mr. Acheson's remarks.

RETURN CUE: "Touch of love and pride beyond mere skill -- plus 5 seconds of applause

TAPE RUNS 4:40

That was Dean Acheson...who [redacted] will be succeeded by John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State. It's generally the custom when a public servant leaves office to appraise his worth. Today, the Foreign Service Journal...written by and for career diplomats, said:"Mr. Acheson was one of the great American Secretaries of State. And few men have so left their impress upon the great design of free world unity." But in the final analysis, it will be for history and future generations, to decide. Results of Polling will be revealed later on

Edward R. Murrow: January 14, 1953. WORD FOR TODAY

There are two quotations that might possibly sum up the attitude of many members of the outgoing Administration, and of the new Government that takes over on Tuesday. Those who are leaving say with Jonathan Swift: "Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent." And some members of the new Administration agree with Teddy Roosevelt, who said: "Let us not pray for a light burden, but a strong back."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, Jan. 14, 1953
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Washington, Secretary of State Acheson's last meeting with Washington newsmen began and ended on a hopeful note. Here is a recorded portion of Mr. Acheson's remarks:

ACHESON: My friends and colleagues of many years: This is our last meeting. Ours has been a long and often tumultuous life together - but rarely dull. We have known one another too well to expect sentimentality or grandilequence at this changing of the guard. So we can say at noon what one said by moonlight - that parting is such sweet sorrow. And we can agree with another poet, that the one who goes is happier than those he leaves behind. (laughter)

Without overdoing either the happiness or the sweetness of the sorrow - this is an end, and to be taken as such. The President has told what we have aspired to do and done and why in one of the great state papers of our Republic, the message on the State of the Union. He will speak again tomorrow, and he should speak and speak alone, for his has been the great task and burden of leadership, simply and bravely carried. My testament is much shorter and easier. It is a final word to fellow-craftsmen, a word out of a long striving. It is not a word for popular consumption, no message, no inspirational paragraph. I don't need to tell you that the Secretary and the Department of State are only, and in their field, the chief servants and advisors of the President and that only by mutual loyalty in those roles can the Republic best be served. And I need not say, I think, that in my experience this loyalty has been mutual and complete. I am g deeply grateful for that.

But now the roles of command and advice and the travail of alien knowledge which goes with it pass to other hands, and our thoughts are with them. I ask for them something beyond good will and a fair chance. Efficiency, says Conrad, of a practically flawless kind may be reached naturally in the struggle for bread. But there is something beyond, a higher point, a subtle and unmistakable touch of love and pride beyond mere skill. This place cannot live without that, nor prosper without your recognition of it. So do not keep your eyes too close to your pencil points and do not think too ill of my successor if sometimes there is a reminiscent note. For continuity of tradition is strong, even in this new building. Think rather of Prester John:

Then he walks us to his garden,
Where we sees a feathered demon,
Very splendid and important,
On a spicy sort of tree.
That's the Phoenix, whispers Prester,
Which all edicated seamen
Know's the only one existent,
And he's waitin' for to flee.

When his hundred years expire,
Then he'll set himself afire,
And another from his ashes rise,
Most beautiful to see.
With wings of gold and emerald,
Most beautiful to see.

Perhaps wings of gold and emerald are too much to expect of the foreign policy of the United States. But wings there have been, strong and buoyant, and in their fashioning will continue to be that subtle and unmistakable touch of love and pride beyond mere skill. (applause)

MURROW: That was Dean Acheson, who will be succeeded by John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The President predicted today that this nation faces continued unparralleled prosperity through 1953. But, he said in his annual economic report to the Congress, "When we can safely reduce defense spending we may face a serious test of our ability to avoid a depression." The President agrees with two of his three economic advisers that a continued drop in farm prices and reduced defense spending could mean "trouble" unless business and government take preventive steps. The third of the president's economic advisers disagrees, says if business slows down the policies adopted during the past 20 years should bring about better business without new action by the government. The President says that since 1929 we have experienced a remarkable improvement in our living conditions: the average income after taxes in 1929 was 1 thousand dollars a year, now its 15-hundred. Then, there were 48 million people at work; now there are 61 millions; in 1929 the average work week was 48 hours; now its 40 hours. In 1929 there were 23-million automobiles in use; now there are 44-million. We had radios in 40 per cent of our homes then; now we have them in 96 per cent of all homes. Ten per cent of the farms had electricity in 1929; now 90 per cent are electrified.

Mr. Truman says 40 per cent of our people had less than three thousand dollars in spendable income in 1951. He feels that within ten years every family should have an income of 4-thousand a year (or at least that should be our "minimum target.")

The Defense Department today asked the new Congress to give members of the armed forces an average eight per cent base pay increase, to cover higher living costs and also ti stimulate enlistments.

General Eisenhower met here in New York today with his top foreign policy advisers. They discussed "global problems" for three and a half hours.

The President's staff announced that at the Tuesday inaugual ceremony he will wear a black homburg hat instead of the traditional silk top hat.

The Senate Post Office committee has unanimously approved Arthur E. Summerfield to be postmaster general in the new administration. And the Senate's foreign relations committee has decided to request a full F.B.I. field investigation of all persons nominated for key positions in the State Department.

Senator McCarthy said today that because just about every college in the country has accepted federal funds, all are subject to possible investigation by his Senate investigating subcommittee.

Secretary of State Acheson held his final news conference today. We recorded a portion of it to play for you in a few minutes. Among other things the Secretary said: he feels the movements towards western unity are the "real vital force in the mid-20th century". The European defense forces today are very sizeable; they hardly existed five years ago. Mr. Acheson also said that Russia's arrest of nine doctors - six of them Jewish, may be the signal for new anti-semetic attacks by the Communists.

In Britain, Herbert Morrison, the deputy leader of the labor party, says the current anti-Jewish purges in the Soviet realm are "a disgrace to humanity". Morrison says the people of the western nations must never forget that "Communism is the openly proclaimed enemy of human freedom."

The Russians today strangely muzzled their big story of yesterday. After spending a great deal of newspaper space whipping up anti-American and anti-Jewish feelings yesterday there was hardly a line on the story in the Soviet press today.

A Swedish newspaper reports that Andrei Zhdanov, the politbureau member whose death was blamed on the arrested doctors, actually suffered from incurable cancer. A Swedish expert who was summoned to Moscow made the diagnosis a few months before Zhdanov died.

Yugoslavia today adopted a new constitution, named Tito its first president. There was just one hitch in the parliament. The vote was a mere 568 to one. And when the chair asked if there were additional nominations, the members of parliament laughed.

In France, Premier Rene Mayer told reporters he hopes Britain can be brought into the European army treaty, he hopes to submit this treaty, and the German peace contract to the Assembly for ratification "very soon." And he plans to visit the United States to give a personal pledge to President-elect Eisehower of his government's support for the European army plan.

In Korea today our Sabre Jet pilots had their biggest day in four months: they destroyed eight enemy Migs and shot up possibly 11 more. And for the ninth time in six days our fighter-bombers attacked bridges and railroad yards in the Sinanju area through which the enemy funnels down his supplies from Manchuria to the battlelines.

The Pentagon says we suffered another 191 casualties last week: 48 killed, 5 missing, 148 wounded.

In this country the city of Philadelphia today was hit by a city-wide transit strike: buses, trolleys, elevated and subway trains did not run. Members of the C.I.O. Transport Workers quit work after rejecting a new contract recommended by their union officers. The union men charge that they were sold out by Mike Quill, president of their international union. Quill says the strike is "a crime against the membership and the riding public."

In Washington, Secretary of State Acheson't last meeting with Washington newsmen began and ended on a hopeful note. Here is a recorded portion of Mr. Acheson's remarks.

ACHESON: My friends and colleagues of many years: This is our last meeting. Ours has been a long and often tumultuous life together - but rarely dull. We have known one another too well to expect sentimentality or grandiloquence at this changing of the guard. So we can say at noon what one said by moonlight - that parting is such sweet sorrow. And we can agree with another poet, that the one who goes is happier than those he leaves behind.

Without overdoing either the happiness or the sweetness of the sorrow - this is an end, and to be taken as such. The President has told what we have aspired to do and done and why in one of the great state papers of our Republic, the message on the State of the Union. He will speak again tomorrow, and he should speak and speak alone, for his has been the great task and burden of leadership, simply and bravely carried. My testament is much shorter and easier. It is a final word to fellow-craftsmen, a word out of a long striving. It is not a word for popular consumption, no message, no inspirational paragraph. I don't need yo tell you that the Secretary and the Department of State are only, and in their field, the chief servants and advisors of the President and that only by mutual loyalty in those roles can the Republic best be served. And I need not say, I think, that in my experience this loyalty has been mutual and complete. I am deeply grateful for that.

But now the roles of command and advice and the travail of alien knowledge which goes with it pass to other hands, and our thoughts are with them. I ask for them something beyond good will and a fair chance. Efficiency, says Conrad, of a practically flawless kind may be reached naturally in the struggle for bread. But there is something beyond, a higher point, a subtle and unmistakable touch of love and pride beyond mere skill. This place cannot live without that, nor prosper without your recognition of it. So do not keep your eyes too close to your pencil points and do not think too ill of my successor if sometimes there is a reminiscent note. For continuity of tradition is strong, even in this new building. Think rather of Prester John:

Then he walks us to his garden,
Where we sees a feathered demon,
Very splendid and important,
On a spicy sort of tree.
That's the Phoenix, whispers Prester,
Which all edicated seamen
Know's the only one existent,
And he's waitin' for to flee.

When his hundred years expire,
Then he'll set himself afire,
And another from his ashes rise,
Most beautiful to see.
With wings of gold and emerald,
Most beautiful to see.

Perhaps wings of gold and emerald are too much to expect of the foreign policy of the United States. But wings there have been, strong and buoyant, and in their fashioning will continue to be that subtle and unmistakable touch of love and pride beyond mere skill.

MURROW: That was Dean Acheson, who will be succeeded by John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State. It's generally the custom when a public servant leaves office to appraise his worth. But in the final analysis it will be for history and future generations to decide.

Today, the Foreign Service Journal, written by and for career diplomats, said: "Mr. Acheson was one of the great American Secretaries of State. And few men have so left their impress upon the great design of free world unity."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are two quotations that might possibly sum up the attitude of many members of the outgoing Administration, and of the new Government that takes over on Tuesday. Those who are leaving say with Jonathan Swift: "Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent." And some members of the new Administration agree with Teddy Roosevelt, who said: "Let us not pray for a light burden, but a strong back."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Thursday Jan. 15, 1953

This is the news:

OUR government today told Yuri Novikov, the second secretary of the Soviet embassy in Washington, to get out of this country. At the same time we arrested in Austria, two Americans..both former soldiers... AND started to fly them back to this country, to face espionage charges. The ex-soldiers...Otto Verber, 31, and Kurt PONGER, 39, both of New York, are accused of working with Novikov, both in this country and in Austria. #

Verber and PONGER are both naturalized citizens...both came from Austria..both have been studying there, under the G.I. Bill of Rights. They are accused of 14 specific acts of espionage, since June of 1949: gathering documents, sketches, maps and notes on our national defense, for Novikov and other Russian agents.

A spokesman for our embassy in Vienna says a wholesale roundup of Americans is now going on there. They are being questioned in connection with this spy case.

In West Germany today, the British announced the arrest of seven former Nazis. They are accused of plotting to regain power in Germany. I'd like to discuss this case in a few minutes.

The Russian press today returned to its attack against American AND British spies. (in connection with the arrest of nine doctors accused of poisoning high Soviet officials.) All Soviet papers are calling for more vigilance.. demanding the strictest security measures..and warning against western spies.

~~The Communist Daily Worker in London took another step in the Kremlin's anti-semetic attack by referring to Israel as "a new land of dollars" and "an American tool against the socialist countries."~~

Ten leaders of Jewish communities in East Germany, today escaped to West Berlin. One of them, Julius Mayer, a member of the Communist East German parliament, told reporters: "This is the saddest day for Jews in Germany since Hitler. They are living in a state of panic."

In Korea today, our planes completed one full week of attacks on the enemy's Sinanju area. This time 200 planes hit railroad lines and bridges. And we warned the enemy that in the future, we will attack their convoys to the neutral Kaesong area, on every day but Sunday...at least until truce talks are resumed.

In Washington today, the President held his last White House news conference. He announced that he's going to issue an order turning over the offshore tidelands to the Navy, for the purpose of national defense. Mr. Truman said that if the oil companies get control of these lands it would be a "billion dollar steal." During the campaign, President-elect Eisenhower said he favored turning the tidelands over to the states. Eisenhower, when he becomes president, will have the power to revoke the Truman order. Today, Mr. Truman said that because he has read speculation that Eisenhower may discontinue White House news conferences, he wanted it known that he holds a high opinion of these meetings with reporters: he believes they should be continued, in the best interest of our democratic Procedures. And the President called on the newsmen to "do your best to dig out the facts, and put them before the public." Mr. Truman also read a statement defending the military men of the country. He said there have been some malicious attacks on key personnel of the armed forces. Tonight Mr. Truman makes his last major radio address as President. He will be heard over many of these stations at 10;30 p.m. eastern standard time.

General Eisenhower, still in New York today, conferred with Representative McConnell of Pennsylvania for nearly an hour. Mc Connel then said that one of the first subjects to be considered by the new Congress, after Tuesday's inuguration, will be revisions in the Taft-Hartley law.

[redacted]

[redacted] the Air Force says it has cancelled plans for a flight of some 450 military planes over the inugural parade route on Tuesday. The White House and Eisenhower's office [redacted] are said to have agreed that such a demonstration would be costly..and dangerous.

Three more of the General's cabinet members received committee approval today: Ezra Taft Benson to be secretary of agriculture... Douglas Mc Kay to be interior secretary and John Foster Dulles to be secretary of state. Mr. Dulles told the Senate foreign relations committee: we must DISINTEGRATE [redacted] the unholy alliance between Russia and the Chinese communists... our past policy of containment against the Russians is not enough... we must have an aggressive foreign policy... and we must do all we can short of war to liberate the enslaved peoples of the world.

The Senate Armed Services Committee heard Charles Wilson, who is to be nominated as defense secretary, testify that he holds about two and a half million dollars worth of stock in General Motors..where he formerly was president. Mr. Wilson is expected to be approved tomorrow.

The big excitement in Washington today came shortly after 8 o'clock this morning when a Pennsylvania Railroad train, with faulty brakes, crashed through the barriers at union station. The train went on to the concourse, smashed the station master's stand and a news stand and then the Engine and two coaches plunged through the floor into a baggage room. No one was killed. Forty passengers were hurt..some seriously. Railroad men say the fact that the engineer sounded his horn saved many passengers waiting in the station. And inside the train the conductor had warned passengers to brace themselves.

Edward R. Murrow: January 15, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

British authorities in Germany have flung seven former Nazis, into jail. Two of the men arrested had been named to high posts in Hitler's Will. One was to have succeeded the Propaganda Minister, Dr. Goebbels; and the other was to have become Minister of Culture. With one exception, (a 57-year-old S.S. Brigadier General) all of the men arrested are about 44 years of age. They came of the Universities at about the time Hitler came to power. They were all fanatics. # The British charges against the seven men are not very specific. They say that these leading Nazis were "plotting to regain power, and were potentially very dangerous." / They had been in contact with ex-Nazis, and possibly Communists, perhaps even with Moscow. If it appears strange that ardent Nazis should be dealing with Moscow, it is only necessary to remember that Hitler made a deal with Stalin in 1939.

British forces in Germany are entitled by treaty, to arrest Germans who "threaten the security of the allied forces in Western Germany." Nevertheless, in the recent past, arrests of this kind have been carried out by the West German Government. # There can be no reliable assessment of how serious or extensive this conspiracy may be, until the men have been questioned, and the documents captured with them have been studied.

It is possible that the nature of the evidence against the seven is not yet sufficient to permit regular German legal proceedings. Sir Ivone Kirkpatrick, the British High Commissioner of Germany, said "we wanted to lift the lid and have a look inside, at something we knew had been going on." It does not appear that the conspiracy extended to the French and American zones of Western Germany; at least no arrests have been made there, and we are told none are contemplated.

It's no secret that a lot of Nazis have been waiting for years for something to happen, which would permit them to stage a comeback. They have grown impatient; their efforts at open organization have been uniformly unsuccessful; and Chancellor Adenauer's government has had the situation well in hand. // The former Nazis are in large part a hungry, unscrupulous and ambitious lot. They are split half-a-dozen ways, according to background, postwar adjustment and a degree of disillusionment with Hitler. They fight among themselves, but thus far there has been no hard evidence of an organized conspiracy, or an effective underground.

Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn tonight that probably the greatest danger comes from their playing "footsie" with the Russians, who are always willing to help out with advice and promises. He says the exclusion of the German authorities from this roundup, seems to reflect a lack of confidence in the German Government; and it does that government no good. American diplomats in Germany feel the dramatic British action, must now produce dramatic evidence; otherwise the prestige of the Adenauer Government will decrease, and the seven men will become martyrs.

Sir Ivone Kirkpatrick said the incident should not be exaggerated. But its effect, whether the charges are well-founded or not, will be to create new suspicions in Western Europe and retard progress toward setting up a European Army including German divisions.

Tonight Paris newspapers are running big headlines such as: "Nazi Plot Unveiled"; and "Hitlerian Plotters XXX Preparing to Seize Power." One powerful independent French paper warns that "the position of the German partners of the West is not perhaps as sure as official circles believe.

Howard K. Smith reports from London that this incident is likely to prove a heavy blow to the plans for bringing Germany into the western defense network. One London paper says the arrests indicate it's by no means wise, or safe, to take anything for granted in postwar Germany. Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard calls the incident: "A rebuttal to wishful thinkers who urge that Germany must be armed with all speed - which way would the bright new German bayonets point - Red signals are flashing on the road of our German policy."

Recently, British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden said in the House of Commons that "certain signs in Germany undermine confidence in Germany's intentions and reliability as a partner. (Presumably Mr. Eden and his associates feel even more strongly about that after today's disclosure.

Whatever disclosures may be yet to come, Germany's neighbors - already worried by her bounding economic recovery, burdened with memories of two wars "made in Germany" - now have added reason for apprehension and suspicion.

The prospect of a rebirth of Naziism is still very real. How to handle the problem is another thing. For the West, it's perhaps as James Thurber once said:"I have never been able to maintain a consistent attitude toward life, or reality, or anything else. (This may be entirely due to nervousness.") If this is the case, Demosthenes had the answer:"There is one safeguard known generally to the wise, which is an advantage and security to all - but especially to democracies -- distrust."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Our government today told Yuri Novikov, the second secretary of the Soviet embassy in Washington, to get out of this country. At the same time we arrested in Austria, two Americans, both former soldiers and started to fly them back to this country to face espionage charges. The ex-soldiers, Otto Verber, 31, and Kurt Ponger, 39, both of New York, are accused of working with Novikov both in this country and in Austria. Verber and Ponger are both naturalized citizens, both came from Austria, both have been studying there under the G.I. Bill of Rights. They are accused of 14 specific acts of espionage since June of 1949: gathering documents, sketches, maps and notes on our national defense for Novikov and other Russian agents.

A spokesman for our embassy in Vienna says wholesale roundup of Americans is now going on there. They are being questioned in connection with this spy case.

In West Germany today, the British announced the arrest of seven former Nazis. They are accused of plotting to regain power in Germany. I'd like to discuss this case in a few minutes.

The Russian press today returned to its attack against American and British spies, (in connection with the arrest of nine doctors accused of poisoning high Soviet officials.) All Soviet papers are calling for more vigilance, demanding the strictest security measures, and warning against western spies.

Ten leaders of Jewish communities in East Germany today escaped to West Berlin. One of them, Julius Mayer, a member of the Communist East German parliament, told reporters: "This is the saddest day for Jews in Germany since Hitler; they are living in a state of panic."

In Korea today, our planes completed one full week of attacks on the enemy's Sinanju area. This time 200 planes hit railroad lines and bridges. And we warned the enemy that in the future we will attack their convoys to the neutral Kaesong area on every day but Sunday, at least until truce talks are resumed.

In Washington today, the President held his last White House news conference. He announced that he's going to issue an order turning over the offshore tidelands to the Navy for the purpose of national defense. Mr. Truman said that if the oil companies get control of these lands it would be "billion dollar steal." During the campaign, President-elect Eisenhower said he favored turning the tidelands over to the states. Eisenhower, when he becomes president, will have the power to revoke the Truman order. Today, Mr. Truman said that because he has read speculation that Eisenhower may discontinue White House news conferences, he wanted it known that he holds a high opinion of these meetings with reporters: he believes they should be continued in the best interest of our democratic procedures. And the President called on the newsmen to "do your best to dig out the facts and put them before the public." Mr. Truman also read a statement defending the military men of the country. He said there have been some malicious attacks on key personnel of the armed forces. Tonight Mr. Truman makes his last major radio address as President. He will be heard over many of these stations at 10:30 p.m. eastern standard time.

General Eisenhower, still in New York today, conferred with Representative McConnell of Pennsylvania for nearly an hour. McConnel then said that one of the first subjects to be considered by the new Congress, after Tuesday's inauguration, will be revisions in the Taft-Hartley law.

The Air Force says it has cancelled plans for a flight of some 450 military planes over the inaugural parade route on Tuesday. The White House and Eisenhower's office are said to have agreed that such a demonstration would be costly and dangerous.

Three more of the General's cabinet members received committee approval today: Ezra Taft Benson to be secretary of agriculture, Douglas McKay to be interior secretary and John Foster Dulles to be secretary of state. Mr. Dulles told the Senate foreign relations committee: we must disintegrate the unholy alliance between Russia and the Chinese communists, our past policy of containment against the Russians is not enough, we must have an aggressive foreign policy, and we must do all we can short of war to liberate the enslaved peoples of the world.

The Senate Armed Services Committee heard Charles Wilson, who is to be nominated as defense secretary, testify that he holds about two and a half million dollars worth of stock in General Motors, where he formerly was president. Mr. Wilson is expected to be approved tomorrow.

The big excitement in Washington today came shortly after 8 o'clock this morning when a Pennsylvania Railroad train, with faulty brakes, crashed through the barriers at union station. The train went on to the concourse, smashed the station master's stand and a news stand and then the engine and two coaches plunged through the floor into a baggage room. No one was killed. Forty passengers were hurt, some seriously. Railroad men say the fact that the engineer sounded his horn saved many passengers waiting in the station. And inside the train the conductor had warned passengers to brace themselves.

British authorities in Germany have flung seven former Nazis into jail. Two of the men arrested had been named to high posts in Hitler's Will. One was to have succeeded the Propaganda Minister, Dr. Goebbels; and the other was to have become Minister of Culture. With one exception, (a 57-year-old S.S. Brigadier General) all of the men arrested are about 44 years of age. They came of the Universities at about the time Hitler came to power. They were all fanatics. The British charges against the seven men are not very specific. They say that these leading Nazis were "plotting to regain power, and were potentially very dangerous." They had been in contact with ex-Nazis and possibly Communists, perhaps even with Moscow. If it appears strange that ardent Nazis should be dealing with Moscow, it is only necessary to remember that Hitler made a deal with Stalin in 1939.

British forces in Germany are entitled by treaty to arrest Germans who "threaten the security of the allied forces in Western Germany." Nevertheless, in the recent past arrests of this kind have been carried out by the West German Government. There can be no reliable assessment of how serious or extensive this conspiracy may be until the men have been questioned, and the documents captured with them have been studied.

It is possible that the nature of the evidence against the seven is not yet sufficient to permit regular German legal proceedings. Sir Kvone Kirkpatrick, the British High Commissioner of Germany, said "we wanted to lift the lid and have a look inside at something we knew had been going on." It does not appear that the conspiracy extended to the French and American zones of Western Germany; at least no arrests have been made there, and we are told none are contemplated.

It's no secret that a lot of Nazis have been waiting for years for something to happen which would permit them to stage a comeback. They have grown impatient; their efforts at open organization have been uniformly unsuccessful; and Chancellor Adenauer's government has had the situation well in hand. The former Nazis are in large part a hungry, unscrupulous and ambitious lot. They are split half-a-dozen ways, according to background, postwar adjustment and degree of disillusionment with Hitler. They fight among themselves, but thus far there has been no hard evidence of an organized conspiracy or an effective underground.

Dick Hotteler cables me from Bonn tonight that probably the greatest danger comes from their playing "footsie" with the Russians, who are always willing to help out with advice and promises. He says the exclusion of the German authorities from this roundup seems to reflect a lack of confidence in the German Government; and it does that government no good. American diplomats in Germany feel the dramatic British action must now produce dramatic evidence; otherwise the prestige of the Adenauer Government will decrease, and the seven men will become martyrs.

Sir Ivon Korkpatrick said the incident should not be exaggerated. But its effect, whether the charges are well-founded or not, will be to create new suspicions in Western Europe and retard progress toward setting up a European Army including German divisions.

Tonight Paris newspapers are running big headlines such as: "Nazi Plot Unveiled"; and "Hitlerian Plotters Preparing to Seize Power." One powerful independent French paper warns that "the position of the German partners of the West is not perhaps as sure as official circles believe.

Howard K. Smith reports from London that this incident is likely to prove a heavy blow to the plans for bringing Germany into the western defense network. One London paper says the arrests indicate it's by no means wise or safe to take anything for granted in postwar Germany. Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard calls the incident: "A rebuttal to wishful thinkers who urge that Germany must be armed with all speed - which way would the bright new German bayonets point - Red signals are flashing on the road of our German policy."

Recently, British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden said in the House of Commons that "certain signs in Germany undermine confidence in Germany's intentions and reliability as a partner. (Presumably Mr. Eden and his associates feel even more strongly about that, after today's disclosure.

Whatever disclosures may be yet to come, Germany's neighbors - already worried by her bounding economic recovery, burdened with memories of two wars "made in Germany" - now have added reason for apprehension and suspicion.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The prospect of a rebirth of Naziism is still very real. How to handle the problem is another thing. For the West, it's perhaps as James Thurber once said: "I have never been able to maintain a consistent attitude toward life or reality or anything else. This may be entirely due to nervousness." If this is the case, Demosthenes had the answer: "There is one safeguard known generally to the wise, which is an advantage and security to all - but especially to democracies - distrust."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Friday, Jan. 16, 1953

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that the best way to attack Communism is "to preach with conviction, and teach with integrity." In farewell speeches to the faculty and students at Columbua University, the General said he believes strongly in the freedom of teachers to teach what is in their hearts and their minds. He said our country will never deteriorate, if each individual will seek out and cherish opportunity. "But, "he said," Never let the idea of security put a ceiling over your heart, and your aspirations." The General, who goes to Washington on Sunday, in advance of his inuguration on Tuesday, announced a number of appointments. He accepted Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's resignation as a member of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, and praised her for a job done well. To replace Mrs. Roosevelt he named Mrs. Oswald B. Lord of New York City, a member of the Pillsbury Flour family. The General named Mrs. Alma Kittredge Schneider of Colorado to be director of the mint at Denver. He chose Lt. Col. Robert Schulz, to be his military aide; Colonel Schulz has served with General Eisenhower since 1945. The White House air force aide will be Major William Draper, his pilot since 1942. And the naval aide will be Commander Edward L. Beach, author of the book "Submarine" and at present commander of the submarine "Trigger." In addition, the General approved the choice of C. Wesley Roberts of Kansas, to be the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. Mr. Roberts, a former newspaperman, is Kansas state Republican chairman.

In Washington, the House Ways and Means Committee rejected President Truman's proposal, to give the new president permission to deduct up to 50-thousand dollars in expenses, from his income tax returns.

The Senate Labor Committee unanimously approved Martin P. Durkin to be the new secretary of labor. Senator Taft--who once called this appointment "incredible", told Mr. Durkin today that he understood that Durkin has pledged to regard himself as a representative of the public, and not as a representative of any particular organization. Durkin said that was right. Another Senate committee is having some difficulty agreeing on what to do about Charles E. Wilson..named to be secretary of defense. I'd like to examine the issues in Mr. Wilson's case in a few minutes.

President Truman today took time to say good-bye to the women reporters who have covered Mrs. Truman and daughter Margaret. And in a report to Congress he said its time to stop thinking of mutual assistance programs as emergency measures. Its time to start long-range planning.

Mr. Truman also issued the order placing offshore oil deposits under the command of the Navy..despite opposition from many Congressmen.

Secretary of State Acheson said good-bye to his State Department employes. He told them: "You are entitled to ask that you not be vilified, that your loyalty should not be brought in doubt, and that slanders and libel should not be made against you." He added: "I believe the difficulties through which you have been, will be temporary difficulties, because they are not true to the great traditions of American life."

At another farewell meeting, Air Secretary Finletter said that missiles, capable of crossing the ocean, and operating accurately, will be available "fairly soon". He indicated this means in about 30 years.

The Government reports that the cost of living dropped two-tenths of one per cent during the month that ended in the middle of December.

And a committee appointed by the President reported today that many federal agencies are not enforcing the ban against racial discrimination that is now contained in almost every government contract.

In a federal court in Washington ~~Henry W. Furnwald pleaded not guilty to a 31 count indictment on charges of contempt of Congress.~~

~~In another courtroom,~~ two Austrian-born men who served in our army intelligence, today were given an opportunity to read an indictment charging them with taking part in a spy plot headed by the second secretary of the Russian embassy in Washington. The two men, Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger, are being held in 50-thousand dollars bail..until they can get lawyers.

American officials in Vienna say Ernest Tislowitz, aged 40, born in Germany but a veteran of our army intelligdnce service, is among SEVERAL persons being questioned in connection with this case.

In East Germany the communist dominated government today announced the arrest, as a spy, of the government's foreign minister...Georg Dertinger. #

And West Berlin Socialists say the chief of the Russian department of the East German government's foreign office..and his wife..have been arrested. Both are Jews.

In Egypt, General Naguib, the premier, has dissolved all political parties, for at least three years. He charges them with sabotaging his plans by "spreading false and malicious rumors." Naguib also ordered the arrest of 25 army officers.. suspected of plotting against his regime.

~~Diplomatic sources in Iran say Premier Mossadegh is now studying an American plan to end the long British-Iranian fight over oil. The plan calls for a lump-out more than 100 million dollars in aid and for future oil purchases.~~

IT was cold in Korea today..with the mercury down to seven and nine degrees below zero, all along the front. In the air, our Sabrejets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged another. Again, our fighter-bombers attacked enemy supply lines.

Edward R. Murrow: January 16, 1953. 7.45 p.m.

During the campaign General Eisenhower said frequently that if he should be elected he believed that he would be able to call upon experienced Americans to serve their government, and that they would agree to do so. It must be agreed that he has persuaded a considerable number of people to accept positions in his administration at considerable personal sacrifice. The list is made up largely of business men, but includes people like James Conant, the President of Harvard, who has agreed to represent this country in Germany. And already there is trouble about some of the Eisenhower nominations to high office. The Senate Armed Services Committee isn't sure whether it will, or can approve the appointment of Charles E. Wilson, as Secretary of Defense. Mr. Wilson has retired as President of General Motors - he still holds about 2½ million dollars' worth of stock in that corporation. General Motors is one of the country's biggest defense contractors, and as Secretary of Defense Mr. Wilson would have to deal with that corporation. In addition to his stockholdings Mr. Wilson told the committee yesterday that he expects to receive bonuses of six hundred thousand dollars over the next four years, from General Motors.

Members of the Armed Services Committee say that they have reached a stalemate on Mr. Wilson's confirmation, and on other of the General's nominees for the Defense Department. The Senators report that Robert T. Stevens, Chairman of the Board of one of the world's largest textile firms, holds about sixteen hundred shares in his company, and the company holds about 150 million dollars in government contracts. Mr. Stevens has been nominated by General [redacted] Eisenhower to be Secretary of the Army.

Senator Hunt, of Wyoming, a member of the committee, said: "We are in a pickle. We have come to a sort of stalemate." Committee members say that Mr. Wilson told them that he would not be influenced in his dealings as a government official with General Motors. They quoted him as saying: "What is good for General Motors is good for the country; and what is good for the country is good for General Motors." Mr. Wilson told the committee that he could not afford to sell his General Motors stock because of the huge tax that would be assessed on such a transaction.

Democratic Senator Gore, of Tennessee, who is not a member of the Armed Services Committee, says that he will vote against confirming Mr. Wilson as Secretary of Defense unless he sells his General Motors stock.

This argument about confirmation of Mr. Wilson and other men nominated to high positions in the Defense Department should be kept in proper perspective. All of them have been willing to make substantial sacrifices in order to serve their country. However, they retain stock and other interests in corporations doing business with the Defense Department. And on this subject there is a law. It was first passed in the 1870's, and it was revised in 1948. And it reads in part: "Whoever, being an officer, agent or member of, or directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of any corporation, joint stock company, or association, or of any firm or partnership or other business entity, is employed or acts as an official or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with any such business entity, shall be fined not more than two thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both." That's what the law says. In short, government officials cannot legally hold stock in corporations with which, as ~~XXXX~~ officials, they are doing business on behalf of the government. In this whole discussion, and it appears likely to mount in intensity and perhaps acrimony during the week end, it would be worth remembering that, so far as we can learn, no one is questioning the ability, sincerity, integrity or patriotism of Mr. Wilson, or of other nominees for high posts in the Defense Department. This appears not to be a question of confidence in any of the men involved. It is rather a question, as Senator Byrd of Virginia is reported to have put it, of a government of ~~laws~~ law, not men; and the law on this point appears to be clear and specific. It may be necessary for Congress to amend the law, in order to permit the approval of some of General Eisenhower's appointments.

Herbert Brownell, who will be General Eisenhower's Attorney-General, has been advised of the dilemma. This controversy may delay, and could prevent the confirmation of Mr. Wilson and some of his colleagues in the Defense Department. But the controversy is based upon the law, and not upon the character or competence of the individuals involved.

We were discussing the law as it affects cabinet appointments. Without regard to personalities or intent, most of us would agree with the Dutch jurist Gro-she-us:"The law obliges us to do what is proper, not simply what is just." It is pretty much the same problem the Greek poet [redacted] Li-ko-fron recognized centuries ago when he said:"Law is a pledge that the citizens of a state will do justice to one another."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

General Eisenhower said today that the best way to attack Communism is "to preach with conviction and teach with integrity." In farewell speeches to the faculty and students at Columbia University, the General said he believes strongly in the freedom of teachers to teach what is in their hearts and their minds. He said our country will never deteriorate if each individual will seek out and cherish opportunity. "But," he said, "Never let the idea of security put a ceiling over your heart and your aspirations." The General, who goes to Washington on Sunday in advance of his inauguration on Tuesday, announced a number of appointments. He accepted Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's resignation as a member of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, and praised her for a job well done. To replace Mrs. Roosevelt he named Mrs. Oswald B. Lord of New York City, a member of the Pillsbury Flour family. The General named Mrs. Alma Kittredge Schneider of Colorado to be director of the mint at Denver. He chose Lt. Col. Robert Schulz, to be his military aide; Colonel Schulz has served with General Eisenhower since 1945. The White House Air Force aide will be Major William Draper, his pilot since 1942. And the naval aide will be Commander Edward L. Beach, author of the book "Submarine" and at present commander of the submarine "Trigger." In addition, the General approved the choice of C. Wesley Roberts of Kansas, to be the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. Mr. Roberts, a former newspaperman, is Kansas State Republican chairman.

In Washington, the House Ways and Means Committee rejected President Truman's proposal to give the new president permission to deduct up to 50-thousand dollars in expenses from his income tax returns.

The Senate Labor Committee unanimously approved Martin P. Durkin to be the new secretary of labor. Senator Taft, who once called this appointment

"incredible" told Mr. Durkin today that he understood that Kurkin has pledged to regard himself as a representative of the public and not as a representative of any particular organization. Durkin said that was right. Another Senate committee is having some difficulties agreeing on what to do about Charles E. Wilson, named to be secretary of defense. I'd like to examine the issues in Mr. Wilson's case in a few minutes.

President Truman today took time to say good-bye to the women reporters who have covered Mrs. Truman and daughter Margaret. And in a report to Congress he said its time to stop thinking of mutual assistance programs as emergency measures. Its time to start long-range planning.

Mr. Truman also issued the order placing offshore oil deposits under the command of the Navy, despite opposition from many Congressmen.

Secretary of State Acheson said good-bye to his State Department employees. He told them: "You are entitled to ask that you not be vilified, and that your loyalty should not be brought in doubt, and that slanders and libel should not be made against you." He added: "I believe the difficulties through which you have been will be temporary difficulties because they are not true to the great traditions of American life."

At another farewell meeting, Air Secretary Finletter said that missiles capable of crossing the ocean, and operating accurately, will be available "fairly soon". He indicated this means in about 30 years.

The Government reports that the cost of living dropped two-tenths of one per cent during the month that ended in the middle of December.

And a committee appointed by the President reported today that many federal agencies are not enforcing the ban against racial discrimination that is not contained in almost every government contract.

In a federal court in Washington two Austrian-born men who served in our army intelligence, today were given an opportunity to read an indictment charging them with taking part in a spy plot headed by the second secretary of the Russian embassy in Washington. The two men, Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger, are being held in 50-thousand dollars bail, until they can get lawyers.

American officials in Vienna say Ernest Tislowitz, aged 40, born in Germany, but a veteran of our army intelligence service, is among several persons being questioned in connection with this case.

In East Germany the Communist dominated government today announced the arrest as a spy of the government's foreign minister, Georg Dertinger. And West Berlin Socialists say the chief of the Russian department of the Eastern German Government's foreign office, and his wife, have been arrested. Both are Jews.

In Egypt, General Naguib, the premier, has dissolved all political parties for at least three years. He charges them with sabotaging his plans by "spreading false and malicious rumors." Naguib also ordered the arrest of 25 army officers, suspected of plotting against his regime.

It was cold in Korea today, with the mercury down to seven and nine degrees below zero all along the front. In the air, our Sabrejets destroyed one enemy Mig and damaged another. Again, our fighter-bombers attacked enemy supply lines.

During the campaign General Eisenhower said frequently that if he should be elected he believed that he would be able to call upon experienced Americans to serve their government, and that they would agree to do so. It must be agreed that he has persuaded a considerable number of people to accept positions in his administration at considerable personal sacrifice. The list is made up largely of business men, but includes people like James Conant, the President of Harvard, who has agreed to represent this country in Germany. And already there is trouble about some of the Eisenhower nominations to high office. The Senate Armed Services Committee isn't sure whether it will, or can approve the appointment of Charles E. Wilson, as Secretary of Defense. Mr. Wilson has retired as President of General Motors - he still holds about 2½ million dollars' worth of stock in that corporation. General Motors is one of the country's biggest defense contractors, and as Secretary of Defense Mr. Wilson would have to deal with that corporation. In addition to his stockholdings Mr. Wilson told the committee yesterday that he expects to receive bonuses of six hundred thousand dollars over the next four years, from General Motors.

Members of the Armed Services Committee say that they have reached a "stalemate" on Mr. Wilson's confirmation, and on other of the General's nominees for the Defense Department. The Senators report that Robert T. Stevens, Chairman of the Board of one of the world's largest textile firms, holds about sixteen hundred shares in his company, and the company holds about 150 million dollars in government contracts. Mr. Stevens has been nominated by General Eisenhower to be Secretary of the Army.

Senator Hunt, of Wyoming, a member of the committee, said: "We are in a pickle. We have come to a sort of stalemate." Committee members say that Mr. Wilson told them that he would not be influenced in his dealings, as a government official with General Motors. They quoted him as saying: "What is good for General Motors is good for the country; and what is good for the country is good for General Motors." Mr. Wilson told the committee that he could not afford to sell his General Motors stock because of the huge tax that would be assessed on such a transaction.

Democratic Senator Gore, of Tennessee, who is not a member of the Armed Services Committee, says that he will vote against confirming Mr. Wilson as Secretary of Defense unless he sells his General Motors stock.

This argument about confirmation of Mr. Wilson and other men nominated to high positions in the Defense Department should be kept in proper perspective. All of them have been willing to make substantial sacrifices in order to serve their country. However, they retain stock and other interests in corporations doing business with the Defense Department. And on this subject there is a law. It was first passed in the 1870's, and it was revised in 1948. And it reads in part: "Whoever, being an officer, agent or member of, or directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of any corporation, joint stock company, or association, or of any firm or partnership or other business entity, is employed or acts as an official or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with any such business entity, shall be fined not more than two thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both." That's what the law says. In short, government officials cannot legally hold stock in corporations with which, as officials, they are doing business on behalf of the government. In this whole discussion, and it appears likely to mount in intensity and perhaps acrimony during the week end, it would be worth remembering that, so far as we can learn, no one is questioning the ability, sincerity, integrity or patriotism of Mr. Wilson, or of other nominees for high posts in the Defense Department. This appears not to be a question of confidence in any of the men involved. It is rather a question, as Senator Byrd of Virginia is reported to have put it, of a government of law, not men; and the law on this point appears to be clear and specific. It may be necessary for Congress to amend the law, in order to permit the approval of some of General Eisenhower's appointments.

Gerbert Brownell, who will be General Eisenhower's Attorney-General, has been advised of the dilemma. This controversy may delay, and could prevent the confirmation of Mr. Wilson and some of his colleagues in the Defense Department. But the controversy is based upon the law, and not upon the character or competence of the individuals involved.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were discussing the law as it affects cabinet appointments. Without regard to personalities or intent, most of us would agree with the Dutch jurist Gro-she-us: "The law obliges us to do what is proper, not simply what is just." It is pretty much the same problem the Greek poet Li-ko-fron recognized centuries ago when he said: "Law is a pledge that the citizens of a state will do justice to one another."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Mon, Jan. 19, 1953

This is the news:

Washington is ready for tomorrow's inaugural. The weatherman HERE promises considerable cloudiness but a little sunshine. [redacted] within the next half hour the "festival"...the professional entertainment event... gets underway. And tomorrow's star.. Dwight Eisenhower..is spending a quiet evening, with members of his family, at a hotel [redacted] three [redacted] blocks AWAY from the White House. During the day [redacted] he saw a campaign advisor, Bernard Shanley who reported to reporters:"Eisenhower is full of life and drive and ready to go."

At the White House, the President,too, is spending a quiet evening with his wife and daughter..the last night of his presidency. Earlier, he visited his local bank. (the first time he's been there since shortly after he became President) White House aides couldn't say if Mr. Truman put in or took out. [redacted]

[redacted] meeting with [redacted] except for John R. Steelman [redacted] for a few [redacted] General Eisenhower. There were [redacted] Truman today. But [redacted] a [redacted] the new president.

President-elect Eisenhower's desire to have his cabinet members sworn into office tomorrow, shortly after he takes his oath, will "almost" come to pass. Senate committees HAVE now approved all the cabinet officers with the exception of Charles E. Wilson. The Armed Services committee considers his case on Wednesday.

Today the Senate Finance Committee [redacted] gave unanimous approval to George Humphrey, who is to be the secretary of the treasury. Mr. Humphrey told the Senators: he is afraid a general tax reduction cannot be made in the near future. He thinks the first job is the balance the budget. [redacted] the present "tax [redacted]" is [redacted]

The Commerce Committee approved Sinclair Weeks to be secretary of Commerce, after he promised "to do an honest job." And the Judicary Committee okeyed Herbert Brownell to be attorney general. Mr. Brownell said: he will vigorously enforce the anti-Communist laws...he will co-operate with Congressional investigating committees... he will press all the major anti-trust suits now in court, including the controversial oil monopoly case... Mr. Brownell was questioned about the case of Charles Wilson.. whose appointment as defense secretary has been held up because some Senators believe he should give up his stock and bonus arrangement with General Motors. Mr. Brownell said: he favors a government of laws, not men. He favors treating all alike, under law. If we are going to enforce it against one person, we should enforce it against his neighbor.

Sherman Adams, who is to be General Eisenhower's assistant, said today the new Administration will "ride out" the Wilson appointment. He says he doesn't blame the Senators for challenging the appointment; there's a principle involved.

[redacted]

[redacted] to [redacted]

[redacted] in [redacted] ."

The Army today called for 53-thousand men to be drafted in March..the same number called up for February.

Here in Washington, Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger pleaded not guilty to spying for a Russian ring. And Yuri Novikov, the second secretary of the Russian embassy--who is accused of heading the spy ring..left this country today by plane..at our request.

In New York, a federal jury spent a fifth day trying to decide the conspiracy case against 13 second-string Communist leaders.

And in two counties in the Carolinas, the F.B.I. arrested 14 former Ku Klux Klansmen, on charges of kidnapping and conspiracy in the [redacted] flogging of a white man in October of 1951.

[redacted]

In Korea today, our tanks took advantage of frozen rice fields and joined an artillery attack on enemy lines along most of the front.

There is still no official Navy EXPLANATION on the "incident" along the China coast over the week-end. The best available reports indicate that from 11 to 14 naval flyers are missing. It appears that after Communist anti-airacrft guns shot down a Navy patrol bomber, off the China coast on Sunday, an unidentified plane--presumed communist of course--fired at a Coast Guard rescue plane on Monday. The Navy does say there were 21 men in all, in both planes. That means from 7 to 10 have been rescued.

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer vigorously protested the relase of an American poll that concluded that Naziism is a real threat to democratic government in west Germany. In a news conference and a radio speech, the Chancellor said there is no danger that a Nazi party will seize power in west Germany. He cannot understand why the U.S. High Commission did not tell him about the poll before publishing it. [redacted]

[redacted] of

[redacted]

Thirteen hundred more East German refugees poured into West Berlin today..among them 30 Jewish families.

And the Soviet press and radio now accuses a key member of its Metals Ministry of stealing a secret document.

MURROW JANUARY 19, 1953

There is something a little awe-inspiring about watching this change of administration in Washington. On the surface, it's a gay and reckless round of parties; hotel corridors sound like one, long, busy bar; and after tomorrow night's two big star-studded, "biggest ever parties," this city will have as fine a collection of hang-overs its had since V-J Day. [Twenty years is a long time for Democrats and Republicans alike.] / The old team is going out, having honestly done what it could to arrange for the orderly transfer of power. / They look to the past, confident that history will sustain most of their big decisions. The Republicans do not appear to underestimate the task ahead, but ~~appear~~ seem to want to have one last fling at the carefree, irresponsible kind of party they ~~would~~ will not enjoy again for at least four years. This reporter gets the impression that those who expect slam-bang sudden changes in policy will be disappointed. This administration is not likely to duplicate the first hundred days of the New Deal. The issues are more complex and delicate, and the top men in the new government are not a bunch of bold experimenters. There will be changes in degree but not in direction of basic policy. / A government as big as this is a cumbersome thing, and it takes time for the new crew to find its way about.

,8

There won't be any sudden miracles in the domestic or foreign field.

Word comes from Paris today that European scientists have performed a sort of minor miracle. And the result of this development may be somewhat similar to the development of this administration. These scientists have succeeded in raising a race of stingless bees. Through artificial insemination and careful breeding, they have produced bees without a stinger. Commenting on this scientific achievement, the French editor of LaMonde in Paris has this to say: "A miracle of science; the disarmament of the bee. Now if only science could produce a race of men without guns, then perhaps I would become an enthusiastic supporter of artificial insemination. What an extraordinary mutation would be necessary to produce a special without the atom bomb.

"However, to get back to the bee, the scientists have observed a most interesting phenomenon: the stingless bee stays in its hive and does not form new bee communities. In other words, having lost their stinger --that is, having become pacifists -- they've lost their social sense. This doesn't surprise me.

"There's nothing like war for the development of the social sense; nothing like fear for bringing men together; nothing like an army for keeping them united.

"Can you imagine what would happen if general disarmament were to be decreed in the world: It would be the ruin of business. And since national budgets would immediately be balanced, it would be the end of politics. What would we have left to read about in our papers. What would remain to feed the imagination, the indignation, and the hope of civilized men. What reason would be left for obedience. It would mean anarchy a universal breakdown.

"But the bees, you may ask, these unsocial stingless bees, what's happening to them.

"Very simply this: They're still making honey."

Like the Does -

The new administration will have to go right on grappling with the problems that the old one has been wrestling with. The Russians won't go away or be good. The price of leadership will remain high. The top officials in the new administration, as in the old one, will have to sign papers they don't have time to read; will have to trust people they scarcely know. There will be the usual bitter competition for places of influence close to the men who have to make the big decisions; men who have been sovereign in their own field of finance or business will become servants of the public. There will be pettiness, jealousy, and explosions of temper, as there have been in every administration. There will be decisions to be taken, perhaps more fateful that the dropping of the atom bomb, or the decision to fight in Korea.

This gayety in Washington; this combination of a circus and a mid winter - beach picnic represents, I suspect, no more than an effort to achieve a momentary release from pretty grim reality. There is at bottom, a political maturity about this change of administration. It is being carried out with good manners. And there appears to be a deadly serious undertone to the whole proceeding; a sort of unspoken realization that this administration may in fact decide whether we and our institution shall survive. The gayety and the revelry probably reflect not only the celebration of a political victory, but a final carefree fling before settling down to as grim a business as ever confronted a new administration. It has always seemed to me regretable that we in this country have never developed our own version of that ancient British phrase, God Save the King. If we had, we could drink a toast tonight and another one tomorrow night, and end them both with "God Save the President."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

THESE LINES WERE WRITTEN BY CERVANTES, AND ON THE EVE OF ANOTHER INAUGURAL THEY WOULD SEEM APPROPRIATE: "THERE'S A TIME FOR SOME THINGS AND A TIME FOR ALL THINGS: A TIME FOR GREAT THINGS, AND A TIME FOR SMALL THINGS." BUT IT'S IMPORTANT FOR US TO REMEMBER TOO THAT THE DAYS AND WEEKS AND MONTHS AHEAD WILL NOT ALWAYS BE EASY. FOR AS SHAW SAID IN ST. JOAN: "MIRACLES DON'T HAPPEN NOWADAYS."

GOOD NITE AND GOOD LUCK!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 19, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Washington is ready for tomorrow's inaugural. The weatherman here promises considerable cloudiness, but a little sunshine. Within the next half hour the "festival" the professional entertainment event gets underway. And tomorrow's star, Dwight Eisenhower is spending a quiet evening, with members of his family, at a hotel three blocks away from the White House. During the day he saw a campaign advisor, Bernard Shanley who reported to reporters: "Eisenhower is full of life and drive and ready to go."

At the White House, the President, too, is spending a quiet evening, with his wife and daughter, the last night of his presidency. Earlier, he visited his local bank, the first time he's been there since shortly after he became President. White House aides couldn't say if Mr. Truman put in or took out.

President-elect Eisenhower's desire to have his cabinet members sworn into office tomorrow, shortly after he takes his oath, will "almost" come to pass. Senate committees have now approved all the cabinet officers with the exception of Charles E. Wilson. The Armed Services committee considers his case on Wednesday.

Today the Senate Finance Committee gave unanimous approval to George Humphrey who is to be the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Humphrey told the Senators: he is afraid a general tax reduction cannot be made in the near future. He thinks the first job is the balance the budget.

The Commerce Committee approved Sinclair Weeks to be secretary of Commerce, after he promised "to do an honest job." And the Judiciary Committee okeyed Herbert Brownell to be Attorney General. Mr. Brownell said, he will vigorously enforce the anti-Communist laws, he will cooperate with Congressional investigating committees, he will press all the major anti-trust suits now in court, including the controversial oil monopoly case. Mr. Brownell was questioned about the case of Charles Wilson, whose appointment as defense secretary has been held up because some Senators believe he should give up his stock and bonus arrangement with General Motors. Mr. Brownell said: he favors a government of laws, not men. He favors treating all alike, under law. If we are going to enforce it against one person, we should enforce it against his neighbor.

Sherman Adams, who is to be General Eiswnhower's assistant, said today the new Administration will "ride out" the Wilson appointment. He says he doesn't blame the Senators for challenging the appointment; there's a principle involved.

The Army today called for 53-thousand men to be drafted in March, the same number called up for February.

Here in Washington, Otto Verber and Kurt Ponger pleaded not guilty to spying for a Russian ring. And Yuri Novikov, the second secretary of the Russian embassy, who is accused of heading the spy ring, left this country today by plane, at our request.

In New York, a federal jury spend a fifth day trying to decide the conspiracy case against 13 second-string Communist leaders.

And in two counties in the Carolinas, the F.B.I. arrested 14 former Ku Klux Klansmen on charges of kidnapping and conspiracy in the flogging of a white man in October of 1951.

In Korea today, our tanks took advantage of frozen rice fields and joined an artillery attack on enemy lines along most of the front.

There is still no official Navy explanation on the "incident" along the China coast over the week-end. The best available reports indicate that from 11 to 14 naval flyers are missing. It appears that after Communist anti-aircraft guns shot down a Navy patrol bomber off the China coast on Sunday, an unidentified plane, presumed Communist of course, fired at a Coast Guard rescue plane on Monday. The Navy does say there were 21 men in all in both planes. That means from 7 to 10 have been rescued.

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer vigorously protested the release of an American poll that concluded that Nazziism is a real threat to democratic government in west Germany. In a news conference and a radio speech, the Chancellor said there is no danger that a Nazi party will seize power in West Germany. He cannot understand why the U.S. High Commission did not tell him about the poll before publishing it.

Thirteen hundred more East German refugees poured into West Berlin today, among them 30 Jewish families.

And the Soviet press and radio now accuses a key member of its Metals Ministry of stealing a secret document.

There is something a little awe-inspiring about watching this change of administration in Washington. On the surface, it's a gay and reckless round of parties; hotel corridors sound like one, long, busy bar; and after tomorrow night's two big star-studded, "biggest ever parties," this city will have as fine a collection of hang-overs its had since V-J Day. (Twenty years is a long time for Democrats and Republicans alike.) The old team is going out, having honestly done what it could to arrange for the orderly transfer of power. They look to the past, confident that history will sustain most of their big dicisions. The Republicans do not appear to underestimate the task ahead, but seem to want to have one last fling at the carefree, irresponsible kind of party they will not enjoy again for at least four years. This reporter gets the impression that those who expect slam-bang sudden changes in policy will be disappointed. This administration is not likely to duplicate the first hundred days of the New Deal. The issues are more complex and delicate, and the top men in the new government are not a bunch of bold experimenters. There will be changes in degree but not in direction of basic policy. A government as big as this is a cumbersome thing, and it takes time for the new crew to find its way about. There won't be any sudden miracles in the domestic or foreign field.

Word comes from Paris today that European scientists have performed a sort of minor miracle. And the result of this development may be somewhat similar to the development of this administration. These scientists have succeeded in raising a race of stingless bees. Through artificial insemination and careful breeding, they have produced bees without a stinger. Commenting on this scientific achievement, the French editor of LaMonde in Paris has this to say: "A miracle of science; the disarmament of the bee. Now if only science could produce a race of men without guns then perhaps I would become an enthusiastic supporter of artificial insemination. What an extraordinary mutation would be necessary to produce a species without the atom bomb.

"However, to get back to the bee, the scientists have observed a most interesting phenomen: the stingless bee stays in its hive and does not form new bee communities. In other words, having lost their stinger, that is, having become pacifists, they've lost their social sense. This doesn't surprise me.

"There's nothing like war for the development of the social sense; nothing like fear for bringing men together; nothing like an army for keeping them united.

"Can you imagine what would happen if general disarmament were to be decreed in the world: It would be the ruin of business. And since national budgets would immediately be balanced, it would be the end of politics. What would we have left to read about in our papers. What would remain to feed the imagination, the indignation, and the hope of civilized men. What reason would be left for obedience. It would mean anarchy,a universal breakdown.

"But the bees, you may ask, these unsocial stingless bees, what's happening to them? "Very simply this: They're still making honey."

Like the bees, the new Administration will have to go right on grappling with the problems that the old one has been wrestling with. The Russians won't go away or be good. The price of leadership will remain high. The top officials in the new administration as in the old one will have to sign papers they don't have time to read; will have to trust people they scarcely know. There will be the usual bitter competition for places of influence close to the men who have to make the big decisions; men who have to make the big dicisions; men who have been sovereign in their own field of finance or business will become servants of the public. There will be pettiness, jealousy, and explosions of temper as there have been in every administration. There will be decisions to be taken, perhaps more fateful that the dropping of the atom bomb, or the decision to fight in Korea.

This gayety in Washington; this combination of a circus and a mid-winter beach picnic represents, I suspect, no more than an effort to achieve a momentary release from pretty grim reality. There is at bottom, a political maturity about this change of administration. It is being carried out with good manners. And there appears to be a deadly serious undertone to the whole proceeding; a sort of unspoken realization that this administration may in fact decide whether we and our institution shall survive. The gayety and the revelry probably reflect not only the celebration of a political victory, but a final carefree fling before settling down to as grim a business as ever confronted a new administration. It has always seemed to me regretable that we in this country have never developed our own version of that ancient British phrase, God Save the King. If we had, we could drink a toast tonight and another one tomorrow night, and end them both with "God Save the President." This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: These lines were written by Cervantes. And on the eve of another inaugural they would seem appropriate: "There's a time for some things and a time for all things: A Time for great things and a time for small things." But it's important for us to remember too, that the days and weeks and months ahead will not always be easy. For as Shaw said in St. Joan, "Miracles don't happen nowadays."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tues. Jan. 20, 53

This is the news:

Dwight D. Eisenhower today became the 34th president of the United States. Moments after he took his oath of office, the President spoke--to the vast crowd before him..to the millions listening to him by radio, viewing him on television. These were his first words:

(runs :1;26 ending for the good of our beloves country and for they glory Amen)

In a few minutes I will try to summarize for you something of what the new President had to say to our people, and the world.

[redacted]

Immediately after his talk, the President signed his first [redacted] official papers: nominating the members of his cabinet..with the exception of Charles E. Wilson, whom he had previously named [redacted] to be his secretary of defense. MR. Eisenhower's friends say he omitted Mr. Wilson's name, because of the dispute concerning his appointment. Some senators believe he should give up his stock in General Motors, before taking on the Defense job.

But when the other appointments came before the Senate there was an objection to suspending the rules and confirming the other cabinet members. Senator Morse of Oregon, the Republican who supported Governor Stevenson in the camapaign, said he [redacted] SAW no emergency requiring immediate confirmation. Republican senators made it clear they objected; but the rule is the rule. [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] In Korea, our tanks again joined our artillery in attacks on the enemy. [redacted]

But for this nation and much of the rest of the world, all eye's today were on Washington:

Ed

The day began with a high overcast, and a gentle breeze. The sun crowded through, before President-elect Eisenhower reached the Capitol. The audience gathered to see the Inaugural was courteous and attentive. They were not demonstrative. Long after the sun had disappeared, the parade continued between lines of cheering spectators. This day and night will be long remembered, by survivors. This reporter will make no effort to find adjectives to describe the parade. It ~~ranged from drum majorettes to atomic cannons~~ [redacted], from ~~talks to indians~~. ~~The marching of the armed forces was the best~~ I have ever seen. ~~The floats from the various states displayed the usual imagination, or lack of it.~~ It seemed [redacted] that the whole country was here -- a giant victory parade, that had been long in the planning. Generally, victory parades are held after a victory; this one celebrated a political victory, but [redacted] President Eisenhower didn't even mention that ONE ~~political victory~~, and he made it clear that the big victory has still to be won, and that the winning of it, may require great sacrifice in this "century of trial." He said we shall "never try to placate an aggressor by the false and wicked bargain, of trading honor for security. "In the final choice a soldiers pack is not so heavy a burden as a prisoner's chains." It seemed to me that this was a speech neither of compromise nor belligerence. He assured our friends abroad that we know and observe the difference between world leadership and imperialism, between firmness and truculence, between a thoughtfully calculated goal and spasmodic reaction to the stimulous of emergencies. And he suggested to our friends abroad that they might do a little more than they are in the common defense of freedom,-in a world where freedom is pitted against slavery, light against dark.

This was substantially a re-affirmation of the policy this nation has been following. President Eisenhower was addressing us as citizens of the world rather than merely as citizens of this country. He appeared to be trying without rhetoric or oratorical tricks to define this problem we face. There was no talk of the "mess in Washington". This was not a campaign speech, nor was it a detailed definition of Republican policy; nothing about taxes, tidelands, Taft-Hartley, or social security. These matters will be the subject of subsequent recommendations from the White House. Today's speech was addressed as much to the rest of the world as it was to us. It was the new president's initial effort to use words to define his concept of the world leadership that has been thrust upon this country and upon him. He contends that we must first of all be strong; must recognize the futility of appeasement -- every free citizen everywhere must place the cause of his country before the comfort and convenience of himself. We shall never use our strength to try to impress upon another people our own cherished political and economic institutions -- we shall strive to help our allies achieve their own security and well-being, but we will expect them to pull their own weight in the boat. We shall try to [redacted] encourage productivity and profitable trade. We hope [redacted] within the framework of the United Nations to promote the regional grouping of free peoples. We hope for renewed vigor in Europe to achieve a unity without which, even with our help, Europe cannot safeguard its spiritual and cultural heritage. We reject the thesis that one race or another, one people or another, is in any sense inferior or expendable. And finally, we shall strive to make the United Nations not merely an eloquent symbol, but an effective force. And, said the President, by these rules of conduct we hope to be known to all peoples.

Mr. Truman listened attentively to the new president's speech, and displayed no sign of disagreement. It is clear that while there [redacted] may be changes in emphasis in our foreign policy, there is to be no sudden or substantial change in the direction in which it has been moving. President Eisenhower said we must be ready to "dare all for our country, for history [redacted] does not long entrust the care of freedom to the weak or the timid. We must acquire proficiency in defense, and display stamina in purpose. We must be willing, individually and as a nation, to accept whatever sacrifices may be required of us. A people that values its privileges above its principles soon looses both. And he added these basic precepts are not lofty abstractions far removed from matters of daily living.

Republicans and Democrats in Congress appear to agree in large measure about the basic precepts (although they have argued about their application in the past). Senator Taft called it "a great and inspiring beginning; a great and inspiring speech." Most Republicans appear to agree. A number of Democrats want more details, but find some encouragement in the President's indication that he will proceed along the general lines of foreign policy pursued by the Truman administration.

In the final analysis, a speech does not make a policy; that must be hammered out between the Executive and Legislative branches of the government, in committee, and in specific legislation. Before long people will begin to say "Eisenhower has been in office a week or a month and what has he done." (A reporter must work day by day.) And on his first day in office it seems to me that he made a speech, which can give our allies no reason for alarm or dispair, and our enemies no reason to rejoice. And thats a Pretty Fair days work.

18

THIS WAS UNMISTAKABLY GENERAL EISENHOWER'S DAY HERE IN WASHINGTON. BUT OTHER PRESIDENTS HAVE DISCOVERED, ONCE THE INAUGURATION IS OVER, THE TRUTH OF SOMETHING GEORGE ELIOT ONCE WROTE: "NOTHING IS SO GOOD AS IT SEEMS BEFORE-HAND." OF COURSE THERE'S NO WAY OF LOOKING ACURATELY INTO THE FUTURE, BUT DISRAELI HAD SOME GOOD ADVICE WHEN HE SAID: "WHAT WE ANTICIPATE SELDOM OCCURS AND WHAT WE LEAST EXPECTED GENERALLY HAPPENS."

GOOD NITE AND GOOD LUCK!

folo Ed and intro Downs

Immediately after ~~President~~ Eisenhower's ~~inauguration, Harry Truman...~~

("just plain Mr. Truman, ~~plain citizen" he calls himself now,~~) ~~drove to the~~ home ~~of former Secretary of State Acheson for lunch. A few hours later~~ DE about an hour ago Mr Truman-

~~he~~ made his last appearance of the day at Union Station..on the rear platform of the presidential train, loaned to him by President Eisenhower.

My colleague Bill Downs covered this story and recorded some of Mr. Truman's remarks. Bill, what was it like:

(Downs recording..ends with Truman...)

RETURN CUE: "IF I LIVE TO BE A HUNDRED AND THAT'S WHAT I EXPECT TO DO." (RUNS 2 MINS)

Bill Downs. Trumans Departure

Bob Dixon

Bill - What was it like —

DOWNS MURROW SHOW Jan 20

Next to the dramatic moment when President Eisenhower took the ~~xxx~~ oath of office ~~today, Ed,~~ probably the second most poignant scene of this historic day, E.D. occurred about ~~2 and a~~ an half hours ago at Washington's Union Station.....~~a~~ the leave-taking of Citizen Harry Truman, one of the only two living ex-presidents.

The crowd that gathered to see him off was not bitter.....sort of determined in a loyal Democratic party way. There were a couple of signs.....one proclaiming "Thank you Harry Truman.....~~you~~ stopped Russia, you saved our ~~xxx~~ country, you saved our oil, you saved our families.....~~churchkx~~ Churchill says you're great."

The other sign was less elaborate. It said: "We're still wild about Harry."

Averell Harriman, Dean Acheson, ~~John Snyder~~.....men whose ~~xx~~ names have been synonomyous with news over the past seven years.....all of them were there.... And now ~~we~~ in the reporting business are going to have to learn a whole new vocabulary.....

There was a sign that said, "We're still wild about Harry"!

And just before the train pulled out, the crowd began singing "Auld Lang Syne."

But here is a tape recording we made at the station which will give you some idea.....and also give you Harry Truman's final words on Departing from Washington.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, January 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Moments after he took his oath of office, the President spoke to the vast crowd before him, to the millions listening to him by radio, viewing him on television. These were his first words:

PRES. EISENHOWER: Before I begin the expression of those thoughts, that I deem appropriate to this moment, would you permit me the privilege of uttering a little private prayer of my own, and I ask that you bow your heads:

Almight God, as we stand here at this moment, my associates (sic) my future associates in the Executive Branch of government join me in beseeching that Thou will make full and complete our dedication to the service of the people in this throng, and their fellow citizens everywhere.

Give us, we pray, the power to discern clearly right from wrong and allow all our words and actions to be governed thereby and by the laws of this land. Especially we pray that ourconcern shall be for all the people regardless of station, race or calling. May cooperation be permitted and be the mutual aim of those who underthe concepts of our Constitution hold to differing political faiths. So that all may work for the good of our beloved country and Thy glory. Amen!

MURROW: In a few minutes I will try to summarize for you something of what the new President had to say to our people andthe world.

... About an hour ago, Mr. Truman made his last appearance of the day at Union Station, on the rear platform of the presidential train, loaned to him by President Eisenhower. My colleague Bill Downs covered this story and recorded some of Mr. Truman's remarks. Bill, what was it like?

DOWNS: Well, next to the dramatic moment when President Eisenhower took the oath of office, probably the second most poignant scene of this historic day, Ed, occurred about an hour ago at Washington's Union Station. The leave-taking of citizen Harry Truman, one of the only two living ex-Presidents.

The crowd that gathered to see him off was not bitter; sort of determined in a loyal Democratic Party way. There was a sign that said: 'We're still wild about Harry!' And just before the train pulled out the crowd began singing "Auld Lang Syne."

But here's a tape-recording we made at the station which will give you some idea and also give you Harry Truman's final words on departing from Washington.

'Bill Downs speaking from the Union Station in Washington. From the rear car of the National Limited - Baltimore & Ohio, the train that will carry ex-President Harry Truman back to Independence, Missouri.

I was talking to his doctor, Gen. Wallace Brown?, just a few minutes ago, and Dr. Grimm said that he had examined the President this morning, said he is very good shape, "perfect shape", he said. He said, "Why not, we've been training for the past seven years" and that "Harry Truman is just winding up for a big pitch." Dr. Grimm did not indicate WHAT that 'pitch' would be.

The President comes back on the platform (shouts) smiling and waving.

TRUMAN: Thank you very much! Thank you very much! In all my political career, and it has been a long and varied one, I've never had anything like this. I've been received in the station here after a successful election ... (shouts) ... received all overthe United States under varying cirsumstances (shouts) first time I've ever had the experience of being sent home in a blaze of glory. (shouts - applause)

I can't adequately express to you my appreciation for what you're doing. I'll never forget it, if I live to be a hundred, and that's what I expect to do.

MURROW: That was Bill Downs reporting upon Mr. Truman's departure from Washington this afternoon. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now here's Bob Dixon.

ANNOUNCER: ... (C O M M E R C I A L) ...

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Dwight D. Eisenhower today became the 34th president of the United States. Moments after he took his oath of office, the President spoke to the vast crowd before him, to the millions listening to him by radio, viewing him on television. These were his first words:

EISENHOWER: Before I begin the expression of those thoughts, that I deem appropriate to this moment, would you permit me the privilege of uttering a little private prayer of my own, and I ask that you bow your heads:

Almight God, as we stand here at this moment, my associates, my future associates in the Executive Branch of government join me in beeseeching that Thou will make full and complete our dedication to the service of the people in this throng, and their fellow citizens wverywhere.

Give us, we pray, the power to discern clearly right from wrong and allow all our words and actions to be governed thereby and by the laws of this land. Especially we pray that our concern shall be for all the people regardless of station, race or calling. May cooperation be permitted and be the mutual aim of those who under the con epts of our Constitution hold to differing political faiths. So that all may work for the good of our beloved country and Thy glory. Amen!

MURROW: In a few minutes I will try to summarize for you something of what the new President had to say to our people and the world.

Immediately after his talk, the President signed his first official papers: nominating the members of his cabinet, with the exception of Charles E. Wilson, whom he had previously named to be his Secretary of Defense. Mr. Eisenhower's friends say he omitted Mr. Wilson's name because of the dispute concerning his appointment. Some senators believe he should give up his stock in General Motors before taking on the Defense job. But when the other appointments came before the Senate there was an objection to suspending the rules and confirming the other cabinet members. Senator Morse of Oregon, the Republican who supported Governor Stevenson in the campaign, said he saw no emergency requiring immediate confirmation. Republican senators made it clear they objected; but the rule is the rule. But for this nation, and much of the rest of the world, all eyes today were on Washington.

The day began with a high overcast and a gentle breeze. The sun crowded through before President-elect Eisenhower reached the Capitol. The audience gathered to see the Inaugural was courteous and attentive. They were not demonstrative. Long after the sun had disappeared, the parade continued between lines of cheering spectators. This day and night will be long remembered by survivors. This reporter will make no effort to find adjectives to describe the parade. It seemed that the whole country was here, a giant victory parade that had been long in the planning. Generally, victory parades are held after a victory; this one celebrated a political victory, but President Eisenhower didn't even mention that one, and he made it clear that the big victory has still to be won, and that the winning of it may require great sacrifice in this "century of trial." He said "we shall never try to placata an aggressor by the false and wicked bargain, of trading honor for security." In the final choice a soldiers pack is not so heavy a burden as a prisoner's chains. It seemed to me that this was a speech neither of compromise nor belligerence. He assured our friends abroad that we know and observe the difference between world leadership and imperialism, between firmness and truculence, between a thoughtfully calculated goal and spasmodic reaction to the stimulous of emergencies. And he suggested to our friends abroad that they might do a little more than they are in a common defense of freedom, in a world where freedom is pitted against slavery, light against dark.

This was substantially a reaffirmation of the policy this nation has been following. President Eisenhower was addressing us as citizens of the world rather than merely as citizens of this country. He appeared to be trying without rhetoric or oratorical tricks to define this problem we face. There was no talk of the "mess in Washington." This was not a campaign speech, nor was it a detailed definition of Republican policy; nothing about taxes, tidelands, Taft-Hartley, or social security. These matters will be the subject of subsequent recommendations from the White House. Today's speech was addressed as much to the rest of the world as it was to us. It was the new president's initial effort to use words to define his concept of the world leadership that has been thrust upon this country and upon him. He contends that we must first of all be strong; must recognize the futility of appeasement - every free citizen everywhere must place the cause of his country before the comfort and convenience of himself. We shall never use our strength to try to impress upon another people our own cherished political and economic institutions - we shall strive to help our allies achieve their own security and well-being, but we will expect them to pull their own weight in the boat. We shall try to encourage productivity and profitable trade. We hope, within the framework of the United Nations, to promote the regional grouping of free peoples. We hope for renewed vigor in Europe to achieve a unity without which, even with our help, Europe cannot safeguard its spiritual and cultural heritage. We reject the thesis that one race or another, one people or another, is in any sense inferior or expendable. And finally, we shall strive to make the United Nations not merely an eloquent symbol, but an effective force. And, said the President, by these rules of conduct we hope to be known to all peoples. Mr. Truman listened attentively to the new president's speech, and displayed no sign of disagreement. It is clear that while there may be changes in emphasis in our foreign policy, there is to be no sudden or substantial change in the direction in which it has been moving. President Eisenhower said we must be ready to dare all for our country, for history does not long entrust the care of freedom to the weak or the timid. We must acquire proficiency in defense, and display stamina in purpose. We must be willing, individually and as a nation, to accept whatever sacrifices may be required of us. A people that values its privileges above its principles soon loses both. And he added these basic precepts are not lofty abstractions far removed from matters of daily living.

Republicans and Democrats in Congress appear to agree in large measure about the basic precepts, although they have argued about their application in the past. Senator Taft called it "a great and inspiring beginning; a great and inspiring speech." Most Republicans appear to agfee. A number of Democrats want more details, but find some encouragement in the President's indication that he will proceed along the general lines of foreign policy pursued by the Truman administration.

In the final analysis, a speech does not make a policy; that must be hammered out between the Executive and Legislative branches of the government in committee and in specific legislation. Before long people will begin to say "Eisenhower has been in office a week or a month and what has he done." (A reporter must work day by day.) And on his first day in office it seems to me that he made a speech which can give our allies no reason for alarm or dispair, and our enemies no reason to rejoice. And that's a pretty fair day's work.

About an hour ago, Mr. Truman made his last appearance of the day at Union Station, on the rear platform of the presidential train, loaned to him by President Eisenhower. My colleague Bill Downs covered this story and recorded some of Mr. Truman's remarks. Bill, what was it like?

DOWNS: Well, next to the dramatic moment when President Eisenhower took the oath of office, probably the second most poignant scene of this historic day, Ed, occurred about an hour ago at Washington's Union Station. The leave-taking of citizen Harry Truman, one of the only two living ex-Presidents. The crowd that gathered to see him off was not bitter; sort of determined in a loyal Democratic Party way. There was a sign that said: "We're still wild about Harry!" And just before the train pulled out the crowd began singing "Auld Lang Syne." But here's a tape-recording we made at the station which will give you some idea and also give you Harry Truman's final words on Departing from Washington.

"Bill Downs speaking from the Union Station in Washington. From the rear car of the National Limited - Baltimore & Ohio, the train that will carry ex-President Harry Truman back to Independence, Missouri. I was talking to his doctor, General Wallace Brown, just a few minutes ago, and Dr. Grimm said that he had examined the President this morning, said he is in very good shape, "perfect shape", he said. He said, "Why not, we've been training for the past seven years" and that "Harry Truman is just winding up for a big pitch." Dr. Grimm did not indicate what that 'pitch' would be. The President comes back on the platform smiling and waving.

TRUMAN: Thank you very much! Thank you very much! In all my political career, and it has been a long and varied one, I've never had anything like this. I've been received in the station here after a successful election, received all over the United States under varying circumstances; first time I've ever had the experience of being sent home in a blaze of glory. I can't adequately express to you my appreciation for what you're doing. I'll never forget it, if I live to be a hundred, and that's what I expect to do.

MURROW: That was Bill Downs reporting upon Mr. Truman's departure from Washington this afternoon. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here's Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This was unmistakably General Eisenhower's day here in Washington. But other presidents have discovered, once the inauguration is over, the truth of something George Eliot once wrote: "Nothing is so good as it seems beforehand." Of course there's no way of looking accurately into the future, but Disraeli had some good advice when he said: "What we anticipate seldom occurs and what we least expected generally happens."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wed.
Jan. 21, 1953

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed President Eisenhower's appointment of eight cabinet members./And by voice vote, the Senate also approved Oveta Culp Hobby to be federal security administrator./A few hours later, with President and Mrs. Eisenhower [redacted] looking on, all were sworn into office by Chief Justice Vinson./Charles E. Wilson, who has been named to be secretary of defense did not attend this White House ceremony./But the President's press secretary, James Hagerty, says there has been no change..the President still intends to send the Wilson nomination to the Senate./But until that happens, formally, the Armed Services Committee has decided not to hold any hearings on the Wilson appointment.

[redacted].

Democratic Senator Byrd today inserted in the Congressional Record two fresh legal opinions, on the Wilson case./He says they cast serious doubt whether Mr. Wilson, who holds an estimated two and a half million dollars worth of General Motors stock, could legally hold [redacted] that stock, and serve as Defense Secretary./And Independent Senator Morse of Oregon, told the Senate that General Motors has five billion dollars worth of government contracts as of last December first. Morse says: the President shouldn not go through with the Wilson appointment.. "Mr. Wilson is behind the eight ball before he starts..he is bound to be suspect on any matters dealing with General Motors." Senator Morse made it clear he is not casting asperions against Wilson.. [redacted] Morse also suggested that if the new attorney general, Herbert Brownell, decides to go ahead with the anti-trust suit against Du Pont, he may be faced with the necessity of having his fellow cabinet member, Wilson, called as a witness.

Here in Washington, there are [redacted] REPORTS [redacted] attributed to REPUBLICAN senators, who don't want their name mentioned, THAT [redacted] The President has asked Mr. Wilson to sell his stock. Mr. Wilson feels this would reflect on his integrity. He refuses. He is said to be taking the position that "they" should have known what "they" were doing when they offered him the defense job. And from Senator Taft, this comment: "The nomination is up in the air."

The President's first day in office was a busy one. He met at 8 o'clock this morning with Attorney General Brownell. Presumably they discussed the Wilson case..for 70 minutes. And up to NOW we can report these additional Eisenhower activities: met two social friends.. lunched with two visiting governors..showed them around the White House..shook hands with more than 100 Colorado folks who marched in the inaugural parade.. posed for pictures at his desk...attended the swearing in of his aides and his cabinet...held staff conferences...and then told a reporter he was not tired and felt good.

The President's press Secretary Hagerty told reporters the President will hold news conferences similar to those that have been held in the past..with questions and answers from the reporters. I should like to discuss this in a few minutes.

At last count the White House has received some 15-hundred telegrams on the President's inaugural address. And ~~through~~ IN almost all of the free world there were editorials commending its moral purpose..reality..courage and realism. Some West European editors saw a continuation, in the main, of the foreign policies of the Truman Administration.

Mr. Truman spent much of the day on the train taking him home. And he apparently had a good time...talking to crowds waiting to greet him at some stations..making a hand-shaking tour of a railroad coach..~~semat~~ [redacted] SAYING he was going to get a good rest..didn't know what his would do after that..is going to try to get adjusted to civilian life.

In New York today, a federal jury convicted 13 second-string leaders of the Communist party of conspiring to advocate the overthrow of the government by force. The jury had deliberated for almost six days.

In Moscow, New Times..the official foreign affairs weekly.. came up with the most direct attack yet on ~~the~~ Jewish people. The Russians accuse the leaders of Isreal, the Jewish state, of being anti-semetic. Premier Ben Gurion, Foreign Minister Sharett, the late president Weizman are all accused of being British and American agents. New Times accuses them of being hostile towards the Soviet Union and the entire camp of peace. These ISRAELI leaders are also accused of supporting a policy that would bring back the orders of Hitler...bloody, fascist regimes permeated by anti-semitism.

In Germany today, another one thousand refugees from the COMMUNIST East fled to West Berlin. And Chancellor Adenauer told his parliament: that the Germans will never again return to Nazisim..they they want to become trustworthy and responsible allies of the free world.

In Korea, our sabrejet pilots today shot down seven enemy Migs and damaged three more. And the Chinese radio at Peiping says an American superfort has been shot down over Manchuria..with 11 of its crewmen captured. The Far Eastern Air Force has no comment.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 250 casualties in Korea last week.

68

President Eisenhower has decided to hold regular news conferences, probably once a week. He will not require that questions be submitted in writing in advance. [He never contemplated such a procedure.] Jim Haggerty, his press secretary, says the President may ask cabinet members to sit in so that they, too, might be questioned. For example, the President might ask the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State to sit in with him if what he had to say dealt primarily with their area of activity. Mr. Haggerty recognized that we are "in the day of a new medium, television," and he hopes to work out a system where the President can just talk to the people and possibly televise and broadcast a news conference. He's thinking [redacted] of doing this about once a month, but the details haven't been worked out. Mr. Haggerty is going to discuss the matter with representatives of television and radio as well as the press. Frank Stanton, the president of CBS, has offered his co-operation in working out arrangements for broadcasting Presidential news conferences.

It seems to this reporter that the question of Charles E. Wilson's nomination and confirmation as Secretary of Defense illustrates one of the basic difficulties confronting any President. On the surface ~~that~~ the alternatives are clear. Mr. Wilson can dispose of his interests in General Motors at very considerable personal financial sacrifice, and in all probability be confirmed. Or, an effort can be made to change the law, and if that effort should fail the political damage would be considerable. If neither of these two alternatives is selected, there is a third which would be the nomination of someone else. In the end of the day, no matter what Brownell, or Taft, or Byrd recommend, the final decision as to what course to pursue must be taken by President Eisenhower. No easy problems end up on that big desk in the White House. In the army the buck can be passed down, from general to colonel to captain, and so forth, until someone does the necessary. In government, the buck is passed up. And when the lower eschelons can't agree the President becomes what might be called the "ultimate buck;" he must decide. It is clear in the Wilson matter that the President finds himself in this dilema because of faulty staff work. As a military administrator this was his strong point. He chose a good staff; worked them hard; depended upon them, and generally followed their recommendation. But the members of his staff had come up through the military establishment; he could refer to their record of previous experience in a neat folder, but now he has a new staff with varied background and experience drawn largely from business administration and the law. Whatever their qualifications, and they are considerable, they are of necessity inexperienced in government. The Republicans haven't had much opportunity to gain experience in the last twenty years. So, in this case, the President and Mr. Wilson find themselves in a first-rate dilema as a result of faulty staff work. The military remedy for this would be reprimand, transfer, demotion, or something of the sort. There would be no difficulty in determining the officer responsible for failure to perform his assigned duty. But in politics it's different. And in this case it might well be difficult if not impossible to determine exactly whose duty it was to clear this question with Mr. Wilson before the appointment was made. But whoever was responsible this decision like many bigger and tougher ones to come rests with the President because there is no other place it can be made.

During his military career, General Eisenhower's mission was always defined for him by higher authority; whether it was training forces in England, clearing North Africa, or destroying enemy forces in the field on the continent, he exercised command within the limits of that mission. Yesterday he defined the mission for his administration. It might be summed up as peace and prosperity through strength, sacrifice, and adherence to our pledged word. He is now in the planning stage in the effort to successfully complete that mission. That is why he is sending John Foster

Dulles and Harold Stassen on a reconnaisance to Europe. As members of his staff they will make their reports and recommendations. But there again, no one but the President can make the final decision regarding action. It is not fruitful to speculate at any length about how President Eisenhower will handle this civilian staff with which he has surrounded himself. But if his military record provides any guide for his civilian policy, it is likely that those staff members who disregard their assigned mission, or who leave too many loose ends lying about, will probably not themselves be about for very long. The new President is often described as a genial man, and he is, but he can also be mighty tough with subordinates. And if a single member of his staff was responsible for the Affair Wilson then another slip like that and he might well find himself rotated back to private life.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Now, here's Bob Dixon.

AS PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, GENERAL EISENHOWER WOULD DOUBTLESS AGREE WITH SAMUEL GRAFTON THAT, "DIFFICULTY IS THE EXCUSE HISTORY NEVER ACCEPTS." POSSIBLY, WITH THIS IN MIND, SAMUEL JOHNSON ONCE REMARKED: "NO DEGREE OF KNOWLEDGE ATTAINABLE BY MAN, IS ABLE TO SET HIM ABOVE THE WANT OF HOURLY ASSISTANCE." BUT IN THE END, GENERAL EISENHOWER... AS OTHERS HAVE LEARNED... ~~WILL HAVE~~ MAY CONCLUDE AS DID IBSEN: "THE STRONGEST MAN IN THE WORLD, IS HE WHO STANDS MOST ALONE."

GOOD NITE AND GOOD LUCK!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed President Eisenhower's appointment of eight cabinet members. And by voice vote, the Senate also approved Oveta Culp Hobby to be federal security administrator. A few hours later, with President and Mrs. Eisehhower looking on, all were sworn into office by Chief Justice Vinson. Charles E. Wilson, who has been named to be secretary of defense did not attend this White House ceremony. But the President's press secretary, James Hagerty, says there has been no change, the President still intends to send the Wilson nomination to the Senate. But until that happens, formally, the Armed Services Committee has decided not to hold any hearings on the Wilson appointment.

Democratic Senator Byrd today inserted in the Congressional Record two fresh legal opinions, on the Wilson case. He says they cast serious doubt whether Mr. Wilson, who holds an estimated two and a half million dollars worth of General Motors stock, could legally hold that stock and serve as Defense Secretary. And Independent Senator Morse of Oregon, told the Senate that General Motors has five billion dollars worth of government contracts as of last December first. Morse says: the President shouldn't go through with the Wilson appointment. "Mr. Wilson is behind the eight ball before he starts; he is bound to be suspected on any matters dealing with General Motors." Senator Morse made it clear he is not casting asperions against Wilson. Morse also suggested that if the new attorney general, Herbert Brownell, decides to go ahead with the anti-trust suit against Du Pont, he may be faced with the necessity of having his fellow cabinet member, Wilson, called as a witness.

Here in Washington, there are reports attributed to Republican Senators who don't want their name mentioned, that the President has asked Mr. Wilson to sell his stock. Mr. Wilson said this would reflect on his integrity. He refuses.

He is said to be taking the position that "they" should have known what "they" were doing when they offered him the defense job. And from Senator Taft, this comment: "The nomination is up in the air."

The President's first day in office was a busy one. He met at 8 o'clock this morning with Attorney General Brownell. Presumably they discussed the Wilson case, for 70 minutes. And up to now we can report these additional Eisenhower activities: met two social friends, lunched with two visiting governors, showed them around the White House, shook hands with more than 100 Colorado folks, who marched in the inaugural parade, posed for pictures at his desk, attended the swearing in of his aides and his cabinet, held staff conferences, and then told a reporter he was not tired and felt good.

The President's press Secretary, Hagerty, told reporters the President will hold news conferences similar to those that have been held in the past, with questions and answers from the reporters. I should like to discuss this in a few minutes.

At last the White House has received some 15-hundred telegrams on the President's inaugural address. And in almost all of the free world there were editorials commending its moral purpose; reality, courage and realism. Some West European editors saw a continuation, in the main, of the foreign policies of the Truman Administration.

Mr. Truman spent much of the day on the train taking him home. And he apparently had a good time, talking to crowds waiting to greet him at some stations, making a hand-shaking tour of a railroad coach, saying he was going to get a good rest, didn't know what he would do after that, is going to try to get adjusted to civilian life.

In New York today, a federal jury convicted 13 second-string leaders of the Communist party of conspiring to advocate the overthrow of the government by force. The jury had deliberated for almost six days.

In Moscow, New Times, the official foreign affairs weekly, came up with the most direct attack yet on Jewish people. The Russians accuse the leaders of Israel, the Jewish state, of being anti-semetic. Premier Ben Gurion, Foreign Minister Sharett, the late president Weizman are all accused of being British and American agents. New Times accuses them of being hostile towards the Soviet Union and the entire camp of peace. These Israeli leaders are also accused of supporting a policy that would bring back the orders of Hitler, bloody, fascist regimes, permeated by anti-semitism.

In Germany today, another one thousand refugees from the Communist East, fled to West Berlin. And Chancellor Adenauer told his parliament that the Germans will never again return to Nazisim; they want to become trustworthy and responsible allies of the free world.

In Korea, our sabrejet pilots today shot down seven enemy Migs and damaged three more. And the Chinese radio at Peiping says an American superfort has been shot down over Manchuria, with 11 of its crewmen captured. The Far Eastern Air Force has no comment. The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 250 casualties in Korea last week.

President Eisenhower has decided to hold regular news conferences, probably once a week. He will not require that questions be submitted in writing in advance. He never contemplated such a procedure. Jim Haggerty, his press secretary, says the President may ask cabinet members to sit in so that they, too, might be questioned. For example, the President might ask the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State to sit in with him if what he had to say dealt primarily with their area of activity. Mr. Haggerty recognized that we are "in the day of a new medium, television," and he hopes to work out a system where the President can just talk to the people and possibly televise and broadcast a news conference. He's thinking of doing this about once a month, but the details haven't been worked out. Mr. Haggerty is going to discuss the matter with representatives of television and radio as well as the press. Frank Stanton, the President of CBS, has offered his cooperation in working out arrangements for broadcasting Presidential news conferences. It seems to this reporter that the question of Charles E. Wilson's nomination and confirmation as Secretary of Defense illustrates one of the basic difficulties confronting any President. On the surface the alternatives are clear. Mr. Wilson can dispose of his interests in General Motors at very considerable personal financial sacrifice, and in all probability be confirmed. Or, an effort can be made to change the law, and if that effort should fail, the political damage would be considerable. If neither of these two alternatives is selected, there is a third which would be the nomination of someone else. In the end of the day, no matter what Brownell, or Taft, or Byrd recommend, the final decision as to what course to pursue must be taken by President Eisenhower. No easy problems end up on that big disk in the White House. In the army the buck can be passed down, from general to colonel to captain, and so forth, until someone does the necessary. In government, the buck is passed up. And when the lower eschelons can't agree the President becomes what might be called the "ultimate buck;" he must decide. It is clear in the Wilson matter that the President finds himself in this delema because of faulty staff work. As a military administrator this was his strong point. He chose a good staff; worked them hard; depended upon them, and generally followed their recommendation. But the members of his staff had come up through the military establishment; he could refer to their record of previous experience, in a neat folder, but now he has a new staff, with varied background and experience drawn largely from business administration and the law. Whatever their qualifications, and they are considerable, they are of necessity inexperienced in government. The Republicans haven't had much opportunity to gain experience in the last twenty years. So, in this case, the President and Mr. Wilson find themselves in a first-rate dilema as a result of faulty staff work. The military remedy for this would be reprimand, transfer, demotion, or something of the sort. There would be no difficulty in determining the officer responsible for failure to perform his assigned duty. But in politics it's different. And in this case it might well be difficult if not impossible to determine exactly whose duty it was to clear this question with Mr. Wilson before the appointment was made. But whoever was responsible this dicision like many bigger and tougher ones to come rests with the President because there is no other place it can be made.

During his military career, General Eisenhower's mission was always defined for him by higher authority; whether it was training forces in England, clearing North Africa, or destroying enemy forces in the field on the continent, he exercised command within the limits of that mission. Yesterday he defined the mission for his administration. It might be summed up as peace and prosperity through strength, sacrifice, and adherence to our pledged word. He is now in the planning stage in the effort to successfully complete that mission. That is why he is sending John Foster Dulles and Harold Stassen on a reconnaisance to Europe. As members of his staff they will make their reports and recommendations. But there again, no one but the President can make the final decision regarding action. It is not fruitful to speculate at any length about how President Eisenhower will handle this civilian staff with which he has surrounded himself. But if his military record provides any guide for his civilian policy, it is likely that those staff members who disregard their assigned mission, or who leave too many loose ends lying about, will probably not themselves be about for very long. The new President is often described as a genial man, and he is, but he can also be might tough with subordinates. And if a single member of his staff was responsible for the Affair Wilson then another slip like that and he might well find himself rotated back to private life. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, Now, here's Bob Dixnn.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As President of the United States, General Eisenhower would doubtless agree with Samuel Grafton that "Difficulty is the excuse history never accepts." Possibly, with this in mind, Samuel Johnson once remarked: "No degree of knowledge attainable by man is able to set him above the want of hourly assistance." But in the end, General Eisenhower, as others have learned, mau conclude as did Ibsen: "The strongest man in the world is he who stands most alone."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Thurs. Jan 22, 1953

This is the news:

President Eisenhower has formally nominated Charles E. Wilson to be secretary of Defense. The White House announced a few minutes ago that Mr. Wilson, the former president of General Motors, had visited the President this evening and "volunteered his intention to dipose of all his stock in General Motors." Mr. Wilson is estimated to hold two and a half million dollars worth of that stock. And his reluctance to dispose of it, because of a big tax loss, had convinced many Senators that he would be violating a law, as Secretary of Defense. [the law that forbids federal officials to receive profits from firms with which they do business.] General Motors holds more defense contracts than any other corporation in the nation.

The White House announcement came after another day of conferences among various members of the Senate Armed Services Committee. And Democratic Senator Byrd, of Virginia, who originally called the attention of the Comittee to the law, said earlier today, that if Mr. Wilson sold his stock he would be "completely eligible" for the defense job.

As a result of tonight's White House action, Mr. Wilson may be asked to sit in on the First meeting of President Eisenhower's new cabinet tomorrow morning.

2).

Today, the other cabinet members were on the job for the first time:

[redacted]

Secretary of State Dulles today informed the State Department's [redacted] employes that he will demand the highest competence, discipline and positive loyalty. (I should like to discuss the Secretary's statement in a few minutes.)

Secretary of Agriculture Benson, in his first day on the job, regrouped the department's agencies for more efficiency and economy. He said that in the past 20 years the Agriculture Department had been "swollen into a huge bureacracy." No employes were fired..no agencies eliminated, in TODAY'S regrouping.

Secretary of Treasury Humphrey, announced that he and the President fully approve of the savings bond program.

Secretary of the Interior Mc Kay was confined to his bed with influenza.

As the new Administration started getting adjusted to its job: the Senate foreign relations committee approved Henry Cabot Lodge to be ambassador to the United Nations, and Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator...Senator Taft said he is taking no part in the campaign of his son, William Howard Taft the third to get an appointment as ambassador to Ireland. The younger Taft served there for three years as deputy administrator for the Economic Cooperation Administration. The President accepted the resignation of Economic Stabilizer Di Salle, as of the end of this month. But he gave no hint as to the future of ~~the~~ wage-price controls. The Senate's rules committee approved 200-thousand dollars for the Senate investigating committee that will be headed by Senator Mc Carthy..and the House un-American activities committee announced a new program to investigate communist infiltration in government, unions, entertainment and education.

~~Tomorrow, President Eisenhower holds his first meeting with his new cabinet. There will be no representative from the Defense Department.~~ And today, a Republican senator, Butler of Nebraska, said the President should appoint someone other than Charles E. Wilson to the job. Senator Butler says the difficulties caused by Mr. Wilson's insistence that he hold on to two and a half million dollars worth of General Motors stock, "puts us into a box politically." He says there are plenty of other good men available.

Again today there were a number of conferences, here in Washington, seeking a way to solve the Wilson case. Chairman Saltonstall of the Senate armed services committee met with Senator Taft and Democratic Senator Byrd. Later, he met with leading sotuhern democrats on the committee. Senator Byrd feels that if Mr. Wilson sells his General Motors stock he would be "completely eligible" for the defense job.

The State Department said today that the Chinese Communist verison of what happened to one of our B-29's is "false propaganda." The enemy says the plane was shot down over Manchuria by Chinese fighter planes.. that three men were killed, 11 captured. The State Department says the bomber, missing since January 12, was actually attacked over North Korea, although it may have been forced to land in Manchuria. The Chinese say we "violated" the Manchurian border as part of a plan to expand the Korean war. We say we know the B-29 was 12 to 15 miles inside Korea when it was attacked.

In Korea today, our fighter-bombers and 10 Superforts hit enemy railroad centers in North Korea. The air force describes the enemy's anti-aircraft fire as "unbelievable." Our Sabrejets on protective patrol destroyed four enemy Migs. There was comparatively little ground action.

J. Donald Kingsley, director general of the United Nations Reconstruction Agency, says it would take one billion dollars to put South Korea in sound economic shape.

In Egypt today, Premier Naguib's "special military council" ordered the execution of an army officer on charges of plotting a rebellion of the armed forces against the government.

Here in Washington, the U.S. Court of Appeals, in a five to four decision, ruled that LOCAL eating places may refuse to serve Negroes. The case will probably go to the supreme court.

~~Walter Reuther, the president of the C.I.O., says his organization will not recommend a member to be assistant secretary of labor unless the C.I.O. man is assured of policy-making authority.~~

Mr. Harry Truman, back home in Missouri, revealed that he had ordered General Clark in Tokyo to send home Major John Eisenhower for his father's inugural. nR' Truman said:"The boy didn't want to come home..he thought he would be criticized for leaving the field." But Mr. Truman said he would have wanted his daughter, Margaret, brought home, in similar circumstances.

(76)

John Foster Dulles, the new Secretary of State, has addressed a letter to the sixteen thousand five hundred employees of the State Department in the foreign service at home and over seas. He told them that he will require positive loyalty to the nation's policies in this time of greatest peril. He will also require confidence and discipline. The national welfare must be given priority over individual concern. Secretary Dulles told the people who work for the State Department that loyalty does not require intelectual dishonesty, or that reporting from overseas should be distorted to please superiors. He said our foreign policies will prevail only if they are based on honest evaluation of the facts. This was apparently intended as some reassurance to foreign service officers who must report upon conditions in the countries to which they are accredited. In the past, the loyalty of certain of our representatives abroad has been questioned because their reports contained criticism of a friendly government and indications that our policies were not working very well. As the foreign service journal RECENTLY put it: "If ever the reporters in the field, or career civil servants at home must function in a climate of fear, or in conformity to dogma, the American people and those who are politically accountable, may never know in time whether a policy has failed, or a friendship has turned sour."

This freedom to report accurately from abroad, even though the reports may reflect the failure of a policy, or be displeasing to superiors here at home, is the absolute essence of a successful foreign policy. One of the principal reasons for major mistakes made by dictatorships has been that their representatives abroad feared to file reports that would be displeasing to their superiors at home.

A period of confusion and uncertainty in our foreign service is inevitable. Mr. Dulles requires "positive loyalty to national policies," but those policies have not yet been spelled out. During the campaign, Mr. Dulles and General Eisenhower advocated the use of all measures short of war to arouse the spirit of liberty in the Russian satelite nations, and finally to achieve their liberation. But they didn't say how this was to be done. (And campaign speeches are not statements of policy) Our foreign policy has been based upon containment of the Soviet Union. One of the principal exponents of that policy has been George Kennan, our ambassador to Moscow who was asked to leave by the Russians. Kennan made a speech last Friday saying that if we tried to promote the internal disintigration of Soviet power, we would be breaking our international obligations. This appears to bring Kennan, our foremost Russian expert, into conflict with the Dulles foreign policy. Mr. Dulles said today he had not yet "gone into the Kennan matter."

In today's letter, Mr. Dulles said the people working for the State Department were a group of "loyal Americans, dedicated to the preservation of American ideals and worthy heirs of a noble tradition." This contrasts rather sharply with the Republican party platform, which was written by Mr. Dulles. It stated that we had, in reality, no foreign policy -- swinging erratically from timid appeasement, to reckless bluster. The platform also promises, "we shall eliminate from the State Department, and from every federal office, all, wherever they may be found, who share responsibility for the needless predicaments and perils in which we find ourselves. We shall also sever from the public payroll, the hordes of loafers, incompetents and unnecessary employees, who clutter the administration of our foreign affairs. The platform promised "to mark the end of the negative, futile and immoral policy of containment, which abandons countless human beings to a despotism and godless terrorism, which in turn, enables the rulers to forge the captives into a weapon for our destruction." But a party platform is not to be regarded as a statement of administration policy.

Historically, the platform of the winning party is one of the first things to be forgotten.

There was nothing in President Eisenhower's inaugural speech to indicate any sudden or substantial change in foreign policy. Mr. Dulles requires "positive loyalty to national policies" which have not yet been enunciated, except in the most general terms, and in the course of a political campaign. He says that our representatives abroad should evaluate the facts honestly, and not write reports calculated to please their superiors. In the past, certain members of Mr. Dulles' party have called into question the loyalty of men who reported unpleasant facts indicating our policy was not likely to succeed. [It is to be hoped that Mr. Dulles will be able to protect members of his staff from criticism on similar grounds.] There is a difference between loyalty to one's country and blind loyalty to the policy that a particular administration happens to be carrying out in a certain place at a certain time. Many career officers in our foreign service will probably have to wait to find out what the policy is before deciding what they think of it, and whether they can in conscience serve and promote it. Sound policy, foreign or domestic, must be based upon solid information, including unpleasant or unwelcome information, and Mr. Dulles' assurance that that's the way he wants the reports from abroad written will be welcome reassurance to men serving this country overseas.

WORD

We were speaking of reports to our government from our representatives abroad. J. S. Strange said: "The most curious aspect of truth seems to be that nobody will believe it. We can swallow any number of falsehoods, and fancies, but not the truth". Mark Twain advised "to get your facts first, and then you can distort them as much as you please." And Erasmus was right when he said: "Do not fear to grate tender ears with sharp truths."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 22, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower has formally nominated Charles E. Wilson to be secretary of defense. The White House announced a few minutes ago that Mr. Wilson, the former president of General Motors, had visited the President this evening and "volunteered his intention to dispose of all his stock in General Motors." Mr. Wilson is estimated to hold two and a half million dollars worth of that stock. And his reluctance to dispose of it because of a big tax loss, had convinced many Senators that he would be violating a law as Secretary of Defense. The law forbids federal officials to receive profits from firms with which they do business. General Motors holds more defense contracts than any other corporation in the nation.

The White House announcement came after another day of conferences among various members of the Senate Armed Services Committee. And Democratic Senator Byrd, of Virginia, who originally called the attention of the committee to the law, said earlier today that if Mr. Wilson sold his stock he would be "completely eligible" for the defense job.

As a result of tonight's White House action, Mr. Wilson may be asked to sit in on the First meeting of President Eisenhower's new cabinet tomorrow morning. Today, the other cabinet members were on the job for the first time. Secretary of State Dulles today informed the State Department's employees that he will demand the highest competence, discipline and positive loyalty. I should like to discuss the Secretary's statement in a few minutes.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson, in his first day on the job, regrouped the department's agencies for more efficiency and economy. He said that in the past 20 years the Agriculture Department had been "swollen into a huge bureacracy." No employees were fired, no agencies eliminated, in today's regrouping.

Secretary of Treasury Humphrey announced that he and the President fully approve of the savings bond program.

Secretary of the Interior McKay was confined to his bed with influenza.

As the new Administration started getting adjusted to its job: the Senate foreign relations committee approved Henry Cabot Lodge to be ambassador to the United Nations and Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator. Senator Taft said he is taking no part in the campaign of his son, William Howard Taft the third to get an appointment as ambassador to Ireland. The younger Taft served there for three years as deputy administrator for the Economic Cooperation Administration. The President accepted the resignation of Economic Stabilizer Di Salle, as of the end of this month. But he gave no hint as to the future of wage-price controls. The Senate's rules committee approved 200-thousand dollars for the Senate investigating committee that will be headed by Senator McCarthy;and the House un-American activities committee announced a new program to investigate communist infiltration in government, unions, entertainment and education.

The State Department said today that the Chinese Communist version of what happened to one of our B-29's is "false propaganda." The enemy says the plane was shot down over Manchuria by Chinese fighter planes, that three men were killed, 11 captured. The State Department says the bomber, missing since January 12, was actually attacked over North Korea, although it may have been forced to land in Manchuria. The Chinese say we "violated" the Manchurian border as part of a plan to expand the Korean war. We say we know the B-29 was 12 to 15 miles inside Korea when it was attacked.

In Korea today, our fighter-bombers and 10 Superforts hit enemy railroad centers in North Korea. The air force describes the enemy's anti-aircraft fire as "unbelievable." Our Sabrejets on protective patrol destroyed four enemy Migs. There was comparatively little ground action.

J. Donald Kingsley, director general of the United Nations Reconstruction Agency, says it would take one billion dollars to put South Korea in sound economic shape.

In Egypt today, Premier Naguib's "Special military council" ordered the execution of an army officer on charges of plotting a rebellion of the armed forces against the government.

Here in Washington, the U.S. Court of Appeals, in a five to four decision, ruled that local eating places may refuse to serve Negroes. The case will probably go to the supreme court.

Mr. Harry Truman, back home in Missouri, revealed that he had ordered General Clark in Tokyo to send home Major John Eisenhower for his father's inaugural. Mr. Truman said: "The boy didn't want to come home, he thought he would be criticized for leaving the field." But Mr. Truman said he would have wanted his daughter, Margaret, brought home in similar circumstances.

John Foster Dulles, the new Secretary of State, has addressed a letter to the sixteen thousand five hundred employees of the State Department in the foreign service at home and over seas. He told them that he will require positive loyalty to the nation's policies in this time of greatest peril. He will also require confidence and discipline. The national welfare must be given priority over individual concern. Secretary Dulles told the people who work for the State Department that loyalty does not require intellectual dishonesty, or that reporting from overseas should be distorted to please superiors. He said our foreign policies will prevail only if they are based on honest evaluation of the facts. This was apparently intended as some reassurance to foreign service officers who must report upon conditions in the countries to which they are accredited. In the past, the loyalty of certain of our representatives abroad has been questioned because their reports contained criticism of a friendly government and indications that our policies were not working very well. As the foreign service journal recently put it: "If ever the reporters in the field, or career civil servants at home must function in a climate of fear, or in conformity to dogma, the American people and those who are politically accountable, may never know in time whether a policy has failed, or a friendship has turned sour." This freedom to report accurately from abroad, even though the reports may reflect the failure of a policy, or be displeasing to superiors here at home, is the absolute essence of a successful foreign policy. One of the principal reasons for major mistakes made by dictatorships has been that their representatives abroad feared to file reports that would be displeasing to their superiors at home. A period of confusion and uncertainty in our foreign service is inevitable. Mr. Dulles requires "positive loyalty to national policies," but those policies have not yet been spelled out. During the campaign, Mr. Dulles and General Eisenhower advocated the use of all measures short of war to arouse the spirit of liberty in the Russian satelite nations, and finally to achieve their liberation. But they didn't say how this was to be done. And campaign speeches are not statements of policy. Our foreign policy has been based upon containment of the Soviet Union. One of the principal exponents of that policy has been George Kennan, our ambassador to Moscow who was asked to leave by the Russians. Kennan made a speech last Friday saying that if we tried to promote the internal disintegration of Soviet power, we would be breaking our international obligation. This appears to bring Kennan, our foremost Russian expert, into conflict with the Dulles foreign policy. Mr. Dulles said today he had not yet "gone into the Kennan matter."

In today's letter, Mr. Dulles said the people working for State Department were a group of "loyal Americans, dedicated to the preservation of American ideals and worthy heirs of a noble tradition." This contrasts rather sharply with the Republican party platform which was written by Mr. Dulles. It stated that we had, in reality, no foreign policy, swinging from timid appeasement to reckless bluster. The platform also promises, "we shall eliminate from the State Department, and from every federal office, all, wherever they may be found, who share responsibility for the needless predicaments and perils in which we find ourselves. We shall also sever from the public payroll the hordes of loafers, imcompetents and unnecessary employees who clutter the administration of our foreign affairs." The platform promised "to mark the end of the negative, futile and immoral policy of containment which abandons countless human beings to a despotism and godless terrorism which in turn, enables the rulers to forge the captives into a weapon for our destruction." But a party platform is not to be regarded as a statement of administration policy. Historically, the platform of the winning party is one of the first things to be forgotten.

There was nothing in President Eisenhower's inaugural speech to indicate any sudden or substantial change in foreign policy. Mr. Dulles requires "positive loyalty to national policies," which have not yet been enunciated, except in the most general terms, and in the course of a political campaign. He says that our representatives abroad should evaluate the facts honestly, and not write reports calculated to please their superiors. In the past, certain members of Mr. Dulles' party have called into question the loyalty of men who reported unpleasant facts, indicating our policy was not likely to succeed. It is to be hoped that Mr. Dulles will be able to protect members of his staff from citicism on similar grounds. There is a difference between loyalty to one's country and blind loyalty to the policy that a particular administration happens to be carrying out in a certain place at a certain time. Many career officers in our foreign service will probably have to wait to find out what the policy is before deciding what they think of it, and whether they can in conscience serve and promote it. Sound policy, foreign or domestic, must be based upon solid information, including unpleasant or unwelcome information, and Mr. Dulles' assurance that that's the way he wants the reports from abroad written will be welcome reassurance to men serving this country overseas. - This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, now here's Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of reports to our government from our representatives abroad. J.S. Strange said: "The most curious aspect of truth seems to be that nobody will believe it. We can swallow any number of falsehoods, and fancies, but not the truth". Mark Twain advised "to get your facts first, and then you can distort them as much as you please." And Erasmus was right when he said: "Do not fear to grate tender ears with sharp truths." Good Nite and Good Luck!

Fri. Jan. 23, 1953

This is the news:

The Senate Armed Services committee today confirmed Charles E. Wilson to be secretary of defense. (I should like to review the "conditions"..and the testimony.. in a few minutes.)

The Senate approved Henry Cabot Lodge to be our ambassador to the United Nations. But a vote on Harold Stassen, to be mutual security administrator, was blocked by Independent Senator Morse, who said he wants time to determine if Mr. Stassen "really believes" we can influence foreign governments through dollar aid.

The army announced today that General James Van Fleet is coming home from Korea [redacted] early in February and retiring from the army in March. He will be replaced as head of the 8th army by Lieut. General Maxwell D. Taylor. General Van Fleet will be 61 years old in March; General Taylor is 51. The White House says President Eisenhower believes that Van Fleet is "probably the best qualified combat officer in the armed forces." The President regrets that the passage of time, and time alone, that has resulted in the loss of Van Fleet's service in Korea. [redacted] General Taylor, the new 8th army head, who leaves for the Far East on Monday, is now deputy chief of staff for the army. [redacted]. During World War two he jumped with the 101st airborne division in Normandy, later commanded the [redacted] 82nd airbonre. In 1949 he served as military commander of Berlin. He also has been commandant at West Point.

[redacted]

[redacted]

In Korea today, our Sabrejets shot down four enemy Migs and damaged nine others in the fourth successive day of air battles. So far in January we have shot down at least 30 enemy planes. On the ground, South Korean infantryman, with tank support, drove to the top of Big Nori Hill on the western front.

Here in Washington, President Eisenhower today held his first formal meeting with his new cabinet. It lasted for just over two hours, and none of the participants had a word to say about what was discussed. The President's news secretary, James Hagerty, says this Administration believes that private meetings with the President should be kept quiet. It does not consider that any cabinet member is free to discuss what goes on at cabinet meetings. Hagerty also disclosed that on Monday, [redacted] the President will meet with leaders of Congress to fix a date for his state of the union message to the Congress. [redacted]

[redacted]

The President today conferred with Labor Secteratey Durkin and Senator Smith of New Jersey, the head of the Senate's Labor Committee. Smith says they discussed a general approach to labor problems and made suggestions for the President's state of the union message. Other callers were Postmaster General Summerfield and John G. Allen, a Sears Roebuck executive who may be offered a government job.

Ten southern Democratic senators today proposed a constiutional amendment to outlaw the poll tax as a requirement for voting for federal officials. Senator Holland of Florida says such an amendment might smooth the way for "mderate and clearly legal" solutions to other civil rights issues.

In Missouri today, Harry Truman took reporters and photographers on a tour of his farm and pointed out possible sights for a million and a half dollar TRUMAN library near Grandview. The President says he wants to be sure that the project will not be commercialized; not be cluttered up with hot dog stands and tourist courts.

And Mr. Truman today paid tribute to former REPUBLICAN Representative Eaton of New Jersey who died in a Washington apartment. Mr. Truman said: He was a great congressman, a good Baptist and a very good friend of mine."

In Egypt, Premier Naguib today promised to drive "British imperialism " out of the Nile Valley. He led thousands of Egyptians in an oath asking mercy for Those who "prefer death in their struggle for liberty rather than a mean life under salvery."

XXXXX After two days of hearing, The Senate Armed Services Committee voted unanimously to approve the appointment of Charles E. Wilson as Secretary of Defense. Mr. Wilson told the committee today he will dispose of his present holdings in General Motors stock, and that he will consult with President Eisenhower on any matter that "might be the subject of misunderstanding because of his former association with General Motors." His deputy, Roger Kyes, a former General Motors vice president, will also dispose of his holdings in General Motors. Mr. Wilson told the committee today that he had made some mistakes in his earlier testimony. # Having read that earlier testimony, it seems obvious to this reporter that in addition to refusing to dispose of his stock, as is required by law, and saying that he would have no hesitation in passing on contracts involving General Motors, Mr. Wilson made another mistake. He did not treat Senators with due deference. The printed record which is now available indicates that he rather tolerated them, and Senators don't like to be tolerated. For example, he informed the committee "that there was a change in the country, the people are not afraid of business men like me right now". He said

"after all, I probably have one of the top jobs in the United States". #

Mr. Wilson told them of a bank in Detroit that was in some difficulty back in nineteen thirty-three so, he said: "I scratched up a hundred thousand dollars and plunked it in." In today's testimony, Mr. Wilson demonstrated that he has changed his mind, and changed his attitude towards Senators. He will dispose of his General Motors stock. Chairman Saltonstall, asked ~~ifxthexxxxxx~~ whether the word "dispose" meant sale of the stock. Mr. Wilson said "not necessarily". "I may give some of it away." He will do a little of each. Would Mr. Wilson inform the committee in detail of what he finally did with the stock? Mr. Wilson had no objection to doing that. He would be completely out of General Motors on or about April first. He will not put any of the stock in trust where it might come back to him. He has six children and thirteen grandchildren, and he sees no harm in giving them a little part of it. He wouldn't give away more than twenty percent. #Mr. Wilson was asked by Senator Lyndon Johnson if he thought it would be good policy and perfectly proper for the Secretary of the Army to have a substantial interest in a company that had contracts with the army. Mr. Wilson said he would see no harm in that; that he would take the rap where the service secretaries were concerned and make contracts himself where they had financial interests in the company with which they were dealing. Mr. Wilson said he believed the buck should be passed up, not down. He also said: "I am perfectly willing for you gentelmen to take enough time to look it over and be sure that that is so." Mr. Wilson also said:"Now so far as I am concerned, I don't know just what to do with the money I am going to get from the General Motors stock". "Maybe I will have to invest it in Canada or someplace to get completely clear of it." He also said: he would ask G M to give him cash in place of the stock the corporation is due to give him in future years under a bonus plan. And if G M doesn't agree to the cash settlement, he will give to charity any increase in the value of the stock between the present time and the time he receives it.

At one point in today's hearing, Mr. Wilson said to Senator Dick Russell of Georgia I am being Pushed around — "If I had come here to cheat, [redacted] I wouldn't be here". The Senator replied: "I'm sorry you feel that way, Mr. Wilson. I'm not trying to push you around, but I have my responsibilities too." Mr. Wilson replied: "I understand that, but I am just human. And, My God, I am making a great sacrifice to come down here." At another point, referring to his investments, Mr. Wilson said: "I do think you men have got to think about what is a man going to do. As I said a while ago: Do I have to invest it in Canada or Mexico or someplace else." Later, in a lighter vein, Mr.

Wilson said "I realize I am sort of drafted; that it is proper for you gentlemen to make up your minds whether I am a 4 F or not. Maybe I have a flat head, instead of flat feet." And when a legal point was being discussed, Mr. Wilson remarked that he was not a lawyer, and added [redacted] "if I had a lawyer, he would advise me not to take this job."

Under questioning, Mr. Wilson reiterated that he would, in effect, disqualify the secretary for air and the secretary for the army who hold substantial stock in companies providing material for those two [redacted] branches of the service from passing on contracts. Mr. Wilson said he would take care of those matters. He also said "I am an amatuer at [redacted] this business of testifying before a committee like this." Secretary Lovett, in trying to be helpful warned me that an executive session was not what it might seem to be." At another point, Senator Saltonstall reminded Mr. Wilson that he would be warming the seat in which he was now sitting many, many times in the next few months. # In one week Mr. Wilson has gained experience. In spite of one outburst, his testimony today was couched in different language and tone than was that of a week ago. The question remains as to what will be done with the nominations for secretaries of the army and air force. If the committee adheres to the precedent established in connection with Mr. Wilson, they will either have to dispose of their holdings in companies doing business with the government, or face long arguments before they are confirmed. Mr. Wilson wants their nominations considered one at a time. He told the Senators - "I do not want to get into collective bargaining with you gentlemen. I am in enough trouble of my own." He isn't in as much trouble now as he was a week ago, and the unanimous approval of the committee means that there will be no serious dispute when his name comes before the Senate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (PAUSE) Now, here's Bob Dixon.

WORD

It would seem that Mr. Wilson has concluded that to become Secretary of Defense he has no choice, other than to completely disassociate himself from General. Motors. Publilis Syrus once said: "He serves honorably who yields to circumstances." This, Mr. Wilson has done... possibly keeping in Mind something King George the Sixth observed; "The highest of all distinctions is service to others."

Good night and Good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 23, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate Armed Services committee today confirmed Charles E. Wilson to be secretary of defense. I should like to review the "conditions" and the testimony in a few minutes.

The Senate approved Henry Cabot Lodge to be our ambassador to the United Nations. But a vote on Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator was blocked by Independent Senator Morse who said he wants time to determine if Mr. Stassen "really believes" we can influence foreign governments through dollar aid.

The Army announced today that General James Van Fleet is coming home from Korea early in February and retiring from the army in March. He will be replaced as head of the 8th Army by Lieutenant General Maxwell D. Taylor. General Van Fleet will be 61 years old in March; General Taylor is 51. The White House says President Eisenhower believes that Van Fleet is "probably the best qualified combat officer in the armed forces." The President regrets that the passage of time and time alone, that has resulted in the loss of Van Fleet's service in Korea. General Taylor, the new 8th army head, who leaves for the Far East on Monday, is now deputy chief of staff for the army. During World War two he jumped with the 101st airborne division in Normandy, later commanded the 82nd airborne. In 1949 he served as military commander of Berlin. He also has been commandant at West Point.

In Korea today, our Sabrejets shot down four enemy Migs and damaged nine others, in the fourth successive day of air battles. So far in January we have shot down at least 30 enemy planes. On the ground, South Korean infantrymen, with tank support, drove to the top of Big Nori Hill on the western front.

Here in Washington, President Eisenhower today held his first formal meeting with his new cabinet. It lasted for just over two hours, and none of the participants had a word to say about what was discussed. The President's news secretary, James Hagerty, says this Administration believes that private meetings with the President should be kept quiet. It does not consider that any cabinet member is free to discuss what goes on at cabinet meetings. Hagerty also disclosed that on Monday the President will meet with leaders of Congress to fix a date for his state of the union message to the Congress.

The President today conferred with Labor Secretary Durkin and Senator Smith of New Jersey, the head of the Senate's Labor Committee. Smith says they discussed a general approach to labor problems and made suggestions for the President's state of the union message. Other callers were Postmaster General Summerfield and John G. Allen, a Sears Roebuck executive, who may be offered a government job.

Ten southern Democratic senators today proposed a constitutional amendment to outlaw the poll tax as a requirement for voting for federal officials. Senator Holland of Florida says such an amendment might smooth the way for "moderate and clearly legal" solutions to other civil rights issues.

In Missouri today, Harry Truman took reporters and photographers on a tour of his farm and pointed out possible sights for a million and a half dollar Truman library near Grandview. The President says he wants to be sure that the project will not be commercialized; not be cluttered up with hot dog stands and tourist courts.

And Mr. Truman today paid tribute to former Republican Representative Eaton of New Jersey who died in a Washington apartment. Mr. Truman said: "He was a great congressman, a good Baptist and a very good friend of mine."

In Egypt, Premier Naguib today promised to drive "British imperialism" out of the Nile Valley. He led thousands of Egyptians in an oath asking mercy for those who "prefer death in their struggle for liberty rather than a mean life under slavery."

After two days of hearings, the Senate Armed Services Committee voted unanimously to approve the appointment of Charles E. Wilson as Secretary of Defense. Mr. Wilson told the committee today he will dispose of his present holdings in General Motors stock, and that he will consult with President Eisenhower on any matter that "might be the subject of misunderstanding because of his former association with General Motors." His deputy, Roger Kyes, a former General Motors vice president will also dispose of his holdings in General Motors. Mr. Wilson told the committee today that he had made some mistakes in his earlier testimony. Having read that earlier testimony, it seems obvious to this reporter that in addition to refusing to dispose of his stock, as is required by law, and saying that he would have no hesitation in passing on contracts involving General Motors, Mr. Wilson made another mistake. He did not treat Senators with due deference. The printed record which is now available indicates that he rather tolerated them, and Senators don't like to be tolerated. For example, he informed the committee "that there was a change in the country, the people are not afraid of business men like me right now". He said, "after all, I probably have one of the top jobs in the United States". Mr. Wilson told them of a bank in Detroit that was in some difficulty back in nineteen thirty-three so, he said: "I scratched up a hundred thousand dollars and plunked it in." In today's testimony, Mr. Wilson demonstrated that he has changed his mind, and changed his attitude towards Senators. He will dispose of his General Motors stock. Chairman Saltonstall, asked whether the word "dispose" meant sale of the stock. Mr. Wilson said "not necessarily, I may give some of it away." He will do a little of each. Would Mr. Wilson inform the committee in detail of what he finally did with the stock? Mr. Wilson had no objection to doing that. He would be completely out of General Motors on or about April first. He will not put any of the stock in trust where it might come back to him. He has six children and thirteen grandchildren, and he sees no harm in giving them a little part of it. He wouldn't give away more than twenty percent. Mr. Wilson was asked by Senator Lyndon Johnson if he thought it would be good policy and perfectly proper for the Secretary of the Army to have a substantial interest in a company that had contracts with the army. Mr. Wilson said he would see no harm in that; that he would take the rap where the service secretaries were concerned and make contracts himself where they had financial interests in the company with which they were dealing. Mr. Wilson said he believed the buck should be passee up, not down. He also said: "I am perfectly willing for you gentlemen to take enough time to look it over and be sure that that is so." Mr. Wilson also said: "Now so far as I am concerned, I don't know just what to do with the money I am going to get from the General Motors stock". "Maybe I will have to invest it in Canada or someplace to get completely clear of it." He also said he would ask GM to give him cash in place of the stock the corporation is due to give him in future years under a bonus plan. And if GM doesn't agree to the cash settlement, he will give to charity any increase in the value of the stock between the present time and the time he receives it.

At one point in today's hearing, Mr. Wilson said to Senator Dick Russell of George, "I am being pushed around - if I had come here to cheat, I wouldn't be here". The Senator replied: "I'm sorry you feel that way, Mr. Wilson, I'm not trying to push you around, but I have my responsibilities too." Mr. Wilson replied: "I understand that, but I am just human. And, my God, I am making a great sacrifice to come down here." At another point, referring to his investments, Mr. Wilson said: "I do think you men have got to think about what is a man going to do. As I said a while ago: Do I have to invest it in Canada or Mexico or someplace else." Later, in a lighter vein, Mr. Wilson said, "I realize I am sort of drafted; that it is proper for you gentlemen to make up your minds whether I am a 4 F or not. Maybe I have a flat head, instead of flat feet." And when a legal point was being discussed, Mr. Wilson remarked that he was not a lawyer, and added "if I had a lawyer, he would advise me not to take this job."

Under questioning, Mr. Wilson reiterated that he would, in effect, disqualify the secretary for air and the secretary for the army who hold substantial stock in companies providing material for those two branches of the service from passing on contracts. Mr. Wilson said he would take care of those matters. He also said "I am an amateur at this business of testifying before a committee like this. Secretary Lovett, in trying to be helpful warned me that an executive session was not what it might seem to be." At another point, Senator Saltonstall reminded Mr. Wilson that he would be warming the seat in which he was now sitting many, many times in the next few months. In one week Mr. Wilson has gained experience. In spite of one outburst, his testimony today was couched in different language and tone than was that of a week ago. The question remains as to what will be done with the nominations for secretaries of the army and air force. If the committee adheres to the precedent established in connection with Mr. Wilson, they will either have to dispose of their holdings in companies doing business with the government, or face long arguments before they are confirmed. Mr. Wilson wants their nominations considered one at a time. He told the Senators - "I do not want to get into collective bragaining with you gentlemen. I am in enough trouble of my own." He isn't in as much trouble now as he was a week ago, and the unanimous approval of the committee means that there will be no serious dispute when his name comes before the Senate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here's Bob Dixnn.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that Mr. Wilson has concluded that to become Secretary of Defense he has no choice, other than to completely disassociate himself from General Motors. Publilis Syrus once said: "He serves honorably who yields to circumstances." This, Mr. Wilson has done; possibly keeping in mind something King George the Sixth observed: "The highest of all distinctions is service to others."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW

JANUARY 26, 1953

Monday Jan 26, 1953

Most year-end reports - whether from corporations,...government agencies... or universities and colleges...make pretty hard reading. (And sometimes pretty dull reading). It is all too infrequent that one can pick up such a document...begin on the first line...and stay with it through the end. Today, I had this aggeeable experience...~~EX~~ James Conants' last report as president of Harvard University. (He is soon to become High Commissioner to Germany.)

Dr. Conant does not believe that the struggle with Russian communism is over - quite the contrary. "What we have witnessed", he says, "is only the first phase of a basic conflict, that may well last for the balance of this century". But, Dr. Conant quickly adds; "I am not one of those pessimists, who see either world war three, or the defeat of the free nations, as the only alternative outcomes of this conflict. I believe that we can and will avoid an atomic global holocaust, and given time, courage, and patience, that the tradition of dissent and freedom will prove to be a better guide for a heavily industrialized society, than totalatarian communism".

Dr. Conant continues: "The struggle with communism has made it necessary to underline the significance of doctrines which twenty-five or fifty years ago were taken for granted, ~~In times of stress People are inclined to question the need for supporting institutions dedicated to the advance of knowledge for its own sake - particularly when some of those so engaged propound unorthodox and hence unpopular doctrines.~~

The president of Harvard then goes on to discuss what he considers one of the most urgent problems confronting American education today. He notes: "There is justifiable concern about certain malicious misrepresentations of the nations colleges and universities. The charges range from that of harboring members of the communist party, to teaching economics in such a way as to make converts to the political doctrine of nationalization of industries. I am inclined to think that the proponents of the ridiculous charge that our colleges are subversive, receive a wider hearing today than at anytime in our recent history. Among the reasons for this change in the popular attitude, is the failure of colleges, by their collective action, to demonstrate the nature of their primary task. Another reason, perhaps, for public suspicion of the colleges is the special position they have occupied under the selective service act as this has been administered.

But, says Dr. Conant: "The attackers do not use these arguments. Rather they make the most of public activities of certain faculty members and of the political disagreements about economics and social national policy, that have divided this nation for twenty years. We must admit that a few - a very few - professors have made foolish public statements, as a consequence of their earnest desire for an immediate peaceful settlement with Soviet Russia. To most of us their attitude has been completely unrealistic. But before anyone condemns the utterances of those who have seemed apologists for Russian communism, let him remember how recently we were allies of the Soviet Union, and also how long it took for many of us to become fully aware of the true nature of the communist party in the United States. If there are members of the staff of any university who are in fact engaged in subversive activities, I hope the government will ferret them out and prosecute them. But, in so doing I trust it will not create an atmosphere in which professors will be afraid to speak freely on public issues. Certainly if the trustees or administrative officers of a university, were to engage in any investigation of a professors' activities as a citizen, the life of the university would be destroyed. Outside of his classroom a professor speaks and acts as a private citizen.

Dr. Conant acknowledges that some professors hold unpopular political opinions, but he argues: "it would be a sad day for the United States if the tradition of dissent were driven out of the universities. For it is the freedom to disagree, to quarrel with authority on intellectual matters, to think otherwise, that has made this nation what it is today. Our ~~xxxxxxxxxxx~~ industry was pioneered by men who were dissenters, who challenged orthodoxy in some field and challenged is successfully. The global struggle with communism turns on this very point.

As the balance between orthodoxy and unorthodoxy, Dr. Conant argues that is for each university to determine by its own proceedures. "The independence of each college and university would be threatened if governmental agencies of any sort started inquiries into the nature of instruction that was given. The colleges of the United States have nothing to hide, but their independence as corporate, scholarly organizations is of supreme importance. One need hardly argue this point in view of the dramatic examples of ~~xx~~ what ocurred under the Nazi and Fascist regimes as well as what is now going on in totalitarian nations.

Dr. Conant concludes his yearend report with this observation: "We are living in a period of peril far greater than many of us here realize. The destruction of the spiritual premises on which our whole tradition rests is likewise a possibility that no one can deny who recalls the fate of the University of Prague. # To prevent such possibilities becoming in fact realistic is the problem we face collectively and individually. Each one of us must assess the situation personally and guide his course accordingly."

This is Ed [illegible]
Back in a moment
Now here is Bob Dyson -

We were speaking of Dr. Conant's report ~~on American education and the most immediate problems confronting it.~~ Certainly, as Dr. Conant points out, "education is indispensabile to a society of free men." Centuries ago, the Greek Ep-i-key-tus, made the same observation: "Only the educated are free." For as W.C. Brownell once put it: "A little general learning has come to be a useful thing in a world where from its infrequency it has ceased to be dangerous."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

THIS IS THE NEWS.

Wed. Jan 6, 1953

THE SENATE TODAY CONFIRMED CHARLES E. WILSON TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE. /ONLY SIX SENATORS VOTED AGAINST CONFIRMATION.- KILGORE AND NEELY OF WEST VIRGINIA...JOHNSTON OF SOUTH CAROLINA, SMITH OF NORTH CAROLINA, LEHMAN OF NEW YORK, AND MORSE OF OREGON. [MORSE IS AN INDEPENDENT.] THE REST ARE DEMOCRATS. / SENATOR MORSE COLLAPSED, BUT WAS QUICKLY REVIVED, AFTER A SPEECH OF ALMOST TWO HOURS, IN WHICH HE ASSAILED THE WILSON APPOINTMENT. HE SAID MR. WILSON "DOES NOT POSSESS THAT SENSITIVITY OF ETHICAL STANDARDS, ESSENTIAL TO ONE UNDERTAKING THE SACRED TRUST OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE./"AND SENATOR LYNDON JOHNSON, THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER, SAID HE HAD "STRONG MISGIVINGS" ABOUT THE APPOINTMENT... FEELS IT MAY PROVE "QUITE EMBARRASSING./BUT SENATOR JOHNSON VOTED FOR CONFIRMATION.

THE PRESIDENT TODAY MET WITH CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS. THEY AGREED THAT HE WOULD DELIVER HIS STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE TO A JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS, A WEEK FROM TODAY. / THE PRESIDENT NOMINATED JOHN C. ALLEN, GENERAL MANAGER FOR SEARS ROEBUCK IN ILLINOIS, TO BE ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL. / AND HE SPENT MOST OF THE AFTERNOON IN HIS ROOMS... CANCELLING ALL APPOINTMENTS.. BECAUSE OF WHAT THE WHITE HOUSE CALLS "A SLIGHT CASE OF THE SNIFFLES" ...NO FEVER.. NOTHING SERIOUS.. JUST PRECAUTIONARY. / BUT PRESIDENT EISENHOWER MADE PUBLIC THE NAMES OF MEMBERS OF A NEW COLD WAR PSYCHOLOGICAL STRATEGY BOARD. / IT WILL BE HEADED BY WILLIAM H. JACKSON, A NEW YORK INVESTMENT FIRM EXECUTIVE, WHO HAS SERVED AS DEPUTY OF THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY. / THE PRESIDENT SAYS HE HAS LONG FELT THAT THIS TYPE OF "UNIFIED AND DYNAMIC EFFORT", IN THE PSYCHOLOGICAL FIELD, IS ESSENTIAL TO THE SECURITY OF THE NATION.

Part II

AMBASSADOR HENRY CABOT LODGE VISITED THE UNITED NATIONS TODAY AND TOLD REPORTERS THAT HE IS ASKING THE F.B.I. TO INVESTIGATE ALL OF THE APPROXIMATELY 17-HUNDRED AMERICANS WHO WORK FOR THE U.N. / HE ALSO WANTS AN INVESTIGATION OF THE 144 EMPLOYES OF THE UNITED STATES MISSION TO THE U.N. HE PLEDGED HIMSELF TO WORK FOR PEACE AND SAID PRESIDENT EISENHOWER "ATTACHES THE GREATEST IMPORTANCE TO THE U.N."

IN WASHINGTON, THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION ANNOUNCED THAT IT WILL BUILD A NEW 29-MILLION DOLLAR PLANT IN WEST-CENTRAL ILLINOIS. AND IT WILL CONDUCT ANOTHER SERIES OF ATOMIC TESTS IN NEVADA IN MARCH. THIS TEST WILL INVOLVE "NEW AND IMPROVED" ATOMIC WEAPONS, AND SOME 18-THOUSAND TROOPS.

GENERAL TWINING, THE AIR FORCE VICE CHIEF OF STAFF, SAID TODAY, THAT WE WILL NOT HAVE A "COMPLETE, MODERN" AIR FORCE UNTIL AT LEAST 1955. / HE SAYS ANY CONGRESSIONAL CUTS IN AIR FORCE APPROPRIATIONS WILL UPSET THE WHOLE BUILD-UP. THE GENERAL ALSO SAYS THE PROGRAM FOR BUILDING AIR BASES OVERSEAS HAS "FALLEN DOWN"... THE AIR FORCE IS "QUITE CONCERNED ABOUT THIS." AND IN PARIS, A TOP-RANKING AMERICAN ARMY OFFICER SAYS RUSSIA HAS STEPPED UP HER JET PLANE PRODUCTION TO THE POINT WHERE SHE CAN NOW PUT 8-THOUSAND JETS INTO THE AIR.

IN KOREA TODAY OUR FIGHTER-BOMBERS ATTACKED TRUCKS ON THE ROAD THE ENEMY HAS BEEN USING TO SEND HIS TRUCE DELEGATIONS SOUTH FROM PYONGYANG... /WHEN THE TRUCE TALKS WERE IN SESSION./ WE SAY THE CHINESE HAVE BEEN USING THIS ROAD, ILLEGALLY, TO MOVE WAR SUPPLIES CLOSER TO THE FRONT.

THERE WAS LITTLE ACTION ON THE GROUND AFTER YESTERDAY,S UNSUCCESSFUL, CAREFULLY PLANNED ATTACK.. THE HEAVIEST IN THREE MONTHS. FRONT DISPATCHES SAY THE ENEMY CAUGHT OUR INFANTRYMEN IN DEADLY CROSS-FIRE. WE RETREATED AFTER A FOUR AND A HALF HOUR BATTLE.

GENERAL VAN FLEET, IN A FAREWELL NEWS CONFERENCE, TOLD REPORTERS THAT HE HAS RECOMMENDED A STEPPED-UP OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE ENEMY.— THIS WOULD REQUIRE MORE ALLIED TROOPS. BUT IF THE DECISION IS MADE TO HOLD THE PRESENT LINE, THE GENERAL BELIEVES WE CAN TRAIN ENOUGH SOUTH KOREANS, IN THE NEXT YEAR, TO MAN THE WHOLE FRONT.

IN EGYPT TODAY, THE GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCED THAT THE MAJORITY OF EGYPT,S LABOR UNIONS HAVE DECIDED TO DISSOLVE THEMSELVES AND JOIN WITH THE NEW "LIBERATION ORGANIZATION".. A NATIONAL GROUP DEDICATED TO UNIFYING EGYPT AND FREEING THE SUDAN FROM BRITISH CONTROL.

IN WEST GERMANY, ANOTHER 2-THOUSAND REFUGEES CAME OVER FROM THE COMMUNIST-CONTROLLED EAST....TAXING REFUGEE FACILITIES TO THE LIMIT.

HERE IN NEW YORK TONIGHT, THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR INFANTILE PARALYSIS ANNOUNCED THAT IT HAS FOUND A SAFE NEW VACCINE THAT HAS WORKED IN A "FEW" HUMAN VICTIMS OF POLIO. MANY TESTS ARE YET TO BE MADE. BUT DR. HARRY M. WEAVER, DIRECTOR OF RESEARCH FOR THE FOUNDATION, SAYS "TREMENDOUS PROGRESS HAS BEEN MADE, IN THE PAST SEVERAL MONTHS." LARGE SCALE TRIALS OF THE NEW VACCINE MAY BE MADE THIS SUMMER.

~~END~~

~~ZOHSMER~~

AND IN KANSAS CITY, (MO)
FORMER PRES. TRUMAN TWICE ANNOUNCED NEWS OF "NEUCLAR EXPLOSIONS" INSIDE RUSSSIA, SAID TODAY "I AM NOT CONVINCED
THE RUSSIANS HAVE THE ATOMIC BOMB."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed Charles E. Wilson to be Secretary of Defense. Only six senators voted against confirmation, Kilgore and Neely of West Virginia, Johnston of South Carolina, Smith of North Carolina, Lehman of New York, and Morse of Oregon. Morse is an independent. The rest are Democrats. Senator Morse collapsed, but was quickly revived, after a speech of almost two hours in which he assailed the Wilson appointment. He said Mr. Wilson "Does not possess that sensitivity of ethical standards essential to one undertaking the sacred trust of the Secretary of Defense." And Senator Lyndon Johnson, the Democratic leader, said he had "strong misgivings" about the appointment, feels it may prove "quite embarrassing. But Senator Johnson voted for confirmation.

The President today met with congressional leaders. They agreed that he would deliver his state of the union message to a joint session of Congress a week from today. The President nominated John C. Allen, General Manager for Sears Roebuck in Illinois, to be assistant Postmaster General. And he spent most of the afternoon in his rooms, cancelling all appointments, because of what the White House calls "A slight case of the sniffles", no fever, nothing serious, just precautionary. But President Eisenhower made public the names of members of a new cold war psychological strategy board. It will be headed by William H. Jackson, a New York investment firm executive, who has served as Deputy of the Central Intelligence Agency. The President says he has long felt that this type of "unified and dynamic effort", in the psychological field is essential to the security of the nation.

Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge visited the United Nations today and told reporters that he is asking the F.B.I. to investigate all of the approximately 17-hundred Americans who work for the U.N. He also wants an investigation of the 144 employes of the United States Mission to the U.N. He pledged himself to work for peace and said President Eisenhower "attaches the greatest importance to the U.N."

In Washington, the Atomic Energy Commission announced that it will build a new 29-million dollar plant in West-Central Illinois, and it will conduct another series of atomic tests in Nevada in March. This test will involve "new and improved" atomic weapons, and some 18-thousand troops.

General Twining, the Air Force Vice Chief of Staff, said today that we will not have a "complete, modern" air force until at least 1955. He says any congressional cuts in air force appropriations will upset the whole build-up. The General also says the program for building air bases overseas has "fallen down", the air force is "quite concerned about this." And in Paris, a top-ranking American army officer says Russia has stepped up her jet plane production to the point where she can now put 8-thousand jets into the air.

In Korea today our fighter-bombers attacked trucks on the road the enemy has been using to send his truce delegations south from Pyongyang (when the truce talks were in session.) We say the Chinese have been using this road, illegally, to move war supplies closer to the front.

There was little action on the ground after yesterday's unsuccessful, carefully planned attack, the heaviest in three months. Front dispatches say the enemy caught our infantrymen in deadly cross-fire. We retreated after a four and a half hour battle.

General Van Fleet, in a farewell news conference, told reporters that he has recommended a stepped-up offensive against the enemy. This would require more allied troops. But if the decision is made to hold the present line, the General believes we can train enough South Koreans in the next year to man the whole front.

In Egypt today, the Government announced that the majority of Egypt's labor unions have decided to dissolve themselves and join with the new "liberation organization", a national group dedicated to unifying Egypt and freeing the Sudan from British Control.

In West Germany, another 2-thousand refugees came over from the Communist-controlled East, taxing refugee facilities to the limit.

Here in New York tonight, the National Foundation for infantile paralysis announced that it has found a safe new vaccine that has worked in a "few" human victims of polio. Many tests are yet to be made. But Dr. Harry M. Weaver, Director of Research for the Foundation, says "tremendous progress has been made in the past several months." Large scale trials of the new vaccine may be made this summer.

And in Kansas City, former President Truman who twice announced news of "neuclear explosions" inside Russia, said today, "I am not convinced the Russians have the atomic bomb."

Most year-end reports - whether from corporations, government agencies, or universities and colleges, make pretty hard reading. (And sometimes pretty dull reading.) It is all too infrequent that one can pick up such a document, begin on the first line, and stay with it through the end. Today, I had this agreeable experience, James Conants' last report as president of Harvard University. (He is soon to become High Commissioner to Germany.)

Dr. Conant does not believe that the struggle with Russian communism is over - quite the contrary. "What we have witnessed", he says, "is only the first phase of a basic conflict that may well last for the balance of this century". But Dr. Conant quickly adds: "I am not one of those pessimists who see either world war three or the defeat of the free nations as the only alternative outcomes of this conflict. I believe that we can and will avoid an atomic global holocaust and given time, courage, and patience, that the tradition of dissent and freedom will prove to be a better guide for a heavily industrialized society than totalatarian communism".

Dr. Conant continues: "The struggle with communism has made it necessary to underline the significance of doctrines which twenty-five or fifty years ago were taken for granted.

The president of Harvard then goes on to discuss what he considers one of the most urgent problems confronting American education today. He notes: "There is justifiable concern about certain malicious misrepresentations of the nations colleges and universities. The charges range from that of harboring members of the communist party to teaching economics in such a way as to make converts to the political doctrine of nationalization of industries. I am inclined to think that the proponents of the ridiculous charge that our colleges are subversive receive a wider hearing today than at anytime in our recent history. Among the reasons for this change in the popular attitude is the failure of colleges by their collective action to demonstrate the nature of their primary task. Another reason, perhaps, for public suspicion of the colleges is the special position they have occupied under the selective service act as this has been administered.

But, says Dr. Conant: "The attackers do not use these arguments. Rather they make the most of public activities of certain faculty members and of the political disagreements about economics and social national policy that have divided this nation for twenty years. We must admit that a few - a very few - professors have made foolish public statements as a consequence of their earnest desire for an immediate peaceful settlement with Soviet Russia. To most of us their attitude has been completely unrealistic. But before anyone condemns the utterances of those who have seemed apologists for Russian communism, let him remember how recently we were allies of the Soviet Union, and also how long it took for many of us to become fully aware of the true nature of the communist party in the United States. If there are members of the staff of any university who are in fact engaged in subversive activities, I hope the government will ferret them out and prosecute them. But, in so doing, I trust it will not create an atmosphere in which professors will be afraid to speak freely on public issues. Certainly if the trustees or administrative officers of a university were to engage in any investigation of a professors' activities as a citizen, the life of the university would be destroyed. Outside of his classroom a professor speaks and acts as a private citizen.

Dr. Conant acknowledges that some professors hold unpopular political opinions, but he argues: "it would be a sad day for the United States if the tradition of dissent were driven out of the universities. For it is the freedom to disagree, to quarrel with authority on intellectual matters, to think otherwise, that has made this nation what it is today. Our industry was pioneered by men who were dissenters, who challenged orthodoxy in some field and challenged it successfully. The global struggle with communism turns on this very point.

Dr. Conant concludes his year-end report with this observation: "We are living in a period of peril far greater than many of us here realize. The destruction of the spiritual premises on which our whole tradition rests is likewise a possibility that no one can deny who recalls the fate of the University of Prague. To prevent such possibilities becoming in fact realistic is the problem we face collectively and individually. Each one of us must assess the situation personally and guide his course accordingly."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of Dr. Conant's report. Certainly, as Dr. Conant points out, "education is indispensable to a society of free men." Centuries ago, the Greek Epikeytus, made the same observation: "Only the educated are free." For as W.C. Brownell once put it: "A little general learning has come to be a useful thing in a world where from its infrequency, it has ceased to be dangerous."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Tues-1/27

urgent

Edward R. Murrow
Presbyterian Hospital
NY 1-803 U

7 6467

4391

This is the news:

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee said today: the House will approve, before the end of February, a bill to cut income taxes by 11 percent. This tax cut, he says, would go into effect as of June 30th this year. Reed, a New York Republican, told reporters: House leaders will postpone action on this bill only over "my dead body."...he plans to hold no hearings on it..hopes to prevent AMENDMENTS from the House floor. Reed says he has not consulted House Republican leaders who have been suggesting that the budget must be balanced before any tax cuts are made. And today, Speaker Martin said: the tax bill may come out of Reed's committee in February. But it will probably be several months before it reaches the House floor. Mr. Martin adds: "We have got to do some saving first..we've got to do some cutting."

The Senate today took its first legislative action of the new session. It approved a bill creating a second undersecretary of ~~the treasury~~ state -- to be responsible for re-organizing the department. President Eisenhower has made it known that his selection for the new $17,500 a year job is Donald Lourie, the president of Quaker Oats.

The President still had the sniffles today..again was confined to his rooms..and continued working on his state of the union message. The White House says his condition improved overnight.

Today, the Administration asked the federal court in Washington to delay for 90 days a grand jury investigation of what is supposed to be a world oil monopoly. The delay was requested to give the new attorney General, Herbert Brownell, more time to review the case.

The President's first executive order created an advisory committee to study government re-organization within the next year. And committees of both the House and Senate approved a bill extending for two years the President's power to reorganize the executive agencies of the government. But the Administration got less than what it wanted. It wanted to continue the old law which says that Presidential plans cannot be BLOCKED by either house unless there is a "CONSTITUTIONAL" majority against the plans. This would mean at least 49 votes in the Senate.. 218 in the House. The new bill calls for a simple majority. of those present and voting, to kill any such plans. THIS MEANS it will be easier for Congress to reject any of Mr. Eisenhower's plans to re-organize the executive departments. Budget Director Dodge vigorously protested this.. SAID its an "unexpected handicap" to the new Administration. And Democratic Representative Mc Cormack of Massachusetts says the committee votes today "indicate a break with President Eisenhower."

The President has now formally nominated Roger M. Kyes to be undersecretary of Defense. Mr. Kyes, a former General Motors vice-president, has agreed to sell his G.M. stock.

The Senate Agriculture Committee today demanded quick government action to check a downward trend in farm prices. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont says THIS can have "serious consequences" if

IT IS [redacted] not met promptly. [redacted]

And the Senate confirmed Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator..by a voice vote. Mr. Stassen and SECRETARY OF STATE [redacted] Dulles plan to fly to Europe later this week [redacted] to look over the situation.

Today, [redacted] MR. Dulles "warmly congratulated" the Netherlands for its decision not to accept any more economic aid from us. Mr. Dulles says this is "in the best tradition of Dutch self-reliance" and deserves the admiration of the American people. We will continue to send military aid to the Netherlands..to help Dutch participation in the North Atlantic alliance.

Three members of the joint congressional atomic energy committee said today that [redacted] former President Truman made a "highly unfortunate" remark when he said yesterday that he does not believe the Russians have developed a workable atomic bomb. Republican Senator Hickenlooper of Iowa...Republican Representative Cole of

New York and Democratic Representative Durham of North Carolina say the Truman statement "contradicts indisuputable evidence not only available todau but available in 1949."

Here in New York, William Remington, a former government economist, faces up to ten years in prison. He was convicted of perjury in denying, at a previous trial, that he [redacted] co-operated with a war-time Soviet spy ring.

And Joseph Papa, the president of an A.F. of L. teamsters union local, told the New York state crime commission that he helped conceal a 37-thousand dollar shortage in the union's books from other officers and the international union's auditors.

In Korea today, our planes again attacked enemy supply routes and front-line positions. Four of our Sabrejets tangled with 20 enemy Migs. We damaged two of them. There was comparatively little action on the ground.

The Air Force in Tokyo says that an American pilot recently saw, at close range, a mysterious flying disc that made a pass at one of our jets and then turned away. The Air Force recently reported that "rotating clusters of red, white and green lights" were sighted by our planes over Japan on December 29th. Both REPORTS [redacted] were made without comment.

In Poland today, two Catholic priests and a laymen were condemned to death by a military court. They were [redacted] found [redacted] guilty of spying for the Vatican and the United States. Three other priests and a woman were given long prison sentences.

In WEST Germany, refugees from Hungary and Czechoslovakia report new waves of anti-semetic terror. This Communist activity has now been going on for just about five months. Today I asked my colleague Richard C. Hottelet, to record for you from West Berlin, a summary of the situation:

(runs 4;25 ending: Now back to Ed Murrow in NY)

That was Richard C. Hottelet recording from West Berlin. Here in New York today, the American Jewish Committee reported that the Communists in East Germany are basing their mass arrest of Jews on Nazi-type racial laws. Jacob BLAUSTEIN of Baltimore, president of the committee, says the new orders are "an attempt to appeal mainly to Neo-Nazis and neo-Fascists in Europe in an attempt to have these bigots join the Communist hate America campaign."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. (pause) First, here is Bob Dixon.

(Ed: word follows)

THERE IS EVIDENCE OF GROWING [redacted] anti-semetism within the Russian sphere. [redacted]. More than 4-hundred years ago, Hugh Latimer WROTE [redacted]d:"Wherever you see persecution, there is more than a probability that truth is on the persecuted side." In the end, the Russians, like others, will discover the truth of Emerson's observation:"The history of persecution is the history of endeavors to cheat nature, to make water run up-hill, to twist a rope of sand."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

END

LOUSMER

EDWARD R. MURROW RADIO PROGRAM - TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1953:

RICHARD C. HOTTELET

The Jews are on the road again in Central Europe and cracking the whip behind them is the totalitarian State - this time Soviet instead of Nazi. The new exodus began early in December after the trial of Rudolph Slansky had made anti-Semitism officially a part of Communist policy. But it grew sharply after January 15th when Moscow accused 6 Jewish doctors of murdering Soviet leaders. Since mid-December some 450 Jews had fled from Eastern Germany to West Berlin. This does not seem a great many in a general flood of refugees which brings a thousand a day through the only escape-hatch left in the Iron Curtain. But there were only some 2800 Jews left in Eastern Germany. Most of them survivors of Nazi concentration camps. More than 15% of this remnant, including all of its community leaders, have now sought asylum in West Berlin. The Jewish refugees come in like any others on foot and by subway because the two halves of Berlin are not yet really sealed off. Most of them have only the clothes on their backs and whatever they can carry in a small bundle. But one burden which weighs more heavily on the Jews than others is the bitter repetition of persecution not because of what they do or say or think but because they are Jews. The Communists have not so far apparently begun to beat Jews in the streets and break their windows. There are few reported cases of open violence. The Communist regime still talks about the rights of its Jewish citizens but in private little Communist wardhealers use all the torts and insults in the ancient arsenal of anti-Semitism. The warning is clear.

RICHARD C. HOTTELET:

In Leipsig last week a meeting of the organized victims of Naziism was thrown into confusion when a Communist official sneered: "This looks like a Yiddish school." Much more to the point the Russians are joining in. One man who had regular dealings with Russian officers said that he found them referring to himself and other Jews with the contemptuous word "jeek" meaning kike rather than by the normal non-Hebrai meaning Hebrew. This same man who escaped last week-end said that Jewish officers in the Soviet Army had been sent back to Russia. Communist Party doctrine is privately plugging the new line. Party agitators and lecturers who lead discussions in factories, schools, and in workers' clubs have been directed to dwell at length on the Slansky case and the Moscow doctors. And they do so not in the usual gobbely-gook of imperialists and warmongers but largely in terms of Jewish criminals and Zionist poisoners. One little woman, who until she fled on Sunday, had spent all her life in East Berlin sobbed out that she was glad to leave her belongings behind and flee from what she called unbearable pressure. She was afraid every time the bell rang. Afraid to go out alone and sick of being jibed at by Communists where she worked for not volunteering for social work like clearing rubble. A frail elderly little man who lived on a pension as a victim of Naziism escaped after officials told him that the State would not go on feeding Jews who wouldn't work for the regime. And it is reported that certain special allowances to Nazi victims like extra coal are being stopped. What will happen to the old and sick Jews who cannot escape to the West no one knows. The great question here is why the Kremlin has taken this tact. One guess is that the Jews make handy scapegoats for economic failure and social misery. Another is that the Communists are cleaning out all unreliable so called cosmopolitan elements. Anti-Semitism also is a great emotional stimulant in Eastern Europe which can spur a weary population to certain kinds of action the State has in mind. This may be another aspect of Communist mobilization which has concentrated on military preparations in the past 7 months. Mobilization for war or blush. At any rate observers here feel that Soviet policy has now taken a more radical turn which should warn the West to utmost vigilance.

RICHARD C. HOTTELET:

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Chairman Reed of the House Ways and Means Committee said today: the House will approve, before the end of February, a bill to cut income taxes by 11 percent. This tax cut, he says, would go into effect as of June 30th this year. Reed, a New York Republican, told reporters: House leaders will postpone action on this bill only over "my dead body." he plans to hold no hearings on it, hopes to prevent amendments from the House floor. Reed says he has not consulted House Republican leaders who have been suggesting that the budget must be balanced before any tax cuts are made. And today, Speaker Martin said: the tax bill may come out of Reed's committee in February. But it will probably be several months before it reaches the House floor. Mr, Martin adds: "We have got to do some saving first, we've got to do some cutting."

The Senate today took its first legislative action of the new session. It approved a bill creating a second undersecretary of state - to be responsible for re-organizing the department. President Eisenhower has made it known that his selection for the new $17,500 a year job is Donald Lourie, the president of Quaker Oats.

The President still had the sniffles today, again was confined to his rooms, and continued working on his state of the union message. The White House says his condition improved overnight.

Today, the Administration asked the federal court in Washington to delay for 90 days a grand jury investigation of what is supposed to be a world oil monopoly. The delay was requested to give the new attorney General, Herbert Brownell, more time to review the case.

The President's first executive order created an advisory committee to study government re-organization within the next year. And committees of both the House and Senate approved a bill extending for two years the President's power to reorganize the executive agencies of the government. But the Administration got less than what it wanted. It wanted to continue the old law which says that Presidential plans cannot be blocked by either house unless there is a "constitutional" majority against the plans. This would mean at least 49 votes in the Senate, 218 in the House. The new bill calls for a simple majority, of those present and voting, to kill any such plans. This means it will be easier for Congress to reject any of Mr. Eisenhower's plans to re-organize the executive departments. Budget Director Dodge vigorously protested this, said its an "unexpected handicap" to the new Administration. And Democratic Representative McCormack of Massachusetts says the committee votes today "indicate a break with President Eisenhower."

The President has now formally nominated Roger M. Kyes to be undersecretary of Defense. Mr. Kyes, a former General Motors vice-president, has agreed to sell his GM stock.

The Senate Agreculture Committee today demanded quick government action to check a downward trend in farm prices. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont says this can have "serious consequences" if it is not met promptly.

And the Senate confirmed Harold Stassen to be mutual security administrator by a voice vote. Mr. Stassen and Secretary of State Dulles plan to fly later this week to look over the situation.

Today, Mr. Dulles "warmly congratulated" the Netherlands for its decision not to accept any more economic aid from us. Mr. Dulles says this is "in the best tradition of Dutch self-reliance" and deserves the admiration of the American people. We will continue to send military aid to the Netherlands, to help Dutch participation in the North Atlantic alliance.

Three members of the joint congressional atomic energy committee said today that former President Truman made a "highly unfortunate" remark when he said yesterday that he does not believe the Russians have developed a workable atomic bomb. Republican Senator Hickenlooper of Iowa, Republican Representative Cole of New York and Democratic Representative Durham of North Carolina say the Truman statement "contradicts indisputable evidence not only available today, but available in 1949."

Here in New York, William Remington, a former government economist, faces up to ten years in prison. He was convicted of perjury in denying, at a previous trial, that he cooperated with a war-time Soviet spy ring.

And Joseph Papa, the president of an A.F.L. teamsters union local, told the New York state crime commission that he helped conceal a 37-thousand dollar shortage in the union's books from other officers and the international union's auditors.

In Korea today, our planes again attacked enemy supply routes and front-line positions. Four of our Sabrejets tangled with 20 enemy Migs. We damaged two of them. There was comparatively little action on the ground.

The Air Force in Tokyo says that an American pilot recently saw, at close range, a mysterious flying disc that made a pass at one of our jets and then turned away. The Air Force recently reported that "rotating clusters of red, white and green lights" were sighted by our planes over Japan on December 29th. Both reports were made without comment.

In Poland today, two Catholic priests and a laymen were condemned to death by a military court. They were found guilty of spying for the Vatican and the United States. Three other priests and a woman were given long prison sentences.

In West Germany, refugees from Hungary and Czechoslovakia report new waves of anti-semetic terror. This Communist activity has now been going on for just about five months. Today I asked my colleague Richard C. Hottelet, to record for you from West Berlin, a summary of the situation:

HOTTELET: The Jews are on the road again in Central Europe and cracking the whip behind them is the totalitarian State - this time Soviet instead of Nazi. The new exodus began early in December after the trial of Rudolph Slansky had made anti-Semitism officially a part of Communist policy. But it grew sharply after January 15th when Moscow accused 6 Jewish doctors of murdering Soviet leaders.

Since mid-December some 450 Jews had fled from Eastern Germany to West Berlin. This does not seem a great many in a general flood of refugees which brings a thousand a day through the only escape-hatch left in the Iron Curtain. But there were only some 2800 Jews left in Eastern Germany. Most of them survivors of Nazi concentration camps. More than 15% of this remnant, including all of its community leaders, have now sought asylum in West Berlin. The Jewish refugees come in like any others on foot and by subway because the two halves of Berlin are not yet really sealed off. Most of them have only the clothes on their backs and whatever they can carry in a small bundle. But one burden which weighs more heavily on the Jews than others is the bitter repetition of persecution not because of what they do or say or think but because they are Jews. The Communists have not so far apparently begun to beat Jews in the streets and break their windows. There are few reported cases of open violence. The Communist regime still talks about the rights of its Jewish citizens but in private little Communist wardhealers use all the torts and insults in the ancient arsenal of anti-Semitism. The warning is clear.

In Leipsig last week a meeting of the organized victims of Naziism was thrown into confusion when a Communist official sneered: "This looks like a Yiddish school." Much more to the point the Russians are joing in. One man who had regular dealings with Russian officers said that he found them referring to himself and other Jews with the contemptuous word "jeek" meaning kike rather than by the normal non-Hebrew meaning Hebrew. This same man who escaped last week-end said that Jewish officers in the Soviet Army had been sent back to Russia. Communist Party doctrine is privately plugging the new line. Party agitators and lecturers who lead discussions in factories, schools, and in workers' club have been directed to dwell at length on the Slansky case and the Moscow doctors. And they do so not in the usual gobbely-gook of imperialists and warmongers but largely in terms of Jewish criminals and Zionist poisoners. One little woman, who until she fled on Sunday, had spent all her life in East Berlin sobbed out that she was glad to leave her belongings behind and flee from what she called unbearable pressure. She was afraid every time the bell rang. Afraid to go out alone and sick of being jibed at by Communists where she worked for not volunteering for social work like clearing rubble. A frail elderly little man who lived on a pension as a victim of Naziism escaped after officials told him that the State would not go on feeding Jews who wouldn't work for the regime. And it is reported that certain special allowances to Nazi victims like extra coal are being stopped. What will happen to the old and sick Jews who cannot escape to the West no one knows. The great question here is why the Kremlin has taken this tact. One guess is that the Jews make handy scapegoats for economic failure and social misery. Another is that the Communists are cleaning out all unreliable so called cosmopolitan elements. Anti-Semitism also is a great emotional stimulant in Eastern Europe which can spur a weary population to certain kinds of action the State has in mind. This may be another aspect of Communist mobilization which has concentrated on military preparations in the past 7 months. Mobilization for war or blush. At any rate observers here feel that Soviet policy has now taken a more radical turn which should warn the West to utmost vigilance.

MURROW: That was Richard C. Hottelet recording from West Berlin. Here in New York today, the American Jewish Committee reported that the Communists in East Germany are basing their mass arrest of Jews on Nazi-type racial laws. Jacob Blaustein of Baltimore, president of the committee, says the new orders are "an attempt to appeal mainly to Neo-Nazis and neo-Fascists in Europe in an attempt to have these bigots join the Communist hate America campaign."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There is evidence of growing anti-semetism within the Russian sphere. More than 4-hundred years ago, Hugh Latimer wrote: "Wherever you see persecution, there is more than a probability that truth is on the persecuted side." In the end, the Russians, like others, will discover the truth of Emerson's observation: "The history of persecution is the history of endeavors to cheat nature, to make water run up-hill, to twist a rope of sand." - Good Nite and Good Luck!

Jan. 28, 1953

urgent

Edward R. Murrow
Prysbererian hospital
NY1-803U

This is the news:

Charles E. Wilson was sworn in as secretary of defense today completing President's Eisenhower's cabinet. And the President told reporters: "I'm very proud of Mr. Wilson. He made a very large sacrifice in order to serve his country. I am sure he will be a great secretary of defense." Mr. Wilson's first official fact was to issue an order designed to make it easier for two candidates for defe se posts to win Senate confirmation. The new Secretary said that defense officials must withdraw from any consideration of contracts with companies in which they have an interest. Such decisions must be made by other officials of equal or higher rank. Both Harold E. Talbott, designated to be air secretary, and Robert T. Stevens, designated to be army secretary, hold stock which they have not been disposed to sell. Mr. Talbott has some aviation stock; Mr. Stevens owns shares in a famil concern which supplies much of the cloth used for mm army uniforms. Its understood that President Eisenhower will formally nominate them tomorrow.

Today at the White House, Harold Stassen took the oath as mutual security director. And former Governor Peterson of Nebraska was sworn in as a white house administratove assitant.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee today changed its mind about not approving any top State Department nominees until it first had a complete F.B.I. check on the nominee. Secretary of State Dulles --aware that an F.B.I. check can take up to 60 days--told the committee it was urgent to have quick Senate action on the top men who will assist him. Mr. Dulles says "in many areas the timing to create a new climate" is now. So, the committee has decided to accept the Secretary's word that his assistants are good security risks...with the F.B.I. check to mm be made later. Chairman Wiley says the whole idea of an F.B.I. check "was a good procedure..but it didn't work."

One of the men Secretary Dulles wants approved quickly is former President Conant of Harvard. He is due to be high commissioner to Western Germany. Senator Mc Carthy said today he has received "a tremendous number of letters" opposing Dr. Conant...most of them from Massachusetts. Last April Conant made a speexch in which he said private schools are a "devisive" influence in this country. Archbishop Chushing of Boston and other Catholic leaders took this as an attack on the Catholic parochial schools. Today, Dr. Joseph M. Dawson, executive director of the Baptist Public Affairs office, says the point Dr. Conant made was this: that a dual system of schools, supported out of tax funds is offensive to majority opinion and violates our country's system.

The Atomic Energy Commission reported to Congress today that we have made sharp new advances toward perfecting atomic power for industrial uses..and to drive aircraft and submarines. The Commission reports progress in just about every department under it.

The Census Bureau estimates that more people were at work in this nation in 1952 than ever before in our history. The Bureau estimates the monthly average of civilian employment at 61-million 200-thousand...that's a little over 97 per cent of the estimated labor force.

In St. Louis today, Fred M. Sigh, the president of the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team pleaded "no defense" to two counts of an indictment charging him with income tax evasion. He was sentenced to serve 15 months in prison and fined 15-thousand dollars.

Here in New York, T. F. Tsiang, Nationalist China's delegate to the United Nations, said today that his country rejects suggestions by some Americans that 30-thousand Nationalist China troops be sent to Korea to fight the Communists. He says his country is not convinced that Korea is the best place for the Free Chinese to fight. And no one can assume that the Chinese army on Formosa is expendable to be used as others see fit.

In Korea today about a hundred North Koreans raided allied positions on the eastern front. The 8th army says 72 of them were killed or wounded. The rest retreated.

General Clark's headquarters says that last year's prisoner of war riots on Koje and other islands were masterminded by General Nam Il, the chief enemy negotiator at the truce talks. Nam Il, who is described as a former Soviet officer and a Soviet citizen of Korean extraction, is said to have strirred up the prisoner of war strikes, protests and demonstrations. Many enemy prisoners are said to have been deliberate "plants" carrying Nam Il's orders into the prison camps.

The Pentagon reports that we suffered another 182 casualties

In Korea last week: 30 killed...11 missing...141 wounded.

A British Canberra jet bomber landed in Australia today after a 22-hour flight from London. The previous official record was 45 hours and 35 minutes..made by a four-engined Lancaster bomber in 1946.

In Southampton, England, a fire broke out on the Queen Elizabeth, the world's largest liner. Firemen put it out within an hour. It was confined to one cabin on the main deck. On Sunday the 20-thousand ton liner Empress of Canada burned to a total loss in the Liverpool harbor.

-O-

Last night Secretary of State Dulles made his first foreign policy speech since he assumed his new office. Among many things, he warned our allies in Europe..specifically...Britain, France and West Germany... that if they ignore the concept of European unity and go their seperate ways, the United States may be compelled to do a little re-thinking about our foreign policy in Western Europe. My colleagues in the three European capitals report that the British reaction was unchanged..the French are indignant..the West Germans "satisfied."

Foreign Secretary Eden told Parliament today:" We are not ready to join a political federation and it would be quite wrong to ~~give~~ give false hopes in this matter." But Mr. Eden promised that Britain will keep close political and military connections with the other west European nations.

In Paris, a Foreign Ministry official strongly criticized the Dulles speech. This official wondered about the "tactical wisdom" ~~Mr. Dulles~~ in presenting what he called an "ultimatum" on European unity just before the Secretary of State is to visit west Europe. The French official said America wants France to take a permanent, irrevocable and very serious step which is totally against European traditions. He insists the French need time for reflection.

In West Germany, the Dulles warning is said to have coincided with Chancellor Adenauer's efforts to get approval of the peace contract and the European army plan. My colleague Richard C. Hottelet reports "there was something almost satisfying about Secretary Dulles bracketing France, Britain and Germany as equal curplrits in European disunity."

In the course of his speech last night, Secretary Dulles also said he believes President Eisenhower will "find ways" to make the Russians want peace. To this there came a reaction from Former President Truman in Missouri. Mr. Truman said:" I don't think they'll be able to get anywhere by loud talking. I know what they..the new Administration..are up against."

~~pickup cold piece~~

end

zousmer

530
200
730

The 20th Century has made mighty strides against virtually all disease. Smallpox, yellow fever, tuberculosis, diptheria are almost unheard of. Penicillen, streptomycin, oreromycin and the other wonder drugs have revolutionized modern medicine. We have made giant strides against disease - but not the common cold. At the moment just about everyone seems to be suffering from the sniffles: this includes the Eisenhowers, Miss America, some assorted statesmen and Lily Pons.

The whole business of where a cold comes from has been something of a mystery for a couple of thousand years. Time was when people believed that colds were caused by drying leaves, powder, cats and even comets. Recently, the Harvard Medical School was left a half million dollars to be used in trying to find a cure for the common cold.

Our own research shows that in the antarctic the head cold is as uncommon as the proverbial icebox. But in this country, 94 per cent of us has at least one cold a year. On an average day, 20-million people have the doubtful distinction of suffering in varying degrees with a cold. Women get more colds than men do. But it takes a man two days longer to get rid of it. The average cold lasts about 15 days. It costs its victim an average of 25-dollars. The cost, in terms of wages, drugs(we consume 40-million pills a day), loss of production, and so forth, is 2-billion dollars a year - that's about what it cost to develop the first atom bomb. In an average year we lose about five times as much production from colds as we do from strikes.

More colds start on a Monday than any other day of the week. I don't suppose there's any sound explanation of this, but it is known that the thing is an airborne virus. And that emotional upsets and a rundown condition are big factors in whether you catch a cold or don't. Maybe the activities of the weekend plus the depression that accompanies Monday has something to do with it. Medical opinion varies. Most doctors agree, however, that one of the best ways of avoiding a cold is to stay healthy. Our research into this subject turned up a note that "only man and the chimpanzee - and of course women" show a tendency to catch colds. What that proves is hard to say. We also came across this interesting fact: amongst workers - those with the fewest colds are employed in vinegar factories. But since employment opportunities in vinegar factories must be limited,

I suppose we must take refuge in the hope that the scientists at Harvard produce some astonishing results with that half-million dollars. Of course, some enterprising young man might develop a low-cost pre-fabricated vinegar factory that cacuild be purchased at your local drug store. But then, that's asking a little too much even on this mechanized minor planet we're living on.

THIS IS THE NEWS, 11/28/53 V

CHARLES E. WILSON WAS SWORN IN AS SECRETARY OF DEFENSE TODAY — (COMPLETING PRESIDENTS EISENHOWERS CABINET.) AND THE PRESIDENT TOLD REPORTERS, "IM VERY PROUD OF MR. WILSON. HE MADE A VERY LARGE SACRIFICE IN ORDER TO SERVE HIS COUNTRY. I AM SURE HE WILL BE A GREAT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE." / MR. WILSONS FIRST OFFICIAL ACT WAS TO ISSUE AN ORDER DESIGNED TO MAKE IT EASIER FOR TWO CANDIDATES FOR DEFENSE POSTS TO WIN SENATE CONFIRMATION. THE NEW SECRETARY SAID THAT DEFENSE OFFICIALS MUST WITHDRAW FROM ANY CONSIDERATION OF CONTRACTS WITH COMPANIES IN WHICH THEY HAVE AN INTEREST. [SUCH DECISIONS MUST BE MADE BY OTHER OFFICIALS OF EQUAL OR HIGHER RANK.] BOTH HAROLD E. TALBOTT, DESIGNATED TO BE AIR SECRETARY, AND ROBERT T. STEVENS, DESIGNATED TO BE ARMY SECRETARY, HOLD STOCK WHICH THEY HAVE NOT BEEN DISPOSED TO SELL. / MR. TALBOTT HAS SOME AVIATION STOCK, MR. STEVENS OWNS SHARES IN A FAMILY CONCERN WHICH SUPPLIES MUCH OF THE CLOTH USED FOR ARMY UNIFORMS. [ITS UNDERSTOOD THAT PRESIDENT EISENHOWER WILL FORMALLY NOMINATE THEM TOMORROW.]

TODAY AT THE WHITE HOUSE, HAROLD STASSEN TOOK THE OATH AS MUTUAL SECURITY DIRECTOR. AND FORMER GOVERNOR PETERSON OF NEBRASKA WAS SWORN IN AS A WHITE HOUSE ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT.

THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE TODAY CHANGED ITS MIND ABOUT NOT APPROVING ANY TOP STATE DEPARTMENT NOMINEES UNTIL IT FIRST HAD A COMPLETE F. B. I. CHECK ON THE NOMINEE. SECRETARY OF STATE DULLES-(AWARE THAT AN F. B. I. CHECK CAN TAKE UP TO 60 DAYS-) TOLD THE COMMITTEE IT WAS URGENT TO HAVE QUICK SENATE ACTION ON THE TOP MEN WHO WILL ASSIST HIM. / MR. DULLES SAYS "IN MANY AREAS THE TIMING TO CREATE A NEW CLIMATE" IS NOW. SO, THE COMMITTEE HAS DECIDED TO ACCEPT THE SECRETARYS WORD THAT HIS ASSISTANTS ARE GOOD SECURITY RISKS.. [WITH THE F. B. I. CHECK TO BE MADE LATER.] CHAIRMAN WILEY SAYS THE WHOLE IDEA OF AN F. B. I. CHECK "WAS A GOOD PROCEDURE.. BUT IT DIDNT WORK."

ONE OF THE MEN SECRETARY DULLES WANTS APPROVED QUICKLY IS FORMER PRESIDENT CONANT OF HARVARD. [HE IS DUE TO BE HIGH COMMISSIONER TO WESTERN GERMANY.] SENATOR MC CARTHY SAID TODAY HE HAS RECEIVED "A TREMENDOUS NUMBER OF LETTERS" OPPOSING DR. CONANT..MOST OF THEM FROM MASSACHUSETTS. LAST APRIL CONANT MADE A SPEECH IN WHICH HE SAID PRIVATE SCHOOLS ARE A "DIVISIVE" INFLUENCE IN THIS COUNTRY. ARCHBISHOP CUSHING OF BOSTON AND OTHER CATHOLIC LEADERS TOOK THIS AS AN ATTACK ON THE CATHOLIC PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. / TODAY, DR. JOSEPH M. DAWSON, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE BAPTIST PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICE, SAYS THE POINT DR. CONANT MADE WAS THIS, THAT A DUAL SYSTEM OF SCHOOLS, SUPPORTED OUT OF TAX FUNDS, IS OFFENSIVE TO MAJORITY OPINION, AND VIOLATES OUR COUNTRYS SYSTEM.

THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION REPORTED TO CONGRESS TODAY THAT WE HAVE MADE SHARP NEW ADVANCES TOWARD PERFECTING ATOMIC POWER FOR INDUSTRIAL USES...AND TO DRIVE AIRCRAFT AND SUBMARINES. / THE COMMISSION REPORTS PROGRESS IN JUST ABOUT EVERY ONE OF ITS DEPARTMENTS. #

THE CENSUS BUREAU ESTIMATES THAT MORE PEOPLE WERE AT WORK IN THIS NATION IN 1952 THAN EVER BEFORE IN OUR HISTORY. THE BUREA ESTIMATES THE MONTHLY AVERAGE OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYMENT AT 61-MILLION 200-THOUSAND...THATS A LITTLE OVER 97 PER CENT OF THE ESTIMATED LABOR FORCE.

IN ST. LOUIS TODAY, FRED M. SIGH, THE PRESIDENT OF THE ST. LOUIS CARDINALS BASEBALL TEAM PLEASED "NO DEFENSE" TO TWO COUNTS OF AN INDICTMENT CHARGING HIM WITH INCOME TAX EVASION. / HE WAS SENTENCED TO SERVE 15 MONTHS IN PRISON AND FINED 15-THOUSAND DOLLARS. #

HERE IN NEW YORK, T. F. TSIANG, NATIONALIST CHINAS DELEGATE TO THE UNITED NATIONS, SAID TODAY THAT HIS COUNTRY REJECTS SUGGESTIONS BY SOME AMERICANS THAT 30-THOUSAND NATIONALIST CHINA TROOPS BE SENT TO KOREA TO FIGHT THE COMMUNISTS. HE SAYS HIS COUNTRY IS NOT CONVINCED THAT KOREA IS THE BEST PLACE FOR THE FREE CHINESE TO FIGHT. AND NO ONE CAN ASSUME THAT THE CHINESE ARMY ON FORMOSA IS EXPENDABLE TO BE USED AS OTHERS SEE FIT.

IN KOREA TODAY ABOUT A HUNDRED NORTH KOREANS RAIDED ALLIED POSITIONS ON THE EASTERN FRONT. THE 8TH ARMY SAYS 72 OF THEM WERE KILLED OR WOUNDED. THE REST RETREATED.

GENERAL CLARKS HEADQUARTERS SAYS THAT LAST YEARS PRISONER OF WAR RIOTS ON KOJE AND OTHER ISLANDS WERE MASTERMINDED BY GENERAL NAM IL, THE CHIEF ENEMY NEGOTIATOR AT THE TRUCE TALKS. NAM IL, WHO IS DESCRIBED AS A FORMER SOVIET OFFICER AND A SOVIET CITIZEN OF KOREAN EXTRACTION, IS SAID TO HAVE STIRRED UP THE PRISONER OF WAR STRIKES, PROTESTS AND DEMONSTRATIONS. / MANY ENEMY PRISONERS ARE SAID TO HAVE BEEN DELIBERATE "PLANTS" CARRYING NAM ILS ORDERS INTO THE PRISON CAMPS.

THE PENTAGON REPORTS THAT WE SUFFERED ANOTHER 182 CASUALTIES IN KOREA LAST WEEK, 30 KILLED..11 MISSING...141 WOUNDED.

A BRITISH CANBERRA JET BOMBER LANDED IN AUSTRALIA TODAY AFTER A 22 HOUR FLIGHT FROM LONDON. THE PREVIOUS OFFICIAL RECORD WAS 45 HOURS AND 35 MINUTES..MADE BY A FOUR ENGINED LANCASTER BOMBER IN 1946.

IN SOUTHAMPTON, ENGLAND, A FIRE BROKE OUT ON THE QUEEN ELIZABETH, THE WORLDS LARGEST LINER. FIREMEN PUT IT OUT WITHIN AN HOUR. IT WAS CONFINED TO ONE CABIN ON THE MAIN DECK. ON SUNDAY THE 20-THOUSAND TON LINER EMPRESS OF CANADA BURNED TO A TOTAL LOSS IN THE LIVERPOOL HARBOR.

LAST NIGHT SECRETARY OF STATE DULLES MADE HIS FIRST FOREIGN POLICY SPEECH SINCE HE ASSUMED HIS NEW OFFICE. AMONG MANY THINGS, HE WARNED OUR ALLIES IN EUROPE..SPECIFICALLY...BRITAIN, FRANCE AND WEST GERMANY...THAT IF THEY IGNORE THE CONCEPT OF EUROPEAN UNITY, AND GO THEIR SEPERATE WAYS, THE UNITED STATES MAY BE [redacted] TO "DO A LITTLE RE-THINKING ABOUT OUR FOREIGN POLICY IN WESTERN EUROPE." MY COLLEAGUES IN THE THREE EUROPEAN CAPITALS REPORT THAT THE BRITISH REACTION WAS UNCHANGED...THE FRENCH ARE INDIGNANT..THE WEST GERMANS "SATISFIED."

FOREIGN SECRETARY EDEN TOLD PARLIAMENT TODAY, " WE ARE NOT READY TO JOIN A POLITICAL FEDERATION AND IT WOULD BE QUITE WRONG TO GIVE FALSE HOPES IN THIS MATTER."

IN PARIS, A FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL STRONGLY CRITICIZED THE DULLES SPEECH. THIS OFFICIAL WONDERED ABOUT THE "TACTICAL WISDOM" IN PRESENTING AN "ULTIMATUM" ON EUROPEAN UNITY JUST BEFORE THE SECRETARY OF STATE IS TO VISIT WEST EUROPE. THE FRENCH OFFICIAL SAID AMERICA WANTS FRANCE TO TAKE A PERMANENT, IRREVOCABLE AND VERY SERIOUS STEP WHICH IS TOTALLY AGAINST EUROPEAN TRADITIONS. HE INSISTS THE FRENCH NEED TIME FOR REFLECTION.

IN WEST GERMANY, THE DULLES WARNING IS SAID TO HAVE COINCIDED WITH CHANCELLOR ADENAUERS EFFORTS TO GET APPROVAL OF THE PEACE CONTRACT AND THE EUROPEAN ARMY PLAN. MY COLLEAGUE RICHARD C. HOTTELET REPORTS "THERE WAS SOMETHING ALMOST SATISFYING ABOUT SECRETARY DULLES BRACKETING FRANCE, BRITAIN AND GERMANY AS EQUAL CULPRITS IN EUROPEAN DISUNITY."

IN THE COURSE OF HIS SPEECH LAST NIGHT, SECRETARY DULLES ALSO SAID HE BELIEVES PRESIDENT EISENHOWER WILL "FIND WAYS" TO MAKE THE RUSSIANS WANT PEACE. TO THIS THERE CAME A REACTION FROM FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN IN MISSOURI. MR. TRUMAN SAID, "I DONT THINK THEYLL BE ABLE TO GET ANYWHERE BY LOUD TALKING. I KNOW WHAT THEY. /THE NEW ADMINISTRATION/ ARE UP AGAINST."

[redacted]

END

Mr. DC Chief Thurs. Jan 29/953

urgent

Edward R. Murrow
Presbyterian hospital
nyl-803 u

Check Ed's copy

This is the news:

The Senate Armed Services Committee today approved President Eisenhower's nominees to be secretaries of the navy, army and air force. The navy [redacted]secretary, Robert B. Anderson of Texas, was approved after a minimum of discussion. The other two men, Robert T. Stevens, who is to be army secretary, and Harold Talbott, who is to be air secretary, were approved after both agreed to dispose of their stock holdings in defense industries. Mr. Talbott of New York said he would sell more than 600-thousand dollars worth of Chrysler and Electric [redacted] Light Stock. Mr. Stevens of New Jersey agreed to sell a million and a [redacted] half dollar interest in the Stevens textile company which did 30 per cent of its business with the government last year. Mr. Stevens made it clear that he would sell only because the Senators insisted on it. He said he feared that this would discourage other successful businessmen from entering government service.

The new secretary of defense, Charles E. Wilson, was asked today for details on an aunnsuccessful attack made by allied troops in Korea on Sunday. Some congressmen seem to feel it was a useless sacrifice of lives just to "put on a show." And Chairman Short of the House armed Services Committee says he will question Army Chief of Staff J. Lawton Collins when the general returns from Korea and Tokyo over the week-end.

I should like to discuss this unsuccessful attack on Spud Hill on the western front in a few minutes.

In Korea today, with the temperature down to five degrees below zero on the western front, allied raiders hit an enemy position near the Panmunjom truce area . They killed an estimated 27 Communists.

The city of Seoul said goodby to General Van Fleet, the 8th army commander, who is coming home. Signs invited the General to come back to Korea at some later date "and stay with us." He promised:"I shal come back" and said the gifts showered on him were a "tremendous show of good will." He apologized for not being able to do more to achieve the objective of: an honorable peace.

Prime Minister Churchill returned to London today and said, of President Eisenhower's recent visit to Korea, "I am confident nothing but good can follow the visit."

Scotland Yard detectives are still trying to determine if there was any attempted sabotage in yesterday's fire aboard the liner Queen Elizabeth. Another fire broke out aboard the ship today..waste rags burst into flames..but it was quickly put out with hand extinguishers.

The Russians today again warned Denmark that if any western troops are stationed on Danish soil, the Soviets will regard this as a threat to the security of Russia and other countries of the Baltic area. The Danish foreign minister says his countryw will continue re-arming for defense despite Soviet objections.

In Washington, the White House says President Eisenhower agreed in advance to action in committees of the Senate and House which would make it easier to block any plans the President may submit to re-organize the government. But Budget Director Dodge had told a House committee he opposed the change. The United Press quotes a "source close to the House Republican leadership as saying the Congressional action resulted from a "fumble" in signals from the White House. 3 -

Former President Truman, said today that the committee action to curb Mr. Eisenhower's powers "was a squirrel headed thing to do." He also said that those whom he described as "pin-heads in Congress" never wanted to give former Secretary of State Acheson credit for the help he gavor Herbert Hoover in drafting plans for more efficient government. And Mr. Truman said he expressed his doubts that the Russians actually have a workable atomic bomb because a number of congressmen have been trying to "scare a lot of Americans to death with irresponsible statements." Mr. Truman feels we "ought to settle down and be sensible and build up our strength."

Ninteen senators today introduced a bill to forbid racial and other disc imination in hiring workers. Its the same bill approved by a Senate committee before Congress adjourned last year.

Senator Johnston charged today that 100-thousand employes could be chopped from our overseas payroll and "billions" od dollars could could be saved by eliminating waste and inefficiency. 55 - 55

In Korea last Sunday the United Nations launched what was to have been a model demonstration of an AIR-artillery-infantry attack. The plans were carefully made. The OBSERVERS, including reporters, numbered some Top corps and air commanders who do not ordinarily observe local actions. But this was something special; the biggest assault of its type we had launched in a year. At the start everything went according to the carefully prepared seven page mimeographed outline.. a timetable of the whole operation. Waves of fighter bombers hit the Communist positions on top of Spud Hill, near T-Bone hill. They bombed and strafed and then returned to spread napalm fire bombs. Then came what correspondents described as "a massive artillery attack." Then dozens of tanks moved into the valley below the hill and sent high-velocity fire into the enemy's positions. Then came time for the infantry to move in. They did, with some success, until they approached within 15 yards of their objective. At this point the Communists reacted as if there had been no air attack, no artillery attack, no tank fire directed against their position. They caught the allied troops in a cross fire; they hurled grenades to make our positions untable. And after four and a half hours we withdrew. Army CENSORS have permitted no indetification of the attacking troops;

2 But a division spokesman said in Korea a few minutes ago - that only 3 allied soldiers were killed & overall casualties were extremely light.

~~there have been no reports of the casualties we suffered. The Army rarely reports on casualties for a single action.~~ If this had been a successful attack we should probably have heard no more about it. But it was not successful, and some details concerning the whole episode [redacted] have created a good deal of indignation. For one thing, the 7-page meimographed timetable of how the battle was supposed to go had a cover... a cardboard cover.. and this cover was hand-made in three colors. One reporter relayed word that his time-table was headed "scenario." The presence of high -ranking brass also seems to have added to the impression in some quarters that this was a big show.. a spectacle.

In Congress today: Republican Representative Hoffman of Michigan asked the Pentagon to tell him whether "American boys were used as expendable cannon fodder, for publicity purposes..or if this was a justifiable military action." Republican Representative Bray of Indiana said he has received a number of complaints. He has asked Defense Secretary Wilson if this action..as he put it.."was a show, with actual killing, for visiting firemen, using human guinea pigs?" Republican Representative Van Zandt of Indiana feels its only fair to give the military a chance to explain. But he wants to know why we attempted to penetrate enemy lines if we were not adequately prepared.

[redacted]

In Korea today military men, concerned in this operation, say the criticism levelled against them in Washington is unfair. They say: [redacted] there were no [redacted] theatrical trappings.. this was a deadly serious business. The timetable, or program or score-card, or whatever the correspondents called it, is not something new. Such carefully prepared plans are always made before an attack --even for eight-man patrols. The only thing different this time was the [redacted] cardboard cover..home-made. The whole reason for the visiting generals was to demonstrate the effectiveness of close air support for foot soldiers. And reporters at the front, who observed the unsuccessful attack, agree that except for the fancier cover for the operational plans, there was nothing unusual about the whole operation.

What does appear to be unusual is the angry tone, the apparent willingness to believe, that our Korean commanders offered a "spectacle" to their higher-ups, which called for the sacrifice of some of our men. And this in turn, as the Congressmen made clear in the House today, reflects phone calls and letters they have received from their constituents.

Perhaps it is fortunate that General Collins happens to be in Japan at this time, that he will be coming home over the week-end to explain just what has happened. (apparently, it was a minor action - but the reaction wasn't x

~~But one lesson will not be lost on our top military men. The ratio of casualties~~

~~But one lesson from this Spud Hill operation will not be lost on our top military leaders: the [redacted] reaction at home from any Korean military operation measures against its objective and success.~~

~~It would appear that at the moment [redacted] our top commanders, following President Eisenhower's visit to Korea, are trying to work out something new. In Tokyo today, Chief of Staff Collins, Far Eastern Commander Clark and General Taylor, who is taking over the 8th army, were engaged in a busy day of conferences. We know nothing about their top-secret decisions.~~

From sources in Tokyo and Korea we know that there has been a slowly developing significant change in the strategic thinking at headquarters. At the time General Eisenhower visited Korea our top commanders favored a major offensive to break the stalemate. Recently a more cautious attitude has developed, although General Van Fleet, at his last news conference, protested bitterly against those "people who want to tie us down." But the majority feeling now is said to hold that a major offensive in Korea would be too costly..(headquarters estimated a mimimum of 50-thousand casualties.). Such an offensive could only succeed if its objective was to destroy the Communist armies in North Korea. This would include the destruction of their equipment. Because, if the enemy, even at the cost of thousands of casualties, could salvage his equipment, he could quickly form new armies to continue the war along a new defense line to the north. The Army is said to feel any such new major offensive would require more troops..would mean the temporary abandonment of the rotation plan to keep combat trained troops in Korea. And the Air Force is represented as objecting to a major offensive unless we are prepared to attack enemy air bases in Manchuria. The Air Force believes that if the Communists face the threat of defeat on the ground they will order their Migs into an all-out attack on our battlelines. So the Air Force is reluctant to assume responsibility for protecting advancing allied troops, unless they can first destroy enemy air bases in Manchuria.

There is a body of military opinion in Tokyo that feels a limited offensive might produce worthwhile results; that we should strike hard and fast for a new line running from Pyongyang to Wonsan on the east coast. But here too the deterrents are obvious: the enemy is strongly entrenched; as we learned at Spud Hill it is not easy to drive him out of his new Chinese Wall: honeycombed trenches, bunkers, and caves that can withstand very heavy air and artillery attacks. We know too that the Red army is now better trained, fights more skilfully, has better weapons and more reserves than he did last fall. [redacted] The feeling in Tokyo is that a limited offensive to shorten the battle lines at the Korean-neck might permit us to withdraw a few divisions from the shorter front. But this would only bring stalemate under worse conditions. Our supply lines would be longer..the enemy's shorter..and our troops would be within easy range of Manchurian-based planes.

Possibly a third alternative being considered by our top commanders in Tokyo today is to rapidly and steadily reduce the number of American troops in the front lines. To expand the South Korean army... let their troops replace ours.. have our navy and air force continue their pressure on the Communists...pull one or two American divisions back into reserve in Japan. This, of course, would be another stalemate. But there is a feeling this would be more pallatible to those of us at home because our committments would be reduced in Korea and there would be an almost immediate drop in American casualties. ~~There is also the feeling, in some quarters, that the withdrawal of American troops into a reserve force might produce a political climate that would make a reasonable truce more of a possibility.~~

Whatever the decision of the meetings now going on in Tokyo... Korea remains for the new Eisenhower Administration a problem ~~much~~ similar to what it was for the old Truman Administration, our voters and our allies.

This is EM. I'll be back in a meoment with the word for todayetc

In war, any sort of military action involves certain calculated risks. And in the end, the decision to attack or sit tight rests in the balance between the objective and the cost. Abraham Lincoln, who knew much of war, always advocated reasonableness. He once told one of his Generals: "Beware of rashness. But with energy and sleepless vigilance go forward and give us victories." That would still seem to be a good goal. but going forward will be costly—

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JANUARY 29, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate Armed Services committee today approved President Eisenhower's nominees to be secretaries of the Navy, Army and Air Force. The Navy Secretary, Robert B. Anderson of Texas, was approved after a minimum of discussion. The other two men, Robert T. Stevens, who is to be Army Secretary, and Harold Talbott, who is to be Air Secretary, were approved after both agreed to dispose of their stock holdings in defense industries. Mr. Talbott of New York said he would sell more than 600-thousand dollars worth of Chrysler and Electric Auto-light stock. Mr. Stevens of New Jersey agreed to sell a million and a half dollar interest in the Stevens Textile Company, which did 30 percent of its business with the government last year. Mr. Stevens made it clear that he would sell only because the senators insisted on it. He said he feared that this would discourage other successful businessmen from entering government service.

The new Secretary of Defense, Charles E. Wilson, was asked today for details on an unsuccessful attack made by allied troops in Korea on Sunday. Some congressmen seem to feel it was a useless sacrifice of lives just to "put on a show." And Chairman Short of the House Armed Services Committee says he will question Army Chief of Staff J. Lawton Collins when the General returns from Korea and Tokyo over the weekend.

I should like to discuss this unsuccessful attack on Spud Hill on the Western Front in a few minutes.

In Korea today, with the temperature down to five degrees below zero on the western front, allied raiders hit an enemy position near the Panmunjom truce area. They killed an estimated 27 Communists.

The City of Seoul said goodby to General Van Fleet, the 8th Army commander, who is coming home. Signs invited the General to come back to Korea at some later date "and stay with us." He promised, "I shall come back" and said the gifts showered on him were a "tremendous show of good will." He apologized for not being able to do more to achieve an honorable peace.

Prime Minister Churchill returned to London today and said, of President Eisenhower's recent visit to Korea, "I am confident nothing but good can follow the visit."

The Russians today again warned Denmark that if any western troops are stationed on Danish soil, the Soviets will regard this as a threat to the security of Russia and other countries of the Baltic area. The Danish Foreign Minister says his country will continue re-arming for defense despite Soviet objections.

In Washington, the White House says President Eisenhower agreed on Monday to action in committees of the Senate and House, which would make it easier to block any plans the President may submit to reorganize the government. But Budget Director Dodge had told a house committee on Tuesday that he opposed the change. The United Press quotes a "source close to the House Republican leadership as saying the congressional action resulted from a "fumble" in signals from the White House.

Former President Truman, said today that the Committee action to curb Mr. Eisenhower's powers "was a squirrel headed thing to do." He also said that those whom he described as "pin-heads in Congress" never wanted to give former Secretary of State Acheson credit for the help he gave to Herbert Hoover in drafting plans for more efficient government. And Mr. Truman said he expressed his doubts that the Russians actually have a workable atomic bomb because of number of Congressmen have been trying to "scare a lot of Americans to death with irresponsible statements." Mr. Truman feels we "ought to settle down and be sensible and build up our strength."

Senator Johnston charged today that 100-thousand employees could be chopped from our overseas payroll and "billions" of dollars could be saved by eliminating waste and inefficiency.

In Korea last Sunday, the United Nations launched what was to have been a model demonstration of an air-artillery-infantry attack. The plans were carefully made. The observers, including reporters, numbered some top corps and air commanders who do not ordinarily observe local actions. But this was something special, the biggest assault of its type we had launched in a year. At the start everything went according to the carefully prepared seven page mimeographed outline, a timetable of the whole operation. Waves of fighter bombers hit the Communist positions on top of Spud Hill, near T-Bone hill. They bombed and strafed and then returned to spread napalm fire bombs. Then came what correspondents described as "a massive artillery attack." Then dozens of tanks moved into the valley below the hill and sent high-velocity fire into the enemy's positions. Then came time for the infantry to move in. They did, with some success, until they approached within 15 yards of their objective. At this point the Communists reacted as if there had been no air attack, no artillery attack, no tank fire directed against their position. They caught the allied troops in a cross fire; they hurled grenades to make our positions unstable. And after four and a half hours we withdrew. Army censors have permitted no identification of the attacking troops; but a division spokesman said in Korea a few minutes ago, that only 3 allied soldiers were killed and overall casualties were extremely light.

If this had been a successful attack we should probably have heard no more about it. But it was not successful and some details concerning the whole episode have created a good deal of indignation. For one thing, the 7-page mimeographed timetable of how the battle was supposed to go had a cover, a cardboard cover, and this cover was hand-made in three colors. One reporter relayed word that his time-table was headed "scenario." The presence of high-ranking brass also seems to have added to the impression in some quarters that this was a big show, a spectacle.

In Congress today: Republican Representative Hoffman of Michigan asked the Pentagon to tell him whether "American boys were used as expendable cannon fodder for publicity purposes, or if this was a justifiable military action." Republican Representative Bray of Indiana said he has received a number of complaints. He has asked Defense Secretary Wilson if this action, as he put it, "was a show, with actual killing, for visiting firemen, using human guinea pigs." Republican Representative Van Zandt of Indiana feels its only fair to give the military a chance to explain. But he wants to know why we attempted to penetrate enemy lines if we were not adequately prepared.

In Korea today military men, concerned in this operation, say the criticism levelled against them in Washington is unfair. They say: there were no theatrical trappings, this was a deadly serious business. The timetable, or program or score-card, or whatever the correspondents called it, is not something new. Such carefully prepared plans are always made before an attack, even for eight-man patrols. The only thing different this time was the cardboard cover, home-made. The whole reason for the visiting generals was to demonstrate the effectiveness of close air support for foot soldiers. And reporters at the front, who observed the unsuccessful attack, agree that except for the fancier cover for the operational plans, there was nothing unusual about the whole operation.

What does appear to be unusual is the angry tone, the apparent willingness to believe that our Korean commanders offered a "spectacle" to their higher-ups which called for the sacrifice of some of our men. And this in turn, as the Congressmen made clear in the House today, reflects phone calls and letters they have received from their constituents.

Perhaps it is fortunate that General Collins happens to be in Japan at this time, that he will be coming home over the weekend to explain just what has happened. Apparently, it was a minor action, but the reaction wasn't.

From sources in Tokyo and Korea we know that there has been a slowly developing significant change in the strategic thinking at headquarters. At the time General Eisenhower visited Korea our top commanders favored a major offensive to break the stalemate. Recently a more cautious attitude has developed, although General Van Fleet, at his last news conference, protested bitterly against those "people who want to tie us down." But the majority feeling now is said to hold that a major offensive in Korea would be too costly (headquarters estimated a minimum of 50-thousand casualties.) Such an offensive could only succeed if its objective was to destroy the Communist armies in North Korea. This would include the destruction of their equipment. Because, if the enemy, even at the cost of thousands of casualties, could salvage his equipment, he could quickly form new armies to continue the war along a new defense line to the north. The Army is said to feel any such new major offensive would require more troops, would mean the temporary abandonment of the rotation plan to keep combat trained troops in Korea. And the Air Force is represented as objecting to a major offensive unless we are prepared to attack enemy air bases in Manchuria. The Air Force believes that if the Communists face the threat of defeat on the ground they will order their Migs into an all-out attack on our battlelines. So the Air Force is reluctant to assume responsibility for protecting advancing allied troops unless they can first destroy enemy air bases in Manchuria.

There is a body of military opinion in Tokyo that feels a limited offensive might produce worthwhile results; that we should strike hard and fast for a new line running from Pyongyang to Wonsan on the east coast. But here too the deterrents are obvious: the enemy is strongly entrenched; as we learned at Spud Hill it is not easy to drive him out of his new Chinese Wall: honeycombed trenches, bunkers, and caves that can withstand very heavy air and artillery attacks. We know too that the Red army is now better trained, fights more skillfully, has better weapons and more reserves than he did last fall. The feeling in Tokyo is that a limited offensive to shorten the battle lines at the Korean-neck might permit us to withdraw a few divisions from the shorter front. But this would only bring stalemate under worse conditions. Our supply lines would be longer, the enemy's shorter, and our troops would be within easy range of Manchurian-based planes.

Possibly a third alternative being considered by our top commanders in Tokyo today is to rapidly and steadily reduce the number of American troops in the front lines. To expand the South Korean army, let their troops replace ours, have our navy and air force continue their pressure on the Communists, pull one or two American divisions back into reserve in Japan. This, of course, would be another stalemate. But there is a feeling this would be more pallatable to those of us at home because our committments would be reduced in Korea and there would be an almost immediate drop in American casualties.

Whatever the decision of the meetings now going on in Tokyo, Korea remains for the new Eisenhower Administration a problem similar to what it was for the old Truman Administration, our voters and our allies.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In war, any sort of military action invilves certain calculated risks. And in the end, the decision to attack or sit tight rests in the balance between the objective and the cost. Abraham Lincoln, who knew much of war, always advocated reasonableness. He once told one of his Generals: "Beward of rashness. But with energy and sleepless vigilance go forward and give us victories." That would still seem to be a good goal. But going forward will be costly.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Jan 30, 1953

We are living in a period of perpetual crisis. And of necessity, the world is adjusting itself to change of governments...narrowing of distances...production of fearsome new weapons. But every so often a minor crisis develops. And perhaps because we're so accustomed to living and thinking on a big scale, ~~it gets out of hand.~~ We tend to ignore these secondary crises -

Here are a few examples -

Item One: The Russians don't like the way the Moscow Radio is being run. The Communist paper "Pravda" said today "events are reported in a dry, monotonus manner. The latest developments are pictured inadequately. There are too many general phrases; too few clear facts. Words are mispronounced and frequently used ungramatically. There is a noticeable lack of profound analysis. Those engaged in radio work have been improperly selected, and trained." [Similian complaints have been heard in this Country]

Item two: Hungarian mothers don't like the way the distribution of baby clothes is being handled in Budapest. They've protested that every time they apply for ration cards they're turned down; told that there's a shortage of baby clothes. A local Budapest newspaper - (with more letters to the editor than it could handle) - investigated. The answer: no shortage of clothes...but a very definite shortage of paper on which to print ration cards.

Item three: Iran, which has never cultivated a taste for caviar, may soon find itself cornering virtually the entire market. The Iranians have decided not to renew their agreement with Russia covering fishing rights on the Caspian. They contend (THEY'RE) entitled to a greater share of the profits. The Russians don't see it that way. So Iran will nationalize its caviar industry. The only trouble is that the country has no ice; can't preserve the caviar; will have to dump it wherever it can and thus cut off a highly successful export item - which no one in Iran cares for in the first place.

Item Four: The British are in a mild uproar. They want to make "Gloomy Sunday" a "Brighter Sunday." A 3-hundred year old law forbids virtually all entertainment on Sundays: sports, theatre, dancing, even rowing on the river. In Commons today, a laborite - John Parker - tried to get the law changed. He argued: as things stand now, a child can't even eat ice cream on the beach on Sundays; a Scotsman can't wear his kilts because the act says Sunday dress in costume is illegal. He fought a losing battle...but the hinterlands have yet to be heard from. The Sunday war may still be won.

Item five: The new French Minister of Health - Andre Boutemy - rose in Parliament to make his maiden speech. He was immediately attacked by Communist members who accused him of being a wartime collaborator. The President of Parliament tried to intercede. It went something like this:

BOOT-E-ME
Boutemy: "Ladies and Gentlemen!"

Communists: "Murderer...get off the speaker's platform."

The President:"I call you to order."

Communists: "Back to Moscow...back to Prague with you."

The President: "Please...order."

The Communists: "Go home clown."

The President: "Order...order."

BOOT-E-ME
Boutemy: (Again) Ladies and Gentlemen

Communists: "Murderer...go home."

M. Boutemy will try again to get past that opening phrase — at nine o'clock tonite. — he has a real problem —

Item six: General Eisenhower bid farewell to Secretary of State Dulles and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen as they left for Europe. He said:"Have a nice trip, and think of me when I'm out there [redacted] sweating Monday morning."

On Monday, The President delivers his state of the union message. We hope to have more news then than we had tonite.

Much of our life is fretted away by care and worry which time seems to have a peculiar way of resolving. Robert Burdette put it nicely when he wrote:"There are two days in the week about which and upon which I never worry. Two carefree days, kept sacredly free from fear and apprehension. One of these days is Yesterday...and the other day I do not worry about is Tomorrow."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS 5112NY JAN 30, 1953

EDWARD R MURROW

PRYSBETERIAN HOSPITAL

Friday Jan 30, 1953

AS BAUDELAIRE PUT IT, "LIFE IS A HOSPITAL IN WHICH EVERY PATIENT IS POSSESSED BY THE DESIRE TO CHANGE HIS BED."

THIS IS THE NEWS,

CHAIRMAN DEAN OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION SAID TODAY, "THERE IS NO DOUBT" THE RUSSIANS HAVE EXPLODED THREE ATOMIC BOMBS AND NOW HAVE "A SUPPLY OF ATOMIC WEAPONS." / AS A RESULT OF DOUBT CREATED BY FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND OTHERS, WHO ARE NOT CONVINCED THAT THE RUSSIANS ACTUALLY HAVE THE BOMB, CHAIRMAN DEAN SAID TODAY, "WE KNOW THE RUSSIANS HAVE PRODUCED FISSIONABLE MATERIAL IN QUANTITY. WITH THOSE MATERIALS IT IS NOT A DIFFICULT TECHNICAL JOB TO MAKE WORKABLE ATOMIC WEAPONS. / THE RUSSIANS HAVE EXPLODED THREE ATOMIC BOMBS, ONE IN THE LATE SUMMER OF 1949, TWO IN THE FALL OF 1951. # ON THE BASIS OF THE ABOVE FACTS AND OTHER SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL EVIDENCE, "SAYS CHAIRMAN DEAN,"THERE IS NO DOUBT OF THE EXISTENCE OF A SUPPLY OF ATOMIC WEAPONS IN THE SOVIET UNION."

THIS STATEMENT WAS MADE SHORTLY AFTER MR. TRUMAN SAID AGAIN THAT HE DOUBTS THE RUSSIANS HAVE THE BOMB. AND ON HIS REGULAR MORNING WALK IN INDEPENDENCE-[WHICH HAS TURNED INTO A SORT OF SIDEWALK NEWS CONFERENCE IN RECENT DAYS]-THE FORMER PRESIDENT COMMENTED ON A SPEECH BY AIR FORCE GENERAL KENNY IN KANSAS CITY LAST NIGHT. / THE GENERAL URGED THAT WE BOMB THE COMMUNIST SUPPLY CENTERS NORTH OF THE YALU RIVER, IN MANCHURIA. MR. TRUMAN SAID, WE SHOULD NOT DO THIS UNLESS WE ARE PREPARED TO PUT FIVE MILLION GROUND TROOPS INTO A FAR EASTERN WAR. HE IS NOT A MILITARY EXPERT. BUT HE DOES NOT BELIEVE THAT AIR ATTACKS ON MANCHURIA CAN END THE KOREAN WAR..THIS WOULD ONLY EXTEND THE WAR.

IN KOREA TODAY, OUR JETS SHOT DOWN A SLOW MOVING RUSSIAN-TYPE LIGHT BOMBER, OFF NORTHWEST KOREA. IT WAS ONLY THE SECOND TIME IN THE WAR WEVE CAUGHT AN ENEMY BOMBER. THERE WAS LITTLE ACTION ON THE GROUND, AS THE TEMPERATURE FELL TO 16 DEGREES BELOW ZERO IN THE PANMUNJOM AREA. / AND THE ARMY REPORTS THAN AN AMERICAN PRIVATE WAS BEATEN TO DEATH BY THREE ENEMY PRISONERS ON KOJE ISLAND. THE SOLDIER WENT INTO AN ENEMY BARRACKS ALONE. HE WAS BEATEN UP. WHEN THREE ALLIED PLATOONS CAME TO RESCUE HIM, THE COMMUNISTS PRODUCED HIS BODY. HE DIED BEFORE HE REACHED THE CAMP HOSPITAL. THE ENEMY PRISONERS LATER SURRENDERED THREE OF THEIR MEN AND SAID THEY WERE THE MURDERERS.

GENERAL VAN FLEET TODAY TOOK NOTICE OF THE CRITICISM IN CONGRESS RESULTING FROM THE UNSUCCESSFUL ATTACK ON "SPUD HILL" IN KOREA ON SUNDAY. VAN FLEETS HEADQUARTERS SAYS, THE ATTACK WAS WELL PLANNED.. IT DIFFERED FROM MANY OTHERS, ONLY BY A LACK OF COMPLETE SUCCESS... TO CRITICIZE IT AS A "SPECTATOR DEMONSTRATION" IS "GROSSLY UNFAIR TO EVERY MAN WHO HAS FOUGHT, SUFFERED, OR DIED IN KOREA." THE STATEMENT EXPLAINS, THE ATTACK WAS PROMPTED BY THREATENING COMMUNIST POSITIONS..THREE AMERICANS WERE KILLED...61 WOUNDED..ALL FROM THE 7TH DIVISION. CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS, WHO HAVE SEEN SECRET REPORTS FROM TOKYO HEADQUARTERS, ADD THIS, THE ATTACK WAS NOT A SHOW BUT "AN OPERATION THAT WAS NECESSARY FOR TACTICAL REASONS."

THE FRENCH REPORT TODAY THAT "SEVERAL THOUSAND" OF THEIR TROOPS, WITH THE AID OF VIETNAM SOLDIERS, HAVE LANDED ON THE ANAM COAST.. 250 MILES NORTHEAST OF SAIGON. ITS DESCRIBED AS THE BIGGEST AMPHIBIOUS LANDING OF THE SIX-YEAR-OLD INDO-CHINA WAR. / A HEADQUARTERS SPOKESMAN SAYS, "EXCELLENT CONDITIONS ARE OFFERED FOR FUTURE EXPLOITATION."

3

THERE ARE REPORTS FROM WASHINGTON TONIGHT THAT PRESIDENT EISENHOWER IS CONSIDERING AN ORDER RELEASING THE SEVENTH FLEET FROM GUARD DUTY OFF FORMOSA. THIS WOULD FREE CHINESE NATIONALISTS FOR RAIDS ON THE COMMUNIST MAINLAND. THESE REPORTS, ATTRIBUTED TO "GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND EXCELLENT AUTHORITY" SAY THE PRESIDENT MAY MAKE SUCH AN ANNOUNCEMENT IN HIS STATE OF THE UNION MESSAGE ON MONDAY. THE EFFECT OF SUCH AND ORDER WOULD BE TO CANCEL FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMANS 1950 ORDER, DIRECTING THE 7TH FLEET TO PROTECT FORMOSA FROM INVASION AND TO PREVENT THE CHINESE NATIONALISTS FROM AIR AND SEA OPERATIONS AGAINST THE MAINLAND. SINCE THAT TIME GENERAL MACARTHUR AND SENATOR TAFT--AMONG OTHERS--HAVE URGED THAT WE "TAKE THE WRAPS OFF" THE NATIONALISTS.

CHAIRMAN WILEY OF THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, SAID TODAY, "I WOULDNT BE SURPRISED IF BEFORE MANY MONTHS, WE MAY HAVE IN THE COMMITTEES LAP, THE EQUIVALENT OF A NATO FOR THE FAR EAST"... THAT IS A DEFENSE PACT WITH ALL THE FREE NATIONS IN THAT AREA.

SECRETARY OF STATE DULLES AND MUTUAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATOR STASSEN LEFT BY PLANE FOR EUROPE TODAY TO INVESTIGATE THE SLOW-UP OF A UNIFIED DEFENSE PROGRAM IN WESTERN EUROPE. AFTER CONFERRING WITH THE PRESIDENT, WHO GAVE THEM "FINAL ADVICE AND INSTRUCTIONS" MR. DULLES ISSUED A STATEMENT SAYING, "CO-OPERATION AMONG THE NATIONS OF THE ATLANTIC COMMUNITY, IS OF THE UTMOST IMPORTANCE TO ALL OF US." HE SAID THE EUROPEAN DEFENSE COMMUNITY HAD BEEN DEVELOPED BY THE EUROPEANS THEMSELVES "WITH GREAT COURAGE AND IMAGINATION."

IN WEST GERMANY, CHANCELLOR ADENAUER SAID IN A BROADCAST THAT HE HOPES MR. DULLES WILL "DESTROY THE ILLUSSIONS" OF THOSE WHO THINK THAT AMERICA WILL GUARANTEE THE SECURITY OF EUROPE... WITHOUT THE EUROPEANS DOING ANYTHING TO HELP THEMSELVES. / HE SAID IF THE EUROPEAN ARMY PLAN COLLAPSES, AMERICAN INTEREST IN EUROPE WILL DECLINE..ISOLATIONISM WILL REVIVE..AND AMERICA MAY GIVE PRIORITY TO THE DEFENSE OF ASIA.

IN WASHINGTON, THE SENATE TODAY CONFIRMED ROGER M. KYES, A FORMER VICE PRESIDENT OF GENERAL MOTORS, TO BE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE. AND THE SENATE APPROVED THE SPENDING OF 700-THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR NEW INVESTIGATIONS, INCLUDING ONE THAT WILL STUDY "COMMUNISTS IN OUR ARMY" THE OTHER INVESTIGATIONS WILL DEAL WITH COMMUNISTS IN GOVERNMENT, INFLUENCE PEDDLING, CORRUPTION, WASTE AND CRIME ON THE WATERFRONTS.

HERE IN NEW YORK TODAY, JOSEPH P. RYAN, HEAD OF THE A. F. OF L. LONGSHOREMEN SAID WATERFRONT CRIME IS EXAGGERATED..ALTHOUGH ITS POSSIBLE THAT 30 PER CENT OF HIS UNION OFFICIALS HAVE POLICE RECORDS.

THE AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT REPORTS THAT FARM PRICES DROPPED ALMOST ONE PER CENT IN THE MONTH ENDING JANUARY 15TH..TO THE LOWEST POINT IN MORE THAN TWO YEARS. IT WAS THE FIFTH CONSECUTIVE DROP.

AT HYDE PARK, A WREATH FROM PRESIDENT EISENHOWER WAS PLACED ON THE GRAVE OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT..ON HIS 71ST BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

SHERMAN ADAMS, ASSISTANT TO MR. EISENHOWER, SAYS IN THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE THAT THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION WILL MOVE TO THE LEFT ON SOCIAL LEGISLATIONS, SUCH THINGS AS CIVIL RIGHTS, SOCIAL SECURITY AND HOUSING. AND IT WILL MOVE TO THE RIGHT ON ECONOMIC MATTERS..SUCH AS HELPING BUSINESS FUNCTION HEALTHILY AND FREELY.

AND FRED SIGH, THE PRESIDENT OF THE ST. LOUS CARDINALS, ANNOUNCED TODAY THAT HE WILL WITHDRAW FROM ALL ACTIVE PARTICIPATION IN BASEBALL AND SELL THE CLUB AS SOON AS POSSIBLE BECAUSE OF HIS CONVICTION ON INCOME TAX EVASION CHARGES.

END

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30, 1953
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Chairman Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission said today, "There is no doubt" the Russians have exploded three atomic bombs, and now have "a supply of atomic weapons." As a result of doubt created by former President Truman and others who are not convinced that the Russians actually have the bomb, Chairman Dean said today, "we know the Russians have produced fissionable material in quantity. With those materials it is not a difficult technical job to make workable atomic weapons. The Russians have exploded three atomic bombs, one in the late summer of 1949, two in the fall of 1951. On the basis of the above facts and other scientific and technical evidence, "says Chairman Dean, "There is no doubt of the existence of a supply of atomic weapons in the Soviet Union."

This statement was made shortly after Mr. Truman said again that he doubts the Russians have the bomb. And on his regular morning walk in Independence, (which has turned into a sort of sidewalk news conference in recent days) the former President commented on a speech by Air Force General Kenny in Kansas City last night. The General urged that we bomb the Communist supply centers north of the Yalu River, in Manchuria. Mr. Truman said, we should not do this unless we are prepared to put five million ground troops into a far eastern war. He is not a military expert. But he does not believe that air attacks on Manchuria can end the Korean war. This would only extend the war.

In Korea today, our jets shot down a slow moving Russian-type light bomber off northwest Korea. It was only the second time in the war we've caught an enemy bomber. There was little action on the ground as the temperature fell to 16 degrees below zero in the Panmunjom area. And the Army reports that an American private was beaten to death by three enemy prisoners on Koje Island. The soldier went into an enemy barracks alone. He was beaten up. When three allied platoons came to rescue him, the Communists produced his body. He died before he reached the camp hospital. The enemy prisoners later surrendered three of their men and said they were the murderers.

General Van Fleet today took notice of the criticism in Congress resulting from the unsuccessful attack on Spud Hill in Korea on Sunday. Van Fleet's headquarters says, the attack was well planned. It differed from many others only by a lack of complete success; to criticize it as a "spectator demonstration" is "grossly unfair to every man who has fought, suffered or died in Korea. The statement explains, the attack was prompted by threatening communist positions, three Americans were killed, 61 wounded, all from the 7th division. Congressional leaders, who have seen secret reports from Tokyo Headquarters, add this, the attack was not a show but "an operation that was necessary for tactical reasons."

The French report today that "several thousand" of their troops, with the aid of Vietnam soldiers, have landed on the Anam Coast, 250 miles Northeast of Saigon. It's described as the biggest amphibious landing of the six-year-old Indo-China war. A headquarters spokesman says, "Excellent conditions are offered for future exploitation."

There are reports from Washington tonight that President Eisenhower is considering an order releasing the Seventh Fleet from Guard duty off Formosa. This would free Chinese Nationalists for raids on the Communist mainland. These reports, attributed to "government officials and excellent authority" say the President may make such an announcement in his State of the Union message on Monday. The effect of such an order would be to cancel former President Truman's 1950 order directing the 7th fleet to protect Formosa from invasion and to prevent the Chinese Nationalists from air and sea operations against the mainland. Since that time General MacArthur and Senator Taft, among others, have urged that we "take the wraps off" the Nationalists.

Chairman Wiley of the Senate foreign relations committee said today, "I wouldn't be surprised if before many months, we may have in the committees lap the equivalent of a NATO for the Far East"; that is a defense pact with all the free nations in that area.

Secretary of State Dulles and Mutual Security Administrator Stassen left by plane for Europe today to investigate the slow-up of a unified defense program in Western Europe. After conferring with the President, who gave them "final advice and instructions" Mr. Dulles issued a statement saying, "cooperation among the nations of the Atlantic community is of the utmost importance to all of us." He said the European defense community had been developed by the Europeans themselves "with great courage and imagination."

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer said in a broadcast that he hopes Mr. Dulles will "destroy the illusions" of those who think that America will guarantee the security of Europe, without the Europeans doing anything to help themselves. He said if the European army plan collapses, American interest in Europe will decline, isolationism will revive, and America may give priority to the defense of Asia.

In Washington, the Senate today confirmed Roger M. Kyes, a former vice president of General Motors, to be deputy secretary of defense. And the Senate approved the spending of 700-thousand dollars for new investigations, including one that will study "communists in our army" the other investigations will deal with Communists in government, influence peddling, corruption, waste and crime on the waterfronts.

Here in New York today, Joseph P. Ryan, head of the AFL Longshoremen said waterfront crime is exaggerated, although its possible that 30 percent of his union officials have police records.

The Agriculture Department reports that farm prices dropped almost one percent in the month ending January 15th, to the lowest point in more than two years. It was the fifth consecutive drop.

At Hyde Park, a wreath from President Eisenhower was placed on the grave of President Roosevelt, on his 71st birthday anniversary.

Sherman Adams, Assistant to Mr. Eisenhower, says in the American Magazine that the Eisenhower administration will move to the left on social legislations, such as civil rights, social security and housing. And it will move to the right on economic matters, such as helping business function healthily and freely.

And Fred Sigh, the President of the St. Louis Cardinals, announced today that he will withdraw from all active participation in baseball and sell the club as soon as possible because of his conviction on income tax evasion charges.

We are living in a period of perpetual crisis. And of necessity, the world is adjusting itself to change of governments, narrowing of distances, production of fearsome new weapons. But every so often a minor crisis develops. And perhaps because we're so accustomed to living and thinking on a big scale. We tend to ignore these secondary crises. Here are a few examples.

Item One: The Russians don't like the way the Moscow Radio is being run. The Communist paper "Pravda" said today "events are reported in a dry, monotonus manner. The latest developments are pictured inadequately. There are too many general phrases; too few clear facts. Words are mispronounced and frequently used ungramatically. There is a noticeable lack of profound analysis. Those engaged in radio work have been improperly selected and trained." Similar complaints have been heard in this country.

Item two: Hungarian mothers don't like the way the distribution of baby clothes is being handled in Budapest. They've protested that every time they apply for ration cards they're turned down; told that there's a shortage of baby clothes. A local Budapest newspaper (with more letters to the editor than it could handle) - investigated. The answer: no shortage of clothes, but a very definite shortage of paper on which to print ration cards.

Item three: Iran, which has never cultivated a taste for caviar, may soon find itself cornering virtually the entire market. The Iranians have decided not to renew their agreement with Russia covering fishing rights on the Caspian. They contend they're entitled to a greater share of the profits. The Russians don't see it that way. So Iran will nationalize its caviar industry. The only trouble is that the country has no ice; can't preserve the caviar; will have to dump it wherever it can and thus cut off a highly successful export item - which no one in Iran cares for in the first place.

Item Four: The British are in a mild uproar. They want to make "Gloomy Sunday" a "Brighter Sunday." A 3-hundred year old law forbids virtually all entertainment on Sundays: sports, theatre, dancing, even rowing on the river. In Commons today, a laborite - John Parker - tried to get the law changed. He argued: as things stand now, a child can't even eat ice cream on the beach on Sundays; a Scotsman can't wear his kilts because the act says Sunday dress in costume is illegal. He fought a losing battle, but the hinterlands have yet to be heard from. The Sunday war may still be won.

Item five: The new French Minister of Health - Andre Boutemy - rose in Parliament to make his maiden speech. He was immediately attacked by Communist members who accused him of being a wartime collaborator. The President of Parliament tried to intercede. It went something like this:

Boutemy: Ladies and Gentlemen.

Communists: Murderer, get off the speaker's platform.

The President: I call you to order.

Communists: Back to Moscow - back to Prague with you.

The President: Please - order.

The Communists: Go home clown.

The President: Order - order.

Boutemy: (Again) Ladies and Gentlemen

Communists: Murderer - go home.

Mr. Boutemy will try again to get past that opening phrase at nine o'clock tonite. He has a real problem.

Item six: General Eisenhower bid farewell to Secretary of State Dulles and Mutual Security Security Administrator Stassen as they left for Europe. He said: "Have a nice trip and think of me when I'm out there sweating Monday morning."

On Monday, the President delivers his state of the union message. We hope to have more news then, than we had tonite.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Much of our life is fretted away by care and worry which time seems to have a peculiar way of resolving. Robert Burdette put it nicely when he wrote: "There are two days in the week about which and upon which I never worry. Two carefree days, kept sacredly free from fear and apprehension. One of these days is Yesterday, and the other day I do not worry about is Tomorrow."

Good Night and Good Luck!